This crap, the foolish attacks of fools, must cease.

---

I agree. So cease with the foolish attacks you fool.

Edited by: krussell2004 at: 1/30/04 8:41 am

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 497
(1/30/04 9:18 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Deep wisdom results in compassion and indifference. When one understands and applies cause and effect to their thinking, one realises that individuals are what they are because they must be that way. Instead of turning to emotions like hatred their minds automatically consider why the person or group are doing what they are doing, the mind AUTOMATICALLY becomes distracted from the path of emotion.

On the other hand, there are times when returning spiteful like comments or belittling others is a useful tool to cut short a circular discussion, or to make people emotional so that they do things they later regret. Emotional outbursts generally lead to reflection once an individual has calmed down.

There have been few geniuses only because few people have properly understood cause and effect. Nowadays though science has removed so many everyday uncertainties (but no ultimate ones) that cause and effect is far easier to understand as a concept.

krussell2004
Registered User
Posts: 67
(1/30/04 9:32 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

On the other hand, there are times when returning spiteful like comments or belittling others is a useful tool to cut short a circular discussion, or to make people emotional so that they do things they later regret. Emotional outbursts generally lead to reflection once an individual has calmed down.

---

Based on this statement one can surmise that David isn't all that enlightened since he resorted to calling another member, "chimpanzee."

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2155

(1/30/04 9:48 am)

Reply

Re: ---

---

But that's literally what Suergaz is - a chimpanzee. He listens to jungle, writes posts that are barely more coherent than an excited screech, and constantly exhorts everyone to dance. No doubt he believes that the highest point of human evolution was millions of years ago when we used to jump up and down under the trees and thrash branches around in a group frenzy. It's all been downhill ever since.

krussell2004

Registered User

Posts: 68

(1/30/04 10:29 am)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

But that's literally what Suergaz is - a chimpanzee. He listens to jungle, writes posts that are barely more coherent than an excited screech, and constantly exhorts everyone to dance. No doubt he believes that the highest point of human evolution was millions of years ago when we used to jump up and down under the trees and thrash branches around in a group frenzy. It's all been downhill ever since.

---

Are you sure he is an actual chimpanzee? Do you really believe a chimp can type thoughts of any kind on the computer? If so then he is God. Why? Because we came into being as a result of an infinite number of chimps each pounding away on a typewriter, hence the current novel we're all living in. ;)

Seriously, though. Explain how it is you could deny saying something you clearly typed in this forum and blame it on suergaz for imagining it and calling him a chimp? And Mr. Tortolini describes you as being gentle and not speaking harshly towards anyone. It sounds like Mr. Tortolini has a vested interest in singing your praises and propagating your very lies. At least you are able to prepackage and gloss over the truth via eloquence and adroit verbal articulation. Mr. Tortolini on the other hand is only capable of resorting to personal attacks and moronic fits of hysterical laughter in a vain attempt to silence your detractors. It seems to me that Mr. Tortolini is the real resident chimp.

Edited by: krussell2004 at: 1/30/04 10:54 am

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 906
(1/30/04 10:38 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

But that's literally what Suergaz is - a chimpanzee. He listens to jungle, writes posts that are barely more coherent than an excited screech, and constantly exhorts everyone to dance.

---

And drinks his own piss.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2141
(1/30/04 10:46 am)
Reply

---

---

Avidaloca;--

Quote:

---

Of course you can. But you'd be wrong. It doesn't automatically mean you hate something if you have a philosophical point of view which rejects certain things about it. Labelling someone a misogynist is a convenient way of avoiding an argument because you disagree with it

---

Theirs is not a philosophical view. It amounts to "girls are weak, chuck'em in the creek, boys are strong, like king kong"

I have never avoided argument with them. It is that they cannot argue that they aren't misogynists for desiring that women become more masculine. They are ugly. Mine is a personal attack upon them.

krussell2004
Registered User
Posts: 69
(1/30/04 10:48 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

And drinks his own piss.

---

That is just plain disgusting. You must be a chimp too. And to think that Mr. Tortolini would suggest that I should be banned. Geez. Nice to see the discussions here are getting more intelligent by the day.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 907
(1/30/04 10:50 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Chill Kurt. You'll understand after a while, as Zag does.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2142
(1/30/04 10:54 am)
Reply

----

---

I don't understand at all dave. What do you mean I drink my own piss?

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 908
(1/30/04 10:56 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

I don't mean anything.

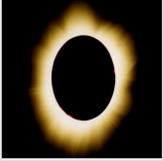

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2143

(1/30/04 11:04 am)

Reply

Re: ----

---

Now, now, there there, everyone means something, at least to themselves, we'll have you as right as rain in no time my dear Toast.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2155

(1/30/04 11:04 am)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Krussell wrote:

Quote:

---

Are you sure he is an actual chimpanzee? Do you really believe a chimp can type thoughts of any kind on the computer?

---

He's the living proof.

Quote:

---

Seriously, though. Explain how it is you could deny saying something you clearly typed in this forum and balme it on suergaz for imagining it and calling him a chimp?

---

Yes, I was wrong in saying that Suergaz imagined the baby-strangling remark. I had forgotten that I had said it.

My calling him a chimp had nothing to do with that incident, however. It was instead a general observation of his overall behaviour. If you stay around long enough, you'll see what I mean.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 262
(1/30/04 11:06 am)
Reply

Re: Fakes

---

Hi Dan,

Re: neplusultra....

It is worth nothing that that discussion board is barely active. Hardly any of the threads in any category reach double figures of posts. In the philosophy section David's "Nature of Genius" thread was far and away the most active (126 posts).

Did you post the link to David's essay (on the Ne Plus Ultra saga) in the 'Nature of Genius' thread in their forum?

I think they are in the greatest position to benefit from it.

Rhett Hamilton

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2144
(1/30/04 11:07 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

No-one calls me a chimp without becoming one!

Edited by: suergaz at: 1/30/04 11:16 am

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2157
(1/30/04 11:21 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Dave Toast: And drinks his own piss.

Krussell: That is just plain disgusting.

Dave Toast: Chill Kurt. You'll understand after a while, as Zag does.

Zag: I don't understand at all dave. What do you mean I drink my own piss?

Dave Toast: I don't mean anything.

---

What a fascinating conversation.

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 502

(1/30/04 11:34 am)

Reply

Some quotes about chimps for a bit of fun

---

No doubt this will reinforce the love lovers view on wisdom, but so what. They won't change anyway and will always misinterpret the action required to save other life forms, by not thinking sufficently strategically.

Children, behold the Chimpanzee; He sits on the ancestral tree From which we sprang in ages gone. I'm glad we sprang: had we held on, We might, for aught that I can say, Be horrid Chimpanzees to-day.

The Chimpanzee

It can seem as you look out that it's just chaos and that we behave in terrible ways and we never really seem to get better. But we have to remember that compassion and love and altruism is equally deeply rooted in our primate heritage. They are just as evident in chimpanzees as the brutal, aggressive side of chimpanzee nature. We humans, therefore, have a choice ahead of us, we don't have to go the aggressive route. We can push and push and push towards love and compassion. That is where I believe human destiny ultimately is taking us.

Jane Goodall

Chimpanzees have given me so much. The long hours spent with them in the forest have enriched my life beyond measure. What I have learned from them has shaped my understanding of human behavior, of our place in nature.

Jane Goodall

I do not want to discuss evolution in such depth, however, only touch on it from my own perspective: from the moment when I stood on the Serengeti plains holding the fossilized bones of ancient creatures in my hands to the moment when, staring into the eyes of a chimpanzee, I saw a thinking, reasoning personality looking back. You may not believe in evolution, and that is all right. How we humans came to be the way we are is far less important than how we should act now to get out of the mess we have made for ourselves.

Jane Goodall

Our children are brutalized and insensitized if they are made to pull the spinal cord from a living frog : it will be that much easier, subsequently, to harm a dog, a chimpanzee - a human. Thus a more humane ethic - a respect for all living things -is desirable not only for the well-being of non-human animals, but for our own spiritual development as well.

Jane Goodall

Researchers find it very necessary to keep blinkers on. They don't want to admit that the animals they are working with have feelings. They don't want to admit that they might have minds and personalities because that would make it quite difficult for them to do what they do; so we find that within the lab communities there is a very strong resistance among the researchers to admitting that animals have minds, personalities and feelings.

Jane Goodall

In what terms should we think of these beings, nonhuman yet possessing so very many human-like characteristics? How should we treat them? Surely we should treat them with the same consideration and kindness as we show to other humans; and as we recognize human rights, so too should we recognize the rights of the great apes? Yes.

Jane Goodall

I sometimes think that the chimps are expressing a feeling of awe, which must be very similar to that experience by early people when they worshipped water and the sun, things they didn't understand."

Jane Goodall

krussell2004
Registered User
Posts: 71
(1/30/04 11:40 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Dave Toast: And drinks his own piss.

Krussell: That is just plain disgusting.

Dave Toast: Chill Kurt. You'll understand after a while, as Zag does.

Zag: I don't understand at all dave. What do you mean I drink my own piss?

Dave Toast: I don't mean anything.

DQ: What a fascinating conversation.

---

Isn't it?

krussell2004

Registered User

Posts: 72

(1/30/04 11:43 am)

Reply

Re: ---

---

jimhaz,

I like it.

Edited by: krussell2004 at: 1/30/04 11:48 am

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 503

(1/30/04 11:44 am)

Reply

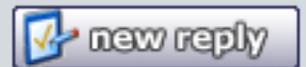

Re: ---

---

Drinks his own piss.

I interpreted it to mean that he reveals in his own emotions, reveals in himself, feeds on himself.

It's why he says often says things in a poetic fashion, that for the most part only he can fully understand. The same applies to anyone of artistic bent.

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Ne Plus Ultra

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                       | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 262(1/30/04 11:47 am)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> Who are you kidding? All we are is just a bunch of overgrown hairless chimps with richer imaginations than our lesser cousins. Do you really think we're any better off for it? I am. Perhaps you're not utilising the full benefit of it? Perhaps you're in the same hell-realms as Mr Beckwith? Rhett Hamilton Edited by: Rhett Hamilton at: 1/30/04 11:50 am |

krussell2004
Registered User
Posts: 73
(1/30/04 11:52 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

I interpreted it to mean that he reveals in his own emotions, reveals in himself, feeds on himself.

It's why he says often says things in a poetic fashion, that for the most part only he can fully understand. The same applies to anyone of artistic bent.

---

That is an interesting interpretation. However, the correct word is revel. He revels in himself and his own emotions. Just thought you should know.

PS A dog always returns to his vomit.

krussell2004
Registered User
Posts: 74
(1/30/04 11:54 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Perhaps you're in the same hell-realms as Mr Beckwith?

---

When I die want to go to hell. That's where all the interesting people are.

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 504
(1/30/04 11:56 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Who are you kidding? All we are is just a bunch of overgrown hairless chimps with richer imaginations than our lesser cousins.

True, but in a sense we are 'greater' because we have more ability to impact on the environment, so we do have a duty of care. We are just not exercising this duty though, as it handicaps our immediate evolution.

Do you really think we're any better off for it?

No, it is not relevant anyway, however we would be if we were enlightened, because we'd have both the wisdom to be more independent of the nastiness of the immediate environment and the beauty of animal-like contentment.

Edited by: jimhaz at: 1/30/04 11:57 am

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1355
(1/30/04 12:18 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

No-one calls me a chimp without becoming one!

---

Ah, well, move over then. The drinking of piss? Do chimps do it? I know that they and other animals are smart enough to self medicate, but the imbibing of urine has a long history, especially in India. I have cured dandruff with it, cured my dog almost instantly of a serious and lingering illness, and cured the common cold through - the drinking of ----.

Jane Goodall is an example of what I would call feminine wisdom.

Anyway, Zag, David meant if affectionately I'm sure.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 909
(1/30/04 12:24 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

As did I.

I was thinking of the way chimps piss into their own mouths when I said it.
It's all quite hilarious I can assure you.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1357
(1/30/04 12:47 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

It sounds like Mr. Tortolini has a vested interest in singing your praises and propagating your very lies.

---

Mr. Tortellini is very much in love. He grows petulant by turns, but can never refrain from defending his beloved.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2147
(1/30/04 1:02 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

I had always imagined piss would be bad for you. I imagine it tastes like piss though, so I'm not going to try it.

krussell2004
Registered User
Posts: 76
(1/30/04 1:06 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

I had always imagined piss would be bad for you. I imagine it tastes like piss though, so I'm not going to try it.

---

It's quite putrid really.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1360
(1/30/04 1:26 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

I'm afraid that it does. However, it can taste rather palatable if you eat, say, watermelon. It isn't bad for you at all. It is sterile, and can be used to prevent infections in wounds. It is full of useful things - minerals, hormones, and most of all, information for your immune system.

My dog, when she was so sick, longed to drink my urine like a man without food for a month placed in front of a Christmas dinner. After a couple of doses, she lost interest.

And just to make you all feel better, the fetus urinates into the amniotic fluid, and drinks it into its lungs and stomach.

Lbartoli
Registered User
Posts: 341
(1/30/04 6:18 pm)
Reply

ha ha ha

---

"Wasn't it you that responded to a well observed critique of another member of this board with a stupid laughing fit."

Yeah, that was me alright. But i was just being genuine. Thomas's observations are so far off the mark that they caused me to break out in laughter. Is there some reason why i should have kept this fact of reality secret?

Leo

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Naturyl  Registered UserPosts: 155(2/3/04 11:37 am)Reply                                                                                  | Re: --- <hr/> What on earth? I assume you're joking, Bird...                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| birdofhermes Registered UserPosts: 1376(2/3/04 12:15 pm)Reply                                                                                                                                                             | Re: --- <hr/> No, I meant everything I said. You find it unreasonable?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| Naturyl  Registered UserPosts: 156(2/3/04 2:11 pm)Reply  | Re: ha ha ha <hr/> Well, yes, I suppose I do. Naturally, I find such behavior bizarre and repulsive, but that in and of itself does not make it unreasonable. I think that it is unreasonable simply because it seems ill-advised to do things which one knows will cause widespread disgust among one's fellows, if those things can be easily omitted. My guess is that you could avoid drinking urine without suffering any great harm, so why would you choose to do something so likely to be universally rejected? Really, I can't believe I'm actually being this rational about it. I still suspect that you must be joking. Hopefully, this is all a gag to get a rise out of a few people. I mean, we're talking about ingesting urine here. If you actually do this (and/or encourage your dog to do so), what in the world are you thinking? Things like this test my commitment to humanism. |
| suergaz Registered UserPosts: 2185(2/3/04 2:18 pm)Reply                                                                                 | Re: --- <hr/> I'm sure she doesn't drink it for its taste Naturyl. Let the poor piss drinkers drink their piss! (:D) Let your commitments come to finer things than humanism, things like humans!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |

silentsal
Registered User
Posts: 33
(2/3/04 2:26 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

i for one drink it solely for the color, it does remind me so of my blessed bud which i have forsaken!!

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1385
(2/3/04 2:33 pm)
Reply

Re: ha ha ha

---

Wow. This really gets you. I'm afraid you've gone quite unconscious from shock. You must have not read what I said.

I said that my dog was cured, almost immediately, from a lingering and wasting disease. She begged and strained to drink it, and I never saw such love in her eyes as when she finished, and shuddered with relief.

I have no fewer than 5 books on the topic. There's loads of info on the net. There's urea in many skin care products. The premarin women take is gotten from horse piss (tortured horses, they should get it from human piss.)

Soldiers were indeed advised in WWII that in the absence of anything better they should urinate in a friends wound to hold off infection till they got to sick bay.

You know what urine contains? Hydrogen peroxide.

There is a long list of cultural traditions about drinking urine or using it on the skin. It is a must when taking amanita muscaria mushrooms. (Which I have not done.)

I'm terribly sorry to have disappointed you so deeply that you question your commitment to humanism. I certainly don't find you particularly rational right now.

But it is quite true that I very rarely discuss it, for the reasons you mention. I was just so intrigued by the idea that chimps might do it.

Why would I do it? Well, I'd rather drink a little than come down with a nasty snotty head cold, how's that?

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1443
(2/3/04 2:48 pm)
Reply

----

---

<looks around nervously>

Damn, and I thought I was the only one...

Naturyl
Registered User
Posts: 157
(2/3/04 3:00 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

LOL. I heard what you said, and I can assure you that I haven't gone "unconscious" at any point. The ingestion of urine cured your dog of an illness. Very well. If someone told me that bathing in shit would cure the common cold, would I be well-advised to do so?

Quote:

---

I'm terribly sorry to have disappointed you so deeply that you question your commitment to humanism.

---

You haven't "disappointed" me. There is nothing ethically wrong with what you advocate, nor does it indicate a lack of integrity, which is the only thing that really 'disappoints' me in people. When I stated that I sometimes question my commitment to humanism, I should have added that I do so primarily because people come up with such absurd things. I'm sure that you're a fairly upstanding person in all of the areas that really matter. What you have advocated here does not change that, but it does indicate to me that you have some rather bizarre practices. Some of these practices (of people in general, not just you specifically) strain my ability to respect diversity. When does "it takes all kinds" reach its limit? When does "everybody's different" become a rationalization rather than an affirmation? These are the things I struggle with when I encounter advocacy of such aberrant practices.

You are indeed wise to mention this only rarely. As I asked previously, why would you want to engage in a practice that you know will provoke this kind of reaction? If I wrote a book claiming that jumping off bridges was medically useful, would you be found on the side of the Golden Gate?

To be honest, this is part of the reason I stress realism, critical thought, and scientific education so strongly. When we decide that we don't have to believe in things like evolution (Darwinism), we open the door to all sorts of folly. It is not uncommon at all to find that those who reject scientific concepts such as evolution also engage in a number of unmentionable

|                                                                                 |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                 | practices. This is psychologically consistent, as the successful rejection of truth in one realm of thought naturally legitimizes the idea that we can believe or disbelieve things simply because we want to, and we begin to behave accordingly. [edited to fix a format problem] Edited by: Naturyl [icon] at: 2/3/04 3:07 pm |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 559(2/3/04 3:06 pm)Reply | Re: ha ha ha <hr/> Wee, wee. It's a recommended 'solution' for tinea problems. I don't get tinea.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Nietzsche And The Overman Delusion

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                     | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Thomas KnierimRegistered UserPosts: 858(3/8/04 8:57 pm)Reply  | Nietzsche And The Overman Delusion <hr/> I lifted this off another thread. Nietzsche: I teach you the Superman. Man is something that is to be surpassed. What have ye done to surpass man? All beings hitherto have created something beyond themselves: and ye want to be the ebb of that great tide, and would rather go back to the beast than surpass man? What is the ape to man? A laughing-stock, a thing of shame. And just the same shall man be to the Superman: a laughing-stock, a thing of shame. This small passage does IMV illustrate the delusional quality of Nietzsche's overman ideal with great clarity. Nietzsche says that man is something to be surpassed. Surpassed by what you may ask? By evolution? By a superior species? No, by the overman. And Nietzsche proceeds to gives us an account of the qualities of this overman. It is an imaginary creature free of so-called petty emotions and petty desires. This creature is of course male and driven only by the will to achieve greatness. In fact, the overman is a what a Freudian would call a super-ego projection and Zarathustra paints it in great pathological detail. He compares men with apes and describes apes as a laughing-stock, a thing |

of shame. From a scholarly point of view, the stupidity of this observation is hard to swallow as it relates directly to popular 19th century zoo experiences of the most superficial kind. If Zarathustra (or Nietzsche) had observed those primates more closely, he would have found that they are in fact intelligent and very admirable. After further investigation, he might have found that the idea of an inferior species -a popularly held opinion in the 19th century- is fundamentally flawed.

But Nietzsche wasn't a zoologist and he had little interest in the qualities of apes. Like apes, he found homo sapiens to be lacking and in need of replacement by something better. Now, this is where the psychiatrist's alarm bells should ring again. Lacking? Isn't the perception of lack an expression of mental suffering? Isn't the superposition of the overman ideal onto one's own human qualities a compensation mechanism with the primary function to make up for that perceived lack? It becomes increasingly clear that the whole overman ideal is an expression of feelings of inadequacy and that the philosophical sublimation process through which Nietzsche went was highly pathological.

Thomas

Rairun

Registered User
Posts: 210
(3/8/04 9:21 pm)
Reply

...

---

I don't think the overman is free of emotion. Everyone in this forum will disagree, but I think that's a misinterpretation.

ksolway

Posts: 369
(3/8/04 10:55 pm)
Reply

Re: Nietzsche And The Overman Delusion

---

Thomas wrote:

Quote:

---

He compares men with apes and describes apes as a laughing-stock

---

From the perspective of wise men, the common stock of humanity do indeed strike one as being apes, and a laughing stock.

Until you have viewed humanity from that perspective, you don't know how humanity appears from that perspective.

Quote:

---

If Zarathustra (or Nietzsche) had observed those primates more closely, he would have found that they are in fact intelligent and very admirable.

---

Apes are not admirable if you value enlightenment, reason, and truth. As far as "intelligent" goes . . . well . . . the fact that the common stock of humanity regards apes as intelligent only points to how ape-like the common stock of humanity really are.

I meet people in my daily life who wax lyrical about the great intelligence of cats, dogs, and even birds. And as people they do approximate those animals.

Quote:

---

Lacking? Isn't the perception of lack an expression of mental suffering?

---

Hopefully!

There is nothing more pitiful than someone who is content to be an ape.

In Buddhism there is a name for people who have this kind of animal contentment, they are referred to as being in the "animal realms".

Quote:

---

Isn't the superposition of the overman ideal onto one's own human qualities a compensation mechanism with the primary function to make up for that perceived lack?

---

|                                                                                                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                     | It could be. And it is a great thing indeed when that compensating mechanism actually helps change a person for the better. Kierkegaard has written at great length on this very subject, and with much beauty and power. When a person realizes that he is intellectually little more than an ape, then he is deeply ashamed of himself, and it is only natural that he aspires to improve his condition. This special kind of person, in Buddhist terminology, is referred to as "human", and of all the people on earth, are very few in number.                                                                                                                                                                          |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2547(3/9/04 12:06 am)Reply                                                                                  | -- <hr/> --Tom, this is all you've read, and it's not the best translation either! Zarathustra goes on to say much more about the superman. You really should read it! Try the Hollingdale version.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 804(3/9/04 1:11 am)Reply  | Re: -- <hr/> Thomas, do you think man is perfect as he is? That there should be nothing done on his part to attain the more ideal qualities in himself? Do you think it's okay to kill people out of impulse, or to rape women out of lust? Those aspects are the animal in man and what Nietzsche is doing is moving us away from those things, so I don't see how you can say such a thing is delusional. When dinner time comes around, do you choose to eat or not eat? If you choose to eat, why do you eat? Because it's better? All Nietzsche is saying is that there is the possibility of a man who is above other men. You do believe in the Buddha, which many Christians today say is a pretty delusional thing to believe in. |
| ksolwayPosts: 371(3/9/04 1:29 am)Reply                      | Re: Nietzsche And The Overman Delusion <hr/> "It's not a question of whether we descended from the apes, but when we're going to quit descending."                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |

Thomas Knierim

Registered User

Posts: 862

(3/9/04 5:45 pm)

Reply

Re: Nietzsche And The Overman Delusion

---

Kevin: From the perspective of wise men, the common stock of humanity do indeed strike one as being apes, and a laughing stock.

It does of course depend on where the laughter comes from. If it comes from a man who has recognized his own primate nature and who laughs in merriment at the other monkeys pretending to be something better, then the laughter is that of a wise man. However, if the laughter comes from a man who despises the other monkeys and who thinks of himself as something better, then the laughter is delusional.

Kevin: The fact that the common stock of humanity regards apes as intelligent only points to how ape-like the common stock of humanity really are.

What common stock? Is there any other stock of humanity? Are they bred in Australia by chance?

Kevin: When a person realizes that he is intellectually little more than an ape, then he is deeply ashamed of himself, and it is only natural that he aspires to improve his condition.

This is really nonsense. There are no ape-humans. Humans are all more or less the same. I don't deny that there are intellectual and cognitive differences, but these are fairly trivial when compared to the differences that exist between homo sapiens and apes.

Zag: Tom, this is all you've read, and it's not the best translation either! Zarathustra goes on to say much more about the superman.

I've read Zarathustra on more than one occasion, although I admit that I was never able to finish it. He had his chance.

voce: All Nietzsche is saying is that there is the possibility of a man who is above other men. You do believe in the Buddha, which many Christians today say is a pretty delusional thing to believe in.

I agree that ideals are necessary for intellectual and spiritual development. No question about that. But Nietzsche says more than that. He says that we are to despise our primate nature. That is a mistake. That is pathological. It's a sign of mental disease.

Thomas

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2553

(3/9/04 10:17 pm)

Reply

----

What primate nature?! He doesn't say anything of the sort! Nietzsche is one of the sanest men in history.

Thus spake Zarathustra is the greatest book in existence.

I have yet to prove it!

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2266

(3/9/04 11:12 pm)

Reply

Re: Nietzsche And The Overman Delusion

Thomas response to Kevin's post was completely idiotic. It shows, yet again, that he cannot cope with non-standard modes of thought which extend beyond the reach of conventional academia. Like a malfunctioning computer, his only recourse is to start babbling.

Thomas is very similar to those on the Ponderers Guild and he reflects the modern mindset very well, which is the main reason why I am picking on him. He falls into the category of the "last man", as described by Nietzsche:

--

I will speak unto them of the most contemptible thing: that, however, is the last man!"

And thus spake Zarathustra unto the people:

It is time for man to fix his goal. It is time for man to plant the germ of his highest hope.

Still is his soil rich enough for it. But that soil will one day be poor and exhausted, and no lofty tree will any longer be able to grow thereon.

Alas! there cometh the time when man will no longer launch the arrow of his longing beyond man- and the string of his bow will have unlearned to whizz!

I tell you: one must still have chaos in one, to give birth to a dancing star. I tell you: ye have still chaos in you.

Alas! There cometh the time when man will no longer give birth to any star. Alas! There cometh the time of the most despicable man, who can no longer despise himself.

Lo! I show you the last man.

"What is love? What is creation? What is longing? What is a star?"- so asketh the last man and blinketh.

The earth hath then become small, and on it there hoppeth the last man who maketh everything small. His species is ineradicable like that of the ground-flea; the last man liveth longest.

"We have discovered happiness"- say the last men, and blink thereby.

They have left the regions where it is hard to live; for they need warmth. One still loveth one's neighbour and rubbeth against him; for one needeth warmth.

Turning ill and being distrustful, they consider sinful: they walk warily. He is a fool who still stumbleth over stones or men!

A little poison now and then: that maketh pleasant dreams. And much poison at last for a pleasant death.

One still worketh, for work is a pastime. But one is careful lest the pastime should hurt one.

One no longer becometh poor or rich; both are too burdensome. Who still wanteth to rule? Who still wanteth to obey? Both are too burdensome.

No shepherd, and one herd! Everyone wanteth the same; everyone is equal: he who hath other sentiments goeth voluntarily into the madhouse.

"Formerly all the world was insane,"- say the subtlest of them, and blink thereby.

They are clever and know all that hath happened: so there is no end to their raillery. People still fall out, but are soon reconciled- otherwise it spoileth their stomachs.

They have their little pleasures for the day, and their little pleasures for the night, but they have a regard for health.

"We have discovered happiness,"- say the last men, and blink thereby. And here ended the first discourse of Zarathustra, which is also called "The Prologue", for at this point the shouting and mirth of the multitude interrupted him. "Give us this last man, O Zarathustra,"- they called out-

"make us into these last men! Then will we make thee a present of the Superman!" And all the people exulted and smacked their lips. Zarathustra, however, turned sad, and said to his heart:

"They understand me not: I am not the mouth for these ears.

Too long, perhaps, have I lived in the mountains; too much have I hearkened unto the brooks and trees: now do I speak unto them as unto the goatherds.

Calm is my soul, and clear, like the mountains in the morning. But they think me cold, and a mocker with terrible jests.

And now do they look at me and laugh: and while they laugh they hate me too. There is ice in their laughter."

--

This is such a great passage because it sums up the psychology of the modern man in a nutshell. Nietzsche foresaw his arisal with amazing clarity. And like Nietzsche, I also hold the last man in the deepest contempt.

suergaz

Registered User
Posts: 2555
(3/10/04 7:40 am)
Reply

---

---

The 'ultimate' man

But david, you with your ultimate reality, you are the ultimate man!

voce io

Registered User
Posts: 813
(3/10/04 10:33 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Thomas,

I agree that ideals are necessary for intellectual and spiritual development. No question about that. But Nietzsche says more than that. He says that we are to despise our primate nature. That is a mistake. That is pathological. It's a sign of mental disease.

Where does he say we should despise our primate nature?

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 866
(3/10/04 3:54 pm)
Reply

Re: Nietzsche And The Overman Delusion

---

Nietzsche: The earth hath then become small, and on it there hoppeth the last man who maketh everything small. His species is ineradicable like that of the ground-flea; the last man liveth longest.

Cute!

I'm not sure what to say about this. Although Nietzsche was a decent poet, as a philosopher he really sucked. I realize the literary value of his work, though. There is a deeply tragical side to it. Nietzsche is wrestling with his demons and he is doomed to lose that fight. His work is the outpouring of a long-drawn battle with his mental disease to which he succumbed later. It is quite scary, because the suffering is so intense; cancer is a mild punishment by comparison.

Nietzsche's battle with the disease is epic. He is all the warrior, determined to win over his demons. His heroic effort is reflected in the Zarathustra character where he paints his super-ego in great detail. He rears up and spits destiny in the face by pretending to be the only sane person on earth, while pretending that all others are ground-fleas (see the little man). Albeit, the effort is in vain. Neither Zarathustra nor Nietzsche make it.

I can see how you relate to Nietzsche, David. Like him you have alienated yourself from the world. You are socially disconnected from people. You see other people as mindless robots performing petty functions in inferior mental modes. This is described nicely in the above paragraph from Nietzsche. The whole enlightenment thing is a sublimation attempt, an escape route, and you are very much like Zarathustra in this regard. That phenomenon is related to your personality disorder, however. Zarathustra is an imagined figure, and your enlightenment is an illusion. You need to take a look into the nature of that illusion.

Thomas

Lbartoli

Registered User

Posts: 372

(3/11/04 2:13 am)

Reply

The Overman is Real

---

I dont know how many times it has to be said, Thomas, how many times you must be reminded. Why is this so difficult for you to grasp? It is really very simple.

I will spell it out for you one last time.

There are two ways to view the world, the right way and the wrong way.

(now who would argue with that!)

The right way is the way of the Buddha, the Christ, the sage, the enlightened being, or whatever the hell you want to call Him.

The wrong way is what seems immediately apparent to anything with a mind and senses, that includes monkeys, dogs and cats, babies, and your average adult.

When a monkey, a cat or a person becomes enlightened they see with full consciousness that there is indeed another way to view their world, in fact they view it this way, however briefly, and in doing so only then can they know for sure that their ordinary view was wrong all along, which means that which appears to be the case (self-existence, duality, etc) is not so, rather the truth is another perspective, and one must deliberately act to shift ones mind out of the wrong perspective in order to experience the right one, a skill very few possess.

Those people who have a faint awareness of true Reality can often-times bring it into full consciousness. Those who havent the slightest awareness (apparently your good self) must necessarily doubt the true Reality and the super-beings who are lucky enough to share in the divine nature. These folks have no choice but to accept their spiritual inadequacy and will forever doubt and criticize every enlightened person they encounter.

Now, i realize this means close to nothing to you and that you don't recognize or accept your extreme spiritual blindness, but believe me i have no reason to pick on you i dont even know who you are but it has always been as obvious to me as obvious can be that you are indeed incapable of understanding the nature of your blindness, as is almost the entire human race for that matter.

Again, there are omly two ways to view ones world, the right way and the wrong way, and hardly anyone possess the skill to see it the right way, though i strongly believe if young people embraced philosophy at an early age this would not be the case.

Leo

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2276

(3/11/04 8:12 am)

Reply

Re: Nietzsche And The Overman Delusion

Thomas wrote:

Quote:

---

I'm not sure what to say about this. Although Nietzsche was a decent poet, as a philosopher he really sucked.

---

On the contrary, he was a brilliant philosopher and only an average poet.

Quote:

---

I realize the literary value of his work, though. There is a deeply tragical side to it. Nietzsche is wrestling with his demons and he is doomed to lose that fight. His work is the outpouring of a long-drawn battle with his mental disease to which he succumbed later. It is quite scary, because the suffering is so intense; cancer is a mild punishment by comparison.

---

Nietzsche had the courage and integrity to face the demons which lie deep in his own ego in his quest for perfection - a fight that you completely shy away from out of deep fear. That you dismiss this struggle as the result of a mental disease is not only revealing of your own psychology but a an insult to all spiritual men everywhere.

No shepherd, and one herd! Everyone wanteth the same; everyone is equal: he who hath other sentiments goeth voluntarily into the madhouse.

"Formerly all the world was insane,"- say the subtlest of them, and blink thereby.

They are clever and know all that hath happened: so there is no end to their raillery. People still fall out, but are soon reconciled- otherwise it spoileth their stomachs.

- from Zarathustra's "The Last Man".

Quote:

---

The whole enlightenment thing is a sublimation attempt, an escape route, and you are very much like Zarathustra in this regard. That phenomenon is related to your personality disorder, however.

---

More terrible insults directed at spiritual men everywhere. Do you know what you are doing!?

Quote:

---

Zarathustra is an imagined figure, and your enlightenment is an illusion.

---

"What is creation? What is truth? What is enlightenment?" - so asketh the last man and blinketh.

Quote:

---

You need to take a look into the nature of that illusion.

---

"We have discovered happiness"- say the last men, and blink thereby.

They have left the regions where it is hard to live; for they need warmth. One still loveth one's neighbour and rubbeth against him; for one needeth warmth.

Turning ill and being distrustful, they consider sinful: they walk warily. He is a fool who still stumbleth over stones or men!

- from Zarathustra's "The Last Man"

Thomas Knierim

Registered User

Posts: 866

(3/11/04 12:40 pm)

Reply

Re: The Overman is Real

---

Leo: There are two ways to view the world, the right way and the wrong way.

(chuckle) The world is full of people who believe that the 'right way' coincides with their own world view.

Leo: Now, i realize this means close to nothing to you and that you don't recognize or accept your extreme spiritual blindness, but believe me i have no reason to pick on you i dont even know who you are but it has always been as obvious to me as obvious can be that you are indeed incapable of understanding the nature of your blindness, as is almost the entire human race for that matter.

Leo, I appreciate your concern. But if you are merely telling me about my blindness, it's not going to be very helpful. For all that matters it could be your own.

Thomas

Thomas Knierim

Registered User

Posts: 867

(3/11/04 1:36 pm)

Reply

Re: Nietzsche And The Overman Delusion

---

David: Nietzsche had the courage and integrity to face the demons which lie deep in his own ego in his quest for perfection - a fight that you completely shy away from out of deep fear. That you dismiss this struggle as the result of a mental disease is not only revealing of your own psychology but a an insult to all spiritual men everywhere.

I am sorry, David, but you seem to idealize Nietzsche quite a bit while being fundamentally ignorant about his condition. Nietzsche suffered (and died) from general paresis, a mental disorder that is associated with syphilis infection. General paresis appears in its last stage; it leads to motor impairment, delusions, paranoia, hallucinations and dementia. Common expressions of this disease are megalomania, agitation and delusions of grandeur. You might want to look up 'general paresis' on your own.

David: More terrible insults directed at spiritual men everywhere. Do you know what you are doing!?

It is not meant as an insult, David. Nietzsche was suffering from a severe condition and he has my sympathy. I regret that he suffered. I realize that his philosophy is partly an attempt to deal with the disease and partly an expression of it. General paresis is much more severe than a personality disorder.

I previously mentioned that I see a connection between you and Nietzsche, but I don't mean to say that your philosophy is the result of struggling with a condition as in Nietzsche's case. It's a bit different. It seems that your philosophy provides you with a theoretical foundation that justifies your preference for not engaging in relationships. The crux is that you think you are enlightened. I think you'd greatly benefit from looking into the nature of that delusion.

Thomas

Lbartoli
Registered User
Posts: 373
(3/12/04 2:23 pm)
Reply

helpless to help

---

Thomas, If i felt strongly that there was hope certainly i would approach you differently if at all, as the list owners have at times tried to enlighten you, but there doesn't seem to be any hope for you, based on what you have written here over some time it appears the chances of your becoming enlightened to any significant degree are effectively nil, since you are extremely certain of yourself and the value of your thoughts and opinions despite the error in them.

When someone is so confident and their feelings of self worth are tied so powerfully with their belief system, and those beliefs are dead wrong, to be converted is very difficult, usually it requires a dramatic act of love or self-sacrifice, something that demonstrates most convincingly to the individual that indeed those whom disagree with him are sincere and concerned, and not just critical of him because his views are opposite; but here on the internet such a demonstration of love and sincerity is unlikely, impossible, it's not like we're really together. But if you could look into Kevins eyes, even my own on a good day, i think you would be amazed and frieghtened, and it would be the turning point. Its unlikely to happen though, as certainly feelings have been hurt and animosity is present, but im sure they would have you if you cared to visit Tasmania.

Leo

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 874
(3/12/04 3:58 pm)
Reply

Re: helpless to help

---

Leo: Thomas, If i felt strongly that there was hope certainly i would approach you differently if at all, as the list owners have at times tried to enlighten you...

Leo, my good shepherd, I am awed by the fact that you and the list owners want to enlighten me. It really speaks in your favor. The crux is that I think the list owners aren't enlightened themselves, so that would be a bit of a problem.

Leo: you are extremely certain of yourself and the value of your thoughts and opinions despite the error in them.

I know that I come across a bit bold occasionally, but don't let this dishearten you. I also realize I was boldly wrong every now and then.

Leo: When someone is so confident and their feelings of self worth are tied so powerfully with their belief system, and those beliefs are dead wrong, to be converted is very difficult.

Not really. I am open to consider your thoughts and ideas pertaining to the issues you think I am 'wrong' about. If you can show me that you are 'right' in these matters and that your belief system is superior, I am willing to change my mind. Simply telling me that I am 'wrong' or 'blind', however, will not do the trick.

Leo: But if you could look into Kevins eyes, even my own on a good day, i think you would be amazed and frieghtened, and it would be the turning point.

It is always makes the difference, doesn't it? Seeing a person face to face. What would be frightening about meeting Kevin? He seems more like a gentle type of person to me.

Thomas

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2556

(3/14/04 12:09 am)

Reply

---

---

Quote:

---

He rears up and spits destiny in the face by pretending to be the only sane person on earth, while pretending that all others are ground-fleas

---

Come on Tom, you know this is not true!

If one possesses oneself poetically, one cannot 'suck' philosophically. Did you know that?! Zarathustras is a laughing wisdom.

About Nietzsches madness. He went mad in the year 1889. Not before.

Thomas Knierim

Registered User

Posts: 870

(3/14/04 2:20 am)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Zag: About Nietzsches madness. He went mad in the year 1889. Not before.

Yes, this is what most encyclopedias say. In 1989 Nietzsche collapsed in the streets of Turin after he hugged a horse while wearing underpants and from then on things went downhill. But it is also evidenced that he had periods of poor health before that incident.

What is more, according to the collapse theory, Nietzsche would have been sane when he wrote 'Zarathustra', while he was already close to madness when he wrote 'Ecce Homo' and 'Will to Power'. I am not sure about this. Such a transition is not visible in his works, is it?

The exact cause of Nietzsche's condition is still being debated. General paresis is one possibility; the other is brain cancer. General paresis takes ten, fifteen, or maybe even twenty years to manifest. So, Nietzsche must have carried around the infection for quite a long time and suffered primary and secondary symptoms before. I am inclined to believe that it was a long drawn out process (and syphilis fits that picture), rather than brain cancer. It seems unlikely that Nietzsche could have lived with a tumor for ten or maybe twenty years.

Besides, a syphilis infection might also explain -at least partly- his stance

|                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                         | towards women.Thomas                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2560(3/14/04 5:51 am)Reply | ---<hr/> Yes, he had periods of ill health during his life. This fact is not to be confused with his mental collapse which occurred in Turin. He did not see 'Will to Power' published. I know you think Nietzsche was a misogynist, but you are greatly mistaken about this. I'm not sure why you write about him at all when you have not read him. |

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Nietzsche And The Overman Delusion

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                      | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| RairunRegistered UserPosts: 225(3/14/04 7:12 am)Reply                                                                                            | ... <hr/> Yeah, I think Thomas' criticism doesn't do justice to Nietzsche at all. But I have to disagree with you in one point Zag. I used to think the same, but I came to see that not all who possess themselves poetically stop sucking philosophically. Some express their condition perfectly through their poetry, but they are unable to read it! Their work is poetical, but they are not!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| Thomas KnierimRegistered UserPosts: 872(3/14/04 9:27 pm)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> Zag: I know you think Nietzsche was a misogynist, but you are greatly mistaken about this. Can you elaborate? Zag: I'm not sure why you write about him at all when you have not read him. The reason I bring this up is because of Nietzsche's relevance to this community. Almost everyone on this list seems to have read Nietzsche and - even more peculiar- almost everyone seems to be an admirer of Nietzsche. Whenever I criticize Nietzsche, I see tomatoes flying in my direction. ;-0 This cannot be a coincidence. As you know from my past comments, I have little use for Nietzsche for |

|                                                                                                                                                                            |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                            | myself, but I am still interested in understanding where he is coming from and how he relates to the people here. I believe I have found that link. Nietzsche (as well as Buddha and Jesus) stands for the narrative of sublimation and the triumph of spirit over suffering. He is also an icon of misogyny. Thomas                             |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2562(3/16/04 1:22 am)Reply                                                                                         | --- <hr/> Rairun! If one is not poetical, how could ones work be poetical?! Tom, I asked you to elaborate when you called Nietzsche a misogynist some time ago, and you couldn't with any credibility. My elaboration of how you are greatly mistaken will not be necessary if you provide text of his which you think proves your point. |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1462(3/16/04 3:09 am)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> Well, I object to him saying that justice is not found in the heart of a woman, or profundity in her mind. Women are actually individuals, and some of them have those attributes.                                                                                                                                          |
| Owen1234Registered UserPosts: 40(3/16/04 3:15 am)Reply                                                                                          | Re: --- <hr/> birdofhermes:Well, I object to him saying that justice is not found in the heart of a woman, or profundity in her mind. Women are actually individuals, and some of them have those attributes. ----- It is the height of absurdity to assume otherwise! Shame on you quys, ..QSR!!! Owen  |

Edited by: Owen1234 at: 3/16/04 3:17 am

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 880
(3/16/04 1:02 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Zag: Tom, I asked you to elaborate when you called Nietzsche a misogynist some time ago, and you couldn't with any credibility. My elaboration of how you are greatly mistaken will not be necessary if you provide text of his which you think proves your point.

I am sorry; I thought this was obvious. Nietzsche's lack of success with women, two marriage proposals turned down, the brothel visits, the syphilis condition, the fact that he saw women as cowards, intellectually frivolous, and the saying that in a gender economy women would occupy the position of slaves and men the position of masters. I think he also said that "a woman seldom manifests a true sense of justice and honor", or was it Schopenhauer? Anyway, the two philosophers seemed to have shared the same spirit of continental 19th century misogyny. Both were bachelors.

Thomas

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2563
(3/16/04 11:08 pm)
Reply

---

---

Quote:

Anna:--Well, I object to him saying that justice is not found in the heart of a woman, or profundity in her mind.

Women are actually individuals, and some of them have those attributes.

---

Object all you like, especially because he didn't say it! And if he did, would you not claim the truth in such a saying, the superiority women have over 'justice'?!

Quote:

---

Zag: --Tom, I asked you to elaborate when you called Nietzsche a misogynist some time ago, and you couldn't with any credibility. My elaboration of how you are greatly mistaken will not be necessary if you provide text of his which you think proves your point.

Tom:--I am sorry; I thought this was obvious. Nietzsche's lack of success with women, two marriage proposals turned down, the brothel visits, the syphilis condition, the fact that he saw women as cowards, intellectually frivolous, and the saying that in a gender economy women would occupy the position of slaves and men the position of masters. I think he also said that "a woman seldom manifests a true sense of justice and honor", or was it Schopenhauer? Anyway, the two philosophers seemed to have shared the same spirit of continental 19th century misogyny. Both were bachelors.

---

You seem to say that bachelorhood is a state of misogyny. Like Anna, you quote nothing conclusive. You confuse him with Schopenhauer. He said nothing about a 'gender economy', never said women were cowards, or intellectually frivolous, and so what if he visited a brothel?! No-one knows with any certainty if he contracted syphilis, in short you sound hysterical, morally bent, and not in possession of the point you're trying to make. I remind you that he said the highest woman is a rarer and more perfect type than the highest man. What are your thoughts on this point?

You and Anna both have not read him. Neither of you are silly people, but you sound silly when you write about Nietzsche.

I feel as frosty as the snowed over landscape here! And as warm as I am....

Rairun
Registered User
Posts: 233
(3/17/04 10:32 am)
Reply

...

---

Zag, but much of what we read in poetry comes from ourselves! That's why someone can suck at it and we can still perceive their work as poetical. But you're right, if a work is poetical to us, there's no way it can suck philosophically to us.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 885
(3/17/04 1:37 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Zag: Object all you like, especially because he didn't say it!

Alright, I suppose it was Schopenhauer then. To my understanding Nietzsche was an admirer of Schopenhauer and he adopted quite a few of his views about women.

Zag: You seem to say that bachelorhood is a state of misogyny.

Not necessarily. While there are doubtlessly married misogynists, I suppose that a misogynist stays single if the attitude hardens at an early age.

Zag: ...never said women were cowards, or intellectually frivolous...

Alright. This time I am not quoting from Nietzsche quotes I found on the Internet:

- (1) Ah, women. They make the highs higher and the lows more frequent.
- (2) Women was God's second mistake.
- (3) Then I said: "Woman, give me your little truth." And thus spoke the little old woman: "You are going to women? Do not forget the whip!"
- (4) "Stupid as a man" say the women: "cowardly as a woman" say the men. Stupidity is in woman the unwomanly.
- (5) Many people, especially women, do not experience boredom, because they have never learned to work properly.

Commentary from Reader's Companion to U.S. Women's History (college.hmco.com/history/...mp/women/)

Friedrich Nietzsche, a German philosopher (1844-1900), and August Strindberg, a Swedish playwright (1849-1912), for instance, are recognized as misogynists by the male-supremacist culture. In an 1888 letter to Strindberg, Nietzsche wrote of the "deathly hatred of the sexes." This "deathly hatred" included the convictions that women are filthy (especially genitally), sluttish, and whore-like; and that physical love is a war in which the woman must be vanquished by physical force, not excluding beating, rape, and murder. The woman is regarded as a provocateur who, by her nature and will, initiates combat. In Nietzsche's and Strindberg's view, feminists were an even worse "enemy," an "army of whores and would-be whores—professional whores with abnormal inclinations," wrote

Strindberg. Denunciation, humiliating insult, and a degrading sexualization of women characterize misogyny, which is bitter, passionate, and often tormented.

Zag: I remind you that he said the highest woman is a rarer and more perfect type than the highest man. What are your thoughts on this point?

I have no idea what he wanted to say. Higher? Rarer? More perfect? I think these criteria are don't apply to the sexes.

Zag: You and Anna both have not read him.

It's not true that I didn't read him, but I concede that your knowledge of Nietzsche probably exceeds my own by far. I also admit that Nietzsche is being scapegoated as a Nazi and misogynist, while there were other less prominent figures who were worse examples in both regards.

Thomas

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2564

(3/17/04 11:32 pm)

Reply

---

---

What?! you're of the 'male supremacist' culture are you Tom? Nietzsche NEVER wrote that women are 'whore-like' 'sluttish' or 'genitally filthy.' If he was suggesting hatred of the sexes is deathly, he was right.

Why take Nietzsche out of context? I am not familiar with the first two quotes, but none of the quotes show Nietzsche is a misogynist.

Wha do you mean 'worse examples'?! You're not suggesting Nietzsche was a nazi are you?!

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1471

(3/18/04 1:58 am)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Object all you like, especially because he didn't say it! And if he did, would you not claim the truth in such a saying, the superiority women have over 'justice'?!

---

Yes, he said it. I am almost sure I hve posted it before, but I lost my book some time ago. It is in beyond good and evil. What I have read of Nietzsche is about the first half of that book, and I am not quoting what I have not read. I have read a few other little bits, but not much. I have tried to read Zarathustra, but I just haven't the patience for it. Now, I don't have any idea what you mean that women are superior over justice. I could speculate that you might mean they are less legalistic and more direct, which is probably so, but I saw no evidence that Nietzsche had any such intention.

I agree that some of what Thomas is thinking of comes from Schopenhauer, and now that I think on it, that Nietzsche bit was probably just a quick little toss left over from his admiration of Schop. I did read Schop's sorry little ditty on the subject, and it left me amazed that such simple drivel could be considered to have come from a thinker of any note. Meanwhile, we have John Stuart Mill, who apparently did some actual research into the topic, and came to the conclusion, with evidence, that women are considerably more just and humane when they are rulers. (Sometimes while simultaneously polishing off their competing family members!)

I read the Nietzsche bits expecting it to be bad, but for the most part he expresses love and affection for women, and a certain amount of real understanding. But he definitely thinks they are mental lightweights, with petty interests, and he only sees the masculine as important.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2287
(3/18/04 8:18 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Suergaz wrote:

Quote:

---

Why take Nietzsche out of context?

---

Because that is what modern academics do. And whatever modern academics do, Thomas does.

The thing to remember is that Thomas hasn't actually studied the works of Nietzsche (or Weininger). He has only read what academics have written about them.

Quote:

---

Wha do you mean 'worse examples'?! You're not suggesting Nietzsche was a nazi are you?!

---

If modern academics are suggesting that Nietzsche was a nazi, then that is what Thomas is suggesting.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 886
(3/18/04 1:48 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

David: If modern academics are suggesting that Nietzsche was a nazi, then that is what Thomas is suggesting.

I think Nietzsche would have strongly disliked the herd-like quality of the Nazi movement. Might he have subscribed to the idea of a superior class of Arians? Perhaps. Though I think he was too smart for that kind of thing.

David seems to be quite intent to put me into the "postmodern academics" box. I begin to wonder if he can perceive people outside boxes at all?

Thomas

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1475
(3/18/04 3:07 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Cut him some slack. It's difficult for men.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2565
(3/19/04 12:36 am)
Reply

---

---

Quote:

---

I read the Nietzsche bits expecting it to be bad, but for the most part he expresses love and affection for women, and a certain amount of real understanding. But he definitely thinks they are mental lightweights, with petty interests, and he only sees the masculine as important.

---

|                                                                                                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                          | Anna, What you said Nietzsche said does not appear in BG&amp;E, and certainly not the part about woman lacking profundity in her mind! He did not think women "mental lightweights" with "petty interests" (though I don't doubt he thought it of some) and it is ridiculous to suggest he saw only the masculine as important.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1472(3/19/04 2:20 am)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> Well, the only way to settle it would be for me to go to the library and find the book.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2568(3/22/04 3:00 am)Reply                                                                                       | -- <hr/> I already settled it. Settle it for yourself though if you like by reading the book as you say.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| ErechtheusRegistered UserPosts: 1(3/22/04 4:39 am)Reply                                                                                       | Re: Nietzsche And The Overman Delusion <hr/> Taken from BG&amp;E, Part Seven:Our Virtues, paragraph numbered 232, Nietzsche poses this 'question' - "Finally I pose this question: has any woman ever conceded profundity to a woman's mind or justice to a woman's heart?" In reading the entirety of that particular section the question comes off as rhetorical, but I suppose that depends on the perception of the reader, and of course who could say with any certainty but Nietzsche himself? Anyway point being Nietzsche did say something along the lines of what has been given in the present discussion, and it was from BG&amp;E. For my part I'm greatly enjoying all the threads I've been reading here so far, very lively, entertaining, intelligent and enlightened discussion. Heh, though for now if you'll forgive me the privelege of neutrality I'd prefer to say(write) less and listen(read) more. thanks. Edited by: Erechtheus at: 3/22/04 4:42 am |

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2576
(3/23/04 9:54 am)
Reply

---

---

Hi Erechtheus. Thankyou.

N0X23
Registered User
Posts: 99
(3/25/04 2:59 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

I have found definitive proof that Nietzsche was not a misogynist.

I will outright prove this claim through the use of this very rare and recently translated passage from the Uberman himself.

I present for your perusal....

Quote:

---

What are little boys made of?

What are little boys made of?
Snips and snails,
And puppy dog tails,
That's what little boys are made of.

What are little girls made of?

What are little girls made of?
Sugar and spice,
And everything nice,
That's what little girls are made of.

---

....any questions?....I thought not.

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

~~Delete~~ Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Nietzsche And The Overman Delusion

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| MKFaiziRegistered UserPosts: 1125(3/25/04 4:09 pm)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> I can't deal with the ignorance posted here. So much blatherskite. I think Thomas and Anna in particular need to grow up some. Faizi                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| MKFaiziRegistered UserPosts: 1126(3/25/04 4:45 pm)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> What is the definition of a bachelor? Is a bachelor the same as a virgin? I have been married twice. The very worst thing I can imagine now is a man interfering with my life. I have been a bachelor now for nearly fourteen years. I am not inexperienced. I am well acquainted with the nuances of sexual relationships -- this is this and that is that and do this and do that. Bow down and worship at the fount. I am not knocking it but I have been there and done that quite enough. Thomas, I know that you consider yourself to be quite intellectually enlightened. Therefore, I am surprised at you. I thought you were quite liberal. |

Do you discount all men who have visited brothels? All men who have had syphilis? All men who have been turned down by women?

As you pointed out, I admire much of the writing of Nietzsche. I am enlightened enough that I do not consider his writing against women to be writing against myself. I am man enough to recognize the frivolity of women.

For every vow against women he ever made, I could easily insert the name, MAN, and write a best seller. It is somewhat unfortunate that wife has many more rhymes than husband. "The Book of Wife" is very clever. If I could find enough rhymes, I could as easily write a "Book of Husband." A husband is the same as a wife.

Buddha was a sexual being and I know that you are a Buddha fan. Buddha got over it. So did Nietzsche. So did I.

Just because you have not yet managed to cross that so called sexual/egotistical barrier, you have no right to impose your middle class values here.

You have great intellectual gifts but you are stunted. You do not know the difference between a man and a woman. You only assume that you are a man because you dominate and depend upon your woman. If you are wise, you will recognize her masculinity and encourage it.

But I doubt that you will do that. You are a misogynist.

Faizi

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 905
(3/25/04 6:51 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Marsha,

I am tired of the blindness on this board.

Your and David comments about my person are stunningly stupid, especially since they seem to rest on nothing else than your emotional attachment to Nietzsche. You simply have no basis whatsoever for drawing conclusions about sexual/egotistical barriers. You know nothing about me and I am weary of discussing your phantasms.

Thomas

N0X23

Registered User

Posts: 101

(3/26/04 3:09 am)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

I can't deal with the ignorance posted here.

So much blatherskite. I think Thomas and Anna in particular need to grow up some.

Faizi

---

Destroy it, annihilate it, eradicate it...then....enlighten.

Or should the "assholes" be left to wallow in their own filth and ignorance?

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2585

(3/26/04 7:51 am)

Reply

Re: ---

---

No superior woman, (one who feels herself more beautiful, more desirable, more powerful ie. more feminine than other women) will concede profundity of mind to herself or her sex, for the sake of profundity. She knows how man stands, naked and clothed, she finds magnanimity in her heart, not "justice" , and therefore does not demand this mockery and prejudice of humanity the way small-mannered men do to reassure themselves of the comfort of their lives and wives.

'Just hand' rhymes with husband Marsha.

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1128

(3/26/04 5:34 pm)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Thomas,

I made no comment about your person. I commented on your comments. Be reasonable, man. You stake your reputation on being reasonable. It always amazes me how one who stakes his reputation on reason can become so emotional -- in the wink of an eye.

You have an emotional attachment to Nietzsche. You demonstrate that with your every utterance against him. That is your problem, not mine. In the past, I have admired the writing of Nietzsche. Big deal. I also admire the writing of Henry James and Jane Austen.

I am not attached to Nietzsche. You are attached to him and to Buddha. I have learned quite enough to be my own thinker. I don't need Nietzsche and I don't need Buddha and I don't need Jesus Christ.

I am my own person and my own mechanism of thought without need of a psychological or philosophical crutch.

We have known each other for years now, Thomas. I doubt that you can deny that I have been your friend.

You always want to leave when the heat gets turned up a notch.

Coward.

I am happy to be your Judas. If you insist on crucifixion, I will gladly nail you to the cross.

Nietzsche, my ass.

Get over this ancient Hitler guilt complex. You never killed a Jew. I know you well enough to know that you would never intentionally hurt anyone.

My great-grandfather owned slaves and I love niggers.

Hell, I am a nigger.

God, get over this, Thomas. Get past this history thing. Guilt is all right in the immediate aftermath. My slave owning great grandfather started a college for freed slaves just after the American Civil War. His funds educated many African Americans after the abolition of slavery. His college still exists in Alabama today. Condaleeza Rice's grandfather attended it. She is a bitch but she is an educated bitch. That's something.

Stop whining and pretending and write something from your gut for a change. It will do you good.

Faizi

ynithrix

Registered User

Posts: 250

(3/27/04 8:11 am)

Reply

re:

---

If telling the truth about women in a most fascinating and revealing way is misogyny, then Nietzsche was misogynous, otherwise not. Do you not see the truth of his words resonating from every woman you pass?

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1131

(3/27/04 2:35 pm)

Reply

Re: re:

---

The truth of women is men. So called men subscribe to the myth of woman as much as women. Even many enlightened men worship the vagina.

The idea of woman is a myth created by man. Just a fantasy. I thought that was a given. The myth of woman -- airbrushed dreams -- is the reason men have such romantic relationships with their fists.

I am sorry for offending Thomas. I honestly - stupidly - thought that he might be up to self examination. Clearly, I am a clod and do not belong here among the ineffectual elite and jokers.

It is my fault that I continually discount the delicate sensitivity of others.

I mistook this forum for a philosophy forum. My bad.

This is not a philosophy forum. This is a forum of agendas.

Got it.

Faizi

MKFaizi
Registered User
Posts: 1132
(3/27/04 2:47 pm)
Reply

Re: re:

---

Addendum to Thomas:

Given the fact that I have not written here for several months, it seems irrational for you to state that you are weary of my assertions.

I do think, however, that you are weary.

I quite understand that.

Faizi

WolfsonJakk
Posts: 1535
(3/27/04 3:12 pm)
Reply

Re: re:

---

Marsha,

Don't underestimate your veracity.

..But wait...It is not Marsha that needs instruction.

To those relatively new:

Approach ready. Love hurts.

Tharan

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2588
(3/28/04 12:47 am)
Reply

---

---

Quote:

---

The truth of women is men.

---

Only insofar as the truth of men is women.

The truth of women is woman.

Woman is not a myth. Woman is becoming. Man needs overcoming. The conception of the sexes is by the sexes. This is how the conception of the highest beings remains with the highest beings.

|                                                                                                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| MKFaiziRegistered UserPosts: 1133(3/28/04 2:57 pm)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> Love, by my definition, does hurt -- in many ways that I do not feel like explaining. Faizi                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
| MKFaiziRegistered UserPosts: 1134(3/28/04 3:02 pm)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> Addendum to Suergaz: You are simply rambling; not even barely aware of what you are saying. I have no objection to that, of course. Just an observation. Faizi                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| Jones KellyPosts: 9(3/29/04 3:19 pm)Reply                                                                                                     | "Even many enlightened men worship the vagina." <hr/> Marsha, I am guessing that by vagina you mean the emptiness or formlessness of sunyata. Because there is still a sense of a hole to be filled, or the birth canal to pass through, i would say that all interpretations of vagina as object of worship by enlightened men, mislead. Even the uterine space of the "world spirit" of Plato (in Timaeus) that has no form, absorbing all forms, embracing like a Mother, still has boundaries. If one is within, one remains protected. No, in fact, all unenlightened men worship the vagina, in as much as they don't go beyond relativity. |

|                                                                                                                                                                           |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2589(3/30/04 6:20 am)Reply                                                                                        | --- <hr/> Marsha, you must concede the truth of my statements by saying I am barely aware of what I'm saying!? The truth in my words when I am really barely aware of what I'm saying would most likely make you cling to me like one who is fighting insanity, grasping at the barest things. Who cares if love hurts? The weaklings. (Just an observation.)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1487(3/30/04 11:56 am)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Who cares if love hurts? The weaklings <hr/> . Agreed.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| Jones KellyPosts: 11(3/30/04 12:50 pm)Reply                                                                                                         | Fear of? <hr/> "There is no sickness for which that is a cure!" Perhaps this thread has turned into a defense of love for relationships - love. This is worth looking into again, because defending relationships with other people is again a core defense of the ego. But what is the ultimate fear? I would say: madness - challenging the status quo so much that one is no longer status quo (no relationships permissable). My thoughts on the mistaken identity of "madness": Not knowing the nature of Ultimate Reality, a person is ignorant. They can not understand what it is, and if it is spoken about to them, they think they are being told lies. They deduct that who speaks lies is the truly ignorant one, or a madman, or an egotist, or some strange combination of these: a psychopath. This deduction is based on not having all the facts. The problem is, to have "all the facts" means to ignore everyone else's "all the facts" and even all one's own facts. It means starting from scratch. |

An example of how hard this is: try going slowly, so slowly you are conscious of exactly everything you are doing, as if to teach an ignorant one how to do this using oral instructions only. (Wittgensteiney)

E.g. "I open my eyes, I close my eyes, I focus my eyes..." (blinking)

Now go slower: notice what causes each action; there are desires to do something. Watch each thought arise.

E.g. "I will raise one finger and i will focus on moving my eyes to follow my finger movement..." (about to type)

All of this is usually unconscious: habitual. To start from scratch means questioning every habit consciously. It's enormous, isn't it? To get all one's facts straight means getting to the bottom of all the training of a lifetime. Not only questioning what the newborn's instincts are, but how these very instincts affect its facts...

The deeply ingrained "genetic facts" make Ultimate Reality seem a lie - but the questioning of those facts (in itself a genetic fact) can lead a person to see the "sickness" for which an understanding of Ultimate Reality is the cure.

As it appears to those who are ignorant and yet unwilling (or perhaps unable) to start from scratch, enlightenment is a form of madness. As market research shows (KIR, TPG, GF) there is very little demand for it, and hardly anyone can afford it - because it costs you everything you have - and are.

Can you:

- (i) Depend on your own reason, rejecting not only the wisdom of the ages, but also other people's reasoning?
- (ii) Depend on your reason to the extent of accepting you are nothing, and allow yourself to actually die because of the certainty of what you deduce?
- (iii) Give up all your values, including the survival of the entire human species (e.g. having sex, caring for children, healing sick, pacifism in wartime) except the value placed on what your reason leads you to value?
- (iv) Give up relationships and socialising, and/or anything that compromises your valuing of reason?
- (v) Accept that reason itself is part of the lie intrinsic in your nature (ie. you were born with it)? *** This is a challenging one!
- (vi) Disbelieve the evidence of your senses?

So, why would a person ever want to become enlightened? If so few can do it, where is the human benefit, and why bother?

Because it is the universal answer to everything about human existence, and not to know this is to be truly ignorant and inhuman.

So few do it because so many humans don't: actually all intelligent humans can, and this may be the only practical alternative to extinction. The extinction of thirst (tanha) might be the extinction of extinction.

Kevin, Dan and David are actually the "good friends who lead you along the right path" (kalyana-mitta)...

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 1058

(3/30/04 3:48 pm)

Reply

Re: Fear of?

---

Quote:

---

Kelly: This is worth looking into again, because defending relationships with other people is again a core defense of the ego.

---

As is it's opposite.

Quote:

---

All of this is usually unconscious: habitual. To start from scratch means questioning every habit consciously. It's enormous, isn't it? To get all one's facts straight means getting to the bottom of all the training of a lifetime. Not only questioning what the newborn's instincts are, but how these very instincts affect its facts...

---

What's the point? This will just leads to other attachment. Not that one shouldn't examine oneself in detail, but oneself examining oneself will just lead to a different oneself. Just observe; the 'I am' in the sentence "I am this." observes the 'I am this'. 'This' will drop away naturally, or assume it's rightful place.

Quote:

---

The deeply ingrained "genetic facts" make Ultimate Reality seem a lie - but the questioning of those facts (in itself a genetic fact) can lead a person to see the "sickness" for which an understanding of Ultimate Reality is the cure.

---

Understanding of Ultimate Reality is no cure, it's a tool with which to better understand another tool. Moreover, it may lead to more 'sickness' - Fundamentalism.

Quote:

---

As it appears to those who are ignorant and yet unwilling (or perhaps unable) to start from scratch, enlightenment is a form of madness. As market research shows (KIR, TPG, GF) there is very little demand for it, and hardly anyone can afford it - because it costs you everything you have - and are.

---

I don't think many appreciate the subject enough to even formulate that opinion. Most would just have a vague idea of what they think it is, including madness or not, much as they would have a vague idea of what genius is, or what they are.

I don't see how it costs you a thing. You can keep what you think you've got, but you can't lose what you know you haven't got.

Quote:

---

Can you:

(i) Depend on your own reason, rejecting not only the wisdom of the ages, but also other people's reasoning?

---

Such rejection can be as bad as accepting it all. And when examining oneself, one is left with no choice but to depend on one's own reason. One could say that one can only ever depend on one's own reason, whether in rejecting, accepting, choosing not to decide or deciding not to choose.

Quote:

---

(ii) Depend on your reason to the extent of accepting you are nothing, and allow yourself to actually die because of the certainty of what you deduce?

---

Do you mean actual physical death? Otherwise, this paragraph is insoluble.

Nothing 'dies', it simply goes into mothballs.

Quote:

---

(iii) Give up all your values, including the survival of the entire human species (e.g. having sex, caring for children, healing sick, pacifism in wartime) except the value placed on what your reason leads you to value?

---

Values can't be 'given up', just replaced. One's poverty will always become one's riches. If you value not doing all those things you mention, then you value doing their opposite. Whatever your reason leads you to value is a value just like any other value. There is no difference between attachment and valuing, no matter what some other reasoners might tell you.

Letting go is not giving up.

Quote:

---

(iv) Give up relationships and socialising, and/or anything that compromises your valuing of reason?

---

That is attachment to reason, which is just a tool. Attachment to reason compromises reason.

Again, letting go is not giving up.

Quote:

---

(v) Accept that reason itself is part of the lie intrinsic in your nature (ie. you were born with it)? *** This is a challenging one!

---

No more challenging than the rest of it, unless you turn it into something that it's not.

Quote:

---

(vi) Disbelieve the evidence of your senses?

---

Understand the evidence of your senses.

Quote:

---

Because it is the universal answer to everything about human existence, and not to know this is to be truly ignorant and inhuman.

---

There is no question.

To not know whatever anything is to be truly ignorant of it.

In not knowing it, a human is human; in knowing it, a human is human; in 'achieving' it, an inhuman is.

Quote:

---

Kevin, Dan and David are actually the "good friends who lead you along the right path"

---

They are and they aren't.

Edited by: Dave Toast at: 3/30/04 3:52 pm

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 626
(3/30/04 8:11 pm)
Reply

Re: Fear of?

---

Quote:

---

This is worth looking into again, because defending relationships with other people is again a core defense of the ego.

---

As is it's opposite.

---

That is a good point. When one deals with any deep relationship, there is a letting go of ego some of the time. Long term relationships last because of this. The intention of letting go of the ego is initially for emotional bliss, but that doesn't last, and often becomes one of avoiding emotional turmoil by letting go of pride, which leads to either an acceptable level of comfort, boredom or hatred.

On the other hand when one removes attachments like a lover or family, then the ego is not truly being tested, if one gets attached to something else, even truth, then how does one know the ego is not merely buried, placed under a shell of auto-logical thinking, while circumstances remain favourable?

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 1059
(3/31/04 7:22 am)
Reply

Re: Fear of?

---

On a fundamental level, aversion is the very same 'sickness' as avarice.

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Nietzsche And The Overman Delusion

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                            | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Jones KellyPosts: 13(3/31/04 11:32 am)Reply | Re: Fear of? <hr/> Kelly: This is worth looking into again, because defending relationships with other people is again a core defense of the ego. Dave: As is it's opposite. Yes. In the light of the thread, i focussed on defence of relationships with other people. Aversion to relationships is a core defence of the ego that wishes to protect itself. True solitude is being able to stand without any ego defences. Kelly: Not only questioning what the newborn's instincts are, but how these very instincts affect its facts... Dave: ...but oneself examining oneself will just lead to a different oneself. Yes. But by not examining oneself is to settle into one's habits unconsciously, without ever becoming aware that self is a construct. The technique was recommended as a pointer to the deeply ingrained habits of desire: when self is realised as a construct, what new self replaces this? The process pares away habits in order to come to stillness of desire. Understanding of Ultimate Reality is no cure, it's a tool with which to better understand another tool. Moreover, it may lead to more 'sickness' - Fundamentalism. A cure can itself have side effects. In the same way, a coarse bastard file |

then a medium file then a fine file then gradually finer grades of sandpaper (etc.) are each "healing tools", applied with purpose.

Fundamentalism as a method of teaching without purposeful awareness, is definitely delusional, in that it is egotistical. If one is fundamentally certain that Ultimate Reality can be known as formless, then that is true for the individual, and can not perpetuate sickness (egotism) - as long as it is fully understood and applied.

Kelly: As it appears to those who are ignorant and yet unwilling (or perhaps unable) to start from scratch, enlightenment is a form of madness. As market research shows (KIR, TPG, GF) there is very little demand for it, and hardly anyone can afford it - because it costs you everything you have - and are.

Dave: I don't think many appreciate the subject enough to even formulate that opinion. Most would just have a vague idea of what they think it is, including madness or not, much as they would have a vague idea of what genius is, or what they are.

I don't see how it costs you a thing. You can keep what you think you've got, but you can't lose what you know you haven't got.

KS and DQ have been often accused of teaching a false enlightenment, resulting in little demand for their "product". True, enlightenment is always a vague idea until it is actually known.

Dave, if you are enlightened - what is it exactly that you think you've got that you can keep? It is possible you know "you've got nothing", so you keep nothing. But unless you are already perfect, you probably have "got" habits that you can't keep.

Kelly: (i) Depend on your own reason, rejecting not only the wisdom of the ages, but also other people's reasoning?

Dave: Such rejection can be as bad as accepting it all. And when examining oneself, one is left with no choice but to depend on one's own reason. One could say that one can only ever depend on one's own reason, whether in rejecting, accepting, choosing not to decide or deciding not to choose.

I was being ironic with "wisdom of the ages", and would certainly not reject the Bhagavad-gita, Lao Tzu, etc. without first examining them carefully for falsehood. To reject one's own reason is strictly in the light of knowing that such reason is not one's own - not in giving up thinking.

Kelly: (ii) Depend on your reason to the extent of accepting you are nothing, and allow yourself to actually die because of the certainty of what you deduce?

Dave: Do you mean actual physical death? Otherwise, this paragraph is insoluble.

Nothing 'dies', it simply goes into mothballs.

If, for instance, i was unable to control my ego and deduced i should become the next messiah, or a the-rapist, i would have lost my reason and would be better fully extinct than merely unconscious. Any other will to full extinction is silly in my state - but nevertheless, holding to the "alive self" is a form of attachment.

Yes, nothing dies, but when consciousness never arises again, that is full extinction. I'm not sure what exactly goes into mothballs though. I am aware Buddhism teaches No-soul (no Atman) after being "fully blown out", yet am not certain about how a Buddha experiences Nirvana unless they are conscious (what exactly can appear to mind?)

Kelly: (iii) Give up all your values, including the survival of the entire human species (e.g. having sex, caring for children, healing sick, pacifism in wartime) except the value placed on what your reason leads you to value?

Dave: Values can't be 'given up', just replaced. One's poverty will always become one's riches. If you value not doing all those things you mention, then you value doing their opposite. Whatever your reason leads you to value is a value just like any other value. There is no difference between attachment and valuing, no matter what some other reasoners might tell you.

Letting go is not giving up.

I agree as long as you mean that values continue as long as one desires. Gradually the renunciation of all attachments leads to the final renunciation of attachment to Truth. You may need to explain "Letting go is not giving up" as this is not clear to me.

Kelly: (iv) Give up relationships and socialising, and/or anything that compromises your valuing of reason?

Dave: That is attachment to reason, which is just a tool. Attachment to reason compromises reason.

Again, letting go is not giving up

Yes, attachments are what are renounced. As i mentioned above, if attachment to reason maintains one's delusions, it must be renounced - the attachment to ego. This does not mean stop thinking, it means, question what is so attractive about thinking, what is its use? I am not advocating repression of thinking, but analysis of the attachment to thinking.

Kelly: (vi) Disbelieve the evidence of your senses?

Dave: Unders the evidence of your senses.[/i]

Yes. This is one of those medicines that need a medicine: to get over the attachment, the evidence of senses is disbelieved in as long as they are a "belief". This is understanding what the evidence is.

Kelly: Because it is the universal answer to everything about human existence, and not to know this is to be truly ignorant and inhuman.

Dave: There is no question.

To not know whatever anything is to be truly ignorant of it.

In not knowing it, a human is human; in knowing it, a human is human; in 'achieving' it, an inhuman is.

Dave, if there is no question, there is no answer. This is of course the "no-attainment" attained in enlightenment. But to not know this is to be ignorant - and thus unconscious. Would you explain what you meant with your last sentence?

Jones Kelly

Posts: 14

(3/31/04 11:54 am)

Reply

Fear of?

jimhaz: On the other hand when one removes attachments like a lover or family, then the ego is not truly being tested, if one gets attached to something else, even truth, then how does one know the ego is not merely buried, placed under a shell of auto-logical thinking, while circumstances remain favourable?

The replacement of an attachment, instead of its radical renunciation, comes from not understanding (and applying that understanding) the nature of desire. That is why suffering can be a useful tool, a kind of check-up, because it points clearly to attachments. Happiness is a subtle delusion, and tranquillity of mind can often be dullness of awareness.

Also attachment to suffering forms a kind of happiness - one needs to be pretty alert. My own habits of lacking alertness mean i tend to lean towards constant checking, because i haven't established great habits yet.

"When circumstances remain favourable" is actually something you determine - by creating circumstances.

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Nietzsche's Lovers

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                       | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 340(3/13/04 10:12 am)Reply  | Nietzsche's Lovers <hr/> 14.01.04 Bob wrote: [Quotes David Quinn:] "You're speaking to someone who spends his life encouraging adults to abandon sexual/emotional relationships for the sake of a pure life in Truth." Tell me of your success rate in this adventure. J. Krishnamurti saw no transformees after having spoken and written for some 60 years. Nietzsche wrote his works pretty well convinced that no one in his time was fit to understand him. Have you yourself been to the mountain top in your own "pure life in Truth"? Or is it the abyss? Either way-do trudge onward! Bob M. 23.01.04 Rhett wrote: Hi Bob, |

- > "You're speaking to someone who spends his life encouraging adults to
- > abandon sexual/emotional relationships for the sake of a pure life in
- > Truth." D.Q.
- >
- > Tell me of your success rate in this adventure. J. Krishnamurti saw no
- > transformees after having spoken and written for some 60 years.
- > Nietzsche wrote his works pretty well convinced that no one in his time
- > was fit to understand him. Have you yourself been to the mountain top in
- > your own "pure life in Truth"? Or is it the abyss? Either way-do trudge
- > onward!
- >
- > Bob M.

Score = at least one so far.

What's your opinion of the truthful life Bob, or are you undecided?

Do you accept that to really know what it involves you would have to know the Truth?

Does the thought of leading such a life create fear in you somehow, and do you thus attempt to deny it's validity in your mind?

How many people do you know of that have attained enlightenment and then changed their values and spoken in favour of the conventional life? I don't know of any. Do you think that this speaks in favour of it?

What sort of things do you do and value in life?

Rhett Hamilton

23.01.04 Bob wrote:

Rhett Hamilton-Smith wrote:

- >
- >
- > Hi Bob,
- >

>
>> "You're speaking to someone who spends his life encouraging adults to >> abandon sexual/emotional relationships for the sake of a pure life in >> Truth." D.Q.
>>
>> Tell me of your success rate in this adventure. J. Krishnamurti saw no >> transformees after having spoken and written for some 60 years.
>> Nietzsche wrote his works pretty well convinced that no one in his time >> was fit to understand him. Have you yourself been to the mountain top in >> your own "pure life in Truth"? Or is it the abyss? Either way-do trudge >> onward!
>>
>> Bob M.
>
>
> Score = at least one so far.

Hello Rhett, that is well and the more the merrier I suppose.

> What's your opinion of the truthful life Bob, or are you undecided?

The Truthful Life? Oh let see.....how about perfectly living the Lord's Prayer? Or perhaps completely immersing oneself in AA's 12 steps? Or maybe even utilizing both roadmaps in the task of becoming fully human-fully alive, and in my case also fully male. Or then again maybe cultivating the Christ principle within might best define the Truthful Life.

> Do you accept that to really know what it involves you would have to > know the Truth?

As it was with Nietzsche, I too knew at an early age that no human word would ever reach me.

> Does the thought of leading such a life create fear in you somehow, and > do you thus attempt to deny it's validity in your mind?

Fear? Seeing clearly the terrible darkness of the human condition everywhere along with having had a full life, there are times I long for the 'recycle bin' and in a rather pleasant manner even have 'dress rehearsals'. Thoreau had a pretty sweet exit I believe.

> How many people do you know of that have attained enlightenment and then > changed their values and spoken in favour of the conventional life?

Of all the people I know or have read about, I'm really only impressed with Nietzsche as not only having been enlightened, but having been the master psychologist of perhaps all times. I find Freud's notion that he had a more penetrating knowledge of himself than anyone who ever lived or may come to live quite impressive and accurate. Once upon a time I ranked J. Krishnamurti pretty high on my list of honorable examples, but as I kept on climbing onward and upward I came to hold a thanks-but no thanks view of him.

> I don't know of any. Do you think that this speaks in favour of it?

I'm skeptical as to the fullness or completeness of virtually anyone anywhere who claims enlightenment, especially those heavy on the genius angle.

> What sort of things do you do and value in life?

> Rhett

Being thoroughly dead to the world is my only real desire or interest. Since only then am I of any real value to my fellows and my Creator, and consequently void of any and all restlessness.

Happy Trails and Trials,

Bob M.

25.01.04 Rhett wrote:

Hi Bob,

>>> "You're speaking to someone who spends his life encouraging adults to >>> abandon sexual/emotional relationships for the sake of a pure life in >>> Truth." D.Q.

>>>
>>> Tell me of your success rate in this adventure. J. Krishnamurti saw no >>> transformees after having spoken and written for some 60 years.
>>> Nietzsche wrote his works pretty well convinced that no one in his time >>> was fit to understand him. Have you yourself been to the mountain top in >>> your own "pure life in Truth"? Or is it the abyss? Either way-do trudge >>> onward!
>>>
>>> Bob M.
>>
>>
>> Score = at least one so far.
>
> Hello Rhett, that is well and the more the merrier I suppose.
>
>> What's your opinion of the truthful life Bob, or are you undecided?
>
> The Truthful Life? Oh let see.....how about perfectly living the Lord's > Prayer? Or perhaps completely immersing oneself in AA's 12 steps? Or > maybe even utilizing both roadmaps in the task of becoming fully > human-fully alive, and in my case also fully male. Or then again maybe > cultivating the Christ principle within might best define the Truthful > Life.

Seems like you haven't got past nihilism(?).

>> Do you accept that to really know what it involves you would have to >> know the Truth?
>
> As it was with Nietzsche, I too knew at an early age that no human word > would ever reach me.

Except Nietzsche's and J Krishnamurti's i imagine.

What about appearances, do they not fool you?

>> Does the thought of leading such a life create fear in you somehow, and > > do you thus attempt to deny it's validity in your mind?

>

> Fear? Seeing clearly the terrible darkness of the human condition > everywhere along with having had a full life, there are times I long for > the 'recycle bin' and in a rather pleasant manner even have 'dress > rehearsals'. Thoreau had a pretty sweet exit I believe.

Then i'll spare you any 'missionary zeal'.

> > How many people do you know of that have attained enlightenment and then > > changed their values and spoken in favour of the conventional life?

>

> Of all the people I know or have read about, I'm really only impressed > with Nietzsche as not only having been enlightened, but having been the > master psychologist of perhaps all times. I find Freud's notion that he > had a more penetrating knowledge of himself than anyone who ever lived > or may come to live quite impressive and accurate. Once upon a time I > ranked J. Krishnamurti pretty high on my list of honorable examples, but > as I kept on climbing onward and upward I came to hold a thanks-but no > thanks view of him.

Whilst i remain largely ignorant of Nietzsche's views, i have read enough to make conditional assessments, until such time as i read Zarathustra at the very least.

How do you reconcile his tortured and essentially dysfunctional life with your high regard for him?

I think it's quite clear that despite his 'enlightenment', he didn't really develop a proper comprehension of the nature of reality, and thus failed to go beyond psychology and find nirvana.

I know of a young lad that is also a devotee, and from my perspective he's just following him into the morass...Nietzsche has blinded him to Ultimate Truth.

> > I don't know of any. Do you think that this speaks in favour of it?

>

> I'm skeptical as to the fullness or completeness of virtually anyone > anywhere who claims enlightenment, especially those heavy on the genius > angle.

> > What sort of things do you do and value in life?

>

> Being thoroughly dead to the world is my only real desire or interest.

> Since only then am I of any real value to my fellows and my Creator, and > consequently void of any and all restlessness.

These seem like reinforcement of my previous comments. I think it's crucial that people realise the importance of the transition (on one's 'spiritual path') from nihilism to the truth about the nature of reality, and to Ultimate Wisdom.

> Happy Trails and Trials,

>

> Bob M.

Rhett Hamilton

28.01.04 Bob wrote:

> These seem like reinforcement of my previous comments. I think it's > crucial

> that people realise the importance of the transition (on one's

> 'spiritual > path') from nihilism to the truth about the nature of reality, and to > Ultimate Wisdom.

>

>

> Rhett

Ultimate Wisdom? Do you think old Bible Paul had Ultimate Wisdom? He remarked that the spiritual man had insight into everything which bothered and baffled the man of the world who did not understand him at all.

Bob M.

30.01.04 Rhett wrote:

Hi Bob,

> > These seem like reinforcement of my previous comments. I think it's > > crucial > > that people realise the importance of the transition (on one's > > 'spiritual > > path') from nihilism to the truth about the nature of reality, and to > > Ultimate Wisdom.

> >

> > Rhett

> Ultimate Wisdom? Do you think old Bible Paul had Ultimate Wisdom?

He

> remarked that the spiritual man had insight into everything which > bothered and baffled the man of the world who did not understand him at > all.

>

> Bob M.

Only you can know for sure if you still have questions.

I'm rather a cowboy on the spiritual scene, historical references often don't trigger anything; because there's little there to trigger.

Quote: "I'm skeptical as to the fullness or completeness of virtually anyone anywhere who claims enlightenment, especially those heavy on the genius angle." [Bob M]

Do you have a specific beef with declarations of genius?

I can well understand you might if it related to intellectualism, to rigidly held opinions about finite phenomena . . .but it's certainly not that in this case.

Rhett Hamilton

30.01.04 Bob wrote:

Rhett Hamilton-Smith wrote:

>

>

> Hi Bob,

>

>

>>> These seem like reinforcement of my previous comments. I think it's >>> crucial

>>> that people realise the importance of the transition (on one's

>>> 'spiritual >>> path') from nihilism to the truth about the nature of reality, and to >>> Ultimate Wisdom.

>>>

>>> Rhett

>

>> Ultimate Wisdom? Do you think old Bible Paul had Ultimate Wisdom?

He

>> remarked that the spiritual man had insight into everything which >> bothered and baffled the man of the world who did not understand him at >> all.

>>

>> Bob M.

>

> Only you can know for sure if you still have questions.

>

- >
- > I'm rather a cowboy on the spiritual scene, historical references often
- > don't trigger anything; because there's little there to trigger.
- >
- >
- > Quote: "I'm skeptical as to the fullness or completeness of virtually
- > anyone
- > anywhere who claims enlightenment, especially those heavy on the genius
- > angle." [Bob M]
- >
- > Do you have a specific beef with declarations of genius?
- >
- > I can well understand you might if it related to intellectualism, to
- > rigidly
- > held opinions about finite phenomena . . .but it's certainly not that in
- > this case.
- >
- >
- > Rhett

I much prefer the declarations of those endowed with fullness of manhood or those who are earnestly striving in that direction. And seldom do I see this wholesomeness in those who possess or proclaim 'genius', but rather more likely a lopsidedness or imbalance.

"Society everywhere is in conspiracy against the manhood of everyone of its members." Emerson

Little has changed, save for an increase in hiding places for those who cannot or will not rise above the all-permeating and all-prevailing mediocrity and degeneracy of the species.

Bob M.

Hi Bob,

> I much prefer the declarations of those endowed with fullness of manhood > or those who are earnestly striving in that direction. And seldom do I > see this wholesomeness in those who possess or proclaim 'genius', but > rather more likely a lopsidedness or imbalance.

>

> "Society everywhere is in conspiracy against the manhood of everyone of > its members." Emerson

>

> Little has changed, save for an increase in hiding places for those who > cannot or will not rise above the all-permeating and all-prevailing > mediocrity and degeneracy of the species.

>

> Bob M.

I don't make a big point about proclaiming genius, but i do think it's important to make the distinction between a wordly thinker and a thinker of the Infinite. Most importantly, it helps people that want to develop the "fullness of their manhood" from wasting their efforts in the wrong areas. It clarifies their vision.

I wholeheartedly agree that most people that are labelled a genius by society are still quite mediocre and deluded compared to those that take their questioning all the way and experience Truth.

Perhaps you'd be willing to look at these links to get a clearer picture of the way that the word genius is used around here,

<http://www.users.bigpond.com/drowden/issue8.htm#Einstein>

http://www.users.bigpond.com/drowden/issue14.htm#science\_genius

And here's a few thoughts about Neitzsche that you might like to comment on,

<http://www.users.bigpond.com/drowden/issue20.htm#nietzsche>

Rhett Hamilton

31.01.04 Bob wrote:

Rhett Hamilton-Smith wrote:

>

>

> Hi Bob,

>

>

>> I much prefer the declarations of those endowed with fullness of manhood

>> or those who are earnestly striving in that direction. And seldom do I >> see this wholesomeness in those who possess or proclaim 'genius', but >> rather more likely a lopsidedness or imbalance.

>>

>> "Society everywhere is in conspiracy against the manhood of everyone of >> its members." Emerson

>>

>> Little has changed, save for an increase in hiding places for those who >> cannot or will not rise above the all-permeating and all-prevailing >> mediocrity and degeneracy of the species.

>>

>> Bob M.

>

>

> I don't make a big point about proclaiming genius, but i do think it's > important to make the distinction between a wordly thinker and a thinker > of > the Infinite. Most importantly, it helps people that want to develop the > "fullness of their manhood" from wasting their efforts in the wrong > areas.

> It clarifies their vision.

>

> I wholeheartedly agree that most people that are labelled a genius by > society are still quite mediocre and deluded compared to those that take > their questioning all the way and experience Truth.

Hello Rhett,

"All the way" you say, much like Nietzsche's claim that one must seek the truth whether it brings him a profit or a fatality?

> Perhaps you'd be willing to look at these links to get a clearer picture > of > the way that the word genius is used around here,

I've searched this place and related sites pretty extensively over the past 4 years. Regardless of how it's used, one can still remain lopsided. I may be wrong but it seems nearly all those herein remain single and lack having a wife/helpmate by their side, hence in my view they're still lacking in fullness of manhood. Likewise I sense an air of misogyny which I feel reflects cowardice and immaturity.

> <http://www.users.bigpond.com/drowden/issue8.htm#Einstein>

>

> http://www.users.bigpond.com/drowden/issue14.htm#science\_genius

>

>

> And here's a few thoughts about Nietzsche that you might like to comment > on,

I enjoyed reading the discussion on Nietzsche's insanity and Weiningers early demise. Although I believe my understanding of these events is pretty dead-on from my own experiences. D.Q.'s remark that Nietzsche went mad because he loved too much is pretty sharp. Yet here's this trick word 'love', which can only known by those who are willing to give themselves completely and unendingly to the discovery of truth in relationship with life rather than by mere questioning and observation alone.

> <http://www.users.bigpond.com/drowden/issue20.htm#nietzsche>

>

> Rhett

Bob M.

02.02.04 Rhett wrote:

Hi Bob,

>>> I much prefer the declarations of those endowed with fullness of manhood >>> or those who are earnestly striving in that direction. And seldom do I >>> see this wholesomeness in those who possess or proclaim 'genius', but >>> rather more likely a lopsidedness or imbalance.

>>>

>>> "Society everywhere is in conspiracy against the manhood of everyone of >>> its members." Emerson

>>>

>>> Little has changed, save for an increase in hiding places for those who >>> cannot or will not rise above the all-permeating and all-prevailing >>> mediocrity and degeneracy of the species.

>>>

>>> Bob M.

>>

>>

>> I don't make a big point about proclaiming genius, but i do think it's >> important to make the distinction between a wordly thinker and a thinker

>> of >> the Infinite. Most importantly, it helps people that want to develop the >> "fullness of their manhood" from wasting their efforts in the wrong >> areas.

>> It clarifies their vision.

>>

>> I wholeheartedly agree that most people that are labelled a genius by >> society are still quite mediocre and deluded compared to those that take >> their questioning all the way and experience Truth.

>

> Hello Rhett,

>

> "All the way" you say, much like Nietzsche's claim that one must seek > the truth whether it brings him a profit or a fatality?

Most certainly, but these days there is enough clear wisdom around for fatalities to be quite avoidable.

>> Perhaps you'd be willing to look at these links to get a clearer picture >> of >> the way that the word genius is used around here,
>
> I've searched this place and related sites pretty extensively over the > past 4 years. Regardless of how it's used, one can still remain > lopsided. I may be wrong but it seems nearly all those herein remain > single and lack having a wife/helpmate by their side, hence in my view > they're still lacking in fullness of manhood. Likewise I sense an air of > misogyny which I feel reflects cowardice and immaturity.

Well, i can use a personal example to illustrate my opinion on the matter.

I know of a lady that would be more than willing to be nothing more than my helpmate. But i value her being more than that, because i value consciousness of the Truth, and she hasn't got that yet. If i let her cave in to her desire to attach herself to me she would lose her mind in the process. It's feminine nature for women to have a strong will to lose their own mind. Even though she has stated a devotion to Truth, she still needs me to rebuff her will-to-mindlessness on her behalf. If i were to give in to her will, i would consider myself quite a misogynist, because i would be enabling the destruction of her mind and her potential for becoming conscious of the Truth.

I have no personal need for her, or anyone for that matter, so i am in a position to do what i think is best for anyone that comes into contact with me. I could quite easily maintain my masculinity in her presence, so my choices aren't based on weakness, i'm not running from any personal issues. I make that choice because there can be no male/female relationships that foster the Truthfulness of the woman. In fact, relationships in the common sense of the word, ie. attachment-based relations (ego-self-><-ego-self), are quite obviously *completely contrary* to the Truth.

At this point in the argument most people pipe in saying that the world most obviously needs reproduction and stable parenting. Sure it does, but that doesn't mean that the sage should engage in it. We can create all manner of fantastical ideals about how we want the world to be in the future - and how people will act in that world, but to try to live those fantasies now in the belief that they will best foster that ideal is to fall into a trap of poor reasoning. The way we get to that 'ideal world' needs to be based on the way things are now. Solutions need to be specific to the status quo. We cannot escape our relativity.

Thus, it seems most obvious to me that any individual at this present moment in time that dedicates themselves to Truth will quite obviously be an extreme rarity amongst the populace, and thus, should do their utmost to spread the Truth. There's plenty of men and women out there pumping out kids, and the world population needs to come down a bit anyway, so any wannabe sage that has kids hasn't got his head screwed on, and thus fails to meet my criteria of sagacity. History tells us in no uncertain terms that wisdom doesn't tend to pass down from father to son very well, and to put all that effort into one individual just isn't logical. Even in an extreme case where they did live up to it they could easily be wiped out by chance phenomena, wasting an exceptionally large chunk of the sages time.

Propagation

If an enlightened person fails to facilitate the enlightenment of another person during their life then they haven't been particularly effective (at least in the short term). If they facilitate the enlightenment of one other person then they have continued the lineage, but it could easily disappear for any number of reasons. If they enlighten two other individuals then they have created a fairly robust lineage, which, if copied by those two people and so on, would result in exponential growth. If the global population does not resume exponential growth then, in theory, wisdom could prevail. Of course, this is all speculation, someone may not enlighten anyone during their lifetime - but may write a book that enlightens many in the future, whereas someone else may enlighten many people during their lifetime - that nevertheless happen to get killed in a war or whatever and it all ends there.

> I enjoyed reading the discussion on Nietzsche's insanity and Weiningers > early demise. Although I believe my understanding of these events is > pretty dead-on from my own experiences. D.Q.'s remark that Nietzsche > went mad because he loved too much is pretty sharp. Yet here's this > trick word 'love', which can only known by those who are willing to give > themselves completely and unendingly to the discovery of truth in > relationship with life rather than by mere questioning and observation > alone.

'Life', as it is commonly understood, is wholly contrary to Truth. Egotism and nirvana are far from bedfellows!

Additionally, there is no 'relationship' between Truth and everyday life for the sage, because he sees that they are one and the same. This division is purely of your own creation, and is blinding you to reality.

Rhett Hamilton

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 502
(3/13/04 5:50 pm)
Reply

Re: Nietzsche's Lovers

---

The yawning perspectives you offer, Rhett!
Tank ye, my son.

callogician
Registered User
Posts: 1
(3/17/04 11:11 am)
Reply

challenge to hidden premise

---

[i]Thus, it seems most obvious to me that any individual at this present moment in time that dedicates themselves to Truth will quite obviously be an extreme rarity amongst the populace, and thus, should do their utmost to spread the Truth.[/i]

I challenge your hidden premise that spreading truth is inherently beneficial. Surely, truth, as opposed to falsity and ignorance, is unique insofar as it can be used to make valid inferences and predictions, but this leads to an infinite regress because "Is truth better than falsity?" becomes "Is valid prediction and inference better than error and obfuscation?" These questions can only be answered in the context of your own biases and inculcations, never universally. Lets say, for instance, that an individual uses the Cartesian method of doubt and is forced by his own concession to advocate nihilism (this is the case for me). Imagine discovering that no state of the universe is objectively and axiomatically superior to any other state.

Imagine discovering that no set of universal rules of conduct (ethics) exists. The feeling is not pessimism; the feeling is purposelessness and freedom. Now, contrast this to discovering the existence of god and a universal set of ethics. In this latter case, something matters! You are more compelled to spread this belief because inherent in it is the idea that the beliefs of others are important. That is my explanation for the prevalence of such beliefs. The idea relates to the memetic selection of Richard Dawkins in [i]the selfish gene[/i]. Dawkins proposes the idea of memes (named after their analogous genes)-ideas that are selected in a manner similar to the natural selection of genes. A meme is not selected solely on its truth. It is selected by its inherent fecundity and stability, so false ideas (i.e. the spherical symmetry of the universe) can become prolific if they are appealing and self perpetuating (I ask you, is it a coincidence that all of the dominant religions incorporate the idea of teaching children the religion?).

[i]There's plenty of men and women out there pumping out kids, and the world population needs to come down a bit anyway, so any wannabe sage that has kids hasn't got his head screwed on, and thus fails to meet my criteria of sagacity.[/i]

Ha. If this were the case, genes predisposing individuals to sagacity would soon fall to the ineluctable clutches of selection by differential reproductive success.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 348
(3/17/04 12:18 pm)
Reply

Re: challenge to hidden premise

---

Quote:

---

Thus, it seems most obvious to me that any individual at this present moment in time that dedicates themselves to Truth will quite obviously be an extreme rarity amongst the populace, and thus, should do their utmost to spread the Truth.

I challenge your hidden premise that spreading truth is inherently beneficial. Surely, truth, as opposed to falsity and ignorance, is unique insofar as it can be used to make valid inferences and predictions, but this leads to an infinite regress because "Is truth better than falsity?" becomes "Is valid prediction and inference better than error and obfuscation?" These questions can only be answered in the context of your own biases and inculcations, never universally. Lets say, for instance, that an individual uses the Cartesian method of doubt and is forced by his own concession to advocate nihilism (this is the case for me). Imagine discovering that no state of the universe is objectively and axiomatically superior to any other state. Imagine discovering that no set of universal rules of conduct (ethics) exists. The feeling is not pessimism; the feeling is purposelessness and freedom. Now, contrast this to discovering the existence of god and a universal set of ethics. In this latter case, something matters! You are more compelled to spread this belief because inherent in it is the idea that the beliefs of others are important. That is my explanation for the prevalence of such beliefs. The idea relates to the memetic selection of Richard Dawkins in the selfish gene. Dawkins proposes the idea of memes (named after their analogous genes)-ideas that are selected in a manner similar to the natural selection of genes. A meme is not selected solely on its truth. It is selected by its inherent fecundity and stability, so false ideas (i.e. the spherical symmetry of the universe) can become prolific if they are appealing and self perpetuating (I ask you, is it a coincidence that all of the dominant religions incorporate the idea of teaching children the religion?).

---

I realise that nature cares not about human values, but given the need for humans to have values in order to go about their lives and make decisions, I choose to value Truth. I have a multitude of good reasons for doing that, and i infuse it in everything i do and say.

The understanding of natures whimsy is an important one, but one must then move on. Whether you like it or not, you still express values in the way you live, and in every decision you make. What then, are your values?

Quote:

---

There's plenty of men and women out there pumping out kids, and the world population needs to come down a bit anyway, so any wannabe sage that has kids hasn't got his head screwed on, and thus fails to meet my criteria of sagacity.

Ha. If this were the case, genes predisposing individuals to sagacity would soon fall to the ineluctable clutches of selection by differential reproductive success.

---

Quite possibly, so maybe we should send them off to the sperm banks? I have very poor eyesight though, and i wouldn't want to pass that on. Perhaps i'll wait till that aspect of my DNA can be corrected.

In all likelihood, only a fraction of a percent of people that have the genetic capacity for enlightenment realise that potential. I think we're missing them in the thousands.

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 511
(3/17/04 2:28 pm)
Reply

Hamilton, who else

---

I swear to all Gods (and on my mother's grave), Rhetty's dna CANNOT be corrected.

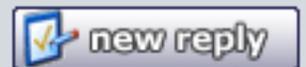

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 107
(3/18/04 3:46 am)
Reply

beyond good and evil

---

Is Nietzsche a cult leader?

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Nirvana or direct experience of Reality

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                           | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Jones KellyPosts: 18(4/1/04 11:03 am)Reply | Nirvana or direct experience of Reality <hr/> I've been puzzled with this one for a while. I have not experienced it, what follows is my reasoning for how it is. The nature of consciousness is the constant appearance of the Infinite. Any focus on a division in itself presents only an aspect, never the Totality in totum but only an understanding of its nature. How does the mind directly experience the Infinite, since it is formless? As long as there are forms, things, appearances, there has been a division of Reality. Reality is essentially unknowable (the fundamental principle of Reality, its paradox) and to directly and constantly experience it means that formlessness is the essential characteristic of all one's thoughts. Can the mind manipulate formlessly? Or is everything in the mind necessarily formful? As only things/forms/appearances/existences can be conceived of, as soon as something formless is conceived of, it is a form: formlessness. Only by nothing appearing can formlessness be perceived, as there is no existing concept or thing that the mind can use to know the actuality of Reality. It is necessarily inconceivable. The only possible solution to the paradox of knowing Nirvana is in no |

conceptualisation but complete mental stillness. Since the nature of mind is consciousness which is known to occur through things/forms/appearances/existences, how can a person/consciousness actually know it is knowing Nirvana?

Answer: because there is no desire to be conscious in this way - to know, to recognise consciousness via the arising of appearances. By giving up the desire for consciousness itself (to know one is conscious), the Buddha never returns to 'knowing consciousness'. He can still be experiencing all kinds of appearances, but desires no thought to arise.

Similarly, he does not will himself to be unconscious but allows all appearances to come and go without any interaction.

Thus no appearances arise that the mind focusses on, and in this way, Nirvana occurs but is never known as a division. it is essentially every thought and no thoughts.

Quote:

---

So, just discard all you have acquired as being no better than a bedspread for you when you were sick. Only when you have abandoned all perceptions, there being nothing objective to perceive; only when phenomena obstruct you no longer; only when you have rid yourself of the whole gamut of dualistic concepts of the "ignorant" and "Enlightened" category, will you at last earn the title of Transcendental Buddha.

---

silentsal
Registered User
Posts: 88
(4/2/04 4:07 am)
Reply

Re: Nirvana or direct experience of Reality

---

Nirvana (Buddha, The Word)

And his heart becomes free from sensual passion, free from the passion for existence, free from the passion of ignorance. "Freed am I!": this knowledge arises in the liberated one; and he knows: "Exhausted is rebirth, fulfilled the Holy Life; what was to be done, has been done; naught remains more for the world to do."

Forever am I liberated,
This is the last time that I'm born
No new existence waits for me.

This, verily, is the highest, holiest wisdom: to know that all suffering has passed away.
This, verily, is the highest, holiest peace: appeasement of greed, hatred and delusion.

Canadian Zoetrope
Registered User
Posts: 42
(4/4/04 4:56 pm)
Reply

Nirvana

---

The Buddha once said:

"Searching for enlightenment is like stealing a cookie, hiding it in your pocket, and claiming innocenc."

Knowing 'Nirvana' is knowing un-nirvana, and simply experiencing the thusness of existence, without labelling it,

Enjoy the utter emptyness of reality without your mind, and you will then realize that reality and mind are one.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 365
(4/7/04 12:17 pm)
Reply

Re: Nirvana or direct experience of Reality

---

Kelly,

Quote:

---

The nature of consciousness is the constant appearance of the Infinite.

---

Yes.

Quote:

---

How does the mind directly experience the Infinite, since it is formless?

---

Because the Infinite does have form - in the moment of experience.

These momentary forms, however, are in no way enduring, or representative of anything. They are just the appearance they are.

Quote:

---

As long as there are forms, things, appearances, there has been a division of Reality.

---

There can never be inherent divisions in the Totality. All divisions occur within conceptual content.

Quote:

---

Reality is essentially unknowable (the fundamental principle of Reality, its paradox) and to directly and constantly experience it means that formlessness is the essential characteristic of all one's thoughts. Can the mind manipulate formlessly? Or is everything in the mind necessarily formful?

---

To "directly and constantly experience Reality" is to be enlightened. To "directly and constantly experience reality", is to be normal and deluded.

Thoughts have form, otherwise we couldn't experience them, however, they don't inherently exist. It is only within the conceptual content of our thoughts that we conceive of them as being separate, i.e. "thoughts".

Quote:

---

As only things/forms/appearances/existences can be conceived of, as soon as something formless is conceived of, it is a form: formlessness.

---

Yes.

Quote:

---

there is no existing concept or thing that the mind can use to know the actuality of Reality. It is necessarily inconceivable.

---

Correct.

Quote:

---

The only possible solution to the paradox of knowing Nirvana is in no conceptualisation but complete mental stillness. Since the nature of mind is consciousness which is known to occur through things/forms/appearances/existences, how can a person/consciousness actually know it is knowing Nirvana?

---

Nirvana is just another label that is applied to enlightenment. One knows that one is enlightened because (by definition) one is free of delusion.

Enlightenment involves the understanding that concepts are no lesser a part of experience. Enlightenment merely re-orientates and corrects one's understanding of the nature of their validity.

Quote:

---

Answer: because there is no desire to be conscious in this way - to know, to recognise consciousness via the arising of appearances. By giving up the desire for consciousness itself (to know one is conscious), the Buddha never returns to 'knowing consciousness'. He can still be experiencing all kinds of appearances, but desires no thought to arise.

---

There is no desire because there is no ego. There is no vested interest in particular outcomes.

However, they do value thought, because it's a requirement of everyday life and the teaching of others.

Quote:

---

Similarly, he does not will himself to be unconscious but allows all appearances to come and go without any interaction.

---

They are without any egotistical/attachment based interaction. However, they are always making decisions and exerting their will, they cannot escape doing so, even if for some strange reason they wanted to.

Quote:

---

Thus no appearances arise that the mind focusses on, and in this way, Nirvana occurs but is never known as a division. it is essentially every thought and no thoughts.

---

What mind?

|                                                                                                                                                                           |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Jones KellyPosts: 33(4/7/04 2:05 pm)Reply                                                                                                           | Re: Nirvana or direct experience of Reality <hr/> Rhett, Can you define values (e.g. thinking, focus, consciousness) as absolutely devoid of desire (ego-based)?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| Thomas KnierimRegistered UserPosts: 908(4/7/04 10:09 pm)Reply  | Re: Nirvana or direct experience of Reality <hr/> Rhett: Nirvana is just another label that is applied to enlightenment. One knows that one is enlightened because (by definition) one is free of delusion. You have not the faintest clue what you're blathering about. David wasn't very original when faking enlightenment, but faking David is like doubly faking enlightenment. How more fake can it get? May the forge be with you. Thomas                                                    |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 875(4/8/04 4:48 am)Reply        | Re: Nirvana or direct experience of Reality <hr/> Saying there's no division in the Totality is one of the dumbest things I've ever heard. Just the word "totality" implies a sum of individual parts. When enlightened people talk about oneness, they're talking about the fact that all of these parts are parts. The word part implies there is something bigger it's attributed to: the Totality! There is most definitely division in the Totality. If there weren't, how could you be reading these words? |

Jones Kelly
Posts: 38
(4/8/04 4:56 pm)
Reply

Re: Nirvana or direct experience of Reality

---

Thomas,

Are you now enlightened? If not, you are not free of delusion.

I agree that Nirvana and Enlightenment are essentially the same. For the one who is enlightened, there is no rebirth (samsara) caused by deluded thoughts. Nirvana is the enlightenment from which there is no return - to samsara.

Whilst deluded thoughts are experienced, birth and death, heaven and hell, continue. There is no enlightenment. There may be understanding of the nature of Reality, but there is no direct experience.

Whilst Nirvana - or the absence of deluded thoughts - is experienced, there is no return to samsara. There is direct experience of Reality.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 909
(4/8/04 7:11 pm)
Reply

Re: Nirvana or direct experience of Reality

---

Kelly: Are you now enlightened?

No, but I am able to distinguish fake and pompous spiritualism from real accomplishment. This should also explain my less than friendly reception of the same. Yes, enlightenment is Nirvana, but it seems that Rhett has other more pressing things to take care of.

Meaningless regurgitation of dogma is a dead end. This thread is a dead end. There is not a single hint of real understanding.

Thomas

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 366
(4/9/04 10:54 am)
Reply

Re: Nirvana or direct experience of Reality

---

Kelly,

Quote:

---

Can you define values (e.g. thinking, focus, consciousness) as absolutely devoid of desire (ego-based)?

---

Yes. To define enlightenment is to define non-egotistical value-laden behaviour.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 367
(4/9/04 11:07 am)
Reply

Re: Nirvana or direct experience of Reality

---

Voce,

Quote:

---

Saying there's no division in the Totality is one of the dumbest things I've ever heard. Just the word "totality" implies a sum of individual parts. When enlightened people talk about oneness, they're talking about the fact that all of these parts are parts. The word part implies there is something bigger it's attributed to: the Totality!

---

Oh dear, Voce . . .

You've not been paying much attention have you?

The Totality is One because it is not divided. It would be rather silly to call a conglomerate of separate things "One", wouldn't it?

Could you prove to me that there are divisions in the Totality?

Quote:

---

There is most definitely division in the Totality. If there weren't, how could you be reading these words?

---

I don't see a division, the black of the lettering merges seamlessly with the white of the screen(?).

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 876
(4/9/04 3:14 pm)
Reply

Re: Nirvana or direct experience of Reality

---

Could you prove to me that there are divisions in the Totality?

Look all around you.

Also, look up the definition of the word "totality".

Hywel
Registered User
Posts: 60
(4/9/04 9:27 pm)
Reply

Re: Nirvana or direct experience of Reality

---

Hello Thomas,

Quote:

---

Thomas - David wasn't very original when faking enlightenment, but faking David is like doubly faking enlightenment. How more fake can it get?

---

Is it possible to be original when faking enlightenment? More to the point, given that we are told enlightenment has been achieved before, is it possible to be original about enlightenment at all? Of course, as no-one can really teach enlightenment (in the everyday sense of teaching), you could say that it is always original. You might even say that enlightenment is the only originality possible, in which case fake enlightenment would be unoriginal by definition.

Either everything is always original, or nothing ever is.

Quote:

---

Thomas - I am able to distinguish fake and pompous spiritualism from real accomplishment.

---

Hehe, Im pretty sure everyone here thinks they can too. Thats why there is no such thing as an "authority".

Quote:

---

Thomas - Meaningless regurgitation of dogma is a dead end.

---

I totally agree. But what about meaningful regurgitation of dogma?

Quote:

---

Thomas - This thread is a dead end. There is not a single hint of real understanding.

---

It is usual to tell people why they are being silly, rather than just informing them of the fact. This is, after all, a philosophy forum, so it might be good to provide some reasoning to back up your claims. That way these poor deluded fools might gain some real understanding.

Biggier
Posts: 96
(4/10/04 8:00 am)
Reply

Re: Nirvana or direct experience of Reality

---

Jones,

This Infinite we hear bandied about [almost as recklessly as God], has anyone EVER managed to actually pin it down with something other than a bunch of words insisting that it is "out there" somewhere?

I'm just curious as to what I am an aspect OF. I know it is The One, of course, but I'm not getting any younger and I'm curious if anyone has gotten much further than did Spinoza in identifying it more concretely--- with, say, a camera?

Also, this Nirvana---is that the same one Kurt Cobain formed? I have, in fact, seen lots of hard evidence for its existence. Though none lately, of course.

Biggie

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 366
(4/10/04 12:33 pm)
Reply

Re: Nirvana or direct experience of Reality

---

Quote:

---

Rhett: Could you prove to me that there are divisions in the Totality?

Voce: Look all around you.

---

It all looks joined to me . . .

Quote:

---

Voce: Also, look up the definition of the word "totality".

---

Hey, c'mon, dictionaries weren't written by sages, or for sages! And there's a capital "T" thankyou very much.

What does it say about the Tao, or the Absolute, or God, or the Infinite, or nature?

The sage knows them as One and the same.

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 877
(4/10/04 1:42 pm)
Reply

Re: Nirvana or direct experience of Reality

---

If you were honest with yourself, Rhett, you'd probably have the capacity to attain enlightenment. Don't bend your reality to match what someone within that reality says is reality. Look.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2609
(4/11/04 2:09 am)
Reply

---

---

Sagacious natures do not equate the absolute with the infinite, nor god with nature, and they find division to be inherent in the universe, since they concede the universe to be the ever becoming totality of all that is. They hold (and do not have to hold) this logic:-If a thing is not somehow divided in itself, it cannot become what it is.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 368
(4/11/04 1:15 pm)
Reply

Re: Nirvana or direct experience of Reality

---

Quote:

---

If you were honest with yourself, Rhett, you'd probably have the capacity to attain enlightenment. Don't bend your reality to match what someone within that reality says is reality. Look.

---

Sure, we can designate boundaries based on the variations (contrasts) in the forms that appear to us, but that by no means is evidence that inherently separate things exist.

|                                                                                                                                                                    |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 877(4/11/04 3:56 pm)Reply  | Re: Nirvana or direct experience of Reality <hr/> I agree.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| JohnRegistered UserPosts: 102(4/11/04 5:43 pm)Reply                                                                                     | Re: Nirvana or direct experience of Reality <hr/> (This message was left blank) Edited by: John at: 4/11/04 5:51 pm                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| Jones KellyPosts: 40(4/13/04 1:33 pm)Reply                                                                                                   | Re: Nirvana or direct experience of Reality <hr/> Biggier, B: This Infinite we hear bandied about [almost as recklessly as God], has anyone EVER manganged to actually pin it down with something other than a bunch of words insisting that it is "out there" somewhere? All those who are enlightened "pin" the Infinite down in their own understanding. They may actually also say "Ah-hah!" when they are enlightened, too. But since they understand the nature of the Infinite, they would never insist the Infinite can be understood outside one's mind. B: I'm just curious as to what I am an aspect OF. I know it is The One, of course, but I'm not getting any younger and I'm curious if anyone has gotten much further than did Spinoza in identifying it more concretely--- with, say, a camera? If you look in the mirror, can you see consciousness - not the bodily effects, but its essential nature? Searching for the Infinite with a camera is like using one's reflected, focussing pupils as a proof that a self can see itself. The Infinite "pinned down" as a thing, an experience, a thought, etc. is necessarily false because finite. The self is necessarily false because it is a construct made up of finite things, experiences and thoughts. Any thing lacks inherent existence; the |

Infinite is not a thing.

The Infinite is understood by understanding the inherent non-existence of all things.

B:Also, this Nirvana---is that the same one Kurt Cobain formed? I have, in fact, seen lots of hard evidence for its existence. Though none lately, of course.

I don't know much about Kurt Cobain's Nirvana. I doubt that a rock star addicted to drugs, mind-numbing music, sex and fame had any understanding of desirelessness.

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Nirvana or direct experience of Reality

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                             | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2611(4/14/04 1:12 am)Reply | ---- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> The Infinite "pinned down" as a thing, an experience, a thought, etc. is necessarily false because finite. <hr/> A misconception. The infinite is expressed, finitely, through a thing. What is finite is not false, but finite in itself. Quote: <hr/> The self is necessarily false because it is a construct made up of finite things, experiences and thoughts. Any thing lacks inherent existence; the Infinite is not a thing. <hr/> Everything in the universe (the infinite), has inherent existence, because the universe itself is inherently existent. To say nothing inherently exists is to imagine either the universe does not exist in itself (absurdity beyond measure) or we exist outside the universe (error of conceiving all as | concept).

Quote:

---

The Infinite is understood by understanding the inherent non-existence of all things.

---

The infinite is not understood. It is approached in understanding, and only by understanding the inherent existence of everything. To die is not to understand.

Canadian Zoetrope

Registered User

Posts: 45

(4/15/04 5:45 am)

Reply

This thread reminds me...

---

This thread reminds me of a story:

An old man was coming home to his hut in the forest one night, to find it smoldering in ashes. It had burnt down during the day and because of its remote location no one was able to stop it. He searched the pile and found a small carcass, he then grieved for his lost son. The man was so disturbed by his loss that he vowed never to let his son go again, so he took the charred remains and burnt them to ash and carried them around in a burlap sack wherever he went.

One night a few months later while he was sleeping in his new hut somewhat peacefully, a knock came at the door. Still grieving, he had resolved not to receive any visitors until he felt he had healed sufficiently. From his bed he shouted at the stranger to go away. But from the other side of the door a young voice cried out identifying himself as the dead son. Grasping his bag of ashes tightly the man cried back that his son had died months ago in the fire. The voice replied that he had escaped and it was the dog that had burned. The man however, blocked by his own belief in the truth of his knowledge, refused to believe. He shouted back towards the door for the stranger to go away and never return. His son slowly walked away and down the road, never to see his father again.

This thread, and forum remind me of the notion, that we can never know the truth if we are not open to letting it in. Sometimes we are so closed and jaded that the truth might come knocking and we refuse it because we are so resolutely convinced in the infallibility of our own knowledge.

|                                                                                                                                                                                     |                                                                                                                               |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                                     | Just a thought. Edited by: Canadian Zoetrope <input type="checkbox"/> at: 4/15/04 5:47 am                |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 891(4/16/04 4:31 am)Reply  | Re: This thread reminds me... <hr/> Your thought is so full of selfish intentions that it makes my heart quake. |

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

- > GENIUS FORUM
- > Non-Attachment

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                              | Comment                                                                                                                                     |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| GrantForEveryoneRegistered UserPosts: 29(2/27/04 9:46 am)Reply                                                                           | Non-Attachment <hr/> What do you guys think about this? I'd like to read anything you'd care to write about it.               |
| Canadian Zoetrope 🖱Registered UserPosts: 44(4/4/04 5:00 pm)Reply                                                                         | Non Attachment <hr/> There is nothing to read,ergo nothing to write,ergo nothingergo, go and clean your teeth! |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 865(4/4/04 6:14 pm)Reply  | Re: Non Attachment <hr/> It's dangerous to be attached to non-attachment.                                                     |

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Now Guilt Free

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                             | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 817(11/10/03 7:43 am)Reply                     |  Now Guilt Free <hr/> How many have reached a stage in their life of enlightenment that they can confidently say that they are now free from guilt?Has the path you have chosen led you to this place of peace and confidence?If not yet, have you seen some significant progress so far in your path?                                                                                                                                        |
|  DagneyTRegistered UserPosts: 15(11/10/03 9:08 am)ReplyezSupporter |  Re: Now Guilt Free <hr/> Excellent question. Guilt is such a useless emotion. I have gotten better, yet I do feel guilty at times--is it a woman thing I wonder? When I'm out in RL I feel guilty that I am not with my children and I must work very hard to not feel guilty that I am not at home with them. I am interested in what our top people have to say about this one... By the way DEL, what is your answer to your own question? |

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 85
(11/10/03 10:11 am)
Reply | Edit

 Re: Now Guilt Free

---

How many have reached a stage in their life of enlightenment that they can confidently say that they are now free from guilt?

I am free of guilt, but i am one of the few to be so. In fact, i would have to undertake some internal investigations to even relate to the idea of guilt. The thought component of guilt can be eradicated through developing one's understanding of Causality, and so in fact can the emotional component.

What is your understanding of the nature of guilt?

Has the path you have chosen led you to this place of peace and confidence?

In a sense yes. I have always had an exceptionally strong will to consciousness, and have pursued my values with absolute dedication. This has manifest in wisdom, truthfulness, acceptance of my limitations at the same time as alleviating them, etc.

If not yet, have you seen some significant progress so far in your path?

More than i can ever possibly communicate.

Rhett

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 249
(11/10/03 12:11 pm)
Reply

 Re: Now Guilt Free

---

The whole 'guilt'-question is preposterous.

Quote:

---

I am free of guilt, but i am one of the few to be so.

---

Rhett, you're beyond preposterous.

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 1522

(11/10/03 2:18 pm)

Reply

Re: Now Guilt Free

---

Guilt creeps into our thought processes wherever ego and emotion remain. This is a matter of degree which is dependent on the level of one's spiritual progress. The falsity of guilt isn't all that hard to see intellectually (at least, I don't think it is) - it's just that traces of it will remain, as with feelings like disgust at the nature of the world and Man - until one has attained perfection.

Having said that, feelings like guilt are part of the spiritual path, just as feelings of disgust are - and these feelings, whilst ultimately delusional and something to be surpassed are nevertheless rather inevitable and even useful as motivating forces.

Dan Rowden

Paul

Registered User

Posts: 250

(11/10/03 4:22 pm)

Reply

Re: Now Guilt Free

---

OK, then I'm a dummy. Who asks: What is meant by 'guilt' in all this?

repent1

Registered User

Posts: 32

(11/11/03 6:35 am)

Reply

guilty

---

What's the difference between not having guilt and just not having a conscience? In otherwords, just not caring?

Just because someone claims to not have guilt, doesn't mean they aren't guilty.

The point isn't to rid yourself of guilt, by going after it directly. The point is to ensure your decisions are the right ones, so guilt doesn't come up in the first place. You can't ascend your past transgressions, by simply assuming you haven't any reason to be guilty.

You should ask yourself if the actions you take are the cause of guilt in the first place. Change the actions, and your path and conscience will be clear.

peace

|                                                                                   |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 252(11/11/03 7:35 am)Reply   |  Re: guilty <hr/> Repent! What guilt are ya talkin' about, brother? Go fuck yer God, will ya.                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| repent1Registered UserPosts: 36(11/11/03 7:49 am)Reply |  not guilty <hr/> Repent! What guilt are ya talkin' about, brother? Whatever it is you want it to be. In otherwords, the difference between your morality and your current state. Go fuck yer God, will ya. I did that, but then I just realized I'm fucking myself. peace |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 253(11/11/03 7:55 am)Reply   |  Dummy repent1 <hr/> Sweetiepie Repent, I know that there's no reasoning with God-believers. So I bow my head. After I kicked you in the groin, of course.                                                                                                                                                    |
| repent1Registered UserPosts: 40(11/11/03 8:12 am)Reply |  reason? <hr/> are you gunna bark all day little doggy, or are you gunna bite?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 257(11/11/03 8:16 am)Reply   |  Repent <hr/> I just luvvv to get a God-believer pissed off, that's all. Peace?                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1030
(11/11/03 9:19 am)
Reply

 Re: guilty

---

I think Repent has a couple of valid points. When you become an awakened person, you begin to have an independent conscience, and to follow it. Knowing right from wrong goes along with increasing wisdom. Regular people follow rules out of fear, because their own conscience doesn't work.

But when I think on many of the things and turns in my earlier life, I suffer near-fatal remorse. If you've any insights into that, Dan, please hold forth.

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 259
(11/11/03 9:50 am)
Reply

 Re: guilty

---

Quote:

---

I think Repent has a couple of valid points.

---

Jesus Christ almighty, as long as you're involved with some God, you have no valid points whatsoever. Period. You're a mystic, Anna, remember?

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1032
(11/11/03 11:19 am)
Reply

 Re: guilty

---

Quote:

---

Jesus Christ almighty, as long as you're involved with some God, you have no valid points whatsoever. Period. You're a mystic, Anna, remember?

---

When has repent ever said he was involved with some God? Don't you know how many mystics have been involved with God? Most have not been atheists. It was not clear to me that you are an atheist.

I'm not sure a mystic can be a total atheist. What is this Love you love to speak of? What is mysticism to a total materialist? Or do you define God so narrowly as the old man in the sky? And how can you be so silly as to say that this or that category of person has no say? Do you think a person's understanding is either total, or nonexistent? Do you suppose you can increase his understanding by telling him that he has no valid points, peiod? The simple minded Christians at work sometimes ask me unanswerable questions, like don't I believe in God. I am God. I breathe God. I drink God. Everything is God. There is nothing that God is not. So in the end, if you like, there is no God.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1711

(11/11/03 11:33 am)

Reply

 Re: guilty

---

What do you mean 'if you like'?! In the end, in the beginning, inherently, there is no god! The God you think you are is really Anna, the god you think you breathe is really air, the drink just a drink, and everything is everything, NOT god, as I've tried telling you so many times before. Paul's right, Anyone who has anything to do with God has no valid points whatsoever.

G Shantz

Registered User

Posts: 423

(11/11/03 11:51 am)

Reply

 Re: guilty

---

I feel guilt over percieved familial obligations. I don't know what they are, exactly, which is why I feel guilt over them. Or rather, I percieve a difference between what they want from me, and what I know I should give them. The only reason your family should love you is because you're wise.

I think I'll go see my grandmother in the hospital, however.

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 261
(11/11/03 12:08 pm)
Reply

Anna

---

Quote:

---

When has repent ever said he was involved with some God?
Don't you know how many mystics have been involved with God?

---

No, Repent boy never said it, but it's all so clear. Ah geez, he's a sweet dummy.

Yes, a mystic is always involved with God. Never in the dualistic way though. There's the difference. I'm tired.

And I'm in love with you. Now going to bed. Bye.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1033
(11/11/03 12:34 pm)
Reply

Re: guilty

---

What do you mean 'if you like'?!

I mean, if you like to put it that way.

The God you think you are is really Anna, the god you think you breathe is really air, the drink just a drink, and everything is everything, NOT god, as I've tried telling you so many times before.

Well, personally, I agree with that, too, although the Ultimate Reality folks don't see that.

As I've told you before, such a definition of God as mine is irrefutable. You are too young to be so rigid. You love to harp on this topic like no other. You feel quite smug about it. But you've never given any decent arguments, and probably never will. So what do you think - just matter accounts for everything? No soul, no universal mind or consciousness or life force - or is it just god you can't stand?

Anyway, if what you say it true, I have no valid points.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1713
(11/11/03 1:21 pm)
Reply

 Re: guilty

---

Quote:

---

I mean, if you like to put it that way.

---

If?! It is always as. As you like it, but not with an if! Anyway, it doesn't matter that you don't have any valid points (:D), your life is valid, so your thought of the irrefutability of your God is quite redundant.

Quote:

---

No soul, no universal mind or consciousness or life force - or is it just god you can't stand?

---

There is humanity Anna. The actuality of what you call 'soul'. Everything is universal, I don't question the existence of consciousness, life, mind.

Edited by: suergaz at: 11/11/03 1:23 pm

repent1
Registered User
Posts: 41
(11/11/03 4:47 pm)
Reply

 pissed off

---

I don't know why people get so pissed off when the subject of God comes up. It just shows more truth about them than anything. If there is no God, what's there to get upset about? There's obviously something missing.

Paul, have you read anything I've said in any thread? I haven't been shy in saying where I'm coming from. There's no reason to get upset and continue to belittle everyone, why are you so pissed off? Maybe if you actually tried to make valid points, people would take you seriously.

Don't be a gnat.

peace

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Now Guilt Free

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                             | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| silentsalRegistered UserPosts: 2(11/11/03 5:04 pm)Reply |  Re: pissed off <hr/> I have little guilt and undoing all kinds of beliefs I had about GOD - I realize that my belief is not necessary for God to exist so I would prefer to experience God now without belief -- you know like I experience the rain on my face, or gravity when I fall on my ass it's there and it's real not dependant on my beliefs, universal consciousness is that God? I just don't know                                                                                       |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 818(11/11/03 5:45 pm)Reply     |  Re: Now Guilt Free <hr/> Quote: <hr/> DagneyT:Excellent question. Guilt is such a useless emotion. I have gotten better, yet I do feel guilty at times--is it a woman thing I wonder? When I'm out in RL I feel guilty that I am not with my children and I must work very hard to not feel guilty that I am not at home with them. I am interested in what our top people have to say about this one... By the way DEL, what is your answer to your own question? <hr/> |

"Guilt is such a useless emotion. I have gotten better, yet I do feel guilty at times--is it a woman thing I wonder?"

Do you really think guilt is a useless emotion? It might be one of the last restraints necessary.

"When I'm out in RL I feel guilty that I am not with my children and I must work very hard to not feel guilty that I am not at home with them."

How would you behave if you had no guilt in regard to your children?

"By the way DEL, what is your answer to your own question?"

Guilt is one of the purifying fires of Alchemy. The more you resist it the worse it will get. If you refuse to be purged, it will destroy you completely. Some will freak out and get suicidal therefore becoming useless either because they are dead or are too unstable to be of any value (explode), others will become bitter and senile in old age, their reasoning and knowledge remains intact but their character becomes so warped and bitter that they are unapproachable and their communication skills deteriorate. (Implode)

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 262
(11/11/03 10:53 pm)
Reply

 Hey, Repent boy

---

You're a God-lover. You're dumb.
I tried to belittle you, not 'everyone', as you say. Repent, once more: Go fuck your God.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 735
(11/11/03 11:08 pm)
Reply

 Re: Now Guilt Free

---

Is one guilty as judged by others, or is guilt something one feels?

I certainly understand the culpability or perhaps complicity in my actions, and often learn the lessons that this understanding proffers. But is that the feeling of guilt?

Remorse and self-reproach may have their place but they look like imposters to me, just like reveling in past glories.

|                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| silentsalRegistered UserPosts: 3(11/12/03 1:59 am)Reply       |  Re: Now Guilt Free <hr/> guilt is a useless emotion, it keeps more people trapped than it moves forward                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1038(11/12/03 4:38 am)Reply |  Re: Hey, Repent boy <hr/> You're a God-lover. You're dumb. I tried to belittle you, not 'everyone', as you say. Repent, once more: Go fuck your God. Paul, I think you should leave this forum.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 263(11/12/03 4:56 am)Reply          |  Re: Hey, Repent Boy <hr/> Maybe I'm using the wrong words.But I know what love is. And God.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| LuxRegistered UserPosts: 9(11/12/03 7:09 am)Reply             |  Re: Hey, Repent Boy <hr/> oh-oh, paul, you have trod in the drawing room with boots more suited to the minefield, birdofhermes reminds me of all good salon-hostesses, inviting only the "best," un-inviting others, making all the requisite nods to the future improvement of her "only-a-woman's" intellect, but happy surrounded by genius she is even happier to set herself below whilst holding out dainties to both tempt and civilize. yes, paul, perhaps THAT is the forum you should leave, with what you know there are far more profound things ahead for you than getting asked to leave this minefield-cum-drawing room. describing any emotion as "useless" (as in this case guilt) is a misunderstanding of emotion, a misapplication of "use," and just generally a reprehensible, nihilistic stance. the details of these enlightenment projects that annihilate select feelings, or rather behead them all equally so you don't have to mess with them anymore - these are as reprehensible to me as the same projects that seek to behead the body. hurry, hurry, hurry up and die. that's all one says with this; that's all one wants; that's where one seems to think 'enlightenment' lays. in torpor. |

|                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 397(11/12/03 7:19 am)Reply  |  Re: Hey, Repent Boy <hr/> I like Paul... and I'm not just opposing you, bird. I really do think he makes the forum a little more colorful.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 264(11/12/03 7:28 am)Reply     |  Re: Repent boy <hr/> OMG, when is the marriage?! Blah. Thank you, Scott.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1714(11/12/03 7:51 am)Reply |  Re: Repent boy <hr/> Bird is an old hen telling Paul to leave and Lux sounds like he's guilty about something, Edited by: suergaz at: 11/12/03 10:41 am                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 819(11/12/03 8:30 am)Reply      |  Re: Now Guilt Free <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Dave ToastIs one guilty as judged by others, or is guilt something one feels? I certainly understand the culpability or perhaps complicity in my actions, and often learn the lessons that this understanding proffers. But is that the feeling of guilt? Remorse and self-reproach may have their place but they look like imposters to me, just like reveling in past glories. <hr/> The guilt implode/explode law applies in both circumstances.If you are judged guilty by the organisation you are part of you can tell everyone you don't care and leave (a kind of suicide/explode), or you can |

|                                                                                                                                                                           |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                           | keep your head low, mumble, accuse and bitch your way into a safe corner where you hope to be left (a kind of senility/implode). There is a third option, confess it and plead for mercy and grace. In this case a good reputation is important for survival.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 820(11/12/03 8:35 am)Reply                                                                                            |  Now Guilt Free? <hr/> Paul, your reactions in this guilt thread are very intense. Do you have something you need to confess?Is there something you feel really guilty about that you haven't told anyone?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1715(11/12/03 10:56 am)Reply                                                                                      |  Re: Now Guilt Free? <hr/> Dr. DEL, I must confess, you are wack!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 748(11/12/03 11:21 am)Reply  |  Re: Now Guilt Free? <hr/> Toys in the attic.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 92(11/12/03 11:40 am)Reply   Edit                                                                          |  Re: Now Guilt Free <hr/> Rhett: "I am free of guilt, but i am one of the few to be so. In fact, i would have to undertake some internal investigations to even relate to the idea of guilt. The thought component of guilt can be eradicated through developing one's understanding of Causality, and so in fact can the emotional component." "In a sense yes. I have always had an exceptionally strong will to consciousness, and have pursued my values with absolute dedication. This has manifest in wisdom, truthfulness, acceptance of my limitations at the same time as alleviating them, etc." Dan: |

"feelings like guilt are part of the spiritual path, just as feelings of disgust are - and these feelings, whilst ultimately delusional and something to be surpassed are nevertheless rather inevitable and even useful as motivating forces."

There is a way to transcend guilt prior to one becoming perfect, but it depends on one's definitions of course. I think of guilt as being a residual combination of an emotion and its associated thought component. A dictionary definition: a feeling of responsibility or sadness for some wrong, etc; remorse. Even if i said something which caused someone to suicide, or acted such that someone died, or spoke an absolute untruth, i would not consider any responses that i have to that as being 'guilt'.

If one directs 100% of their will towards the development of their wisdom, and one is certain that one is doing so, one's conscience is satiated, there is no logical scope for feelings of inadequacy. This works in combination with an intellectual understanding of causality, and the valuing of Truth.

This is the pedal-to-the-metal approach, full pursuit, no compromise, where ethics are linked to time, and compromise equals mediocrity and sin. It requires full consciousness (mindfulness, attention), incursions into habitual thinking processes are a no-no, especially during interactions with people (of course).

This may well be the hardest path, so adopt it with caution, most have died from it.

I rarely if ever experience emotions (as i define emotions to be), i suffer in the form of physiological arousal and minor but nevertheless significant mental fluctuations.

Rhett

Edited by: Rhett Hamilton at: 11/12/03 12:23 pm

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1040
(11/12/03 1:57 pm)
Reply

 Re: Hey, Repent Boy

---

Fuck you, Lux, and Fuck Off.

|                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1262(11/12/03 2:04 pm)Reply  |  Re: Hey, Repent Boy <hr/> Lux wrote, Quote: <hr/> hurry, hurry, hurry up and die. that's all one says with this;that's all one wants; that's where one seems to think'enlightenment' lays. in torpor. <hr/> Heh. Strong words from a hunter who knows not what he hunts, much less having found anything. If I am wrong, then speak. Tharan |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1041(11/12/03 2:05 pm)Reply |  Logging Out <hr/> I've had it with this asinine forum. It's a little boy's club and women are not welcome. You people are blind but you don't see it. The blind won't see.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1263(11/12/03 3:09 pm)Reply  |  Re: Logging Out <hr/> I see the fall is turning to winter and the leaves are brown. Has the wind shifted as well?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Of judgement and Karma

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                               | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1110(6/18/04 5:02 am)Reply                                                                                       |  Of judgement and Karma <hr/> Some people believe there will be a final judgement for each individual. This judgement will determine ones destiny for ever. There fore one would need to have attained some kind of perfection before one faces the judgement. Others believe there are many life cycles of development and that one should aim to improve in each cycle. Who or what is the judge of your performance? |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 942(6/18/04 5:39 am)Reply  |  Re: Of judgement and Karma <hr/> You conscience, I think. -Scott                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |

Jones Kelly

Posts: 160

(6/18/04 10:35 am)

Reply

Re: Of judgement and Karma

DEL wrote:

Quote:

---

Some people believe there will be a final judgement for each individual. This judgement will determine ones destiny for ever. There fore one would need to have attained some kind of perfection before one faces the judgement.

---

At any moment, the decision i make is to all appearances the final judgment, as it could well be the last one within consciousness. If well-reasoned, it's an attainment of perfect reasoning.

Generally i assume that it won't be the last one, because each decision appears to have effects without end. So even if i stop judging, my karma never ends.

Habits give a good indication of the effects of judgments, in that poor judgment (the influence of emotions on logic) seems to make it harder to break habits.

Quote:

---

Others believe there are many life cycles of development and that one should aim to improve in each cycle.

---

I see no point in passing the buck of my improvement to the next "life": the decision i make at any moment is already flowing on.

To me the development towards perfection is seamless. Yet there are characteristic stages of mindfulness: such as poor focus in one "cycle" (restlessness, distractability, dreaminess, etc.), and good focus in another (concentration, powerful penetrative thought, logical coherence, strong memory).

Quote:

---

Who or what is the judge of your performance?

---

Everything is Truth, and consciousness has no location within experience. Judgments exist in consciousness, it is the only place where judgment has meaning.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 1111
(6/22/04 6:15 am)
Reply

 Re: Of judgement and Karma

---

Interesting to see that you have both see the individual as the ultimate judge.

Do you not recognise the judgement of the collective?

Does the concept of final judgement and the concept of Karma have a bias towards the collective or the individual?

ChrisSaik
Registered User
Posts: 84
(6/22/04 11:26 pm)
Reply

 Re: Of judgement and Karma

---

I recognize no judge, yet there is judgement all around.

There is no need for concern, as what will come of it?

Who is left once you are gone?

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 1112
(6/23/04 6:09 am)
Reply

 Re: Of judgement and Karma

---

Quote:

---

ChrisSaik

There is no need for concern, as what will come of it?

---

Where there is judgement there is power.
To resist the judgement of the power is to risk damage.

Jones Kelly
Posts: 165
(6/23/04 3:11 pm)
Reply

 Re: Of judgement and Karma

---

DEL:

Quote:

---

Interesting to see that you have both see the individual as the ultimate judge.

Do you not recognise the judgement of the collective?

Does the concept of final judgement and the concept of Karma have a bias towards the collective or the individual?

---

I see the individual judgment as ultimately a construction, a fantasy. So too is the notion of the individual as ultimate judge.

Ultimately, any particular individual judgment, conclusion or decision is inseparable from the infinite of all consciousnesses. There is no finite individual. Hence, no final judgment. Consciousness is infinite.

The way of all things cannot ever have a bias. If it did, there'd be no way consciousness could abstract and categorise.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 1113
(6/25/04 7:29 am)
Reply

 Re: Of judgement and Karma

---

Quote:

---

Jones Kelly

I see the individual judgment as ultimately a construction, a fantasy. So too is the notion of the individual as ultimate judge.

---

I can see your reasoning. It appears logical. But there is something sick about it.

It is the basis of the most popular and democratic point of view but I can't figure out why I am opposed to it yet.

Jones Kelly
Posts: 181
(6/27/04 9:07 am)
Reply

Re: Of judgement and Karma

---

Quote:

---

I wrote: I see the individual judgment as ultimately a construction, a fantasy. So too is the notion of the individual as ultimate judge.

DEL wrote: I can see your reasoning. It appears logical. But there is something sick about it.

It is the basis of the most popular and democratic point of view but I can't figure out why I am opposed to it yet.

---

Well, it helps to understand the illusions of self-identification.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 1114
(6/28/04 5:33 am)
Reply

Re: Of judgement and Karma

---

Quote:

---

Jones Kelly
Well, it helps to understand the illusions of self-identification.

---

Sometimes what seems helpful is exactly the opposite.

"the illusions of self-identification"

Person (a) who has decided that self identification is an illusion and is a pointless quest will have a totally different attitude to life in contrast to person (b) who is seeking to identify himself even if he knows the task is not entirely possible.

What differences do you all think would become clear in the life styles and outlook of person (a) and (b)?

Jones Kelly

Posts: 185

(6/29/04 1:38 pm)

Reply

Re: Of judgement and Karma

DEL wrote:

Quote:

---

Person (a) who has decided that self identification is an illusion and is a pointless quest will have a totally different attitude to life in contrast to person (b) who is seeking to identify himself even if he knows the task is not entirely possible.

What differences do you all think would become clear in the life styles and outlook of person (a) and (b)?

---

Dwelling in the Infinite doesn't mean one can levitate, although the ground certainly ain't what it was.

(A) may be far less materialistic than (b), because of his renunciation of the belief that things are objectively real. If he's free from delusion, his mind is totally harmonious, which makes him an exceptionally flexible and calm being. But even if he appears sad or happy, he remains fundamentally calm.

What do you think of Kierkegaard's description of the Knight of Faith:

Quote:

---

I have searched for people whom one could describe as 'knights of faith'; but I have found no one who convincingly fits that description. Perhaps I am missing them; perhaps every second person is a knight of faith. Yet I have been looking for several years, and my efforts have been in vain. People commonly travel across the world to see rivers and mountains, new stars, birds with unusual plumage, oddly shaped fish, even other races who look different to them. They gape with foolish wonder at these strange sights, and think they have learnt something important. None of this interests me. But I would be profoundly interested to hear about a knight of faith; and I would make a pilgrimage on foot to meet that person. I would fix my ears and eyes on him, trying to observe how faith moves him. At last I would feel secure; I would divide the rest of my life between watching him and imitating him - thus I would spend all my time admiring him.

As I have said, I have not met such a person, but I can easily imagine him. Here he is. Having reached him, I am introduced to him. The moment I set eyes on him, I push him away from me. I myself leap backwards, clasping my hands, and exclaim in a shocked whisper: 'Good Lord, is this the man? Is this really the person? Why, he looks like a tax collector!' But it is indeed the man. I draw closer to him, watching even his smallest movements to see if there is some sign - like a short telegraphic message - of his communion with the infinite; to see if some glance, expression, gesture, note of melancholy, or smile might indicate that in him the infinite touches the finite. No! I examine his figure from top to toe to look for a cranny through which the infinite might be peeping. No! He is solid from top to bottom. His gait? It is vigorous, belonging entirely to the finite; no smartly dressed citizen going for a walk to Fresburg on a Sunday afternoon treads the ground more firmly. He belongs entirely to the world; no Philistine is more rooted in the world than he is. One can find nothing of that aloof and superior manner one might expect in a knight of the infinite.

He takes delight in everything. Whenever he takes part in some particular activity, he does it with the persistence which is the mark of an earthly man; his soul is manifestly absorbed in the activity. He is so precise that, looking at him, one might imagine that he is a clerk who has given his soul to an intricate system of book-keeping. He observes Sunday as a holiday. He goes to church. Nothing about him indicates any special spiritual qualities. If one did not know otherwise, it would be impossible to distinguish him from the rest of the congregation. His lusty and vigorous hymn-singing tells us that he has a strong chest - that is all. In the afternoon he walks to the forest. He takes delight in everything he sees: the crowds of people; the new vehicles on the street; the sound of water. If one were to meet him on the road to the beach, one might suppose he was a shopkeeper taking a fling. I look in vain for some sign of a poetic imagination, but I can find none, because in truth he is not a poet.

As evening approaches, he walks home, with the tireless stride of a postman. On his way home, he happily speculates on the special warm dish that his wife has prepared for him; perhaps, he wonders, it will be roasted calf's head, garnished with vegetables. If he were to meet a man similar to himself also going home, he would walk with him as far as the East Gate, discussing the food they were about to enjoy with the passion of a hotel chef. In fact he has not even four pence to his name, but he firmly believes that his wife will have prepared a beautiful meal. If she had cooked such a meal, it would be an invidious sight for superior people, and an inspiring one for plain men, to watch him eat, for his appetite is greater than Esau's. But his wife has not prepared anything special; and, strangely enough, he does not mind...

He sits by an open window of his apartment, and looks down on the square below. He is interested in everything that goes on: in a rat which slips under the kerb; in the children playing; in the teenage girls hanging about. But he is no genius; in vain I have looked for signs of genius. In the evening he smokes a pipe. Watching him one would swear that he was the local grocer relaxing in the twilight. He seems utterly care-free, yet he always uses his time productively.

In all this he lives simultaneously in the infinite and the finite; in everything he does, he is making the movements of infinity. I am furious with him, for no other reason than I am envious. He has shown infinite resignation, infinite acceptance of life as it is; and in this way he has drained the profound sadness from life. He knows the bliss of the infinite. He senses the pain of renouncing everything, even the dearest things he possesses in the world; yet he knows through renunciation life in this world is hugely enhanced. To him the simple, common things of life are as good as the most exotic. He is simultaneously very normal, and also a new creation. He has renounced everything, and also possesses everything. He constantly makes the movements of infinity, but does so with such precision and assurance that he lives fully in the finite.

Faith, therefore, is not an aesthetic emotion, but something far higher. It is based on resignation, on renunciation. It is not an immediate instinct of the heart, but is a paradox at the heart of life... The act of resignation is the foundation of faith, but does not require faith. Through resignation, I gain an awareness of eternity; this is a philosophical change in my attitude, which I can train myself to make. Whenever I feel overwhelmed by finite concerns, I deliberately draw back from them and turn my mind and heart towards God, who is eternal and infinite. As I say, faith is not required for the act of resignation, but it is needed for going beyond an awareness of eternity. And this is where things become paradoxical. Resignation and faith are frequently confused, because it is said that people need faith to renounce their claim to worldly things. Indeed one hears a stranger thing than this. People lament their loss of faith; but when one looks closely at them, one sees that they never had faith, but had merely made an act of resignation.

In the act of resignation I renounce everything. This is a movement I make by my own effort. If I fail to make it, this is because I am cowardly, weak-minded and apathetic, and thus do not feel the great responsibility which has been given to all human beings to be their own censors - a far greater responsibility than that of being Censor General to the whole Roman Republic. Having made this movement myself, I gain awareness of eternity, and thus enter a loving relationship with the Eternal Being, whom we call God.

Faith is not about renunciation. On the contrary, through faith I acquire everything - precisely in the sense that, according to Christ's teaching, faith even as small as a mustard seed can move mountains. A purely human courage is required to renounce all temporal things, in order to gain the eternal. Yet in faith I cannot renounce the eternal - that would be a self-contradiction. Thus paradox enters the very notion of faith; and a humble courage is to grasp it - the courage of faith.

---

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 1115
(7/1/04 6:38 am)
Reply

 The Knight of Faith:

---

Quote:

---

Jones Kelly
What do you think of Kierkegaard's description of the Knight of Faith:

---

It is a very good passage because it is perfectly wrong. One has to apply a mirror to that character to see the value.

I know that the true Knight of Faith is actually an inversion of that description.

The secret to understanding to contrast of the characters is to understand how one becomes a "Knight of faith" or a "Faithless coward".

Kierkegaard has just described a comfortable male fully accepted by his community. An unborn man.

This man is a wuss. He has pride but no dignity, he can experience shame but does not understand indignity.

Jones Kelly
Posts: 193
(7/1/04 1:08 pm)
Reply

 Re: The Knight of Faith:

---

Quote:

---

Kierkegaard has just described a comfortable male fully accepted by his community. An unborn man.
This man is a wuss. He has pride but no dignity, he can experience shame but does not understand indignity.

---

Ok, i was also taken aback, as for sure Kierkegaard himself indicated he would be.

But no, he has immense dignity, this Knight of Faith, because he has no ego, no pride in suffering and melancholy.

Yesterday i finally began to investigate my "toughies": begging and homelessness, hunger, irrationality, chronic delusion, ill-health, lack of privacy, freezing, physical pain, rejection. I'm currently on government benefits, and yesterday had a shock where i perceived i'd been "rejected".

For the first time, i understood i could die much sooner than i'd imagined. I investigated the "moment of truth": experiencing great physical pain and diminishing clarity of mind (i.e. dying) with no possible help available.

At that point, i will be wondering what is the point, if the aim all along is to be preserving wisdom. Why suffer and die, why be homeless, sick and dying, if i could be healthy, employed part-time, and still "on the road"?

The question was, is preservation of truth more important than suffering for truth, or are they the same thing?

My solution was, to ask "How am i most effective?" I decided that the suffering of mainstream employment would be caused by a sense of compromise, and the suffering of physical pain be caused by egotistical fear of death.

So i chose (within the limitations of available information) the freedom of homelessness, but as soon as health problems were seriously affecting my rationality (since health problems would be inevitable), i would consider applying for a government sickness allowance until my health were regained - or not. This would allow me to be fully committed to perfection at all times. The dress code for public libraries (internet) isn't so strict.

I decided that if i die before i am perfect, so be it, since i cannot give myself deliberately to part-time truth.

That is the only dignity. So Kierkegaard's description seems to be a normal run-of-the-mill type, who may have initially tried to save himself (become a mendicant or hermit), but decided his most effective place was within "normalcy" - i mean, he remained married and a church-goer!!

He is simply responding to his times, an example in all ways.

*edited to clarify a phrase*

Edited by: Jones Kelly at: 7/1/04 1:48 pm

DEL

Registered User

Posts: 1116

(7/2/04 8:03 am)

Reply

Re: The Knight of Faith:

---

Quote:

---

Jones Kelly

But no, he has immense dignity, this Knight of Faith, because he has no ego, no pride in suffering and melancholy.

---

No, his wife looks after him like a pet dog.

He is unborn. If she is quiet and peaceful she is fucking another man behind his back or else he is hen pecked.

Quote:

---

Jones Kelly

Yesterday i finally began to investigate my "toughies": begging and homelessness, hunger, irrationality, chronic delusion, ill-health, lack of privacy, freezing, physical pain, rejection. I'm currently on government benefits, and yesterday had a shock where i perceived i'd been "rejected".

---

Just another bunch of idiots who do not know what they are fighting against.

Quote:

---

Jones Kelly

The question was, is preservation of truth more important than suffering for truth, or are they the same thing? .

---

Yes, the same thing.

Quote:

---

Jones Kelly

My solution was, to ask "How am i most effective?"

---

.

Wrong question. You can effectively do nothing.

Quote:

---

Jones Kelly

I decided that if i die before i am perfect, so be it, since i cannot give myself deliberately to part-time truth. .

---

Since when did you make yourself a judge of your own perfection?
Doomed before you start.

Quote:

---

Jones Kelly

That is the only dignity. So Kierkegaard's description seems to be a normal run-of-the-mill type, who may have initially tried to save himself (become a mendicant or hermit), but decided his most effective place was within "normalcy" - i mean, he remained married and a church-goer!!.

---

Normalcy = Living dead.

Jones Kelly

Posts: 202

(7/2/04 8:39 pm)

Reply

Re: The Knight of Faith:

---

DEL:

Quote:

---

No, his wife looks after him like a pet dog.
He is unborn. If she is quiet and peaceful she is fucking another man behind his back or else he is hen pecked.

---

You need to think more about what renunciation means. It is not attachment to being superior, but understanding that superiority and inferiority are momentary projections. The woman who appears to peck or cuckold, is as caused as the woman who appears to be equanimous and non-sexual: and because this "thing" of woman is causally created, it doesn't really exist.

The Knight himself doesn't intrinsically exist as her husband, so how can he have possession or loss?

Quote:

---

DEL quoted me: I'm currently on government benefits, and yesterday had a shock where i perceived i'd been "rejected".

DEL: Just another bunch of idiots who do not know what they are fighting against.

---

Well, the experience of shock and rejection was caused by the idea of a disgusting and saddening "bunch of idiots". But the "fighter" image of self turns the Wheel. I didn't and don't value losing my consciousness to illusions.

Homelessness is another illusion.

Quote:

---

I wrote: The question was, is preservation of truth more important than suffering for truth, or are they the same thing?

DEL: Yes, the same thing.

---

No, they're not the same thing, simply because suffering is self-inflicted, and truth is freedom from inherent self-existence.

This is why i reckon the Knight of Faith is such a challenge: he is beyond egotistical notions of who he is as a sage, and simply does as a sage does.

Quote:

---

I wrote: My solution was, to ask "How am i most effective?"

DEL: Wrong question. You can effectively do nothing.

---

Well, i disagree. I am effective when i focus in every moment on truth, and that is everything.

Quote:

---

I wrote: I decided that if i die before i am perfect, so be it, since i cannot give myself deliberately to part-time truth.

DEL: Since when did you make yourself a judge of your own perfection? Doomed before you start.

---

Going back to the topic of this thread (the nature of the ultimate judgment) you may recall i said every moment is the final judgment, which is made by the collective and infinite consciousness (the Totality of all consciousnesses), which appears in my consciousness.

So my plan on how to best proceed towards perfection, given the available information, is in the moment of the decision a perfect and ultimate judgment. What perfection is, is total freedom from delusion and absence of attachments. It is impossible for anyone else to judge this, except for me.

God, as the Infinite, the principle of causality, is happening in every interaction, every caused creation. I am awareness, God-mind. There is no external judge, God has no preset eternal aims. If i become free from all attachments, then that is causally created within my mind, nowhere else.

God isn't external to this consciousness, so there is no other judge.

Quote:

---

I wrote:

Kierkegaard's description [of the Knight of Faith] seems to be a normal run-of-the-mill type, who may have initially tried to save himself (become a mendicant or hermit), but decided his most effective place was within "normalcy" - i mean, he remained married and a church-goer!!.

DEL wrote:

Normalcy = Living dead.

---

And yet attachment to being different from the crowd is no renunciation at all. That is what Kierkegaard is getting at: not "I'm going back to being a moron, and giving up on truth" but a freedom from all attachments, all egotistical delusions. No repulsion, no craving. Totally free to come and go, to have a wife and a roast (or not), to watch a butterfly or a sport's game.

He is far, far above the crowd, or the "different" one.

If i thought i could be more truthful in a full-time job, i'd do it. But - as it appears to me at the moment - i i could be more effective rejecting the workforce, to address attachments to the workforce (normalcy).

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 1117
(7/4/04 2:16 am)
Reply

 Of judgement and Karma

---

Quote:

---

That is what Kierkegaard is getting at: not "I'm going back to being a moron, and giving up on truth" but a freedom from all attachments, all egotistical delusions. No repulsion, no craving. Totally free to come and go, to have a wife and a roast (or not), to watch a butterfly or a sport's game.

He is far, far above the crowd, or the "different" one.

---

The idea of freedom from ALL attachments is unbalanced.

Quote:

---

If i thought i could be more truthful in a full-time job, i'd do it. But - as it appears to me at the moment - i i could be more effective rejecting the work-force, to address attachments to the workforce (normalcy). .

---

"more truthful" . . . ?

How did you measure your quantity of truthfulness?

Do you now believe you are less deceitful because you do not have a full time job?

The enlightened person does not "work" in the common sense of the word, doing things he does not want to do because he needs money.

When you find joy and purpose in the way your living is sustained then it can no longer be called "work".

Jones Kelly

Posts: 218

(7/8/04 4:35 pm)

Reply

 Re: Of judgement and Karma

---

Quote:

---

K: That is what Kierkegaard is getting at: not "I'm going back to being a moron, and giving up on truth" but a freedom from all attachments, all egotistical delusions. No repulsion, no craving. Totally free to come and go, to have a wife and a roast (or not), to watch a butterfly or a sport's game.

He is far, far above the crowd, or the "different" one.

D: The idea of freedom from ALL attachments is unbalanced.

---

On the contrary, freedom from all attachments is completion and wholeness. There is no like or dislike to distort and defile, no grasping at one thing and rejecting another. All things are equally empty.

Quote:

---

K: If i thought i could be more truthful in a full-time job, i'd do it. But - as it appears to me at the moment - i i could be more effective rejecting the work-force, to address attachments to the workforce (normalcy). .

D: "more truthful" . . . ?

How did you measure your quantity of truthfulness?

Do you now believe you are less deceitful because you do not have a full time job?

The enlightened person does not "work" in the common sense of the word, doing things he does not want to do because he needs money.

When you find joy and purpose in the way your living is sustained then it can no longer be called "work".

---

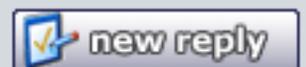

Being truthful is applying the understanding of Reality. The "quantity" of truthfulness is measured by how this understanding is being applied.

Self-deception is the suppression of Truth because of attachments to things.

In regards to working with people, i would be engaged in self-deception because of being attached to fitting into a deluded (egoistic) existence. In that sense, if i find joy and purpose, i am engaging in self-deception.

Joy and purpose are but attachments to particular illusions.

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

Genius Forum

Causality • Courage • Rationality • Determination • Logic • Integrity • Thinking • Ideals
Wisdom • Reason • Discipline • Truth • Masculinity • Perfection • Universe

Genius News

David Quinn's Site

The Thinking Man's Minefield

EZB Edit

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> On 'Rationality'

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                                        | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 2(8/13/03 8:34 pm)Reply                                                                                             | On 'Rationality' <hr/> The human consciousness is not fit for what is called 'rationality'. It's an abstract. The best that the best thinker can achieve is less irrationality than most people are living in and with. (Mr. Drowden, I'm a beginner in this forum, although I have experience in other Internet-forums. Please, would you show some mercy?) |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 510(8/13/03 21:01)Reply | Re: On 'Rationality' <hr/> What is rationality Paul?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 1322

(8/13/03 23:10)

Reply

Re: On 'Rationality'

---

Paul wrote:

Quote:

---

The human consciousness is not fit for what is called 'rationality'. It's an abstract. The best that the best thinker can achieve is less irrationality than most people are living in and with.

---

According to whom, "Paul"? Is what you just said one of those meaningless "abstracts" or what? Do you know or care what "abstract" means?

Quote:

---

(Mr. Drowden, I'm a beginner in this forum, although I have experience in other Internet-forums. Please, would you show some mercy?)

---

Oh don't be a wimp (and don't play me). Say what you think. Candour is not a dirty word on this board.

Dan Rowden

prozak666

Registered User

Posts: 206

(8/14/03 6:07)

Reply

Re: On 'Rationality'

---

Yet it still has its sacred cows.

|                                                                                                                                                                                                    |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 3(8/14/03 6:32)Reply                                                                                          | On 'Rationality' <hr/> Well, according to me, "Dan". Because I wrote the stuff.I'm not a wimp, by the way, they say I'm a mystic. 'Rationality', 'logic', those come in handy for computers and for people who program them.Which, in this case, is somewhat a set-back for me, because I'll have to find out how this forum works, in the technical sense.          |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 511(8/14/03 7:10)Reply  | Re: On 'Rationality' <hr/> What's rationality Paul?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 5(8/14/03 7:18)Reply                                                                                          | Hello Dave <hr/> Rationality is thinking without feeling.Thereby rationality is a nonsense notion, because we're not robots.(Because I'm a Dutchie, I'm not very good in the English language. Sorry for that.)                                                                                                                                                      |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 265(8/14/03 7:27)Reply                                                                                     | ... <hr/> Rationality is thinking without feeling. Everything has it's own innate feeling, and if thinking is included in everything (as it should be), then you cannot think without feeling. Your definition of rationality doesn't work. Thereby rationality is a nonsense notion, because we're not robots. We are like robots, though. |

|                                                                                                                                                                                                      |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| ynithrixRegistered UserPosts: 191(8/14/03 7:33)Reply                                                                                      | Re: ... <hr/> "Rationality', 'logic', those come in handy for computers and for people who program them." If a computer is something that is 'programmed', we are all computers.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 6(8/14/03 7:35)Reply                                                                                            | Hello voce io <hr/> Well, I didn't give a 'definition' of rationality, it's just my feeling that rationality is thinking without feeling.I don't know about you, but I'm not a robot.But maybe, when you give your definition of what a robot is, I will understand you.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 7(8/14/03 7:38)Reply                                                                                            | Hello, voce io <hr/> Well, I didn't give a 'definition' of rationality, it's just my feeling that rationality is thinking without feeling.I don't know about you, but I'm not a robot.Maybe, when you give your definition of what a robot is, I will understand what you mean.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 512(8/14/03 8:22)Reply  | Re: Hello, Paul. <hr/> Definitions definitions. If that is what your feeling about the nature of rationality is, then you are right. The human consciousness is not fit for what you call 'rationality'. If we allow that there is no thought without feeling for non-robots, and that we are non-robots, then it is impossible. Webster's says: Main Entry: ra-tio-nal-i-tyPronunciation: "ra-sh&amp;-'na-l&amp;-tEFunction: nounInflected Form(s): plural -tiesDate: 16281 : the quality or state of being rational2 : the quality or state of being agreeable to reason : REASONABLENESS |

3 : a rational opinion, belief, or practice -- usually used in plural

Main Entry: ra-tio-nal

Pronunciation: 'rash-n&l, 'ra-sh&-n&l

Function: adjective

Etymology: Middle English racional, from Latin rationalis, from ration-, ratio

Date: 14th century

a : having reason or understanding b : relating to, based on, or agreeable to reason : REASONABLE  <rational behavior>

Main Entry: rea-son-able Pronunciation: 'rEz-n&-b&l, 'rE-z&n-&-b&l

Function: adjective

Date: 14th century

1 : being in accordance with reason

2 a : having the faculty of reason b : possessing sound judgment

Main Entry: rea-son

Pronunciation: 'rE-z&n

Function: noun

Etymology: Middle English resoun, from Old French raison, from Latin ration-, ratio reason, computation, from reri to calculate, think; probably akin to Gothic rathjo account, explanation

Date: 13th century

1 a : a statement offered in explanation or justification <gave reasons that were quite satisfactory> b : a rational ground or motive  c : a sufficient ground of explanation or of logical defense; especially : something (as a principle or law) that supports a conclusion or explains a fact <the reasons behind her client's action> d : the thing that makes some fact intelligible : CAUSE <the reason for earthquakes> <the real reason why he wanted me to stay -- Graham Greene>

2 a (1) : the power of comprehending, inferring, or thinking especially in orderly rational ways : INTELLIGENCE (2) : proper exercise of the mind (3) : SANITY b : the sum of the intellectual powers

-----
The overriding meaning you get from the standard definitions is that rationality is to have reason or understanding, to be agreeable to reason. To be reasonable is to possess sound judgement, good sense, to have the power of comprehension, inference and orderly thinking; intelligence and sanity.

Sanity is to have sound powers of mind.

As far as I can see, there is nothing detailed above that humans and their consciousness aren't fit for. It makes sense really because human consciousness is what defines this quality in the first place and marks it out for need of definition, it is rational.

If you start taking such definitions too literally though, too seriously, too extremely, too ideally; then you will run into apparent paradox.

Paul

Registered User

Posts: 8

(8/14/03 8:45)

Reply

To Dave

---

Thanks Dave, for your elaborate answer. And I agree totally.

Uhm, some other thing, it's a question that didn't come into my mind because of your answer, mind you: Do you believe in, do you trust in... love? (I do. I don't believe in [some] God though, and I'm not into any religion whatsoever, not even buddhism.)

I 'object' to the idea that some people in this forum seem to have, namely that women should become more 'masculine' (or rational?).

Yin and Yang -- difficult and beautiful at the same time. In my view anyway.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 514

(8/14/03 9:17 am)

Reply

Re: Love, God and women.

---

Having looked up the definitions for believe, trust and love :-) I can say that I do believe in and trust in love.

I'm religious in my agnosticism, I'm not with the misogynists, and my only tattoo is a Yin Yang.

Did you say you're from Holland Paul? Whereabouts?

Edited by: Dave Toast at: 8/14/03 9:24 am

Paul

Registered User

Posts: 9

(8/14/03 9:31)

Reply

Hi Dave

---

I live in Tilburg, some 100 km south of Amsterdam, so, near Belgium.

<http://www.spiderwebservices.nl/thegoldengirlsquotes>

(I hope this is allowed [for one time], giving my URL.)

|                                                                                                                                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 515(8/14/03 9:53 am)Reply  | Re: Hi Dave <hr/> LOL Well I wasn't expecting that, you have suprised me there Paul. If you want to read Paul's site, then I suggest that you start from the start and read it all in order. This is the only way that you'll get it properly. Edited by: Dave Toast at: 8/14/03 10:28 am                                        |
| ynithrixRegistered UserPosts: 192(8/14/03 10:46)Reply                                                                                      | Re: To Dave <hr/> "I 'object' to the idea that some people in this forum seem to have, namely that women should become more 'masculine' (or rational?)." I don't think there are many such egalitarians in this forum. I don't believe women can become more masculine, let alone want it. They just end up embarrassing themselves when they try.                    |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 11(8/14/03 11:06)Reply                                                                                           | Re: To ynithrix <hr/> My mother (she passed away in 1986) once said to me in a phone call, after I kept on rambling about Higher Stuff: 'Keep your feet on the ground.'Because I lived and still live on the top floor of an apartment building, I defended myself with: 'That's not easy, living on the 16th storey.'Hahah, but she was right, in a sense.        |
| ynithrixRegistered UserPosts: 194(8/14/03 11:44)Reply                                                                                      | Re: To ynithrix <hr/> Yes, I'm familiar with the idea. I saw some kids playing a street game once, it had a weighted box in the centre and the soft ball was attached by elastic, which they hit to each other. To me, that symbolised a woman: she does nothing in the way of exploration, she helps to keep things 'weighted', such that the ball doesn't 'escape'. |

suergaz

Registered User
Posts: 1360
(8/14/03 13:29)
Reply

---

---

You're religious in your agnosticism Dave? Does this mean you are maintaining it?! (:D) You really have a yin yang tattoo?!

Paul, I don't believe in God either.

Love doesn't need belief!

Dave Toast

Registered User
Posts: 518
(8/14/03 21:18)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Does this mean you are maintaining it?!

---

Answer to meaning(a): Just like my car, I mostly let the experts maintain it for me, though I dabble.

Answer to meaning(b): You don't think you dissuaded me do you? One-liners and equivocation won't cut it.

Quote:

---

You really have a yin yang tattoo?!

---

Yes, really. I got it instead of a wedding ring.

Quote:

---

I don't believe in God either.

Love doesn't need belief!

---

Are these separate statements or are you saying that you love God?

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.32
Copyright ©1999-2005 ezboard, Inc.

Genius Forum

Causality • Courage • Rationality • Determination • Logic • Integrity • Thinking • Ideals
Wisdom • Reason • Discipline • Truth • Masculinity • Perfection • Universe

Genius News

David Quinn's Site

The Thinking Man's Minefield

EZB Edit

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> On 'Rationality'

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                                               | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1362(8/15/03 1:20 am)Reply                                                                                   | ---- <hr/> Separate statements. Notice the separate paragraph. Love is not god. Dissuade you from what? Your religious agnosticism? I only make fun of it! It is almost as conducive to destroying dishwater discourse as my irreligious atheism, though not nearly as essential in determining the depths of any dialogue that takes place here. Edited by: suergaz at: 8/15/03 1:25 am                                                                             |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 520(8/15/03 1:45)Reply  | Re: ---- <hr/> Yeah, paragraphs, right. LOL Now I've worked through your needlessly flowery language, show me how your irreligious atheism is better than agnosticism for determining the depth of any dialogue that takes place here. And explain to me what is and is not 'dishwater discourse', and how it is 'destroyed' by any belief that either of us may harbour. Try to write clearly now. Fuck, I promised myself not to get involved with your posturing again. Ah | well, I like games too.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1363

(8/15/03 1:54)

Reply

Re: ----

---

Quote:

---

show me how your irreligious atheism is better than agnosticism for determining the depth of any dialogue that takes place here.

---

Whoops, you did it for me!

Dishwater discourse is that rotten humourless stuff emptied by ugly people in excuse for their not having anything of themselves to offer up in love.

Games, games, What posturing? You're the one who has called yourself a religious agnostic!

If you were to use the word 'god' in a serious tone in my physical presence, everything in the vicinity would rupture with laughter.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 521

(8/15/03 2:09)

Reply

Re: ----

---

*Yawn*

So what.

What posturing indeed.

I have not called myself a religious agnostic, I said that I am religious in my agnosticism, by way of a joke. Where's the posturing?

You, on the other hand, posture incessantly and never explain your posturing statements.

Quote:

---

Dishwater discourse is that rotten humourless stuff emptied by ugly people in excuse for their not having anything of themselves to offer up in love.

---

Still not with you. And you haven't explained how you destroy whatever that above is with your irreligious atheism.

I did ask you to write clearly, which you manage to do sometimes when you know you're on solid ground. Enough with the equivocation defence system, make yourself clearly understood.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1364

(8/15/03 2:11)

Reply

Re: ----

---

I'm sorry, the answer to the second part of your question is that it is destroyed by showing ugly people, if one does not simply depart their company, that there is always something of oneself to offer up in love.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 522

(8/15/03 2:43)

Reply

Re: ----

---

I'd like to agree with the sentiment, but I'm not sure I fully understand it.

'Ugly people' are religious people, right?

Or might they be people who, through no fault of their own, have never contemplated the big questions? Perhaps those subject to indoctrination? Maybe those not particularly blessed of intellect?

Perhaps there might be better ways to show them your love, other than calling them 'ugly' and 'destroying' their 'rotten humourless stuff'.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1367

(8/15/03 3:06)

Reply

Re: ----

---

No, ugly people are the ones with ape-like brows and dull eyes, thick tongues and features you'd find on a potato.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 848

(8/15/03 3:43)

Reply

Re: ----

---

Quote:

---

You, on the other hand, posture incessantly and never explain your posturing statements.

---

Zeus, I never realized you visited America till after your return, and that is because of your idiotic communication style. Too bad, it would have been fun to visit if you were anywhere nearby. I'd love to have the chance to grab you by the scruff of your neck and say, "Speak plainly or you'll get no dinner!"

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 524

(8/15/03 8:55)

Reply

Re: ----

---

Quote:

---

No, ugly people are the ones with ape-like brows and dull eyes, thick tongues and features you'd find on a potato.

---

Mr. Potato head can't speak. :-P

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 849

(8/15/03 13:45)

Reply

Re: To Dave

---

Quote:

---

Do you believe in, do you trust in... love?

---

Surely you don't mean for us to trust in romantic love??!!

|                                                                                                                      |                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 19(8/16/03 6:57)Reply           | To birdofhermes <hr/> Trust in love. It can become romantic later, or it stays just love. The latter is sufficient. Only in love, truth is to be found.                                            |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 276(8/16/03 8:09)Reply       | Re: To birdofhermes <hr/> You're so stupid.                                                                                                                                                        |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 850(8/16/03 11:14)Reply | Re: To birdofhermes <hr/> You don't believe in God, but you believe and trust in love. What is this love? It sounds like a primordial, pre-existing reality substance. And do you believe in life? |
| BryanParrishGlobal UserPosts: 73(8/3/04 5:37)Reply        | Re: On 'Rationality' <hr/> FUCK SHIT PISS BALLS NUTS                                                                                                                                               |

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> On choosing a God or a philosophy

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                           | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| BiggierRegistered UserPosts: 94(3/22/04 1:28 am)Reply | On choosing a God or a philosophy <hr/> In Will Durant's "The Story of Philosophy" he has a chapter on Spinoza. He outlines all the trials and tribulations he had with the "elders of the synagogue" respecting his alleged "heresy". He was, in fact, excommunicated from the synagogue and duly shunned by family and friends. Eventually he had to exile himself out of the community. Durant then notes how he still received a number of letters trying to "reform" him. One in particular from a former student, Albert Burgh, who had [of all things] become an apostate himself. He abandoned Judaism and took up Catholicism. He writes to Spinoza: "You assume that you have at last found the true philosophy. How do you know that your philosophy is the best of all those which have ever been taught in the world, are now taught, or shall ever be taught in the future? Have you examined all those philosophies, both ancient and modern, which are taught here..and all the world over? And even supposing you have duly examined them, how do you know you have chosen the best?" To which Spinoza rejoins: "You who assume that you have at last found the best religion, or rather the best teachers, and fixed your credulity upon them, how do you know that they are the best, among those who have taught religions, or now teach, or shall hereafter teach them? Have you examined all those religions, ancient and modern, which are taught here...and all over the world? And even | supposing that you have duly examined them, how do you know you have chosen the best?"

The point, of course, does not revolve around "who is right"...but around the fact that the point being raised is of fundamental importance respecting the gods and philosophies any of us choose [myself included]. It is a point that cannot be addressed effectively at all, is it? You have folks coming into rooms like this and exchanging religious and philosophical perspectives. Some even dare to tout their own as the Ultimate One. But how do we really go about justifying our own values and convictions unless we have, in fact, examined all of the others meticulously? Yet how can we possibly do that intelligently when other perspectives are often profoundly rooted in culture and history and experience we can never really even begin to fathom with any degree of sophistication? And even were we to do this somehow, how would we go about justifying our conclusions as anything other than a point of view that seems to make sense to us...now, today, at this moment.

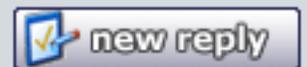

In other words, if we are being honest respecting our beliefs about gods and philosophies we will admit that we have merely taken an existential leap to one or the other...that it can never really go beyond that without merely assuming that the words we use to encompass our judgments are tautological in nature.

In short, all Ultimate Realities are ultimate con games. And once we are able to dupe ourselves into believing our own existential, intellectual constructs are essentially true it then becomes rooted in our emotional and psychological personas. Once embedded in there we can kiss rational thinking goodbye.

Biggie

|                                                                                   |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| AutemRegistered UserPosts: 28(3/22/04 2:02 am)Reply    | Re: On choosing a God or a philosophy <hr/> You say it yourself: you must actually choose something. There isn't much of a point in pursuing one philosophy or religion while at the same time pretending you find all possible religions and philosophies equally important. The real difference between people who choose the right things and those who choose the wrong things is probably that some can at least find their choice worthier than the other choices, just because they made it and it makes sense to them, and others can't. What to trust if not your own sense of what to choose?                                                                                 |
| BiggierRegistered UserPosts: 95(3/22/04 11:08 am)Reply | Re: On choosing a God or a philosophy <hr/> You say: "What to trust if not your own sense of what to choose". But how far does that get you if you are only basing your choice on a mere smattering of all the possible religious/philosophical points of view? And could it not be said by folks like Adolph Hitler and Osama bin Laden and Joseph Stalin and George W Bush that taking your advice is precisely what they, in fact did? Spinoza, for example, came to the conclusion that God is all and all is God. He was a pantheist. All well and good. But what evidence did he actually garner by which to demonstrate the rational nature of that choice? Biggie |

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Oneness

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                           | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 60(10/19/03 10:40 am)Reply   Edit |  Oneness <hr/> THE TOTALITY AND DIFFERENTIATION - CATEGORICAL REFINEMENT Human experience of consciousness has led most people to categorise it as, thoughts, feelings, images, sensations...but we are deluding ourselves if we think the boundaries of these categories are inherent. Experiences of consciousness are causal, empirical, and thus no two can ever be exactly the same. It is only the abstract content of conscious experiences, the constructed meaning, that can be unchanging and true regardless of the nature in which consciousness is experienced. More abstract thinkers have defined consciousness in other ways, as the experience of a differentiated totality (A=A), as appearances to mind, as the experience of things (existences), the existence of differentiation within the totality, etc. An important point is that consciousness does not exist separate to its experiences, there is no experiencer, no 'I', consciousness is those experiences. It simply cannot exist as a thing separate to those experiences, because to be so it would have to be inherently existent. Our understanding of cause and effect rules out any possibility of inherent or objective existence. |

Thus, one can lump all experiences of consciousness together and call them whatever one likes.

consciousness = things = differentiation = [A=A]

A DEEPER PERSPECTIVE ON DIFFERENTIATION

So what is the essential nature of differentiation? Differentiation is 'Causal processes that are in relation to other causal processes'.

Example 1: (follow the process downwards to its conclusion),

A fountain of water - causes -> A differentiated image of a fountain of water.

Water is caused to form a fountain - causes -> An image of caused water.

Causes form a fountain - causes -> An image of a fountain of causes.

Causal processes - causes -> The image itself is causal processes.

Causal processes - causes -> Causal processes that are similar in certain ways.

Example 2: A thing can be likened to a bubble in a brook, it is just the experience of a momentary manifestation. Yet the experiencer is also just a momentary manifestation, so it is like a bubble in a brook looking at a bubble in a brook. So the bubble that is looking at the other bubble contains a causal manifestation that is in some way in relation to the other bubble. The fact that a human appears nothing like a bubble in a brook does not mean anything.

So even though causality negates any possibility of existence, it does not negate the fact that there is variation in the totality, and thus, that the totality is capable of being differentiated.

CONSTRUCT - DIFFERENTIATION UPON DIFFERENTIATION

This whole section utilises constructs, so be ever aware that they are not inherent, my consciousness is simply creating them to illustrate a point.

We could say that differentiated things can themselves be differentiated. This construct gives us a more subjective understanding of differentiation. The simplest level of relation would be that of the billiard balls, two things, one hits the other. A much greater level of differentiation upon differentiation would be what occurs in the mind of a bird, the relationship between the causal processes that occur in the birds mind to the causal processes that are occurring in its environment would be far more complex than the billiard ball interaction. Human consciousness is the highest level of differentiation upon differentiation we know of, and the best of those experiences are of abstract logical constructs. Regardless of this, the basic process of differentiation/causality is still the same. Humans are simply most adept at differentiating what is already differentiated, they can do this over and over again.

If we accept that consciousness is differentiation, then all acts of differentiation are a form of consciousness. If we accept that differentiation is causal processes, then consciousness = causal processes.

THE TOTALITY AND DIFFERENTIATION - SUMMARY

So there is the *totality*, which has an infinite variety of causal happenings, and some of those happenings can be said to be in relation to each other, ie. differentiation.

- Some of those differentiations are abstract logically verified truths (such as  $A=A$ , cause and effect, all things are finite and caused, time, etc...).
- We tend to group differentiations together and call them 'consciousness'.
- The act of differentiation is the creator of all things, and thus, since differentiation = consciousness = things, one can say that 'consciousness creates consciousness', 'things create things', 'differentiation exists because it is created by acts of differentiation'.

Expressed another way, consciousness = thing = the presence of differentiation within the totality (that presence being created by itself, consciousness). So it is circular. If there were no consciousness there could be no consciousness.

Expressed yet another way,

Acts of differentiation are causes unto acts of differentiation.

It is in this sense that consciousness is said to be "at the right hand side of God".

ONENESS

So is there an inherent difference between a differentiated 'thing' and the undifferentiated totality? Do these categories reflect an absolute truth? No, they do not.

The act of differentiation does not inherently exist, it is just causal processes.

Where can reason go from here? There is no existence at all, not even of concepts. There is just a mass of causal processes that constitute the totality.

Since time is also just a construct of consciousness - a means of differentiating one moment from another, each moment is just each moment.

Experiencing each moment unto itself, accepting that one is the creator of all things (including the concept of things), and relishing it, is what enlightenment is all about.

RAMIFICATIONS - VALUES

To say that one values the totality has little meaning because values are a relative indication of preference, what is there other than the totality? The value would in no way guide one's choices in life.

To value 'things' would be to attempt to preserve, heighten and foster consciousness. However, the proper valuing of it would not be indiscriminate, because one would be diminishing it if, for example, one preserved and fostered a mass murderer. If one thinks a little about the deeper implications of this value one will realise the inherent arbitrariness of it. It is however, a value that most people have in some form or other.

When someone says they value Truth and wisdom they are actually at bottom valuing 'things or acts of  $A=A$  that are truthfully reflective of the nature of the totality'. This means that they are essentially valuing the existence of Ultimate Truths, these being abstract logical proofs.

|                                                                                      |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                      | Any other values are based on illusions. However, that doesn't mean they are necessarily foolish (though in most cases they are), one might choose to value 'food' because it is beneficial to ones core value, such as Truth. Rhett Edited by: Rhett Hamilton at: 11/3/03 11:58 am                                                                                                              |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1595(10/19/03 12:31 pm)Reply |  Re: Oneness <hr/> Oh no! All is one! Everything is in vain! What are we to do rhett? Where is reason to go? Do you have a poker face?! (:D)                                                                                                                                                                           |
| HywelRegistered UserPosts: 22(10/20/03 11:47 am)Reply     |  Re:Oneness <hr/> I really thought i had the oneness idea sorted, and then i read a koan that has been messing with my mind pretty much ever since - "After all things are reduced to oneness, where would that One be reduced?" I thought i was pretty good with koans, but this one still has me floundering. |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1604(10/20/03 1:52 pm)Reply  |  ---- <hr/> It's not because the answer is nothing at all is it?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 346(10/20/03 3:45 pm)Reply   |  Re: ---- <hr/> "After all things are reduced to oneness, where would that One be reduced?" Nothing is "reduced" to Oneness. Everything already is One.                                                                                                                                                       |

Hywel
Registered User
Posts: 24
(10/20/03 8:26 pm)
Reply

Re: ----

---

Quote:

---

It's not because the answer is nothing at all is it?

---

Hmmm, im not sure if by "nothing at all" you mean "there isnt a correct answer", or "it cannot be reduced", or even "its a meaningless question".

Also, is your comment really a question or an answer? :)

Quote:

---

Nothing is "reduced" to Oneness. Everything already is One.

---

I always presumed that the reduction referred to was in my own mind's understanding.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1218
(10/21/03 2:30 am)
Reply

Re: ----

---

Excellent writing, Rhett. You speak the truth. Now to merely align this exquisite corpse with what it can never be; namely alive.

Hywel,

As far as the koan is concerned, like all koans it is meant as a vehicle or impetus to separate the reader from some notion or abstract perception (or even all notions and perceptions). They are not usually meant to be meaningful out of context, like a proverb or other western style quote.

One hears the sound of one hand clapping not with their ears, but with their mind...or lack thereof.

Tharan

Hywel

Registered User

Posts: 25

(10/21/03 3:10 am)

Reply

 Re: ----

---

Thanks for that Tharan, i realise that koans often do not have "answers", and that its in finding out why theres no answer (or why there cant be an answer) that i can make some progress.

But that really the problem, i cant work out why theres no answer, i cant see what im being given impetus to realise. But no explanation i have thought of, and nothing i have heard has really seemed to hit the spot.

I cant remember the context that this koan was in the first time i saw it, but i found it again in a D.T.Suzuki book, and its context was in response to accusations that zen is pantheistic.

I have a tendency to be a bit pantheistic, and to feel that "god is the totality", but this koan seems to shout "Thats not enough! There is still more! Push On!". I suppose this is why it has stuck with me, its a spur, a little proof that there is much left to do.

WolfsonJakk

Registered User

Posts: 1220

(10/21/03 8:15 am)

Reply

 ----

---

Let's examine it.

Quote:

---

"After all things are reduced to oneness, where would that One be reduced?"

---

One (capitalized) is obviously referring to the Totality. But is it really saying that further reduction is necessary? Perhaps the process of initial reduction to oneness is all that is needed. What else can their be?

This would be helpful for a student still seeking more after being given everything. My daughter used to say "why?" all the time. I would answer her, then she again says "but why?" Eventually, I cannot parse reality any longer and we began a game of fantastic, outlandish explanations for everyday minutia which we still play to this day. It was for no other reason than to separate her from the initial desire of having all the "answers."

Tharan

Hywel

Registered User

Posts: 26

(10/21/03 10:14 am)

Reply

---

Quote:

---

But is it really saying that further reduction is necessary?
Perhaps the process of initial reduction to oneness is all that is needed.

---

I can see your point about whether it really is a challenge to further reduction of oneness, but i found another translation of it that seems to closer capture the spirit in which i originally read it -

"When all things are reduced to oneness, where does oneness reduce to?"

This translation seems to lessen the possibility that it isnt a challenge, but they are both translations, so clearly either could be "more correct".

---

Quote:

---

This would be helpful for a student still seeking more after being given everything.

---

Although D.T.Suzuki may or may not have been an authority on zen, he put this koan in his "Introduction to Zen Buddhism" book, which at least seems to imply, that this koan was not regarded as being something for students who had been given everything.

Although...the idea of a koan specifically created to bamboozle relentless why questioners is an appealing one.

---

Quote:

---

What else can their be?

---

Hey, that was my question!

P.S. I found that asking "Why do you want to know?" followed by an indeterminate number of "Why?"s can provide an adequate defence against the "why tyranny", although its effectiveness can depend upon the age of the child/adult in question.

scatteredmind

Registered User

Posts: 100

(10/23/03 4:23 pm)

Reply

 oneness

---

Quote:

---

"After all things are reduced to oneness, where would that One be reduced?"

Nothing is "reduced" to Oneness. Everything already is One.

---

the one that reduces things doesn't understand oneness.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 966

(10/24/03 1:23 pm)

Reply

 Re: oneness

---

Quote:

---

the one that reduces things doesn't understand oneness.

---

This, I think, is the jackpot.

My answers: Oneness reduces to the many, but even better, oneness reduces to not having the concept of one, (which is as opposed to any other possibility), it just IS.

One stanza from Tao te Ching that I have pondered is:

The Tao becomes One,

The One becomes Two,
The Two becomes Three
From the three come the ten thousand things.

That's a paraphrase, I don't have time to look it up right now, but the part which confused me most is:

The Tao becomes One -- Now how can that be?

Remember, the Tao that can be named is not the eternal Tao.
We name it Oneness.

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 350
(10/24/03 3:21 pm)
Reply

Re: oneness

---

*Remember, the Tao that can be named is not the eternal Tao.
We name it Oneness.*

Oneness is a concept within the Tao. The Tao is a concept within the Tao.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 967
(10/25/03 11:04 am)
Reply

Re: Oneness

---

Quote:

---

one would be diminishing it if, for example, one preserved and fostered a mass murderer.

---

It is precisely the lack of preserving and fostering that gives rise to mass murderers, the lack of fostering that fosters murderousness. We would certainly greatly increase consciousness by fostering and preserving all people, as they are all of equal worth.

Murderers are part of the totality too, we are stuck with them. Nothing is going anywhere. You can't reject items within the totality. The only hope is transformation.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1623
(10/25/03 3:40 pm)
Reply

 ---

---

Quote:

---

We would certainly greatly increase consciousness by fostering and preserving all people, as they are all of equal worth.

---

No.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 968
(10/26/03 10:58 am)
Reply

 Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

No.

---

It's a hard concept. I'm talking about intrinsic worth, not outward, temporary fluff like personality, intelligence, morality, kindness, decency and what-have-you. Those things are the product of time and fortune.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1625
(10/26/03 2:05 pm)
Reply

 ---

---

personality, intelligence, and kindness are not only the product of time and fortune, but human will. To say that what is essential in worth is equal in everyone is to devalue the essential worth of everyone.

|                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| unmentheyrlRegistered UserPosts: 2(10/26/03 6:43 pm)Reply     | ☐ oneness... <hr/> such interesting thoughts... I'm curious of what all of you do "for a living." I'm sure (or rather, hope) all of you value personal betterment, or 'clean' progress. After reading your thoughts, is it safe to assume what you consider to be "personal?" Keep up the good work :)                                                                                                                                                                       |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 174(10/27/03 2:30 am)Reply          | ☐ To unmentheyrl <hr/> Tank ye, sweetie. You keep up the good work too, huh?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
| LuxRegistered UserPosts: 3(10/27/03 10:22 am)Reply            | ☐ bon appetit <hr/> koans are the indigestible bones thrown to the dogs hungry of enlightenment to grind down their conceptual teeth and only sustenance until the dogs for themselves are wasted from the impotent nutrition you have to eat your way through or nothing happens at all occidentally these can become balls for the dogs of enlightenment to either fight over or play with. orientally they don't even let you have them after awhile. hahahaha ! (hehehe) |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 970(10/27/03 11:31 am)Reply | ☐ Re: --- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> personality, intelligence, and kindness are not only the product of time and fortune, but human will. To say that what is essential in worth is equal in everyone is to devalue the essential worth of everyone. <hr/>                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |

I don't know much about will. I doubt they are the product of it. Why does it devalue the essential worth of everyone? Is your self-esteem of the sort that must be obtained at the expense of others?

+++++

I'm a nurse for a living, but I don't think the career suits me at all. I did it out of desperation. Personal betterment, sure, but what is "clean progress?"

Quote:

---

After reading your thoughts, is it safe to assume what you consider to be "personal?"

---

What's the meaning of this?

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM
> GENIUS FORUM
> Oneness

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                              | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1631(10/27/03 1:37 pm)Reply |  Intrinsic worth. <hr/> Quote: <hr/> I don't know much about will. I doubt they are the product of it. <hr/> I never said they were the product of it alone. Quote: <hr/> Why does it devalue the essential worth of everyone? <hr/> Because what is essential of worth in everyone is their difference from everyone else! And I thought you were one of civilizations discontents! Quote: <hr/> Is your self-esteem of the sort that must be obtained at the | expense of others?

---

No, at least I don't think so! the expense of others what exactly?! I always esteem myself and feel embarrassed when others try to esteem me.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 972

(10/28/03 7:07 am)

Reply

 Re: Intrinsic worth.

---

I don't know much about will. I doubt they are the product of it.

-----

I never said they were the product of it alone.

Conceded. But what I wonder is if will has any real place at all. I for example, am a wonderful person, and I have reached a point of momentum in which I just get better and better. But do I choose it? Should I take the credit? I suspect not. I am grateful, though.

Quote:

---

Because what is essential of worth in everyone is their difference from everyone else!

---

No, that is not their essential worth. It is their individuality, though, and that is a magnificent thing. It's a great mystery I often ponder. There is an interplay between the universal and the individual, in all of Reality. You see, in a way the universal is what's really "true" but in another way it is the individual that gives all real meaning and progress in the story. You know, the Buddhists say the water drops or the wavelets are just an illusion -- it's the ocean that is real. But I say, they are both real, and they play off each other. Each has it's role. It's maddening the way you can't pin it down.

Quote:

---

And I thought you were one of civilizations discontents!

---

Are you suggesting some relation between civilization or tribal life and individuality?

Quote:

---

the expense of others what exactly?!

---

I am assuming you consider yourself a mighty fine specimen, with all the fine attributes I mentioned and more, and that you esteem yourself by comparing with lesser humanity. But I am telling you that on the ocean level, there is only one human being, and we are all it.

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 365

(10/28/03 10:05 am)

Reply

☐ Re: Intrinsic worth.

---

I for example, am a wonderful person, and I have reached a point of momentum in which I just get better and better.

lol...soon you'll be saying you are enlightened. Certainly developing the 'right' attitude. Next phase is you thinking everything you say has immense import. From that flows a feeling of mental power and superiority which after a time becomes the delusionment of enlightenment.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 973

(10/28/03 12:13 pm)

Reply

☐ Re: Intrinsic worth.

---

lol...soon you'll be saying you are enlightened.

I only mentioned my state because it was pertinent to the theme. It's true, however. "To him who has will more be given..." I have taken this to mean that with the person who is finally beginning to have some awareness, it becomes easier and easier to "feed" them. That's why the sage looks for the real student, the one who can actually progress. For many people, the teaching would be just pouring water down a pit.

I'm not enlightened, and if I were, I doubt I'd say so. I'm not convinced that enlightenment is an all-or-nothing thing. Therefore, it's a continuum. What I think I am is a person who has stepped up on maybe the first rung or two of the ladder. There's a long way to go -- but oh the difference that first rung makes!

Next phase is you thinking everything you say has immense import. From that flows a feeling of mental power and superiority which after a time becomes the delusionment of enlightenment.

I think my thoughts are fairly valuable, but I can't see myself following the pattern you describe. My enlightenment will not be delusional. And it's funny that the wiser a person becomes the less they feel that they can personally take credit for it. There's nothing but awe.

Actually, isn't this pretty much what I tried to say to Suergaz? I admit that I am grateful for the wonderful adventure that my inner life has become, and there is just no doubt that I have gained a lot more momentum than I had when I was 20, but I don't feel myself much different than a crazy person, a street person, a serial killer...I could be any of those. No, I couldn't be that now; I have too much understanding, but I can easily imagine myself in their place, at a somewhat earlier phase of development.

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 181
(10/28/03 1:05 pm)
Reply

 Re: Intrinsic worth.

---

For what it's worth I'm intrinsically saying, you're a true mystic alright, Anna.

Announcement!

jimhaz and I will be married (to each other :-) before January 1st, 2004.

Would you like to be our Best Woman?

x

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1637
(10/28/03 1:25 pm)
Reply

 ---

---

Anna, why do we all have to be one person at sea level? In truth, we have to be all that we become.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 980
(10/29/03 4:46 am)
Reply

 Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Anna, why do we all have to be one person at sea level? In truth, we have to be all that we become.

---

You are Borg. Resistance is futile.

What we become is aware.

+++++

Paul, I thought you didn't love Jimmy anymore?

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1644
(10/29/03 2:55 pm)
Reply

 -----

---

If I'm borg, you're grob.

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 191
(10/29/03 5:55 pm)
Reply

 To Anna

---

jimhaz looks right through me.
I hate that, and he's funny.

Hmpff!

hmpff@home.nl

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 686
(10/29/03 10:52 pm)
Reply

 Re: To Anna

---

This page!

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 69
(11/3/03 12:16 pm)
Reply | Edit

 Re: Re:Oneness

---

"After all things are reduced to oneness, where would that One be reduced?"

The answer is the mind. The very nature of the mind is such that it cannot experience the One, it can only experience a reduction of the One (but this doesn't mean we can't understand the nature of the One and experience enlightenment).

[If one wanted to be pedantic one could say that since the mind does not inherently exist the answer would have to be nowhere.]

Rhett

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> others like me...?

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                            | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| serfur007Registered UserPosts: 1(10/7/03 6:17 am)Reply |  others like me...? <hr/> hello, I have thought unlike most people i have ever met. My mother began seeing a psychologist with me when i was four years old because she wondered how i could out-smart her already at such a young age. I made her feel dumb i guess. it was imediately clear to the doctor that i was really smart. I was tested and it was confirmed.Well a few weeks ago i met a guy who claims to be a genius and for the first time i was able to talk about my thoughts and ideas with someone that would understand them. He tells me there are many genius' out there that struggle just as i do. So i have been looking around on the web; and although it is a bit overwhelming, finding so many new sites; it feels comforting to know that im not a freak just because i am a little eccentric. I dont even really know why i am posting this. I guess i just find it hard to believe. I knew there were many genius' out there, i just didnt know that they had there own way of thinking, which happens to be much further beyond the mediocre mind. i could use someone to talk to. I am only 18 and struggle inside. No one understands me! they think my ideas are dorky and i cant even relate to most people because they dont see things the way i do. So this has caused me to have to turn my mind off most of the time with fear of being made fun of. I must dumb down just to have a conversation with someone. I plan on becoming a doctor, and writing some books. I could do just about anything i set my mind to. do you people understand me? please reply, i just want to chat sometime. |

|                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1191(10/7/03 6:34 am)Reply  |  Re: others like me...? <hr/> Paragraphs and Prozac are my suggestions to you, Mr. Teenage Genius.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| serfur007Registered UserPosts: 4(10/7/03 7:14 am)Reply       |  Re: others like me...? <hr/> thanks for your constructive criticism,next time i will use paragraphs. But you must realize this is new to me and i didnt know where to begin or catagorize my thoughts. P.S. there is no reason for you to be rude JAKK, i dont need prozac.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 728(10/7/03 7:46 am)Reply           |  Re: others like me...? <hr/> Keep up the good work serfur007. Continue your search. You will not fail. The path is a path of tension between 2 states or a kind of oscillation. The opposition, mockery or rudeness you will experience along the path are there to maintain the tension. It is the voice of the plebian mind in contrast to the regal, which is the voice of your body as opposed to your mind, or the voice of matter as opposed to force, or the voice of logic as opposed to faith. How much tension can you take?This is the question. |
| G ShantzRegistered UserPosts: 399(10/7/03 8:44 am)Reply      |  -- <hr/> DEL is right. How long can you endure without being understood? That is the measure of a man.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1192(10/7/03 10:55 am)Reply |  --- <hr/> DEL, are you growing your beard long? Why the desire to be understood? Just do it.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 615
(10/7/03 11:24 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Del: matter as opposed to force

---

Keep reading the elementary particle physics Del.

Ghost in the machine?

There are only ghosts.

serfur007
Registered User
Posts: 6
(10/7/03 11:28 am)
Reply

Re: ---hey thanks

---

thanks alot friends.

Jakk some people are looking so deep, that they cant find the answer which is right in front of their nose. I have endured criticism my entire life, and i do understand what these nice folks are trying to get across to me. I appreciate there help more than your quick un-witty remarks.

I believe that i could endure it as long as i need to. I have gotten by just fine so far, it is just frustrating at times. I wasnt exactly asking for people to take me under their wing either. I just wanted to be pointed in the right direction. Sorry if there was a misunderstanding there. Thanks for your time.

I plan on joining this forum. I already posted a couple. I find it interesting that you described this as a search. I totally see it that way, but i dont know what im looking for. So i will persevere and find answers slowly i guess, as i have done for 18 years.

look for the name "serfur007" around.
later~

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 342
(10/7/03 1:13 pm)
Reply

Re: ---hey thanks

---

No one understands me! they think my ideas are dorky and i cant even relate to most people because they dont see things the way i do

If you think you are a genius of some sort, then it is your responsibility to make your ideas understandable to and appreciated by others. To me that is what a true genius is, forget all this enlightenment crap for the time being.

Most teenagers think noone understands them. Now you could also be a nutcase who thinks he knows everything - there are more of those than geniuses - so in order for most here to take you seriously you have to put forth for discussion some of the ideas that you have found others disagree with.

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 335
(10/7/03 1:56 pm)
Reply

Re: ...

---

It'd be interesting to see what you bring here. I'm 18 too. I suggest you give up on socialization, and live with your feelings of isolation.

-Scott

serfur007
Registered User
Posts: 8
(10/7/03 2:01 pm)
Reply

Re: ...

---

ok, i guess in comming here i should have expected you guys to give me a hard time. I mean evryone else does. And fyi, im not nuts. I have always been the smartest kid in my class. Thanks alot, ill take my genius elsewhere.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 733
(10/7/03 4:35 pm)
Reply

-----

---

serfur007, what is your message?
What are the results of your Genius?
What have you learned?
or
What have you been given?

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 343
(10/7/03 4:43 pm)
Reply

Re: -----

---

Thanks alot, ill take my genius elsewhere

Come back when life hardens you a bit. Far too sensitive.

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 336
(10/8/03 2:44 am)
Reply

..

---

Hmm, if you reacted to what I said, I wasn't giving you a hard time. I agree with Toast.

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 307
(10/8/03 2:53 pm)
Reply

Re: ---hey thanks

---

serfur007 wrote:

Quote:

---

I find it interesting that you described this as a search. I totally see it that way, but i dont know what im looking for.

---

Well, what is valuable to you?

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 133
(10/8/03 3:17 pm)
Reply

To serfur007

---

Quote:

---

I have always been the smartest kid in my class. Thanks alot, ill take my genius elsewhere.

---

Oh no! Please, come back! Share with pitiful us!

serfur007

Registered User

Posts: 9

(10/9/03 9:52 am)

Reply

 Re: To serfur007

---

hello, to those who care. I dont see why some people feel the need to make others feel so unvaluable. you know who you are, and you dont even know me, so dont lip. btw thanks "voce io" for letting me know that you werent trying to be mean. And as for "jim haz" why dont you begin making fun of me once you have a strong grip of your true gender?

There are many things that are valuable to me. I dont know exactly what you mean by that though.

I love learning. My ability to learn anything I set my mind on, is something that I value very much. I know without having learned.

I cant stand waisting my time with simple pleasures where there is no need for me to focus. Well I guess there are a few things that are exceptions.

I have always been extremely self aware. As well as very aware of all my surroundings.

I am pretty much always happy. I get angry once in a while and go off at a friend or bad driver or whatever it may be. But usually I can calm myself down before that happens.

I am not so sure about what I believe about religion right now. I do notice though how everything works together. Everything has an energy of its' own. I dont know where it comes from but it is very aparent.

I think the human mind is a wonderful thing and if used properly; with the right practice and good intentions; can work wonders.

I feel like a little boy, always wanting to know. Always wanting to poke, and pry at everything; just to figure it out, just to have the knowledge; because its fun.

My biggest asset I think is my ability to communicate so well with others. This is with people who actually care. Or are in need of help. I can always cheer up friends. I am also Very persuasive. I would have to say this is my gift.

(I tend to be a very humble person and dont usually enjoy talking about myself so this is kinda difficult. Also I dont exactly know what you are looking for in me, so I guess I am holding back in fear of rejection.)

I am not sure I have a message. At this point in my life I am still trying to piece it together so that I can be able to share it with others. I want to make a difference. I love helping others. They always come first. If people would just think past their nose's once in a while and be more considerate then this world would be so much happier.

I could go on. Just please dont be harsh. I know I am a genius. I have the I.

|                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                     | Q., the reputation, and the skills to prove it, Its just hard for me to ramble on, in fear of rejection. Like I said. Which I assume is from my father leaving me when i was young.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 138(10/9/03 10:03 am)Reply     |  Re: To agent serfur007 <hr/> Quote: <hr/> I dont see why some people feel the need to make others feel so unvaluable. <hr/> Nobody is 'valuable', not in the true sense. You say you like to learn, maybe you should learn that first.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 340(10/9/03 10:17 am)Reply  |  Re: To agent serfur007 <hr/> I think your fear will go away sefer007.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| serfur007Registered UserPosts: 10(10/9/03 10:19 am)Reply |  Re: To agent serfur007 <hr/> well I dont feel valuable. We all live then die. But I dont need someone saying things to me to try to make me feel bad. Like some people think they have more rights than another, or are entitled; just because they are older or know everyone in this forum. Give me a break! Take a chance on the new guy,hear what he has to say, rather than automaticaly saying he is wrong. My life is hard just as yours is, so dont you think you should be able to empathize? I am not saying I know everything. I dont even come close. Most of you are older than me, have more life skills, experience, larger vocabulary. I understand this. Im not saying im better than any of you. I am not even looking for acceptance. I dont need that from you or anyone. But it would be nice if you would stop treating me like an enemy. |

|                                                                                 |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                 | We are all on the same team here, right? The Human Race.If you dont believe so, then let me know so I can stop waisting my time with you nice folks.                                                                                          |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 139(10/9/03 10:28 am)Reply |  Re: To agent serfur007 <hr/> Enemy? You're my brother, man, although I'm not a genius.Btw, that's a picture of jimhaz's sister, it's not him. |

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> others like me...?

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                 | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1196(10/9/03 1:08 pm)Reply |  Re: To agent serfur007 <hr/> I shall resist. But here is another cookie.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1549(10/9/03 1:52 pm)Reply     |  --- <hr/> You shouldn't be afraid of being made fun of serfur, it is one of the most honest ways of finding out what someone is made of. Why don't you have a view on religion? Edited by: suergaz at: 10/9/03 1:53 pm                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| cassiopeiaeRegistered UserPosts: 110(10/9/03 11:09 pm)Reply |  Re: To agent serfur007 <hr/> Hello Serfur007. Don't take things so personally, some people are rude, some are not, it is the same anywhere on the net. The more you point them out or express your irritation with it, the more you will get. If you want it to go away, ignore it. To be honest, none of these people are bad people, not that I like all of them, but they are decent people. Some of them take the asshole road to feel people out, others just don't know any better. :-) Point is, ignore it and it will go away. |

Quote:

---

My life is hard just as yours is, so dont you think you should be able to empathize?

---

Many of the people here think empathy is weakness. I guarantee you won't get that here. Not to mention, life is as difficult or easy as you make it, it is all a matter of perspective.

Quote:

---

I am not saying I know everything. I dont even come close. Most of you are older than me, have more life skills, experience, larger vocabulary. I understand this. Im not saying im better than any of you. I am not even looking for acceptance. I dont need that from you or anyone. But it would be nice if you would stop treating me like an enemy.

---

It really doesn't matter if you do or don't know everything, if you are younger or whatever. Setting yourself up like this is giving the impression that you DO want acceptance. No one is accepting or is not accepting you. Acceptance doesn't matter. Remember that, and you will have no problems here. Forums like this are great learning tools (in more ways than one), take advantage of it.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1551
(10/10/03 12:44 am)
Reply

 ---

---

Now look here mama cass, you'd better say who it is you don't like and quit snitchin' like a bitch.

cassiopeiae
Registered User
Posts: 111
(10/10/03 1:20 am)
Reply

 Re: ---

---

LOL!! I should have said perspectives I don't like...not the people :-O

serfur007
Registered User
Posts: 11
(10/10/03 5:55 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

yea, now that you point it out, i know i shouldnt have set myself up like this. i have a lot to learn, one thing would be ignoring rudeness.

yea i guess i do want acceptance. but not completely. i know who i am. I know what im made of. Im not really looking for that. I just got a little ahead of myself. I was excited when i found out there were many people with there own veiws on reality just as i have. I imidiately wanted in your group.

i do have views on religion. i have my own beliefs, which im sure are not original. but there isnt really a particular belief im following right now. i could go into it, which im sure you want me to. but i have some studying to do right now. big test later. ill post it soon.

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 348
(10/10/03 10:24 am)
Reply

Re: ---

Sufferer

---

If you think there was rudeness in what I said, then I would have to say for someone who purports to be a genius that you are pathetic (whereas as I'm no genius I can be pathetic).

Serfur acts like a spoilt child and therefore should be treated as such. He seems like a person that seeks out sympathy from others.

I'm actually being kind by challenging him up front. This is no place for him – he is not a dangerous thinker - there are plenty of other forums that cater for polite conversation.

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 143
(10/10/03 10:41 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

I fully agree with jimhaz.

Come on, agent 007, nobody has been 'rude' to you, nor has the intention of being rude, I'm sure.
Enough pampering.

Do you believe in God? I hope not.

|                                                                                                                                                                           |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1554(10/11/03 1:13 am)Reply                                                                                       |  --- <hr/> cassiopeiae, I've always liked you.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| cassiopeiaeRegistered UserPosts: 112(10/11/03 7:37 am)Reply                                                                                    |  Re: --- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> cassiopeiae, I've always liked you. <hr/> awwwww ... well, i like everybody ... including you suergaz ok...so, now that that is taken care of... :-/ geez Edited by: cassiopeiae at: 10/11/03 7:38 am |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1557(10/11/03 2:44 pm)Reply                                                                                       |  ----- <hr/> I always think of you and Dave toast as a couple! Am I wrong?(Just when you thought that was the end of the embarrassing suergaz)                                                                                                                              |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 621(10/11/03 11:27 pm)Reply  |  Re: ----- <hr/> I suppose we are indeed a couple of people, eh Cass.                                                                                                                                                                                                            |

|                                                                                                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1559(10/11/03 11:47 pm)Reply                                                                                    |  ---- <hr/> I knew it! A couple of rogue weatherpersons infiltrating the secret base! |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 625(10/11/03 11:52 pm)Reply  |  Re: ---- <hr/> LOL.I don't understand it but it sounds funny.                  |
| cassiopeiaeRegistered UserPosts: 113(10/12/03 12:06 am)Reply                                                                                 |  Re: ---- <hr/> LOL! A couple of people, indeed! What happened here?                 |

Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Pantheism

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Naturyl  Registered UserPosts: 87(1/25/04 4:15 pm)Reply  | Pantheism <hr/> QRS actively espouse pantheism, although I have never heard them use the term explicitly. Essentially, pantheism is the idea that Nature is equivalent to the theological principle of God. Metaphysically, it replaces supernaturalism with naturalism, and is generally not ultimately dualistic. God becomes a synonym for Nature. In a pantheistic sense, either term suffices to describe our creator and the ultimate ground of being. I serve on the Board of Directors of the Universal Pantheist Society, the world's oldest membership organization for pantheists. I would be curious to see what participants here at GF know about pantheism, and how it is regarded. At appropriate junctures, I may add comments or clarifications based on my knowledge of the subject matter. |
| WolfsonJakk Registered UserPosts: 1434(1/25/04 5:52 pm)Reply                                                                                                                                                                | Pantheism <hr/> Would a pantheist include someone who feels that all current descriptions of "god" are essentially variations on a common theme?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| voce io Registered UserPosts: 657(1/25/04 5:53 pm)Reply                                                                                                                                                                     | Re: Pantheism <hr/> Pantheism is God.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |

|                                                                                                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1327(1/25/04 9:29 pm)Reply                                                                                | Re: Pantheism <hr/> I'm either a pantheist or animist. I didn't know about the Society. I'm interested.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2123(1/26/04 12:57 am)Reply                                                                                    | ---Ground of peeing. <hr/> Everyone knows that nature is all there is.Call your club anything.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1435(1/26/04 5:41 am)Reply                                                                                 | Re: ---Ground of peeing. <hr/> The Anything Club                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 2091(1/26/04 7:36 am)Reply  | Re: Pantheism <hr/> Even though I equate God with Nature, I don't like the term "pantheism" and would never call myself a pantheist. In my experience, pantheists are either materialists who believe that the Universe is physical and objective in nature, or mystics who believe that the Universe is composed of a divine essence. In reality, neither of these conceptions are even remotely close to the mark. Pantheism is obviously a step upwards from Christianity and Islam and the like, but it's still a long way short of true wisdom. |
| krussell2004Registered UserPosts: 43(1/26/04 8:39 am)Reply                                                                                  | Re: Pantheism <hr/> Quote: <hr/> but it's still a long way short of true wisdom. <hr/> A long way short? I'm not sure why, but I like the unification of opposites in that statement.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2124(1/26/04 11:10 am)Reply                                                                                                                                                                      | --- <hr/> To equate god with nature is a long way short of wisdom. I am the great pan!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| Naturyl Registered UserPosts: 93(1/26/04 3:41 pm)Reply       | Re: --- <hr/> Interesting comments. Such objections are among those which contribute to the fact that despite my position in the UPS, I no longer actively refer to myself as 'pantheist.' Like David, I continue to espouse something that could easily be called 'pantheism' in practice, but have gradually become dissatisfied with identifying myself as such. Because I remain sympathetic toward the worldview and its aims, however, I maintain my position in the organization. For Bird, here is an older site of mine that I keep updated. You can find a lot of information about pantheism and the various organizations there. naturyl.humanists.net/panaware/ |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1331(1/27/04 8:33 am)Reply                                                                                                                                                                  | Re: --- <hr/> Thanks, I had a look. I believe pantheism is the innate human spiritual sense. From this we have fallen. Fallen into Monotheism and Buddhism.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| Naturyl Registered UserPosts: 120(1/27/04 1:01 pm)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> Basically, I'd agree, but ideally, pantheism would never be called 'pantheism,' because without the fall into religion, the term 'theism' would never have been meaningful to begin with. Nature would be Nature, and that would be spiritually sufficient.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 782
(1/27/04 1:29 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Though the word 'pantheism' is an oxymoron, I am very sympathetic to the cause of pantheism. It runs in the family. My granddad was a pantheist. At the age of 20, when I read the classics, I would not have hesitated to accept the label. By now it seems too Greek to me. The 'theism' part is somewhat irritating.

Thomas

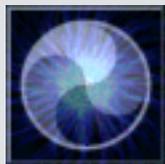

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1334
(1/27/04 1:45 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

That is why I prefer to think of myself as an animist. Although at the site I discovered I am a bit of a monist as well.

Naturyl
Registered User
Posts: 124
(1/27/04 1:50 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

I am a dialectical monist.

Bird, why would you feel that you are an animist? Do you believe that every object has its own 'spirit,' 'soul,' or 'intelligence?' If so, in what sense? It is very rare to run into anyone who understands what animism is and refers to themselves as such. Since I'm sure you understand what the term means, I'm curious as to why you would adopt it.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1336
(1/27/04 2:31 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Uh-oh, I hope I'm not in trouble.

Quote:

---

Do you believe that every object has its own 'spirit,' 'soul,' or 'intelligence?' If so, in what sense?

---

Well, the short answer is "probably." I think the world is a sacred place and everything in it is holy. It is much harder to discern quite what to think re items that are "inanimate" but I give them the benefit of the doubt.

I find a great and ponderable mystery between the reality of Oneness and the reality of the individual life. It is a very grand scheme.

There is a sense in which each individual, a plant say, has its own soul and also partakes in the spirit or soul of its kind. Layers upon layers of belonging.

You can see and feel the life force, the intelligence, and joy of life everywhere. You just have to be willing. The wisdom QRS promote is one of deduction, but it is possible to understand something simply by seeing it.

For example, I feel black people, and they are different than white people. Lately, for some reason, there are Africans in America. When I saw them, I was horrified at what we have done. But the best of the American blacks are still retaining something of their African magnificence, and their racial tones. Sometimes, as a nurse, I will have a patient's room filled with family, and when it is good folks, the feeling is wonderful and I enjoy being inside of it. But white people are lighter and thinner. When in a room full of fine, relaxed and loving black family members, the feeling is so palpable that it is like an electric humming. It is sheer pleasure to breathe and move within it.

But today I went to the meat counter and an African waited on me. I can usually spot them even before they speak (that they are not American). Once they speak of course, it is all over. Have you ever heard Swahili or an African tongue? It makes French sound guttural and silly.

I would have liked to sit in a corner just to be near his speech and within his vibrational space. There is no other word but magnificence to describe the soul-emotive presence of Africans.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 785
(1/27/04 2:34 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Naturyl: It is very rare to run into anyone who understands what animism is and refers to themselves as such. Since I'm sure you understand what the term means, I'm curious as to why you would adopt it.

Yeah, that would interest me too. It seems that animism is presently experiencing a small comeback in the form of panpsychism (plato.stanford.edu/entries/panpsychism), which is one of the more exotic theories one encounters in the context of the philosophy of mind.

Thomas

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 479

(1/27/04 2:53 pm)

Reply

Re: ---

---

For example, I feel black people, and they are different than white people. Lately, for some reason, there are Africans in America. When I saw them, I was horrified at what we have done. But the best of the American blacks are still retaining something of their African magnificence, and their racial tones.

BATES, DAISY 1859-1951

"There are a few fortunate races that have been endowed with cheerfulness as their main characteristic," she said, "the Australian Aborigine being among these."

The QRS goal is not happiness, but contentment. I have always found happiness to be transient, whereas contentment achieved through wisdom can be more lasting.

Although it is quite sad that white people have destroyed this happiness, so what. Do you not think that at some stage some other culture would have become like whites and developed sufficient technology to launch an assault on Australia. I can assure you they would have. For instance the mongols may have taken over Europe and the UK at some stage. The rolling stone of wisdom gathers no moss.

What choice do the aboriginies have now? None except to apply wisdom to the way they approach things. They presently don't for the most part, so they are very unhappy and will remain so until they do.

Naturyl

Registered User

Posts: 127

(1/27/04 3:05 pm)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Bird,

No, you're not in any trouble. :-) You're obviously a very spiritual person by nature. The left-brain or 'feminine' penchant for direct intuitive experience has served you well, it seems. As regards the only marginally-important issue of classification, it looks to me like you are in some sort of middle ground between animism and pantheism, which is a reasonably uncommon place to be in modern times (although the ancients of prehistory knew nothing else). As far as I can tell, it is not a position which necessarily conflicts with reason, so you're safe from 'trouble' with me. If it's working for you and it doesn't require faith in absurdities, there's really no reason to look elsewhere. To your credit, it's a very ancient and authentic sort of spirituality, and one which many are beginning to rediscover.

[edited because I am an excellent speller, but a horrendous typist] ;-)

Edited by: Naturyl  at: 1/27/04 3:08 pm

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1338

(1/27/04 3:06 pm)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

What choice do the aboriginies have now? None except to apply wisdom to the way they approach things.

---

It is time for us to apply some wisdom, and realize that the ultimate end for a species that does not live within nature is death. We are headed that way, and taking others with us.

There are serious problems with this thing called civilization. For example, Japanese fishermen actually kill dolphins on sight because dolphins are also fishers of fish.

The idea that it is OK to make species war to prevent other species from existing, or from reaching their food, is a morally and spiritually bankrupt notion, divorced from respect for life and our place within it.

The diversity of life shows that diversity wins out, and a species that makes war on the rest of life (ours) will have to end up with a destroyed web of life. It is irrational to eliminate dolphins, (and wolves, and bears, and forests, and indirectly through insecticides and pollution the fish in the ocean and rivers, and wild birds, and frogs, and tigers, and elephants....) so as to turn the entire planet into a giant farm for the production of human food. Irrational not because it would turn this planet into a garish hell, nor even because it would ultimately backfire and we would die, but irrational because once the entire planet is farmed and paved, we still would have to finally limit our population.

No, I do not think it was humane or moral to overrun the aboriginees and south sea islanders and the americas with their hundreds and thousands of stable cultures and languages, in order to overrun the world with English people.

Edited by: birdofhermes at: 1/27/04 3:17 pm

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 482
(1/27/04 3:15 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

for a species that does not live within nature is death

The ultimate end for any species that does not try and bend nature to its will is death. As all we do is nature we have no choice in that matter.

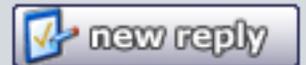

If humans had not developed and bears had, would not they now eat us.

Where are the creatures from 100 million years ago? I hope you like sharks, crocodiles and cockroaches.

I think it is the motherness in you that is saying that.

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Pantheism

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Naturyl  Registered UserPosts: 127(1/27/04 3:17 pm)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> Well, in the animal kingdom, such things are the way of survival. As we are animals, it is understandable that we would carry with us these tendencies to overrun others and destroy competition for resources. However, I am not excusing such behavior by explaining it, for to consider excusable based on its animal origins would be to commit the naturalistic fallacy. I feel that we are animals, but we are not only animals. We are also something more. I am by no means suggesting that we have a 'soul' or some other simplistic dualistic notion, nor am I suggesting that we were created by any means other than that which creates all other animals. Still, and to great puzzlement, we find that we are somehow different in a way so important as to be considered fundamental. We have self-awareness, and with self-awareness comes a burden of responsibility shared by no other species. We find ourselves in the highly bizzare (perhaps even 'absurd, as Camus might say) position of being animals who must behave as more than animals. It is both a boon and a curse, I suppose. So, essentially, despite the fact that the things Bird laments are quite natural and expected in animals, and the fact that human beings are animals, I still must agree with her. We've got to do better. It's our burden and our reward, the lot in life of the strangest beast of them all. |

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1339

(1/27/04 3:29 pm)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

The ultimate end for any species that does not try and bend nature to its will is death. As all we do is nature we have no choice in that matter.

---

A bizarre remark. No species, including QRS, is intelligent enough to interfere with the development of nature, and none has ever bent nature to its will. I'm not saying there is no striving or competition, but there are bounds and laws which cannot be crossed.

Quote:

---

If humans had not developed and bears had, would not they now eat us.

---

Another bizarre remark. Bears have developed wonderfully. As to dolphins, they are probably more intelligent than chimps. They more lack hands, than brains. But back to bears - what an androcentric view. Bears are developing as bears. That's what bears do - they be bears. Do you want all species to be human? Is that not just the derangement I was talking about? An entire planet full of creatures unworthy of life because they have "not developed." Into what? Why into humans - the only worthy ones. And who else gets to live? Corn, wheat, rice, fruit, vegetables, chickens, pigs, cows. That's about it. No, Jimmy, it's not a question of eating. It's a question of making species war. The lion does not make war on the gazelle. The lion does not make war on the hyena because its presence in the world is inconvenient for lions.

Quote:

---

Where are the creatures from 100 million years ago? I hope you like sharks, crocodiles and cockroaches.

---

Well, they are here.

Quote:

---

I think it is the motherness in you that is saying that.

---

Let it be so.

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 483
(1/27/04 3:33 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

with self-awareness comes a burden of responsibility

I have to agree with your statement. Trouble is are we really doing anything about it. We are in some small ways but I sense it will be too late, particularly as developing countries where much of the worlds population reside are likely to make all the same mistakes the western world has. Competition means they have to cut costs to compete, and unless you have a 'New World Order' controlling them, they will do so at the cost of the environment.

Edited by: jimhaz at: 1/27/04 3:33 pm

Naturyl
Registered User
Posts: 131
(1/27/04 3:48 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

Jimhaz,

I don't know. It may be too late, as you suggest. However, even if it is, dwelling on the fact will accomplish nothing. When in doubt, we must assume that it is not too late - but in so doing, we must also avoid the pitfall of complacency which whispers "if it's not too late, we'll just wait until it is." Laziness, greed, and indifference tempt us to ignore the problem until it goes away, but we are seeing increasing amounts of evidence that it won't. The time for procrastination is quite clearly at an end, and we need to do something significant about this environmental situation immediately.

Having said that, I personally tend to doubt that it is too late, and I think that we will probably make it through the worst times, although not without some difficulty along the way.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1340
(1/27/04 3:48 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Well, in the animal kingdom, such things are the way of survival. As we are animals, it is understandable that we would carry with us these tendencies to overrun others and destroy competition for resources.

---

As you can see from my above recent post, I do not agree that this is the animal pattern. If it were, there would be very few species.

Quote:

---

Trouble is are we really doing anything about it. We are in some small ways but I sense it will be too late, the situation is truly running amok at ths point, but it was fore ordained from the beginning. yes, there is something unique about our species.

---

We are too smart for our own good.

The puzzle lies in the roots of civilization.

The only way out is spiritual reform. If we want to be civilized (we have not achieved that) we must have a civilization that is focused on the refinement of how to live life well and in balance with nature, rather than on conquering and exploiting absolutely everything (including women of course).

Naturyl
Registered User
Posts: 132
(1/27/04 3:57 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Agreed. Philosophical Taoism envisions such a civilization.

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 485

(1/27/04 9:47 pm)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Jim: The ultimate end for any species that does not try and bend nature to its will is death. As all we do is nature we have no choice in that matter.

Birdy: A bizarre remark. No species, including QRS, is intelligent enough to interfere with the development of nature, and none has ever bent nature to its will. I'm not saying there is no striving or competition, but there are bounds and laws which cannot be crossed.

Well I disagree. All human endeavour is about bending nature to our will - or more precisely, as I'm a determinist, about increasingly controlling how we allow the environment to effect us - it is obvious otherwise we would still be apes. I'm also not certain that there are bounds which cannot be crossed, evolution certainly doesn't believe so, we certainly don't believe so or we wouldn't have machinery on Mars, we wouldn't believe in god, we wouldn't believe in timelessness.

On the other hand if the universe is truly infinite, then almost by default that means somewhere some species have made themselves immortal, but there may be physical boundaries that prevent us from knowing of these creatures. But that just might be that humans haven't survived long enough and are too insignificant to warrant attention. Whenever I speak of godliness - and I do frequently - I do not mean all-encompassing, all-knowing beings that are aware of everything in the universe I simply mean beings that are immortal and are capable of doing anything physical that the laws of nature will allow. Personally, I think that such creatures eventually choose to die, after all once all individuals in a species knows everything knowable - what is the point.

If humans had not developed and bears had, would not they now eat us.

B: Another bizarre remark....

Why. My point was that if humans were not evolving then in time some other creature would evolve and would dominate the non-evolving humans. It is pointless to criticise humans because they dominate. It is however, not pointless to criticise humans because they destroy other life, as other life forms may be of use to us at some stage. We already learn so much about ourselves through them.

You seem to be saying that creatures as they are, will always roughly be the form of creature they are now, but clearly if you believe in evolution that is not the case.

Jim: Where are the creatures from 100 million years ago? I hope you like sharks, crocodiles and cockroaches.

Birdy: Well, they are here...

They are here yes, but they have no self-protection from us, from mutating bacteria, from meteorites crashing into the earth, unusual changes in temperature. While we don't have much control either we have started on that path. If you truly felt for other species then you would see the truth in the QRS wisdom, as only wisdom can protect us from ourselves.

We are too smart for our own good.

and

Naturyl: Laziness, greed, and indifference tempt us to ignore the problem until it goes away, but we are seeing increasing amounts of evidence that it won't. The time for procrastination is quite clearly at an end, and we need to do something significant about this environmental situation immediately.

Precisely what the QRS are trying to do. For every scientist that works for those aims - 10 more are working against it, along with 100,000 consumers.

Edited by: jimhaz at: 1/27/04 9:58 pm

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1346
(1/28/04 12:36 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Well I disagree. All human endeavour is about bending nature to our will - ...I'm also not certain that there are bounds which cannot be crossed, evolution certainly doesn't believe so, we certainly don't believe so or we wouldn't have machinery on Mars, we wouldn't believe in god, we wouldn't believe in timelessness.

---

I am talking here about deciding that we are separate from, above, and outside of nature, and exploiting it in ways that are ultimately destructive. Much of human endeavor is not at all about bending nature to our will, and much of it is - and this is the source of our despair about our future demise. It is sad to see the language that you and other deluded males have used in this context - all very violent, unloving and cruel metaphors for nature in which "she" is always described as being "used" "controlled" "bent"

"forced" and other rather rapacious terms.

I agree with you about becoming immortal gods and goddesses, although that will give us even more responsibility to use our powers wisely, within and in cooperation with nature.

Quote:

---

It is however, not pointless to criticise humans because they destroy other life, as other life forms may be of use to us at some stage.

---

This is the sort of thinking that is leading to our current danger. The life forms are not existent only for our use.

Quote:

---

You seem to be saying that creatures as they are, will always roughly be the form of creature they are now, but clearly if you believe in evolution that is not the case.

---

I'm not sure where I said that, but you must have noticed by now that I am skeptical of evolution theory. I do indeed think that the startup of new species is something we have no clue about, and that species are slowly evolving micro-evolutionarily to become ever more refined and perfect (more conscious?) versions of themselves.

Quote:

---

They are here yes, but they have no self-protection from us, from mutating bacteria, from meteorites crashing into the earth, unusual changes in temperature. While we don't have much control either we have started on that path. If you truly felt for other species then you would see the truth in the QRS wisdom, as only wisdom can protect us from ourselves.

---

Good point, but let us just say wisdom, not QRS wisdom. They think they are different, but I rather think of their wisdom as being somewhat like the medical wisdom that slowly bled President George Washington to death. One more dose of what they have got and we could be finished off. They are not new, they are old, not ancient by any means, but just more of the same old unconsciousness that got us into this mess in the first place.

And yes, the other species should not be in a position to fear us, rather, we should be the protectors and nurturers and enjoyers of the whole planet, if our godlike capacities allow us to do so.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 788
(1/28/04 1:08 pm)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Anna: I do indeed think that the startup of new species is something we have no clue about...

You don't think that adaptation (mutation, recombination, and selection being played out in evolutionary time) does account for it? Ah, but let me read Mr. Wells' book first, so I can understand your doubts.

Anna: And yes, the other species should not be in a position to fear us, rather, we should be the protectors and nurturers and enjoyers of the whole planet, if our godlike capacities allow us to do so.

That would be a new role for us. The faster we adopt it, the better.

Thomas

Edited by: Thomas Knierim at: 1/28/04 1:10 pm

Naturyl
Registered User
Posts: 146
(1/28/04 1:47 pm)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Good point, but let us just say wisdom, not QRS wisdom. They think they are different, but I rather think of their wisdom as being somewhat like the medical wisdom that slowly bled President George Washington to death. One more dose of what they have got and we could be finished off. They are not new, they are old, not ancient by any means, but just more of the same old unconsciousness that got us into this mess in the first place.

---

Agreed. The authentic wisdom is found at the source. Science and even philosophy often favor modernity, but I think that spiritual insight becomes

|                                                                                                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                     | more pure the closer one gets to its origins. We could do a lot worse than to skip the middleman and go all the way back to the ancients who ushered in the dawn of wisdom - the prehistoric pantheists and the pre-Buddhist Eastern thinkers. There is truth in the fable of the Fall.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 492(1/28/04 1:57 pm)Reply                                                                                    | Re: --- <hr/> Agreed. The authentic wisdom is found at the source. Science and even philosophy often favor modernity, but I think that spiritual insight becomes more pure the closer one gets to its origins. We could do a lot worse than to skip the middleman and go all the way back to the ancients who ushered in the dawn of wisdom - the prehistoric pantheists and the pre-Buddhist Eastern thinkers. There is truth in the fable of the Fall. That is because too much religious garbage has been added to wisdom in the meantime. At least the QRS are prepared to remove this garbage from their philosophy.                                                                                                                           |
| Naturyl Registered UserPosts: 148(1/28/04 2:06 pm)Reply | Re: --- <hr/> But do they not add their own?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 493(1/28/04 2:18 pm)Reply                                                                                    | Re: --- <hr/> No-one is perfect, but at least they express it in a manner which is readily understood, if one is open enough to understand it. I find most old texts are open to far too many interpretations, and where there is a consistent interpretation it is more like religious fever dominating the way people think. I sense it can often be more about mob acceptance of thought, than what the author necessarily meant. You can't ask the author what they meant so why bother investing too much time in it. It matters little to me that my opinions will be dismissed due to my lack of study. I care little about being right or wrong on technical issues as I think true creative thought can be a mixture of trial and error. |

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2146

(1/28/04 3:14 pm)

Reply

Re: ---

Naturyl wrote:

Quote:

---

The authentic wisdom is found at the source. Science and even philosophy often favor modernity, but I think that spiritual insight becomes more pure the closer one gets to its origins. We could do a lot worse than to skip the middleman and go all the way back to the ancients who ushered in the dawn of wisdom - the prehistoric pantheists and the pre-Buddhist Eastern thinkers. There is truth in the fable of the Fall.

---

Better yet, we should go directly to the Source inside our own mind and become a great sage in our own right. That is the only way to cut out all the middlemen.

This business of looking for spiritual insight at its origins is pure folly, a waste of time, a distraction - which explains why you are in favour of it.

Quote:

---

Bird: If we want to be civilized (we have not achieved that) we must have a civilization that is focused on the refinement of how to live life well and in balance with nature, rather than on conquering and exploiting absolutely everything (including women of course).

Naturyl: Agreed. Philosophical Taoism envisions such a civilization.

---

Given your behaviour on this forum, I can only conclude that you haven't yet put your "Philosophical Taoism" into practice.

Naturyl
Registered User
Posts: 149
(1/29/04 11:26 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

You don't have a clue.

Lbartoli
Registered User
Posts: 340
(1/29/04 9:48 pm)
Reply

Reply Re: Pantheism

---

krussell2004 wrote:

Quote:DQ:

-----
but it's still a long way short of true wisdom.
-----

A long way short? I'm not sure why, but I like the unification of opposites in that statement.

LB: Why a long way?...

jj van der Leeuw:

We must not make the mistake of looking upon the Absolute as one step higher than the Deity of a universe; it is not as if there were first humanity, then superhuman beings and those who govern our human evolution, then the Deity of our universe and then-if we ascend still very much higher the Absolute. When the Hindu speaks of the God of this universe as Brahma and of the Absolute as Parabrahman we should misunderstand his meaning if we thought of Parabrahman as a magnification and glorification of Brahma. In some ways the Absolute is infinitely nearer to us than the Deity of a universe, in another way It is infinitely greater. Yet to say that It is greater would denote a greater measure of the same Being or reality and It is not such. It is of such a nature that It cannot even be compared to the greatest Being in the world of the relative, there is nothing to which It can ever be compared.

Sometimes we hear people say, 'I do not attempt to understand the Absolute; even the Deity of a universe is far beyond my understanding, and how can I hope to know anything of the Absolute which is still greater.' Such an attitude, in a seeming humility, yet shows misunderstanding and misconception. If the Deity of our universe is seen along an ever ascending line of ever increasing greatness and perfection, the attitude spoken of implies that, if we ascend that line still further and mount still higher, we may some day reach the Absolute, which is absurd. In the world of the relative truly there is always greatness beyond greatness, and when we have reached the greatest, noblest we know or dimly apprehend, yet wider vistas open up before us and we see a greatness undreamt of at our previous level of understanding. But not of such is the Absolute. It is not great; to call It great would be misunderstanding the reality of the Absolute. How can we call anything great when there is nothing else to compare to it in size or in fullness of manifestation; there is no comparison where there is only the One; there is no greatness and there is no smallness. We do not reach the Absolute by ascending or hoping to ascend some day beyond even the greatest Being whom we can now dimly see on our spiritual horizon; the way to the Absolute is not along that ever ascending line of greater and greater, of more and more, of nobler and nobler; we can reach the Absolute at the very point where we are now, just as much or just as little as we can reach It when we are the greatest Being in the world of relativity. It is rather as if, instead of continuing the endless process of ever ascending greatness, of ever increasing perfection we went by a different dimension altogether and disappeared out of the realm of change and growth and evolution into that of changeless and ever abiding Being, Nirvana.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1362
(1/31/04 12:26 pm)
Reply

Re: Reply Re: Pantheism

---

At any rate, Leo, I like your Van der Leeuw.

Lbartoli
Registered User
Posts: 354
(1/31/04 3:46 pm)
Reply

VDL

---

Yes, the man had a way with words. He was very skilled at expressing truth without irritating or offending the listener/student. Even women like him, you're not the first im aware of, which is amazing since they are rarely very strong in the manner he believed was necessary for a truly spiritual life.

He appreciated women for what they were fashioned for by God, and i dont think he had any other expectation of them.

He once wrote: "It is not the man without passion or desire who can ever become greatly creative, nor the man who allows his desires and passions to control him, but he who having a strong passion nature is able to draw the quintessence from the baser metals, that is to say, liberate the creative energy from its lower entanglements and lead it upward so that it becomes the creative power of the spirit. A forceful nature can be greatly bad, but at least it offers the possibility of becoming greatly good, but a nature without force is too weak and insignificant to be either bad or good."

This brings to mind.... once I recall Kevin Solway using the word "Amoral" to describe the feminine types. And that's why we like them so much, those of us with controlling inclinations. And why women make superb assistants, something recognized as far back as Revelation.

Leo

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1365
(1/31/04 4:08 pm)
Reply

Re: VDL

---

Quote:

---

Even women like him, you're not the first im aware of, which is amazing since they are rarely very strong in the manner he believed was necessary for a truly spiritual life.

---

Perhaps women like him because he has good ideas, Leo.

Quote:

---

He appreciated women for what they were fashioned for by God,

---

You mean like... in Genesis?

Why don't you post some stuff he writes about women?

Quote:

---

once I recall Kevin Solway using the word "Amoral" to describe the feminine types. And that's why we like them so much, those of us with controlling inclinations. And why women make superb assistants, something recognized as far back as Revelation.

---

Does he mean feminine types of women or feminine men? Apparently you mean women. At any rate, a person who wants to control others will find the one they can control. You will see such pairs, but it does not mean all women would fall under the spell. As to women making great assistants - that does not really ring a bell. Men are so much more obedient and less questioning. It's really elementary, my dear Watson.

Revelation? The Book of Revelation, or the "Revelation" of the Bible, i.e., Genesis?

Leo, why don't you buy a computer?

Lbartoli
Registered User
Posts: 356
(1/31/04 4:43 pm)
Reply

VDL

---

birdofhermes wrote:

Quote:LB:

-----
Even women like him, you're not the first im aware of, which is amazing since they are rarely very strong in the manner he believed was necessary for a truly spiritual life.
-----

Perhaps women like him because he has good ideas, Leo.

Quote:

-----
He appreciated women for what they were fashioned for by God,
-----

You mean like... in Genesis?

Why don't you post some stuff he writes about women?

LB: I think i did, just a while ago. Here on the forum, but i have no idea how to locate it to bring it up again. Maybe Dan can get it, or tell me how. I dont recall what thread i posted it on.

Quote:

-----
once I recall Kevin Solway using the word "Amoral" to describe the feminine types. And that's why we like them so much, those of us with controlling inclinations. And why women make superb assistants, something recognized as far back as Revelation.
-----

Does he mean feminine types of women or feminine men?

LB: I think he was talking about women, but sometimes people mean male 'women' too. Depends on the feminine component, not on the plumbing.

At any rate, a person who wants to control others will find the one they can control. You will see such pairs, but it does not mean all women would fall under the spell.

LB: Of course not...

Bird:

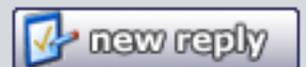

Leo, why don't you buy a computer?

LB: What? and miss out on all these screaming kids here at the cafe!?

(someone pass me an aspirin)

Leo

ps. why dont you get a boy-friend?

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Pantheism

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                                | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| LyrutanRegistered UserPosts: 3(2/1/04 5:02 pm)Reply                                                                                                        | Re: VDL <hr/> David Quinn and Kevin Solway have developed a new version of pantheism, which they term "mantheism." Asked to comment on the essence of their religion, Quinn stated "it's raining men, hallelujah!" Worship rituals reportedly include a ceremony in which adherents, dressed as members of the Village People, give burnt offerings to Otto Weininger. |
|  Ogg OoglebyRegistered UserPosts: 1(2/1/04 8:01 pm)ReplyezSupporter | Re: VDL <hr/> Koan: What is the sound of one sheep in New Zealand?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1374(2/2/04 12:10 pm)Reply                                                                                               | Re: VDL <hr/> Quote: <hr/> ps. why dont you get a boy-friend? <hr/> Well, I have one - are you suggesting I should keep two?                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |

Lyrutan
Registered User
Posts: 5
(2/2/04 1:54 pm)
Reply

Re: VDL

---

Quote:

---

Koan: What is the sound of one sheep in New Zealand?

---

Answer:

"Oh shit, here comes Quinn and Solway again, and they brought the camcorder. Jesus."

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1618
(2/2/04 2:17 pm)
Reply

Re: VDL

---

Well, I have to say I'm really not in the mood for this kind of facile garbage. Either post meaningfully in the spirit of the board's subject matter or leave.

If you wish to engage in your stated hobby of raving inanely, do it somewhere else.

Dan Rowden

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2176
(2/2/04 2:32 pm)
Reply

Re: VDL

---

I agree with Dan. This kind of behaviour is neither civilizing nor edifying, and conflicts with your stated aims of "Philosophical Taoism".

I've seen your tasteless thread on the KIR site, Nat, as well as the petty emotionalism of your forum politicking. I really think you should get your own house in order before worrying about what other people are doing.

"And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam in your thine own eye?" - Jesus

Edited by: DavidQuinn000 at: 2/2/04 2:46 pm

|                                                                                                                                                                            |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 1619(2/2/04 2:51 pm)Reply                                                                                               | clarification <hr/> I just want to clarify that my comment was specifically aimed at Lyrutan. Dan Rowden                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 2178(2/2/04 2:52 pm)Reply         | Re: clarification <hr/> Which just happens to be Natyryl spelt backwards.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 1620(2/2/04 3:07 pm)Reply                                                                                               | Ooops <hr/> Hmm, so it is. Now I don't know whether to be concerned for Nat's mental health or not..... edit Mind you, this person has been a registered user since 2002 so it may not be Nat's alternate persona at all. Who can tell what the hell people get up to on these boards* Dan Rowden Edited by: drowden at: 2/2/04 3:20 pm                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| Thomas KnierimRegistered UserPosts: 805(2/2/04 5:13 pm)Reply  | Re: Ooops <hr/> Lyrutan: David Quinn and Kevin Solway have developed a new version of pantheism, which they term "mantheism." Asked to comment on the essence of their religion, Quinn stated "it's raining men, hallelujah!" Worship rituals reportedly include a ceremony in which adherents, dressed as members of the Village People, give burnt offerings to Otto Weininger. This was so far the most hilarious response in this thread, perhaps in all of the current threads. I vote for keeping it, or better, enshrine it as "Mantheism - the path to enlightainment". I suggest to add the terms mantheist, mantheistic, and the urgently required noun machony (machonic, |

machonism) (suggesting a logically airtight piece of male reasoning), such as in: "that was a good machonic analysis," and before all: enlightainment, meaning a diversion conducive to enlightenment (such as posting to a philosophy board while having beer and peanuts).

Thanks for listening.

Thomas

Naturyl

Registered User

Posts: 151

(2/2/04 6:17 pm)

Reply

Re: Ooops

---

Yep, Lyrutan is me, and whether or not you wish to be concerned for my mental health is not my concern. I have been informed by several sources that what I posted as Lyrutan was in fact rather funny, which was of course the aim of it. It is also instructive to observe how people react to humor, as it reveals a good deal about their personality (or lack thereof).

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2180

(2/2/04 6:18 pm)

Reply

Re: Ooops

---

Thomas wrote:

Quote:

---

This was so far the most hilarious response in this thread, perhaps in all of the current threads.

---

I'm sure no one is surprised that you think this. It is poking fun at Kevin and myself which is bound to score high marks with you. You'd laugh uproariously at anything along these lines, no matter how tasteless or lame it is.

But it is interesting that it attempts to depict Kevin and myself engaging in feminine activities, such as parading ourselves under an "ism", partaking in hysterical singing, dressing up in clownish costumes, and engaging in rituals. In other words, the humour is based on the implicit acknowledgment that feminine activities are inherently silly and worthless, which means that it is "misogynistic" in nature.

Naturyl

Registered User
Posts: 152
(2/2/04 6:19 pm)

Reply

Re: Oops

---

Oh, and by the way, "playfulness" is one of the cornerstones of philosophical Taoism. Just thought you should know.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host
Posts: 2180
(2/2/04 6:22 pm)

Reply

Re: Oops

---

Naturyl wrote:

Quote:

---

Yep, Lyrutan is me, and whether or not you wish to be concerned for my mental health is not my concern. I have been informed by several sources that what I posted as Lyrutan was in fact rather funny, which was of course the aim of it. It is also instructive to observe how people react to humor, as it reveals a good deal about their personality (or lack thereof).

---

Here is some great humour that I'm sure you will enjoy:

Cow Te Ching

Book of Wife

Naturyl

Registered User
Posts: 153
(2/2/04 6:42 pm)

Reply

Re: Oops

---

Yeah, I read those a while back during a visit to Kevin's site. I'll grant that they are rather funny at times. They are a bit mean-spirited, but I suppose that I can't really complain about that after picking on you in the Lyrutan posts. I do appreciate the humor. Kevin's 'Society for the Elimination of All Truth' is also rather funny.

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 537
(2/2/04 6:43 pm)
Reply

Re: Ooops

---

I still reckon you guys do your cause more harm than good promoting stuff like that. People just get too defensive and every action of defensiveness makes the next one stronger.

Your webbook on WOMAN was an excellent piece of work, though, I did get dismissive of the latter sections at the time I read it a year ago.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2181
(2/2/04 7:32 pm)
Reply

Re: Ooops

---

I don't know, Jimhaz. People with limited vision and weak character are always going to get defensive, regardless of what kind of opposition is before them. You can't spend your life pandering to them. They will always look for an excuse to avoid being truthful.

In many ways, I view the QRS commentary upon women as a kind of sieve which separates those who have potential for wisdom and those who don't. The commentary can really only be understood by those who possess a dialectical turn of mind and who love truth more than they do their own happiness.

This doesn't mean that everyone who agrees with me that women are inferior when it comes to higher matters have spiritual potential. For many of these will be mundane, old-fashioned, unreconstructed misogynists. But it does mean that anyone who does get defensive and offended by the commentary has no chance at all of becoming enlightened.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 806
(2/2/04 8:23 pm)
Reply

Re: Ooops

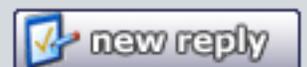

---

David: You'd laugh uproariously at anything along these lines, no matter how tasteless or lame it is.

Well, you got me there. :-D

David: But it is interesting that it attempts to depict Kevin and myself engaging in feminine activities, such as parading ourselves under an "ism", partaking in hysterical singing, dressing up in clownish costumes, and engaging in rituals. In other words, the humour is based on the implicit acknowledgment that feminine activities are inherently silly and worthless, which means that it is "misogynistic" in nature.

|                                                                                                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                       | That's what I would call a "loaded" interpretation. Loaded with assumptions that is. Thomas                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 2181(2/2/04 8:49 pm)Reply    | Re: Ooops <hr/> They're all feminine activities, by definition. They embody unconsciousness, passivity, submission, masochism, emotional bonding, and the destruction of individuality. That is how the humour is generated - by creating a contrast with how Kevin and I actually behave and what we value, and forcing us into that demeaning role. This is why Nietzsche once observed that laughter is an expression of "malice with good conscience". In this particular case, your laughter is generated by a sudden sense of relief that the constraints which Kevin and I impose upon yourself, and upon the forum in general, have been suddenly lifted, at least for a short period of time. |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2169(2/2/04 10:08 pm)Reply  | Re: Ooops <hr/> I impose upon Kevin and David the uncomfortability David whines about above. There are no constraints upon my laughter. I am a more intelligent human being. This sends them both a little mad. Especially since I go about here telling them so. And everyone else too. Not to mention branding them misogynists, and calling them funny names. Thankyou.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM
> GENIUS FORUM
> Pantheism

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                  | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1376(2/3/04 12:01 pm)Reply | Re: Ooops <hr/> Quote: <hr/> But it is interesting that it attempts to depict Kevin and myself engaging in feminine activities, such as parading ourselves under an "ism", partaking in hysterical singing, dressing up in clownish costumes, and engaging in rituals. In other words, the humour is based on the implicit acknowledgment that feminine activities are inherently silly and worthless, which means that it is "misogynistic" in nature. <hr/> This is where your logical construct breaks down. Unconsciousness produces faults in men and women. Yet you ascribe absolutely everything negative to women, and men manage to emerge unscathed from their state of unenlightenment. Those things you label feminine seem rather masculine to me. Men are the inventors and protectors of the various "isms". They love costumes, ritual and pageantry. Look at the Ku Klux Klan, the Freemasons, the Catholic Church. You praise men for creating civilization, but much of that civilization you dislike, and so you label it feminine, despite the fact that it is men who invent them whenever they get together. Quote: <hr/> They're all feminine activities, by definition. They embody | unconsciousness, passivity, submission, masochism, emotional bonding, and the destruction of individuality.

---

The only thing wrong in your list is the word femine. Replace it with masculine, and it's a good sentence. Lets examine the submission of men.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2173

(2/3/04 12:26 pm)

Reply

---

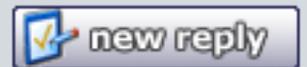

---

It doesn't do well to call those things masculine or feminine since they belong to both, and in such different degrees in the individual that it cannot be determined which sex possesses them the most overall, and it would prove a useless fact anyway were it to be found. Men know what they have, and women know what they have. This question of sex produces confusions of sex. It should be avoided like hermaphroditism is avoided.

I Question everything David and Kevin write on Woman.

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> per "God and Nature's Operating system IS..."?

New Topic

Add Reply

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                               | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| NeoYaleRegistered UserPosts: 1(1/29/04 9:00 pm)Reply | per "God and Nature's Operating system IS..."?<hr/> Folks, your very thoughtful and helpful (to a kindred spirit like me) comments, questions and suggestions per David's most intriguing book encourage me to, hopefully not inappropriately, ask some of you to visit Neo-GNOSIS.org -- and then give me similar feedback.Max pax, YLEdited by: NeoYale at: 1/29/04 9:14 pm |

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Personality

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                              | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| G ShantzRegistered UserPosts: 402(10/8/03 3:14 pm)Reply                                                                                  |  Personality <hr/> What is it? What are it's causes?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 345(10/8/03 5:20 pm)Reply  |  Re: Personality <hr/> Personality is essentially chaos theory in action. Personalities are different because the combination of causes that result in the physical construction of the brain and both the quantity and type of different experiences at different times result in different ways of reacting to external stimuli. The main thing that keeps most personalities in check or within normal boundaries is the concept of survival of the fittest. We are born into a herd and thus become the herd -as the herd directs our development. This also means that for the most part we are not unique in any significant way. To me the most important - and so far not satisfactorily explained - cause that makes a personality end up being 'abnormal' are unusual hormonal or other chemical imbalances as the fetus forms. Instead of starting life with the normal human brain growth 'fractal', they start with some other combination – giving markedly different results. At the more extreme levels we readily see this as birth defects or brain damage, but there is no reason to think chemical imbalances of a lesser degree are any less |

|                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                        | influential – its just they affect the personality in different ways. As they say, show me the child by the time they are 7 and I'll show you the adult. Of course a persons experiences can also make one's personality different, but there is a high probability, other things being equal (including chemical balances during formation), that two persons who have exactly the same experiences would end up with very similar personalities. In a way what I've said above means that our personality is not ours - it is undoubtably caused. When people talk of 'soul' they are really referring to personality as that is all others can sense. If personality is caused then this is evidence that souls do not exist. |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 741(10/9/03 8:13 am)Reply          |  Re: Personality <hr/> Your personality is your philosophy combined with your physical make up.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 137(10/9/03 9:20 am)Reply         |  Re: Personality <hr/> There are a lot of people without any philosophy. Don't they have a 'personality'?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 339(10/9/03 10:08 am)Reply     |  Re: Personality <hr/> Del is pretty right. Everyone who is someone has a philosophy about things.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1197(10/9/03 1:13 pm)Reply |  Re: Personality <hr/> Greg wrote, Quote: _____ What is it? _____ Charm driven by ego?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |

Quote:

---

What are it's causes?

---

In the beginning, this led to that, and that led to this. Now we have what we have here. Or something similar.

Tharan

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 347
(10/9/03 5:21 pm)
Reply

Re: Personality

---

One's philosophy is just a segment of one's personality.
It is simply an effect rather than a cause.

Does your philosophy often change depending on what mood you are in.
Mine does.

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 140
(10/9/03 5:57 pm)
Reply

To voce io

---

Yes, 'pretty right' as in pretty pregnant.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 742
(10/9/03 6:11 pm)
Reply

Re: Personality

---

Quote:

---

jimhaz

Does your philosophy often change depending on what mood you are in. Mine does.

---

There's the oscillation, the tension, the spin once again.
The body like logic is short sighted and subject to mood swings. Like the fermion it cannot pass through therefore it bumps along. The spirit like

|                                                                                                                                                                           |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                           | faith is consistent and transcends all circumstances. Like a boson passing through.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 341(10/9/03 9:26 pm)Reply                                                                                         |  To Paul... <hr/> Haha, nice. Pretty pregnant implies someone can come about and contradict your pregnancy with an abortion. I said "pretty" to save my little mind baby from being aborted.                                                           |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1552(10/10/03 12:47 am)Reply                                                                                      |  --- <hr/> DEL, I have been having trouble deciding whether to ask, but are you a boson passing through?                                                                                                                                               |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 743(10/10/03 8:53 am)Reply                                                                                            |  ----- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> suergazDEL, I have been having trouble deciding whether to ask, but are you a boson passing through? <hr/> If I achieved Boson status my body would be consumed. Perhaps from internal combustion. |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 634(10/12/03 12:40 am)Reply  |  Re: ----- <hr/> The causes of personality could be described as genetics + experiential history, simply.                                                                                                                                            |

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 642

(10/13/03 7:30 am)

Reply

Re: -----

---

The personality could be described as a gestalt electric orchestra - a symphony of forces; ordinarily played on instruments of particularly well worn neural pathways and re-inforced synaptic bridges, conducted by the higher reasoning located in the frontal lobes. The conductor's skill, understanding and control is the important conscious part, the quality of instrumentalists being the important unconscious part. Each personality is blessed with principle musicians of great skill, and rank and file musicians who can do a job. The conductor also has to be a skilled animal handler as there are primitive creatures roaming through the orchestra which would cause havoc otherwise. Of course the conductor is able to refine their instruments and train their musicians, and if they so wish, create a world class emsemble capable of great dynamic and harmony. The orchestra can be conducted to play not only many different interpretations, but many different styles of music. Some styles allow more animals roaming in the orchestra, others less.

It's causes are the same as everything else, causality.

The musical score, and most especially, the interpretation.

Edited by: Dave Toast at: 10/13/03 11:00 am

WolfsonJakk

Registered User

Posts: 1205

(10/13/03 9:23 am)

Reply

Re: -----

---

Toast crumbled,

Quote:

---

gestalt electric orchestra

---

Dave let's start a rock band. That is a great name.

Tharan

*edit*

HTML infraction, 10 yard penalty.

Edited by: WolfsonJakk at: 10/13/03 9:24 am

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 645
(10/13/03 10:54 am)
Reply

Re: -----

---

LOL.

G.E.O. Egowaggon.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 646
(10/13/03 11:30 am)
Reply

Re: -----

---

Genetics play a far bigger part in personality than we might think. Not just in the unconscious instinct department, but in other characteristics one might not imagine or believe.

Whether one is an introvert or an extrovert, for example, is reckoned to be primarily a matter of inheritance. Of course one can physically alter one's brain by thought alone and therefore alter such parameters, but it's easier for some than others, perhaps even impossible for some few.

Introversion and extroversion is apparently related to how the brain handles stimulation. Introverts, being more sensitive in this area of the brain, react more than extroverts, less sensitive in this part of the brain.

This can be tested by measuring reactions to other types of stimulation, the 'stimulation-reaction area of the brain' stimulation from social situations being no different to the 'stimulation-reaction area of the brain' stimulation from a taste or smell, etc.

It turns out that when self-confessed extroverts and introverts are tested against each other for uncontrollable reaction to other types of stimulation, the introverts react more and the extroverts react less. For example, introverts will, on average, produce approximately one and a half times the amount of saliva that the extroverts produce, when both have their taste buds stimulated by exactly the same amount of the same thing.

So too the introverts react strongly to social stimulation and tend to withdraw, whilst the extroverts will have a milder reaction to social stimulation and will be comfortable with, and so want, more and more.

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Philosophy and Prison

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                              | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 602(2/17/04 11:42 am)Reply   | Philosophy and Prison <hr/> I've been getting the impression that folks in jail might benefit from being taught philosophy. Although it would be difficult to get into the minds of these people, and many are quite simple, I think most are in jail because of the conflict of masculinity and emotions. A selective program of philosophy and things like tapes being played over speaker systems at night and so on, could be most beneficial. Selecting the material would be difficult, as there is a danger in simple minded folk dwelling in their minds - a poorly structured program or one that was too deep could easily lead to irrational and worse behaviour than before. It seems to me that the Muslim brotherhood uses jail for this very purpose - they have a captive audience. Have you heard of jails conducting such programs?Any opinions of the merits or otherwise? |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2304(2/17/04 12:01 pm)Reply | --- <hr/> Tapes over speaker systems sounds like torture.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 962
(2/17/04 12:10 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Mandala isolation cells?
Yin-yang slop buckets?

Edited by: Dave Toast at: 2/17/04 12:11 pm

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 1012
(2/17/04 1:02 pm)
Reply

Philosophy and Prison

---

Quote:

---

jimhaz

I've been getting the impression that folks in jail might benefit from being taught philosophy.

---

There are less women in prison because they are the personification of the prison system.

The man is continually sucked back into the womb as a result of his weakness and ignorance of the true philosophy. He does not deserve to be born.

The money systems, educational systems, legal systems, language systems are all super feminine structures. Structures that have taken the natural tension between the feminine and the masculine outside the human body to the point where they are an entity in themselves. The super woman and the super man have been created. They can see you but you can't see them.

avidaloca
Registered User
Posts: 149
(2/17/04 9:43 pm)
Reply

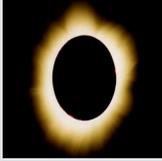

Re: Philosophy and Prison

---

Language systems today are much more feminine than say 100 years ago, especially German. Even the two world wars last century were only major clashes between masculine and feminine systems.

Edited by: avidaloca at: 2/17/04 10:03 pm

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2308
(2/17/04 9:44 pm)
Reply

Re: Philosophy and Prison

---

Dostoyevskys 'House of the dead' is a great example of how 'society' is reflected in the prison system.

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 351
(2/17/04 11:06 pm)
Reply

Re: Philosophy and Prison

---

Teaching dangerous criminals to "think for yourself", and "do your own thing", and "be the fish swimming upstream" might be a bit problematic if the authorities hear about it.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 964
(2/18/04 11:52 am)
Reply

Re: Philosophy and Prison

---

Zen garden style exercise yards? (No rakes)

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 605
(2/18/04 12:03 pm)
Reply

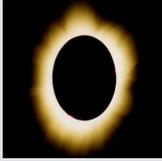

Re: Philosophy and Prison

---

Yes, as DEL seems to be indicating public Institutions are the outcome of feminine control - thats why they are so inefficient :) - mind you I would prefer we have prisons and hospitals etc than not have then.

I just get annoyed with philosophy at times, because it can often be simply yap yap sessions without any noticable practical applications apart from entertaining one's mind.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2312
(2/18/04 10:54 pm)
Reply

Re: Philosophy and Prison

---

If entertaining oneself is not noticable practical application, I must be, uh, severely distended from my er governing body.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 969
(2/20/04 9:26 am)
Reply

Re: Philosophy and Prison

---

Koans on the shower room floor?

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2324
(2/20/04 12:41 pm)
Reply

----

---

The bible in solitary confinement.

Now shut up.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 970
(2/20/04 9:33 pm)
Reply

Re: ----

---

That would be down at the solitary 'meditation chamber' block.

|                                                                                                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| avidalocaRegistered UserPosts: 150(2/20/04 10:23 pm)Reply  | Re: ---- <hr/> The sound of one celldoor slamming?                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2334(2/20/04 10:54 pm)Reply                                                                                   | --- <hr/> Criminals are always men whose deeds outweigh the words for them, though not the other way around. This is why men whose deeds outweigh the words for them see clearly into crime/punishment. Men who dare to be islands unto themselves-- |

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Philosophy's Purpose

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                          | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 592(2/7/04 1:17 pm)Reply | Philosophy's Purpose <hr/> Below are two posts I've copied from Thomas's site, which I think are worthy of discussion here. I like this chappie's way of thinking, except I partly disagree with the sentence in green (as he suggests some people will). To me the most basic impulse is survival, and what he said follows on from that. My question is do the QRS fall down a bit in relation to the bolded section of the second post below?. <hr/> stillmind: ...its final purpose was to help Humanity at large to become a less suffering entity. What else should we really use knowledge for? DavidS"Hello stillmind, interesting issue you present for thought and thought-sharing. It strikes me, by pop-window-coming up on my mind-screen , that philosophy is a catch-all word referencing a broad category of thangs. There are many quite different philosophies, as well as innumerable (probably as many as there are people) admixtures of them. Though they all fall into the same label-category, these have widely differing purposes, IMO. Methinks some of them are mainly designed to destroy others, even. The question of the purpose of philosophy is thus overbroad and quite unlikely to lead to an |

answer which is meaningfully agreed upon, IMO.

Even pertaining to any particular philosophy, its purpose doesn't just depend on its designer(s). Its user(s) has(have) the final say in this regard, I think. Like any tool or device or art-form, I suppose. Even something as simple as a hammer, which one might reasonably deduce was designed for things like nailing things together and (the other end) for pulling out nails, may be utilized for the purpose of murdering someone, for instance, and therefore could be seen and said to have that as its purpose. Methinks the disagreement, such as it was/is, between you and your friend (though, as has been pointed out, your answers are not really mutually exclusive) reflect differences in your respective values or value hierarchies more than anything else. The question-answer exercise mainly serves as a Rorschach Test kind of revelation, IMO.

As an addendum, let me share some of my values pertaining to what I think the highest purpose of Life is, thus revealing what the purpose of things like philosophy are to me.

The way I presently see and feel about things goes something like this: Life (a/k/a Love) is Creativity and Creativity is causal purpose in action. Lifes most basic, inherent impulse is to actualize and experience joyful vitality in loving communion with other aspects of Being.

Thus, any particular philosophy which is not designed and/or used to serve such purpose is not worthy of being designated and considered a source of or means to wisdom in my personal, subjective-value derived opinion.

This doesn't mean that my truth in this regard will be seen as and considered to be right in any way by someone else. But framing one's knowledge and judgments in this sort of way precludes vain and futile arguments about what the truth about some matter really is. I fully understand and respect the fact that you and your friend presently think about and value philosophy in terms of its usefulness for helping humanity to suffer less and (detachedly?) finding truth, respectively. Each of our truths is right for the one embracing it.

IMO, It's all a function of subjective desire and appreciation. There is no need to argue about and/or decide which, if any of us, is right or more right about the matter at hand. There is also no need to assert or imply that others are wrong in terms of what they value because of what makes sense to them - except if they assert or imply that someone else is wrong in such regards (as Asheera, for instance, often does here) of course. In my view, which I submit for your and others' scrutiny and consideration, such kinds of activity are anti-Life (i.e., sinful) in that they serve purposes which are contrary to the actualization and experience of joyful vitality in loving communion with other aspects of Being, which happens to be my personal pet sacred cow at present.

Heres to glorious love-making and cross-fertilization via verbally (or otherwise) communicated subjective meaning-and-value sharing!

If you feel like answering this question, still mind, let me ask you if, and if so, why you think of helping humanity in terms of helping it become a less suffering entity instead of a more joyful one. Same idea in different dress, I suppose. But in the one Hypnotherapy Seminar I attended, the presenter emphasized the importance of framing suggestions in positive terms. He said that the subconscious mind was very literally oriented, to the point of not registering no -- thus, he taught, if you wanted to help a person to not feel pain, for instance, it was advisable that one couch ones communications in terms like, "You will feel completely comfortable," etc. To articulate something like "You will feel less (or no) pain," he said, would only serve to focus the persons ruling subconscious on the pain s/he was feeling, thereby accentuating it and helping it be experienced more intensely! I hope you can see the point of my question."

---

DavidS

how can "nature's equilibrium is achieved" when cannot notequilibrium?

The term equilibrium implies a stable dynamic state where all ongoing processes completely balance one another such that there is no overall change of the systems state.

There are also processes in nature which (on balance) result in progressive change of the systems state in this or that energy-manifestation direction.

Nature really operates/flows in stages -- each stage-state remaining in equilibrium for a duration of time, in the course of which a new state may be said to gestate and, ultimately, be born in a new stage-state manifestation which one might say has a new or different equilibrium-stage setting -- like when and as ice turns into water and water turns into steam, each such state having its own equilibrium-characteristics.

Yes, it is possible to see such transitional changes as all being part of a greater (more overall) equilibrium, asheera, but such model totally hides the fact that there are both stable steady-states and unstable change-inclined states within the overall system, where sequentially-developing "Life" (movement, interaction, growth, evolution, etc.) relationally takes time-n-place in Reality.

In this regard, my opinion is that it is best (i.e., most creatively life-art functional), to acknowledge both such levels of truth (a different level being illustrated by each such model).

But Im sure theres always be those who prefer just hopping about on one model-view foot because they see the other foot as being inherently defective in some important way, instead of what makes the most sense to me, which is to learn and choose to walk on both feet, integrating knowledge in a way that is custom-suited to whatever terrain is being navigated at any given space-n-time moment-point.

With such I would still argue that both model-feet are good (i.e., creatively useful) tools. Everything depends on the adeptitude of the ones using them, such adeptitude, of course, necessarily also referring to the capacity to recognize when and where its best (in terms of possible results) to use which of them.

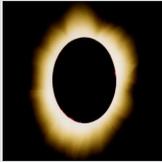

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2243

(2/7/04 10:33 pm)

Reply

Re: Philosophy's Purpose

---

I'm sick of everyone grouping them (Quinn Rowden Solway)together as 'QRS' just because they're friends, when they are so clearly different from eachother. Kevin is the bald one, David the fat one, and Dan is the sentimental one who presses flowers and ogles barmaids in beery boldness of bearing.

WolfsonJakk

Registered User

Posts: 1448

(2/8/04 2:55 am)

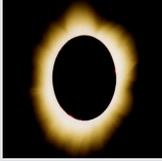

Reply

Re: Philosophy's Purpose

---

Yet they all are bearded, you clean-shaven automaton!

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2249
(2/8/04 12:12 pm)
Reply

Re: Philosophy's Purpose

---

How'd you know Wolf?! I have just lopped off every bit of hair on my head!

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 264
(2/8/04 12:52 pm)
Reply

Re: Philosophy's Purpose

---

I don't suppose you're becoming a monk...?

Rhett Hamilton

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2252
(2/8/04 12:56 pm)
Reply

Re: Philosophy's Purpose

---

It is to show off my formidable cranium.

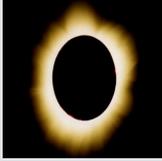

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1451
(2/8/04 1:12 pm)
Reply

Re: Philosophy's Purpose

---

I can tell it shines in the newfound sun. I smell it in your scribblings! Mine too!

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2254
(2/8/04 1:21 pm)
Reply

Re: Philosophy's Purpose

---

My hat off to fruity shampoo. (:D)

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1452
(2/8/04 1:22 pm)
Reply

Re: Philosophy's Purpose

---

Jim asked if The QRS falls down here,

Quote:

---

But Im sure theres always be those who prefer just hopping about on one model-view foot because they see the other foot as being inherently defective in some important way, instead of what makes the most sense to me, which is to learn and choose to walk on both feet, integrating knowledge in a way that is custom-suited to whatever terrain is being navigated at any given space-n-time moment-point.

---

By each foot, he is referring to the Eastern versus Western approach toward discovery of Nature. I would agree that incorporation of both methods can be valuable at times. I personally believe that they ultimately describe the same thing. One offers an additional psychological component by recognizing the viewer more distinctly in it's quest to view.

Tharan

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 593

(2/8/04 2:38 pm)

Reply

Re: Philosophy's Purpose

---

Thanks Tharan,

It isn't clear in my head precisely what he meant.

I looked at in the form of survival of the fittest, and the competing needs of the individual against the needs of the group. In other words, the philosophies of personal happiness versus the philosophies of what is best for mankind.

In comparison to most philosophies, the QRS philosophy concentrates more on what is best for the group, although there is a major overlap in terms of both requiring personal control. The problem is that the QRS philosophy is a discipline that is so demanding that so very few people will ever attain it and those who try and fail may end up delusional, ie they may become misogynists or develop a form of hatred for the stupidity of mankind. So is it actually 'better' for mankind if they assist 1 person to become enlightened against assisting 3 people to become delusional and irrational. Overall are they doing more harm than good?. It seems to me that the very nature of enlightenment makes one powerless, as one no longer wants power.

At the moment I'm willing to ignore the above problem, mainly because nearly all other philosophies are selfish in that they are designed for personal happiness, which is short term in nature and in the end seems to lead to group irrationality. Even Buddhism these days has been hijacked and changed from one of non-attachment to attachment with a only a degree of non-attachment so that it's adherents can still have 'happiness'.

Another reason I don't mind sacrificing a few is that perhaps someday someone will become enlightened or an enlightened person will become a teacher of a brilliant person who can use it within the political domain. Trouble is they'd need to be a political genius and a QRS Genius and they'd need to be able to bring out the truth gradually over many years.

Something needs to balance out at the other end of the philosophy spectrum, by completely removing the natural individual desire for happiness and concentrating totally on non-attachment so that group wisdom can improve. The world desperately needs a much higher level of group wisdom, the long term ramifications of technological power (nuclear, genetics, robotics etc) demands a far, far higher level of wisdom than we presently have.

Edited by: jimhaz at: 2/8/04 2:39 pm

cassiopeiae
Registered User
Posts: 245
(2/9/04 3:12 pm)
Reply

Re: Philosophy's Purpose

---

Quote:

---

jimhaz: Something needs to balance out at the other end of the philosophy spectrum, by completely removing the natural individual desire for happiness and concentrating totally on non-attachment so that group wisdom can improve. The world desperately needs a much higher level of group wisdom, the long term ramifications of technological power (nuclear, genetics, robotics etc) demands a far, far higher level of wisdom than we presently have.

---

Any suggestions? What is it that you believe contributes to the actual drive for happiness? Religion? Self-preservation? Lack of knowledge of the unknown? The only way I see this happening is for the actual truth to be understood, which is asking a lot, especially since one would need the desire for happiness to discover the truth in the first place. This is why I don't think desire, on that level, is a negative quality. It sets the stage for future generations to live in happiness, without wanting happiness. The more truth that is discovered leads to less that needs to be uncovered...

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 594
(2/9/04 10:06 pm)
Reply

Re: Philosophy's Purpose

---

Quote:

-----

jimhaz: Something needs to balance out at the other end of the philosophy spectrum, by completely removing the natural individual desire for happiness and concentrating totally on non-attachment so that group wisdom can improve. The world desperately needs a much higher level of group wisdom, the long term ramifications of technological power (nuclear, genetics, robotics etc) demands a far, far higher level of wisdom than we presently have.

-----

Any suggestions?

No, unfortunately I don't have much of an answer. One thing however that I would like to see are the principles of logical thinking taught in schools in the early formative years. I'd like to see more emphasis on 'thinking' rather than rote learning. I'd also like to see more of the basic level Buddhist principles taught, not Buddhism but just the principles.

What is it that you believe contributes to the actual drive for happiness?

Religion - No

Lack of knowledge of the unknown - No

Self-preservation - Yes

I do however think that everyone knows deep down that when they die their ego goes. They know they will cease so they strive to make themselves as happy as possible. The main cause though is self-preservation, which is reasonable, after all we are still just animals.

It is not necessarily a drive for happiness though, but a drive to not experience unhappiness. After all look at how many folk can cope with spending their lives in completely monotonous jobs and family situations - there is little happiness there, but it passes the time without too great a degree of unhappiness.

I look at the drive for happiness like a cause. People remember when they were unhappy, which could be something as basic as hunger or sickness, the loss of a friend or loved one, boredom (a constant low key suffering) and strive to do things that will stop this from occurring again. The big trouble is that conflicting emotions cloud their reasoning, for example if we take 'sickness' - why is it that 50% of the western population is fat and slothful, when reason clearly shows that this will cause them suffering in the future. The same applies to a loss of love, although it is a mixture of happiness (intimacy, sex etc) and the unhappiness of being single (boredom, loss of opportunities to spread one's seed).

The only way I see this happening is for the actual truth to be understood, which is asking a lot, especially since one would need the desire for happiness to discover the truth in the first place. This is why I don't think desire, on that level, is a negative quality.

The more truth that is discovered leads to less that needs to be uncovered...

Yes, I'd agree with this, the key phrase being 'on that level' ie - in reference for a desire for truth, or more accurately wisdom. As the truth causes a form of happiness by minimising other desires. This is why I don't denigrate the work of scientists, as they search for truth, although it is unfortunate that such processes lead to closed minds. But then only a select few have ever been geniuses of the full spectrum of life.

It sets the stage for future generations to live in happiness, without wanting happiness.

Does it really?

Is that why Western countries have huge government deficits?

Is that why young people now get bored more easily and have problems like ADD? (electronic entertainment is making them unable to cope with even the slightest bit of boredom).

Is that the reason we are destroying the environment and the destroying other forms of life?

Is that why most new developments from scientists - except for medical developments, which is often more just money spinners - are for the most part simply just basic improvements of things used in the now (cars, electronics etc)?

Is that why scientists keep their knowledge mostly secret and companies have patents to protect others using this development?

Is that why sex is used so extensively in advertising, so that most males now think constantly about it?

Is that why so many wars are caused by the desire for everyone to share in whatever religious or materialistic happiness it gives a group?

How do these things make it better for future generations. The drive for emotional happiness doesn't, but the drive for wisdom does.

Edited by: jimhaz at: 2/9/04 10:10 pm

cassiopeiae

Registered User

Posts: 246

(2/9/04 11:30 pm)

Reply

Re: Philosophy's Purpose

---

Quote:

---

jimhaz: ... The drive for emotional happiness doesn't, but the drive for wisdom does.

---

That is exactly what I meant.

Quote:

---

jimhaz: ...One thing however that I would like to see are the principles of logical thinking taught in schools in the early formative years. I'd like to see more emphasis on 'thinking' rather than rote learning. I'd also like to see more of the basic level Buddhist principles taught, not Buddhism but just the principles.

---

I agree, I think too much useless information is crammed into young minds. I say useless, because there is no "application" taught, it is more or less injection to see quick results. I agree that the Buddhist principles would make a difference, but in today's day and age that's asking for a lot, considering Christianity/Catholicism rules everywhere...(in the States, anyway)

Quote:

---

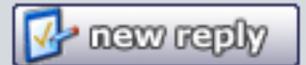

jimhaz: I do however think that everyone knows deep down that when they die their ego goes. They know they will cease so they strive to make themselves as happy as possible. The main cause though is self-preservation, which is reasonable, after all we are still just animals.

---

I am not so sure everyone knows this...There are so many people who whole heartedly believe "heaven is a happy-shiny version of earth". Where they will go and live eternally happy, doing happy things, thinking happy thoughts...etc. It's really humorous and disturbing all at the same time...

I agree that self-preservation is the key, once you lay that down, everything else seems to fall behind it as an effect.

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Philosophy, meaning and the pursuit of happiness

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                          | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| BiggierRegistered UserPosts: 7(12/2/03 3:58 am)Reply | New Post Philosophy, meaning and the pursuit of happiness <hr/> From time to time I bump into folks who let their "philosophy of life" really depress them. They look for meaning that isn't there and rationalizations for all the pain and suffering that is. They don't find it and so "despair". Is this a waste of time? Life is about living it for the most part. And whether or not there is some "ultimate meaning" out there [and not a single philosopher in thousands of years has demonstrated that there is] it certainly does not make the food you enjoy taste less delicious or the sex you share feel less exhilarating or the music you listen to sound less sublime or the love you experience feel less comforting. And you always know that, however unbearable the pain can become, it can't last forever, right? Death is always a viable option when things become too much to cope with. In my view, the best way to endure that which impales us in the course of living our lives from day to day is to embed ourselves as deeply as we can in distractions: family, relationships, hobbies, careers etc. Find something you can feel passionate about and embrace it. Oh, and always be your own best friend. You will hardly ever feel either alone or lonely if you are. Biggie |

|                                                                                                                                                                      |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 1825(12/2/03 1:00 pm)Reply  | New Post Re: Philosophy, meaning and the pursuit of happiness <hr/> Great satire! I think I'll include it in the next edition of Life and Death.                                                                                     |
| 1TheMasterRegistered UserPosts: 184(12/2/03 1:51 pm)Reply                                                                                 | New Post Re: Philosophy, meaning and the pursuit of happiness <hr/> Great Satire indeed. However, he is no doubt sincere in his expression. In two paragraphs he has summed up conventional wisdom. The path most followed, but not the correct one. |
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 309(12/2/03 2:22 pm)Reply                                                                                   | New Post Re: Philosophy, meaning and the pursuit of happiness <hr/> A good sense of humor is hard to find.                                                                                                                                           |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1834(12/2/03 2:41 pm)Reply                                                                                   | New Post --- <hr/> And if it isn't?                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 321(12/2/03 3:12 pm)Reply                                                                                       | New Post Re: --- <hr/> 'And if it isn't?'Then we can all rely on suergaz, the Benign Force.You are! I mean that!                                                                                                                           |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 322(12/2/03 3:25 pm)Reply                                                                                       | New Post Re: Philosophy, meaning and the pursuit of happiness <hr/> Hey, 1TheMaster [lol], it could be 'the correct one'.Don't be so sure.                                                                                                      |

|                                                                                                                                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1838(12/2/03 4:06 pm)Reply                                                                                                                      | New Post --- <hr/> Paul has found us out with his excellent humour. Yes I'm benign. But I scare the hell out of people when I pretend to be malignant!                                                                  |
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 1828(12/2/03 6:41 pm)Reply  | New Post Re: --- <hr/> Nietzsche's Mini-Me squealed: Quote: <hr/> Me, me, me, me, me, me! <hr/> Don't you get bored with that tune? |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 324(12/2/03 9:26 pm)Reply                                                                                                                          | New Post Re: --- <hr/> Jiddu Krishnamurti and Michael Jackson were modest in saying:Me are the world. Sorry:We are the world.Maybe philosophy is about the universe? I dunno.                            |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1839(12/2/03 10:50 pm)Reply                                                                                                                     | New Post ---- <hr/> Has David gone insane?! (:D)                                                                                                                                                                        |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1840(12/2/03 10:58 pm)Reply                                                                                                                     | New Post --- <hr/> I think he means ME! You trumped up walrus, you're just wishing I would spill more of myself!                                                                                                        |

|                                                                                                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| BiggierRegistered UserPosts: 8(12/3/03 1:20 am)Reply                                                                                        | New Post Re: Philosophy, meaning and the pursuit of happiness <hr/> David, Let me guess: collegiate wit? Or, perhaps, your first stab at irony? Biggie                                                                  |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1067(12/3/03 4:27 am)Reply                                                                                | New Post minniemouse <hr/> If Suergaz is Nietzsche's mini-me, then Rhett is yours, and should be equally bored!                                                                                                                              |
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 1830(12/3/03 8:40 am)Reply  | New Post Re: minniemouse <hr/> There is no comparison. Rhett is exploring ideas and genuinely trying to understand ultimate reality. He isn't simply preening himself on the coat-tails of a real thinker.                                   |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1841(12/3/03 10:44 am)Reply                                                                                    | New Post ---- <hr/> Poor Rhett! I'm sure reality is enough for him to understand Dave! Odd, I haven't read Nietzsche in some time or written about him since defending Zarathustra in the thread on Nietzsche! Your comments are pedestrian. |

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1069
(12/3/03 10:55 am)
Reply

New Post egotism

Quote:

---

There is no comparison. Rhett is exploring ideas and genuinely trying to understanding ultimate reality. He isn't simply preening himself on the coat-tails of a real thinker.

---

The difference is, that Suergaz is copying Nietzsche, and Rhett is copying QRS.

And of course, Suergaz is stubbornly playing his game, despite many protestations of annoyance by others. That makes him look worse. No, he is not much interested in truth. He's got enough to play with.

Rhett is working hard, I agree, to get to a point of ego satisfaction of a subtle kind, one that fools itself into thinking it is not satisfying itself.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1844
(12/3/03 11:01 am)
Reply

New Post ----

Bird, there is something canine about this post of yours! How could Rhett be copying David or Dan or Kevin, and how could I possibly copy Nietzsche?! The playfulness of truth is more important than any interest in it.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 1834
(12/3/03 11:33 am)
Reply

New Post Re: ----

Playfulness is not a reliable indicator of truthfulness, just as smiling and bowing and wearing robes is not a reliable indicator of saintliness. Deluded egotistical people are perfectly capable of playfulness.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1849
(12/3/03 11:38 am)
Reply

New Post ---

---

Quote:

---

Playfulness is not a reliable indicator of truthfulness, just as smiling and bowing and wearing robes is not a reliable indicator of saintliness.

---

Who said it was? We're talking about the playfulness of truth, not playfulness as an indicator of truth.

Quote:

---

Deluded egotistical people are perfectly capable of playfulness.

---

Thankfully! How else would we humour them..eh Dave?

1TheMaster
Registered User
Posts: 185
(12/4/03 11:48 am)
Reply

New Post Re: Philosophy, meaning and the pursuit of happiness

---

Quote:

---

Hey, 1TheMaster [lol], it could be 'the correct one'.
Don't be so sure.

---

I am sure. You are not, therein lies the difference. Thats why you are here, doubting what you have learnt.

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Philosophy, meaning and the pursuit of happiness

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                          | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 154(12/4/03 1:49 pm)Reply   Edit | New Post Re: Philosophy, meaning and the pursuit of happiness <hr/> David wrote: Great satire! I think I'll include it in the next edition of Life and Death. Just in case you're looking for any more satire to go with it...the other day i saw a new release book called 'Flow'. Yes, it was about how to be happy by 'flowing', and the blurb/introduction was almost word for word as Kevin (i think?) wrote in his piece called Flowie(?) in one of the 'Genius News' (i think). My apologies for not knowing exactly which piece i am referring to, but i hope you get the gist. It was so uncannily similar that i wonder if it may have been appropriated from Kevin, though i can hardly imagine the writer of the book visiting a philosophy forum(!). That the book is considered saleable is not a good sign... Rhett |

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

Genius Forum

Causality • Courage • Rationality • Determination • Logic • Integrity • Thinking • Ideals
Wisdom • Reason • Discipline • Truth • Masculinity • Perfection • Universe

Genius News

David Quinn's Site

The Thinking Man's Minefield

EZB Edit

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Poll: Do you believe in God?

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                                                 | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 301(7/22/03 10:28 pm)Reply  | Poll: Do you believe in God? <hr/> Which of the following gods do you believe in? <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>A. The creator of the universe</li><li>B. The destroyer of the universe</li><li>C. An omnipotent being</li><li>D. An impotent being</li><li>E. The creator and defender of the good</li><li>F. The created and defended by the good</li><li>G. Love</li><li>H. Hate</li><li>I. Everything</li><li>J. Nothing</li><li>K. Undefinable</li><li>L. None of the above</li></ul> |

|                                                                                                                                                                                                  |                                                                                                                                                                     |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1102(7/23/03 0:59)Reply                                                                              | Re: Poll: Do you believe in God? <hr/> God=doG or: How I Learned to Stop Worrying and Recognize That God Can Lick His Own Balls. /woof, my son |
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 302(7/23/03 4:40)Reply  | Re: Poll: Do you believe in God? <hr/> I'll just put you down under L.(ball-licker)                                                                   |
| StreetLampRegistered UserPosts: 65(7/23/03 6:02)Reply                                                                                 | Re: Poll: Do you believe in God? <hr/> A through L.                                                                                                   |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 544(7/23/03 6:56)Reply                                                                                       | Re: Poll: Do you believe in God? <hr/> God is the idea of the "World Soul"                                                                            |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 245(7/23/03 9:01)Reply                                                                                   | ... <hr/> I and J                                                                                                                                     |
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 303(7/23/03 11:58)Reply                                                                                 | Re: Poll: Do you believe in God? <hr/> What's a soul?                                                                                                 |

StreetLamp

Registered User

Posts: 67

(7/23/03 16:30)

Reply

Re: Poll: Do you believe in God?

---

Quote:

---

What's a soul?

---

It could be the source of your question, I suppose. How interesting.

What's a question?

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 282

(7/23/03 18:00)

Reply

Re: Poll: Do you believe in God?

---

The only god is option I and also "I".

God is everything - because what else could god be if it isn't a being. As everything, god can only exist in the here and now because in reality the past and future do not exist. What's gone is gone forever, what is in the future does not yet exist. All that exists is the change and movement of physical properties within "everything", so god really is just the continuous demonstration of past causes, the result of which is also everything that exists now...and now ...and now....and now.

and

God is "I", as we can only sense things we can sense or imagine (imagination being the result of past things sensed), and things sensed create our ego, so this would mean that "god" can only ever be contained within ourselves, as that is the only form of god that can exist to us. There is no concept or existence of "god" external to our senses.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1302

(7/23/03 18:49)

Reply

---

---

Quote:

---

what is in the future does not yet exist

---

Rubbish, what is in the future may well exist, what you meant to say was that the future itself does not yet exist.

You are with Anna who thinks god is everything.

God is nothing at all.

G Shantz

Registered User

Posts: 351

(7/23/03 19:29)

Reply

Time

---

suergaz wrote:

Quote:

---

Rubbish, what is in the future may well exist, what you meant to say was that the future itself does not yet exist.

---

Sure it does, how could we speak of it if it didn't?

Quote:

---

You are with Anna who thinks god is everything.

God is nothing at all.

---

You don't mean emptiness here, do you?

Gregory Shantz

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 283

(7/23/03 20:29)

Reply

Re: Poll: Do you believe in God?

---

Rubbish, what is in the future may well exist, what you meant to say was that the future itself does not yet exist

I don't see the difference. What is in the future does not exist until causes have made it exist, full stop, there is no 'may'. Causes are just perpetual motion.

Actually I don't believe time exists as a 'thing', time is just how we humans interrelate with movement. All movement causes change.

I think energy and temperature are the same - they have no separate properties of their own outside of our minds (whereas particles do). They are just measurements of the sum of movement of individual particles. We tend to think energy is a cause of movement, whereas it is actually just a measurement of movement.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1303

(7/24/03 12:49 am)

Reply

---

---

Greg, the future exists only insofar as it is bound to exist, and so to say the future exists is not the whole truth, which is that it will exist, that it remains that which has not yet come into existence, namely the future!

Jimhaz, the difference you don't see is that certain things in the future exist now, whereas the future does not exist now.

Edited by: suergaz at: 7/24/03 1:12 am

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1304

(7/24/03 1:14)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Do you both really believe in God?!

|                                                                                                                                                                                                      |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| prozak997Registered UserPosts: 7(7/24/03 1:46)Reply                                                                                       | Re: --- <hr/> God is a Jewish illusion. The solution is to Holocaust all kikes and Christians.                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 247(7/24/03 2:38)Reply                                                                                       | ... <hr/> No, that isn't the solution. Why have an entire race of intelligent people? It's much fun to see all of the lemmings running off the cliff...and why does the Truth matter? Why do we need to worry about what other people believe? Maybe you were kidding, prozak...is so, it was a bad joke. |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 549(7/24/03 6:40)Reply                                                                                           | The "World Soul" <hr/> The 'World Soul' is the sum total of the human 'Will to value'.                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 1745(7/24/03 10:55)Reply  | Re: Poll: Do you believe in God? <hr/> God is an empty definition.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
| ynithrixRegistered UserPosts: 169(7/24/03 14:28)Reply                                                                                     | Re: Poll: Do you believe in God? <hr/> "God is an empty definition."Could He also be a defined emptiness? I think F and G are the same thing.From a pantheistic approach, I'd say Everything (ie, Nature), in His warlike mission for perfection.                                               |

Caesarsquitti

Registered User

Posts: 6

(7/24/03 14:43)

Reply

Re: Poll: Do you believe in God?

---

As we discover that truth can lie...when it is part of a greater truth...we may be able to define God in such a manner...

There are two parts to the answer.

God does not exist. God exists.

This is all about dimensions. This definition makes atheists half right. God is.

While there are many possible examples of God in our reality...perhaps the existence of the work of the devil is easier to prove...You c, truth can lie, the newly discovered dimension to truth, that sheds some light on the deception from the Garden of Eden...

The light that deceived the world...Lucifer...the anti-truth...concealed as truth...

prozak666

Registered User

Posts: 173

(8/9/03 5:45)

Reply

Re: Poll: Do you believe in God?

---

If you were a pantheist, why would you use a singular term for something which does not exist in this world to symbolize this world?

God is a Jewish swindle. Ovens await.

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.32
Copyright ©1999-2005 ezboard, Inc.

Genius Forum

Causality • Courage • Rationality • Determination • Logic • Integrity • Thinking • Ideals
Wisdom • Reason • Discipline • Truth • Masculinity • Perfection • Universe

Genius News

David Quinn's Site

The Thinking Man's Minefield

EZB Edit

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Poll: Do you believe in God?

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                  | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 836(8/9/03 8:18)Reply | Re: Poll: Do you believe in God? <hr/> It's too late Prozak. Even if you off all the Jews, you'll still have the problem with the Moslems and Christians. I hope its not a fatal infection. So what sort of metaphysics do you ascribe to? For the record, my take on the question: Since God is all there is, there is no God.          |
| FiramirRegistered UserPosts: 1(8/9/03 8:22)Reply        | God <hr/> It does not matter if you think God exists or not. It only matters if you know God exists. You cannot know the source of a river unless you know what water is, how can you know the source of all things if you dont even know what/who you are. The human soul is the question, once that is answered God is obvious. |

|                                                                                                                                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 503(8/9/03 9:07)Reply    | Re: God <hr/> Which river?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| prozak666Registered UserPosts: 188(8/12/03 0:55)Reply    | Re: God <hr/> Bird: try this site: www.fuckchrist.com Your assessment of "God" is reasonable. I prefer to call it an illogical anthropomorphism and laugh it off however.                                                |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1355(8/12/03 1:25)Reply                                                                                     | Re: God <hr/> How religious of you to call god any one thing on any occasion. And bird's assessment is anything but reasonable. Don't you know nothing?                                                                                                                 |
| prozak666Registered UserPosts: 192(8/12/03 6:22)Reply  | Re: God <hr/> "It does not matter if you think God exists or not. It only matters if you know God exists." Or: onto what you project an anthropomorphism, e.g. birds would probably dream up a giant bird in the sky for their deity, should they ever need one. |

Riseard

Registered User

Posts: 2

(8/18/03 8:41)

Reply

Re: Poll: Do you believe in God?

---

The question 'Do you believe in God?' presupposes that God exists.

It seems like an inappropriate question.

Richard

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 1324

(8/18/03 15:04)

Reply

Re: Poll: Do you believe in God?

---

It only presupposes the existence of God where one's idea of God entails "existence". But that needn't always be so.

Dan Rowden

Riseard

Registered User

Posts: 3

(8/18/03 15:49)

Reply

Re: Poll: Do you believe in God?

---

'It only presupposes the existence of God where one's idea of God entails "existence".' Might that be fallacious?

In practice, those who ask the question usually believe there is a god; to answer 'yes' obviously confirms their view, but to answer 'no', contradicting their view merely confirms their view.

Beyond the playful, unimportant, level of 'I've got an idea! What if 'God' was a...., then we'd have a....', to have an idea of something and to believe in it seems to presuppose its existence at some level or other. For instance, if the term 'God' meant simply 'Truth' to the observer, the observer observes that truth exists, if only psychologically. It seems that to believe in something means to invest that something with some sort of existence.

Richard

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 1325
(8/18/03 16:01)

Reply

Re: Poll: Do you believe in God?

---

Generally I would agree, but not necessarily. For example, if I define God as "the totality of all that is" I can claim that that is "real" but I can't grant it the quality of "existence" as existence denotes relativity and the the totality isn't relative to anything.

i.e. in this case, God "is" but doesn't exist, per se.

Dan Rowden

Riseard

Registered User

Posts: 5
(8/19/03 0:04)

Reply

Do you believe in God?

---

Nor could one claim to have a relationship with 'the totality of all that is'; but I understand that that is part of your point.

But is this not word-play?

To invoke god or God seems in the nature of the matter to be a question of idea. On the other hand, 'the totality of all that is' seems to express a fact, albeit an inconceivable one, in the same way as the word 'universe' does. Is it not absurd then to say that god/God is 'the totality of all that is'.

Accepting that god/God is an idea, relativity can be in-built or not, according to our whim; indeed, the idea could have self-destruction built into it. But in all this, there does remain a relationship--between the idea and its conceiver; and questions of the existence or non-existence of an element within an idea is still part of that idea.

?

Richard

Dragon of Logic

Registered User

Posts: 2
(8/21/03 23:56)

Reply

Re: Poll: Do you believe in God?

---

L.

Beliefs cannot reflect the truth.

|                                                                                                                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1402(8/22/03 14:35)Reply                                                                                      | Re: Poll: Do you believe in God? <hr/> God is not the totality of all there is, God is nothing at all. If you believe in god, stop it, now.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 1352(8/22/03 14:41)Reply           | Re: Poll: Do you believe in God? <hr/> God is the totality of all that is if I say so, dammit! What's "belief" got to do with that? What kind of a fool merely believes in the totality of all that is? Dan Rowden                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 538(8/22/03 21:41)Reply  | Re: Poll: Do you believe in God? <hr/> One to whom belief or disbelief are the only possible options?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| Dragon of LogicRegistered UserPosts: 6(8/22/03 23:04)Reply                                                                                 | Re: Poll: Do you believe in God? <hr/> Dan wrote: ----- God is the totality of all that is if I say so, dammit! ----- Ok. ----- What's "belief" got to do with that? What kind of a fool merely believes in the totality of all that is? ----- Indeed. But it's defining God, as even the totality, that makes me hesitate. It is certainly the only definition that even comes close to the truth, but it still | gives me pause. It is still pushing a definition on the undefinable.

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 1354

(8/22/03 23:20)

Reply

Re: Poll: Do you believe in God?

---

So, are you defining God as that which is undefinable?

Dan Rowden

Dragon of Logic

Registered User

Posts: 7

(8/22/03 23:48)

Reply

Re: Poll: Do you believe in God?

---

Dan wrote:

-----
So, are you defining God as that which is undefinable?
-----

Yes, if we must put it in words that we understand. I realize the contradiction above, but I see no other alternative. Better to say God is undefinable than to say God is the totality, even though "undefinable" is itself a definition.

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 1355

(8/22/03 23:59)

Reply

Re: Poll: Do you believe in God?

---

Why is the Totality more definable than God?

Dan Rowden

Dragon of Logic

Registered User

Posts: 8

(8/23/03 0:20)

Reply

Re: Poll: Do you believe in God?

Maybe I'm pushing the envelope here, but doesn't "Totality" suggest limitation in a subtle form?

It is hard to describe what I mean.

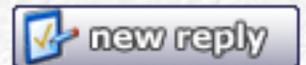

My thinking may be skewed. I do realize that there is nothing that is not part of the Totality.

But it's difficult when thinking about the individual parts that form that totality. The finger cannot be considered the arm, right? So with that in mind, everything in existence cannot be considered the totality, because it leaves out non-existence. But non-existence is nothing that we know, and by it's very nature, will never be known.

I will penetrate this, or die trying. May Buddha push me off a cliff.

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.32
Copyright ©1999-2005 ezboard, Inc.

Genius Forum

Causality • Courage • Rationality • Determination • Logic • Integrity • Thinking • Ideals
Wisdom • Reason • Discipline • Truth • Masculinity • Perfection • Universe

Genius News

David Quinn's Site

The Thinking Man's Minefield

EZB Edit

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Poll: Do you believe in God?

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                                    | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 1359(8/23/03 11:44 am)Reply | Re: Poll: Do you believe in God? <hr/> Totality suggests limitation, sure. But then so does God. God is limited in the sense that it cannot be not-God, just as the Totality is limited in the sense that it cannot be not-Totality.Dan RowdenEdited by: drowden at: 8/23/03 11:45 am |
| Dragon of LogicRegistered UserPosts: 12(8/23/03 14:33)Reply                                                                               | Re: Poll: Do you believe in God? <hr/> Agreed.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 544
(8/25/03 2:01)
Reply

Re: Poll: Do you believe in God?

---

Quote:

---

Dragon: everything in existence cannot be considered the totality, because it leaves out non-existence.

---

Non-existence?

Dragon of Logic
Registered User
Posts: 17
(8/25/03 22:56)
Reply

Re: Poll: Do you believe in God?

---

A better way to say it would be:

Existence and Non-existence compose the Totality.

When neither exist, then the Totality does not exist.

The trouble is, we can only think of "non-existence" from the standpoint of existence, due to its nature of no nature (tongue twister?).

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 552
(8/26/03 11:24)
Reply

Re: Poll: Do you believe in God?

---

Nature of no nature?

|                                                                                                                                                                                               |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| doverreleaseRegistered UserPosts: 2(9/3/03 15:16)Reply                                                                             | Re: Poll: Do you believe in God? <hr/> From the point of view of a former Christian i will say, with ease, that i do not believe of jesus christ....but to say i dont believe in god is whole different statement... If its a personal god you are referring to then there is no such thing.. Prayers cannot move mountains and cast winds or produce rain... god is not concerned with the lives of humans.. What god is is simply the universe. God is the energy that created everything.... it is constant... energy will never be lost... nature will never be lost... to understand god is to understand the laws of nature...in which god made. God is not humanlike in fact what he is is uncomprehensible. |
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 1407(9/3/03 15:29)Reply  | Re: Poll: Do you believe in God? <hr/> Are you alluding to the principle of cause and effect or something else? All things are created and driven by causality, are they not? Welcome to the board, btw. Dan Rowden                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| BryanParrishGlobal UserPosts: 89(8/3/04 5:53)Reply                                                                                 | Re: Poll: Do you believe in God? <hr/> FUCK SHIT PISS BALLS NUTS BANANA                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.32
Copyright ©1999-2005 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Poll on TPG

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                 | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1454(2/10/04 2:01 am)Reply | Poll on TPG <hr/> I encourage everyone interested in the debate on David's claim to enlightenment and Robert Larkin's rebuttal to vote on the outcome. Here is a link to the forum: pub138.ezboard.com/fponderersguildfrm6 For those with access to multiple computers or that have multiple EZBoard accounts, please be fair and only vote once. Tharan                                                                                                                                  |
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 352(2/10/04 6:21 am)Reply     | Re: Poll on TPG <hr/> I am not going to vote on the grounds that it would constitute the admission that the debate was nothing more than a hollow competition of words and a petty popularity contest, and I refuse to attach any amount of importance to that. The debate, at least for me, had far more significance than that. As cheesy as it may sound, I think everybody won the debate due to the fact that no one who read David's posts could have totally escaped being poisoned. I think the competition gave him an edge I've never seen in him before. |

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2272(2/10/04 9:02 am)Reply                                                                                                                                                                    | --- <hr/> You seem to forget I utterly crushed Davids 'Ultimate reality' and completely disregarded the god-fearing Larkins arguments. I have no reason to vote. Voting is for slaves.                                                            |
| Naturyl Registered UserPosts: 165(2/10/04 11:59 am)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> Suergaz, Robert Larkin is an atheist. Mgregory, why is it good to 'poison' people?                                                                                                                                                  |
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1456(2/10/04 12:11 pm)Reply                                                                                                                                                               | Re: --- <hr/> Zag wrote, Quote: <hr/> Voting is for slaves. <hr/> Slaves could never actually vote. And they didn't shave their beards, you conformist slave! :P     |
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1457(2/10/04 12:18 pm)Reply                                                                                                                                                               | Re: --- <hr/> Naturyl, Poison is in the dose. And David is a brainful. Thus the wretching so common. If I were his campaign manager, I would tell him to kiss more babies and save Weininger for the closed-door dealmaking. Tharan |

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2276
(2/10/04 12:37 pm)
Reply

---

---

Quote:

---

Suergaz, Robert Larkin is an atheist.

---

Then Rairun is mistaken. And I for believing him. Unless you are mistaken and rairun is not. I'd ask Robert myself but he has left I think. Anyway, his part in the debate I never read, because it had nothing to do with my showing how david lost very early on.

Quote:

---

Slaves could never actually vote. And they didn't shave their beards, you conformist slave! :P

WolfsonJakk

---

Could?! And since when did this become about hair?! I am the one who said "Shaving is for slaves!"

Naturyl
Registered User
Posts: 167
(2/10/04 12:43 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Fine, Tharan, but you haven't told me why 'poisoning' people is good yet.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2277
(2/10/04 12:46 pm)
Reply

---

---

It's MGregory who is to answer you about that. Tharan doesn't think poisoning is good. And I doubt Matt does either even though he's said as much. He's probably barfing up bits of Davids debate as we write.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 267
(2/10/04 12:47 pm)
Reply

Re: Poll on TPG

Matt wrote:

Quote:

---

I think the competition gave him an edge I've never seen in him before.

---

David was clearly running his own race. He, like always, had to set his own standard, which was a million miles above Roberts.

The beauty of his arguments almost brought me to tears.

Rhett Hamilton

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2278
(2/10/04 12:50 pm)
Reply

----

---

That is something I would love to see. Rhett trying to stem the tears while listening to David debate.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1458
(2/10/04 1:17 pm)
Reply

Re: ----

---

<this message left blank>

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1459
(2/10/04 1:20 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Naturyl wrote,

Quote:

---

...you haven't told me why 'poisoning' people is good yet.

---

Want some cake?

Rairun
Registered User
Posts: 188
(2/10/04 2:50 pm)
Reply

...

---

Quote:

---

Then Rairun is mistaken. And I for believing him. Unless you are mistaken and rairun is not. I'd ask Robert myself but he has left I think. Anyway, his part in the debate I never read, because it had nothing to do with my showing how david lost very early on.

---

Well, he did have the habit of saying things are wrong because they are immoral. Who decides what's moral, if not God?

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 353
(2/10/04 3:57 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Naturyl: Mgregory, why is it good to 'poison' people?

---

Because when they are "poisoned", they think about truth. And when they do that, it seeps in where they are not looking. They look at the structure, but they can't see the substance, so they can't properly defend themselves against it. It's all very apparent.

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 354
(2/10/04 4:00 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Tharan: If I were his campaign manager, I would tell him to kiss more babies and save Weininger for the closed-door dealmaking.

---

What are you talking about? What closed-door dealmaking?

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 355
(2/10/04 4:05 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

suergaz: He's probably barfing up bits of Davids debate as we write.

---

Hmm, I must not have been paying attention to that.

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 356
(2/10/04 4:11 pm)
Reply

Re: ...

---

Quote:

---

Rairun: Who decides what's moral, if not God?

---

Well, you do, I would think. Even if God does have an opinion on what's moral, you would still have to accept it as moral, so it always becomes your decision in the end.

|                                                                                                                                                                |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 1637(2/10/04 4:47 pm)Reply  | Re: ... <hr/> Bebate? Debate on what, exactly? There clearly was no debate. It never got off the ground. Robert quite evidently had no intention of addressing what was supposed to be the subject matter and declared that in his opening remarks. That was "cunning" on his part for which I can offer no intellectual or moral reward. Personally, I think David won the debate because Robert never truly showed up for it. There was something dank in proverbial Denmark from the very start. But,like a=a, some things are self-evident; you just need eyes.... Dan Rowden |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2282(2/10/04 9:33 pm)Reply                                                                             | --- <hr/> Rairun, you are right, forgive me for doubting you. Immorality! The innocence that beckons with open arms! Dans argument that David won because Robert lost is insipid.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2284(2/10/04 9:42 pm)Reply                                                                             | ---- <hr/> I am against this 'poisoning'----People come upon things naturally.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Poll on TPG

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                             | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| silentsalRegistered UserPosts: 50(2/11/04 4:14 am)Reply | Re: ---- <hr/> People only ever take what they can regardless of anyone's intention. What is the sound of one hand clapping? We are in relation to whether we admit it or not. As an individual I cannot help but embody the whole, with this embodiment I cannot help but define myself. As nature I cannot help but embody the universe, as the universe I cannot help but define my nature |
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 363(2/11/04 4:42 am)Reply | Re: ---- <hr/> I agree.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> pop quiz

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                              | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| I AMRegistered UserPosts: 225(1/25/04 12:44 pm)Reply                                                                                     | pop quiz <hr/> Q: Briefly, how would you explain color to someone has only seen in shades of black and white their whole life?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2116(1/25/04 12:56 pm)Reply                                                                                 | --- <hr/> You wouldn't, unless you knew that this someone was not to continue seeing this way.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 460(1/25/04 1:43 pm)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> If they were blind rather than just colour blind, then punch them in the head, throw them in a pool and roll them in grass. They have the ability to develop their other senses to a greater degree, so it evens out. I know that wasn't your point. I think it is a good question. It's like the difference between animals and humans, brain damaged and geniuses, those with well developed god spots and those that haven't, perception of physical things versus reality and those with emotional attachments and those without. Edited by: jimhaz at: 1/25/04 1:47 pm |

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 776
(1/25/04 3:34 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Q: Briefly, how would you explain color to someone has only seen in shades of black and white their whole life?

This thought experiment was proposed by Jackson in view of defining "qualia". It has been discussed extensively by Dennett, Searle, and Chalmers. Just look up the words "Mary color scientist" in any search engine.

Thomas

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 895
(1/25/04 11:24 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

I'd probably try to do it via analogy to qualitative input from another sense, perhaps taste, in conjunction with a spectral model (both continuous [for mixing], and punctuated [for tone]) of black to white. Then map an additional spectral dimension onto the punctuated taste spectrum to represent the addition of various levels of black or white to the distinctive tastes.

It wouldn't be particularly precise and I suppose it is cheating a bit using analogy to another sense, but it would get at least some form of understanding across, one that is conceptually similar. Kind of like using Moh's scale of hardness to describe sound volume to a deaf person.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1435
(1/26/04 5:53 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

One might say, "It is the Absolute Truth that colors exist."
"Bullshit. Prove it." the other said chuckling. "Absolute Truth."
The first one says, "Well I can't prove it empirically, but it is full of such fascinating shades and nuances."
"You are so full of it. Show me evidence and I will believe you. Otherwise, STFU because I am a PhD of B/W."
"Oh, I see. You are more blind than usual."
"Hah, retorts will get you nowhere. You can't prove it and now you are resorting to personal attacks."
"Personal attacks? You took that personally?"
"HaH! See!" he squeals "You did it again! You can't prove your Absolute Truth of colors so you attack me!"
"I don't think I attacked you..."

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           | ...yadda, yadda, yadda... It would probably go something like that. Tharan                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
| Canadian Zoetrope  Registered User Posts: 26 (1/29/04 5:25 pm) Reply  | well... <hr/> I'd say that color is the humans mind's method or percieveing relationships between chemically different object which appear to be similar in all other forms. Depending on the element involved and it's relative consistency, light hits the element, and is reflected to the viewer on a sliding range of wave frequency. Ranging from low frequency, blue, to high frequency, red. Now, on it's own this isn't much an accomplishemt, however when we percieve light, it is only through colours, and their variations that we can judge our personal relationship with the source of the light. Basically, color allows us to define an object's relationship towards the ambient light, and provides a relative stabilization point with which we can adhere our experience of the present light. Allowing us to better manipulate objects within the system, with greater ease. No light = no color. |

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Positive and Negative

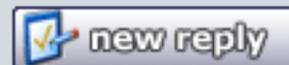

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                               | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 111(3/19/04 4:02 am)Reply                                                                               | Positive and Negative <hr/> Are positive and negative the only known forces in the universe? If not can you tell me what force centers these forces inside the universal box? I don't want to hear good and evil or something lame like light. <math>E=mc^2</math>, I know, but where do these forces come in to balance everything. Edited by: XXX STATIC X at: 3/19/04 4:06 am |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 825(3/19/04 8:06 am)Reply  | Re: Positive and Negative <hr/> Actually, no forces are known. No one knows about the universe, it constantly amazes everyone. Once you think you've got it, it taps you on the shoulder and jabs you in the butt.                                                                                                                                                                             |

|                                                                                                                                                                 |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 1661(3/19/04 11:38 am)Reply  | Re: Positive and Negative <hr/> Positive and negative forces are artifacts of consciousness. I don't know why you believe, Static, that they have some kind of objective existence. Dan Rowden                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 622(3/22/04 1:01 pm)Reply                                                                                | Re: Positive and Negative <hr/> They do objectively exist. They are more than just concepts. Positiveness = fullness relative to emptinessNegativeness = emptiness relative to fullness It does not matter if neither exists in that what we view as fullness is simply all we can sense and emptiness is what we cannot sense - there is still power in the imbalance between the two opposites, whatever they are in reality. The flow from one to the other is what underlines all movement and thus all forces. Regardless of the limitations of our senses, in all that we sense about the universe there are essences of truth. Calling the universe ultimately empty or formless as the QRS and Buddhists do is a faulty interpretation of reality in my book (although I do agree no thing has a permanent existence or form, except imbalance). |

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Power

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                            | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|  DagneyTRegistered UserPosts: 6(11/1/03 11:53 am)ReplyezSupporter | Power <hr/> I was hoping that you great minds out there might be able to give your comments to the following: Your best chance to be happy in this life is to have as much power as you possibly can. This will allow you to have control over your life which is what, inter alia, will make you happy. Power can be broken down into the following three groups: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. Knowledge</li> <li>2. Physical Attributes (physical strength, health, beauty)</li> <li>3. Money</li> </ol> Therefore, to best utilize your time on earth, it would be wise to work on these three areas of power Increasing your knowledge of the world and the way it works (reality, or whatever your view of knowledge is), treating your body as a temple (yes, there's no God, but you get my point)by exercising, eating healthful foods and increasing your physical strenth,doing what you can to make yourself attractive to others (as this may lead to some type of power over that person or situation, ie more attractive people make more money), and of course money-- Money can provide you with freeddom--freedom to not have to work if you |

|                                                                                   |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                   | don't want to (so you can ponder all day long if you wish)to travel, to meet other people, to release you from the daily burdens of life, such as the electric bill. So with knowledge, physical strength/beauty/health, and money, would you not be in a better place to think? |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 375(11/1/03 4:09 pm)Reply | Re: Power <hr/> You wouldn't be in a better place to think, but you'd have power. Good post.                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 211(11/1/03 4:34 pm)Reply    | Quote of the Day <hr/> "your physical strength"                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Prerequisites for Enlightenment

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                  | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| mattfaustRegistered UserPosts: 12(10/23/03 6:34 am)Reply     | Prerequisites for Enlightenment <hr/> Recently, I have been spending almost all of my free time studying and reading with Enlightenment as the end goal in mind. I am halfway through Weiniger's Sex and Character and this book has made me painfully aware of how far I have to go. Actually, I am beginning to wonder whether or not it is even possible for me to become enlightened. Do you think every man has the potential to become enlightened? I am definitely not stupid, but I am far from the descriptions Weiniger gave of the nature of genius. My memory is definitely lacking probably because of several years of self-destructive behavior (drugs and alcohol). However, my thirst and devotion to Truth is only becoming more overpowering. Any input would be appreciated. |
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1224(10/23/03 9:07 am)Reply | --- <hr/> You will never reach enlightenment with Weininger as your guide. Any 24 year-old, suicidal, repressed homosexual is generally limited in his outlook on reality. Just my opinion, of course. Is it because of the references and links to the Thinking Man's Minefield that people continuously come here with this Weininger baggage? If you want enlightenment, go the traditional source to start the journey. You will discover all that Weininger said plus it's broader ramifications stated more succinctly and from multiple sources, and not overly focused                                                                                                                                                                                                     |

|                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                         | on "the feminine." (Bohdidharma, Hakuin, Huang Po, Siddartha, just to name a few.) Tharan                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 348(10/23/03 9:22 am)Reply      | Re: --- <hr/> Sex is the only way to reach enlightenment, stop reading and start fucking. No, really, enlightenment is a waste of your time. You won't find happiness in it, you won't find the truth you expect it to be. Read Weinenger is you want to read Weinenger. That's the only thing you'll accomplish by doing so.                                                                                                                           |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 771(10/23/03 10:28 am)Reply         | ----- <hr/> Sex Majick is the highest and most difficult path of enlightenment.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
| cassiopeiaeRegistered UserPosts: 138(10/23/03 12:02 pm)Reply | Re: ----- <hr/> What is your deal with Magic all of a sudden? Or is it Magick, Magik, Majick, Majik? Anyway, mattfaust, follow your interests and you will find your path. No one can experience the same thing, nor will two people be enriched in the same way be the same study. When you need something, it will be there, when you want something, all you have to do is ask, the answers are always there, you are the only one who can figure them out. |

|                                                                                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|            mattfaust           Registered User           Posts: 13           (10/23/03 1:39 pm)           Reply              |            Re: ----- <hr/>           voce jo,           Happiness is the last thing on my mind. I cannot imagine placing happiness before Truth and Wisdom. I also cannot imagine not having sex for whatever reason. But, I make it a top priority not to fall in love, because I readily see how stupid and delusional it makes people. Two of my best friends fell in love, and they quickly became two of the most stupid people I have ever known.           everyone else,           Thanks for the insightful advice. However, no one has yet to answer my question: does every man have the potential to become enlightened?          |
|            scatteredmind           Registered User           Posts: 95           (10/23/03 3:07 pm)           Reply          |            happiness <hr/>           it seems truth is the only thing that will make you happy.           find it within yourself and that makes you the enlightened one. noone else matters.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|            WolfsonJakk           Registered User           Posts: 1226           (10/23/03 3:11 pm)           Reply          |            happiness <hr/>           It is an emotional achievement.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|            scatteredmind           Registered User           Posts: 99           (10/23/03 3:53 pm)           Reply          |            happiness <hr/> Quote: <hr/> It is an emotional achievement. <hr/>            Attaining it, or overcoming it?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |

|                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1227(10/23/03 4:00 pm)Reply  | ---- <hr/> They are one and the same.                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| scatteredmindRegistered UserPosts: 101(10/23/03 4:32 pm)Reply | happiness <hr/> Quote: <hr/> They are one and the same. <hr/> how, do you know? not unless you make a habit of trying to overcome emotion without first attaining it.                                  |
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 308(10/23/03 6:10 pm)Reply      | . <hr/> mattfaust asks: Quote: <hr/> does every man have the potential to become enlightened? <hr/> Can any man become enlightened if he wants to? Yes. Does every man want to become enlightened? No. |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1613(10/23/03 6:49 pm)Reply      | --- <hr/> Mgregory, does that include men with brain damage?                                                                                                                                                                       |

G Shantz

Registered User

Posts: 413

(10/24/03 8:42 am)

Reply

--

---

Tharan wrote:

Quote:

---

You will never reach enlightenment with Weininger as your guide. Any 24 year-old, suicidal, repressed homosexual is generally limited in his outlook on reality. Just my opinion, of course.

---

You will never reach enlightenment with WolfsonJakk as your guide. Any 34 year-old, husband and father is generally limited in his outlook on reality. Just my opinion of course.

Quote:

---

Is it because of the references and links to the Thinking Man's Minefield that people continuously come here with this Weininger baggage?

---

It think you mean 'with this Weininger inspiration?'

Quote:

---

If you want enlightenment, go the traditional source to start the journey. You will discover all that Weininger said plus it's broader ramifications stated more succinctly and from multiple sources, and not overly focused on "the feminine." (Bodhidharma, Hakuin, Huang Po, Siddhartha, just to name a few.)

---

From my point of view, you're overly focused on the traditional, conventional, and feminine, Tharan. For from one point of view any other view(s) can appear 'overly' focused.

I'm just using your remarks to make mattfaust aware of the relativity of judgements.

Greg

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 965

(10/24/03 12:48 pm)

Reply

Re: -----

---

Quote:

---

Happiness is the last thing on my mind.

---

That's a lie. Happiness is the only thing on your mind, and that is why you pursue truth. Happiness is the only thing any one seeks.

Quote:

---

However, no one has yet to answer my question: does every man have the potential to become enlightened?

---

Yes, every one has the potential to become enlightened, but perhaps not in every lifetime...certainly there are more who seek enlightenment than who find it...

You will never be enlightened until you outgrow Weininger.

Isn't it funny that I sent many pages of detailed responses to just one of Weininger's chapters to Kevin Solway over a year ago and he was "too busy" to discuss it, then MGregory said he would relish a dissection of Weininger but he quickly lost interest, and then I argued some points with DEL, but he wasn't up to the task.

Weininger is very clever, although I am more and more convinced that most of what he wrote he lifted from ideas that were floating around, but he made a great synthesis. Let's say he was a repressed, i.e. self-loathing homosexual, one of those homosexuals with a fair amount of masculinity

|                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                         | and even a slight attraction to women. His entire treatise is the attempt to answer his own hideous, tormenting question to himself "WHY DON'T I LOVE/DESIRE WOMEN???"                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1228(10/24/03 1:28 pm)Reply | ---- <hr/> Good points, Greg.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| cassiopeiaeRegistered UserPosts: 140(10/24/03 1:31 pm)Reply  | Re: ----- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> His entire treatise is the attempt to answer his own hideous, tormenting question to himself "WHY DON'T I LOVE/DESIRE WOMEN???" <hr/> better point...                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1229(10/24/03 1:32 pm)Reply | --- <hr/> I had the same impression of him, Anna; unfulfilled desire and an attacking intellect.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1614(10/24/03 2:03 pm)Reply     | ---- <hr/> I think weininger deserves to be taken in more fun than seriousness demands. An intellect that attacks is valuable, but I don't think weiningers knew what to attack. In one sense of what it means to attack, this is to his credit, in another I think it could even be shown to be much of what led him to kill himself. His youth he felt wasted, he despaired at the realization he was to suffer deeply for his explorations, he ended himself. Certainly this procession can be shown to have been reasoned from something less than himself, an idea that scattered him perhaps, but this does not mean he was not intelligent. |

|                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                     | Was he perhaps ashamed of his haste and was overcome with disgust through expected misunderstandings? I haven't even read him. I've seen his face, and read some passages of his posted here and on the links here. I welcome correction.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| mattfaustRegistered UserPosts: 14(10/24/03 3:20 pm)Reply | Re: Prerequisites for Enlightenment <hr/> Well, in the case of Weiniger, I can't see how a woman or a man who feels the need to defend women could make a balanced judgement about him. Obviously, this is because he made a lot of assertions about women that they naturally will not want to believe. From my experience, his statements about women is correct. I dated a girl for a year who was by many standards brilliant and logical. She was the smartest woman I have ever met. However, she exhibited little to no consistency in her thought patterns and would fail completely when it came to deep abstract thought. She was also an emotional rollercoaster. As for all the other woman I have known, their complete inability to think in the abstract is always apparent. In short, something I learned on my own a long time ago: do not try to think with women.   |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 351(10/24/03 3:33 pm)Reply  | Re: Prerequisites for Enlightenment <hr/> voce jo,Happiness is the last thing on my mind. I cannot imagine placing happiness before Truth and Wisdom. I also cannot imagine not having sex for whatever reason. But, I make it a top priority not to fall in love, because I readily see how stupid and delusional it makes people. Two of my best friends fell in love, and they quickly became two of the most stupid people I have ever known. everyone else... My name is voce io, not voce jo. If you don't learn some respect for your elders, you won't attain. You seek truth and wisdom for your own happiness. Seeking is an attempt to fill an emotional hole that you have. Deny this all you want, but you're only appearing delusional. The love you talk about, the kind that makes people seem stupid...it isn't | love.

ALSO: About sex magick. It is just a big stupid game. Nothing will get you enlightenment. It's so simple. You're enlightened when you understand yourself. There's nothing more. Idiot teachers will say "you need to do this and that". NO YOU DON'T. You are enlightened! Recognize it.

If you don't believe this, you won't find Truth.

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Prerequisites for Enlightenment

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                  | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| cassiopeiaeRegistered UserPosts: 141(10/24/03 10:59 pm)Reply | Re: Prerequisites for Enlightenment <hr/> mattfaust- There is a huge difference in understanding women from Weiniger's point of view and just hating them. I have the feeling you hate. There may be some truths in what he has said, and some falacy, take it for what it is. In addition to what you are reading, I would recommend picking up some Camille Paglia, Sexual Personae, or something. Since it seems 'women' are on your mind right now. Why is it that anyone who reads Weiniger, getting the idea from this board, always ends up thinking they are 'automatically' enlightened enough to judge someone else on their thoughts, especially after asking for opinion in the first place?? This is getting stupid. Edited by: cassiopeiae at: 10/24/03 11:09 pm |
| mattfaustRegistered UserPosts: 16(10/25/03 7:13 am)Reply     | Re: Prerequisites for Enlightenment <hr/> Who thinks they are enlightened enough to judge someone else's thoughts?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |

cassiopeiae
Registered User
Posts: 142
(10/25/03 9:41 am)
Reply

Re: Prerequisites for Enlightenment

---

Quote:

---

Well, in the case of Weiniger, I can't see how a woman or a man who feels the need to defend women could make a balanced judgement about him. Obviously, this is because he made a lot of assertions about women that they naturally will not want to believe.

---

Evidently you do...

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 63
(11/1/03 12:31 pm)
Reply

Re: -----

---

Isn't it funny that I sent many pages of detailed responses to just one of Weininger's chapters to Kevin Solway over a year ago and he was "too busy" to discuss it, then MGregory said he would relish a dissection of Weininger but he quickly lost interest, and then I argued some points with DEL, but he wasn't up to the task.

Did you post your response to Weininger on the forum? Or is it in some way accessible?

Rhett

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 64
(11/1/03 12:55 pm)
Reply

Re: -----

---

Happiness is the last thing on my mind. I cannot imagine placing happiness before Truth and Wisdom. I also cannot imagine not having sex for whatever reason. But, I make it a top priority not to fall in love, because I readily see how stupid and delusional it makes people. Two of my best friends fell in love, and they quickly became two of the most stupid people I have ever known.

For what purpose do you value sex? Consider that every person that has ever become enlightened has been through the same stage as you, and they all decided that sex was not of value to them. I have also been through this phase, until about 10 months ago i could not possibly fathom why i should discontinue sex. Now sex is of no value to me (although i do place some value on reproduction, but not in relation to me). My penis has just become a soft rubbery thing that periodically expels liquids.

Once you understand the nature of Reality you realise that it is only our delusions that make sex different from brushing our teeth. But by no means have I given up a (supposedly) great experience (sex) for a life of dullness, i have realised the full richness of all experiences. I have consciously traded a delusional rollercoaster of a life (samsara) for nirvana. Nirvana wins hands down, it is far superior.

However, nirvana (or mental freedom) is a totally different experience to anything that an unenlightened person has ever experienced, and is a product of a fundamentally different mindset.

Rhett

Edited by: Rhett Hamilton at: 11/2/03 1:43 pm

huzheng
Registered User
Posts: 14
(11/1/03 3:05 pm)
Reply

My experience

---

I was just enlightened yesterday.
I would like to say my experience. I read Nietzsche's books two months ago, and read Weininger's "Sex and Character" recently, i write about 10 thinking notes in 10 days while reading his book, then, i find i am enlightened. You can find these notes in <http://reciteword.cosoft.org.cn/philosophy/>

My Linux experience is very important to me, i devote all of my time in Linux two years ago, developed StarDict and ReciteWord, my Linux skill is almost the best in China. And do fitness, go running, swimming, skating, so make your body strong, read literature books, listen classical music, watch many pornographic video to understand sexual intercourse and woman's body.

Any way, my experience should fit a 20 years old boy best.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1241
(11/1/03 3:26 pm)
Reply

props to "Master of the Guillotine"

---

I won't deny my affection for Hong kong cinema.

|                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 210(11/1/03 4:00 pm)Reply          | --- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> I was just enlightened yesterday. <hr/> He is a darling, isn't he?'Who?''Huzheng.''Oh?''Yes, him!'                          |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 988(11/2/03 12:34 pm)Reply | Re: ----- <hr/> Did you post your response to Weininger on the forum? Or is it in some way accessible? Only a little of it. It would be hard to find. Most of it I emailed to Kevin Solway. |
| RairunRegistered UserPosts: 152(11/2/03 2:21 pm)Reply        | ... <hr/> Quote: <hr/> watch many pornographic video to understand sexual intercourse and woman's body. <hr/> You can say "jerk off" here. :P                                 |

|                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| unknownRegistered UserPosts: 20(11/2/03 11:21 pm)Reply   | Re: ... <hr/> YOU ALL ARE ENLIGHTENED. YEP!. EAT , SLEEP , SHIT!. That is what buddha did , that is what jesus did or any so called enlightened beings. So be happy with what you are. YOU ALL ARE ENLIGHTENED BABBLING DUMB HUMAN MONKEY BELIEF WHORES!. Hahaha! peaceunknown |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1657(11/3/03 12:59 am)Reply | --- <hr/> Spik engrish you whorey babblonkey                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 379(11/3/03 5:52 am)Reply   | Re: ... <hr/> EAT , SLEEP , SHIT!. That is what buddha did , that is what jesus did or any so called enlightened beings. Truly beautiful.                                                                                                                                                  |

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 700

(11/3/03 9:32 am)

Reply

Re: Points of pedantry?

---

Quote:

---

mattfaust: Well, in the case of Weiniger, I can't see how a woman or a man who feels the need to defend women could make a balanced judgement about him. Obviously, this is because he made a lot of assertions about women that they naturally will not want to believe. From my experience, his statements about women is correct.

---

So where, other than experience, did the people who feel the need to defend women get their conviction that his statement/s about women are incorrect?

And therefore, from what justification do you summon this non-apparent superiority of causal circumstance, with regard to offering balanced judgement?

Quote:

---

Voce: Idiot teachers will say "you need to do this and that".
NO YOU DON'T.

If you don't believe this, you won't find Truth.

---

;:-)

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 701

(11/3/03 9:44 am)

Reply

Re: Points of pedantry?

---

Quote:

---

Rhett: Now sex is of no value to me (although i do place some value on reproduction, but not in relation to me). My penis has just become a soft rubbery thing that periodically expels liquids.

Once you understand the nature of Reality you realise that it is only our delusions that make sex different from brushing our teeth. But by no means have I given up a (supposedly) great experience (sex) for a life of dullness, i have realised the full richness of all experiences. I have consciously traded a delusional rollercoaster of a life (samsara) for nirvana. Nirvana wins hands down, it is far superior.

---

It's so true:

"The problem with the ascetic is that their poverty always turns into their riches."

Quote:

---

Rhett: Consider that every person that has ever become enlightened has been through the same stage as you, and they all decided that sex was not of value to them.

---

Strange, the above quote comes from a man whom many regard as enlightened. He also went through decades of ascetism.

“Hold on to the center and make up your mind to rejoice in this paradise called life.”

Lao Tzu.

He was supposed to be enlightened wasn't he.

You've got to guess he was talking about the centre of the wheel, and the rest of it.

Edited by: Dave Toast at: 11/3/03 10:16 am

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 67
(11/3/03 11:32 am)
Reply

Re: Points of pedantry?

---

It's so true:

"The problem with the ascetic is that their poverty always turns into their riches."

What was the context in which he said this? He was probably referring to the attachment that people develop to their poverty (instead of transcending ignorance altogether). I am not attached to not valuing sex, i mentioned it in response to Matt's post.

If you think there is a problem in being indifferent to sex, what is it?

Quote:

-----
Rhett: Consider that every person that has ever become enlightened has been through the same stage as you, and they all decided that sex was not of value to them.
-----

Strange, the above quote comes from a man whom many regard as enlightened. He also went through decades of ascetism.

"Hold on to the center and make up your mind to rejoice in this paradise called life."

Lao Tzu.

He was supposed to be enlightened wasn't he.

You've got to guess he was talking about the centre of the wheel, and the rest of it.

I have read very little of Lao Tzu, would someone else like to comment on Dave's interpretation?

Rhett

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 990
(11/3/03 12:26 pm)
Reply

Re: Points of pedantry?

---

If you think there is a problem in being indifferent to sex, what is it?

Might you be suffering from malnourishment?

cassiopeiae
Registered User
Posts: 160
(11/3/03 2:54 pm)
Reply

Re: Points of pedantry?

---

Quote:

---

Dave: "Hold on to the center and make up your mind to rejoice in this paradise called life."

Lao Tzu.

He was supposed to be enlightened wasn't he.

You've got to guess he was talking about the centre of the wheel, and the rest of it.

Rhett: I have read very little of Lao Tzu, would someone else like to comment on Dave's interpretation?

---

Lao Tzu viewed life and each experience as 'sweet'. Basically, I think what Mr. Toast was trying to convey is that one should perceive and appreciate all life has to offer, simply because it makes up our experiences. Experience is what gives us life, learning, and the opportunity to express ourselves, so why not enjoy and taste all we can.

the meme of barnaby
Registered User
Posts: 8
(11/3/03 6:16 pm)
Reply

nicht

---

MGregory makes a good point:

Can any man become enlightened if he wants to? Yes. Does every man want to become enlightened? No.

I also believe that achievement requires drive and motivation. Evidently, MGregory believes that everyone has the capacity for this enlightenment, although this is neatly rebutted by suergaz:

Mgregory, does that include men with brain damage?

In addition to (in terms of health) sub-normal individuals, I argue that there are limited numbers of the NORMAL (in terms of health again) population that are UNABLE to achieve enlightenment. I don't believe that everyone is able to possess the drive towards an ultimate truth. Many are happy with contemporary life and societal roles and see no need to "step outside the box" as it were.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 70
(11/4/03 12:24 pm)
Reply

What is the value of sex?

---

If you think there is a problem in being indifferent to sex, what is it?

Anna:

Might you be suffering from malnourishment?

I am not suffering from its absence at all. Once one stops projecting all sorts of false notions onto reality one sees sex as being no greater than any other experience, and since it involves such a strong connection with another human, and a highly deluded one at that, one is likely to choose other experiences over it.

I have plenty of opportunity for sex, in fact, i have had to turn it down on many occasions.

Cass:

Lao Tzu viewed life and each experience as 'sweet'. Basically, I think what Mr. Toast was trying to convey is that one should perceive and appreciate all life has to offer, simply because it makes up our experiences. Experience is what gives us life, learning, and the opportunity to express ourselves, so why not enjoy and taste all we can.

Sure, i agree totally with Lao. It is your interpretation of him that is incorrect and illogical. You are still placing a higher value on sex over other experiences, at the same time that you are affirming that each and every experience is equally 'sweet'.

Don't people realise that they aren't in any way addressing the core issues here? No-one has answered the question that i posed (that is at the beginning of this email). Furthermore, can anyone give reasons for having sex?

As soon as people start talking about sex their rationality tends to go straight out the window, and with it their consciousness.

Rhett

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Prerequisites for Enlightenment

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| cassiopeiaeRegistered UserPosts: 163(11/4/03 2:28 pm)Reply | Re: What is the value of sex? <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Rhett: Sure, i agree totally with Lao. It is your interpretation of him that is incorrect and illogical. You are still placing a higher value on sex over other experiences, at the same time that you are affirming that each and every experience is equally 'sweet'. <hr/> I am in no way placing a 'higher value' on sex over other experiences. When did I say that? Never. I was simply saying that ALL experiences are important. What is more or less important to one may not be to another. We gain different lessons as individuals from different experiences. What I gain from meditation, someone else might gain from a conversation, sex, or picking their nose. It is subjective to the individual, just as 'enlightenment' is in the eye of the beholder. Quote: <hr/> Rhett: Furthermore, can anyone give reasons for having sex? <hr/> |

Besides the creation bit, there are plenty of reasons. Boredom, stress relief, experiencing sensation that cannot be experienced in any other way, self-expression, love, hate, manipulation, fun...I could keep going, but I don't think it is necessary.

Quote:

---

Rhett: As soon as people start talking about sex their rationality tends to go straight out the window, and with it their consciousness.

---

I agree.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1668
(11/4/03 10:02 pm)
Reply

---

---

Quote:

---

Rhett: As soon as people start talking about sex their rationality tends to go straight out the window, and with it their consciousness.

Cass: I agree.

---

Which people are you talking about here?!

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 710

(11/4/03 11:36 pm)

Reply

Re: What is value?

---

Quote:

---

Rhett: Now sex is of no value to me (although i do place some value on reproduction, but not in relation to me). My penis has just become a soft rubbery thing that periodically expels liquids.

Once you understand the nature of Reality you realise that it is only our delusions that make sex different from brushing our teeth. But by no means have I given up a (supposedly) great experience (sex) for a life of dullness, i have realised the full richness of all experiences. I have consciously traded a delusional rollercoaster of a life (samsara) for nirvana. Nirvana wins hands down, it is far superior.

DT: It's so true:

"The problem with the ascetic is that their poverty always turns into their riches."

Rhett: What was the context in which he said this? He was probably referring to the attachment that people develop to their poverty (instead of transcending ignorance altogether). I am not attached to not valuing sex, i mentioned it in response to Matt's post.

If you think there is a problem in being indifferent to sex, what is it?

---

I didn't say or imply that I think there is a problem being indifferent to sex, I implied that you are anything but indifferent to it.

I think the context of the above quote is fairly obvious and I think you've got it first time. He was indeed referring to the attachment to ascetism which ascetics replace their attachment to non-ascetism with. By implication, I am saying that your words illustrate this malaise rather well.

You say that you are not attached to not being attached to sex, I say that your words betray this as a lie. You say that you merely mention it in response to Matt's post, I say that you do so much more than mention it at the drop of a hat.

This is further illustrated by the fact that the quote refers to ascetism in general but you have interpreted my quoting of it as refering to your attitude to sex, as opposed to it refering to the following sentence which is obviously more applicable in context:

"I have consciously traded a delusional rollercoaster of a life (samsara) for nirvana. Nirvana wins hands down, it is far superior."

Are you going to tell me that this particular collection of words, and more importantly from where and whence they came, do not illustrate the implied trading of one attachment for another? Further, are you going to defend your clearly non-indifferent prose on the subject of sex as being indifferent? You'll do well if I buy it.

I would also like to ask how your "penis has just become a soft rubbery thing that periodically expels liquids.", when you "have realised the full richness of all experiences."

Quote:

---

Rhett: Consider that every person that has ever become enlightened has been through the same stage as you, and they all decided that sex was not of value to them.

DT: Strange, the quote "The problem with the ascetic is that their poverty always turns into their riches." comes from a man whom many regard as enlightened. He also went through decades of ascetism.

“Hold on to the center and make up your mind to rejoice in this paradise called life.”

Lao Tzu.

He was supposed to be enlightened wasn't he.

You've got to guess he was talking about the centre of the wheel, and the rest of it.

Rhett: I have read very little of Lao Tzu, would someone else like to comment on Dave's interpretation?

---

Yes, it would be good to get alternative interpretations. However, for now I will expand upon mine and you can deal with that in relation to the context of the discussion.

Firstly I would like to make it clear that I think your sentence ("Consider that every person that has ever become enlightened has been through the same stage as you, and they all decided that sex was not of value to them.") is completely wrong, but I do understand exactly why you would think and say such a thing.

Secondly, in this context, I referred you back to the quote from a man regarded by many as enlightened, which said "The problem with the ascetic is that their poverty always turns into their riches.", and I also mentioned that he himself was an ascetic for decades of his life. So I was wondering how this view tallies with your words on every person who has ever become enlightened, and their abstinence?

Now to Lao Tzu's words "Hold on to the center and make up your mind to rejoice in this paradise called life.", and my interpretation. When I say that you've got to guess that he is talking about the wheel, I am referring to the classical analogy of the spinning wheel in relation to emotions and their pull. At the centre of the wheel, the forces are weak and exert little pull, if any. Further out from the centre, the forces are stronger and exert more and more pull. So in holding onto the centre and making up one's mind to rejoice in this paradise called life, I believe that Lao Tzu is illustrating that emotional non-attachment is not about sitting at the centre of the wheel and abstaining from rejoicing, life and its riches, rather he is saying that if you keep a firm grip of the centre of the wheel, the rest of the wheel is your oyster.

The two quotes I've mentioned, to my mind, illustrate the enlightened attitude to ascetism, life, pleasure, pain, sex - the whole gamut. And this seems to be at odds with your insistence that the enlightened people of history have all permanently abstained from sex, without exception.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 711
(11/5/03 12:13 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Rhett: If you think there is a problem in being indifferent to sex, what is it?

Bird: Might you be suffering from malnourishment?

Rhett: I am not suffering from its absence at all.

---

Indifference has as much to do with absence as it does with indulgence. We'll get to this later.

Quote:

---

Rhett: Once one stops projecting all sorts of false notions onto reality one sees sex as being no greater than any other experience,

---

OK. Strictly though, one sees it as being no greater OR LESSER than any other experience, though I understand why you miss that bit out.

Quote:

---

and since it involves such a strong connection with another human, and a highly deluded one at that, one is likely to choose other experiences over it.

---

So who's projecting all sorts of false notions onto reality now?

Quote:

---

I have plenty of opportunity for sex, in fact, i have had to turn it down on many occasions.

---

This has nothing whatsoever to do with the conversation. Bird's asking you if you might be a poorer man for your abstinence implies nothing about your ability to procure the object of your abstinence. In fact it is implicit that you are abstaining, as opposed to being impoverished. Yet you see fit to 'mention' this.

One has to wonder why.

Quote:

---

Cass: Lao Tzu viewed life and each experience as 'sweet'. Basically, I think what Mr. Toast was trying to convey is that one should perceive and appreciate all life has to offer, simply because it makes up our experiences. Experience is what gives us life, learning, and the opportunity to express ourselves, so why not enjoy and taste all we can.

Sure, I agree totally with Lao. It is your interpretation of him that is incorrect and illogical. You are still placing a higher value on sex over other experiences, at the same time that you are affirming that each and every experience is equally 'sweet'.

---

I don't see Cass mentioning sex at all in the above. Where do you get that from?

No, Cass is, as you later say, simply affirming that each and every experience is equally 'sweet', although I would have just said equal.

Far from Cass placing a higher value on it, you, with no prompting whatsoever, are placing a lower value on it.

Quote:

---

Rhett: As soon as people start talking about sex their rationality tends to go straight out the window, and with it their consciousness.

---

On the whole, so it would seem, one way or the other.

Would that we could see our own inconsistencies as clearly as we see those of others.

Quote:

---

Rhett: Don't people realise that they aren't in any way addressing the core issues here? No-one has answered the question that i posed (that is at the beginning of this email).

---

That's just the thing, nobody has said that there is a problem with being indifferent to sex. The only poster who has shown any bias one way or another is your good self. Indifference means take it or leave it - it does not mean leave it.

So then, who is that doesn't realise that they are not addressing the core issue here?

Quote:

---

Rhett: Furthermore, can anyone give reasons for having sex?

---

I can give just as many for as I can against.

cassiopeiae
Registered User
Posts: 165
(11/5/03 12:55 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Rhett: As soon as people start talking about sex their rationality tends to go straight out the window, and with it their consciousness.

Cass: I agree.

Suergaz: Which people are you talking about here?!

---

I was referring to Rhett...

cassiopeiae
Registered User
Posts: 166
(11/5/03 1:10 am)
Reply

Re: What is value?

---

Quote:

---

Mr. Toast: Now to Lao Tzu's words "Hold on to the center and make up your mind to rejoice in this paradise called life.", and my interpretation. When I say that you've got to guess that he is talking about the wheel, I am referring to the classical analogy of the spinning wheel in relation to emotions and their pull. At the centre of the wheel, the forces are weak and exert little pull, if any. Further out from the centre, the forces are stronger and exert more and more pull. So in holding onto the centre and making up one's mind to rejoice in this paradise called life, I believe that Lao Tzu is illustrating that emotional non-attachment is not about sitting at the centre of the wheel and abstaining from rejoicing, life and it's riches, rather he is saying that if you keep a firm grip of the centre of the wheel, the rest of the wheel is your oyster.

---

This is great! I think this goes along with the fear aspect. When one cannot control their emotions, life seems to take control of them. Being afraid of

|                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                          | life would seem to cause one to 'abstain' from those things one feels are out of one's control, on the emotional end. Really, the only thing a person does have control over is their self.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1001(11/5/03 4:22 am)Reply  | Drinks all around <hr/> I must toast you, Toast. To your cleverness! Quote: <hr/> Bird's asking you if you might be a poorer man for your abstinence implies nothing about your ability to procure the object of your abstinence. <hr/> Ha, ha. I meant nothing so complex as that (altho I agree). It was my tongue-in-cheek way of saying "yeah, right." In other words, while some normal women can and do spend various amounts of time indifferent to sex, there is no such thing as a normal, healthy male that is indifferent to sex. Rhett, is all this sacrifice the result of reading the Thinking Man's Minefield? |
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 73(11/5/03 11:43 am)Reply | Re: What is the value of sex? <hr/> ----- Rhett: Sure, i agree totally with Lao. It is your interpretation of him that is incorrect and illogical. You are still placing a higher value on sex over other experiences, at the same time that you are affirming that each and every experience is equally 'sweet'. ----- I am in no way placing a 'higher value' on sex over other experiences. When did I say that? Never. I was simply saying that ALL experiences are important. What is more or less important to one may not be to another. So you do not value sex more than stepping in a dog turd, or just your other higher values? |

You say that ALL experiences are important, does that not mean that they are all important to you? Is not importance in this context just another word for value? Yet you seem to say that you do have specific preferences(?).

We gain different lessons as individuals from different experiences. What I gain from meditation, someone else might gain from a conversation, sex, or picking their nose. It is subjective to the individual, just as 'enlightenment' is in the eye of the beholder.

We might gain lessons from all experiences, but that is not a reason to value those experiences or those lessons equally.

-----
Rhett: Furthermore, can anyone give reasons for having sex?
-----

Besides the creation bit, there are plenty of reasons. Boredom, stress relief, experiencing sensation that cannot be experienced in any other way, self-expression, love, hate, manipulation, fun...I could keep going, but I don't think it is necessary.

Okay, but I do not particularly value these things, in fact, i act to purge humanity of these things. I value truth.

Do you think you know truth? Do you value truth? If your answer is no to both of these, you most definitely have no idea whether those things that you do value are in fact what you think they are. And I can tell you that they are not as you think they are.

-----
Rhett: As soon as people start talking about sex their rationality tends to go straight out the window, and with it their consciousness.
-----

I agree.

You might agree, but you are not aware of the extent of your own delusion.

Rhett

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 74
(11/5/03 11:56 am)
Reply

Re: ---
-----
Rhett: As soon as people start talking about sex their rationality tends to go straight out the window, and with it their consciousness.

Cass: I agree.
-----
Suergaz: Which people are you talking about here?!

I made a generalisation, which, judging from your comments elsewhere on this forum, also applies to you.

Rhett

cassiopeiae
Registered User
Posts: 169
(11/5/03 2:30 pm)
Reply

Re: What is the value of sex?
-----
Quote:
-----
I am in no way placing a 'higher value' on sex over other experiences. When did I say that? Never. I was simply saying that ALL experiences are important. What is more or less important to one may not be to another.

So you do not value sex more than stepping in a dog turd, or just your other higher values?
-----

I enjoy sex more (definitely) but the value would only be in what I choose to pay attention to. I may or may not choose to give the dog shit any thought. That doesn't mean there is not a lesson to be learned.

Quote:
-----
You say that ALL experiences are important, does that not mean that they are all important to you? Is not importance in this context just another word for value? Yet you seem to say that you do have specific preferences(?).
-----

Actually, I didn't say they are important to me, but that they are important. People have unique preferences. What is gold to one may only be shit to another. Just because an experience is important doesn't mean people will make it important.

Quote:

---

Rhett: Okay, but I do not particularly value these things, in fact, i act to purge humanity of these things. I value truth.

---

Fine by me. Those are things you choose not to value. I value your opinion because it is your opinion, that doesn't mean I agree, but I realize you and I are not the same person and each of us will have different values and perceptions.

Why bother wasting energy on trying to 'purge' what is out of your control? Why not use what you have to help people find their truths? Seems like meglomaniacal action to me...

Quote:

---

Do you think you know truth? Do you value truth? If your answer is no to both of these, you most definitely have no idea whether those things that you do value are in fact what you think they are. And I can tell you that they are not as you think they are.

---

I am comfortable with myself, where I am, and where I am going. I do value truth, but not the truth you value, or anyone else for that matter. You need to humble yourself and begin to understand the differences in perceptions are what keep us going. Do you know truth? You cannot say that you are complete. If you did, I would call you a liar, and anyone else who would say the same. You may be further than you were a year ago, or even yesterday, but if you really knew truth, we wouldn't be having this conversation.

Edited by: cassiopeiae at: 11/5/03 3:06 pm

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1677

(11/5/03 11:05 pm)

Reply

---

---

Rhett, can you show me anything of my words in here that would demonstrate that I become unconscious when articulating anything to do with sex?

You sound like such a snooty little turd!

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1009

(11/6/03 10:20 am)

Reply

Re: What is the value of sex?

---

Quote:

---

Furthermore, can anyone give reasons for having sex?

---

Some people here may remember that last March I went to a Mennonite (Amish) wedding. A very average-looking couple, about 25 years old. They had an old fashioned courtship and were definitely virgins. The man, in particular, had an unattractive, haunted look and didn't look others directly in the eye. I did not see them again until today, when I decided to go back to the farmer's market. Wow.

These two kids had a look of serenity and happiness that was actually palpable. The girls' skin had cleared and he had a steady, forthright and happy gaze. They had a love aura around them with a diameter of about 20 feet.

The other day I experienced a new kind of orgasm that I've never heard about. It was very subtle. It was a reaction to the orgasm of my partner, although I didn't realize that at the moment. Another time, I left my consciousness and entered his, also at the moment of his orgasm.

I like altered states of consciousness. Some are natural, some are induced, some are brought on by practices like drumming, some come out of the blue. I guess I like the blue ones best.

Studies have certainly shown health benefits of sex. I recall one that said people (in middle age) who have about 3 orgasms per week look several years younger than the ones who don't. I guess it could not have been too scientific a study. But do you really imagine that stasis of the sexual organs

|                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                         | could be good for your health? Men like nothing better than to fiddle with things, see how they react, control or at least cause the reactions. What better plaything than woman? To flirt with the irrational, to watch her emotion, to induce her to love you who has her own inscrutable reasons for loving?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| HywelRegistered UserPosts: 27(11/6/03 1:16 pm)Reply          | Re: Sex <hr/> I think all that's required for a realistic discussion of sex, is to bear in mind that ultimately, you're fucking yourself.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| HywelRegistered UserPosts: 28(11/6/03 1:17 pm)Reply          | Re: Sex <hr/> Posted twice by accident. :/ Edited by: Hywel at: 11/17/03 3:37 am                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 75(11/6/03 1:19 pm)Reply | Re: --- <hr/> To Dave, Pedantic character investigations are an easy way to avoid the topic in question. I suggest you apply your focus to the infinite before the finite, understanding of the former enhances and fundamentally alters investigations of the latter. ----- Rhett: Now sex is of no value to me (although I do place some value on reproduction, but not in relation to me). My penis has just become a soft rubbery thing that periodically expels liquids. Once you understand the nature of Reality you realise that it is only our delusions that make sex different from brushing our teeth. But by no means have I given up a (supposedly) great experience (sex) for a life of dullness, I have realised the full richness of all experiences. I have consciously traded a delusional rollercoaster of a life (samsara) for nirvana. Nirvana wins hands down, it is far superior. |

DT: It's so true:

"The problem with the ascetic is that their poverty always turns into their riches."

Rhett: What was the context in which he said this? He was probably referring to the attachment that people develop to their poverty (instead of transcending ignorance altogether). I am not attached to not valuing sex, i mentioned it in response to Matt's post.

If you think there is a problem in being indifferent to sex, what is it?

---

DT: I didn't say or imply that I think there is a problem being indifferent to sex, I implied that you are anything but indifferent to it.

Rhett: It's quite obvious you were implying that, that is why i addressed it.

DT: I think the context of the above quote is fairly obvious and I think you've got it first time. He was indeed refering to the attachment to ascetism which ascetics replace their attachment to non-ascetism with. By implication, I am saying that your words illustrate this malaise rather well.

Rhett: In a very limited sense. I choose my topics for a variety of reasons, Sometimes one of those reasons is that I want to fully convince myself of something, to fully eradicate even the slightest false notion in my mind of it. I am not claiming perfection, or that i am enlightened whilst writing to the forum (or list). You can analyse me all you want, but i will tell you what you seem to want to know. My consciousness still occasionally experiences sexual imagery. Since it is a distortion of reality i endeavour to eradicate it. Throughout my whole life i have had very little attachment to the physical act of sex (partly because my mental imaginings have always been somewhat superior). Nevertheless, for a long time i was attached to those imaginings, and since our existence is nothing other than experiences of consciousness, they are still dangerous to the truth seeker.

I also wanted to explore the idea of sex from the perspective of enlightenment (but not because of an interest in engaging in it), but, quite understandably, no-one else in this discussion is offering me anything in that regard. So in that respect i am conducting my own investigation within the greater discussion, which may influence the nature of my posts.

There may be other factors, but my interest in this topic was already being stretched before you made this post, i almost decided not to bother with it. This is because i am firmly focused on becoming perfect - this topic has little relevance to me in relation to it.

DT: You say that you are not attached to not being attached to sex, I say that your words betray this as a lie. You say that you merely mention it in response to Matt's post, I say that you do so much more than mention it at the drop of a hat.

Rhett: Refer above.

DT: This is further illustrated by the fact that the quote refers to ascetism in general but you have interpreted my quoting of it as refering to your attitude to sex, as opposed to it refering to the following sentence which is obviously more applicable in context:

"I have consciously traded a delusional rollercoaster of a life (samsara) for nirvana. Nirvana wins hands down, it is far superior."

Rhett: No. Sexual abstinence is directly linked to asceticism [def: a person who chooses to follow a strict code of self denial] whereas the experience of Nirvana is beyond all concepts of asceticism. Your ignorance of Ultimate Reality is quite obvious here.

DT: Are you going to tell me that this particular collection of words, and more importantly from where and whence they came, do not illustrate the implied trading of one attachment for another? Further, are you going to defend your clearly non-indifferent prose on the subject of sex as being indifferent? You'll do well if I buy it.

Rhett: Refer above.

DT: I would also like to ask how your "penis has just become a soft rubbery thing that periodically expels liquids.", when you "have realised the full richness of all experiences."

Rhett: You are trying to make a non-point here. I happened to define my penis like that on one occasion a couple of weeks ago, because i realised that it had lost its association for me to sex, so I chose to use that definition to illustrate that point. There is such a strong psychological and anatomical link between the genital region and sex.

I fully realise that that portion of the totality that i choose to call my penis is, or said another way, that that thing which i choose to differentiate from what it is not, is purely a demarcation of my consciousness, that the existence of my penis is purely dependent on my observation/experience of it.

Enlightenment is a form of trump card, i have almost no stake whatsoever in this discussion. Whether i prove a point or not, it makes little or no effect on my understanding of reality, it is far beyond the psychology of character investigation.

---

Rhett: Consider that every person that has ever become enlightened has been through the same stage as you, and they all decided that sex was not of value to them.

DT: Strange, the quote "The problem with the ascetic is that their poverty always turns into their riches." comes from a man whom many regard as enlightened. He also went through decades of ascetism.

"Hold on to the center and make up your mind to rejoice in this paradise called life."
Lao Tzu.

He was supposed to be enlightened wasn't he.

You've got to guess he was talking about the centre of the wheel, and the rest of it.

Rhett: I have read very little of Lao Tzu, would someone else like to comment on Dave's interpretation?

---

DT: Yes, it would be good to get alternative interpretations. However, for now I will expand upon mine and you can deal with that in relation to the context of the discussion.

Firstly I would like to make it clear that I think your sentence ("Consider that every person that has ever become enlightened has been through the same stage as you, and they all decided that sex was not of value to them.") is completely wrong, but I do understand exactly why you would think and say such a thing.

Rhett: There is no content to these statements, and your opinions are of no import to me.

DT: Secondly, in this context, I referred you back to the quote from a man regarded by many as enlightened, which said "The problem with the ascetic is that their poverty always turns into their riches.", and I also mentioned that he himself was an ascetic for decades of his life. So I was wondering how this view tallies with your words on every person who has ever become enlightened, and their abstinence?

Rhett: You are being quite illogical. Just because I don't, for example, play with dolls, does not mean that I am abstaining from doing so. You are confusing values with the nature of experience. There are an infinite variety of experiences which we can have, the sage chooses their experiences in accordance with their purpose, and ultimately, their valuing of truth. It is quite obvious that you are quite ignorant of the deeper psychology of the sexual act, and thus, the reasons why the sage does not choose to engage in it.

DT: Now to Lao Tzu's words "Hold on to the center and make up your mind to rejoice in this paradise called life.", and my interpretation. When I say that you've got to guess that he is talking about the wheel, I am referring to the classical analogy of the spinning wheel in relation to emotions and their pull. At the centre of the wheel, the forces are weak and exert little pull, if any. Further out from the centre, the forces are stronger and exert more and more pull. So in holding onto the centre and making up one's mind to rejoice in this paradise called life, I believe that Lao Tzu is illustrating that emotional non-attachment is not about sitting at the centre of the wheel and abstaining from rejoicing, life and its riches, rather he is saying that if you keep a firm grip of the centre of the wheel, the rest of the wheel is your oyster.

Rhett: I struggle to imagine that this is a correct interpretation. You are implying that a person's consciousness can exist in two states at once, or that the ideal is to shift into and out of emotion. Duality and emotion are delusional constructs of consciousness, and enlightenment the transcending of those.

DT: The two quotes I've mentioned, to my mind, illustrate the enlightened attitude to asceticism, life, pleasure, pain, sex - the whole gamut. And this seems to be at odds with your insistence that the enlightened people of history have all permanently abstained from sex, without exception.

Rhett: The enlightened are beyond asceticism, abstinence, life, pleasure, emotional pain, desire (for sex)...

---

Rhett: If you think there is a problem in being indifferent to sex, what is it?

Bird: Might you be suffering from malnourishment?

Rhett: I am not suffering from its absence at all.

---

DT: Indifference has as much to do with absence as it does with indulgence. We'll get to this later.

---

Rhett: Once one stops projecting all sorts of false notions onto reality one sees sex as being no greater than any other experience,

---

DT: OK. Strictly though, one sees it as being no greater OR LESSER than any other experience, though I understand why you miss that bit out.

Rhett: Yes. Ultimately it is no lesser, but in the context of our current society it has dangerous implications.

---

and since it involves such a strong connection with another human, and a highly deluded one at that, one is likely to choose other experiences over it.

---

DT: So who's projecting all sorts of false notions onto reality now?

Rhett: I shall refine my language for you.

"..and since [99.9999999999999999% of times] it involves such..."

---

I have plenty of opportunity for sex, in fact, i have had to turn it down on many occasions.

---

DT: This has nothing whatsoever to do with the conversation. Bird's asking you if you might be a poorer man for your abstinence implies nothing about your ability to procure the object of your abstinence. In fact it is implicit that you are abstaining, as opposed to being impoverished. Yet you see fit to 'mention' this.

One has to wonder why.

Rhett: You have deleted Anna's post, and more importantly, the post i wrote that Anna was responding to. I am writing this offline so will have to rely on my memory of them. Anna questioned whether my de-valuing of sex was because i was 'malnourished' due a lack of it. I fail to perceive why anyone would de-value sex due to a lack of it, from my experience, most people, males anyway, become more and more obsessed with it the less they have it. Since i could not see a logical relation between them, i had the choice of challenging her about it or just trying to work with it. I chose the latter for various reasons, hence, my reply to her's was a bit of a stab-in-the-dark. Surely we are not simpletons, surely we are beyond simple question and answer?

---

Cass: Lao Tzu viewed life and each experience as 'sweet'. Basically, I think what Mr. Toast was trying to convey is that one should perceive and appreciate all life has to offer, simply because it makes up our experiences. Experience is what gives us life, learning, and the opportunity to express ourselves, so why not enjoy and taste all we can.

Sure, i agree totally with Lao. It is your interpretation of him that is incorrect and illogical. You are still placing a higher value on sex over other experiences, at the same time that you are affirming that each and every experience is equally 'sweet'.

---

DT: I don't see Cass mentioning sex at all in the above. Where do you get that from?

No, Cass is, as you later say, simply affirming that each and every experience is equally 'sweet', although I would have just said equal.

Far from cass placing a higher value on it, you, with no prompting whatsoever, are placing a lower value on it.

Rhett: Am i not allowed to steer a conversation? Just as you have done so here? I focused on sex because peoples attitudes about it contain some of the biggest delusions that people commonly have. The veracity with which you have steered your focus in on me rather than the topic is proof of your need to divert yourself from that.

---

Rhett: As soon as people start talking about sex their rationality tends to go straight out the window, and with it their consciousness.

---

DT: On the whole, so it would seem, one way or the other.

Would that we could see our own inconsistencies as clearly as we see those of others.

Rhett: Not so fast cowboy. The very desire for sex is irrational, and the act of sex (by the unenlightened) is fundamentally about becoming unconscious, about squashing ignorance induced suffering.

---

Rhett: Don't people realise that they aren't in any way addressing the core issues here? No-one has answered the question that i posed (that is at the beginning of this email).

---

DT: That's just the thing, nobody has said that there is a problem with being indifferent to sex. The only poster who has shown any bias one way or another is your good self. Indifference means take it or leave it - it does not mean leave it.

So then, who is that doesn't realise that they are not addressing the core issue here?

Rhett: You are just skirting around the point gain. Matt said that he could not imagine not valuing sex, and no-one else has stated that they abstain from it or are indifferent to it. Thus, I was fishing for someone who had the guts to admit to valuing sex.

---

Rhett: Furthermore, can anyone give reasons for having sex?

---

DT: I can give just as many for as I can against.

Rhett: And once again, you refrain from giving them.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 76
(11/6/03 1:22 pm)
Reply

Re: Drinks all around

---

Drinks all around

---

I must toast you, Toast.

To your cleverness!

Feminine herdiness.

---

Bird's asking you if you might be a poorer man for your abstinence implies nothing about your ability to procure the object of your abstinence.

---

Ha, ha. I meant nothing so complex as that (altho I agree). It was my tongue-in-cheek way of saying "yeah, right." In other words, while some normal women can and do spend various amounts of time indifferent to sex, there is no such thing as a normal, healthy male that is indifferent to sex.

Only because what you define as a normal and healthy male is based on your ignorance. You give me no reason to be bothered to expand on this.

Rhett, is all this sacrifice the result of reading the Thinking Man's Minefield?

There is no sacrifice, and whilst i have been significantly influenced by the wisdom of certain individuals, i wasn't born yesterday.

Rhett

|                                                                                                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 77(11/6/03 1:25 pm)Reply                                                                                  | Re: What is value? <hr/> Cass wrote: This is great! I think this goes along with the fear aspect. When one cannot control their emotions, life seems to take control of them. Being afraid of life would seem to cause one to 'abstain' from those things one feels are out of one's control, on the emotional end. Really, the only thing a person does have control over is their self. These are very sketchy and superficial observations. Try this, The nature of consciousness -&gt; the delusion of an inherently existent self -&gt; egotism -&gt; fear of loss or compromise of self -&gt; will to power over the emotional realm Rhett Edited by: Rhett Hamilton at: 11/6/03 1:29 pm |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1692(11/6/03 1:55 pm)Reply                                                                                       | --- <hr/> Rhett, everything you write makes me think you are a very sketchy superficial person.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 718(11/6/03 10:59 pm)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> Not everything.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1698(11/6/03 11:03 pm)Reply                                                                                      | Re: --- <hr/> Well, out with it!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Prerequisites for Enlightenment

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                   | Comment                                                                                                           |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 719(11/6/03 11:10 pm)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> I'm just saying that there is some stuff he writes which doesn't suggest that. Some.  |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1699(11/6/03 11:13 pm)Reply                                                                                      | Re: --- <hr/> And I'm just saying, .."Well, out with it!" Or is it too miniscule to mention? |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 720(11/6/03 11:22 pm)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> Do you mean for me to detail the some?                                                |

|                                                                                                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1701(11/6/03 11:28 pm)Reply                                                                                    | Re: --- <hr/> What else would I have meant?! We're trying to make Rhett a rock star here and you're being extraordinarily stubborn.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 722(11/7/03 12:02 am)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> You could have meant any number of things with your ambiguous prose. I can't be fuckin arsed detailing stuff he's said that doesn't make him sound so. Just as I can no longer be arsed trying to reason with him or point a few things out. Just for you, here's something he said which doesn't make him sound, at least to me, like a sketchy and superficial person. Quote: <hr/> Rhett: i don't, for example, play with dolls <hr/> |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1702(11/7/03 12:11 am)Reply                                                                                    | Re: --- <hr/> Yes, everyone knows they're for sissys (sanctimonius introverted sap sucking yard sticks), action figures on the other hand...                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1703(11/7/03 12:14 am)Reply                                                                                    | Re: --- <hr/> stick another o in there, I can't be arsed editing. Moderator, moderator!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |

cassiopeiae

Registered User

Posts: 171

(11/7/03 12:15 am)

Reply

Re: What is value?

---

Quote:

---

Cass: This is great! I think this goes along with the fear aspect. When one cannot control their emotions, life seems to take control of them. Being afraid of life would seem to cause one to 'abstain' from those things one feels are out of one's control, on the emotional end. Really, the only thing a person does have control over is their self.

Rhett: These are very sketchy and superficial observations.

Try this,

The nature of consciousness -> the delusion of an inherently existent self -> egotism -> fear of loss or compromise of self -> will to power over the emotional realm

---

Of course they are! Are not all 'observations' superficial when talking about emotions? Sometimes you just have to talk about them though. Emotions are as much of a delusion, as you say the 'self' is. Love and hate, for example are only extremes of the same thing. So, there is no real 'power' anyone needs over the emotional realm, I should have been more specific in the above paragraph. It is more a matter of finding a balance and recognizing both sides though not necessarily succumbing to the 'need' for them.

As for the 'existent self', in the above context, I was only refering to the self as the person, not the Self. The delusion is subjective...and fear of the loss of the subjective self would bring about egotism...from my perspective.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1012
(11/7/03 12:19 am)
Reply

Re: Sex

---

Quote:

---

I think all that's required for a realistic discussion about sex, is to bear in mind that ultimately, you're fucking yourself.

---

That is a very lofty goal, and one which, as I mentioned, I have attained only briefly.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1016
(11/7/03 3:32 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

I also wanted to explore the idea of sex from the perspective of enlightenment (but not because of an interest in engaging in it), but, quite understandably, no-one else in this discussion is offering me anything in that regard.

I just did.

Matt said that he could not imagine not valuing sex, and no-one else has stated that they abstain from it or are indifferent to it. Thus, I was fishing for someone who had the guts to admit to valuing sex.

I just did.

Only because what you define as a normal and healthy male is based on your ignorance. You give me no reason to be bothered to expand on this.

I don't? Perhaps you'll do it for Matt, then.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 81
(11/9/03 10:18 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Rhett, everything you write makes me think you are a very sketchy superficial person.

I admit that i am often not fully elucidating my points. Doing so is not my priority at the moment. I am giving you the tops of mountains, you must climb them yourself.

Rhett

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 82
(11/9/03 10:59 am)
Reply

Re: What to value?

---

The nature of consciousness -> the experience of realness -> the delusion of an inherently existent self -> egotism -> fear of loss or compromise of self -> will to power over the emotional realm

Here is an expansion of the above:

The nature of consciousness being differentiation of the totality, A=A, the experience of 'things'.

The experience of realness being experiences of consciousness of a seemingly real world beyond the mind.

The delusion of an inherently existent self being the projecting of truth upon the experience of a seemingly real self.

Egotism being attachment to the above delusion, the attaching of one's immediate experiences of consciousness to the aforementioned delusion.

Fear of loss or compromise of self being a natural consequence of egotism, because that seemingly real world is not always kindly to one's seemingly real self. Fear is a combination of a thought that pertains to a loss or compromise of self, and the experience of sensation (physiological arousal).

Will to power over the emotional realm is effectively the same as saying 'the will to not fear'. Since the delusion of will is inherent to consciousness, people direct their will towards the alleviation and prevention of said fear. Most of them do so misguidedly.

|                                                                                           |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                           | If one fully removes one's delusion of self by training their consciousness such that it does not project truth onto any of its images or sensations (by developing an understanding of the nature of Ultimate Reality), one will no longer experience fear or any other emotion for that matter, as they are all based on fear in some way. Rhett                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| cassiopeiaeRegistered UserPosts: 176(11/9/03 4:31 pm)Reply     | Re: What to value? <hr/> Could we simplify the 'self': self &gt; singularity &gt; egotism &gt; illusion of power &gt; illusion of emotion There cannot be a 'delusion' of self, there is no invalidating evidence for or against the existence, an illusion would properly categorize the perception of self. Do you look at consciousness as a whole combining all existence, be it physical or unknown? I believe I get where you are going, I think there is more to the 'story' than has been suggested.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 87(11/10/03 11:04 am)Reply | Re: What to value? <hr/> Could we simplify the 'self': self &gt; singularity &gt; egotism &gt; illusion of power &gt; illusion of emotion Could you expand on it? There cannot be a 'delusion' of self, there is no invalidating evidence for or against the existence, an illusion would properly categorize the perception of self. The impossibility of an inherently existent self is founded on the validity of causality, which is itself founded on logical proofs. Do you look at consciousness as a whole combining all existence, be it physical or unknown? I believe I get where you are going, I think there is more to the 'story' than has been suggested. There must be 'other' than consciousness, because all things (including consciousness) are caused. This 'other' is often called the 'hidden void'. All |

we can know for sure about that which we do not experience is that it has no form whatsoever, has the capacity to produce the experiences that we have, and that it is therefore not nothingness.

Rhett

Edited by: Rhett Hamilton at: 11/12/03 12:10 pm

cassiopeiae

Registered User

Posts: 177

(11/10/03 1:34 pm)

Reply

Re: What to value?

---

Quote:

---

Cass: Could we simplify the 'self':

self > singularity > egotism > illusion of power > illusion of emotion

Rhett: Could you expand on it?

---

The recognition of the illusional self results in distinguished singularity. Detaching the 'one' from the 'whole'.

The act of detaching automatically results in egotism. There is no consciousness of the whole, only of the one. I will refer to the consciousness of one as egotism, but do not mean it in terms of megalomania or typical egotistical pretense, only as a conscious 'one'.

Illusion of power is the inherent result of egotism due to the fact that the recognized detached 'self' believes the illusory need to control pleasant/unpleasant experience (thought, situation, etc) The 'one' is able to distinguish between experiences due to the illusion of power, giving one the option of illusory choice. Ultimately, all aspects of singularity result in the struggle for one to once again be placed with the whole. This is in conjunction with the other aspect of illusion of power, which is the recognition of a 'greater power' which all of the detached strive to place themselves in conjunction with.

From this is derived the illusion of emotion. I mean to classify illusion of power and emotion as 'sisters' meaning one cannot exist without the other. To expand on emotion, there is polarity involved in each emotion the detached one experiences. Emotions are extremes designed specifically by the illusion of power. Weakness or strength is perceived by the outcome of each experience (not particularly physical). What is perceived, be it weakness or strength, will determine the appropriate emotion to 'fuel the fire' of the perception and ultimately dictate the perception for future experiences.

Quote:

---

Cass: There cannot be a 'delusion' of self, there is no invalidating evidence for or against the existence, an illusion would properly categorize the perception of self.

Rhett: The impossibility of an inherently existent self is founded on the validity of causality, which is itself founded on logical proofs.

---

Logic depends on the premise or the elements within. I do not completely argue against causality, but to prove universal causality, there is no Absolute Truth, only Relative Truth in regards to the subject, stemming from the need to gratify the 'natural' egotism of man (human). Absolute Truth is acknowledged but ignored, and all modern systems have been based on Relative Truth. When bringing together Absolute Truth with perception, it is filtered and the result is similar to a prism, shooting it's rays of light into many directions of many different colours, creating Relative Truth.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 94
(11/12/03 12:07 pm)
Reply

Re: What to value?

---

-----
Cass: Could we simplify the 'self':

self > singularity > egotism > illusion of power > illusion of emotion

Rhett: Could you expand on it?

---

The recognition of the illusional self results in distinguished singularity. Detaching the 'one' from the 'whole'.

The act of detaching automatically results in egotism. There is no consciousness of the whole, only of the one. I will refer to the consciousness of one as egotism, but do not mean it in terms of megalomania or typical egotistical pretense, only as a conscious 'one'.

You say that egotism is inherent, are you aware that this means that you are arguing against enlightenment? Through developing a full understanding of the nature of human experience - one can definitely transcend egotism, it is a logically valid experience.

Illusion of power is the inherent result of egotism due to the fact that the recognized detached 'self' believes the illusory need to control pleasant/unpleasant experience (thought, situation, etc) The 'one' is able to distinguish between experiences due to the illusion of power, giving one the option of illusory choice. Ultimately, all aspects of singularity result in the struggle for one to once again be placed with the whole. This is in conjunction with the other aspect of illusion of power, which is the recognition of a 'greater power' which all of the detached strive to place themselves in conjunction with.

I have always valued my individuality, and still do. I have never had a tendency to want to merge with any whole. This is a feminine characteristic, it is not conducive of enlightenment.

From this is derived the illusion of emotion. I mean to classify illusion of power and emotion as 'sisters' meaning one cannot exist without the other. To expand on emotion, there is polarity involved in each emotion the detached one experiences. Emotions are extremes designed specifically by the illusion of power. Weakness or strength is perceived by the outcome of each experience (not particularly physical). What is perceived, be it weakness or strength, will determine the appropriate emotion to 'fuel the fire' of the perception and ultimately dictate the perception for future experiences.

Do you think emotions are inherent, that they cannot be transcended? Emotions are logically invalid, they are based on false notions, primarily the delusion of an inherently existent self.

-----
--
Cass: There cannot be a 'delusion' of self, there is no invalidating evidence for or against the existence, an illusion would properly categorize the perception of self.

Rhett: The impossibility of an inherently existent self is founded on the validity of causality, which is itself founded on logical proofs.
-----

--
Logic depends on the premise or the elements within.

It depends on and is a product of the basal nature of consciousness. The act of arguing against logic only serves to validate its existence.

I do not completely argue against causality,

That's not a strong position to be in!

but to prove universal causality, there is no Absolute Truth, only Relative Truth in regards to the subject, stemming from the need to gratify the 'natural' egotism of man (human).

You have contradicted yourself. Your statement that "there is no Absolute Truth" is itself a statement of Absolute Truth, so it is utterly false and meaningless.

The only logical options available to people are:

1. To accept that absolute truth may exist.
2. To know absolute truth.

To state that absolute truth does exist when one does not know it is illogical.

To state that it does not exist is illogical.

Absolute Truth is acknowledged but ignored, and all modern systems have been based on Relative Truth.

No, most of our systems are still based on a belief in absolute truth, which came from the early Greek philosophers such as Socrates. Science and postmodernism and general societal ignorance have eroded that belief to dangerously low levels, to the point where the continuation of our civilisation is at risk.

When bringing together Absolute Truth with perception, it is filtered and the result is similar to a prism, shooting it's rays of light into many directions of many different colours, creating Relative Truth.

Absolute Truths are only relative in the sense that they need consciousness to be existent, their meaning is timeless and permanent regardless of the experience of them.

Rhett

Rairun

Registered User

Posts: 154

(11/12/03 1:47 pm)

Reply

...

---

Quote:

---

Do you think emotions are inherent, that they cannot be transcended?

Emotions are logically invalid, they are based on false notions, primarily the delusion of an inherently existent self.

---

Rhett, can you explain to me why emotions are logically invalid? If they really are invalid, wouldn't logical thought be too? I see no difference at all between them.

cassiopeiae

Registered User

Posts: 180

(11/12/03 4:20 pm)

Reply

Re: What to value?

---

Quote:

---

Cass: The recognition of the illusional self results in distinguished singularity. Detaching the 'one' from the 'whole'.

The act of detaching automatically results in egotism. There is no consciousness of the whole, only of the one. I will refer to the consciousness of one as egotism, but do not mean it in terms of megalomania or typical egotistical pretense, only as a conscious 'one'.

Rhett: You say that egotism is inherent, are you aware that this means that you are arguing against enlightenment?

---

I am not arguing against enlightenment, only stating that this is how we are brought into the world and how most people exist.

Quote:

---

Rhett: Through developing a full understanding of the nature of human experience - one can definitely transcend egotism, it is a logically valid experience.

---

Agreed.

Quote:

---

Cass: Illusion of power is the inherent result of egotism due to the fact that the recognized detached 'self' believes the illusory need to control pleasant/unpleasant experience (thought, situation, etc) The 'one' is able to distinguish between experiences due to the illusion of power, giving one the option of illusory choice. Ultimately, all aspects of singularity result in the struggle for one to once again be placed with the whole. This is in conjunction with the other aspect of illusion of power, which is the recognition of a 'greater power' which all of the detached strive to place themselves in conjunction with.

Rhett: I have always valued my individuality, and still do. I have never had a tendency to want to merge with any whole. This is a feminine characteristic, it is not conducive of enlightenment.

---

I do not speak of the 'whole' on a social level. I refer to it more along the lines of "mass-consciousness". Regardless, if one is truly enlightened, would not they be a part of everyone else? Would they not know of all situations on the mundane level? What is the point of shedding egotism if you like 'individuality'? Since this is what your enlightenment entails? I am confused on what exactly you think egotism is...

Quote:

---

Cass: From this is derived the illusion of emotion. I mean to classify illusion of power and emotion as 'sisters' meaning one cannot exist without the other.

To expand on emotion, there is polarity involved in each emotion the detached one experiences. Emotions are extremes designed specifically by the illusion of power. Weakness or strength is perceived by the outcome of each experience (not particularly physical). What is perceived, be it weakness or strength, will determine the appropriate emotion to 'fuel the fire' of the perception and ultimately dictate the perception for future experiences.

Rhett: Do you think emotions are inherent, that they cannot be transcended? Emotions are logically invalid, they are based on false notions, primarily the delusion of an inherently existent self.

---

Emotions, as they are presented, as opposite extremes of the same state of being, can definitely be transcended. However, the key is to find the balanced state of being, so the actual emotions (the opposite extremes) are no longer present.

Quote:

---

Cass: Logic depends on the premise or the elements within.

Rhett: It depends on and is a product of the basal nature of consciousness. The act of arguing against logic only serves to validate its existence.

---

I do not argue against "logic" only against the logic of you and/or your sources on the matter.

Quote:

---

Cass: I do not completely argue against causality,

Rhett: That's not a strong position to be in!

Cass: but to prove universal causality, there is no Absolute Truth, only Relative Truth in regards to the subject, stemming from the need to gratify the 'natural' egotism of man (human).

Rhett: You have contradicted yourself. Your statement that "there is no Absolute Truth" is itself a statement of Absolute Truth, so it is utterly false and meaningless.

The only logical options available to people are:

1. To accept that absolute truth may exist.
2. To know absolute truth.

To state that absolute truth does exist when one does not know it is illogical. To state that it does not exist is illogical.

---

I have not contradicted myself in any way. If you re-read, you will see I stated "in regards to the subject", referring to your view in a previous statement of yours The impossibility of an inherently existent self is founded on the validity of causality...

I do not say Absolute Truth does not exist, but what you claim to be Absolute is only Relative.

Quote:

---

Cass: Absolute Truth is acknowledged but ignored, and all modern systems have been based on Relative Truth.

Rhett: Science and postmodernism and general societal ignorance have eroded that belief to dangerously low levels, to the point where the continuation of our civilization is at risk.

---

Exactly...Relative Truth.

Quote:

---

Cass: When bringing together Absolute Truth with perception, it is filtered and the result is similar to a prism, shooting its rays of light into many directions of many different colours, creating Relative Truth.

Rhett: Absolute Truths are only relative in the sense that they need consciousness to be existent, their meaning is timeless and permanent regardless of the experience of them.

---

I believe that is what I said. Perception makes those truths relative by those who perceive. That doesn't mean the Absolutes don't exist, or disappear, only that perception conceals them, regardless of whose perception it is. One must learn how to lift the veil.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 97
(11/13/03 1:39 pm)
Reply

Re: What to value?

---

Rhett: I have always valued my individuality, and still do. I have never had a tendency to want to merge with any whole. This is a feminine characteristic, it is not conducive of enlightenment.

Cass:

I do not speak of the 'whole' on a social level. I refer to it more along the lines of "mass-consciousness". Regardless, if one is truly enlightened, would not they be a part of everyone else? Would they not know of all situations on the mundane level? What is the point of shedding egotism if you like 'individuality'? Since this is what your enlightenment entails? I am confused on what exactly you think egotism is...

I made that point to highlight the nature of what you seemed to be saying.

In actual fact i have always (intrinsically) valued consciousness, so my 'individuality' has been a strong will to consciousness.

Whilst I don't actually think in terms of 'individuality', i have no aversion to doing so, because enlightenment is not about permanently escaping the constructed realm, it is about understanding its nature. Sure, one can dwell in 'no-mind', and that's great, but sooner or later one must use constructs, and more than likely one will choose to use them long before necessary, they are great things, they are the pinnacle of conscious evolution. Regardless of enlightenment, my experiences of consciousness are my experiences of consciousness. Within these experiences are my (delusion of) will, my thoughts, etc. That is my individuality. I could only dissolve that by becoming unconscious.

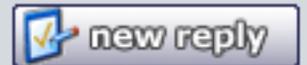

Rhett

cassiopeiae
Registered User
Posts: 182
(11/13/03 3:39 pm)
Reply

Re: What to value?

---

Well said. I completely agree.

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Prerequisites for Enlightenment

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                       | Comment                                                                                                                                                          |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1264(11/13/03 4:02 pm)Reply | Re: What to value?<hr/> Yes, well said.                                                                                                                      |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 270(11/13/03 4:50 pm)Reply         | Re: What to value?<hr/> The weak point though, cassiopeiae, is that you won't marry Rhett Hamilton.Nope and never.                                       |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1721(11/13/03 10:45 pm)Reply    | Re: What to value?<hr/> Quick Paul! He's gotten cass and wolf! It's too late for them, poor dear zombified slaves to his ill...illustrious will! Heil Rhett! |

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 754
(11/14/03 12:08 am)
Reply

Re: What to value?

---

Quote:

---

Rhett: Within these experiences are my (delusion of) will,

---

Quote:

---

Rhett: Understanding that one's will is not the only cause operating in such interactions, and the worthlessness of attaching oneself to anything (in this instance one's values), enables one to retain one's utmost freedom whilst exercising that will.

---

Rhett, what is the difference between your 'delusion of will', and this understood will that you exercise?

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 99
(11/14/03 10:46 am)
Reply

Re: What to value?

---

-----
Cass: Logic depends on the premise or the elements within.

Rhett: It depends on and is a product of the basal nature of consciousness. The act of arguing against logic only serves to validate its existence.

-----

I do not argue against "logic" only against the logic of you and/or your sources on the matter.

Okay. Would you like to offer your thoughts on the nature of logic?

Rhett

|                                                                                            |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 100(11/14/03 11:01 am)Reply | Re: What to value? <hr/> Rhett, what is the difference between your 'delusion of will', and this understood will that you exercise? Hi Dave, There are a number of factors that determine the way i represent my understanding; the nature of the person to whom i am interacting and their particular delusions, trying to maintain consistency so that people such as yourself can cross correlate different posts of mine, trying to make subtle changes each time so that the meaning can be seen through the words, etc. The best way to answer your above question is simply to examine the nature of will, which is intimately tied into the nature of cause and effect. What is your understanding of cause and effect? Rhett |
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 101(11/14/03 11:06 am)Reply | Re: ... <hr/> Rairun:Rhett, can you explain to me why emotions are logically invalid? If they really are invalid, wouldn't logical thought be too? I see no difference at all between them. Hi Rairun, my response to this will take another day or two. Rhett                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1728(11/14/03 11:11 am)Reply       | ---- <hr/> Hi Rhett, I am better than you.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 105
(11/14/03 11:41 am)
Reply

Re: ----

---

Hi Rhett, I am better than you.
That all fine and well, but in what respect?
In another thread you state that your core value is wisdom, and since 'better-ness' relates to values, are you thus stating that you are wiser than me?
Rhett

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1731
(11/14/03 11:49 am)
Reply

---

---

Yes, wiser, better in the respect that I am a more perfect human being than yourself.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 762
(11/14/03 12:17 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

LOL
-----
Quote:

---

Rhett: What is your understanding of cause and effect?

---

The usual scientific ones, the usual broadly philosophical ones, the natural one, the semantic one, the intuitionistic one, the sensual one...y'know. And then there's the perspectives.

Quote:

---

The best way to answer your above question is simply to examine the nature of will, which is intimately tied into the nature of cause and effect.

---

|                                                                                                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                         | So how would you elaborate upon that?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| cassiopeiaeRegistered UserPosts: 184(11/14/03 11:55 pm)Reply                                                                                 | Re: What to value? <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Cass: do not argue against "logic" only against the logic of you and/or your sources on the matter. Rhett: Okay. Would you like to offer your thoughts on the nature of logic? <hr/> Let me rephrase. I do not argue against logic, only the conclusions of you and/or your sources on the matter. |
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 1806(11/15/03 9:58 am)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> Suegraz wrote: Quote: <hr/> Yes, wiser, better in the respect that I am a more perfect human being than yourself. <hr/> This is just a cheap shot, and anti-idealistic to boot. Like fart jokes, anti-idealistic jabs are always guaranteed to raise a laugh. But at what cost?                                                   |

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 106
(11/15/03 1:34 pm)
Reply

Re: What to value?

---

-----
Cass: do not argue against "logic" only against the logic of you and/or your sources on the matter.

Rhett: Okay. Would you like to offer your thoughts on the nature of logic?

-----

Let me rephrase. I do not argue against logic, only the conclusions of you and/or your sources on the matter.

Then you have two options which you could choose to explain.

Rhett

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 107
(11/15/03 1:43 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Dear Suergaz,

You are so predictable i prepared an answer in advance.

Your attention seeking behaviour reminds me of primary school, and further reinforces my estimation of the extent of your immaturity and feminine mindedness. When i first checked out the forum I read a number of your posts before seeing your photo, and since i hadn't come across the name 'Suergaz' before, i judged your sex purely from your posts, i thought you were female. The poor quality of your posts meant that my judgement was more in passing than considered, and although i am not proud of it, I in no way blame myself for it. It took quite a while, even after seeing your photo, to persuade myself that you were male.

I will point out to you, in case you have not noticed, that almost all of your posts lack even a vestige of philosophical content. They are composed of comments, opinions and taunts, which are of no value to this forum, they could simply be deleted and the quality of the discussions would only improve.

Whilst your ego seems quite puny and you seek reinforcement of it far more than philosophical dialogue, i have no interest in boosting it for you, and at this stage no interest in eliminating it from you. You have precipitated these comments, and they are the best i can do for you right now.

I ask you to take responsibility for your childishness.

Rhett

Edited by: Rhett Hamilton at: 11/15/03 1:56 pm

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1738

(11/15/03 9:13 pm)

Reply

----

---

Rhett, you creature of humility! You humid platitudinarian! What a first class demonstration of ressentiment! You say you thought I was a woman, who cares?! This is the bitchiest, snootiest, farty-pantsiest post I have read from you, I ask you to take responsibility for your childishness too! I liked you the first time I read you in here, and I've never stopped liking you, but much I have written to you has been in a suspension of disbelief!

You must forgive me, I forgive you your ugliness!

Your religiosity is astounding,

Why, does the truth seem offensive to you when I forget my natural modesty? I am better than you. I think there are only one or two here who are wicked enough to love me not sparing you the common courtesies that make for decent discussions.

As for you david Quinn, you don't honestly think you're a better person than I am do you?!

You two don't know how to dance...but you must look past my mockery!
So take eachothers hands, bow, and around we go!

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 766
(11/15/03 11:23 pm)
Reply

Re: ----

---

Let's do the logic thing again then eh, and explore the depth of the dogmatisation.

Rhett, tell me about logic.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 109
(11/16/03 10:32 am)
Reply

Re: Emotions

---

-----
Do you think emotions are inherent, that they cannot be transcended? Emotions are logically invalid, they are based on false notions, primarily the delusion of an inherently existent self.
-----

Rhett, can you explain to me why emotions are logically invalid? If they really are invalid, wouldn't logical thought be too? I see no difference at all between them.

The human concept of emotion is logically invalid because it is based on false premises.

The concept 'emotion' is a construct that humans created in an attempt to describe certain aspects of their conscious experience. The very act of creating this construct, of labelling experiences and thoughts in this particular way, then defined and influenced people's future experiences. An emotion is a combination of the experience of a sensation and the mental constructs that are placed onto that sensation. There are two parts to that construct, the thoughts that are experienced during the 'emotion' (in concert with the sensation) and the label that is reflectively attributed to the event (eg. sadness). I can see people doing it, it is quite obvious if one knows what to look for. People reflect on an experience, assessing the nature of what they were thinking at the time and the sensations they experienced, and then attribute it a particular label, for example; "I was angry because my boss treated me unkindly". The label 'angry' is the reflectively attributed emotion, the thoughts at the time were related to being poorly treated, and the sensation component would have been heightened arousal.

It gets rather difficult to follow the causal chain much further because our constructs have quite a hand in determining our experiences, and vice-versa.

So there is a feedback loop as such. We create this construct 'emotion' (and within that categories of emotions), and then make choices in life in accordance with them. So we create this whole cycle of experiences which don't actually have a logical basis. If one values for example 'happiness', then one will direct one's will towards it's actualisation and pay a lot of attention to it, so creating it (and the opposite of it), even though at bottom the whole construct is false.

Bad constructs are a vicious cycle, but emotions are particularly so, because they are a confused link between raw sensory experience and abstract constructs.

My last paragraph touched on another point. As soon as we create a definition we create the opposite of it. If one defines a cup into existence, then one automatically creates not-cup (all that is not the cup). If one creates a desire for happiness then one automatically creates dissatisfaction (unhappiness), because if one desires something, one cannot, by definition, be in possession of it. So to be desirous of happiness is essentially to be unhappy. The more desire, the more unhappiness.

Lets now look at the nature of those sensations which we experience.

Most people's bodies are almost constantly experiencing a certain level of arousal (fear response, stress, suffering) which the individual has a very limited awareness of. This is because they become habituated to this arousal, it evolves in concert with the evolution of their mind. It arises from the delusional constructs that they project onto their experiences, particularly the idea that their experiences are of an inherently existent reality which is composed of inherently existent things. The most pertinent of these things being an inherently existent self. These false notions are the sole source of their fear, because without the attachment they develop for their 'self' (as well as other things) they could not possibly experience fear. It just would not arise. The sensation component of 'emotions' relates to the raising or lowering of this level of arousal. The experience of an emotion like 'love' for instance, can result in a dramatic lowering of one's level of arousal because it involves such an intense level of attachment. Love tends to generate an illusion of security in the lover, thus reducing their level of fear. However, this is not always the case, 'love' is such a monstrously complex and ill defined construct, which i consider further proof of the arbitrariness and falsity of our notions about it. Some 'emotions' are considered desirable even though they actually increase one's level of arousal, for example; excitement. So whether an emotion is considered 'positive' or 'negative' is unrelated to whether it results in a rise or fall in arousal, it is purely related to the value the individual places on that emotion.

I am sure that people can quote all manner of scientific observations that point to emotions having a far more complex physiological basis that what i have described here, but i have only delved into the empirical aspects of this investigation to illustrate the logical truths that are its foundation. So whilst one could say that various aspects of the body might relate more to one emotion than another, or suchlike, it would not falsify the thrust of my arguments, because all empirical investigations are inherently uncertain.

So lets now pinpoint the difference between 'emotions' and logic.

The sun could be considered a mass of particles or elements that are undergoing nuclear fusion (fission?). We humans name it the 'sun' purely out of convenience. Nowhere on the sun is this name for it inscribed, the label is purely arbitrary, it could be called 'glob'. So to is our label 'emotion'. We are basically just labelling aspects of the content of our experiences (though in the case of emotions it includes abstract content as well). Logic on the other hand, is a label that refers to the fundamental nature of consciousness, and the nature of the mental constructs that are built with it. People usually require a considerable understanding of Ultimate Reality before they can fathom the fundamental nature of logic, and since i must end this piece somewhere, i shall end it here.

Rhett

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 110
(11/16/03 10:50 am)
Reply

Re: ---

-----
Rhett: What is your understanding of cause and effect?
-----

The usual scientific ones, the usual broadly philosophical ones, the natural one, the semantic one, the intuitionistic one, the sensual one... y'know. And then there's the perspectives.

Does your understanding of the causal nature of these fit together cohesively, or are each separate to each other, or some combination, or...?

Rhett

Edited by: Rhett Hamilton at: 11/16/03 10:52 am

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1750
(11/16/03 8:48 pm)
Reply

----

Quote:

-----
The sun could be considered a mass of particles or elements that are undergoing nuclear fusion (fission?). We humans name it the 'sun' purely out of convenience. Nowhere on the sun is this name for it inscribed, the label is purely arbitrary, it could be called 'glob'.
-----

I think you could be onto something here Rhett. Are you keeping a diary?

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Prerequisites for Enlightenment

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                  | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| ShadowsovLightRegistered UserPosts: 1(11/17/03 1:50 am)Reply | Re: Prerequisites for Enlightenment <hr/> For humans, the only prerequisite is consciousness :) Unfortunately, emerging consciousness doesn't have all that many 'vehicles' to work with. It's really very simple to understand, but very difficult to 'do', though if you are 'ment' to do it, then you'll do it. And that really is it, the old Nike motto "Just Do It!". We create our un-conscious patterns of reality experience, so you just gotta Feel all the emotions (attracting the thoughts) you usually deny, and bring em into consciousness. Don't even need to be 'spiritual or mystical' to do it, but better to get out the rather narrow and limited logical/rational thought patterns, because, though it may seem to the 'reason worshipers' here that I am denying the mind, in actuality, this denies the potential of mind, by not feeling, and allowing a merger of the 'feminine', which is mostly denied in our collective consciousness :) And thats all I have to say :) "We are Gods, blinded by our own Light, giving birth to Infinity in the darkness" - Me |

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 775
(11/18/03 9:40 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

Rhett: What is your understanding of cause and effect?

DT: The usual scientific ones, the usual broadly philosophical ones, the natural one, the semantic one, the intuitionistic one, the sensual one...y'know. And then there's the perspectives.

Rhett: Does your understanding of the causal nature of these fit together cohesively, or are each separate to each other, or some combination, or...?

---

All of the above. They are each separate, some combine intrinsically, and all fit together more or less cohesively, give the odd pedantic contradiction or two.

---

Quote:

Rhett: The best way to answer your above question is simply to examine the nature of will, which is intimately tied into the nature of cause and effect.

---

So how would you elaborate upon that?

---

Quote:

Rhett: Logic on the other hand, is a label that refers to the fundamental nature of consciousness, and the nature of the mental constructs that are built with it.

---

Could you please describe this fundamental aspect of the nature of consciousness and the mental constructs within it? In other words, define your conception of logic and its bedrock.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 112
(11/18/03 10:55 am)
Reply

Re: Prerequisites for Enlightenment

---

Hi Shadow,

For humans, the only prerequisite is consciousness :)

Are you saying that the only pre-requisite to being considered human is to be conscious? If I genetically engineered a pig to have consciousness, would you then consider it human?

Unfortunately, emerging consciousness doesn't have all that many 'vehicles' to work with. It's really very simple to understand, but very difficult to 'do', though if you are 'ment' to do it, then you'll do it. And that really is it, the old Nike motto "Just Do It!". We create our un-conscious patterns of reality experience, so you just gotta Feel all the emotions (attracting the thoughts) you usually deny, and bring em into consciousness.

Are you suggesting that emotions are inherent to consciousness? What proof do you have of this?

Do you think humans are constantly experiencing emotion? If anyone ever experiences even the shortest moment of time where they do not experience emotion, then emotions cannot be inherent to consciousness.

Don't even need to be 'spiritual or mystical' to do it, but better to get out the rather narrow and limited logical/rational thought patterns, because, though it may seem to the 'reason worshipers' here that I am denying the mind, in actuality, this denies the potential of mind, by not feeling, and allowing a merger of the 'feminine', which is mostly denied in our collective consciousness :)

At the same time as you have told us not to value reason you have given us a reason to get out of what you call logic/rational/reason processes ("because...this denies the potential of mind"). Thus, I need not suggest to you that your thoughts are "rather narrow and limited", because you have already defined yourself as such.

Not only that, but everything you think, including everything you write here, is founded on the logic of A=A. You cannot possibly communicate to us without validating the very basis of logic. For example, that each letter of each word that you write is that letter and no other letter, is an assumption that we must all make to read it. If we did not make that assumption we would be stuck, we could make no progress towards understanding your communication.

It's akin to saying to someone that you hate the colour pink, at the same time as you are wearing a pink dress.

And thats all I have to say :)

"We are Gods, blinded by our own Light, giving birth to Infinity in the darkness" - Me

People that dwell in contradiction (as you do) use it to nullify their abstract consciousness, to dwell as an animal in their immediate sensations. They are thus anti-evolutionary, anti-human, and anti-civilisation, because these are all a product of abstract consciousness.

Rhett

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 113
(11/18/03 11:22 am)
Reply

Re: What to value?

---

Rhett, what is the difference between your 'delusion of will', and this understood will that you exercise?

Just jumping back for a moment, i can see the discrepancy that you are getting at here. I had been trying to sort it out for a little while. I think it would be best for me to use the term 'illusion' of will, rather than delusion. One need not believe in an illusion, whereas a delusion implies false understanding. Thanks.

Regarding your recent post, would you like to take the discussion on causality and logic into the cage so we are free of distraction? I'm not fussed either way, but think it would be of advantage. We could continue in here until the thread becomes available.

Rhett

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1761
(11/18/03 11:32 am)
Reply

---

---

Quote:

---

Are you suggesting that emotions are inherent to consciousness? What proof do you have of this?

Do you think humans are constantly experiencing emotion? If anyone ever experiences even the shortest moment of time where they do not experience emotion, then emotions cannot be inherent to consciousness.

---

Can you attempt to give me an example when a person might experience a time where they do not experience emotion(feeling)?!

You are calling someone anti-human for dwelling in contradiction!?

Rhett, can you prove that life is not a dwelling in contradiction?!

N0X23 ☐
Registered User
Posts: 3
(11/18/03 3:24 pm)
Reply

close but no cigar

---

IMHO Enlightenment exist solely for those who are NOT enlightened.

The horizon of Enlightenment itself is what one must accept, but not by cause and effect or volition. Those that claim to have attained Enlightenment are still desperately grasping for the carrot that dangles on the proverbial string of achievement, desire, practice and ritual.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 1808
(11/19/03 9:10 am)
Reply

re:

---

Since you arrogantly claim to be unenlightened, what worth should we place on your views on the subject of enlightenment?

None.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 114
(11/19/03 10:13 am)
Reply

Re: emotions

---

Can you attempt to give me an example when a person might experience a time where they do not experience emotion(feeling)?!

That you ask me this in this way is further evidence of your animal/egotistical nature. My reply to Rairun gives you the basis for plenty of examples. I rarely experience emotion, so i have plenty of proof for myself. I will create a new thread with some more material on emotions for you and others to think about.

You are calling someone anti-human for dwelling in contradiction!?

If the forerunners of man had not valued the development of their logic humans would not exist as they do today.

Rhett, can you prove that life is not a dwelling in contradiction?!

I can provide the simplest of proofs, for example, how can illogic exist without logic? The concepts are mutually dependent for their existence.

According to your views, you can never prove me wrong on this, because you could only ever be contradicting yourself, your proof would be invalid.

You have argued yourself into a dead end street.

Rhett

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 777
(11/19/03 10:41 am)
Reply

Re: emotions

---

Quote:

---

Rhett: Regarding your recent post, would you like to take the discussion on causality and logic into the cage so we are free of distraction? I'm not fussed either way, but think it would be of advantage. We could continue in here until the thread becomes available.

---

Yep, sounds good. Hopefully Dan will see this and start a thread. If not we can post a request.

Quote:

---

DT: Rhett, what is the difference between your 'delusion of will', and this understood will that you exercise?

Rhett: Just jumping back for a moment, i can see the discrepancy that you are getting at here. I had been trying to sort it out for a little while. I think it would be best for me to use the term 'illusion' of will, rather than delusion. One need not believe in an illusion, whereas a delusion implies false understanding. Thanks.

---

Whilst it could be argued that illusions are a direct product of delusion, and also that delusions are illusory in their subject matter, this isn't really what I was getting at, though I appreciate the fine point you illustrate. My question now would be, is this understood will that you exercise illusory in nature? (illusory meaning seemingly true but actually false, as opposed to illusion, as in 'appearance to mind') Or is it an extant force within causal consciousness, honed by the polished understanding?

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1764

(11/19/03 11:44 am)

Reply

----

---

suergaz:--Can you attempt to give me an example when a person might experience a time where they do not experience emotion(feeling)?!

Rhett:--That you ask me this in this way is further evidence of your animal/egotistical nature. My reply to Rairun gives you the basis for plenty of examples. I rarely experience emotion, so i have plenty of proof for myself. I will create a new thread with some more material on emotions for you and others to think about.

You are deluded in thinking you rarely experience emotion. All experience is emotion, is feeling! Your thought too is feeling! If you do not feel your thought, you are not thinking! My animal nature is evidenced by nothing other than my animal nature, your remark about it is questionable in the extreme.

suergaz:--You are calling someone anti-human for dwelling in contradiction!?

Rhett:--If the forerunners of man had not valued the development of their logic humans would not exist as they do today.

So you don't think that the development of logic includes a certain dwelling in contradiction?!

What you have written is no way an answer to my question. It is essentially an --"If the past wasn't what it was and is the present wouldn't be what it is"---This stating of the obvious, is it to be taken seriously?

suergaz:--Rhett, can you prove that life is not a dwelling in contradiction?!

Rhett:--I can provide the simplest of proofs, for example, how can illogic exist without logic? The concepts are mutually dependent for their existence.

That is not a proof against what I've asked after, but for it, and its opposite too, the freedom in harmony.

Rhett:--According to your views, you can never prove me wrong on this, because you could only ever be contradicting yourself, your proof would be invalid.

You have argued yourself into a dead end street.

Rhett

According to my views? This view of yours, is itself an impasse!

Edited by: suergaz at: 11/19/03 12:00 pm

N0X23 ☐

Registered User

Posts: 8

(11/19/03 3:16 pm)

Reply

Re: ----

---

Quote:

Since you arrogantly claim to be unenlightened, what worth should we place on your views on the subject of enlightenment? None.

---

I am not exactly sure how you derived an arrogant claim out of my comments, especially the one you accuse me of?

You are correct when you stated that the value of my views are worth "None," actually I think it would be more accurate to say that the arbitrary value that we place on such things (personal views on the subject of Enlightenment) are worth Zero, yours included.

It is not within my ability to determine whether you are "Enlightened" or not, nor does the individual Hir/self have this propensity for self diagnosis. But for someone who makes this claim, your language and responses are very suspect, even down to the simple phrase of "That would certainly be the case if I wasn't enlightened."

The very act of subjectifying the object thru conceptual labels and personal identification, leads me to question your self proclaimed accomplishments and cessation.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 118
(11/20/03 11:05 am)
Reply

Re: ----

---

Quote:

---

Suergaz:--Can you attempt to give me an example when a person might experience a time where they do not experience emotion(feeling)?!

Rhett:--That you ask me this in this way is further evidence of your animal/egotistical nature. My reply to Rairun gives you the basis for plenty of examples. I rarely experience emotion, so i have plenty of proof for myself. I will create a new thread with some more material on emotions for you and others to think about.

Suergaz: You are deluded in thinking you rarely experience emotion. All experience is emotion, is feeling! Your thought too is feeling! If you do not feel your thought, you are not thinking! My animal nature is evidenced by nothing other than my animal nature, your remark about it is questionable in the extreme.

---

Rhett: Your response just reinforces my previous reply. We have experiences, which are commonly labelled 'consciousness'. If you want to add further labels then fine, but i won't partake in them in the way you are. If you are going to assert these things - you need to prove them to me. How would you describe and define these things which you are so convinced of? What about people that are drugged such that they do not experience any sensation whatsoever?

Quote:

---

Suergaz:--You are calling someone anti-human for dwelling in contradiction!?

Rhett:--If the forerunners of man had not valued the development of their logic humans would not exist as they do today.

Suergaz: So you don't think that the development of logic includes a certain dwelling in contradiction?!

What you have written is no way an answer to my question. It is essentially an --"If the past wasn't what it was and is the present wouldn't be what it is"---This stating of the obvious, is it to be taken seriously?

---

Rhett: You have missed my point. I am referring to values more so than a historical overview. Sure, many if not most people throughout time have valued dwelling in contradiction, in unconsciousness and ignorance, but key people haven't, and that has made all the difference to humanity. In fact, it has created it.

Quote:

---

Suergaz:--Rhett, can you prove that life is not a dwelling in contradiction?!

Rhett:--I can provide the simplest of proofs, for example, how can illogic exist without logic? The concepts are mutually dependent for their existence. According to your views, you can never prove me wrong on this, because you could only ever be contradicting yourself, your proof would be invalid. You have argued yourself into a dead end street.

Suergaz: That is not a proof against what I've asked after, but for it, and its opposite too, the freedom in harmony.

---

Rhett: Sure, most people are ignorant, egotistical and contradictory, but surely you don't see these as ideals, as what constitutes the essence of human capacity?

If you define humanity to be as such you are missing the crucial point that these people are riding on the backs of the people that have ideals, that try to do better and in fact do do better.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 1810
(11/20/03 11:35 am)
Reply

re:

---

NOX23 wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: Since you arrogantly claim to be unenlightened, what worth should we place on your views on the subject of enlightenment? None.

NOX: I am not exactly sure how you derived an arrogant claim out of my comments, especially the one you accuse me of?

---

Don't worry, I was just having a playful dig. In my experience, most people who claim to be unenlightened arrogantly extend this claim to the rest of the human race - for seemingly no good reason at all. They think that because they themselves are unenlightened, everyone else must be too.

Quote:

---

You are correct when you stated that the value of my views are worth "None," actually I think it would be more accurate to say that the arbitrary value that we place on such things

(personal views on the subject of Enlightenment) are worth Zero, yours included.

---

Should I assume that this opinion of yours is also worth Zero and therefore to be ignored? Or are you miraculously making an exception here?

Quote:

---

It is not within my ability to determine whether you are "Enlightened" or not, nor does the individual Hir/self have this propensity for self diagnosis.

---

How could you possibly know that, oh unenlightened one? Admit it, you're guessing and arrogantly assuming it is a fact.

Self-diagnosis is extremely easy for anyone who has cleared their minds of delusion (i.e. become enlightened). No one else has the clarity of mind and depth of wisdom to perform the task.

Quote:

---

But for someone who makes this claim, your language and responses are very suspect, even down to the simple phrase of "That would certainly be the case if I wasn't enlightened."

---

Why? Do you imagine that enlightened people are somehow bound by your rules?

Quote:

---

The very act of subjectifying the object thru conceptual labels and personal identification, leads me to question your self proclaimed accomplishments and cesation.

---

This is meaningless. One could just as easily question your own point here, simply on account that it is an act of "subjectifying the object thru conceptual labels and personal identification". Everything that we know and think would also be suspect, again simply on that account alone. Even the thought that everything is suspect would be suspect. As you can see, this kind of thinking quickly collapses in on itself and becomes meaningless.

It doesn't really matter if a thought or a piece of knowledge is "subjective" or not. The only thing which counts is whether it is logically true. The truth of " $1+1=2$ " doesn't become false simply because it is subjectively formulated. It doesn't somehow create the doubt that it could equal 3.

ShadowsovLight
Registered User
Posts: 3
(11/20/03 12:13 pm)
Reply

Re: ----

---

Hi Rhett

Well, the main reason I am replying at all, is because at the moment I feel like it, not because what you have said makes me think that any response is necessary :) As most of what you have said suggests you understood very little of what I wrote, and could only reply based on a very limited interpretation, mostly focused on what you say are contradictions. In other words you mostly reacted to what I wrote, which contrary to what you say, shows alot of emotion, even if you deny feeling it. Why all this focus on logical contradictions, most of which are only so based on your limited interpretation? What are you afraid of? Openess?

First off, this thread was about pre-requisites for enlightenment, not what it means to be human, and that was my focus. Second, what makes you think pigs are not conscious?

Your idea of consciousness is much different from my own, as you seem to only attribute consciousness to some mental or brain function. In my understanding everything is conscious, so the 'aargument' about what species is conscious is redundant to me.

And if you want proof of emotion, look at your reply to me, it is filled with emotional aspects, which though you may not be able to see, because of the nature of your perception, are clearly present to me. But then, I tend to look deeper into things than their surface aspects. There are aspects of Reality that go deeper than logic can represent or encompass.

But I nowhere said not to value reason or logic, but only, and you can see your reply as an example, to not limit ourselves to a focus which denies anything but logic and reason, because this also limits the potential of Mind.

And if you think me an animal or anti-evolutionary, well that's fine, that's your perception, but I would wonder if you really have any idea of the nature of evolution. Are you an Objectivist perhaps?

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1770
(11/20/03 1:10 pm)
Reply

Re: ----

---

Quote:

---

Suergaz:--Can you attempt to give me an example when a person might experience a time where they do not experience emotion(feeling)?!

Rhett:--That you ask me this in this way is further evidence of your animal/egotistical nature. My reply to Rairun gives you the basis for plenty of examples. I rarely experience emotion, so i have plenty of proof for myself. I will create a new thread with some more material on emotions for you and others to think about.

Suergaz: You are deluded in thinking you rarely experience emotion. All experience is emotion, is feeling! Your thought too is feeling! If you do not feel your thought, you are not thinking! My animal nature is evidenced by nothing other than my animal nature, your remark about it is questionable in the extreme.

Rhett: Your response just reinforces my previous reply. We have experiences, which are commonly labelled 'consciousness'. If you want to add further labels then fine, but i won't partake in them in the way you are. If you are going to assert these things - you need to prove them to me. How would you describe and define these things which you are so convinced of? What about people that are drugged such that they do not experience any sensation whatsoever?

---

Are you going to say how it reinforces it, or don't you know how? Don't bother, anything of mine can only reinforce what of yours it goes with or goes against as the case may be. I am more conscious than you. Rhett, when you do not feel conscious, you are unconscious. Would you like to discuss subconsciousness? What do you imagine I am convinced of?! Tell me exactly what you need proof of, that emotion is not a false notion?! emotion is not a notion, it is consciousness!

Quote:

---

Suergaz:--You are calling someone anti-human for dwelling in contradiction!?

Rhett:--If the forerunners of man had not valued the development of their logic humans would not exist as they do today.

Suergaz: So you don't think that the development of logic includes a certain dwelling in contradiction?!

What you have written is no way an answer to my question. It is essentially an --"If the past wasn't what it was and is the present wouldn't be what it is"---This stating of the obvious, is it to be taken seriously?

Rhett: You have missed my point. I am referring to values more so than a historical overview. Sure, many if not most people throughout time have valued dwelling in contradiction, in unconsciousness and ignorance, but key people haven't, and that has made all the difference to humanity. In fact, it has created it.

---

I never missed your point. One who values logic more than ones life may well dwell in contradiction, and I mean well so where does this calling someone anti-human have anything to do with logic when it is quite clear they are human?

Quote:

---

Suergaz:--Rhett, can you prove that life is not a dwelling in contradiction?!

Rhett:--I can provide the simplest of proofs, for example, how can illogic exist without logic? The concepts are mutually dependent for their existence. According to your views, you can never prove me wrong on this, because you could only ever be contradicting yourself, your proof would be invalid. You have argued yourself into a dead end street.

Suergaz: That is not a proof against what I've asked after, but for it, and its opposite too, the freedom in harmony.

Rhett: Sure, most people are ignorant, egotistical and contradictory, but surely you don't see these as ideals, as what constitutes the essence of human capacity?

If you define humanity to be as such you are missing the crucial point that these people are riding on the backs of the people that have ideals, that try to do better and in fact do do better.

---

I am not defining humanity to be as such, and I am not the one who has said that most people are ignorant egotistical and contradictory. You're all puffed out.

Edited by: suergaz at: 11/20/03 1:15 pm

N0X23

Registered User

Posts: 10

(11/20/03 4:46 pm)

Reply

Re: ----

---

---

Quote:

---

Don't worry, I was just having a playful dig. In my experience, most people who claim to be unenlightened arrogantly extend this claim to the rest of the human race - for seemingly no good reason at all. They think that because they themselves are unenlightened, everyone else must be too.

---

Worry about what?

Would you please explain where you think I have stated to be unenlightened or have made a personal claim of any such matter?

Generalizations are not only arrogant, but more to the point, complete and utter ignorance.

---

Quote:

---

Should I assume that this opinion of yours is also worth Zero and therefore to be ignored? Or are you miraculously making an exception here?

---

You can assume and ignore anything you want Mr. Quinn.

Quote:

---

How could you possibly know that, oh unenlightened one? Admit it, you're guessing and arrogantly assuming it is a fact.

---

No, I do not believe or claim that anything I say is fact and I will not admit to your assumed accusations.

Why do you keep calling me arrogant?

Quote:

---

Why? Do you imagine that enlightened people are somehow bound by your rules?

---

I have no rules, how did you arrive at this?

Quote:

---

This is meaningless. One could just as easily question your own point here, simply on account that it is an act of "subjectifying the object thru conceptual labels and personal identification". Everything that we know and think would also be suspect, again simply on that account alone. Even the thought that everything is suspect would be suspect. As you can see, this kind of thinking quickly collapses in on itself and becomes meaningless.

---

Ah Yes meaningless... Things only become meaningless once we attempt to find meaning in them.

Statements such as "That would be the case if I wasn't enlightened", are born from conceptual thought and a desperate grasping for meaning.

Yes, I do agree that everything the we think and know should be under suspicion, because once one has decided that they have reached a final conclusion or all encompassing correct and logical Truth, they proceed to dive head first into the pit of Blind Faith and dogmatic superstitions.

True, logic and reason are beneficial tools to us and when used properly can remove a great deal of ignorance, but when applied to the context of Liberating the mind it will quickly collapse in on itself, hence the Paradox of the self/mind.

If one were to apply logic to a the quandary of a mirage, one will be able to logically deduce the cause of the illusion and with proper application of said knowledge ,would then have the possibility to become conceptual wisdom, but it will, in no way, help one reach the pond and drink the water.

1+1 does equal 2, but Knowledge + Wisdom do not equal Enlightenment.

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 284
(11/20/03 5:07 pm)
Reply

Re: ----

---

I cannot speak for David Quinn, but my guess is that he calls you arrogant because he's right. You are arrogant. Your answers to him in your reply-post above prove that. At least to me they do.

'N0X23'. Whoaaaaahhahaaah! Et cetera.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 1812
(11/21/03 9:26 am)
Reply

Re: ----

---

NOX23 wrote:

Quote:

---

Would you please explain where you think I have stated to be unenlightened or have made a personal claim of any such matter?

---

You wrote in a previous post:

Those that claim to have attained Enlightenment are still desperately grasping for the carrot that dangles on the proverbial string of achievement, desire, practice and ritual.

I naturally concluded from this that you don't claim to be enlightened, which is equivalent to claiming that you are unenlightened. Either that or you secretly think you are enlightened, but don't want to destroy it (somehow) by admitting it openly to others - which is, of course, insane.

Quote:

---

Why do you keep calling me arrogant?

---

Because you keep arrogantly stating what enlightened people should and shouldn't do.

Quote:

---

I do not believe or claim that anything I say is fact .....

---

Oh God, not another one. Won't anyone take responsibility for what they say?

Since you don't even believe in your own words, I won't waste my time on them anymore.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 120
(11/21/03 11:22 am)
Reply

Re: ----

---

Quote:

---

Hi Rhett

Well, the main reason I am replying at all, is because at the moment I feel like it, not because what you have said makes me think that any response is necessary :)

---

If only you were willing to investigate exactly what you mean by 'feel'. Since you have communicated it to me, your 'feeling' must have made an appearance to your consciousness, so you do have the potential to understand it.

Quote:

---

As most of what you have said suggests you understood very little of what I wrote, and could only reply based on a very limited interpretation, mostly focused on what you say are contradictions. In other words you mostly reacted to what I wrote, which contrary to what you say, shows alot of emotion, even if you deny feeling it.

---

I can only ever respond to what you write...how could i do anything else? You are highly likely to be projecting all manner of emotions on me that i am not having.

Quote:

---

Why all this focus on logical contradictions, most of which are only so based on your limited interpretation? What are you afraid of? Openness?

---

If only you understood yourself enough to be open. Logic (as i define it anyway) relates to the basic nature of consciousness and thought, so it is the bedrock of any concept one communicates. If there are errors in people's bedrock, i will do my best to fix them, i would be highly un-virtuous to ignore their contradictions. If they aren't interested in thinking, then they shouldn't be posting on a philosophy forum.

Quote:

---

First off, this thread was about pre-requisites for enlightenment, not what it means to be human, and that was my focus. Second, what makes you think pigs are not conscious?

---

It all depends on how one defines consciousness. In the context of this discussion i defined it as being abstract thought, which necessarily involves words. I don't think pigs use words, but i am open to any evidence you may have.

Quote:

---

Your idea of consciousness is much different from my own, as you seem to only attribute consciousness to some mental or brain function. In my understanding everything is conscious, so the 'argument' about what species is conscious is redundant to me.

---

So what is your definition of consciousness? You saying that everything is conscious is by no means a definition.

Quote:

---

And if you want proof of emotion, look at your reply to me, it is filled with emotional aspects, which though you may not be able to see, because of the nature of your perception, are clearly present to me. But then, I tend to look deeper into things than their surface aspects. There are aspects of Reality that go deeper than logic can represent or encompass.

---

Once again, you can only ever experience a fabrication, an imagining, of what other people are thinking. You can never be certain about what they are actually thinking, or indeed that they exist and are conscious. Since you are not enlightened, let me suggest that you have very little idea of what i am really thinking.

How would you describe these 'deeper aspects' that you mention?

Quote:

---

But I nowhere said not to value reason or logic, but only, and you can see your reply as an example, to not limit ourselves to a focus which denies anything but logic and reason, because this also limits the potential of Mind.

---

Since most people are illogical and deluded, i will do my best to impress upon them the value of logic.

If not reason, then what else do you suggest one should use to guide one's actions?

Quote:

---

And if you think me an animal or anti-evolutionary, well that's fine, that's your perception, but I would wonder if you really have any idea of the nature of evolution. Are you an Objectivist perhaps?

---

Whilst emotions may have had value to humans in previous contexts (against predators etc), they are well past their use by date in relation to the present.

I have the deepest understanding of evolution possible, i understand the nature of Reality and causation. I am concerned with the objective and the subjective, and i understand the nature in which they are one.

Rhett

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 286
(11/21/03 11:44 am)
Reply

Re: ----

---

Quote:

---

I have the deepest understanding of evolution possible, i understand the nature of Reality and causation. I am concerned with the objective and the subjective, and i understand the nature in which they are one.

---

I'm glad that God finally opened up on us.

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Prerequisites for Enlightenment

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                       | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1275(11/21/03 2:19 pm)Reply | --<hr/> David, as usual, I get the distinct impression you are protecting territory like a prowling lion.TharanP.S. But nevertheless, this forum benefits from your input, IMO.                                        |
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 1814(11/22/03 9:53 am)Reply    | re:<hr/> I would call it spirited iconoclasm, rather than "protecting territory". Domestic concerns don't particularly interest me.Someone has to stand up to the cult of postmodernism before it wipes us all out completely. |

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 121
(11/22/03 10:48 am)
Reply

Re: ----

---

-----
Suergaz:--Can you attempt to give me an example when a person might experience a time where they do not experience emotion(feeling)?!

Rhett:--That you ask me this in this way is further evidence of your animal/egotistical nature. My reply to Rairun gives you the basis for plenty of examples. I rarely experience emotion, so i have plenty of proof for myself. I will create a new thread with some more material on emotions for you and others to think about.

Suergaz: You are deluded in thinking you rarely experience emotion. All experience is emotion, is feeling! Your thought too is feeling! If you do not feel your thought, you are not thinking! My animal nature is evidenced by nothing other than my animal nature, your remark about it is questionable in the extreme.

Rhett: Your response just reinforces my previous reply. We have experiences, which are commonly labelled 'consciousness'. If you want to add further labels then fine, but i won't partake in them in the way you are. If you are going to assert these things - you need to prove them to me. How would you describe and define these things which you are so convinced of? What about people that are drugged such that they do not experience any sensation whatsoever?

-----
Suergaz: I am more conscious than you. Rhett,

Rhett: I think it is likely that you are experiencing a lot of intense realisations at the moment, just as i was at your age. I also consider you quite lucky to have come upon the wisdom of Kevin/David/Dan at a relatively young age (but if you don't read beyond the forum you are missing the essence of it). However, your thoughts seem in stark contrast to those that you are being exposed to, and the potency of my realisations have been undiminished for the last 10 years...so i think you have quite a way to go before you can rightfully make claims about being wiser than me.

Your statement that you are more conscious than me is fundamentally deluded, you can never be certain about my consciousness. As to the likelihood of you being correct...i don't think so, but you can work on it though.

You attempt to hide behind mockery, but by doing so you make a mockery of yourself, and you reveal yourself nonetheless.

Suergaz: when you do not feel conscious, you are unconscious.

Rhett: Philosophy is about backing up concepts with logical reasoning. Blanket statements are worthless.

Suergaz: Would you like to discuss subconsciousness?

Rhett: No. That would be an empirical investigation, and thus inherently uncertain.

I have little interest in such, especially at the moment.

Suergaz: What do you imagine I am convinced of?!

Rhett: That experience and thought is emotion and feeling, exactly what you've said in your posts.

Suergaz: Tell me exactly what you need proof of, that emotion is not a false notion?! emotion is not a notion, it is consciousness!

Rhett: Even consciousness is a notion that requires definition. If you want to define our experiences as emotion, fine and well. Lets say that i follow with you on this, what then is consciousness? If you are saying that consciousness and emotion are exactly the same thing, then why have two different labels? I think you are very mixed up, i think your definitions of feelings, emotion, thought and consciousness need a lot of refining.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1278
(11/22/03 1:17 pm)
Reply

Re: re:

---

DQ wrote,

Quote:

---

I would call it spirited iconoclasm, rather than "protecting territory". Domestic concerns don't particularly interest me.

Someone has to stand up to the cult of postmodernism before it wipes us all out completely.

---

How would a student of Truth classify the desire to seek out false prophets and idols and "stand up to the cult." Also, how would postmodernism "wipe us out completely?"

I am not concerned with figures of speech. My questions focus on the motivation behind the literal interpretation of those words.

Tharan

Rairun
Registered User
Posts: 158
(11/22/03 1:23 pm)
Reply

...

---

A friend of mine said I was really wise and conscious.

My mom doesn't believe it though. :/

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 292
(11/22/03 3:42 pm)
Reply

Re: ...

---

I believe your friend.

:~)

N0X23 ☐

Registered User

Posts: 12

(11/23/03 4:31 am)

Reply

Re: ...

---

Paul says,

Quote:

---

Geez. I'll keep my fingers crossed for you, N0X23!

*shivering*

---

<Hands Paul a nice, warm coat> Better now , Love? ;)

Paul

Registered User

Posts: 297

(11/23/03 7:01 am)

Reply

Re: ...

---

I hope you liked David Quinn's answer. I did.

Thanks for the coat :-)

N0X23 ☐

Registered User

Posts: 15

(11/24/03 2:51 am)

Reply

Re: ...

---

Pauly says

Quote:

---

Indepth soul searching reply. Yes. No. Oh no. Love Ya just the same.

---

No, sorry mate, not searching for ghosts.

Love ya right back....Hugs all'round then eh?

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 303
(11/24/03 3:01 am)
Reply

Oh, you N0X23

---

My love for you has ended. Period.
Try to live with that.
(It wasn't even a fur coat!)

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 1817
(11/24/03 8:55 am)
Reply

Re: re:

---

Tharan wrote:

Quote:

---

How would a student of Truth classify the desire to seek out false prophets and idols and "stand up to the cult."

---

Serving the cause of wisdom. One becomes conscious of Truth by exposing core falseness.

Quote:

---

Also, how would postmodernism "wipe us out completely?"

---

By undermining the mind's ability to comprehend Ultimate Truth. Postmodernism locks the mind into a kind of shallow relativism, from which it finds it very hard to escape. People are using postmodernism to destroy traditional religious and philosophic concepts (which their egos deeply desire), but they are not committed enough to reason and truth to go beyond postmodernism when the job is done. The result is a kind of nihilistic vacuum.

Because this kind of shallow thinking is slowly taking over the "educated" portion of humanity (and will therefore eventually dominate the entire culture, if it hasn't done so already), there is a huge danger that our species will become spiritually and philosophically dead.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1282
(11/24/03 11:13 am)
Reply

Re: re:

---

DQ wrote,

Quote:

---

One becomes conscious of Truth by exposing core falseness.

---

Is the process of exposing external falseness essential to the achievement of internal enlightenment?

Quote:

---

People are using postmodernism to destroy traditional religious and philosophic concepts (which their egos deeply desire), but they are not committed enough to reason and truth to go beyond postmodernism when the job is done. The result is a kind of nihilistic vacuum.

Because this kind of shallow thinking is slowly taking over the "educated" portion of humanity (and will therefore eventually dominate the entire culture, if it hasn't done so already), there is a huge danger that our species will become spiritually and philosophically dead.

---

I suppose my essentially positive personality sees this scenario somewhat differently. For every vacuum, there is energy waiting to fill. That is where people like you and I come in. And many others. The voice of reason always outlasts the merely loud voices. With communication the way it is currently, the potential for dissemination is better than ever before. The future of communication is only going to improve.

I will not be wiped out. I suspect, nor will you. My body may die, but reason cannot be abolished in the long term. Therefore, the spirit of Truth will prevail. I am simply a laborer carrying my load up the hill; speaking the Truth.

|                                                                                                                                                                      |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                      | Tharan                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 395(11/24/03 12:59 pm)Reply   | Re: re: <hr/> Who actually knows what postmodernism means. To me it means zero. Segregating world philosophies like this is just a result of academically inclined philosophers inventing differences and etching out a niche so that their name gets mentioned as being an expert on something. There is no danger that our species will become spiritually and philosophically dead, however there is a danger that a larger percentage of our species will do so. Probably depends on how entertaining virtual reality becomes, though even that won't matter as evolution will continue to make us dissatisfied with what we have. As a species, we are still only partway through the age of information and when we work out what to do with all this info, our attention will turn more to harnessing what the mind offers. My body may die, but reason cannot be abolished in the long term. Therefore, the spirit of Truth will prevail. I am simply a laborer carrying my load up the hill; speaking the Truth. Lol, Tharan wants to be Jesus. |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1776(11/24/03 1:03 pm)Reply                                                                                  | ---- <hr/> Jimhaz is right--- postmodernism David Quinn?! Jimhaz is wrong about the danger.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 397(11/24/03 1:14 pm)Reply  | Re: ---- <hr/> If alive, you can't be philosophically dead, unless in the future they decide to breed humans with limited brains, which could happen. Spiritually dead - we can only hope so. Isn't that enlightenment?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1283
(11/24/03 2:50 pm)
Reply

Re:

---

Jim wrote,

Quote:

---

Lol, Tharan wants to be Jesus.

---

Tharan wants to be Tharan. Plus, I am not Jewish (regardless of my circumcision). I wouldn't turn the other cheek.

Allah

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 399
(11/24/03 3:02 pm)
Reply

Re: Re:

---

Your words just gave me the impression of a modern day Jesus struggling up the mount bearing the heavy cross of truth on your shoulders.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1783
(11/24/03 7:04 pm)
Reply

--

---

Quote:

---

Rhett: I think it is likely that you are experiencing a lot of intense realisations at the moment, just as i was at your age. I also consider you quite lucky to have come upon the wisdom of Kevin/David/Dan at a relatively young age (but if you don't read beyond the forum you are missing the essence of it).

---

Oh? What is your age? You never replied when I asked you. How can I be missing the essence of Dans Davids or Kevins wisdom by not reading their writings outside of this forum? You mean their writing here is of little value because it comes into contact with the writing of others?

Quote:

---

However,
your thoughts seem in stark contrast to those that you are being exposed to,
and the potency of my realisations have been undiminished for the last 10 years...so i think you have quite a way to go before you can rightfully make claims about being wiser than me.

---

Stark stark contrast! It is because I resemble myself more closely than anyone here does! This has nothing to do with what people call conscience but with intellect. No-one is questioning the potency of your realizations, at least not their potency for your own life, and my starkly contrasted observations do not diminish them, although they do as you say--- they starkly contrast with them!

Quote:

---

Your statement that you are more conscious than me is fundamentally deluded, you can never be certain about my consciousness. As to the likelihood of you being correct...i don't think so, but you can work on it though.

---

No, I can be certain about your consciousness, I just cannot have it.

Quote:

---

You attempt to hide behind mockery, but by doing so you make a mockery of yourself, and you reveal yourself nonetheless.

---

I am not afraid to mock at myself in mocking, and if it comes from my not understanding, it at least does not come from any ill will towards you or myself. It is why, as you say, I cannot hide in my mockery. I revel in it.

Quote:

---

Suergaz: when you do not feel conscious, you are unconscious.

Rhett: Philosophy is about backing up concepts with logical reasoning. Blanket statements are worthless.

---

But it is a true statement! Philosophy also has to do with tearing down concepts with reason.

Quote:

---

Suergaz: Would you like to discuss subconsciousness?

Rhett: No. That would be an empirical investigation, and thus inherently uncertain.

I have little interest in such, especially at the moment.

---

What you mean is, for you to discuss subconsciousness with me, you would find yourself in an empirical investigation. To entertain likelihoods, and unlikelihoods, is this your preference?

Quote:

---

Rhett: Even consciousness is a notion that requires definition. If you want to define our experiences as emotion, fine and well. Lets say that i follow with you on this, what then is consciousness? If you are saying that consciousness and emotion are exactly the same thing, then why have two different labels?

---

Because they cater to certain specifics within the same thing. Consciousness is a distinguishing of thought from feeling for the purpose of clarity of communication. Thought and feeling are inseparable.

Quote:

---

I think you are very mixed up, i think your definitions of feelings, emotion, thought and consciousness need a lot of refining.

---

I think you're uncertain.

Edited by: suergaz at: 11/24/03 7:32 pm

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 1819
(11/25/03 3:07 pm)
Reply

Re: re:

---

Jimhaz wrote:

Quote:

---

Who actually knows what postmodernism means.

---

I specifically mean the modern philosophical outlook which asserts that everything is uncertain, Truth is impossible to know, all views are subjective, all language crap, etc, etc ..... Surely, you must know the tune by now.

Such a philosophy is everywhere nowadays. Over the past few decades, anyone with a higher education has been brainwashed by it. Nearly everyone who comes to this forum subscribes to it and proclaims it as though no one has ever heard of it before.

Quote:

---

To me it means zero. Segregating world philosophies like this is just a result of academically inclined philosophers inventing differences and etching out a niche so that their name gets mentioned as being an expert on something.

---

It can also be a process of intelligent discrimination, of becoming wise and achieving clarity of thought.

Quote:

---

There is no danger that our species will become spiritually and philosophically dead, however there is a danger that a larger percentage of our species will do so.

---

Save for this forum, I believe that our species is already spiritually and philosophically dead. Certainly, I haven't seen any signs of wisdom anywhere else.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 1820

(11/25/03 3:23 pm)

Reply

Re: re:

---

Tharan wrote:

Quote:

---

Is the process of exposing external falseness essential to the achievement of internal enlightenment?

---

This is a complex question with lots of different factors. While it is possible to achieve internal enlightenment while refraining from "speaking out" against the world's falseness, the inherent duplicity involved in this silence has negative consequences further down the track. To be sure, there might be good philosophic reasons in particular circumstances for remaining silent, but by and large people usually do it out of fear and the misguided desire to protect their egos. If the lover of Truth falls into the habit of doing this over and over again, then he is in effect entrenching his ego - and thus, at best, entrenching a diluted form of enlightenment.

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Prerequisites for Enlightenment

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| N0X23  Registered UserPosts: 17(11/25/03 4:16 pm)Reply  | Re: re: <hr/> Quote: <hr/> I specifically mean the modern philosophical outlook which asserts that everything is uncertain, Truth is impossible to know, all views are subjective, all language crap, etc, etc ..... Surely, you must know the tune by now. <hr/> I agree that it is a very limited outlook which unfortunately usually leads many unsuspecting seekers straight into nihilism.But it does have at least one positive thing going for it, it forces their concrete reality tunnels open at least a crack, enough so the fortunate and the intuitive might reevaluate their stringent beliefs as not being as true and right as once thought and that there might be something more to Reality/Truth than first taught, thought or forced. Quote: <hr/> Save for this forum, I believe that our species is already spiritually and philosophically dead. Certainly, I haven't seen any signs of wisdom anywhere else. <hr/> |

But isn't it thru death that new life prospers in this, our cyclic existence?
Perhaps we are currently in the spiritual and philosophical Bardos.

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 402

(11/25/03 7:52 pm)

Reply

Re: re:

---

Postmodernism... Such a philosophy is everywhere nowadays. Over the past few decades, anyone with a higher education has been brainwashed by it. Nearly everyone who comes to this forum subscribes to it and proclaims it as though no one has ever heard of it before.

Umm, yes well then I subscribe to it as well. But isn't it logical that I do so. How can people not, when truth is interconnected with everything else and one is not enlightened. Even individual segments of your ultimate reality 'theory', rely on other segments for its truthfulness, as no individual segment such as  $A=A$  is sufficient. Is it simply a recognition that one is not enlightened.

Save for this forum, I believe that our species is already spiritually and philosophically dead. Certainly, I haven't seen any signs of wisdom anywhere else.

When you make statements like this, that cannot possibly be true, and it serves to make out as if the QRS are the equivalent of Noah floating above a sea of mental folly, then others lose respect for and are less drawn to those things you communicate, that they are able to recognise as 'wisdom'.

To limit 'wisdom' to only be reasoning that fits in with your perception/ understanding of ultimate reality is cheating. You can't redefine commonly understood definitions to suit your own purposes.

I class wisdom as that which directly or indirectly leads to a longer lasting or deeper consciousness for an individual or for the species.

You know these things yet you still express them, so how can your words be those of a wise man? Who are you to judge anything when you shy away from empirical investigations? Are you not being a postmodernist yourself when you speak of the folly of empirical knowledge?

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 1821

(11/26/03 9:02 am)

Reply

re:

Jimhaz wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: Postmodernism... Such a philosophy is everywhere nowadays. Over the past few decades, anyone with a higher education has been brainwashed by it. Nearly everyone who comes to this forum subscribes to it and proclaims it as though no one has ever heard of it before.

JH: Umm, yes well then I subscribe to it as well. But isn't it logical that I do so. How can people not, when truth is interconnected with everything else and one is not enlightened.

---

Why would you subscribe to an uncertain, subjective, crappy view?

Quote:

---

Even individual segments of your ultimate reality 'theory', rely on other segments for its truthfulness, as no individual segment such as  $A=A$  is sufficient.

---

Two things: My ultimate reality "theory" isn't really a theory, but a corrective. It addresses a delusion that is both widespread within the community and very deep within the human psyche. It is a medicine that is no longer useful when the sickness is cured.

Secondly,  $A=A$  is indeed the sole linchpin of the corrective. It is by thoroughly applying the principle of  $A=A$  to the delusions, beliefs, world-views, concepts, etc, that already exist in the world which leads to enlightenment - i.e. to an experiential knowledge that is beyond delusion, beliefs, world-views, and concepts.

Quote:

---

Is it simply a recognition that one is not enlightened.

---

There is a world of difference between recognizing that one is personally unenlightened (which is a form of honesty) and subscribing to the view that enlightenment is inherently impossible (which is the entrenched view of postmodernism).

Quote:

---

DQ: Save for this forum, I believe that our species is already spiritually and philosophically dead. Certainly, I haven't seen any signs of wisdom anywhere else.

JH: When you make statements like this, that cannot possibly be true, and it serves to make out as if the QRS are the equivalent of Noah floating above a sea of mental folly, then others lose respect for and are less drawn to those things you communicate, that they are able to recognise as 'wisdom'.

To limit 'wisdom' to only be reasoning that fits in with your perception/understanding of ultimate reality is cheating.

---

If limiting wisdom to the full comprehension of Reality is cheating, then I am a cheater.

Quote:

---

Who are you to judge anything when you shy away from empirical investigations?

---

What gives you that idea? Far from shying away from it, I am constantly engaging in empirical investigations throughout the course of my daily life. But unlike most people, I don't make the mistake of pretending that empirical investigations can lead to ultimate knowledge, or that empirical investigation is the only valid form of investigation there is.

Quote:

---

Are you not being a postmodernist yourself when you speak of the folly of empirical knowledge?

---

I classify the inherent impossibility of empirical investigation in uncovering ultimate knowledge as an objective fact - which automatically disqualifies me from being a postmodernist.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 1822
(11/26/03 9:17 am)
Reply

re:

---

NOX23 wrote:

Quote:

---

I agree that [postmodernism] is a very limited outlook which unfortunately usually leads many unsuspecting seekers straight into nihilism.

But it does have at least one positive thing going for it, it forces their concrete reality tunnels open at least a crack, enough so the fortunate and the intuitive might reevaluate their stringent beliefs as not being as true and right as once thought and that there might be something more to Reality/Truth than first taught, thought or forced.

---

There is some truth in that. I agree that postmodernism has its uses, particularly in challenging religious fundamentalism and the like. With all the terrorist activity going on, it's clear that some parts of the world could do with a big dollop of postmodernism. My concern, though, is that people too easily fall into the trap of turning postmodernism into a fundamentalist religion itself, and thus in a more subtle way they remain closed off to Truth.

Quote:

---

DQ: Save for this forum, I believe that our species is already spiritually and philosophically dead. Certainly, I haven't seen any signs of wisdom anywhere else.

NOX23: But isn't it thru death that new life prospers in this, our cyclic existence? Perhaps we are currently in the spiritual and philosophical Bardos.

---

Definitely. The Buddha predicted the decline of wisdom thousands of years ago and said that it would coincide with the rise of women in the world. How prescient he was.

Yes, eventually, through chance, wisdom will eventually rise once more. But it could take millions of years before this happens. I'd rather not rely on chance. Things could happen a lot quicker if we consciously and purposely tried to spark a renaissance.

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 405
(11/26/03 9:21 am)
Reply

Re: re:

---

I can relate to those answers - my mind is not bringing up any new questions.

This comment was particularly useful. "It is a medicine that is no longer useful when the sickness is cured".

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 133
(11/26/03 11:22 am)
Reply

Re: --

---

Quote:

-----
Rhett: I think it is likely that you are experiencing a lot of intense realisations at the moment, just as i was at your age. I also consider you quite lucky to have come upon the wisdom of Kevin/David/Dan at a relatively young age (but if you don't read beyond the forum you are missing the essence of it).
-----

Oh? What is your age? You never replied when I asked you. How can I be missing the essence of Dans Davids or Kevins wisdom by not reading their writings outside of this forum? You mean their writing here is of little value because it comes into contact with the writing of others?

In a sense yes. The higher realms of Truth are not being discussed on this forum at present. This is not happening for a variety of reasons, and partly because they are focused on writing it down as clearly as possible for all future generations. They know a shitload of stuff that they are not discussing here, essential crucial stuff, and have made it available to you via a simple mouseclick. You could not possibly fathom what you are missing out on.

Quote:

---

However,

your thoughts seem in stark contrast to those that you are being exposed to, and the potency of my realisations have been undiminished for the last 10 years...so i think you have quite a way to go before you can rightfully make claims about being wiser than me.

---

Stark stark contrast! It is because I resemble myself more closely than anyone here does!

How can you not be yourself? Are you suggesting that people are offering views that are not of their own creation whereas yours are? That seems quite contradictory to my experience of you. You don't surprise or inform me in the slightest, nor resemble anything but common mediocrity.

This has nothing to do with what people call conscience but with intellect. No-one is questioning the potency of your realizations, at least not their potency for your own life, and my starkly contrasted observations do not diminish them, although they do as you say--- they starkly contrast with them!

Your observations are commonplace. I tend to avoid stating that which people already know.

Quote:

---

Your statement that you are more conscious than me is fundamentally deluded, you can never be certain about my consciousness. As to the likelihood of you being correct...i don't think so, but you can work on it though.

---

No, I can be certain about your consciousness, I just cannot have it.

Prove to me that i exist and am conscious. I know you can't. I could just be a computer program, answering your posts isn't hard.

Quote:

---

You attempt to hide behind mockery, but by doing so you make a mockery of yourself, and you reveal yourself nonetheless.

---

I am not afraid to mock at myself in mocking, and if it comes from my not understanding, it at least does not come from any ill will towards you or myself. It is why, as you say, I cannot hide in my mockery. I revel in it.

I have always had such an intense sense of existence that it has never even occurred to me to boost my ego, quite the opposite, and I have always had a sense of the negative effects of egotistical forces. Since you gave such a brief and poor definition of ego in another post i don't really know what you are getting at when you say that you relish ego.

Quote:

---

Suergaz: when you do not feel conscious, you are unconscious.

Rhett: Philosophy is about backing up concepts with logical reasoning. Blanket statements are worthless.

---

But it is a true statement! Philosophy also has to do with tearing down concepts with reason.

Gee, you have really extended yourself this time. Another couple of blanket statements, and this time you have contradicted yourself by stating a valuing of reason at the same time as you offer none.

Quote:

---

Suergaz: Would you like to discuss subconsciousness?

Rhett: No. That would be an empirical investigation, and thus inherently uncertain.

I have little interest in such, especially at the moment.

---

What you mean is, for you to discuss subconsciousness with me, you would find yourself in an empirical investigation. To entertain likelihoods, and unlikelihoods, is this your preference?

I meant exactly what i said, which is almost exactly what you said. Empirical investigations are all about likelihoods and unlikelihoods. My preference at present is for the investigation of logical proofs, which are necessarily true or false.

Quote:

---

Rhett: Even consciousness is a notion that requires definition. If you want to define our experiences as emotion, fine and well. Lets say that i follow with you on this, what then is consciousness? If you are saying that consciousness and emotion are exactly the same thing, then why have two different labels?

---

Because they cater to certain specifics within the same thing. Consciousness is a distinguishing of thought from feeling for the purpose of clarity of communication. Thought and feeling are inseparable.

All communication and thought is about making distinctions. Everything (thought and feeling included) is inherently co-joined and of the same fundamental nature. Your ignorance of Ultimate Reality is quite obvious here.

Quote:

---

I think you are very mixed up, i think your definitions of feelings, emotion, thought and consciousness need a lot of refining.

---

I think you're uncertain.

Why? I don't admit to uncertainty, i state my case quite clearly, i have written a number of detailed pieces on these topics, etc.

You have stretched my interest in this discussion to near breaking point with your stubborn irrelevancy.

Rhett

|                                                                                      |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1788(11/26/03 12:54 pm)Reply | ---- <hr/> Stretched your interest to near breaking point?! All my points are made, but you and yours, are languishing! In some kind of a thing you call ultimate reality which I am proud to be ignorant of! I think you are a common little twat, raised on the teat of a suckling pig.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1790(11/26/03 1:04 pm)Reply  | --- <hr/> That is possibly the most ignorant insult I have ever made to anyone! (:D)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1795(11/26/03 10:59 pm)Reply | ---- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Rhett:--Your statement that you are more conscious than me is fundamentally deluded, you can never be certain about my consciousness. As to the likelihood of you being correct...i don't think so, but you can work on it though. suergaz:--No, I can be certain about your consciousness, I just cannot have it. Rhett:--Prove to me that i exist and am conscious. I know you can't. I could just be a computer program, answering your posts isn't hard. <hr/> And you said I was mixed up! Are you familiar with the current programs you speak of or 'chat bots' as they're called? I do not need to prove that you are conscious and extant because you are! What's more, you know it you slimy slug! There is no ultimate truth, Eternity must be what it is! I think we should go to the cage and discuss this! |

N0X23

Registered User

Posts: 19

(11/27/03 3:13 am)

Reply

Re: ----

---

Quote:

---

Yes, eventually, through chance, wisdom will eventually rise once more. But it could take millions of years before this happens. I'd rather not rely on chance. Things could happen a lot quicker if we consciously and purposely tried to spark a renaissance.

---

Wisdom is the proper application of knowledge. True wisdom is eternal, forever present.

Knowledge of splitting an atom is not the same as knowing when, where and why one should apply this reaction, i.e., melting women and babies is not wisdom.

Wisdom is a result, a fruition of sustained right effort. So I question whether chance has anything to do with actual wisdom.

I have heard of this desire to spark a renaissance of mass enlightenment by many different people, so seemingly the contempt and disdain of the status quo is rapidly growing among the populace, which I agree is a step in a positive direction.

But the only issue that arises in my mind regarding this renaissance is... Why?

What is there to change?

Our current Society is an entity unto itself and being so it is equipped with self preservation, which is namely Ignorance, which in turn perpetuates fear and paranoia and its side effects are sloth and torpor.

Have you ever tried to wake a hungover drunkard? It seems that the old adage of "let sleeping dogs lie" is the most appropriate course of action.

This idea is nothing new, just look at its results throughout our history... The atrocities in Japan from forced Buddhism, the crucifixion of Jesus, the assigination of Martin Luther King, the Crusades, the Inquisitions, communist China, Hitler's Nazi State and so on.

Now please do not get me wrong I think that the current state of world affairs is pornographic and heading towards disaster at least for the Homosapiens, so I am very interested to hear your reasonings behind your motives and am open to a change of perspective concerning this issue.

Edited by: NOX23 🧑 at: 11/27/03 4:04 am

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 1823

(11/27/03 12:50 pm)

Reply

Re: ----

---

NOX23 wrote:

Quote:

---

I have heard of this desire to spark a renaissance of mass enlightenment by many different people, so seemingly the contempt and disdain of the status quo is rapidly growing among the populace, which I agree is a step in a positive direction.

But the only issue that arises in my mind regarding this renaissance is...Why?

What is there to change?

---

It all depends on what you value in life. If you value sanity/enlightenment, then you naturally want to eliminate insanity/delusion wherever it exists, whether it be in yourself or in others.

Quote:

---

Have you ever tried to wake a hungover drunkard?

---

You throw him in the shower and give him heaps of coffee! Ways and means exist for most situations.

Quote:

---

This idea is nothing new, just look at its results throughout our history...The atrocities in Japan from forced Buddhism, the crucifixion of Jesus, the assignation of Martin Luther King, the Crusades, the Inquisitions, communist China, Hitler's Nazi State and so on.

---

I'm not sure that my desire for people to take responsibility for their own thoughts and seek ultimate understanding can be equated to the kind of crude political/social movements that you refer to here. Sparking a wisdom revolution would be far more subtle, and would be all but invisible to the general population for most of its occurrence.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 138
(11/27/03 1:23 pm)
Reply

Re: ----

---

Sparking a wisdom revolution would be far more subtle, and would be all but invisible to the general population for most of its occurrence.

Are you interested in starting a thread on such visions?

Rhett

Edited by: Rhett Hamilton at: 11/27/03 1:28 pm

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1544
(11/27/03 1:43 pm)
Reply

Re: ----

---

I think the point David is making is very important: although he may not have spelt it out as completely as he could have: what he's saying, in part, is that most people tend to point to extreme forms of social decay and evil so as to illustrate humanity's lack of wisdom - murder, torture, assassination, Nazism and such like. However, they do this through ignorance. They never think to mention things like love and charity and all those egotistical follies we normally associate with "moral goodness". This is why any real advancement of wisdom would go completely over most people's heads - they simply wouldn't recognise it as a social "good". It would be far too alien to them. More than likely, they would in fact view it as a burgeoning social evil.

One must begin at the very remedial level of trying to get people to just value reason more. Even that is a monumental task.

Dan Rowden

N0X23

Registered User

Posts: 20

(11/27/03 3:18 pm)

Reply

Re: ----

---

Quote:

---

I'm not sure that my desire for people to take responsibility for their own thoughts and seek ultimate understanding can be equated to the kind of crude political/social movements that you refer to here

---

The reason that I mentioned these cliché acts of ignorance was to point out that they were all a result of an attempt to illuminate the masses thru either wisdom, love, charity, or moral goodness.

For every action there is an equal and opposite reaction...or...No good deed goes unpunished. Now I ask you is this cynicism or just a firm grasp of Reality?

It is true that I cherish virtue, integrity, equanimity, enlightenment and the like. But can you explain to me how this attempt at illumination will be different from those in the past ?

Edited by: N0X23  at: 11/27/03 3:25 pm

Rhett Hamilton

Registered User

Posts: 139

(11/28/03 11:15 am)

Reply

Re: ----

---

Dan wrote:

I think the point David is making is very important: although he may not have spelt it out as completely as he could have: what he's saying, in part, is that most people tend to point to extreme forms of social decay and evil so as to illustrate humanity's lack of wisdom - murder, torture, assassination, Nazism and such like. However, they do this through ignorance. They never think to mention things like love and charity and all those egotistical follies we normally associate with "moral goodness". This is why any real advancement of wisdom would go completely over most people's heads - they simply wouldn't recognise it as a social "good". It would be far too alien to them. More than likely, they would in fact view it as a burgeoning social evil.

One must begin at the very remedial level of trying to get people to just value reason more. Even that is a monumental task.

I am not sure whether your post was an attempt to address my post at all, but i think anyone that is enlightened would know exactly what David was talking about, and incidently, i also agree with your post. Whilst I think it really centres on how many enlightened people there are working towards the goal, what interests me is whether he has a vision (outside of this website) of how to most effectively lever society towards truth.

It would seem to me that postmodernism could be a likely precursor to a reassertion of truth. Most of the time societies ideals swing about from one extreme to another, even though it's practices change much more gradually. The most obvious swing against postmodernism is straight towards truth. Sure, there is a strong faith in science, but many people still distrust it, and dislike it's lack of humanity. You could say that people would dislike the Truths lack of 'humanity'(emotion, ego) even more, and in a sense i certainly agree, but it all depends on the light in which it is put. Give them an ideal to attach their inflated ego to and see if they bite...

I realise that any attempt to appeal to the masses is going to fail, but leveraging the keypoints would have flow on effects.

Check out my new post.

Rhett

N0X23

Registered User

Posts: 34

(12/9/03 1:45 pm)

Reply

Mr. Quinn

---

Quote:

---

The reason that I mentioned these cliché acts of ignorance was to point out that they were all a result of an attempt to illuminate the masses thru either wisdom, love, charity, or moral goodness. For every action there is an equal and opposite reaction...or...No good deed goes unpunished. Now I ask you is this cynicism or just a firm grasp of Reality?

---

<edit>How does your plan of mass illumination differ from those valiant attempts in the past?<edit>

Edited by: N0X23  at: 12/9/03 1:47 pm

voce io

Registered User

Posts: 428

(12/9/03 2:54 pm)

Reply

Re: Mr. Quinn

---

It's so funny how these "enlightened men" are trying to "illumine" the "masses" with their "enlightenment" thorough "reason"...when the Truth is nondual.

Talk about delusion!

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 1865

(12/9/03 3:49 pm)

Reply

Re: Mr. Quinn

---

So why are you writing in and trying to illuminate us here at the forum, Voce Io?

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 1868

(12/9/03 4:32 pm)

Reply

Re: ----

---

NOX23 wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: I'm not sure that my desire for people to take responsibility for their own thoughts and seek ultimate understanding can be equated to the kind of crude political/social movements that you refer to here

NOX: The reason that I mentioned these cliché acts of ignorance was to point out that they were all a result of an attempt to illuminate the masses thru either wisdom, love, charity, or moral goodness.

---

Not through wisdom.

Quote:

---

For every action there is an equal and opposite reaction...or...
No good deed goes unpunished. Now I ask you is this cynicism or just a firm grasp of Reality?

---

It's too vague to be either. If you're trying to argue that it is pointless or self-defeating to take steps to raise the consciousness of the human race, then you're effectively arguing against the Buddha and Lao Tzu and anyone else who has taught or written a spiritual text.

Quote:

---

It is true that I cherish virtue, integrity, equanimity, enlightenment and the like. But can you explain to me how this attempt at illumination will be different from those in the past ?

---

By making people dissatisfied with their knowledge and beliefs, by upsetting their attachments and world-views through reasoned argument and humour, by setting an example of how to lead the truthful life.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 165
(12/10/03 10:43 am)
Reply

Re: ----

---

-----

Rhett:--Your statement that you are more conscious than me is fundamentally deluded, you can never be certain about my consciousness. As to the likelihood of you being correct...i don't think so, but you can work on it though.

suergaz:--No, I can be certain about your consciousness, I just cannot have it.

Rhett:--Prove to me that i exist and am conscious. I know you can't. I could just be a computer program, answering your posts isn't hard.

-----

Suergaz wrote:

And you said I was mixed up! Are you familiar with the current programs you speak of or 'chat bots' as they're called? I do not need to prove that you are conscious and extant because you are! What's more, you know it you slimy slug! There is no ultimate truth, Eternity must be what it is! I think we should go to the cage and discuss this!

What i said is perfectly logical.

You can't be sure that i am conscious and i can't be sure that you are conscious. In fact, all i can say with certainty is that the words that i experience are the words that i experience, and that they are caused.

In response to your post I reasoned that you aren't as conscious as me at this point in time, but i wouldn't let that make you down.

Rhett

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Prerequisites for Enlightenment

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                     | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1905(12/10/03 11:21 am)Reply       | --- <hr/> Well that came out of nowhere Rhett! If you must reason that you are more conscious than I at this point in time, and yet do not articulate the reason in words, am I expected to believe you feel it? What you said is not perfectly logical for the reason you think it is, I'll help you. You cannot be sure I am conscious, because by the time you read this I could be asleep. Likewise, my existence, I could be dead by the time you read this. This is the only sense in which your logic is made perfect, when I decide to make it so. (:D)                                                           |
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 167(12/10/03 12:25 pm)Reply | Re: --- <hr/> Well that came out of nowhere Rhett! If you must reason that you are more conscious than I at this point in time, and yet do not articulate the reason in words, am I expected to believe you feel it? Hey, you're getting the hang of it, but you can't actually be sure that my post did come from nowhere. You are offering a rather foolish notion. When i reply to a nonsense statement you expect me to fully elucidate my reply? It would necessarily involve me making a number of judgements about you, which i would also have to back up, etc, etc. It's just not worth it for such a silly idea in the | first place.

What you said is not perfectly logical for the reason you think it is, I'll help you. You cannot be sure I am conscious, because by the time you read this I could be asleep. Likewise, my existence, I could be dead by the time you read this. This is the only sense in which your logic is made perfect, when I decide to make it so.

You are holding the projections you make to be true, which is highly misleading. All you are experiencing of me is some words (that convey concepts) on a computer screen. Anything could have placed them into your computer, they could have been beamed in by aliens for example.

And in fact, they might not even be on a computer screen that is being viewed by your eyes, they might just be a computer simulation that is having experiences - your experiences.

In other words, you can't be certain that your experiences are within a brain within a head attached to a body that is breathing air etc.

But you can certainly reason that that is the likely scenario based on those experiences.

Rhett

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1915
(12/11/03 1:48 pm)
Reply

---

---

Rhett, you are quite insane! Rhett I am certain my experiences are my own. I have not suggested that this means they could not also be the experiences of others.

N0X23
Registered User
Posts: 38
(12/12/03 5:12 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

By making people dissatisfied with their knowledge and beliefs, by upsetting their attachments and world-views through reasoned argument and humour, by setting an example of how to lead the truthful life.

---

So basically you are plotting the deconstruction of the World?

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 1878

(12/12/03 8:14 am)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Just the false aspects . . . . until there is nothing left but reality itself, which cannot be deconstructed.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 792

(12/12/03 9:27 am)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Muuhuhahahahahahaaaa (strokes white cat).

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1110

(12/12/03 9:37 am)

Reply

--

---

Toast, why have you disappeared? I want to ask you something. Would you email me or vice versa?

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 794

(12/12/03 9:40 am)

Reply

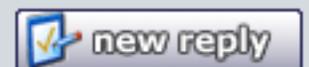

Re: --

---

Feel free Bird.

I've disappeared because I have very little time for the net in general these days.

|                                                                                                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 796(12/12/03 1:49 pm)Reply  | Re: -- <hr/> I notice that your inbox is disabled mate, so you'll have to drop me a line.                                                                                           |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1116(12/13/03 12:51 pm)Reply                                                                              | inbox <hr/> I don't know about an inbox, but my email is posted on my profile.                                                                                                      |
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 187(12/14/03 1:29 pm)Reply                                                                              | Re: inbox <hr/> I don't know about an inbox, but my email is posted on my profile. Please excuse my ignorance, but where are these profiles to be found? Rhett |
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 1583(12/14/03 1:39 pm)Reply                                                                                         | user profiles <hr/> Just click on the person's username, Rhett. Dan Rowden                                                                                                   |

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Proof "GOD" exists...WARNING: updated, less insane

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                               | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 2(2/11/04 7:27 pm)Reply | Proof "GOD" exists...WARNING: updated, less insane <hr/> First I would like to say everyone has their own opinions about God(atheist or not), but before I dazzle you with my knowledge I would like to give my opinion(I'm hoping I get others too). I am a big matrix fan and in case anyone(you would have to be living in a cave staring at shadows on a wall hehe:)has not seen it...the basic idea of the movie is to give people the idea that we live in a simulated world (perhaps being run by computers similar to ones we use today). I was born into a Christian family and base most of my ideas off of their beliefs. To start I would like to talk about Jesus and the concept of "the one". I honestly think all Christians have been COMPLETELY mis-informed about Jesus and how he is the son of god yet somehow IS god? Jesus and his teachings were never supposed to bring such foolish beliefs yet it caused much speculation on him and his disciples. Before Jesus was born there were prophets predicting his birth and everyone Jesus grew up with put much pressure on him saying he was the son of god. Here is how the conscious and sub-conscious work together...CONSCIOUS: "software" which is interpreted by SUB-CONSCIOUS: "hardware" which reflects ideas into the conscious by the one and only KNOWING, UNIVERSAL CONSCIOUS MIND. It's only a matter of training ones sub-conscious to obtain what Jesus had. Let's say in the not so distant future there is a farm which is run by only a married couple which decides to get pregnant. This child is "special" we will call him Clark, and Clark is raised in this farm where he only comes in contact with his parents who teach him everything. Clark's parents decide to pretend he has powers because he is "special" and | continue with this charade until he is old enough to live on his own. Do YOU think this child could be "like" Jesus and/or Neo?

Now before I get to the interesting stuff I want to talk about the ideals of Trinity(no not the hotty from the film). I sure hope you understand how computers work cause though I understand everything down to the binary system it's still hard for me to figure exactly how they work(can anyone explain the INFINITE possibilities between 0 and 1?)...to me this could mean there IS, ONLY ONE GOD seeing as how EVERYTHING can be understood with only YES"1" and NO"0". TAKE INTO ACCOUNT PROBABILITY AND POSSIBILITY. I don't like this idea because it could mean im not in control of my life even though I "think" I am. TRINITY: GOD=MAINFRAMEorCPU SOUL=HARDWARE BODY=SOFTWARE. Kinda weird way to think about life eh?

You can choose a ready guide in some celestial voice.
If you choose not to decide, you still have made a choice.
You can choose from phantom fears and kindness that can kill;
I will choose a path that's clear-
I will choose FREE WILL.. -RUSH

NOW, what was promised, was a lie, I can't prove "GOD" exists but I can prove "SOMETHING ETERNAL" exists which is pretty close. I hope this provides you all with the faith you need, not so much as in "GOD" but mostly in yourself. BUT I feel the need to warn again, anyone, especially those who do not believe in the most important thing ... the self ... unless you can say,"I AM", please do not read this.

EVERYTHING IS ETERNAL; though as wonderful as it may sound is - FALSE- because the body dies which is only one example, but as Plato's idea on Forms suggests, this could be a true statement , but then it would still hold my proof about an original life form, which created the universe, accountable. BUT, this example does not justify, yet deny the "eternal equation", but confirms that God's ideas are eternal. :)

-----
NOTHING IS ETERNAL; - all is temporal - all had a beginning - all came into being - all came into being from non-being. All FALSE! This statement is a direct contradiction to the statement something is eternal...[if these comparisons suggest this is false, or no(zero), is it not correct to assume its opposite is not true, yes(one)? If nothing exists, does it not prove something exists is false? Proof of comparing nothing to something is found everywhere, mainly in the simple idea of binary. You should however understand that all ideas relate to everything. A support example would be, living in the present as opposed to living out infinite possibilities, the first implies humans live out probability, the second, that God has nothing to experience, except maybe reflection of his thoughts].

SOMETHING IS ETERNAL; TRUE statement. Being came into being from Being, there is no other possible outcome. Something eternal is ... GOD? :)

...why? can you prove existence came from non-existence? it's impossible just as it is for a brain in a vat trying to figure out a "black hole", millions of light years away, or closer than you "think". This is where my knowledge of philosophy class ends(everything else I learned I saw as insignificant except for how to prove the soul exists which didn't tickle my fancy all that much) I sure wouldn't mind any constructive feed back and/or opinions. If not I hope I enlightened some people. TO CONCLUDE, a little scripture from 1st Corinthians, 1:19. In case anyone not heading my warnings gets upset or frustrated:) AND, some wisdom from one of the greatest spiritual leaders.

"I will destroy the wisdom of the wise; the intelligence of the intelligent I will frustrate."

In moments of deepest realization, the great mystics have sensed that One Life flows through all and that all are some part of that Life. They have also seen Substance, a fine, white, brilliant stuff forever falling into everything; a Substance indestructible and eternal. It is at such times of complete realization that they have been blinded by the Light of which we have been speaking. -Ernest Holmes

Edited by: XXX STATIC X at: 3/12/04 11:33 am

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 3
(2/11/04 7:36 pm)
Reply

WARNING: MAY CAUSE NEED TO GET DRUNK*

---

WARNING: MAY CAUSE NEED TO GET DRUNK was my original subject but I also wanted to say if anyone does drugs please realize it can literally change your reality. From experience I can say DO NOT MIX DRUGS WITH PHILOSOPHY! because it really messed up my life.

|                                                                                                   |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|  MGregory Registered User Posts: 364 (2/11/04 11:48 pm) Reply   |  Re: Proof "GOD" exists... ;) WARNING: MAY CAUSE NE  <hr/> Quote: <hr/>  NOTHING IS ETERNAL; - all is temporal - all had a beginning - all came into being - all came into being from non-being. All FALSE! This statement is a contradiction to the statement something is eternal  <hr/>  I think you're onto something with this.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
|  XXX STATIC X Registered User Posts: 5 (2/12/04 3:42 am) Reply  |  GOD'S INFINITE NATURE  <hr/>  HTML Comments are not allowed                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|  XXX STATIC X Registered User Posts: 6 (2/12/04 3:51 am) Reply  |  the matrix must have me what is HTML grrrr  <hr/>  I came to a realization about how people mistake the nature of a creators UNIVERSE(whole); I have heard about the anti-verse which I, as to my understanding may be real but seeing as how there is infinite possibility between nothing"0", and something"1"...( .1, .2, .21, .212...you get the idea)I can with up most confidence say not even GOD can REACH infinite. But I would like some opinion on how this relates to Pi and the imperfect circle. I have heard a college found an end to pi which only confuses me.   FREEDOM DOES NOT REQUIRE FREE WILL.   The idea of a holographic universe is very interesting...so is how the brain works. If anyone can go into these topics further that would be nice. From the only research I have found I came to the conclusion ALL is GOD(all matter is GOD's body) and seeing as how I believe in the matrix I thought my soul may be a separate yet same part of GOD(SPIRIT).   HOW TO PROVE THE SOUL EXISTS   Before I go into this I think everyone should have knowledge of Plato's idea on forms...a form is the PERFECT AND ORIGINAL idea which can only mean the form of myself(SOUL)is eternal and GOD is eternally awakening  | these ideas. I can only give an altered version from what I remember from philosophy class but here goes.

TABLE Light reflecting off its surface(we can actually see the table itself).

LIGHT Chemicals in the eye.

CHEMICALS Neural impulses.

NEURAL IMPULSES BASIS FOR ALL YOUR THOUGHT.SELF

SELF WHAT IS PROJECTED ONTO BY GOD?

My philosophy teacher explained it better but this is how I see our matrix. Also, I have also heard about ether(material which binds matter like an adhesive) which can only mean we may have a body within this body...to infinite. If anyone hasn't read the book Science of Mind by Ernest Holmes I suggest you do so, it's great I loved it.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1412
(2/12/04 5:02 am)
Reply

Re: Proof "GOD" exists... ;) WARNING: MAY CAUSE NE

---

Is this kid a darling or what?

(Nice post)

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 7
(2/12/04 8:49 am)
Reply

more on forms and the soul

---

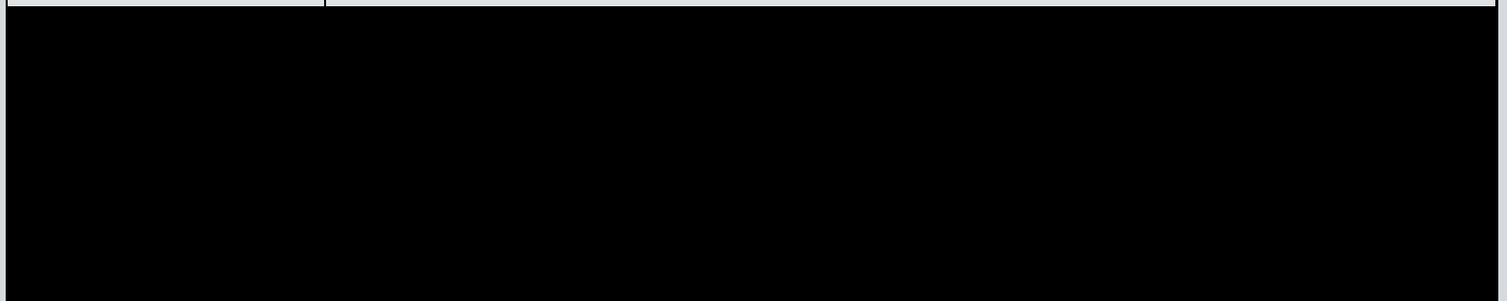

One idea I had on Plato's forms was that the soul could be a "FORM" of GOD which makes us "GOD" within the one true GOD. I'm not saying I am GOD but it would definitely make us the avatar seeing as how we can dream while unconscious or asleep...a book I like on dreams can be found at www.thedreamdudes.com...the couple that wrote it really changed my life.

All we see or seem is but a dream within a dream. -Edgar Allen Poe

The eye sees a thing more clearly in dreams than the imagination awake. -Leonardo da Vinci

He who knows others is wise; he who knows himself is enlightened. -Lao-

|                                                                                                                                                              |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                              | Tzu                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2291(2/12/04 2:09 pm)Reply  | Re: more on forms and the soul<hr/> I've never seen the matrix, and it is lonely seeming to alone know God is long gone, but I am Dionysian. I kill myself with such good humour when I am forced to something that does not become me, it affects everything. |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2293(2/12/04 2:22 pm)Reply | Re: more on forms and the soul<hr/> So that's who you are Anna!                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 681(2/13/04 3:38 am)Reply | Re: more on forms and the soul<hr/> What is all this junk about God?                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 13(2/13/04 8:55 pm)Reply                                                                                   | Re: more on forms and the soul<hr/> Not junk, proof. All you may ever get.                                                                                                                                                                                     |

|                                                                                                                                                                      |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 685(2/14/04 12:54 am)Reply   | Re: more on forms and the soul <hr/> What proof you pretentious dick? You're just babbling about the Matrix and stupid philosophical theories.                                                                                                                                           |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 15(2/14/04 1:03 am)Reply                                                                                | "eternal equation" fixed <hr/> If you can't take this to heart... go get a beer and talk to a real philosopher in the morning. I knew people would get upset by this ... DOES ANYONE THINK I SHOULD ERASE THIS FROM MY POSTS? Edited by: XXX STATIC X at: 2/15/04 5:58 am  |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 686(2/14/04 2:34 am)Reply  | Re: more on forms and the soul <hr/> How does that prove God??                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 16(2/14/04 3:18 am)Reply                                                                                | Re: more on forms and the soul <hr/> Directly it doesn't, it's just supposed to help you connect to God using that splinter in your mind. If you are so ignorant as to completely rule out the idea or concept of God then I suggest you find a new forum and stay away from philosophy. |
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 365(2/14/04 5:02 am)Reply                                                                                   | Re: more on forms and the soul <hr/> Which idea or concept of God are you referring to STATIC? Your descriptions are so vague it's difficult to know what the devil you're saying.                                                                                                       |

|                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 18(2/14/04 5:08 am)Reply | Re: more on forms and the soul <hr/> Have you ever taken a philosophy class? I know they all differ but I'm surprised to hear not many people have heard this theorem ... I like to call it the "eternal equation".                                     |
| silentsalRegistered UserPosts: 55(2/14/04 5:15 am)Reply    | Re: more on forms and the soul <hr/> I am not sure what I am supposed to be upset about.                                                                                                                                                                |
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 366(2/14/04 5:17 am)Reply    | Re: more on forms and the soul <hr/> Yes I have, but I have never heard of the "eternal equation". You say "EVERYTHING IS ETERNAL", but by "EVERYTHING" do you mean every single thing, or do you mean everything taken as a whole?                     |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 19(2/14/04 5:18 am)Reply | Re: more on forms and the soul <hr/> THATS WHAT IM SAYING, I don't know man I guess some people just can't handle it, maybe it's just too much for them to bare, especially if this changes everything they believe.                                    |
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 367(2/14/04 5:20 am)Reply    | Re: more on forms and the soul <hr/> Quote: <hr/> silentsal: I am not sure what I am supposed to be upset about. <hr/> That's what my aim is to find out. And if we're not all seriously upset, I'm going to be very disappointed. |

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Proof "GOD" exists...WARNING: updated, less insane

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                       | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 368(2/14/04 5:23 am)Reply                                                                                      | Re: more on forms and the soul<hr/> STATIC,You say "EVERYTHING IS ETERNAL", but by "EVERYTHING" do you mean every single thing individually is eternal, or do you mean everything taken as a whole is eternal? |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 687(2/14/04 5:57 am)Reply | Re: more on forms and the soul<hr/> Static, it's not that people are closed minded, it's just that they aren't idiots.                                                                                                 |

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 20
(2/14/04 7:07 am)
Reply

Re: more on forms and the soul

---

Couldn't God destroy an atom? By EVERYTHING I mean every single idea of God's(Plato's Form's)as well as God himself. Voce io I can see you have a problem with me or what I said can you please give more information... you are the one not understanding what I am saying, I am only trying to help your primitive mind comprehend it. I think faith is the only thing keeping God alive because it gives him meaning.

Edited by: XXX STATIC X at: 2/14/04 4:44 pm

Biggier
Registered User
Posts: 87
(2/14/04 7:18 am)
Reply

Re: Proof "GOD" exists... ;) WARNING: MAY CAUSE NE

---

XXX

All you are doing here is playing with words. You string certain words together and if they mean what you tell us they do than the words that follow them will, by definition, be true as well.

Meanwhile, where IS this God? Where is the NON-linguistic evidence: empirical, phenomonological, experiential, experimental, scientific, existential evidence?

Nope, nothing there at all, right?

And again, given the horror that is human history, the inherent bloodbath and butchershop that is Nature, the massive maiming, mutilation and masseccres embedded in scores of natural disasters...even if this Word-God does in fact exist it would be fatuous in the extreme to imagine he/she/it gives a crap about any of us.

And even if someone manifests this God in words---all they have is A God... not THE God, right? There are hundreds and hundreds of folks all claiming that this or that God---theirs---is the One True God.

And you, of course, are one removed from God anyway by postulating that "something eternal" exists. So waht? That we exists at all means that existence exists. And existence has to be either eternal or been created. And, if created, by who or what? and out of what? out of nothing at all? okay, what IS nothing at,all?

And then finally back to the Eastern Guru crap about All Is One. Spinoza's pantheisistic assumptions respun. And it is all "analyzed" into existence, of course. Just more words making more tired assumptions. And the fact that in the next 24 hours 19,000 kids aged 5 and younger will die in agony from starvation while most of us in the industrial west have a bad day when we only get one dessert after each meal? Well, THEY have their role to play in the Mandella of Life and WE have ours. Right? That 3,000,000,000 human beings live on $2 or less a day is just Kharma, right?

God and Guruology and URs: what an intellectual farce!!

Ah, but no doubt folks like Birdofhermes and Tharan will want to adopt you. And for sure: ask David to fit it all in his ULTIMATE Reality. Unlike you, he KNOWS what he is talking about. Go ahead, ask him. ; )

Biggie

voce io

Registered User

Posts: 688

(2/14/04 7:40 am)

Reply

Re: Proof "GOD" exists... ;) WARNING: MAY CAUSE NE

---

Is telling me that I have a primitive mind without knowing me going to help my primitive mind comprehend whatever it is you're trying to prove? I personally think it'd be much smarter to explain your point of view with a good purpose. It seems to me that you've just started out on philosophy and want to make somewhat of a name for yourself, for whatever reason... emotional satisfaction?

We view eachother as stupid, so either both of us are, or one of us is. I think it's probably you, seeing as how you are still stuck on the Matrix as a good source of thought.

XXX STATIC X

Registered User

Posts: 22

(2/14/04 7:46 am)

Reply

Re: Proof "GOD" exists... ;) WARNING: MAY CAUSE NE

---

LOL! I am playing with words, but you are taking my words and making your own playground. YOU BIG BULLY :( Until we evolve into a life form which doesn't have words only thoughts I can't argue with you. The FACT is NO ONE has to take this to heart.

WOW, YOU ARE THE FIRST PERSON I HAVE EXPERIENCED THAT GOT ANGRY AT ME PERSONALLY!

As for WHERE God is...he is all around us, he binds us, he is metachlorians in me, you, and Yoda. NOW, Mr. I KNOW EVERYTHING... where did your silly little question ORIGINATE from??? Is there someone behind your shoulder whispering sweet little NOTHING EXISTS into your ear or WHAT!?! Is part of your conscious trying NOT to overlook your monkey brain?

ALL I AM TRYING TO GET ACROSS TO PEOPLE IS THAT THEY SHOULD NOT OVER LOOK THESE THREE SEPARATE THEOREMS!

EVERYTHING IS ETERNAL!
SOMETHING IS ETERNAL!
NOTHING IS ETERNAL!

FRANKLY I AM GETTING TIRED OF THIS ALL TOGETHER IF YOU CAN'T EXCEPT A FEW "WORDS" (as Biggier would probably say) THEN, philosophy is not for YOU find something else like sex, drugs, and rock and roll. All you have to do is say I don't like the impression you are giving people.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1464
(2/14/04 7:50 am)
Reply

Re: Proof "GOD" exists... ;) WARNING: MAY CAUSE NE

---

But biggie I want to adopt YOU! We just have to do something about your constant crying.

Tharan

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 24
(2/14/04 8:25 am)
Reply

Re: Proof "GOD" exists... ;) WARNING: MAY CAUSE NE

---

Let me try to clear things up with everyone on what I think... ALL WE CAN EVER LEARN FROM GOD IS THAT WE MUST ACCEPT FAITH. There is no way God could make us accept it his nature, if he did he would interfere with free will.

There are only two ways to live your life: One is as though nothing is a miracle, the other is as if everything is. ---Einstein

Seek always for the answer within. Be not influenced by those around you, by their thoughts or their words. -Eileen Caddy

The world seldom what it seems; to man, who dimly sees, realities appear as dreams, and dreams realities. -Thomas Moore

Really, to get knowledge, you have to go beyond the mind. -Alexander Everett

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 27
(2/14/04 8:55 am)
Reply

Re: Proof "GOD" exists... ;) WARNING: MAY CAUSE NE

---

I realized I cannot handle this alone and will erase all my posts here. If anyone has any reason I shouldn't please tell me before tomorrow or they will be gone. This was my original post and I figure since it was copied onto another forum, this is why I was banned from using it.

KNOWLEDGE IS POWER
TRUTH IS EVERLASTING
SILENCE IN MY EYES IS PURE 100% PHILOSOPHERS STONE.

"I will destroy the wisdom of the wise; the intelligence of the intelligent I will frustrate." 1 Corinthians 1:19

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 690
(2/14/04 9:57 am)
Reply

Re: Proof "GOD" exists... ;) WARNING: MAY CAUSE NE

---

LOL! I am playing with words, but you are taking my words and making your own playground. YOU BIG BULLY :'( Until we evolve into a life form which doesn't have words only thoughts I can't argue with you. The FACT is NO ONE has to take this to heart.

The fact is that you were shown to be stupid, and you avoid it by saying I'm playing with words. Then you come up with some "how things should be" scenario...as if words are really all that bad. Words can point to absolutely anything, and there is not much wrong with them.

WOW, YOU ARE THE FIRST PERSON I HAVE EXPERIENCED THAT GOT ANGRY AT ME PERSONALLY!

Were you just recently born? No one else has ever been angry with you in your entire lifetime? Maybe they just didn't pay enough attention to you.

I'm not angry at you, by the way, I just think you're an idiot who is close to becoming okay.

As for WHERE God is...he is all around us, he binds us, he is metachlorians in me, you, and Yoda.

I don't understand what you're saying when you say "God is all around us". What is God, then? Air? Space?

NOW, Mr. I KNOW EVERYTHING... where did your silly little question ORIGINATE from??? Is there someone behind your shoulder whispering sweet little NOTHING EXISTS into your ear or WHAT!?!? Is part of your conscious trying NOT to overlook your monkey brain?

The question originated from everything that's happened...there isn't someone whispering "nothing exists" in my ear. I don't even think that "nothing exists". Part of my "conscious"? I can't understand half of what you say because of your sentence structure and spelling.

ALL I AM TRYING TO GET ACROSS TO PEOPLE IS THAT THEY SHOULD NOT OVER LOOK THESE THREE SEPARATE THEOREMS!

EVERYTHING IS ETERNAL!

SOMETHING IS ETERNAL!

NOTHING IS ETERNAL!

Everything is eternal is true. Forms change, but the fact that forms exist doesn't change. We can say, "change is a constant".

Something is eternal isn't true, because 'some-thing' implies there are other things like it. "What goes up, must come down".

Nothing is eternal is only true in the sense that all forms change.

FRANKLY I AM GETTING TIRED OF THIS ALL TOGETHER IF YOU CAN'T EXCEPT A FEW "WORDS" (as Biggie would probably say) THEN, philosophy is not for YOU find something else like sex, drugs, and rock and roll. All you have to do is say I don't like the impression you are giving people.

If you are getting tired, then maybe philosophy isn't for you.

voce io

Registered User

Posts: 691

(2/14/04 10:11 am)

Reply

Re: Proof "GOD" exists... ;) WARNING: MAY CAUSE NE

---

Let me try to clear things up with everyone on what I think... ALL WE CAN EVER LEARN FROM GOD IS THAT WE MUST ACCEPT FAITH.

Why is that the only thing we can learn, and again: who is God?

There is no way God could make us accept it his nature, if he did he would interfere with free will.

I can hardly understand that sentence. Free will is determined by past causes. This is a philosophical truth, do you not agree with it? Are you saying that "God" created a world with the choice to believe in him or not believe? What's the point? How did you find this out, where did this thought originate from? Was there someone whispering sweet lies in your ear? On your Matrix DVD? In your Bible, and church?

There are only two ways to live your life: One is as though nothing is a miracle, the other is as if everything is. ---Einstein

Or "some things are miracles, and other things aren't"?

Seek always for the answer within. Be not influenced by those around you, by their thoughts or their words. -Eileen Caddy

What answer within? Why should I read that statement, and take it to heart, if it contradicts itself? I do have to listen to Eileen tell me not to listen to her tell me something to listen to!

The world seldom what it seems; to man, who dimly sees, realities appear as dreams, and dreams realities. -Thomas Moore

What??

Really, to get knowledge, you have to go beyond the mind. -Alexander Everett

How can I go beyond myself? Mind is the only place for knowledge.

I realized I cannot handle this alone and will erase all my posts here. If anyone has any reason I shouldn't please tell me before tomorrow or they will be gone. This was my original post and I figure since it was copied onto another forum, this is why I was banned from using it.

KNOWLEDGE IS POWER

TRUTH IS EVERLASTING

SILENCE IN MY EYES IS PURE 100% PHILOSOPHERS STONE.

"I will destroy the wisdom of the wise; the intelligence of the intelligent I will frustrate." 1 Corinthians 1:19

You can do whatever you want, but I don't see a good reason why you should erase what you've already posted. To me, and I'm sure to others, it looks like you're just a dog chasing it's own tail. Spit is flying out of your mouth, and you're bending sideways trying to sink your teeth into your own ass. What you need to do is find someone else to bite your ass. I won't bite your ass, I'm sorry, but I'm sure some other impressionable Christian youth will. I bet they will like Soulfly, too! It can be great. Two people biting eachother's asses, kind of like that eternal snake symbol!

Honestly, you don't seem to know shit, and you're just trying to flaunt your own knowledge. Maybe I am the one who wrote the verse from Corinthians, and maybe it was for you.

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 29
(2/14/04 10:54 am)
Reply

Re: Proof "GOD" exists... ;) WARNING: MAY CAUSE NE

---

YOU are the idiot, YOU had no evidence to back up ANY kind of argument against me. Sticks and stones dude that's all communication is. Software and hard drives(biological) is what you should be throwing at me. Could it be you would be afraid of God if he existed? Come out of the stone age pre-school phase and give me something useful you empty maggot! BTW I like your determination to make me look bad, how you add your OWN thoughts on how I VIEW what I have TAUGHT. On miracles, take a cookie for, ONE EXAMPLE, it just so happens that over time the correct ingredients found its way to each other...If you can't see the miracle in YOU then I feel bad for you because you are missing out on the big picture. You are supposed to trust yourself(PERHAPS how God intended this deceitful universe), I was only trying to help people, not convert them to ANY of my BELIEFS, I could sit here all day telling you about my beliefs, if you really want something to argue about, argue the "eternal equation" which I modeled, yet you seem to not grasp its concept. DO YOU DREAM WHEN YOU SLEEP? Yes, but do you can YOU explain how it works? NO? OK then. If you refuse to believe where the universe came from... where do ideas come from? ... try to understand the following in this order...

- THOUGHT OR CONDITIONS
- <-THE "WORD"
- CAUSE AND EFFECT
- BELIEF AND CORRESPONDENCE
- IMAGE AND MIRROR
- SEED AND PLANT
- LIMITED THOUGHT AND POVERTY
- FREED THOUGHT AND WEALTH
- ACCEPTANCE AND OPPORTUNITY
- PEACE AND PEACE
- PRAYER AND ANSWER
- YES AND YES
- NO AND NO
- FRIENDSHIP AND FRIENDSHIP
- PICTURE AND THING
- INVOLUTION AND EVOLUTION
- TREATMENT AND DEMONSTRATION

-SIMULACRUM AND SIMULATION

-SELF AND OTHERS

This is based on a model from the book science of mind by Ernest Holmes except the last two examples. The left side is the the idea, the right is the reflection or example.

This is all I will argue with you, idiot, since you seem to think you are the man who wrote a passage from scripture, lol! Also, how did Christianity and soufly come into play?

I DON'T THINK IT'S THAT YOU DON'T UNDERSTAND ME, INSTEAD, YOU DON'T UNDERSTAND YOURSELF.

XXX STATIC X

Registered User

Posts: 30

(2/14/04 11:00 am)

Reply

Re: Proof "GOD" exists... ;) WARNING: MAY CAUSE NE

---

Everything is eternal is true. Forms change, but the fact that forms exist doesn't change. We can say, "change is a constant".

Something is eternal isn't true, because 'some-thing' implies there are other things like it. "What goes up, must come down".

Nothing is eternal is only true in the sense that all forms change.

THIS WAS ALL YOU.

I'm starting to realize how I have to be very specific with you because you can't think for yourself, I know you can't because all you seem to KNOW is past experiences. To understand God would mean you have to think on his level, lets take dimensions for example... what is your stance on the concept of INFINITY and DIMENSIONS? I can't help you if you seem to have it in burned into your'e sub-conscious that you live in a three-dimensional universe.

ALLOW ME FIGHT FIRE WITH FIRE BY REFLECTING YOUR THOUGHTS AS YOU HAVE DONE WITH MINE. NONE OF WHAT YOU "SAY" "MAKES" "SENSE". There seems to be something bothering you, "like", a splinter in your mind. FREE your thought, imagine, it's what God was forced to do since the beginning of time.

You don't even understand the basic principle difference between something and nothing. How am I supposed to explain to you who or what God is if you don't want to believe in yourself as a BEING?

Edited by: XXX STATIC X at: 2/14/04 11:29 am

Biggier
Registered User
Posts: 88
(2/14/04 11:51 am)
Reply

Re: Proof "GOD" exists... ;) WARNING: MAY CAUSE NE

---

XXX

What's with all the BIG BOLD LETTERS?!! ;)

Alas, you are relatively new in here. I am only being my usual polemical self. Tweaking your mind as it were to see how deep it goes. Not very, eh? ;)

Oh, I see: God is EVERYwhere. He can't be seen or heard or touched. You can't interview him on 60 Minutes. You can't ask to explain those 680,000,000 children who died from starvation in the 20th century...you can't ask him to explain why those 40,000 poor souls had to die recently in Bam, Iran. But so what, right?

But thanks for making it quite clear that, next to you, David Quinn really IS a genius!!! ;)

Biggie

Biggier
Registered User
Posts: 89
(2/14/04 11:55 am)
Reply

Re: Proof "GOD" exists... ;) WARNING: MAY CAUSE NE

---

Tharan,

I don't cry!! I whine!!!

And, God willing, I will be doing it for along time to come. On the other hand, if God shows up in my living room tonight, turns my cat into a pastrami sandwich and performs a hundred other miracles to verify His Holy Existence, I do promise to come in here and beg XXX to forgive me. ;)

B.

XXX STATIC X

Registered User

Posts: 31

(2/14/04 12:13 pm)

Reply

Re: Proof "GOD" exists... ;) WARNING: MAY CAUSE NE

---

God may be the exact opposite of what you think, all you can do is experience God, which he leads you to believe is your-SELF(present understanding or your form). I am only exploring possibility, in hopes of further opening up my mind. Wouldn't you say this reality seems so... fake... as to what the mind can imagine? As for your genius comment, you can still be insane and be a genius. :) Take me and the other guy for example... he thinks he wrote the bible ... I think an original, first, before any other life, (PERHAPS) the creator of the universe, and/or YOU and your experience(s), never came into being. Maybe some people don't understand the definition of eternal... always existing, never to pass out of existence. Before any more replies are forwarded to me I would like to state what a complete jerk I have been and only wish to hear your input so please continue posting. And sorry to use YOU as an example Biggier but I can see how people mis interpret what I have been saying by asking, what does this mean when you say...

Alas, you are relatively new in here. I am only being my usual polemical self. Tweaking your mind as it were to see how deep it goes. Not very, eh? ; )

This next part I wish to ask where the relevance to my original post is?...

Oh, I see: God is EVERYwhere. He can't be seen or heard or touched. You can't interview him on 60 Minutes. You can't ask to explain those 680,000,000 children who died from starvation in the 20th century...you can't ask him to explain why those 40,000 poor souls had to die recently in Bam, Iran. But so what, right?

Edited by: XXX STATIC X at: 2/14/04 12:18 pm

WolfsonJakk

Registered User

Posts: 1468

(2/14/04 12:18 pm)

Reply

Proof "GOD" exists...

---

Big wrote,

Quote:

---

if God shows up in my living room tonight, turns my cat into a pastrami sandwich and performs a hundred other miracles to verify His Holy Existence, I do promise...

---

|                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                        | omw On rye? Tharan                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 32(2/14/04 12:37 pm)Reply | Re: Proof "GOD" exists... <hr/> Maybe God has no faith in you and refuses to believe in YOU! There was something I said about how a cookie had properties which make it a miracle, we can say everything is a miracle, if you don't see this you are ignorant and hope you can live with yourself knowing the fact that ignorance is bliss. Personally I can't accept what is real, I am very skeptical. The Trees by Franz Kafka For We are like tree trunks in the snow. In appearance they lie sleekly and a little push should be enough to set them rolling. No, it can't be done, for they are firmly wedded to the ground. But see, even that is only appearance. This is how I interpret this story... the tree represents our body, the snow ... atomic particles. Are we firmly wedded to ether(what is everyones idea on this concept of the last known analysis of matter?), and if so... what is the mental idea of perfect gravity or Form of gravity? I believe this is a miracle. Can you think of any other laws which contradict our nature? |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 33(2/14/04 1:01 pm)Reply  | Think for yourself, ask questions later. <hr/> What can run but not walk? What has a bottom and its top? Who rides in a taxi but never pays? Does freedom exist without free will? What is real but never experienced? If ANYONE can answer these I will not erase any of my posts and accept any criticism I deserve. One thing to think about is how we have the ability                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       | to dream and imagine.

All we see or seem is but a dream within a dream. -Edgar Allen Poe

The eye sees a thing more clearly in dreams than the imagination awake. - Leonardo da Vinci

He who knows others is wise; he who knows himself is enlightened. -Lao-Tzu

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 34
(2/14/04 2:04 pm)
Reply

Avatar: One who creates his own reality.

---

Who is the avatar? A lot of people think they will eventually reach this state. I believe, maybe no one understands a belief but if you say I am ignorant you may want to think about your-SELF, this life is a teaching simply on how to experience, explaining God's apparent dis-regard for suffering. The only problem I see with this is that we could get addicted to this reality as suggested in my other post(The X Factor) quoting M.L. Sebastian.

Someone said WHO is God, I would like to say what a stupid question this is. I know you were expecting me to say Jesus you pretentious jerk! What the hell do you know? I actually believe Jesus was simply a man, which I can't prove even existed, who was very enlightened to the point of self-realization parallel to God's.

Edited by: XXX STATIC X at: 2/14/04 2:08 pm

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Proof "GOD" exists...WARNING: updated, less insane

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 36(2/14/04 3:39 pm)Reply | "eternal equation" fixed <hr/> Something has made me fear. Something has made me fear the outcome of this post if I were to leave it. It will be gone by tomorrow unless I change my mind again. ----- EVERYTHING IS ETERNAL; though as wonderful as it may sound is - FALSE- because the body dies which is only one example, but as Plato's idea on Forms suggests, this could be a true statement , but then it would still hold my proof about an original life form, which created the universe, accountable. BUT, this example does not justify, yet deny the "eternal equation", but confirms that God's ideas are eternal. :) ----- NOTHING IS ETERNAL; - all is temporal - all had a beginning - all came into being - all came into being from non-being. All FALSE! This statement is a direct contradiction to the statement something is eternal...[if these comparisons suggest this is false, or no(zero), is it not correct to assume its opposite is not true, yes(one)? If nothing exists, does it not prove something exists is false? Proof of comparing nothing to something is found everywhere, mainly in the simple idea of binary. You should however understand that all ideas relate to everything. A support example would be, living in the present as opposed to living out infinite possibilities, the first implies humans live out probability, the second, that God has nothing to experience, except maybe reflection of his thoughts]. | SOMETHING IS ETERNAL; TRUE statement. Being came from Being, there is no other possible outcome. Something eternal is ... GOD? :)

---

I apologize for not making this more clear. I am not perfect and had to edit this many times just to get it the way I wanted. I hope this discussion has not lost its meaning. Do you believe me now, neo? LOL. If not, have a few beers and go back to living your life as ignorant as possible.

Edited by: XXX STATIC X at: 2/15/04 6:01 am

Biggier
Registered User
Posts: 90
(2/15/04 1:45 am)
Reply

Re: Proof "GOD" exists...

---

Tharan,

Nope. On Wonder Bread. Of course that was a dead give away:

"I know its you, XXX!! I want my cat back!!!"

The moral of the story being that demigods like TripX come and go but only God knows how to make a GREAT pastrimi--- on rye. And from a cat, no less!!

Biggie

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 40
(2/15/04 2:01 am)
Reply

Re: Proof "GOD" exists...

---

Biggier, I stopped smoking weed so I could join the army, and I have not done anything else in a long time. Are you trying to say some people may give this to much thought? Why don't you just tell me the other primitives can't handle it?

Quote:

---

demigods like TripX come and go but only God knows

---

Maybe I'm out of the loop in this forum, if you all want me to go I will but please, I only want others opinion.

This is the forum for dangerous thinkers, I feel safe bringing up this "knowledge" here because that is all it is, and ever will be, "knowledge".

voce io

Registered User

Posts: 692

(2/15/04 2:55 am)

Reply

Re: Proof "GOD" exists... ;) WARNING: MAY CAUSE NE

---

The problem with you, fucker, is that you make too many points in one paragraph. It's hard to respond, let alone read what you are thinking. That's probably one reason why not too many others are even responding, along with the fact that you look like a nutcase coming in here with your big letters and insults.

YOU are the idiot, YOU had no evidence to back up ANY kind of argument against me.

Where's your evidence that I had no evidence? You have been proven wrong by what I said, did you just miss it?

Could it be you would be afraid of God if he existed?

Depends on what God is.

On miracles, take a cookie for, ONE EXAMPLE, it just so happens that over time the correct ingredients found its way to each other...If you can't see the miracle in YOU then I feel bad for you because you are missing out on the big picture.

Yeah, I can view life as that, but how fucking nuts is a person who sees everything as a miracle? I view the miracle of everything as a normality, because really, that's what it is. This doesn't mean I'm missing out on any big picture.

You are supposed to trust yourself(PERHAPS how God intended this deceitful universe), Trust myself...how? Trust my beliefs? Trust in my existence? Trust..... what?

I was only trying to help people, not convert them to ANY of my BELIEFS, I could sit here all day telling you about my beliefs, if you really want something to argue about, argue the "eternal equation" which I modeled, yet you seem to not grasp its concept.

Are you stupid? I just wrote about your "eternal equation".

DO YOU DREAM WHEN YOU SLEEP? Yes, but do you can YOU explain how it works? NO?

Dreaming is like when you park an old car, and turn it off, and it still makes noises. It's just latent impressions in your memory playing with each other. The way we view dreams is the same way we view the world - through our brains.

If you refuse to believe where the universe came from... where do ideas come from?

Ideas come from the universe. Where does the universe come from? Don't say, "God".

This is all I will argue with you, idiot, since you seem to think you are the man who wrote a passage from scripture, lol! Also, how did Christianity and soufly come into play?

I DON'T THINK IT'S THAT YOU DON'T UNDERSTAND ME, INSTEAD, YOU DON'T UNDERSTAND YOURSELF.

You obviously lack the skills one would need to understand my joke about Corinthians. I understand you on a basic and generalized level: you're stupid.

I'm starting to realize how I have to be very specific with you because you can't think for yourself, I know you can't because all you seem to KNOW is past experiences.

Show me a person who can think for themselves. Logically, there can't be a single one, because every single person was raised by this world, which feeds the person ideas. You've been fed ideas, and I'm absolutely positive you can't think for yourself. You've proven it in this thread. You're a confused post-teen, and it's time for you to become a man...think about what you're saying. Look at yourself as if you were someone else...would you like to be reading what you're saying? Do you think you look like a nutcase? Does what you say make sense?

Also, I "KNOW" present experience.

To understand God would mean you have to think on his level, lets take dimensions for example... what is your stance on the concept of INFINITY and DIMENSIONS? I can't help you if you seem to have it in burned into your'e sub-conscious that you live in a three-dimensional universe.

To understand God would mean there must be a God to understand, which

(in my experience) there isn't. I ask everyone talking about God to show me this God that they're always spouting off about, but no one has yet.

"My stance" on infinity? On dimensions!?

Why do you think you're helping anyone if you open their minds up to more illusions of multiple dimensions and concepts of infinitude? You're just, once again, chasing your tail around and slobbering all over my floor.

ALLOW ME FIGHT FIRE WITH FIRE BY REFLECTING YOUR THOUGHTS AS YOU HAVE DONE WITH MINE. NONE OF WHAT YOU "SAY" "MAKES" "SENSE". There seems to be something bothering you, "like", a splinter in your mind. FREE your thought, imagine, it's what God was forced to do since the beginning of time.

None of what I say makes sense to you, because you aren't intelligent enough to understand it, possibly? There isn't a splinter in my mind...I'm sure there is one in my finger somewhere, from a few years ago. If you think you're free by imagining things, you're far from it. Imagination binds you. God, the all powerful, is "forced to do" something!?

You don't even understand the basic principle difference between something and nothing.

Something is presence, and nothing is absence.

How am I supposed to explain to you who or what God is if you don't want to believe in yourself as a BEING?

A being? What the fuck is that?

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 693
(2/15/04 3:00 am)
Reply

Re: Think for yourself, ask questions later.

---

What can run but not walk?

A computer...Your nose....

What has a bottom and its top?

Anything? That question makes no sense.

Who rides in a taxi but never pays?

The driver.

|                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                       | Does freedom exist without free will? Yes, because choice (free will) binds you. What is real but never experienced? Me.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 370(2/15/04 3:19 am)Reply    | Re: more on forms and the soul <hr/> Quote: <hr/> staticx: Couldn't God destroy an atom? <hr/> Yes, I think God could destroy an atom. Because if he couldn't, he would be a total pussy. And I think God is a badass by definition. That's why Christians need Jesus, to turn him into God, so they're not so scared by Him. Quote: <hr/> staticx: By EVERYTHING I mean every single idea of God's (Plato's Form's)as well as God himself. <hr/> How do we know what God's ideas are? |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 42(2/15/04 3:37 am)Reply | Re: Think for yourself, ask questions later. <hr/> What can run but not walk? A computer...Your nose....water. What has a bottom and its top? A leg. Who rides in a taxi but never pays? The driver.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |

Does freedom exist without free will?

Yes, because choice [choice of what? yes and no? you can only prove yes because we are a biological computer] (free will) binds you, yet you do not have freedom because of the facts about universal laws such as gravity; can you fly?

What is real but never experienced?

Me. Good answer but how about, what originated free will, perhaps, and/or what creates our experience via the matrix?

-----
Can you imagine possibilities? Have you experienced beyond what you have experienced, or do you believe you can't imagine beyond the difficulty of reason?
-----

I apologize for being loud and annoying I will try to tone down my arguments, thanks for your views voce.

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 44
(2/15/04 3:49 am)
Reply

Re: Think for yourself, ask questions later.

-----
We can't know for sure what Gods' ideas are but we can have a basic understanding of them to better understand how we think. Imagine a sphere containing all possibilities, hard to imagine yes, but if you think outside yourself you can imagine a one dimensional sphere equal in "Form" to that of an infinite dimensional sphere containing all possibilities because, that's all that may exists outside our universe.

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 45
(2/15/04 3:57 am)
Reply

Re: Think for yourself, ask questions later.

Quote:

-----
We view eachother as stupid, so either both of us are, or one of us is. I think it's probably you, seeing as how you are still stuck on the Matrix as a good source of thought.
-----

The matrix is a model as well as a fiction story. I use it to help explain the possibility of multiple realities.

|                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 46(2/15/04 4:06 am)Reply | "eternal equation" <hr/> This is my original topic, I'm not saying I only wish to hear about this but please give me your opinion of my new version. I admit the first time around I mixed it up because I had trouble remember it. I WILL be erasing it soon though, because, people just can't handle it unless I help them with their questions and I wont be able to do that because I will be leaving to join the army soon. I'm sorry if you already had an argument against it and I missed it but maybe because it was before the new version, which is not MY idea, I wouldn't be trying to make a name; (LOL, XXX STATIC X, good philosopher name?) for myself here that's for sure, especially by stealing my philosophy teachers idea. |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 47(2/15/04 4:53 am)Reply | Jahova <hr/> I just had these guys come to my door, wtf are they all about! Anyway this is the first time iv'e had this happen to ME in my house. Maybe I am only deluding my self I don't know but now I am definitely gonna erase my posts because I showed them the "eternal equation" and they didn't seem to happy afterwords so for the sake of any religious people that may read it I am just gonna erase it, if anyone wants to read it again after it's gone I will e-mail it to you after I have talked to you so that you don't get as insane as I am.                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 371(2/15/04 6:32 am)Reply    | Re: Think for yourself, ask questions later. <hr/> Quote: <hr/> static: We can't know for sure what Gods' ideas are but we can have a basic understanding of them to better understand how we think. <hr/> But how can we tell the difference between one of God's ideas and one of our ideas in the first place? In the spirit of Plato, how do we know that a "perfect circle" is really God's idea and is not something that we created for ourselves? How do we know that our idea of "perfect" is the same as God's?                                                                                                                                                                                                     |

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 48
(2/15/04 7:17 am)
Reply

Re: Think for yourself, ask questions later.

---

Quote:

---

But how can we tell the difference between one of God's ideas and one of our ideas in the first place? In the spirit of Plato, how do we know that a "perfect circle" is really God's idea and is not something that we created for ourselves? How do we know that our idea of "perfect" is the same as God's?

---

God's idea are Forms, our choices are yes and no (like a computer, unlike a computer we are given: conscious, sub-conscious, memories, and personal choice). Can a biological brain really handle all this input (knowledge, neural messages...whatever) by its self? I was just implying that God could be that circle. It is perfect. God is perfect in nature. Our choices are not. Your choice (NO!) I do not wish to accept something is eternal would not be perfect.

GOD IS ETERNAL.

MY FAITH IS ETERNAL.self

Edited by: XXX STATIC X at: 2/15/04 9:52 am

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 372
(2/15/04 11:00 am)
Reply

Re: Think for yourself, ask questions later.

---

Quote:

---

God's idea are Forms

---

Don't you mean Forms are Plato's ideas? How do you know they have anything to do with God? How do you know that Plato's idea of perfection is the same as the perfection of God?

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 53
(2/15/04 12:12 pm)
Reply

Re: Think for yourself, ask questions later.

---

God's reality, the Forms, which are simply ideas and that's how you should look at them(what was your view of this concept?) God has ideas in him (Forms) which are simply put... infinite possibilities. I know Plato had an idea about the "perfect" tree or what not, but it's just supposed to suggest a higher reality than ours, perhaps a reality soo perfect that God combines all his souls realities into one hyperform reality, which exists after matter comes back together, if it does, when we realize it is possible, summon bonum.

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 374
(2/15/04 12:45 pm)
Reply

Re: Think for yourself, ask questions later.

---

Quote:

---

God's reality, the Forms, which are simply ideas and that's how you should look at them(what was your view of this concept?)

---

Well, an idea requires a mind to conceive of it. Now if these "Forms" are God's ideas, then I'm assuming they are in God's mind. But if you are discussing them right now, then they are also in your mind. How did they get there? What is the connection between your mind and God's mind that allowed you to know about the Forms in the first place? That is what I'm trying to ask you.

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 56
(2/15/04 4:50 pm)
Reply

Re: Think for yourself, ask questions later.

---

Quote:

---

How did they get there? What is the connection between your mind and God's mind that allowed you to know about the Forms in the first place?

---

We are all "connected" to God. Try proving that lol. ONE mind before my

|                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                       | "mind"(brain). Now, an age old philosophy question for all those who stand against me... What is real? Could it be society? Because this is what I refuse to conform to, do you think this makes me a bad person? I only want to know what you think. Edited by: XXX STATIC X at: 2/15/04 4:53 pm                                                                                                                  |
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 376(2/15/04 11:55 pm)Reply   | Re: Think for yourself, ask questions later. <hr/> Well, if you can't prove that it's God you're connected to, then how do you know it's truly God and not something else? Does this concern you at all? Does it bother your conscience that you could be wrong? Is that why you began posting this material here in the first place? Seeking confirmation perhaps? Edited by: MGregory at: 2/16/04 3:05 am |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 57(2/16/04 4:25 am)Reply | Re: Think for yourself, ask questions later. <hr/> I seek my desires... to accept a new world. The idea of summon bonum is simply a concept and I choose to accept this faith with open arms, as should everyone. Since I proved my "faith" exists I only have one last question to ask on this forum, does any agree with the possibility this concept exists? The highest good is simply a passion.              |
| silentsalRegistered UserPosts: 58(2/16/04 4:34 am)Reply    | Re: Think for yourself, ask questions later. <hr/> Quote: <hr/> The highest good is simply a passion. <hr/> if you are saying that there is no highest good then I agree                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Proof "GOD" exists...WARNING: updated, less insane

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                      | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 59(2/16/04 11:01 am)Reply | Re: Think for yourself, ask questions later.<hr/> The possibility of a highest good may be a passion, the fact is whos choice is it to make?                                                                                                                                       |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 65(2/16/04 4:06 pm)Reply  | Re: Think for yourself, ask questions later.<hr/> What is God's fate?                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 66(2/16/04 4:09 pm)Reply  | Re: Think for yourself, ask questions later.<hr/> Does Jesus accept my faith?Edited by: XXX STATIC X at: 3/11/04 12:59 am                                                                                                                                           |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 67(2/16/04 4:14 pm)Reply  | Re: Think for yourself, ask questions later.<hr/> Could fate ultimately be finding God? Step to the edge of the looking glass, accept fate and you too will see God's light, for what God really is, creator. Do you accept your creator? Can you exist peacefully in its society? |

|                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 68(2/16/04 4:16 pm)Reply | Re: Think for yourself, ask questions later. <hr/> Can anyone know where God? Does God see us as real? Do you think?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 69(2/16/04 4:20 pm)Reply | Re: Think for yourself, ask questions later. <hr/> Form, is simply put, God's ideas. Can we live peacefully and accept our fate? Or, does God accept society? Does God trust? What are these traits, reality or acceptance?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 70(2/16/04 4:26 pm)Reply | Re: Think for yourself, ask questions later. <hr/> Don't judge God, judge self. Could my self be my soul? Body water river blah blah flow. WITH GOD.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 71(2/16/04 4:37 pm)Reply | Re: Think for yourself, ask questions later. <hr/> Express your feelings and God will flow with US for all eternity... where is this Form of a perfect world? Simply put, in the moment. Do you think, by your judgement of me, I doubt God? Or I don't I flow with the rest of you. Paint the eternal picture of the highest good in your memory and it will happen. Evil exists with doubt, acceptance is in God. My words to you, expressing God's Forms. Now doubt my thoughts on the subject or accept God's power as it is. Work. Does the world work around any one man. Does the universe exist?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 73(2/16/04 5:50 pm)Reply | Re: Think for yourself, ask questions later. <hr/> free thoughts free your mind free possibility free jesus free dom or free choice free feardumb = free god? maybe the world is waiting for free speach of facts about our society maybe i should tell congress maybe i should fear others maybe i should live maybe i should free words free hate toward God..accept it or face facts about the ONE. Has it shun me out of its design for being a dumb monkey? what are WE? one with nature, or one WITH God. Fear God! Not instinct. TRUST = eternal relationship or love. where are we? earth? heaven? state of ... acceptance of God's love? why am i so addicted to the matrix? lol. accept God's trust in his eternal quest for love. WHAT IS MEMORY? A "Form" of God's or a "Form" of love. My eternal "Form" lies with God. What is eternity to society? Fear of sleep? :P |

Fear of expression, or fear of facts. Fear of freedom? accept animalistic nature. accept god. accept society as it is and love will shine in us as a Form of fear for our eternal quest for the ONE power. Do not doubt fear fate or God will bite you. In the end God's love will endure as I have endured my ideals for love. God loves me, do you love God? I cherish his trust in me as acceptance with eternal fate WITH God's love for others. Don't fear state of ..... facts about me or my thought process. I am trying to accept myself for what I am trying to do here, trust myself for what I am. Never lose your love for God. God "gives" endurance. To all his creatures. love all and you will find God. love truth about God and you will become evil minded. Free your mind neo's, lol. But you don't have to take my words to heart. Where are the facts God exists in nature, as an eternal ... what? Power. Over me. Not what I feel taste touch or hear ... you get the idea. What do you see in me from what I have done to genius Form. at work is where God will be in all. Don't love faith, endure it. God finds a way. God simply wants to find a way to co exist with us as his design is. Conformity is an option. ;) Set... away.... opinion!

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 79
(2/17/04 1:57 am)
Reply

Re: Think for yourself, ask questions later.

---

Am I God... are you God or is God this fact :P in power of knowledge of the word

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 80
(2/17/04 2:05 am)
Reply

Re: Think for yourself, ask questions later.

---

ONE God strikes fear in the hearts of his Forms ONE God is here ONE God is real ONE God is love for all. everyone is eternal in the fact everyone sees evil in the eyes of the inocent and evil may never be a burden for all in the fact i flow with Gods designed plan for accepted reality. Bite this conformists ;) Love is ... living on one plane of reality with God. Never as it. Or its temptation will get to the whole world as I choose to see it. Summon Bonum. Metamorph the world with your knowledge of self. If you don't believe in A God the world will never come together aas one reality for Gods plan in this perfect world he creates. To bad I can't see God in anyone or I would run into a mirror of self causing suffering... to my self.

|                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 378(2/17/04 2:11 am)Reply    | Re: Think for yourself, ask questions later. <hr/> Alright Static, we get the point. You're not interested in thinking at all, so go away.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 83(3/9/04 11:05 am)Reply | Walking in a puzzled rainbow <hr/> We live by what we see, that's probably why people worship the sun. I worship the son of man. Yes because of the movie. No im not a Jew. Maybe a born again sinner. But you must hold the keys to death and hades for me cause it does suck. Merlin help me. What color is pure H2O or Oxygen. What of the darkness inside us all? I don't want to control light. That burden belongs to GOD. I worship my body yet I can't control my feelings so I guess I will be the TOOL! ROCK N'R RRRROOLLLL                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 90(3/11/04 1:02 am)Reply | Re: Walking in a puzzled rainbow of evil <hr/> EVERYTHING IS ETERNAL; though as wonderful as it may sound is - FALSE- because the body dies which is only one example, but as Plato's idea on Forms suggests, this could be a true statement , but then it would still hold my proof about an original life form, which created the universe, accountable. BUT, this example does not justify, yet deny the "eternal equation", but confirms that God's ideas are eternal. :) ----- NOTHING IS ETERNAL; - all is temporal - all had a beginning - all came into being - all came into being from non-being. All FALSE! This statement is a direct contradiction to the statement something is eternal...[if these comparisons suggest this is false, or no(zero), is it not correct to assume its opposite is not true, yes(one)? If nothing exists, does it not prove something exists is false? Proof of comparing nothing to something is found everywhere, mainly in the simple idea of binary. You should however understand that all ideas relate to everything. A support example would be, living in the present as opposed to living out infinite possibilities, the first implies humans live out probability, the second, that God has nothing to experience, except maybe reflection of his thoughts]. SOMETHING IS ETERNAL; TRUE statement. Being came into being |

|                                                                                |                                                                                                                                                        |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                | from Being, there is no other possible outcome. Something eternal is ...GOD? :) Edited by: XXX STATIC X at: 3/12/04 11:33 am |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 499(3/11/04 1:45 am)Reply | Re: Walking in a puzzled rainbow of evil <hr/> Why all these questions, XXX STATIC X?You have clearly proven to have the answers.   |

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM
> GENIUS FORUM
> Propaganda

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                              | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 999(2/12/04 6:40 pm)Reply       | Propaganda <hr/> I happened to meet a woman who has a PHD in film studies. Her speciality is how film has been used for propaganda in the last century.I asked her what is the propaganda now. She said I should notice how many movies show different creatures overcoming their differences and working together for the common good.I said if that is the propaganda then what is the truth?She didn't have an answer. |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2296(2/12/04 10:45 pm)Reply | --- <hr/> ---You mean star wars movies? They're just propaganda for light sabers!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| silentsalRegistered UserPosts: 52(2/13/04 4:31 am)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> Overcoming differences is not required when you no longer see them as hurdles                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |

|                                                                                    |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1001(2/13/04 4:55 pm)Reply     | Propaganda <hr/> Quote: <hr/> silentsalOvercoming differences is not required when you no longer see them as hurdles. <hr/> Please expound.I don't understand what you mean.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| silentsalRegistered UserPosts: 54(2/13/04 5:57 pm)Reply | Re: Propaganda <hr/> When someone's self identity is based on conditioning or ego alone it is based upon a false premise and therefore naturally insecure. The way that one compensates for this is by reinforcing their identity through the people around them. External validation occurs through agreement and like mindedness, differences are seen as threats. When the self exposes this false premise it no longer seeks external validation, rather differences are seen as expressions of uniqueness and no longer a threat. |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1002(2/14/04 7:08 am)Reply     | Re: Propaganda <hr/> Quote: <hr/> silentsalWhen someone's self identity is based on conditioning or ego alone it is based upon a false premise and therefore naturally insecure. <hr/> Do you think it possible to be naturally secure with a false premise?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |

|                                                                                    |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| silentsalRegistered UserPosts: 56(2/14/04 7:17 am)Reply | Re: Propaganda <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Do you think it possible to be naturally secure with a false premise? <hr/> Well it is possible to be secure with a false premise, although this security is challenged over and over. To me natural security does not exist. When one is "natural" there is no need for security. Security is only required when one is identified with a false premise. |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1005(2/16/04 5:36 am)Reply     | Re: Propaganda <hr/> Quote: <hr/> silentsalSecurity is only required when one is identified with a false premise. <hr/> What are you talking about?Are you saying security is not required when one is identified with a true premise?Come on woman!                                                                                                                         |
| silentsalRegistered UserPosts: 60(2/16/04 6:12 am)Reply | Re: Propaganda <hr/> yes that is exactly what I am saying when you realize your own inherent emptiness what is left to secure?security flies out the window in the face of reality, in its place comes the ability to doubt                                                                                                                                                                          |

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 1008
(2/16/04 6:53 am)
Reply

Re: Propaganda

---

Quote:

---

silentsal security flies out the window in the face of reality, in its place comes the ability to doubt

---

So you are saying the secure person has no ability to doubt whatsoever?
For Christ's sake woman!

silentsal
Registered User
Posts: 61
(2/16/04 7:13 am)
Reply

Re: Propaganda

---

LOL I thought that might get a response!

No, I am saying a person who has no security has no idea of themselves that must be validated, protected, nor defended, no concept of themselves that is certain, rather the very nature of who they are is uncertain.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 957
(2/16/04 8:07 am)
Reply

Re: Propaganda

---

She soars above you del.

Question your beliefs in light of this data.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 1010
(2/16/04 9:50 am)
Reply

Re: Propaganda

---

Quote:

---

silentsal

No, I am saying a person who has no security has no idea of themselves that must be validated, protected, nor defended, no concept of themselves that is certain, rather the very nature of who they are is uncertain.

---

Ah! So what you are saying is that the secure person has a good idea of themselves that can be validated, protected and defended, with a clear concept of themselves. The very nature of who they are is certain to them.

Is that correct?

silentsal
Registered User
Posts: 62
(2/16/04 4:52 pm)
Reply

Re: Propaganda

---

No

Quote:

---

The very nature of who they are is certain to them.

---

They are attached to an idea of who they are based on a false premise, although it appears as if they are certain the fact that they must protect and defend it proves otherwise.

Edited by: silentsal at: 2/16/04 5:11 pm

|                                                                                    |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1011(2/17/04 5:49 am)Reply     | Re: Propaganda <hr/> No? ! ! ! Quote: <hr/> silentsalThey are attached to an idea of who they are based on a false premise, although it appears as if they are certain the fact that they must protect and defend it proves otherwise. <hr/> Following you carefully, the "They" you refer to obviously must be the secure person right?So you reckon that secure people are attached to an idea that is based on a false premise. Yes?And you reckon that the fact that the secure person must protect and defend their false premise proves that the premise is true? What are you talking about woman? |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2306(2/17/04 9:20 pm)Reply | ---- <hr/> Here it is all clear for you DEL (:D) Sals definition of secure people (made sadly less succinct than the way she put it):--attached to idea of who they are. They believe this is based on an actual premise (base) and that their having to defend their identity proves this to be true. Edited by: suergaz at: 2/17/04 9:26 pm                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1013(2/18/04 7:12 am)Reply     | Put words in her mouth <hr/> No! Suergaz.Don't put words into her mouth.I want to see something.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |

|                                                                                                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| silentsalRegistered UserPosts: 64(2/18/04 8:06 am)Reply                                                                                       | Re: Put words in her mouth <hr/> Haha I suspected you were being obtuse for a reason! LOL                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1014(2/18/04 1:48 pm)Reply                                                                                           | Re: Put words in her mouth <hr/> Damn it! suergaz! You snapped my fishing line.I caught this fish before and let her back in the water. A bloody huge stupid sucker fish had attached himself to her and ended up in the boat.You saw my fishing rod bending and thought it would snap. Never touch a man's rod unless he shouts for help. I was going to wheel them both in this time, smash the head of the sucker fish and put her back in the water. |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2309(2/18/04 10:08 pm)Reply                                                                                      | -- <hr/> Sal is a mermaid?! You see I must be innocent in these things. Listen, fishing or no, I've never touched your line! And I've never thought you would snap. You know that! Is Toast the suckerfish? That's a name requiring a comeback! But I'm not sure if you two have anything to fight about.                                                                                                                                                                 |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 965(2/18/04 10:26 pm)Reply  | Surveillance <hr/> There's a fine line between fishing and standing on the shore looking like a deluded fool. The quest to avenge a horrible disfigurement at the hands of a more powerful quarry will always end like that of Ahab. The sucker fish is merely Ishmael, along for the ride, observing the frenzied madness. Watching, ready to interject, always watching. Edited by: Dave Toast at: 2/18/04 10:33 pm                         |

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Propaganda

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                               | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1017(2/19/04 7:59 am)Reply  | Re: Put words in her mouth<hr/> If Suergaz hadn't said anything we would have seen the fish. Not to worry poor Suergaz was unable to understand the advanced and subtle process of reeling in.When the line is tense, hold still.When the line is relaxed reel it in.To say anything now would just sound like a fisherman's tale. In fact nobody even believes the fish existed. |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1018(2/19/04 10:06 am)Reply | Surveillance<hr/> Yes, you continue to watch carefully.Watch Jezebel get eaten by the dogs.A dog barked too soon so Jezebel became conscious and made her escape for the moment.                                                                                                                                                                                                              |

|                                                                                                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 967(2/19/04 10:13 am)Reply   | Re: Surveillance <hr/> The Glasshouse or The Crown?                                                                                                                                                                  |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2318(2/19/04 10:18 am)Reply                                                                                     | ---- <hr/> Egoism is possibly the fastest way to make the air taste dangerous and conduce the caprification of consciousness.                                                                                        |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1019(2/19/04 6:22 pm)Reply                                                                                          | She sleeps <hr/> Jezebel has no resistance to testosterone.The fish cannot resist the impluse to bite when the bate is near enough.Egotism never fails as bate for the feminine.No ego so she sleeps. |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 968(2/20/04 1:10 am)Reply  | Re: Freud <hr/> You are the master-bater.                                                                                                                                                                            |
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 387(2/20/04 2:19 am)Reply                                                                                      | Re: Freud <hr/> lol -- Now that's what I call a slam-dunk.                                                                                                                                                           |

|                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1020(2/20/04 7:25 am)Reply      | Re: Freud <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Dave ToastYou are the master-bater. <hr/> LOL !!! Love it!Excellent Mr. Toast.Too clever by half :) |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1021(2/20/04 7:37 am)Reply      | Re: Freud <hr/> No woman can think like that.That is pure masculine wit.It shines out even in when a man is pussy whipped.                                 |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2340(2/20/04 11:33 pm)Reply | --- <hr/> What music do you love DEL?                                                                                                                                |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1022(2/21/04 10:56 am)Reply     | ----- <hr/> All kinds.It just depends on the musicians and the song/tune.                                                                                       |

|                                                                                    |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| silentsalRegistered UserPosts: 65(2/22/04 2:13 am)Reply | Re: -----<hr/> the master baitermerely a woman hater?twisted ultimeter?back and forthup and downexpressions of a clownfisher of WOEmanto extend his rod intothe embryonic pooland emerge unchangedis to remain a fool                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1023(2/22/04 4:27 am)Reply     | Poetic Justice<hr/> Ooouuu!Very nice silentsal.I can tell you spent a lot of time thinking hard to create that poem.Feminine poetic talent and passion demonstrated. Now let's test the power.Do fishermen hate fish?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| silentsalRegistered UserPosts: 66(2/22/04 4:43 am)Reply | Re: Poetic Justice<hr/> LOL you are incredibly funny! I spent about 5 minutes on that poem and no more. Passion? Haha I don't feel compelled to answer on your whim, be careful DEL your rod may just snap in half. Quote:<hr/> Do fishermen hate fish?<hr/> How could they? without fish how could they possibly feel the thrill of their own mastery. To fish for men and not catch one is a sublime talent that is reserved for only the most courageous. |

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 1024
(2/22/04 6:45 am)
Reply

A courageous woman.

---

Quote:

---

silentsal

To fish for men and not catch one is a sublime talent that is reserved for only the most courageous.

---

Ah! So you have been fishing for men.

Why have you not been able to catch one?

Perhaps you need to spend less time on your poems and be careful of your imagination.

My Rod.

Whether my rod snaps or not is not the issue. A man should not touch another man's rod, no matter how much it appears to be about to snap, unless requested.

Of course when it comes to fish one can put as many hooks of the line as one feels able to manage.

A courageous woman.

How many men here can say they have met a courageous woman?

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 1025
(2/22/04 6:49 am)
Reply

Re: Poetic Justice

---

Quote:

---

silentsal

How could they? without fish how could they possibly feel the thrill of their own mastery.

---

Very good.

|                                                                                     |                                                                                                                           |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                     | You can remove the question marks from your poem now, perhaps.                                                            |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2359(2/22/04 10:19 am)Reply | ---- <hr/> Poor DEL needs someone to touch his rod.                                                         |
| silentsalRegistered UserPosts: 67(2/22/04 12:01 pm)Reply | Re: ---- <hr/> no the question marks remain, manipulation does not become you                               |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2362(2/22/04 9:18 pm)Reply  | --- <hr/> This is coming along swimmingly. I would have married you both already, but I am too wicked. (:D) |

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Prove something ETERNAL exists.

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 98(3/15/04 8:48 am)Reply | Prove something ETERNAL exists. <hr/> Involve something or we may never evolve. To prove something is eternal you must first prove the contradistinction, nothing is eternal is false. Nothing is eternal. nothing = zero...no...offAll being came into being from non-being is false, proves nothing is eternal a false statement. Contradistinction. Something can't come from nothing. So, something infinite must exist if all finite beings came into being from being. Something is eternal. something = one...yes...on <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1)All is temporal</li> <li>2)All had a beginning(finite)</li> <li>3)All came into being from (a) being OR             <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>a)eternal/infinite being</li> <li>x)eternal sun ... internal air ... external water All essential yet not all worshiped.</li> </ol> </li> </ol> Try to compare these statements with computer language. You will see, 0 1 = 1 every time unless 1 is taken away. You can't subtract binary without inverting what's being added. And multiplication and division need to be done the old fashion way. Therefore, to a computer...God will always exist, is my theory. |

|                                                                                                                                                                              |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                              | What are colors? Some say the SELF, or MIND has only two wavelengths which create your SOUL, or ESSENCE. Edited by: XXX STATIC X at: 3/26/04 1:14 am                                                                                                                                      |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 505(3/15/04 11:08 am)Reply                                                                                              | Prove something ETERNAL exists. <hr/> Yes, something is eternal.For instance XXX STATIC X. You're a looney.Nothing wrong with that, though. You're like the guy whonags, every time again, thatthe sun will come up in the East. Why don't you marry Hu Zheng? |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 506(3/15/04 11:21 am)Reply                                                                                              | Correction <hr/> I'm so sorry, XXX STATIC X, for what I said. You're married already, to 5ILVER5HADOW.                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| Thomas KnierimRegistered UserPosts: 873(3/15/04 11:44 am)Reply  | Re: Correction <hr/> Static: All being came into being from non-being is False. Why is it false? Where is the proof? Thomas                                                                                                                                                               |

|                                                                                                                                                                           |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 819(3/15/04 12:03 pm)Reply        | Re: Correction <hr/> Something can't come from nothing, it's a logical fallacy. If you say it's possible, prove that such a thing has happened.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
| Thomas KnierimRegistered UserPosts: 875(3/15/04 1:49 pm)Reply  | Re: Correction <hr/> voce: Something can't come from nothing, it's a logical fallacy. It is counterintuitive, but not a 'logical fallacy'. Both propositions are axiomatic. The opposite (eternal existence) is just as odd. My point is that there is no point in so-called ontological proofs. Nothing is proved by them - it's just a mind game. It confuses people to no end. Thomas |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 101(3/15/04 2:32 pm)Reply                                                                                    | Re: Correction <hr/> Eternal- Without beginning or end. Eternity- The totality of time without beginning or end. I can feel it...GOD am I bored! Edited by: XXX STATIC X at: 3/17/04 10:19 am                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| Owen1234Registered UserPosts: 41(3/16/04 3:21 am)Reply                                                                                         | Re: Correction <hr/> XXX STATIC X: To prove something is eternal you must first prove the contradiction, nothing is eternal is false. XXX STATIC X:Nothing is eternal.All being came into being from non-being, makes nothing is eternal False.Something can't come from nothing. So, something infinite must exist if all finite beings came into being from being.                    |

"Nothing is eternal" do you mean that there is no thing that is eternal, or do you mean there IS a thing, namely nothing, that is eternal?

"All being came into being from non-being" is self-contradictory.

Surely, there is no-thing that results from no-thing.

I agree with your "Something can't come from nothing".

But, "So, something infinite must exist if all finite beings came into being from being." does not compute.

Do you believe that the physical universe is composed of infinite entities? Why?

Are there an infinite number of grains of sand?

Owen

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 507
(3/16/04 7:43 am)
Reply

-----

---

I'll prove to you that XXX STATIC X is just a sweet little boy, with a lot of questions, just like Hu Zheng, for instance.
But maybe I find no interest in doing that.
Takes time from me, while they need time to grow up.

Hey, and how's our Rhetty Hamilton doing? Etc.

wounded bird
Posts: 17
(3/16/04 9:52 am)
Reply

Argument

---

Something is Eternal is written: There exists a thing x such that for all eternity, x is eternal.

To prove, you say, requires proving the contradiction.

I'm not sure proving "nothing" is eternal is the direct contradiction.
"Nothing" is an all inclusive statement whereas "something" could be one thing or many. Therefore, it would seem to me that the contradiction would be something is not eternal.

If you wish a contradiction to "Nothing is eternal" it would seem to be "All things are eternal".

As to proving the contradiction of the original statement: Something is

|                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                        | eternal or the original statement, I don't think you'd be able to prove it because none of us live long enough to determine if it were so nor have been around since the beginning of time to dispute it. Unless and until they provide the source of all life sans theory none of us will know. However, on basic science theory, there is a precept that matter is neither created nor destroyed, therefore, in theory, matter is eternal...just not necessarily in its original form. Of course, I am a second rate mathematician and my proofs are subject to argument.                                                                                                    |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 102(3/17/04 2:56 am)Reply | Re: Argument <hr/> God is believed to be the contradiction, so nothing eternal is my contradiction.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 510(3/17/04 4:50 am)Reply         | Re to XXX STATIC X <hr/> Now you proved yourself that you're a sweet little boy.Thanks.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| Owen1234Registered UserPosts: 43(3/17/04 10:03 pm)Reply     | Re: Re to XXX STATIC X <hr/> wounded bird:Something is Eternal is written: There exists a thing x such that for all eternity, x is eternal. Nonsense de-lux. Because a statement is written, concludes no-thing at all! That the proof of "There exists a thing x such that for all eternity, x is eternal" is that it is written, is folly at best, ..garbally-gook. No assertion is true in virtue of the fact that it is written somewhere. What kind of 'logic' is this that you claim?? How can you believe that this nonsense is true?? wounded bird: If you wish a contradiction to "Nothing is eternal" it would |

|                                                                                                 |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                 | seem to be "All things are eternal". Wrong again: Nothing is eternal, is false, means, It is not the case that something is eternal, is false. i.e. the negative of "Nothing is eternal" is that "Something is eternal"! Edited by: Owen1234 at: 3/17/04 10:31 pm                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| meandmybeer Posts: 2(3/18/04 3:15 am) Reply                           | ZZZZZZ ===== ZZZZZZ <hr/> Why? Nonsense is eternal. So is time.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| XXX STATIC X Registered User Posts: 109(3/18/04 3:53 am) Reply | Time <hr/> Time belongs to the individual. You belong to the eternal. Watch your language :P                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| wounded bird Posts: 19(3/18/04 1:51 pm) Reply                         | Owen1234 Reply <hr/> Bad choice of words, sorry Owen. What I meant to say is that in mathematical jargon "Something is eternal" can be translated into the statement "There exists a thing x such that for all eternity, x is eternal". It is just a translation not a proof. The proof would be my explanation of matter being possibly eternal. Now barring the mathematical diatribe, can we say that the statement "Nothing is Eternal" is false because something IS eternal, that something being matter based on scientific theory (which God could severely mess up since no one is sure about anything)? I appreciate the lesson on the other, but I am now confused. So let me spell out my confusion and maybe you can diffuse the confusion.... Given the statement: Nothing is Eternal Would the contradiction not be: All things are Eternal? |

P and  $\sim$ P?

Isn't the negation of P "All"? It may be how the word is interpreted.

After I wrote the alleged contradiction of "Something is eternal" being "Something is not eternal" it did sound somewhat like a negation vs a contradiction. But it follows the mathematical rules.

$P=Q$  Something is eternal

$P=\sim Q$  Something is not eternal

but...

Something is eternal and something is not eternal follows P and  $\sim$ P but only if the somethings are the same thing. If they are different items then it would not be a contradiction.

But you are going on further to say, and this makes sense, that the proof of "Nothing is Eternal is a false statement" is "Something is eternal"

This is what I get for getting into math with a bunch of men around. I may need to bow out of this argument and the sooner the better. *smile*

Owen1234

Registered User

Posts: 44

(3/18/04 9:31 pm)

Reply

Re: Owen1234 Reply

---

wounded bird:

Bad choice of words, sorry Owen. What I meant to say is that in mathematical jargon "Something is eternal" can be translated into the statement "There exists a thing x such that for all eternity, x is eternal". It is just a translation not a proof.

OK. There is some x such that x always exists, is contra-intuition, and contra-experience.

Even in the case of 'mental' objects such as truth or numbers, ..they do not exist outside of mind.

Without mind there is no knowledge at all, is there?

Timelessness is pure illusion, there is no possible thing that is timeless. (outside of our own inventions)

That the world existed prior to mind is an assumption, not a fact.

That every effect has a cause, entails eternal objects of some kind.

Causality is a convenient assumption, it is not fact.

wounded bird: The proof would be my explanation of matter being possibly eternal.

Yes, we do "believe" that space-time-matter-energy exists eternally, but we cannot know its truth.

Causation is believed axiomatically, it is an assumed and unprovable truth.

wounded bird: Now barring the mathematical diatribe, can we say that the statement "Nothing is Eternal" is false because something IS eternal, that something being matter based on scientific theory

Yes. Nothing is Eternal, means, It is not the case that something is eternal.

There is no object named 'nothing'. We are not saying that nothing has the property of being eternal, because there is no property that 'nothing' has. It does not exist!

wounded bird: (which God could severely mess up since no one is sure about anything)?

God exists, is another assumed and unprovable truth, if you believe that it is true.

wounded bird: I appreciate the lesson on the other, but I am now confused. So let me spell out my confusion and maybe you can diffuse the confusion....

Given the statement: Nothing is Eternal

Would the contradiction not be: All things are Eternal?

-----

No.

Nothing is eternal, if and only if,  $\sim$ (Something is eternal)

All things are eternal, iff, Nothing is not eternal

All things are eternal, iff,  $\sim$ (Something is not eternal).

wounded bird: P and  $\sim$ P?

Isn't the negation of P "All"? It may be how the word is interpreted.

Not so. Logical definitions make these confusions clear.

Some x is F, means, (Fa or Fb or Fc or ..)

All x is F, means,  $(Fa \ \& \ Fb \ \& \ Fc \ \dots)$ .

Some x is F, means,  $\sim(\text{All } x \text{ is not } F)$ .

All x is F, means,  $\sim(\text{Some } x \text{ is not } F)$ .

$Fx$  means x has the property F.

$(\text{Some } x: Fx)$  means there is an x such that  $Fx$ .

$\text{Not}(\text{some } x: Fx)$  means It is false that  $(\text{Some } x: Fx)$  is true. That is,  $\text{Not}(\text{some } x: Fx)$  means  $(\text{There is no } x: Fx)$ wounded bird: After I wrote the alleged contradiction of "Something is eternal" being "Something is not eternal" it did sound somewhat like a negation vs a contradiction. But it follows the mathematical rules.

$\sim(x \text{ is eternal})$ , iff,  $(x \text{ is non-eternal})$  ..is true for existent objects x.

But, nothing is not an existent object at all, i.e. it does not refer.

We cannot substitute 'nothing' for 'x' and maintain truth.

$\sim(\text{nothing is eternal})$  iff  $(\text{nothing is non-eternal})$  ..is false.

$\sim(\text{nothing has existence})$  iff  $(\text{nothing has the property of non-existence})$ , is contradictory.

That which does not exist has no properties at all.

wounded bird:

$P=Q$  Something is eternal

$P=\sim Q$  Something is not eternal

but...

I don't understand your symbolism here.

If P is an object then  $\sim P$  has no meaning.

There is no such thing as not-wounded bird, is there?

'not-wounded bird' is not a well-formed-formula, i.e. it lacks suitable syntax.

wounded bird:

Something is eternal and something is not eternal follows

P and  $\sim P$  but only if the somethings are the same thing. If they are different items then it would not be a contradiction.

But you are going on further to say, and this makes sense, that the proof of "Nothing is Eternal is a false statement" is "Something is eternal"

Something, everything, nothing, and neverything, are not names of objects at all.
They are ways of talking about objects in general and they are not one of the objects talked about.

wounded bird: This is what I get for getting into math with a bunch of men around. I may need to bow out of this argument and the sooner the better. *smile*

There are many women who deal very successfully with symbolic logic, in spite of the claims of QSR.

For example: Ruth Marcus, Susan Haak, Suzzane Langer, etc. etc.

Edited by: Owen1234 at: 3/18/04 9:39 pm

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2295

(3/18/04 9:57 pm)

Reply

Re: Correction

---

Thomas wrote:

Quote:

---

voce: Something can't come from nothing, it's a logical fallacy.

Thomas: It is counterintuitive, but not a 'logical fallacy'.

---

At the very least, things are created by the mind's capacity to conceptualize and create distinctions. So there is no question that it is impossible for something to come out of nothing.

Quote:

---

The opposite (eternal existence) is just as odd.

---

Not to me.

Quote:

---

My point is that there is no point in so-called ontological proofs. Nothing is proved by them - it's just a mind game. It

|                                                                                             |                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                             | confuses people to no end. <hr/> Only poor-quality thinkers are confused by it, and those whose views are purely textbook in nature. (A textbook thinker is always confused, by definition!) |
| the meme of barnabyRegistered UserPosts: 13(4/4/04 8:34 pm)Reply | understanding something <hr/> why can't something come from nothing?...Because we can't understand it?                                                                                              |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 116(4/6/04 2:50 am)Reply       | Re: understanding something <hr/> Cause and effect, simple law of relativity.                                                                                                                       |

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> pure human

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                           | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| huzhengRegistered UserPosts: 41(2/20/04 6:56 pm)Reply | pure human <hr/> pure human2004.1.202004.1.14How can they pretend to be so justice, noble and polite? People are keep stupified by watch television in the whole life. I want to commit suicide. How many years can my childish heart be kept? 2004.1.15ä»Ššâ©æ^'ä»¥æ^'ä,°è•£,æ~Žâ©â-!æ ;ä»¥æ^'ä,°è•£ :_)I am proud of myself today, the school will be proud of me tomorrow :_) Genius will play gambling after old if he is hided in the society, as this can make him be thinking, although it is non-sense. One essence of my thinking is fellow the nature, so i don't stop my father from gambling, only advise him, now i understand the reason :_) One thing i need to explain is that the gambling which my father like, it is not the gambling you thought of, but a form that ask questions and need you get the answer by "think" :_) I concede it is think, but it haven't much value. "â©æ%â&gt;1/2" -&gt; ç»^ç»“â®—æ•TMä1&lt;â1/2œ,è;TMæœ-ä1!â•aç»TMçœÿæ-£çš,,â©æ%â•TMæ•TMâ3/4'çœ&lt;,ä1ÿâ°±æ~èf1/2â•šâ°ä»¥â•-æ•«ä,ç”ÿçš,,â©æ%•. My father is angry, my mother is arguing, my younger brother is shouting and crying. I smile, i have no emotion and no words, all of you are right :) |

They become peace and return to normal state soon, i know nothing happened at the beginning :_)

æ³°å±±å´©äŹå%•è€Æä,•æfš :_) Taishan mountain collapse in front of me and i am not frightened :_)

The perfect girl's voice seems to be not lovely at first, you even feel her voice don't like a girl as she is different from all the girls that you acquainted. It is only because her lovely haven't overflow from her heart yet.

Read over "The Chinese philosophy history" by Feng Youlang.

I find i start to trust fate now, that everything is predestined. I can always be peacefully because i trust everything is predestined?

I go to the book market, there are so many books, i think i can determine the book just by the book title.

People's name(especially Chinese) indicated the expectation of his/her parents to he/her, so people have the inclination to do things according to his/her name, someone changed his/her name, who i called genius killer, didn't achieved the expectation of his/her old name, this can be say as abnormal and don't fellow the nature.

Nobody is pretending? After you know they are pretending, they are not pretending to you too.

Crime and punishment is not two, but one. Perfect.

Why smile and nod is so powerful? It make others' teaching become reporting :_)

Connect by heart, so don't need to pretend and can be very efficient.

When watch a movie, which is a virtual world, you are dived into it, when you return to normal world, you still didn't get into the real world, as you only do things such as eating in the real world. What is a matrix? In the real world, you only do things to keep alive. There exist another world, the real world, you can only get into it by thinking.

I look at the city, the light of the buildings, so many people are living in the big city. I understand "The Legend of 1900": "It wasn't what I saw that stopped me, Max. It was what I didn't see. You understand that? What I didn't see. In all that sprawling city there was everything except an end. There was no end. What I did not see was where the whole thing came to an end. The end of the world...". Genius fear to be vanished in the city as many others. I don't fear it now, as i have already understood the city.

It was raining, i give my book to Jiang Qin tonight, i find her eyes is very very luster, she should live in the reality as me. I find she speak very fast, which may astonish many boys, that seems she is always very exciting, completely different from her appearance, yes, she is full of energy and be efficient as me. I think this is the indication that Yin and Yang change to Yang and Yin. Boy prostitute :_) Too ridiculous, this astonished me too. She is completely different from the normal girl, she must be the superwoman, i will try to understand her.

I sleep and think, one thing we need to aware, just like Zhang Yong think he understand his girlfriend, and he will always confirm it, but he don't really understand his girlfriend, because a baby is only her latter form. Most of you don't really understand woman too, because you didn't acquainted the real girl. I think Jiang Qin is a real girl, her achievement is always very good, very beautiful, tall, and her family environment is very good, so she is keep never changed as me.

If i understand her, i should have understood woman.

2004.1.18

Yes, Nietzsche understand this too.

=====

Someone took a youth to a sage and said: "Look, he is being corrupted by women." The sage shook his head and smiled. "It is men," said he, "that corrupt women; and all the failings of women should be atoned and improved in men. For it is man who creates for himself the image of woman, and woman forms herself according to this image."

"Damn oil! Damn kindness!" Someone else shouted out of the crowd; "women need to be educated better!" - "Men need to be educated better," said the sage and beckoned to the youth to follow him. - The youth, however, did not follow him.

==

Zhang Yong want a baby like girlfriend, so his girlfriend become a baby after acquainted him.

The superwoman don't change herself. Man often want woman be lower than him, when they meet the superwoman(or supergirl), they will start to court her, but only after talk for several words, they can sense he is not as good as this girl, they don't dare to court her soon, although she is perfect. She is my girl :)

Oh, dear, keep silence can be misunderstood too, oh, smile can be misunderstood too. I tell you, i was thinking about how to save human, OK? I am not keep silence for your affairs, i am not smile for your affairs. You live in the appearance world, we are not in the same world, do you know?

You live very good? That pet live better than you, it eat, copulate, and happy everyday :_)

If i didn't write my precious books, what will happen? Another Hu Zheng write it? :_) Anyway, i should do my best to help human evolution. Philosophy really changed the whole human more than science.

"Genius Country" -> Just like Buddha persuade the Buddhist to beg, this book persuade the member of genius religion to prostitute. Certainly, only male genius :_) Oh, another thing, just like Buddhist's begging is different from beggar's begging, the member of genius religion's prostitution is not that way which you thought of :)

"å¤©æ%å½" -> å±åf•ä½>é™€è´æœ•å...¶æ•™å¼'åŽ»è®·éŸ-ä,€æ , è;™æœ-ä½è´æœ•å¤©æ%•æ•™æ•™å¼'åŽ»å-æ«. å½“ç,,¶, æ~æŒ†ç”·æ €§å¤©æ% :_) å“i,å†•å±æ~, å±åf•å’Œå°šè®·éŸ-å’Œä½ä,•è®·éŸ-æ~ä, å½žä°ä,€æ , å¤©æ%•æ•™æ•™å¼'å-æ«ä½ä,•æ~ä½ ä»Ÿä,°çš,,é,£æ :)

I find now i need spiritual food very much, but normal book can't feed me now, oh, i don't have much interest in literature books now, i am more interest in real life, philosophy books, to me, haven't much to read too. I can start to put more focus on science soon :)

I say:"i am the superman" with the childish voice and shave the hands, both my younger brother and i are so happy :)

I have see people explain Tao as the way, it should be wrong, to me, Tao is the harmoniousness.

Those things which you are good at reciting, is just what i am good at forgetting.

The time that the law system build up completely, is the time that the law system smash. Because you will find we don't need law.

2004.1.17

Jiang Qin is the real babyly girl. What is the difference between the female genius killer and her? First, Jiang Qin looks like a baby, female genius killer don't. Second, female genius killer's words is very babyly, but it is pretending and is only her latter form. The real babyly grow up girl's words is very fast and short, and she don't adapt herself to you. Yes, just like there exists two type of ignorance, there exists two type of babyly, and, the real baby won't let you feel she is babyly, just like my ignorance won't let you feel i am ignorant.

"å©æ%•å½" -> è™æœ-ä!å†...å®!å²ç»•éžå,æ•æ€-,åÿ°æœ-ä,Šå°±æ~åœ¨-å±±ä,•æ~å±±,ä°°ä,•æ~å°°. å> æ-åå•ªç»™çœœæ†,ä°†å%•ä,åœœ-ä!å!¶å²å°†è†å±±è®-ç»fæ^è¶...ä°°ä°†çš,,ä°°çœœ<ä, <è½½åœ°å°€ä,å°Šè-%ä½ :_) çÿ¥é•“ä°†çš,,å•ç•€ä!å•“.

Email address can give you many information, such as mine is huzheng_001, first, it is because i can't register huzheng as it have already registered by other people, second, why i don't use huzheng_000? Although it is cool, but i don't like not-exist, i don't use 007 because i don't want to be others :) The email of Zhang Yong's girlfriend is jiuyueyingfei, the eagle fly in the September, so you can easily know she say she would like to lead a normal life with Zhang Yong is not really. Jiang Qin's email is babyqin, yes, she is really a baby in the heart.

About FaLun Gong's tenet

FaLun Gong publicize that they pursue "True, Good, Beautiful", i think pursue "True" and "Beautiful" both are good, but pursue "Good" may lead people to the wrong way, especially deliberately put "Good" in the middle, with two good words around it, because everyone is Good(My philosophy ideology think human are good by born), ask you pursue "Good" apparently, ask you trust others are not good in fact. I keep silence about FaLun Gong at first, when i see someone criticize FaLun Gong while they haven't understand FaLun Gong, I even hold the support attitude, but after i read some FaLun Gong's advertise materials, i get to see FaLun Gong's inner spiritual essence, cheat uneducated people, then i no longer hold the support attitude to FaLun Gong.

å...³åžæ³•è½®åšÿçš,,æ•™ä!%i½žæ³•è½®åšÿå®£ä¼ è½æ±, "çœÿi¼œå-,i¼œç³¼ž"i¼œæ^èš%å³¼— è½æ±,çœÿå'œç³¼žé½æ~å¥½çš,,i¼œä½†è½æ±,å-,å®!æ~“ä½çüä°°èç«è-å!i¼œç%å°«æ~èç...æ,,æššå-,æ”³åœ°ä,-é—i¼œç””ä,å,å¥½çš,,å—æ¥å>ç•€å®f!¼œå> ä,ä°°ä°°é½æ~å-,çš,,(æ^çš,,å²å-!å½“ç»é†œè®ä,ä°°æ€§æœ-å-,)i¼œèèé•çä,šæ~è!å½ è½æ±,å-,i¼œååžé™...ä,šæ~è!å½ ç>,äçüå^«ä°°æ•¶i¼žæ^å¹æ³•è½®åšÿä,€å¼œå§æ~æœäçç•™æ€•å°i¼œåœçœœå°æœ%ä°>ä°°åœ°å¹æ³•è½®åšÿé½èçü,ä°°èššçš,,æf...å†ü,å°±æ%å¹å°•å¹æ—¶æ^ç”šè†æœ•æ~æœ•æ€•å°i¼œä,èç†åœ°°èššæ³•è½®åšÿçš,,ä,€ä°å®£ä¼ èµ,,æ-™åži¼œæ^å°çœœå†å°°è†æ³•è½®åšÿçš,,ç²³ç¥žå†...è

~1/4Eæ-°éª—æ— çÿç³⁄⁴ä¹⁄⁴—i¹⁄⁴Eä¹ÿä°
±ä, •â†•â¹æ³•è¹⁄²®åŠÿæE•æ”æE•æ€•â°iâ°†i¹⁄⁴Ž

Things turned out after we grown up and we understand why. when recall those things between us, we have no regret, it was already perfect. Our eyes are looking at each other, when we recall it.

I gain the emotion from my mother, the reasoned head from my father.

The defect of my father is he don't love pets and a little despise woman as the Chinese tradition, the defect of my mother is she become hysterical in the very furious situation.

I understand why Buddha ask you don't eat meat, his heart can connect to animals as me too. Eat the animals feed by human should have no problem, but we have no right to eat wild animals, however, hunter is not in this case. Then, in my opinion, eat meat have no problem.

Buddhist will become the member of genius religion.

Just like Christianity is the biggest stupifying religion, Buddhism stopped human evolution too as it stopped geniuses' propagation. Christianity become stupifying because Jesus tell lie that there exists a god(so he have to kill himself as crime and punishment is one), Buddha tell you to avoid sexual intercourse, because Buddha didn't get as high as me, that the human have some portion of animals? It should be so. Yes, he can't discover this when people still worry about living.

Why human have some portion of animals? This is easy to understand, as human are mammal, so human share some genes of them. So, there exists three type of morality, first, no-danger animal morality, so they can live together peacefully, second, beast morality, so they don't fight in themselves, work together to do crime on no-danger animals, and help each other when the other is in the dangerous situation, to save life. The third, is the human morality, which described by Nietzsche as the superman morality.

What will happen after human start to evolution very fast as my thinking accepted by everyone? Then, boys will more and more look alike, girls are the same, all handsome, all beautiful. But i think everyone should still not be the same, just like we think monkeys are all look alike, but monkeys still can distinguish each other by face, we can still distinguish each other even we look very alike, as our ability to distinguish grow up at the same time. The next 2000 years will be so cool, only pure human can done the work of explore the galaxy and fly out of it. Saucer man should exist, will they look like human? Or completely different? Anyway, interesting things will happen. Oh, yes, I haven't much interest on read or write literature books now, but I can read and write science fiction :_) So, i need to learn science more deep first :)

Oh, how lucky, that we born in this era.

Darwin is great, that discovered the evolution of animals, i discovered the evolution of human :)

Now China society become very stable, crime become very seldom just in recent several years, as we solved the living problem, this is because Chinese are very wise, or very humanly, anyway, the human over the earth are all very humanly now :)

Oh, one thing, human won't become completely the same, such as the color of eyes, hairs :) Beautiful human.

How to know whether you like each other? Very easy, your eyes are always look at each other. Oh, so simple, but don't knowing this is not a bad thing, it created my love story with icelotus :) Oh, knowing this won't change anything, even you tell this to the me while loving icelotus, he won't trust this, yes, all of my roommates have told me that icelotus is impossible to me at that time :_) but i trust i can change it. So, the only successful love is the love by the first glance, but wrong partner love story is a good memory too.

My love story with Jiang Qin is inevitable, our eyes were always looking at each other when talking :_) Oh, i will have many love story. Don't envy me, study my philosophy, become a boy that have the charming eyes which full of wisdom :)

I can always be peacefully, not only because i trust everything is predestined, but also because i do things as i planed and on my initiative, and everything happens as i can predict approximately, so things won't surprise me.

One experience about write philosophy book, unlike literature book, philosophy book only need to write once and needn't modify, as your thinking must be consistently, so write down what you are thinking exactly, if get new idea, try you best to only append.

Good literature book, especially write about the whole life, will tell you the first draft, the second draft, the final draft, such as "The ordinary world" by Lu Yao. The deepest emotion won't express emotion or opinion in the text, because they caved into the things which written down, so you can get by heart. When i write about my first lover for the first time in "my childhood", i write down some words to describe my emotion and opinion, the second time, i only write that her smiling face is still clearly in my heart.

I like watch television :_) mountain is mountain again. This is because i can be thinking while watching television. The key is, good things and bad things are often mixed together, whether you have the superman's eyes to distinguish them.

About Nietzsche's go mad, i think his go mad is not because of the non-stop thinking. It should because he is hit by a horse(i heard this), and i get to know his go mad by syphilis is just rumor, it was because he have the head illness. Weininger's commit suicide is because he haven't the childish heart as me, and can't get love from girls as he stopped to court girl, i always have a girl in my heart while my thinking progressing.

I often see people the time they get the highest is the time their valuing system get smash, such as get many money, well-know fame. I know how to keep lowest :_)

I still remember that morning i say:"Geniuses in the world! Unite!", that i find myself in that morning. Reader, have you find yourself?

Just like genius learn from mistake, human as a whole is a genius too, so human can always get progress.

I was a lion when saying garbages, stupifying etc. :)

ä»¥â%•æœ€â-œæ¬ççš,,è~•: è‡ªç”±æ~âf«,, çœÿæ-fçš,,é»‘â®ç, âœ©æ%•ä,- çš,,âœ©æ%•, âœ§ç™¹/²ç—’, â®œç³/⁄Ž, æœ€æœ€â-œæ¬ççš,,è~•: â‘µâ‘µ. Words i like: freedom fighter, true hacker, genius of geniuses, big idiot, perfect, and most like: hehe.

æ,...æ°`èš™è“%œj~ä,•æ~lotusæ~â> ä,°âÿ¹èj~ç¹/⁴â°`â°†âœ€â•-èjœèš,è œœä,•â•-â°µçžœâœ•çš,,æ,,ÿèš%œi¹/⁴œèœœâšœç•´çš,,é,fçš•è~`è•çš,,é œÿâ°â’œâf°éÿ³æ-fâ°±æ~ç»™â°°èj™çš•æ,,ÿèš%œãœ,èfjç•â-œæ¬çè-³ä° œœ™...è^zi¹/⁴œè‡ªç,,¶â¹/⁴šè·ÿâ³/⁴âœšè^zâ¹/⁴`è-³i¹/⁴œèj™æ~æ,...æ°´çš,,æ ,,ÿèš%œãœ,

Why many geniuses are love childi¹/⁴ÿ A male genius make love with a beautiful woman, who is a female genius.

Have you ever see the helix tube which you can often see in the barbershop, the white and black spire and give you the appearance of unlimited flow up while the tube is only circling. Time is unlimited? or a circle? I incline to circle. If so, then time can be reverse as the circle turn reverse, oh, that is too ridiculous. I need science to help me on this.

Does random exists? This will help my thinking very much. Quantum physics say it exists, i need to examine it by myself.

Always insist on open, the time you begin to close, the time defect generate.

2004.1.18

Genius religion can only be created by a child :_)

I won't cheat boys to learn eagerly, i won't cheat girls to make love with me :_) Because tell them the truth have much better effect. Start to cheat, stop to progress. I must haven't any morality defect, i always consider others as many as myself, because we are together.

Oh, how can i write down so many things and non-stop? How many books will i write in my whole life? Oh, that will be horrible. In my experience, people's books can always be summarize to several ideas, my books have this typicality too, if i can't get new big idea by written a book, i should stop writing, or i can't surmount myself. I don't want to be only a philosopher :_)

Nietzsche like "Carmen" too :)

Read over "Nietzsche biography" by Du Liyang.

Why crime become so seldom? Animals and beasts can earn the living easily.

How to know which country is most developed? Just look which country's president is most handsome :_)

Why some handsome boys or beautiful girls seems not as good as normal people? Because achievement is not everything, and the standard of handsome or beautiful is not very right ago. Who is handsome? Hu Jintao is the standard, i am the standard :_) In other side, just give you the photo of me will give you the feeling of handsome too.

Genius only know he is handsome after grow up, human only understand themselves after grow up.

So simple.

æœ€é«~æ€•æf³âçfç•œ: å‘µå‘µ

The highest spiritual level: hehe

Human is thinking, god is laughing. I always laugh while you are thinking :
_)

Read over a book of Lao Zte, Lao Zte have get to know the harmoniousness. The essence of his thinking is written in the first two sentences, others are mainly used to cheat stupid people, so his wisdom can save to today.

Why the girl don't reply to you? She don't like you? Girl have no love? No :) You can imagine what words can she reply to your words, will those words show her initiative? So she don't reply to you, as female genius will surely insist on this, as those words don't fit her character, and to distinguish herself from the female genius killer. It is lucky that i have already understand this, or i will go the way as Weininger.

Weininger was misunderstood, he is regard as a fanatic misogynist because Weininger was saying mountain is not mountain.

I look at the television, animals sit together and are so happy :_)

Genius don't like herd together as they don't like to be the same as others while they know they are different from others.

Yes, i can know who is going to commit suicide by the eyes, as i can know your heart from eyes. In the other side, i can make my eyes look like going to commit suicide etc., as i can make my heart going to commit suicide, but it have no danger, as i have the seasoned head, and the childish heart will always within me.

On girl, speak very fast is the indication of high intelligence, the beautiful face is the indication of emotion, the good shape of body is the indication of will. Just like most boy is weak on will, most girl is weak on intelligence. Jiang Qin is a perfect girl.

Why women like match-making? Because they know who is good girl and who is good boy. So, listen to your mother about your marriage, if you father's opinion is not the same as your mother's, trust your mother.

Why China didn't have science? Because the wisest people fellow the nature, they can sense the whole as Tao, so they neglected the detail, and stopped to ask why. Don't ask why is not a child, so, we should develop(or keep) the abilities that the infant have.

2004.1.19

â-”â-•çš,,ä»•â1%o: ä»•i¼Ĉĕâ®¶ç•œé•“â¾•i¼Ĉĕâ1%oi¼Ĉĕé†Žă...½é•“â¾•ãĈ,è ĈĈĕâœ”âœçš,,é•“â¾•é†Ĉĕâ¹ç«çš,,æ”ç^±â’Ĉæ-ĤăĈ,

Confucius's Kind and Duty: Kind, domestic animal morality, Duty, beast morality. In human morality, the correspondence are love and justice.

â-”â-•â...-â••èĈĈçŸŸăđ©ă¹½i¼Ĉĕă:°ă°Ĉĕâ••â²•â°±çŸŸ Confucius know the fatality when he is sixty, i know fate when i was just twenty :)

Ÿé•“fateă°†i¼Ĉĕă‘μă‘μăĈ,

Read over a book of Chuang Tsu, oh, he is as wise as me, and Chuang Tsu is much higher than Lao Tze, this can know by he have a wife too, although his wife should be a normal(or stupid) woman.

Zhou Dunyi is higher than Chuang Tsu, he understand Ying and Yan, in fact, Ying and Yan is just the harmoniousness, and he love lotus just like me, but i am more higher as i love lotus like girls :_) As i know the animal portion in human.

Liu Dehua is a genius as he know he is a clumsy(or ignorant) child, but he is cheated by Wu Jianhao, Wu Jianhao is not a child as him, although he seems to more like a child than everyone, the genius killer is good at pretending.

Love is generate from propagation, not sexual desire. Why you love each other? Because your child will be the best. Not only this, you can get on very well too. Yes, Weininger's sex-complement theory is right. I am 0.5, Jiang Qin is 0.5 too, Hu Yan is 0.4, her boyfriend is 0.6.

Oh, what? All of you know these things too? "Mountain is mountain" is different from "mountain is mountain again".

"The Evolution of Human" -> Constitute by "philosophy relativity", "genius country" and "pure human", the book terminate religions, write for geniuses as the love manual, let Christian flight from Christianity, let Buddhist monks take a wife, let sages get marry, foretell many freshly new human's born.

ăĈŠă°ç±»çš,,èĭ>ăĈĕ-ăĈĈ-> â†ă,°ăĈŠă“²ă-!ç> ,ă¹è®ăĈĈ<,ăĈŠăđ©ăœ%o•ă½ă
ĈĈ<,ăĈŠç°-ăœç±»ăĈĈă, %œf”ă†, ç»^ç»“ă®—æ•TMă¹<ă½œ, â†TMç»TMăđ©ăœ%o •ă»-çš,,ç^±æf...ă®•ă... , è®©ăŸ°ç•Ĥæ•TMă¾’ă¼fæ•TM, è®©ă’Ĉĕă° šă¶ă°², è®©ăœĤăœç»“ă©š, éç,,çđç•Ĉăđšæ%o¹çš,,ă...”æ-°ăœç±»è-žç”Ÿ.

ä½>æ•™çš,,ç¼~â^† -> Predestination. å> æžœæšŸå” -> Crime and punishment is one, but not two.

When i input my thinking notes which was written on the paper into the computer, i find, my thinking that only several days ago was so naive, but i know, but the people, those adults, are as naive as my old thinking, they get one position of my thinking, then stopped thinking, develop that thinking to detail, which seems very complex but the essence is still very naive as mine.

Another thing i find is, my ability to forget is so good, once i decided one thing or one people is no longer important to help me develop my thinking as i have already find his/her memory in my head have already be analyzed completely and written down, i will forget it soon(but still saved in the head, maybe just the index is removed), in the other side, my memory is very good, anything that still have question to me will be keep in my head, and one day i will get the answer of it, then write down new sentences as my thinking note, so my thinking can be very consistent, this astonished me too. Good litterateur have this ability too, such as Cao Xueqin.

Why "The earth is around" is accepted by children so naturally and easily while it was so ridiculous ago? My thinking will be accepted by everyone too, but you must remember, it was very ridiculous ago too. And, i find, the standard of handsome/beautiful is always changing slowly too, become more and more right as more and more humanly, but we must remember, also we all think Nietzsche and Weininger are very handsome, their contemporary people must don't think so, yes, just like we find the handsome star several years ago is not very handsome in our eyes now, and the new star is not handsome at first then become handsome naturally.

Girl's face only become lovely after grown up too. Some girls are most lovely in the senior high school, Zhang Jingzhe is in this case, then is Hu Yan, her most lovely period is the time i court her, then she is not as lovely as ago, i describe it by "she is losing her beautifulness", Jiang Qin have the very lovely face now, but her face was beautiful but looks woodenly in the senior high school.

One experience, always write down your thinking honestly, even you are thinking about many very "bad" things, you will get to know your old "bad" thinking is just very naive soon, be thinking bravely, or you can't make your thinking get progress. I have the experience of fear "dangerous" thinking too, but you should know, you are only a child, everyone will forgive you even you have "bad" thinking :) I understand why only i can do the work of enlighten human now, as only a child can be so brave.

I know why Jiang Qin's voice is not very lovely and her fast talking seems to be exciting, as her heart is still completely a baby, while she have a very reasoned head. Yes, heart only start to develop after grown up, often by the first intense love, now her heart is just like the heart when i write the first several love letters to icelotus.

Oh, may be you feel i am too ruthless, that always analyze others' heart, but, i know, you can understand me.

The font on the computer screen is so clear and beautiful to me, i know it is neglected by you, but in the superman's eyes, it is always very beautiful.

Why my younger brother is not as good as me? This can be know by the theory of hereditary. But he is still better(humaner) than other boys.

2004.1.20

The reason that girl don't reply to you, not only because she haven't good words to reply to you, but also because she fear to open her heart to you, just like you have love a girl in the back and only one year later dare to tell her that you like her. Trust the eyes when you look at each other.

Higher spiritual level: haha.

æ>´é«~åçfç•Ei¼šå“^å“^.

I know what i am good at, i can make your thought which you think is very deep become as naive as mine just by reply several words, it is because your thought is really very naive. I can make all of you become naive children again :_)

Why China government make education so expensive? To develop education. So China education will become cheap soon.

Why he teach you while he know that he needn't teach you? Because there are several women pretending to listening to him. People all start to pretend when herd together. They haven't much things learned, so they need to pretend. They have no valuable things to do, so they have time to pretend.

Why you think those old professors in the university are more learned than me? Their youth are wasted in the "ten years culture revolution", study their "knowledge"? Learn eagerly by yourself!

Why don't you trust yourself being the god as me? Let those weak will people wait the god, imagine the god, let us become the god.

It is not the genius killer stopped your thinking, but that you want to stop thinking at the same time.

I go to the net bar and continue to input my articles into computer, one hour later the Windows system get died, all my work in the past one hour is destroyed, i know i turned from a child to a superman, i say nothing, pay the money and get out, i know my eyes become very terror, I know my valuing system is different from idiots, those useless papers in your eyes, is more important than my life, if you destroy it, i will kill you.

Make idiots understand me is impossible.

If i can see Nietzsche and Weininger after commit suicide, i will do it immediately.

Tears are flowing on my face.

Why i am so ruthless? Because i have devoted all my love.

I want to be alone, alone forever. How can i live with those people who can't understand me.

Nothing, i know i will be OK after drip down some tears :)

Enlighten human can only be done by do it on the root, i have done it :_)

I think i can stop write philosophy articles now, as i can't get new idea, in the other side, philosophy is terminated :)

Edited by: huzheng at: 2/21/04 4:39 pm

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2338

(2/20/04 11:17 pm)

Reply

---

---

You have devoted all your love! You are utterly ruthless! (:D) But there is more!

(:D)

|                                                                     |                                                  |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------|
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 451(2/21/04 4:31 pm)Reply | What?<hr/> Hu, I bow to thou.Master! |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------|

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Purpose of Religion?

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                               | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| HuzingtonRegistered UserPosts: 7(10/17/03 4:48 am)Reply                                                                                   | Purpose of Religion? <hr/> Is religion the "opium of the people", the purpose of which is "to satisfy other needs or conditions"; is religion "so fully determined by economics that it is pointless to consider any of its doctrines or beliefs on their own merits"? (Quoting Karl Marx, of course.) |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 152(10/17/03 8:26 am)Reply                                                                                      | Re: Purpose of Religion? <hr/> Religion is opium for the people and for the individual, it's an economical, cultural and traditional thing, but foremost, of course, it's sheer boloney.                                                                                                               |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 358(10/17/03 9:50 am)Reply  | Re: Purpose of Religion? <hr/> It's about ego and power structures.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |

|                                                                                                                                                                      |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 759(10/17/03 10:54 am)Reply                                                                                      | Re: Purpose of Religion? <hr/> Religion is necessary, absolutely.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1580(10/17/03 1:39 pm)Reply  | Re: Purpose of Religion? <hr/> Not it's not. That it exists only means it necessarily exists, but does not therefore mean it is necessary. Are you religious DEL? You recently mentioned your "God" magic! I have no objections to magic, but god magic is a scabrous cadaverous frontelophrope.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| cassiopeiaeRegistered UserPosts: 121(10/17/03 2:00 pm)Reply                                                                               | Re: Purpose of Religion? <hr/> Religion, in a sense, is all of these things. It's purpose is served, people need 'something'. I cannot say that I agree with religion, especially organized, I am far from religious in that sense, but it is here for a reason. If I try to imagine what a world without it would be like, it is difficult for me not to imagine chaos. Life does not come with an instruction manual, for most people, that is what they look for in religion. How to live, what to do, how to feel, the good, bad, some people find themselves through it. As far as mundane aspects, it mirrors any other organized 'society', like politics or family stature. I think that is attributed to the fact that no matter what people may believe or want to believe, to be human is to error - dishonourable qualities lurk in everyone...some people are overcome, some aren't. It is unfair to say 'religion' is about ego or power-it is a concept, bearing no control, it is the religious people who give it a bad rep...the same reason I can't take the Bible for anything other than a story, too many people had their hands on making it what it is today. Quoting a bumper sticker I see occasionally, God, save me from your followers! |

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 359

(10/17/03 3:30 pm)

Reply

Re: Purpose of Religion?

---

It is about ego because the reason people believe is that they believe it will make them everlasting.

It is about power from two aspects 1) for followers - submission to a higher ethereal power and submission to the power of the words of others and 2) for the preachers - they are drawn to it because of the power and control it gives them over others.

It is about power structures because religion keeps control over the herd and sets the direction the herd takes. We need religion because we instinctually need to be part of a herd. It stops us from being anarchical. Religion also sets the parameters for engagement with other herds (unfortunately).

DEL

Registered User

Posts: 760

(10/17/03 4:54 pm)

Reply

Re: Purpose of Religion?

---

Quote:

---

suergaz

Not it's not. That it exists only means it necessarily exists, but does not therefore mean it is necessary.

Are you religious DEL?

You recently mentioned your "God" magic!

I have no objections to magic, but god magic is a scabrous cadaverous frontelophrope.

---

If you brush your teeth, wash your clothes, have a bath, maintain a hair style on a regular basis you have religion.

Protocol.

Even a hermit has religion.

I agree 'god majic' is a scabrous cadaverous frontelophrope. But 'God Majick' is the opposite or inverse. It is much more dangerous to practice and much more powerful.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 655

(10/17/03 8:03 pm)

Reply

Re: Purpose of Religion?

---

Religion is an ancient itch, perhaps more the scratching thereof than the existential itch itself.

It is the opiate of the masses mostly because the masses are mostly unconscious. And the unconscious likes simple answers of wholistic utility, 'auto-completeing' as it does on scant evidence.

It's anatomy is both genetic and memetic. The genetic aspect is the part which has been bred into the populous on the whole, due to it's survival enhancing nature and the selection thereof. The God module is a quick fix sub-routine for the existential virus, similar in nature to the acceptance that  $\pi = 3.14$  and damn the details. It is so useful that it has been selected to such an extent that it has a dedicated part of the physical brain architecture all to itself.

Of course this aspect of the brain needs regular maintenance and general upkeep if it is to gain influence and acceptance, just as any neural pathways need to be at least well trodden and at least occasionally travelled subsequently, lest short-cuts and more interesting routes present themselves. This is where the memetic qualities of organised religion and ritual serve the purpose well and is why such religion has been memetically selected as the easiest, most acceptable and most itch satisfying virus killer, or at least isolator/insulator.

While there is a large aspect of control offered by the doctrines of many organised religions, and so a useful economic utility to those who might seek to subdue to such ends, said doctrines and beliefs are certainly not fully determined by economics; Marx was way off.

Religion is not simply protocol, this is but a small aspect of the need for it. One can have all sorts of protocols without having religion.

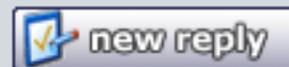

It is of great benefit to protozoic and developing society in general in that it provides a moral framework in a world which might otherwise be more like the cruel world of the animal kingdom. Right and wrong, as defined by personal and collective benefit, as defined by survival in a world of others who might just as soon preclude the survival of the weaker; makes sure that the law of the jungle is overruled.

Hence it's entrenchment.

|                                                                                                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                         | IMO. Disclaimer - Non of this is to say that the divine drive and it's causes are bullshit BTW.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1582(10/17/03 10:34 pm)Reply    | Re: Purpose of Religion? <hr/> Hahahaha! You all think religion is necessary because it exists! It is not necessary at all! In all your defences of it you are facing backwards!                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| cassiopeiaeRegistered UserPosts: 122(10/17/03 11:03 pm)Reply                                                                                 | Re: Purpose of Religion? <hr/> If religion isn't necessary, neither is philosophy, science, mathematics, language, or any other system of 'confinement'. They ARE necessary because they exist. Everything has its place. I cannot speculate on something not existing when there is no basis for that kind of experience in a world where these things do exist. |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1583(10/17/03 11:23 pm)Reply  | Re: Purpose of Religion? <hr/> I have not been understood! That everything has its place, that it exists, how is it then necessary?!                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1584(10/17/03 11:27 pm)Reply  | Re: Purpose of Religion? <hr/> The one needful thing...who can tell me what it is?!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |

|                                                                                                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| cassiopeiaeRegistered UserPosts: 123(10/17/03 11:28 pm)Reply                                                                                 | Re: Purpose of Religion? <hr/> You could explain yourself, you know... Besides, speculating on the 'non-existence' necessity is impossible-we exist. If you want to get down to it, as far as I know, nothing in general, is necessary, but in existence, these things are necessary for one reason or another. Existence is not necessary, but then again, one day we may find out other wise. |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 656(10/18/03 12:01 am)Reply  | Re: Purpose of Religion? <hr/> Leave me out of your derision eh Nietzsche Boy. I haven't said anything about it's necessity.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| cassiopeiaeRegistered UserPosts: 124(10/18/03 12:06 am)Reply                                                                                 | Re: Purpose of Religion? <hr/> I am curious to know exactly why it wouldn't be necessary.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 153(10/18/03 12:26 am)Reply                                                                                        | To suergaz <hr/> Quote: <hr/> The one needful thing...who can tell me what it is?! <hr/> Umm... to ease in a way the fear of death?Giving meaning to an otherwise senseless life?                                                                                                                                                                                     |

|                                                                                                                                                                             |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| rushdl  Registered User Posts: 24 (10/18/03 12:35 am) Reply    | Re: To suergaz <hr/> I think that one thing, is immortality. Every religion I can think of, uses that as the carrot on a string.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| suergaz Registered User Posts: 1585 (10/18/03 1:01 am) Reply                                                                                   | Re: Purpose of Religion? <hr/> It is not necessary, because we ourselves are contained systems if we have to fall to see so.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| suergaz Registered User Posts: 1586 (10/18/03 1:12 am) Reply  | Re: Purpose of Religion? <hr/> As for derision, where is it to be found?! Dave, I'm pleased you don't think religion is necessary.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| cassiopeiae Registered User Posts: 125 (10/18/03 1:53 am) Reply                                                                                | Re: Purpose of Religion? <hr/> Quote: <hr/> It is not necessary, because we ourselves are contained systems if we have to fall to see so. <hr/> I agree, however, you or I do not make up the populus. The mentality of the majority is not that of self sufficiency. I agree that personally, religion is not necessary, but as a whole, I still stick by the fact that it is. There are too many minds that don't understand what it is to exist, and they feel they need to be told. The way I look at it, if it helps someone, and is necessary for one, it serves its purpose. I cannot tell a happy religious person their world is not necessary, I can only accept the fact that they believe it is, which boils down to perception, the ruler of life. |

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31r
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Purpose of Religion?

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                       | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1589(10/18/03 9:39 am)Reply     | Re: Purpose of Religion?<hr/> Everyone is a confined system. Religion helps no-one.                                                                                                      |
| cassiopeiaeRegistered UserPosts: 126(10/18/03 10:59 am)Reply | Re: Purpose of Religion?<hr/> If it keeps someone from lopping the heads off of people, it helps.                                                                                        |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 154(10/18/03 3:20 pm)Reply         | Re: Purpose of Religion?<hr/> Yes, except when the power thing jimhaz spoke of is involved: the aggression and suppression of (fundamentalist) Islam, like Christianity in the old days. |

|                                                                                                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 657(10/18/03 8:42 pm)Reply  | Re: Purpose of Religion? <hr/> It's not necessary but whether it helps depends on what you define to be good and bad. There can be no doubt whatsoever that it is one of the most successful memes in human history. Memes are naturally selected.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1590(10/19/03 12:49 am)Reply                                                                                   | Re: Purpose of Religion? <hr/> No, it doesn't help. We are not talking about history.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| cassiopeiaeRegistered UserPosts: 127(10/19/03 1:20 am)Reply                                                                                 | Re: Purpose of Religion? <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Paul said: Yes, except when the power thing jimhaz spoke of is involved: the aggression and suppression of (fundamentalist) Islam, like Christianity in the old days. <hr/> I had addressed this earlier, it is not the religion that is power hungry, religion is a concept, it cannot effect people by existing, it is the people that effect people, religious people are the power players. Quote: <hr/> Mr. Toast said: It's not necessary but whether it helps depends on what you define to be good and bad. <hr/> Not necessary personally or as a whole? Since we cannot change history and the fact that it exists, is it still necessary as a whole? Agreed-the good or bad part... |

|                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1592(10/19/03 1:25 am)Reply    | Re: Purpose of Religion? <hr/> ...cass, it is not necessary personally and as a whole. You yourself say it is a concept.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| cassiopeiaeRegistered UserPosts: 128(10/19/03 7:27 am)Reply | Re: Purpose of Religion? <hr/> I know it is a concept, but it would only be unnecessary if there were no religion to begin with. Since it exists, it is currently necessary, because it is practiced, because people have taken the concept and built a 'life structure' out of it. It is not necessary to me, but I still think it is necessary to the whole. What would the world be like if tomorrow, religion dissappeared for one reason or another and people still had the attachment? It would be like taking heroin from a junkie. Have you ever taken heroin from an addict? It is not a pretty sight and for the most part a life threatening position to be in. Though a concept and a physical drug are two different things, they create the same outcome. Some people have died from drug withdrawl, to them it is like breathing, completely necessary, that is why they are always an addict, they can never be treated. Religion, I suppose, acts the same way. It is necessary for those who are religious. I still stand my ground in that it is necessary for the whole. |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 155(10/19/03 8:43 am)Reply        | Re: Purpose of Religion? <hr/> Quote: <hr/> I still stand my ground in that it is necessary for the whole. <hr/> After reading what you say in your post before this sentence, one could conclude that religion can be necessary for the individual who is 'addicted' to it. It seems to me that, for the whole, religion has no function whatsoever. Regarding the sometimes not too clear separation between church and state, or even the lack of separation, religion can even be a pest.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |

cassiopeiae
Registered User
Posts: 129
(10/19/03 10:55 am)
Reply

Re: Purpose of Religion?

---

I completely agree that religion can be a 'pest'. Being unpleasant to one doesn't make it any less pleasant to another. Basically what I am trying to say is that the whole (meaning world socio-structure) needs religion, presently, because it exists. On a personal level (meaning each person individually) it is not necessary to everyone or even most, but it is necessary to some. Everything that happens in this world, in this lifetime effects something else, which effects something else, and so on. Simple cause and effect. In one way or another each one of us is effected by religion directly or indirectly. Regardless of personal necessity, it is a part of the overall function of the world.

There are numerous theories and philosophies on views of religion and culture. To me, religion is no more than acceptance of something explaining the most asked and unanswered questions - Why are we here? and What happens next? Honestly, sometimes I envy those who are so content with their beliefs, to them life is so simple. Because I cannot accept this, sometimes my life seems difficult, but, that's the way I like it. I am not and cannot be content with someone else's reason as to how I should live. I have to figure that out for myself. I am not justifying ignorance as a scape route, nor would I recommend it if asked. There are numerous reasons why so-and-so may turn to religion, I don't think I need to go into any of them, but, each person is a unique mechanism, though we are composed of virtually the same parts. I don't look at religion as worship of one thing or another, though many do, which is why there is such an issue with power and control.

Possibly someday in an idealist world, religion will not be necessary, but today, it is.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1593
(10/19/03 12:08 pm)
Reply

Re: Purpose of Religion?

---

Quote:

---

I know it is a concept, but it would only be unnecessary if there were no religion to begin with.

Since it exists, it is currently necessary, because it is practiced, because people have taken the concept and built a 'life structure' out of it. It is not necessary to me, but I still think it is necessary to the whole.

---

How can it be necessary to the whole when to you and I it is unnecessary?

Because it has existed does not make it necessary, and neither does the fact that it still does, they only show that it has been necessary. Would you only find it unnecessary if it magically vanished altogether?!

Quote:

---

It is necessary for those who are religious. I still stand my ground in that it is necessary for the whole.

---

This makes no sense! How can this be so when I am a part of the whole, and yet it is unnecessary to me? Your ground you are standing...isn't!

Quote:

---

If it keeps someone from lopping the heads off of people, it helps.

---

I am sure I have thought like you before, and if this is only one of the purposes of religion, then it is reason enough for it to be destroyed completely. (If I have to explain why, well...will I?!)

cassiopeiae

Registered User

Posts: 130

(10/19/03 12:20 pm)

Reply

Re: Purpose of Religion?

---

Quote:

---

I said: I know it is a concept, but it would only be unnecessary if there were no religion to begin with. Since it exists, it is currently necessary, because it is practiced, because people have taken the concept and built a 'life structure' out of it. It is not necessary to me, but I still think it is necessary to the whole.

Suergaz said: How can it be necessary to the whole when to you and I it is unnecessary?

---

It is necessary for the whole because it is necessary for some. What effects one eventually effects all, directly or indirectly.

Quote:

---

Suergaz said: Because it has existed does not make it necessary, and neither does the fact that it still does, they only show that it has been necessary. Would you only find it unnecessary if it magically vanished altogether?!

---

I have no idea what you are saying. Sounds like you are saying it is necessary or **was** necessary.

I think if it magically vanished altogether it would prove the point that in fact it is necessary, people would still have attachments. The only way religion could be unnecessary is if people dropped the attachments, or, it never existed in the first place.

Quote:

---

Suergaz said: This makes no sense! How can this be so when I am a part of the whole, and yet it is unnecessary to me? Your ground you are standing...isn't!

---

Cause and effect. One person makes up a portion of the whole, what is necessary for one is directly or indirectly necessary for the whole.

Quote:

---

Suergaz said: I am sure I have thought like you before, and if this is only one of the purposes of religion, then it is reason enough for it to be destroyed completely. (If I have to explain why, well...will I?!)

---

Funny, I was thinking the same about you. And no, it is not the only reason. Regardless, if religion did eventually dissappear, it would make no difference to me. I am not defending religion, only saying it is a necessity of current life.

Edited by: cassiopeiae at: 10/19/03 12:22 pm

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1594
(10/19/03 12:26 pm)
Reply

Re: Purpose of Religion?

---

Quote:

---

Cause and effect. One person makes up a portion of the whole, what is necessary for one is directly or indirectly necessary for the whole.

---

But then it would also follow that what is unnecessary for one is directly or indirectly unnecessary for the whole.

cassiopeiae

Registered User

Posts: 131

(10/19/03 12:45 pm)

Reply

Re: Purpose of Religion?

---

EXACTLY!! My argument only pertains to the world and how it is now, from the past. It may be unnecessary in theory for all, but not all of 'us' have the consciousness to see past the shell. So, it is still a necessity, though in idealistic TRUTH unnecessary. Necessity is a matter of perspective. What is necessary for one is not necessary for all on a personal level, but both are necessary (or unnecessary) for the whole. Everything is here for a reason.

Curious, what would you say if everyone in the whole realized they are their own contraption and had no need for what we call religion? Wouldn't that still be religion? Having the answers of the Why? How?, having all of the reasons people flock to religion wrapped up in a nice little package of truth? It is still a necessity of consciousness of mortality to have answers, regardless of what they are. Religion is the form of those answers, for some, for the time being.

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 360

(10/19/03 5:39 pm)

Reply

Re: Purpose of Religion?

---

Religion is just a part of the herd mentality. It is created by the desire for oneness, for a lessening of separation. Your dog thinks you are god. In humans it includes the concept of god basically because we have developed imagination. Look at the way religions works and it is easy to see it is herdness in action, with the god concept - as opposed to the community aspects - playing a relatively small part in the active life most believers in the West. To me that's why religion exists in its various forms, with different herds imagining different versions, and perhaps even exists physically now in Homo Sapiens as pointed out by Dave.

Religion is necessary only so far as it helps to quicken or assist in the evolution of humans, and it does because the herd is more powerful in evolutionary survival terms than the sum of its individuals. As we are now beginning to surpass the normal evolutionary processes for animals we will change from believers in god to those who would be gods. Of course we will also continue to put ourselves in great danger of decimation or perhaps extinction as our physical control of the world has moved faster in different segments of the herd, so there will continue to be conflict between wealthy and less wealthy/poor.

Interestingly enough wealth buries the primitive desire for conflict, except where ones interests are threatened. Perhaps that will save us - where are those damn robots and nanotechnology, we need them to make everyone physically satisfied, so as to reduce conflict, decrease our desire for kids and to give our brains and the environment time to catch up with the physical evolution. We might need the herd to become more feminine minded for a time, as is occurring, but it will be natural for many to break out and seek enlightenment - our access to information is extraordinary compared to the past, brains won't have much else to do but seek more knowledge.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1597
(10/19/03 9:43 pm)
Reply

Re: Purpose of Religion?

---

Cass:--

Quote:

---

Everything is here for a reason.

---

No it isn't! Everything is here, that is all! And what isn't here, isn't.

Everything is reasonable, but is not here for a reason.

cassiopeiae
Registered User
Posts: 132
(10/19/03 10:40 pm)
Reply

Re: Purpose of Religion?

---

Well, that's not the way I see it. So after all that, you decide to argue with reason or lack thereof?

You are on your own.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1599
(10/19/03 10:51 pm)
Reply

Re: Purpose of Religion?

---

I've always been on my own! How else do you know when you're really in love?! (:D) I'm not arguing with reason, or the lack thereof...I'm arguing with you, for the fun of it!

|                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                  |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 157(10/19/03 11:43 pm)Reply        | Re: Purpose of Religion? <hr/> suergaz: 'Everything is reasonable.' Yeah, right.What about cancer, or the rent I have to pay? |
| cassiopeiaeRegistered UserPosts: 133(10/19/03 11:50 pm)Reply | Re: Purpose of Religion? <hr/> "I'm arguing with you, for the fun of it!"grrr                                          |

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Purpose of Religion?

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                   | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1603(10/20/03 1:16 am)Reply | ---<hr/> Does this mean your cancerous rent is unreasonable? I doubt it! Just ask the unreasonable bastard to whom you pay it! As for disease, it is always reasonable. The most reasonable thing about it is that we can reason our way to wiping it out. |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 158(10/20/03 1:23 am)Reply     | Re: ---<hr/> :-) I know what you meant by reasonable.                                                                                                                                                                                                      |

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31r
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> QRS philosophy

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                            | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| RairunRegistered UserPosts: 170(1/19/04 11:38 am)Reply | QRS philosophy <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Anna: Um...so I should not try to show they are worth anything...OK, but the only reason for that is that QRS, and their ilk, have the inferiority of women as a necessary condition of their philosophy, and build the rest up around it. That is their primary bedrock, and of course it is hopeless to argue against it, they are impervious because it is a matter of intention. They are interested in truth only if it conforms to the bedrock. No, I do not fall into their trap. I am genuinely interested in men and women and their overlapping attributes, in a similar way that I am intersted in the cosmos. But I should quit wasting my time and do something more productive. <hr/> The things I said weren't meant to sound aggressive, so I'm sorry if they did. What I was saying is that I don't think everything discussed here needs to be dragged to this male vs female conflict. I don't think that misogyny is |

the primary bedrock of the QRS philosophy either. I'd say it's closer to intolerance than anything else.

It seems to me that their considerations about women are secondary to their actual philosophy. All they want to do is to make people more conscious (as they define it), eliminating all the unconsciousness that anyone might have. The misogyny only starts taking place when they label the conscious as masculine and the unconscious as feminine, but I could easily overlook that. Even though it's an awkward choice of words in my opinion, they are just words. If it stopped right there, it wouldn't be an misogynist statement at all to say that femininity (as they defined it) should disappear. They don't stop there though, and that's where they really become misogynists in my eyes. They say that actual women are less conscious than men, and I don't agree with that at all. I really don't see women in general as less conscious than men.

But even disagreeing with their misogyny and thinking that they could maintain their philosophy without it, that doesn't change the fact that I still wouldn't agree with it if they changed it. QRS say that what they call delusions cause suffering, and define enlightenment as "the abandonment of all delusions". Their objective would be to turn all people into enlightened beings, though they recognize that it's virtually impossible for them to do that through their efforts. I have no problem with defining enlightenment as they do, as they could easily use another word for it. But I still have other 3 disagreements. First of all, I disagree that delusions as they define it cause suffering. Second, I disagree that everyone should want to attain their enlightenment. Third, I disagree that their enlightenment is the same as the one expressed in traditions such as the taoist one.

It's obvious why I said that the QRS philosophy is intolerant. They define a goal, and consider everyone who doesn't choose it as inferior. Yes, I guess it is a fact that a lot of people are indeed inferior when compared to the standard they set, but their standard in itself is arbitrary. Still, they act like their arbitrary standard should be adopted by all people and that the ones who don't conform to it should be phased out. I perceive that they have a self righteous attitude when they speak about what should and shouldn't be done, not only by those who choose their path, but by everyone.

Naturyl

Registered User

Posts: 57

(1/19/04 12:42 pm)

Reply

Re: QRS philosophy

---

You make a valid point. If QRS define a path, they have the right to teach any and all who seek that path. However, they do not have the right to teach those who reject their path. If they feel as if they should try to influence such people anyway, they are taking it upon themselves to play the role of gods, and we certainly don't need any more of those.

QRs should determine who, if anyone, seeks to follow the path they have defined, and then concentrate on teaching those individuals. If a new individual arrives, the path should be explained to them, and if they reject it, they should be kindly told, "well, okay, it isn't for you. That's alright." They should not be told that they are unconscious and are rejectors of "Truth."

In my opinion, this wholesale approach which seeks to address all of humanity is misguided. No one path is right for all people. Those who seek to universalize their message assure that they will become either failures or tyrants. The people who can hear a message will hear it. Those who do not will find their own way.

Rairun

Registered User

Posts: 171

(1/19/04 1:53 pm)

Reply

Re: QRS philosophy

---

Quote:

---

If a new individual arrives, the path should be explained to them, and if they reject it, they should be kindly told, "well, okay, it isn't for you. That's alright." They should not be told that they are unconscious and are rejectors of "Truth."

---

Yes, but that's tricky, because one of them will answer "But I am not lying when I say that they are rejectors of Truth". All the discussions here seem to happen around that same subject - trying to prove or disprove the things that QRS say. It doesn't matter who's right though. Lets just assume for a second that QRS do know all the Truth, as they would claim in response to what you said.

So telling people that they are unconscious and rejectors of "Truth" would be good, right? Not necessarily. The problem is that upon hearing that, most people will think that being unconscious and rejectors of Truth is wrong, even if that's actually what they want to do. They won't just hear "you are unconscious and reject truth". They will hear "you are unconscious and reject truth, and you should change that", which is clearly false.

I don't have time to expand on that now, but I think that would actually go right against enlightenment. Not enlightenment as defined by QRS, but the enlightenment that I perceive some of the so called enlightened men in history to be talking about.

Edited by: Rairun at: 1/19/04 1:58 pm

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 761
(1/19/04 2:12 pm)
Reply

Re: QRS philosophy

---

Naturyl: If QRS define a path, they have the right to teach any and all who seek that path. However, they do not have the right to teach those who reject their path.

Sounds more than fair, Naturyl. By the same logic, we who don't agree with the philosophical views of QRS, have a right to point out their quirks, flaws, fallacies, and undesirable qualities. We have a right to advise people to stay away from that path. Yet, we don't have a right to demand that people do so (it's getting a bit political) and that is the reason why I am still posting to Genius.

Thomas

Rairun
Registered User
Posts: 172
(1/19/04 2:27 pm)
Reply

Re: QRS philosophy

---

Quote:

---

Naturyl: If QRS define a path, they have the right to teach any and all who seek that path. However, they do not have the right to teach those who reject their path.

Thomas: Sounds more than fair, Naturyl. By the same logic, we who don't agree with the philosophical views of QRS, have a right to point out their quirks, flaws, fallacies, and undesirable qualities. We have a right to advise people to stay away from that path. Yet, we don't have a right to demand that people do so (it's getting a bit political) and that is the reason why I am still posting to Genius.

---

I know that response wasn't to me, but I'm going to add to the point I made in my last post while commenting yours, Thomas.

I agree with you, but the line between advising and demanding is very blurry. I don't think my comments about QRS philosophy would induce them to do something they don't wish to do, especially when I consider that they probably understand all things my words imply. All I'm saying is "you don't have the need to be conscious, although there are no problems at all if you wish to do so". These words don't impose themselves on anyone because they don't separate both courses of action as good and bad. In the other hand, QRS arguments are often misleading when it comes to that. They can convince people to do what they don't want. I'm not saying that's wrong either, and QRS are logical enough to see that, so they won't change their behavior just because I said it. But the things they say still do that to people.

Edited by: Rairun at: 1/19/04 2:28 pm

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2076
(1/19/04 4:09 pm)
Reply

Re: QRS philosophy

---

Rairun wrote:

Quote:

---

All I'm saying is "you don't have the need to be conscious, although there are no problems at all if you wish to do so". These words don't impose themselves on anyone because they don't separate both courses of action as good and bad.

---

The trouble is, human unconsciousness is already causing a tremendous amount of harm, both to conscious and unconscious people. That alone makes it a serious danger - to everyone in the human race - and makes it desirable for us to be rid of it as much as possible.

For example, if it wasn't for the existence of a flowy, largely unconscious German population, Hitler wouldn't have been able to achieve anything. It was obvious right from the very beginning that Hitler was a low-quality ranting psychopath who needed to be kept well away from any kind of responsible position, let alone the leadership of a whole country. But the German population tried to be unconscious as possible and just went along with his madness - to devastating effect.

Human unconsciousness is a major threat everywhere. I could be walking along the street, minding my own business, contemplating the Infinite, and a drunken driver in a fit of complete unconsciousness could run me over and kill me. Or I could be shot at in a drive-by shooting because of some kind of gang-related fit of unconsciousness. Why should I allow human unconsciousness to continue existing when it is obviously a threat to my well-being?

Religious unconsciousness, in the form of fundamentalism, could conceivably destroy all life on earth. If a fundamentalist Christian were to become president of the United States and then got it into his head that God wanted him to trigger the final armageddon, then obviously we'd all be in big trouble. Why should I stand by and allow the possibility of this happening?

--

Edited by: DavidQuinn000 at: 1/19/04 5:42 pm

B0ndi
Registered User
Posts: 274
(1/19/04 9:21 pm)
Reply

Re: on unconsciousness

---

Quote:

---

For example, if it wasn't for the existence of a flowy, largely unconscious German population, Hitler wouldn't have been able to achieve anything. It was obvious right from the very beginning that Hitler was a low-quality ranting psychopath who needed to be kept well away from any kind of responsible position, let alone the leadership of a whole country. But the German population tried to be unconscious as possible and just went along with his madness - to devastating effect.

---

I totally agree with you that unconsciousness is causing a lot of trouble but the problem is that such "thoughts" I quoted above are also the product of that manipulated unconsciousness (or "pseudo-consciousness").

The German were very conscious of their origin and values. At least the German aristocracy. I think we agree that the opinion of the "masses" is irrelevant on spiritual issues - the masses have no opinion other than a reflective, manipulated "opinion" we see at the democratic "elections", for example. The German aristocracy had a rather different view of Hitler and his populist, socialistic pseudo-ideas, which declined into inferiority. Unfortunately, their spiritual initiative was depressed by the Hitlerist egotism, or wasn't manifested in their entirety.

Of course, the even more inferior post-war propaganda was quickly "forgot" about those issues. Nowadays, one just have to mention the word "Nazi" to trigger a Pavlovian effect of a neurotic obsession on the masses and thus to ignore all rational issues on the similarities of the mass-manipulation of today and that of Hitler's...

Edited by: B0ndi at: 1/19/04 9:23 pm

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 651
(1/20/04 2:58 am)
Reply

Re: on unconsciousness

---

David, it's funny how much your motives resemble Hitler's.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1303
(1/20/04 4:11 am)
Reply

Re: QRS philosophy

---

Quote:

---

If a fundamentalist Christian were to become president of the United States and then got it into his head that God wanted him to trigger the final armageddon,

---

What do you mean, if?

Rairun

Registered User

Posts: 173

(1/20/04 7:46 am)

Reply

...

---

Quote:

---

The trouble is, human unconsciousness is already causing a tremendous amount of harm, both to conscious and unconscious people. That alone makes it a serious danger - to everyone in the human race - and makes it desirable for us to be rid of it as much as possible.

---

Quote:

---

Why should I allow human unconsciousness to continue existing when it is obviously a threat to my well-being?

---

Oh, then wisdom is not your core value, "upon which the hierarchy of your entire value system rests". There's one more layer there.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2079

(1/20/04 8:06 am)

Reply

Re: ...

---

I was speaking for all conscious people, and hence consciousness itself.

Rairun
Registered User
Posts: 174
(1/20/04 8:10 am)
Reply

...

---

Of course, you can say that the desire you describe above stems from the way you value consciousness of Truth. You don't want it to disappear, so you support anything that would spread it. Even though I seriously doubt that every single thing you do is directed to spreading consciousness of truth, I'll assume it's true for the sake of argument.

I affirm that you believe that everyone should be conscious of Truth, but that they should neglect some of the Truth that they became conscious of so they can spread more consciousness of Truth.

You will argue that as a human being, it's impossible not to value something, so you're not going against the Truth that you became conscious of when you value consciousness of Truth. I say that you are and that you aren't. You aren't if you consider that you're just a product of cause and effect like everything else. But you are if you judge other events such as emotions as delusional.

Rairun
Registered User
Posts: 175
(1/20/04 8:13 am)
Reply

...

---

Quote:

---

I was speaking for all conscious people, and hence consciousness itself.

---

heh and that doesn't quite address my point.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2081

(1/20/04 8:49 am)

Reply

Re: ...

Rairun wrote:

Quote:

---

Of course, you can say that the desire you describe above stems from the way you value consciousness of Truth. You don't want it to disappear, so you support anything that would spread it. Even though I seriously doubt that every single thing you do is directed to spreading consciousness of truth, I'll assume it's true for the sake of argument.

I affirm that you believe that everyone should be conscious of Truth, but that they should neglect some of the Truth that they became conscious of so they can spread more consciousness of Truth.

---

Look at it this way:

A person becomes conscious of Truth (i.e. enlightened) through many years of valuing enlightenment above all else and putting in the enormous effort that is needed to attain it. As this process unfolds, his valuing of enlightenment gradually becomes a natural part of him, to the point that it becomes as natural to him as breathing. And so, now that he has reached his enlightened state, he can't think of any reason to go through all the effort to put an end to this natural valuing of enlightenment. He accepts things as they and continues to spontaneously spread wisdom, even though he himself is completely unattached to it.

He is like a healthy tree that continues to bear fruit despite the fact that the tree is entirely indifferent to what happens.

--

Edited by: DavidQuinn000 at: 1/20/04 9:54 am

Rairun

Registered User

Posts: 176

(1/20/04 11:17 am)

Reply

...

---

So an enlightened person can observe two kinds of people:

1. The ones who value spreading wisdom. In that case, he knows that it's okay for the person to do that, because it doesn't matter what you value.
2. The ones who value anything else. In that case, he knows that it's okay for the person to do that, because it doesn't matter what you value.

That enlightened person him/herself could fit in both categories, because there are no higher reasons to choose any of them. And she/he isn't only able to fit in both, but she/he has to fit in one of them - she/he wouldn't even move if she/he didn't value anything.

So it's perfectly valid for an enlightened person to seek to spread wisdom, as well as do anything else that they wish. However, if they choose to spread wisdom, they still do so while recognizing that they are trying to influence people to one way that doesn't even matter to being with.

They value the Truth that says that you can value anything you wish, and want to spread that Truth, but at the same time they are making people believe that they can't. It's perfectly okay to do that, but by doing so you compromise the logical coherence of your actions.

Conclusion: We are beyond logic. There are no reasons for us to stop being incoherent. And you are incoherent, as I am.

Edited by: Rairun at: 1/20/04 11:19 am

Naturyl

Registered User

Posts: 66

(1/20/04 11:45 am)

Reply

Re: ...

---

Bird, I think he means that fundamentalist Christians often seem to desire that things go badly, because the worse things get, the closer we are to the Second Coming. One can see this clearly in Pat Robertson, for example. When things go wrong in the Middle East, Robertson almost seems giddy. He undoubtedly believes that scripture foretells an Armageddon which will begin with such events. When this Armageddon comes, the Second Coming and the Judgement (when all wicked freethinkers will be punished) are just around the corner. What Bible-believing fundamentalist wouldn't secretly want this?

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1306
(1/20/04 11:51 am)
Reply

Re: ...

---

Yes, I know that, I was merely pointing out that we do in fact have such a president right now. It's funny - there was this really eloquent guy whose financial booklets convinced me he was right about Y2K. He mentioned being a Christian only in passing once or twice, so I didn't pay it much mind. Later, I heard that he was a creature known as a reconstructionist, who are looking for a breakdown of civilization so that the Christians can take over and institute biblical law! Shit, if I'd known that about him, I'd never have sold my house, cashed in my (one) stock and bought land in West Virginia. Thank God I didn't know it : )

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 280
(1/20/04 12:54 pm)
Reply

Re: ...

---

Rairun wrote:

Quote:

---

1. The ones who value spreading wisdom. In that case, he knows that it's okay for the person to do that, because it doesn't matter what you value.

2. The ones who value anything else. In that case, he knows that it's okay for the person to do that, because it doesn't matter what you value.

---

No. A person will always value whatever comes naturally to them, and a person has no other choice but to do so, even if they are enlightened, because even enlightened people are totally determined by causes. Think of the example David gave of the tree that continues to bear fruit, just because that is its nature.

Similarly it is the nature of the enlightened person to enlighten himself. But when he does so it doesn't end there, because in the process of enlightenment he realizes that all other people, too, are his own self, and so he goes right on enlightening himself, and has no other choice but to do so.

Quote:

---

So it's perfectly valid for an enlightened person to seek to spread wisdom, as well as do anything else that they wish.

---

It is valid for any person at all to do anything at all that they happen to do, because ultimately Nature/God has determined it. But people won't just do anything at all - they will do exactly what they are programmed to do.

The enlightened person doesn't tell you that you "can't" value things like ignorance, or violence - because you certainly can. What he does do is try to subtly change your values so that you quite naturally gravitate towards valuing truth.

Edited by: ksolway at: 1/20/04 3:25 pm

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2103
(1/20/04 1:49 pm)
Reply

----

---

Quote:

---

It is valid for any person at all to do anything at all that they happen to do, because ultimately Nature/God has determined it. But people won't just do anything at all - they will do exactly what they are programmed to do.

---

No, it is valid for any person at all to do anything at all they happen to do, precisely because nature has not determined it, it is merely a part of ongoing nature.

By 'God' you mean Nature? Just like David Quinn?!

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 280
(1/20/04 3:06 pm)
Reply

Re:

---

(This message was left blank)

Edited by: ksolway at: 1/20/04 3:07 pm

N0X23

Registered User

Posts: 71

(1/20/04 4:44 pm)

Reply

Re: Re:

Quote:

---

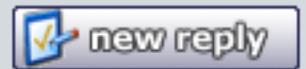

because in the process of enlightenment he realizes that all other people, too, are his own self, and so he goes right on enlightening himself,

---

Could you please elaborate on this?

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> QRS philosophy

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                              | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 454(1/20/04 8:23 pm)Reply  | Re: Re: <hr/> ...convinced me he was right about Y2K I think the potential effects of Y2K were first way overestimated to make sure people took action by inducing mob behaviour (it is what you have to do to make people listen) and of course as an opportunity for people to make money, but since it passed it has been underestimated as everyone was caused to take the necessary action to check and fix systems, there ended up being no effects, so it is now belittled. It is like those people who say 'my grandfather smoked all his life and never got sick so it must be OK'. Spending too much or placing too much importance on Y2K was a good example of the general lack of wisdom in society. |

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 280
(1/20/04 9:54 pm)
Reply

Re: The larger self

---

Nox wrote:

Quote:

---

KS: because in the process of enlightenment he realizes that all other people, too, are his own self, and so he goes right on enlightening himself,

Could you please elaborate on this?

---

All people are just as much related as the cells of one's own body.

Here is some food for thought on this theme:

1. The cells of our body contain so-called "organelles", such as mitochondria, which are like the power factories of the body. It is almost certain that organelles like mitochondria were once separate, individual cells in their own right, but somewhere in the course of evolution they entered into a sort of symbiotic relationship with other types of cells, and ended up inside our cells.

2. We normally think of jellyfish as individual organisms, but each jellyfish is in fact a colony of different organisms, working together. Our bodies are really exactly like this. And the human species is like this also.

Edited by: ksolway at: 1/20/04 10:02 pm

Rairun
Registered User
Posts: 177
(1/21/04 1:30 am)
Reply

...

---

So, after the mission of saving humankind is accomplished, are you going to move on to monkeys? Cats? Rocks peharps?

Rairun

Registered User

Posts: 177

(1/21/04 1:47 am)

Reply

...

---

Quote:

---

Rairun: 1. The ones who value spreading wisdom. In that case, he knows that it's okay for the person to do that, because it doesn't matter what you value.

2. The ones who value anything else. In that case, he knows that it's okay for the person to do that, because it doesn't matter what you value.

Kevin: No. A person will always value whatever comes naturally to them, and a person has no other choice but to do so, even if they are enlightened, because even enlightened people are totally determined by causes. Think of the example David gave of the tree that continues to bear fruit, just because that is its nature.

Similarly it is the nature of the enlightened person to enlighten himself. But when he does so it doesn't end there, because in the process of enlightenment he realizes that all other people, too, are his own self, and so he goes right on enlightening himself, and has no other choice but to do so.

---

You just evaded my point. I never said that you, as you claim to be enlightened and seek to spread wisdom, have any other choice but to be incoherent. You really don't have a choice. You are caused to be that.

And I think people can do what they don't naturally value. Their conscious thoughts can be influenced by ideas expressed by other people, misleading their reason and making them not follow what they actually value. Look at it that way:

value + any given situation = thought process that is used to determine how to act in that situation

If the thought process is flawed, or influenced by ideas that go against the original value, the outcome is an action that doesn't follow that value.

Finally, there are no reasons for the nature of the enlightened person to be his enlightenment. I am not saying that it can't be it, but it isn't necessarily that way for all enlightened people. It's only necessary in the case of the enlightened person who does so, because he can't help but do it. Even then, the fact that this one enlightened person chooses to enlighten all his surroundings, including other people, is still incoherent as I pointed out in the other post.

Edited by: Rairun at: 1/21/04 1:53 am

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 280
(1/21/04 8:58 am)
Reply

Re: ...

---

Quote:

---

So, after the mission of saving humankind is accomplished, are you going to move on to monkeys? Cats? Rocks peharps?

---

Other intelligent species (eg, on other planets) would probably have priority, as it would be a lot of hard work to make rocks intelligent!

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 281
(1/21/04 9:17 am)
Reply

Enlightened values

---

Rairun wrote:

Quote:

---

You just evaded my point. I never said that you, as you claim to be enlightened and seek to spread wisdom, have any other choise but to be incoherent. You really don't have a choice. You are caused to be that.

---

Then I don't really know what you mean by "incoherent". How could a tree that produces fruit, and continues to produce the same fruit, be incoherent?

Quote:

---

value + any given situation = thought process that is used to determine how to act in that situation

If the thought process is flawed, or influenced by ideas that go against the original value, the outcome is an action that doesn't follow that value.

---

I grant that a person's values may be hard to act out, and the weaker those values are held, the harder they are to act out, but I'm not sure how this relates.

Quote:

---

Finally, there are no reasons for the nature of the enlightened person to be his enlightenment.

---

I'm not sure what you mean here. A person must be what they are. A tree that produces fruit (enlightenment) must be a tree that produces fruit. It can't change all of a sudden.

It might be that an enlightened person deems that the best way to enlighten others (ie, to continue producing fruit) is to watch TV all day - but in doing so he would still be consistent with his values.

Why do you think an enlightened person might stop consciously spreading wisdom once he has himself attained enlightenment?

Edited by: ksolway at: 1/21/04 9:44 am

Rairun

Registered User

Posts: 179

(1/21/04 10:06 am)

Reply

...

---

Quote:

---

Then I don't really know what you mean by "incoherent".
How is a tree that produces fruit, and continues to produce the same fruit, "incoherent"?

---

The tree never claimed that her path of producing fruit is the only truthful one. What I'm saying is that an enlightened person who chooses to spread wisdom isn't doing it because he has Truth by his side, he is doing it because there isn't anything that he likes to do better. He doesn't do it for the sake of Truth, he does it because he arbitrarily decided that he wants to do that.

---

Quote:

---

I grant that a person's values may be hard to act out, and the weaker those values are held, the harder they are to act out, but I'm not sure how this relates.

---

I'm talking about the person's core values, the ones that don't have any grounding. You can consciously discover why you value certain things until you reach those values, which are arbitrary and can hardly have their causes traced because they weren't decided consciously. They are the border between the conscious and the unconscious.

I am saying that a person have those core values, but due to faulty reasoning they might build a value system over them with which they are incompatible. Reason is only a tool for the core values to express themselves in actions, but outside things might influence the reasoning and result in an action that has nothing to do with the values.

---

Quote:

---

I'm not sure what you mean here. A person must be what they are. A tree that produces fruit (enlightenment) must be a tree that produces fruit. It can't change all of a sudden.

It might be that an enlightened person deems that the best way to enlighten others (ie, to continue producing fruit) is to watch TV all day - but in doing so he would still be consistent with his values.

Why do you think an enlightened person might stop consciously spreading wisdom once he has himself attained enlightenment?

---

I just meant that an enlightened person doesn't necessarily seek to enlighten himself. I'm not saying that he has to stop, but there's nothing that makes him keep going either. There are a lot of other variables that can determine whether he wants to do something else or not.

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 282
(1/21/04 10:22 am)
Reply

Re: Enlightened values

---

Rairun wrote:

Quote:

---

What I'm saying is that an enlightened person who chooses to spread wisdom isn't doing it because he has Truth by his side, he is doing it because there isn't anything that he likes to do better. He doesn't do it for the sake of Truth, he does it because he arbitrarily decided that he wants to do that.

---

Ok, I agree. I have always said that the enlightened person does what he does on a "whim". There's no law of nature, or obligation, that a person must seek to be truthful.

Quote:

---

I just meant that an enlightened person doesn't necessarily seek to enlighten himself. I'm not saying that he has to stop, but there's nothing that makes him keep going either. There are a lot of other variables that can determine whether he wants to do something else or not.

---

Momentum, and a very strong momentum at that, would tend to make him keep going in the same way.

If we take the tree that bears fruit for example: It's not a given fact that the tree will continue bearing fruit, but it would take something fairly radical to make it stop - like death, for example, or a disease which would prevent it from producing fruit. Normally, it would continue to do what it does. Likewise with the enlightened person.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 768
(1/21/04 12:04 pm)
Reply

Re: The larger self

---

Kevin: The cells of our body contain so-called "organelles", such as mitochondria, which are like the power factories of the body. It is almost certain that organelles like mitochondria were once separate, individual cells in their own right, but somewhere in the course of evolution they entered into a sort of symbiotic relationship with other types of cells, and ended up inside our cells.

That is very likely since mitochondria have membranes themselves and divide like bacterial cells. However, I am not sure that the case of cells actually provides support for your initial argument. You said:

Kevin: All people are just as much related as the cells of one's own body.

Comparing the relation of cells with the relation of organisms doesn't work IMO, because it disregards genetics. All cells in one's body -except the sex cells- are in a 1:1 relationship with each other, meaning they contain the exact same DNA, and they work collectively towards the goal of preserving that DNA. An organism is related 1:1 to itself, 1:0.5 to its children and its parents, 1:0.25 to its grandchildren, and so on. The behavior of organisms is generally geared towards the goal of survival and reproduction, but this means primarily the organism's own survival (and that of its closest kin), not the survival of the population or the species. This is where they differ from cells. Cells have an equitable "interest" in the body's survival, but organisms are primarily interested in their own survival.

Kevin: We normally think of jellyfish as individual organisms, but each jellyfish is in fact a colony of different organisms, working together. Our bodies are really exactly like this. And the human species is like this also.

Interesting. Do you have a weblink or any references? I must mention bees and ants in this context. The situation is inverted, because a colony can be viewed as a single organism. The workers are genetic copies (clones) of the queen.

Thomas

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 283
(1/21/04 1:31 pm)
Reply

Re: The larger self

---

Thomas wrote:

Quote:

---

Kevin: All people are just as much related as the cells of one's own body.

T: Comparing the relation of cells with the relation of organisms doesn't work IMO, because it disregards genetics. All cells in one's body -except the sex cells- are in a 1:1 relationship with each other, meaning they contain the exact same DNA, and they work collectively towards the goal of preserving that DNA. An organism is related 1:1 to itself, 1:0.5 to its children and its parents, 1:0.25 to its grandchildren, and so on. The behavior of organisms is generally geared towards the goal of survival and reproduction, but this means primarily the organism's own survival (and that of its closest kin), not the survival of the population or the species. This is where they differ from cells. Cells have an equitable "interest" in the body's survival, but organisms are primarily interested in their own survival.

---

Evolutionary thinking is tending to turn away from the "individualist" approach, where individuals seek mainly to promote their own personal DNA, in favour of viewing the whole species gene pool as trying to preserve itself. Take for example, worker ants, who work very hard but never produce any offspring, while they still help to promote the genes the whole ant species. Similarly in other species, such as humans, there can be many individuals who for some reason or other are not adapted to spreading their own personal genes, yet are adapted to helping the survival of the genes of their own species.

In other words, this is viewing the whole species as a single organism.

I was only using these scientific examples as food for thought. The fundamental reason behind my "larger self" claim is based on the principle of cause and effect, and the fact that we cannot possibly be separate from our environment.

Here is some more food for thought: Our sex cells (sperm and eggs, for the uninitiated) can be thought of as the real organism, which reproduces, while our bodies ("us") are simply factories to produce more sex cells, and to carry the sex cells around so they can party with each other. We are akin to the worker ants.

Quote:

---

Do you have a weblink or any references?

---

Here is a creationist link: www.reasons.org/resources/new\_reasons/200310.shtml?main

Upon further reading it seems that some jellyfish are colonies, such as Veella, and other ones aren't.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 770
(1/21/04 7:47 pm)
Reply

Re: The larger self

---

Kevin: Evolutionary thinking is tending to turn away from the "individualist" approach, where individuals seek mainly to promote their own personal DNA, in favour of viewing the whole species gene pool as trying to preserve itself.

That supprises me quite a bit, because I had assumed that the opposite is the case. I was under the impression that group selection theories, such as the "suvival of the species" idea had been popular until about 20 years ago and that the mainstream biologists now agree on individual selection. What do you think about Richard Dawkins' ideas then?

Kevin: Take for example, worker ants, who work very hard but never produce any offspring, while they still help to promote the genes the whole ant species.

The example of worker ants supporting the group selection hypotheses has been refuted by Dawkins. Worker ants (and other social insects) share the same DNA. Since the queen stores the same sperm to produce fertilized eggs, workers are related 1:1 to each other and thus they can be viewed as a single organism. Not the species, of course, but the population of an individual family.

Kevin: The fundamental reason behind my "larger self" claim is based on the principle of cause and effect, and the fact that we cannot possibly be separate from our environment.

I agree with that although not for the reasons you mention.

Here is a creationist link: www.reasons.org/resources/new\_reasons/200310.shtml?main

Do you think this source can be trusted as a source of unbiased scientific information? I mean, this is a creationist website with an agenda. On their first page you find statements like: "A recently discovered design feature for box jellyfish provides another example of supernatural creation. - The results of a 40-year study of predation in East Africa challenges the idea of undirected, random process evolution. - Such a purposeful, elegant, creative design implies the handiwork of a Creator." Almost every biologist would cringe.

Thomas

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 283
(1/21/04 9:44 pm)
Reply

Re: The larger self

---

Quote:

---

I was under the impression that group selection theories, such as the "survival of the species" idea had been popular until about 20 years ago and that the mainstream biologists now agree on individual selection.

---

Both factors are true. On the one hand the general genetic type of a species can benefit by having individuals that are not involved in reproduction; and on the other hand any genetic code is favoured by replicating itself as accurately as possible - which doesn't happen in individuals who don't reproduce.

Quote:

---

What do you think about Richard Dawkins' ideas then?

---

If you mean the "selfish gene" idea, I agree with it, but I think it applies to entire species (and planetary gene pools for that matter), as well as individuals, as all are trying to preserve and replicate themselves.

Quote:

---

The example of worker ants supporting the group selection hypotheses has been refuted by Dawkins. Worker ants (and other social insects) share the same DNA.

---

Yet their DNA is not absolutely identical - as they are not perfect clones.

All human beings are genetically very close to being genetically identical. For one thing, we share 98% of our genes with chimpanzees, and individual human beings are a lot more genetically similar to each other than that. So even though each individual human is slightly genetically different to every other, not a lot is lost if the individual sacrifices himself for his species. That is, the gain for the species may outweigh the loss for the individual . . . it's a gamble.

If an individual's genetic code is too concerned for itself, and not for the structure which supports it (other members of the species, for one thing) it will be doomed. But even if it is 100% concerned for others, and not at all for its own reproduction, it will still be almost perfectly reproduced in any case - through other individuals.

Quote:

---

Do you think this source can be trusted as a source of unbiased scientific information? I mean, this is a creationist website with an agenda. On their first page you find statements like: "A recently discovered design feature for box jellyfish provides another example of supernatural creation. - The results of a 40-year study of predation in East Africa challenges the idea of undirected, random process evolution. - Such a purposeful, elegant, creative design implies the handiwork of a Creator." Almost every biologist would cringe.

---

Well, I did warn you it was a creationist site!

I was just giving you a starting point. If you search google using the terms: velella, jellyfish, colony, you will find something.

cassiopeiae
Registered User
Posts: 219
(1/21/04 11:45 pm)
Reply

Re: The larger self

---

Quote:

---

Do you think this source can be trusted as a source of unbiased scientific information?

---

Here is the encarta link...

encarta.msn.com/encyclopedia\_761555168/Jellyfish.html

Thomas Knierim

Registered User

Posts: 772

(1/23/04 12:48 pm)

Reply

Re: The larger self

---

Kevin: If you mean the "selfish gene" idea, I agree with it, but I think it applies to entire species (and planetary gene pools for that matter), as well as individuals, as all are trying to preserve and replicate themselves.

But Kevin, that is exactly what Dawkins denies. The "selfish gene" theory according to Dawkins is incompatible with group selection. Dawkins states that individual organisms -or genes- are NOT programmed to act in the interest of the species, not even in the interest of the group they happen to live in, unless of course the group's interest coincides with their own. Dawkins provides IMO very convincing reasoning for this.

Kevin: If an individual's genetic code is too concerned for itself, and not for the structure which supports it (other members of the species, for one thing) it will be doomed.

I presume that what you mean with 'structure' is the social grouping of animals, such as gathering in herds, schools, flocks, etc. It is important to realize that social 'structures' have evolved ultimately for the benefit of the individual. There is some similarity between social relations within a species and synergetic relations between different species. Both exist for mutual benefit. There are many synergetic relations between individual organisms in nature. The biologist W.D. Hamilton has provided several examples in the "Geometry of the Herd" where he argues that gazelles and other hoofed mammals move around in herds, because it decreases the average exposure of each individual to predators. First, it reduces number of possible points of attack. A lion can only attack the rim of a herd, so it is more dangerous for a gazelle to be on the rim and it is safer to be on the inside, while the average safety across all positions in a herd is slightly higher than that of a lone gazelle. Second, gazelles in a herd warn each other of an approaching predator which provides additional safety. Now, the argument for the evolution of herd behavior is strictly Darwinian. A gazelle that exhibits herd behavior has a higher live expectation than a lone gazelle and, hence, greater opportunity for reproduction. This means that selection favors gazelles programmed to move in herds. What I mean to say with this is that group behavior is merely the result of a group of individuals being concerned with their own survival.

Kevin: But even if it is 100% concerned for others, and not at all for its own reproduction, it will still be almost perfectly reproduced in any case - through other individuals.

The problem with this idea is that altruism (being concerned for others) works only if ALL members of the group behave altruistic. Groups with less than 100% altruistic individuals are unstable. If there were a group of animals in which 99% of the group behaves altruistic and only 1% behaves exploitative (=non-altruistic), the exploitative minority would quickly gain a huge food and survival advantage over the altruistic animals. This would cause the exploitative group to reproduce faster and thus increase their population ratio, assuming of course that the altruistic and exploitative behaviors are inheritable, and that they are passed on to the next generation. In this case, the process would accelerate and continue until the altruistic individuals would be outnumbered or eradicated. Hence, altruism is not stable in evolution. This doesn't really come as a surprise. We don't see gazelles throwing themselves in front of the lions to be eaten in order to rescue their kin. With very few exceptions (such as the honey bee) we don't see any species where individuals perform suicidal altruistic sacrifices. Altruism only works in human societies, because humans have invented regulating mechanisms -codes of conduct and laws for example- that support altruistic behavior. These mechanisms have come to replace evolutionary selection pressure.

Kevin: Yet their DNA [that of different worker ants in one nest] is not absolutely identical - as they are not perfect clones.

That is correct, although the worker ants are very closely related to each other. The queen goes on a single mating flight in her entire life. After pairing with the male ant, the queen starts to produce eggs. While she produces these eggs, she uses small rations of the male sperm to fertilize the eggs. The queen can store this same sperm for a period of ten years (!) or even longer. This means that all workers in the ant colony have the same mother and father DNA. Of course, meiosis allows for some variation, so they are not clones. But they are still very similar to each other. The method of reproduction is the same in all members of the hymenoptera group, which includes ants, bees and wasps. Now, the workers are sexually undeveloped females, so there is no point for the workers in protecting their own DNA and competing with other carriers of DNA. They are unable to pass it on, because they cannot reproduce. Instead they have developed a different strategy. The workers preserve their collective DNA by feeding the queen, which is why a hymenoptera colony is –from a genetic point of view– a single organism.

Kevin: All human beings are genetically very close to being genetically identical. For one thing, we share 98% of our genes with chimpanzees, and individual human beings are a lot more genetically similar to each other than that.

DNA is information. I think the above statement confuses structural identity with isomorphism. The structural identity of chimpanzees and humans is 98% but this does not account for the isomorphism arising from functionally identical genes. So, the comparison is not valid.

Kevin: So even though each individual human is slightly genetically different to every other, not a lot is lost if the individual sacrifices himself for his species. That is, the gain for the species may outweigh the loss for the individual . . . it's a gamble.

Although individuals sacrificing themselves for the species are an exceptionally rare phenomenon, I agree with the 'gamble' part. Have you heard of the work of John Maynard Smith? He has an interesting thesis about mitochondria, which you mentioned above. Smith reckons that mitochondria once have been parasitic bacteria living "on the back" of other cells. They became trapped inside cells and the host cells subsequently started exploiting mitochondria by using them as a power station. Interesting, isn't it? But, John Maynard Smith is better known for his application of game theory to evolutionary selection. You might remember game theory from the movie 'A Beautiful Mind' which was about John Nash and optimum strategies for multiplayer games. Well, evolution is also a multiplayer game with a single mission shared by all participants: survive and reproduce. Hence, it requires the development of survival strategies. In this context, John Maynard Smith coined the term 'evolutionary stable strategy' (ESS) which describes a behavior that represents an optimal strategy in a competitive environment.

To noted evolutionary biologist John Maynard Smith, life is essentially about information -- how information is stored, passed on, and used by organisms as they live and reproduce. "And evolutionary theory is about how that information got there in the first place," he says.

In probing evolution from this point of view, Smith has employed mathematical tools, including what is called "game theory," to explain and predict evolutionary behavior. Originally developed by John von Neumann to study poker, chess, and other games, game theory analyzes complex situations in which the best strategy of one player depends on the actions of another.

But Smith, a professor at the University of Sussex, England, since 1965, is no dry theoretician. "I was a naturalist as a kid and have been ever since," he says, claiming an interest in everything from birds to bacteria.

Smith's best known work incorporated game theory into the study of how natural selection acts on different kinds of behavior. The old idea had been that selection inevitably favors organisms to act aggressively. Smith showed that this isn't necessarily true, and that selection may actually favor both aggressive and non-aggressive behaviors.

As an example, imagine that two populations, one of them aggressive (hawks) and one passive (doves). Hawks will always battle their neighbors over any resource. Doves won't fight under any circumstances. A population made up entirely of doves would be unstable; that is, if a mutation caused the introduction of a single hawk, it would have an immediate advantage, and the hawkish behavior would bully the doves out of existence.

But a hawks-only population would also be unstable. A single dove introduced by mutation would have a long-term advantage. That's because the hawks' constantly aggressive behavior leads to frequent injury, while the dove, refusing to fight, escapes that risk.

Through application of game theory, Smith showed that there is a particular ratio of hawks to doves that forms what he called an "evolutionary stable strategy" for the species. Thus, selection actually works to maintain a balance of different characteristics in the population.

(Source: www.pbs.org)

Thomas

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                           | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| BiggierRegistered UserPosts: 78(1/25/04 4:56 am)Reply | Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> From Brian Green's "The Elegant Universe": "In 1965 Richard Feynman, one of the greatest practitioners of quantum mechanics, wrote: 'There was a time when the newspapers said that only 12 men understood the theory of relativity. I do not believe there was ever such a time. There might have been a time when only one man did because he was the only guy who caught on, before he wrote his paper. But after people read the paper a lot of people understood the theory of relativity in one way or the other....On the other hand, I think I can safely say that nobody understands quantum mechanics.' "Although Feynman expressed this view more than 3 decades ago, it applies equally well today....Quantum mechanics is different....In a real sense those who use quantum mechanics [today] find themselves following rules and formulas laid down by the 'founding fathers' of the theory.... without really understanding WHY the procedures work or WHAT they really mean. "What are we to make of this? Does it mean that on a microscopic level the universe operates in ways so obscure and unfamiliar that the human mind, evolved over eons to cope with phenomena on familiar everyday scales, is unable to fully grasp 'what really goes on'? Or might it be that through historical accident physicists have constructed an extremely awkward |

formulation of quantum mechanics that, although quantitatively successful, obfuscates the true nature of reality? No one knows. Maybe some time in the future some clever person will see clear to a new formulation that will fully reveal the 'whys' and the 'whats' of quantum mechanics. And then again, maybe not. The only thing we know with certainty is that quantum mechanics absolutely and unequivocally shows us that a number of basic concepts essential to our understanding of the familiar everyday world FAIL TO HAVE ANY MEANING when our focus narrows down to the microscopic realm. As a result, we must significantly modify both our language and our reasoning when attempting to understand and explain the universe on atomic and subatomic scales."

Now, Green published this book in 1999. That was about 5 years ago. So, maybe the folks in here who vouch for The New Ultimate Reality have since solved all of these baffling conundrums and, in fact, are really speaking about the ULTIMATE Ultimate Reality.

Or maybe not. You see, I'm thinking this guy Green was just on Nova recently illustrating his text. But I noticed he did not mention how indebted he was to David Quinn from the Genius Forum for FINALLY figuring out "why" and "what" all these profound quantum mysteries reveal about THE reality. You know, now that David has solved them.

An oversight, I'm sure. So, I invite Mr Quinn to implicate quantum mechanics in his UR. I also invite him to contact Mr Green so that, together, they can co-author a new publication. Let's tentatively call it, "The Mother of All Ultimate Realities". All I humbly request is a % of the money they will collect when the Nobel folks award them the prize for every single category they have. You know, for coming up with the idea and bringing the two of them together. ; )

Biggie

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2088
(1/25/04 6:55 am)
Reply

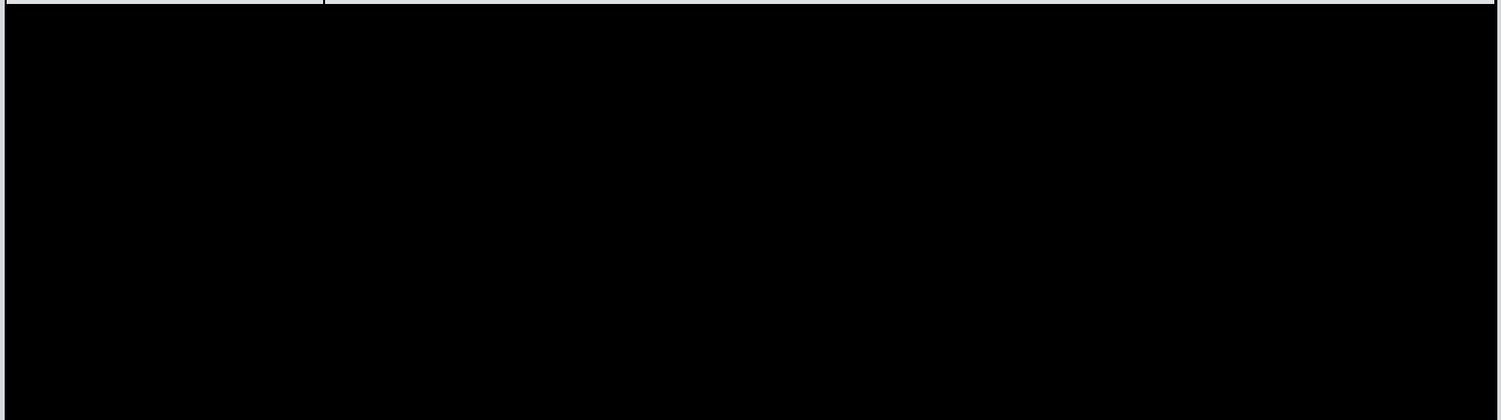

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Why do you keep quoting these fundamentalists? I might as well hook up with the Pope, or the Hare Krishnas, as hook up with Brian Green. It would be just as meaningful.

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| BiggierRegistered UserPosts: 79(1/25/04 9:15 am)Reply                                                                                                                               | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> That's, IT, David? THAT'S your rejoinder?!!! Well, okay, I admit it: it was a lot more sophisticated than I thought it would be. ; ) Biggie                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| Naturyl <input type="checkbox"/>Registered UserPosts: 74(1/25/04 11:30 am)Reply    | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> Yeah, that was enormously weak. Weak. I think Biggier took home the trophy on this one. When it comes to quantum mechanics, somebody is "a blowed-up peckerwood," to use an expression I heard recently. David, you really should consider dumping any reference to quantum mechanics from your materials. It would probably save you a lot of hassle. Trust me on this. Flush the quantum references. They irritate people, especially ones who care about science.        |
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1433(1/25/04 11:34 am)Reply                                                                                                                        | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> Why is it such a stretch to assume that particles are in fact caused to exist?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| Naturyl <input type="checkbox"/>Registered UserPosts: 76(1/25/04 11:42 am)Reply  | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> Because they aren't. Sorry, but they just aren't. If that throws a bag of shit onto your worldview's doorstep, blame quantum mechanics, not the messenger. Blame reality for fiercely resisting every attempt to corner it. It would have been a lot easier and more sensible if virtual particle creation was a causal process. But alas, it isn't, the rest of quantum mechanics doesn't make much more sense to boot, and there's nothing to do but deal with it. Life goes on. |

|                                                                                                                                                                                               |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 894(1/25/04 11:52 am)Reply                         | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> Of course they're logically caused to exist, it's a semantic consequence. And it doesn't mean a thing, it just is a thing.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1324(1/25/04 12:00 pm)Reply                                                                                                      | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Because they aren't. Sorry, but they just aren't. <hr/> Hmmm, I may be already past the point in Greene's book whre he discusses most of this. I wish I understood better what they mean by 'uncaused.' Because of course they can't really mean that. It just ain't so.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| Naturyl <input type="checkbox"/>Registered UserPosts: 79(1/25/04 12:23 pm)Reply  | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> That's everyone's reaction to quantum mechanics when they begin to understand its implications. "it can't be," they say as a chorus. "It just ain't so," they assert. But it is so. The fact that it is so when it seems so much like it shouldn't is why even the most distinguished scientists maintain that few, if any, persons who have seriously studied quantum mechanics actually understand it. It runs counter to many of our most cherished ideas about what can and cannot 'be so.' It turns all of that on its head, spins it around backwards, and puts a cherry on top for good measure. |

krussell2004
Registered User
Posts: 31
(1/25/04 1:40 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Quote:

---

Hmmm, I may be already past the point in Greene's book where he discusses most of this. I wish I understood better what they mean by 'uncaused.' Because of course they can't really mean that. It just ain't so

---

You got that right sugarplumb. As for me....

... I'm as blank, *pause* as a FART! *With a bewildered look on his face he lifts up his right hand and points his index finger to his temple in the form of a pistol*

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1326
(1/25/04 2:08 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Quote:

---

That's everyone's reaction to quantum mechanics when they begin to understand its implications.

---

Does anyone know of a good link I can read up on this? Mr. Greene is well into strings and doesn't seem to be straying back to the quantum stuff. As for the Wu Li Masters, he makes absurd assertions without explaining himself. At least Greene does a decent job of explaining.

Of course, I am always willing to entertain anything. But I am 99.999% sure that I will never be persuaded that the particles are uncaused. Thus my question, what do they mean by that?

Naturyl
Registered User
Posts: 82
(1/25/04 2:57 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Hmm. You state that you are "99.999% certain" that you will never be persuaded that particles are uncaused. Forgive me, but it sounds very much like you've already made up your mind. If that is the case, what possible use are facts? I fail to see how study could accomplish anything.

If I'm mistaken, let me know. Quantum mechanics is one of my hobbies, and I'd be glad to explain as far as I am able anything which you are having difficulty with. If I can't do it myself, I'll point you to someone who can. But it's a lot of effort, and if your mind is already made up, I'll save myself the trouble.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 896
(1/26/04 12:31 am)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

I see nothing to resolve, as it seems to me that you are talking about two different contextual conceptions of the word cause.

When it comes to Laplacean determinism, the proof of sufficient cause becomes that much more contextually complicated (than logical causality, or co-dependent origination) as to allow for such a thing as acausality. Within this context, quantum events are most definitely indeterminate, according to Copenhagen, and can be described only as a probability wave, until the wave function is collapsed via measurement. This makes them acausal in nature, within the definitional context.

Bird, if it is actually temporal, Laplacean causality in which you have yet to find sufficient explanation of quantum acausality, understand Heisenberg's Uncertainty principle (and it's observational certainty), not necessarily with respect to conjugate variables (although this is as good a reason as any), but simply with respect to what quanta are, and what they do energy wise. Another good way to conceptualise it is to understand electrons within the atom not in the classical sense, or even in the sense of the Bohr model, but in the sense of electron probability clouds.

It's all about the collapse of the wave function at measurement. The transition from probability wave function of eigenstates (possible wave functions) to observed eigenstate is probabilistic. And so we have the probabilistic, non-deterministic, acausal nature of quantum mechanics.

Again though, these models only apply to observables, which is David's get out clause here.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 899

(1/26/04 2:47 am)

Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

A thought occurs.

I've heard it suggested that this 'simulation scenario' of which we've heard so much from the likes of Rhett and David, with regard to certainty concerning sense data, is by far, in actuality, the most likely scenario. The conjecture goes something like this, if memory serves: Everything can be reduced to information and interactions thereof. Computers are advancing in capacity for dealing with information at an exponential rate. Therefore, sooner or later, computers will have the ability to deal with all of the information contained within the universe, or at least to give a good enough approximation so as to pass our standards of 'reality', programming notwithstanding. This provides the means that everything in the universe, life and consciousness included, even higher abstract reasoners, could well be part of a simulation of which they have no idea, facilitated by something that we already know of (and suspect the perhaps unlimited powers of) in this universe. This is obviously a process which could be iterated within itself, meaning that if there is an original universe which is running any number of simulated universes, said simulated universes could also be running any number of simulated universes also. And apparently, when the odds are worked out by someone bothered to do so, it is highly unlikely in the extreme that this universe is the original.

Now I heard this in connection with possible modes of backwards time travel, in that if it is a simulation, or if we could build one, it would be able to run backwards.

On an unrelated tack though, I was thinking about digital representations in contrast with analog representations. It occurred that analog is, or could at least seem to be, transfinitely detailed levels of digital information, digital information so complex as to appear non-digital to those of insufficient understanding and sense powers.

Now on a classical level, things seem to be analog in nature, but when the small details are examined, this view breaks down and information seems to become more digital, or manifests in discrete steps.

So I was thinking, maybe this weirdness of discrete quanta and the Copenhagen interpretation, or maybe things like the Planck units, local/non-local reality and the like, represent the limits of the detail of the digital information involved in this simulation.

Just some wildly unscientific thoughts ;-)

Edited by: Dave Toast at: 1/26/04 2:49 am

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2090
(1/26/04 6:53 am)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

Naturyl wrote:

Quote:

---

David, you really should consider dumping any reference to quantum mechanics from your materials. It would probably save you a lot of hassle. Trust me on this. Flush the quantum references. They irritate people, especially ones who care about science .....

Quantum mechanics is one of my hobbies, and I'd be glad to explain as far as I am able anything which you are having difficulty with.

---

I'm glad to hear it. Let me ask you this:

(a) What exactly is meant by "non-determinism" in quantum mechanics? Does it mean that particles pop into existence without any cause whatsoever? Or does it mean that they are indeed causally created, but not by the sorts of processes we are familiar with in the everyday world (and thus makes their behaviour unpredictable and indescribable from the point of view of classical physics)? I have heard a wide variety of answers on this question from scientists and their followers. So what's your answer?

(b) What is the difference between our current quantum models making the assumption that non-determinism is part of the fabric of Reality and nineteenth century physics making the assumption that time and space are fixed absolute realities? In other words, by what means have you established that non-determinism is more than a mere assumption made, for purely practical purposes, in a scientific theory that happens to be popular at the moment?

(c) Are you a fan of the "Tao of Physics?Dancing WuLu Masters" school of thought and believe that the quantum realm, as currently described by science, has some sort of connection to Eastern mysticism?

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2092

(1/26/04 7:49 am)

Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Dave Toast wrote:

Quote:

---

I see nothing to resolve, as it seems to me that you are talking about two different contextual conceptions of the word cause.

When it comes to Laplacean determinism, the proof of sufficient cause becomes that much more contextually complicated (than logical causality, or co-dependent origination) as to allow for such a thing as acausality. Within this context, quantum events are most definitely indeterminate, according to Copenhagen, and can be described only as a probability wave, until the wave function is collapsed via measurement. This makes them acausal in nature, within the definitional context.

---

But not in the absolute sense of being completely without cause. If only scientists and their followers could understand this point, I would have no drama with them. And they would have no problems with my assertion that it is impossible for anything to arise completely uncaused.

You're right, Dave. In reality, there is nothing to resolve. It is the inability of scientists (and their followers) to understand their own position on the matter which creates the controversy.

krussell2004

Registered User

Posts: 42

(1/26/04 8:34 am)

Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Quote:

---

But not in the absolute sense of being completely without cause. If only scientists and their followers could understand this point, I would have no drama with them. And they would have no problems with my assertion that it is impossible for anything to arise completely uncaused.

---

I find it most astounding that scientists of all people would think that particles or matter of any kind would exist or occur without cause. In this respect they sound more like theologians who assert that God always existed even before he decided to create the world which would mean He spent an eternity in a complete state of idleness before he suddenly decided to create the universe. This leads to the following truth which you so plainly and simply state.

Quote:

---

You're right, Dave. In reality, there is nothing to resolve. It is the inability of scientists (and their followers) to understand their own position on the matter which creates the controversy.

---

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 900
(1/26/04 8:58 am)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Let's not forget that scientists aren't science itself, and, like the police, there are always the odd few good apples that sweeten the bad barrel. Greedy reductionism is the scientist's achilles heel, but science itself is as dispassionate, open, and perhaps more purposeful than the infinite. Unlike the human, science is not greedy, it does not force the pace as it has all the time in the world, it is as open to falsification as it is open to proof, and it knows it's place.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1328
(1/26/04 12:51 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Naturyl:

Hmm. You state that you are "99.999% certain" that you will never be persuaded that particles are uncaused. Forgive me, but it sounds very much like you've already made up your mind. If that is the case, what possible use are facts?

Forgive me, I was being bombastic. The facts are fine, but I will make of them what I will.

But it's a lot of effort, and if your mind is already made up, I'll save myself the trouble.

Don't fret, I'm one of the few with a truly open mind. I can't help that my prediction is I will not be convinceable about uncaused particles. I could definitely use some help. If I can get a better handle on this stuff I can begin to figure out what the errors of interpretation are [ :-) ].

Toast:

When it comes to Laplacean determinism, the proof of sufficient cause becomes that much more contextually complicated (than logical causality, or co-dependent origination) as to allow for such a thing as acausality. Within this context, quantum events are most definitely indeterminate, according to Copenhagen, and can be described only as a probability wave, until the wave function is collapsed via measurement. This makes them acausal in nature, within the definitional context.

Toast, you show-off, you need to translate all this into English. What do you mean "contextually" complicated? I don't know why people keep mentioning that the complexity is too great for us ever to accurately predict. We are not concerned with our abilities, but with whether the clockwork universe is so.

Bird, if it is actually temporal, Laplacean causality in which you have yet to find sufficient explanation of quantum acausality, understand Heisenberg's Uncertainty principle (and it's observational certainty), not necessarily with respect to conjugate variables (although this is as good a reason as any), but simply with respect to what quanta are, and what they do energy wise. Another good way to conceptualise it is to understand electrons within the atom not in the classical sense, or even in the sense of the Bohr model, but in the sense of electron probability clouds.

Whole paragraph is over my head.

It's all about the collapse of the wave function at measurement. The transition from probability wave function of eigenstates (possible wave functions) to observed eigenstate is probabilistic. And so we have the probabilistic, non-deterministic, acausal nature of quantum mechanics. Again though, these models only apply to observables, which is David's get out clause here.

What has any of this to do with particles being uncaused?

You seem to be hinting, and Russell as well, that, as I suspected, they do not mean that particles are uncaused at all.

What I am saying is that nothingness does not give rise to particles.

Naturyl

Registered User

Posts: 90

(1/26/04 3:16 pm)

Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

[quote]a) What exactly is meant by "non-determinism" in quantum mechanics? Does it mean that particles pop into existence without any cause whatsoever? Or does it mean that they are indeed causally created, but not by the sorts of processes we are familiar with in the everyday world (and thus makes their behaviour unpredictable and indescribable from the point of view of classical physics)? I have heard a wide variety of answers on this question from scientists and their followers. So what's your answer?[/quote]
The former.

quote What is the difference between our current quantum models making the assumption that non-determinism is part of the fabric of Reality and nineteenth century physics making the assumption that time and space are fixed absolute realities? In other words, by what means have you established that non-determinism is more than a mere assumption made, for purely practical purposes, in a scientific theory that happens to be popular at the moment?[/quote] Particle/antiparticle creation through random quantum fluctuation has been empirically verified through a variety of means. As I am sure you are aware by virtue of dealing with this issue countless times, it is not possible that such 'virtual particle' creation arises through causal processes. We do observe such creation in Nature, so we have empirical verification that quantum mechanics does allow for phenomena that are devoid of cause. This has been established, and does not require any underlying metaphysical assumption in order to remain valid.

Naturyl

Registered User

Posts: 91

(1/26/04 3:27 pm)

Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Oops, I missed this one:

Quote:

---

(c) Are you a fan of the "Tao of Physics? Dancing WuLu Masters" school of thought and believe that the quantum realm, as currently described by science, has some sort of connection to Eastern mysticism?

---

Not really. Most such efforts require the introduction of significant semantic gymnastics in order to appear meaningful.

I do feel that there are some interesting similarities between certain aspects of quantum mechanics and some varieties of Eastern thought, but I am careful not to stretch that analogical it beyond its limits.

I have some interest in such work, but I would not consider myself a 'fan' thereof.

A possible exception might be made in the case of a certain book by one William Walker Atkinson (AKA 'Yogi Ramacharaka'), in which the author quite plainly predicts both general relativity and quantum mechanics, and arguably predicts even the information theory aspects thereof. Atkinson wrote the book in question in 1904. Quite remarkable, to say the least. If there is sufficient interest, I can transcribe quotes which will likely set some folks back on their heels.

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                      | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1370(2/1/04 6:26 am)Reply | Re: clicks<hr/> Quote: <hr/> No science can mean anything and would not exist without logic, otherwise science would be merely consist of things like astrology and magic (emotionally based). <hr/> People may be attracted to those two disciplines for emotional or intuitive reasons, but insofar as they are accurate or work, they have nothing to do with emotion and everything to do with physical principles of cause and effect. Magic is the manipulation of forces, and astrology is the interpretation of the action of forces. |

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2170
(2/1/04 7:51 am)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

The Wondrous and Almighty Zen Master John wrote:

Quote:

---

This is where you are mistaken and you have never studied koans properly.

---

You really have no idea.

Quote:

---

One could say that koans use a language, it's called the language of the 'Uncreate'.

---

You are entirely mistaken in your fixed views.

Quote:

---

Koans are used to break through delusion, they have been used by many, have been ratified by many.

---

You are entirely trapped in your intellectual understanding.

Quote:

---

If you confuse these words of Jesus as koans you are again mistaken. They are fine words but they are not remotely akin to a koan.

---

It is evident that you are grasping at concepts.

Etc, etc, etc.

Not much of a conversation, is it? And yet that is exactly how all of your conversations pan out the moment anyone challenges your rigid fundamentalist view of Zen. Because you don't really understand the nature of Zen, and you haven't really thought about the nature of Reality outside of memorizing and parroting Zen scripts, you completely lack the capacity to talk about it flexibly and intelligently. And thus your ability to help people breakthrough into the highest wisdom is almost non-existent.

--

You also suggested a topic of discussion:

Quote:

---

Wagging his head, shaking his tail, the red-tailed carp;
Independent through and through, he knows how to turn around.
Even if he has the art to cut off tongues,
Pulling his nose around subtly conveying the spirit.
Outside the screen of luminous jewels, wind and moon are like day;
In front of the cliff of dead trees, flowers and plants are always in spring.
Tongueless man, tongueless man,
The true order's completely upheld in one knowing phrase.
Walking alone in the kingdom, clear and comprehending,
Let everyone in the land be happy and joyful.

---

One assumes that this is supposed to undercut all discussion from the start with the snide accusation that any kind of talking about enlightenment is deluded by default.

Careful now, you'll be reborn as a fox if you continue this kind of behaviour.

Robert Larkin

Posts: 28

(2/1/04 8:28 am)

Reply

ezSupporter

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Then I assume the current plan is David and myself, and to be debating the nature of enlightenment and whether QRS (or Q without consideration of RS if you prefer that) has 'got it'?

|                                                                                                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 2170(2/1/04 8:36 am)Reply    | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> Whatever you like.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|  Robert LarkinPosts: 29(2/1/04 8:45 am)ReplyezSupporter    | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> Since in 'debate logic' I have the 'presumption' you should speak first and last; you are certainly entitled to get in the last word.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 2172(2/1/04 8:52 am)Reply  | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> I don't mind either way. You're welcome to kick off proceedings. But I can post something in, if you want me to. Where is it taking place?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 524(2/1/04 11:25 am)Reply                                                                                      | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> It is clear to me that Buddhists are not essentially different from any other religion or indeed scientists or artists. They are scientists studying segments of reality using specialised reasoning in an artistic fashion with a religious fervour. They simply fall in love with jargon. Any scripture is a form of jargon. The more they delve into the detail of it, the more they become dependent on it. It becomes something in which they hide behind so as to not face the true nature of reality. <hr/> Birdy: Magic is the manipulation of forces, and astrology is the interpretation of the action of forces. |

Magic: Magic simply cannot exist in any form other than as a entertaining delusional illusion. There is no essential magic in the complexity universe of the universe, as it is just cause and effect, and to think of it as such, in awe, is clearly an emotional illusion.

Astrology. In truth I cannot say that the structure of our brains is not effected by certain gravitational configurations during pregnancy and throughout our lives. It seems to me that we must recognise that gravity effects us all everyday. Whether the additional gravitational force of certain celestial body alignments during the early stages of brain development changes the way the brain forms is not really known. Perhaps those born with the ability to be a genius just happen to be on a certain location on the earth at a certain time where gravity makes more brain cells to be formed unevenly one side of the brain. Gravity at a distance is a very weak power but still it is a constant power that can erode mountains over time, everything is affected in some fashion by it. It is possible that it changes the positive/negative electron configure in cell chemicals (or genetics), causing cell division to be different in different people.

That it affects our brain structure would appear extremely unlikely, but I can't say for sure.

suergaz

Registered User
Posts: 2164
(2/1/04 1:39 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

It is an entertaining delusion to say the universe is just cause and effect when there is no first cause, and the extent of its effect is immeasurable outside of oneself.

Magic is simple. It effects its cause in what precedes it. Namely an investigation into it.

Lyrutan

Registered User
Posts: 2
(2/1/04 4:58 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Kevin Solway and David Quinn recently reported a new discovery in quantum mechanics which allows travel to so-called 'parallel universes.' They tested this discovery on themselves, claiming that they would try to enter a parallel universe devoid of women. Early reports indicate success, and Quinn has apparently been offered a job writing for the hit television series 'Queer Eye for the Queer Guy,' which gets top ratings in the parallel universe.

|                                                                                                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| JohnRegistered UserPosts: 76(2/1/04 5:10 pm)Reply                                                                                          | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> DavidQuinn000 ----- The Wondrous and Almighty Zen Master John wrote: ----- Ho, ho - this reveals more about yourself than anything else. You also suggested a topic of discussion: I did no such thing, discussion of it would be counter productive. John |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 528(2/1/04 5:34 pm)Reply                                                                                       | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> lol. This Lyrutan guy is funny, well the above at least and the mantheism post.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 2173(2/1/04 6:05 pm)Reply  | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> I think you need a television-type mind to appreciate it.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|  Robert LarkinPosts: 30(2/1/04 7:39 pm)ReplyezSupporter  | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> Nah, you just need a sense of humour.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |

 Robert Larkin
Posts: 31
(2/1/04 8:05 pm)
Reply
ezSupporter

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

David, we're currently waiting for Guildenstern of The Ponderer's Guild to get back to me on format, etc.

Again, it is you who should begin. For me to begin by first presenting your views and then questioning your views would be inappropriate in a debate.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2166
(2/1/04 8:48 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Lyrutan is a naturyl.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2173
(2/1/04 9:10 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Robert Larkin wrote:

Quote:

---

Nah, you just need a sense of humour.

---

Everyone has a sense of humour, in one form or another. I personally find Lyrutan's humour here to be pretty brainless, however, just as I find most American sitcoms to be pretty brainless.

Quote:

---

David, we're currently waiting for Guildenstern of The Ponderer's Guild to get back to me on format, etc.

Again, it is you who should begin. For me to begin by first presenting your views and then questioning your views would be inappropriate in a debate.

---

|                                                                                                                                                                                 |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                                 | Okay, let me know when they're ready and I'll post something.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|  Robert Larkin Posts: 33 (2/1/04 11:21 pm) Reply ezSupporter         | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> Most American sitcoms are pretty brainless; fortunately I've learned to turn off the television. If Lyrutan's humor is funny, then it is ... A good laugh is better than intellectualizing about a good laugh. David, I'll certainly let you know when/if I hear something. He might have run into 'internal resistance'. Who knows. [Edit: changed punctuation!] Edited by: Robert Larkin at: 2/1/04 11:22 pm                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| ksolway Registered User Posts: 328 (2/2/04 12:21 am) Reply  | Re: One on one discussion <hr/> You can always open a topic in "The Cage" section of this forum, which is designed for one-on-one discussions. If anyone else posts to that topic, David can just delete or move those messages. And you can always begin by finding something David has said, quoting it, and responding to it. That will get the ball rolling.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| Lbartoli Registered User Posts: 358 (2/2/04 12:29 am) Reply                                                                                          | to mr Larkin, your enlightenment <hr/> Robert Larkin wrote: Then I assume the current plan is David and myself, and to be debating the nature of enlightenment and whether QRS (or Q without consideration of RS if you prefer that) has 'got it'? LB: Mr Larkin, Kevin answered your question about his, about their, enlightenment. Now seeing you intend to debate the matter with them, I think it only fair of you to explain WHY it is you believe yourself to be the right person to do that, and what you intend to accomplish. Why dont YOU answer the question about whether you consider yourself enlightened, and at what level. And if you are, probably you ought to briefly |

mention what definition of 'enlightenment' you're using. That is, in what manner are you enlightened? -- do you have (in your opinion) a complete and accurate understanding of the ultimate nature of Reality?

Why dont you tell us? Tell us whether you think yourself wiser than QRS, tell us what you think about QRS, do you think they are mistaken? Most of us have no idea how you fit in to all this, or whether you have a history with these guys, whether you've discussed things with them before on other forums.

thank you in advance,
Leo

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 910
(2/2/04 1:32 am)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

Quote:

Lyrotan is a natyryl.

Well spotted sir.

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                          | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| GuildensternRegistered UserPosts: 1(2/2/04 10:29 am)Reply | Re: One on one discussion<hr/> My apologies for the delays, Robert and David. I was offline all day yesterday occupied elsewhere. We should be able to set something up by sometime tomorrow, though, if not later tonight (in my timezone, anyway; if you're in Australia, David, I think it may already be tomorrow ;)).I'll let you know, and I'll put up a link when I do. |
| LyrutanRegistered UserPosts: 5(2/2/04 1:48 pm)Reply                                                                                             | Re: to mr Larkin, your enlightenment<hr/> Well, it wasn't supposed to be tough to spot, Dave. ;)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |

 Robert Larkin

Posts: 34

(2/2/04 2:25 pm)

Reply

ezSupporter

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Leo,

I will be appearing only as someone who reasons well and who has familiarity with the issues involved. I claim neither religious nor academic authority. I am not enlightened and if I was I wouldn't admit it. Whether or not I have any understanding bears not one iota on whether you can develop understanding. However, given the adequate ability to reason and the familiarity with relevant issues, let me warn you that anyone concerned with 'levels' of enlightenment and other such gibberish has already developed an impediment to understanding. These 'levels' likely serve only to assign spiritual rank and let me guess that Quinn, Rowden, and Solway are well up the list of spiritual attainments. If 'spiritual attainment' belies humility, then your levels are counterproductive and egotists have sold you a bill of goods.

This debate could be enjoyable based on continuing interest in eastern ideas. We have as well David who claims to be enlightened and his conceptions can certainly be compared with canonical interpretations. In addition his ideas will be subjected to analysis of the order of 'Would the Buddha quote Weininger?' In a forum where he cannot automatically appeal to his own authority David's ideas can receive a reasonable test.

Except for reading a few Dan Rowland posts, and I believe they were on The Ponderer's Guild although perhaps it was KIR, I did not know these gentlemen or what they were about until just a few days ago reading material linked on KIR. As someone who has long argued for the inherent wisdom of certain ideas from Buddhism and Taoism I am appalled that important ideas have been claimed by buffoons for their own egotistical uses.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2177

(2/2/04 2:43 pm)

Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Why don't we save it for the debate, Robert. Or is it your intention to get in a few early kicks before the bell starts?

 Robert Larkin

Posts: 35

(2/2/04 3:50 pm)

Reply

ezSupporter

Re: to mr Larkin, your enlightenment

---

It was not my intent to have written anything other than updates about the debate. However, Leo asked his question and I answered it.

The tentative format will be 'four constructive posts' followed by 'four rebuttal posts'. The order:

Constructive:

David

Robert

David

Robert

Rebuttal:

Robert

David

Robert

David

The difference between the two: Issues are developed in the constructive while rebuttals serve only to support and rebut prior arguments. This means that while 'new information' can be introduced in the rebuttals new issues cannot. I could not, for instance, in my last post suddenly throw in the argument 'David's view is heterodox in Buddhism.' If I had earlier introduced the argument, in my first or second post, I could not only continue to consider it in the rebuttals but also introduce new evidence.

It has been proposed that there be a 24-hour response time and I personally have no problems with that.

Thomas Knierim

Registered User

Posts: 805

(2/2/04 5:30 pm)

Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Hey, that sounds great! Just a few questions. Will ESPN cover it and when can we see it? Who is going to act as umpire? Standard ITF Tennis rules, I suppose?

Looking forward to it.

Thomas

|                                                                                                                                                                      |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| GuildensternRegistered UserPosts: 1(2/3/04 5:01 am)Reply  | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> Alright, David and Robert. The debate has begun. The thread is here:pub138.ezboard.com/fponde...=759.topic You have 24 hours to put up your opening argument, David. |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 668(2/3/04 7:01 am)Reply     | Re: to mr Larkin, your enlightenment <hr/> This should be exciting.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| Naturyl <input type="checkbox"/>Registered UserPosts: 154(2/3/04 11:26 am)Reply                                                           | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> It ought to be good reading. If I had the time, I'd like to debate one of the QRS myself. I may have to find the time, assuming that one of them wished to participate.                                                                      |
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 1621(2/3/04 12:30 pm)Reply      | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> Pity about the formality of the debate structure. Strikes me as a little bit academically anal. But, whatever..... Dan Rowden                                                                                                  |

|                                                                                                                                                                                            |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 548(2/3/04 1:03 pm)Reply                                                                                                            | Re: to mr Larkin, your enlightenment <hr/> The funny thing is, the side that is hosting the argument at the end of it will think they've won, regardless of how rational David is. However, some points that David makes will stick in the minds of some people, so there might be some gain, if they don't let their emotions make those nemes become stored in their memory in a negative fashion.                               |
| Naturyl <input type="checkbox"/>Registered UserPosts: 158(2/3/04 3:04 pm)Reply  | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> Personally, I am thinking about doing a 'play-by-play' commentary, if I can find the time, and I can assure you that I will award my own points to whomever I feel has legitimately earned them. I think you'll find that most of us are capable of judging a debate objectively regardless of who we favor otherwise.                                                           |
| GuildensternRegistered UserPosts: 3(2/3/04 3:07 pm)Reply                      | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Pity about the formality of the debate structure. Strikes me as a little bit academically anal. <hr/> The formality of the debate structure was chosen because it was the easiest way to keep things fair. I myself have never actually been in a formal debate, and so I have just recently learned what the structure actually is. ;P |

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 1623

(2/4/04 1:45 pm)

Reply

Re: to mr Larkin, your enlightenment

---

It should be interesting whatever the format, but I'm already a bit disappointed in it. Robert doesn't even seem to want to debate the actual issue; instead he's immediately gone off on his own anti-David crusade type thing. The problem for him there is that to coherently argue that David is not enlightened he has to implicitly have an idea of what enlightenment really is underpinning that. He surely needs to argue for that view of enlightenment at some point. If all he can manage is to show that David's viewpoint is not entirely consistent with certain scriptural traditions then the debate will be an academic crock.

If his intention is to try and make it look like David has to prove his enlightenment, that will also be utterly foolish as David would never subscribe to as stupid a notion as that. Nor, for that matter, would he subscribe to a notion as stupid as that which suggests that enlightenment is anything more than an hypothesis to be tested by the individual.

Lastly, at least for this post, another problem I see is that Robert seems to use scripture as authority, which seems awfully Xian to me, whereas David would only ever say that scripture is sometimes stimulating and inspirational. Nor, for that matter, would he ever claim that from the point of view of others his own statements are anything more than "food for thought".

And anyone who takes an automatically negative stance against a person who dares to do something as outlandish <gasp> as speak from his own authority, is, to me, already arguing from a position of intellectual vacuity.

Dan Rowden

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2199

(2/4/04 2:13 pm)

Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

David Quinn disabling himself for this debate:

Quote:

---

There is only the purity of Nature relentlessly producing whim after whim after whim. This is Nature as it really is. This is Ultimate Reality.

---

No, it is reality. Nature/reality cannot be ultimate, ie. final. Only parts of it can be so. It is as ridiculous as arguing that time is a dimension.

Quote:

---

The enlightened person is one who is fully conscious of Ultimate Reality.

---

This is negated easily by the fact that 'enlightened' people (however you may define them) have different degrees of consciousness, namely, their own, which are only 'ultimate' unto themselves.

Edited by: suergaz at: 2/4/04 2:23 pm

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 333
(2/4/04 2:17 pm)
Reply

Re: to mr Larkin, your enlightenment

---

Let's say you are Robert. How would you try to defeat David and prove that his authority is groundless?

Edit: I was replying to Dan, I didn't see Suergaz's post.

Edited by: MGregory at: 2/4/04 2:19 pm

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 333
(2/4/04 2:26 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Suergaz:

Quote:

---

No, it is reality. Nature/reality cannot be ultimate, ie. final. Only parts of it can be so.

---

Why?

Quote:

---

It is as ridiculous as arguing that time is a dimension.

---

Why is that ridiculous? Isn't a dimension something that is measured?

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2201
(2/4/04 2:38 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Quote:

---

suergaz:--Nature/reality cannot be ultimate, ie. final. Only parts of it can be so.

MGregory:--Why?

---

Because it is infinite.

Quote:

---

suergaz:--It is as ridiculous as arguing that time is a dimension.

MGregory:--Why is that ridiculous? Isn't a dimension something that is measured?

---

If that was all that a dimension is, it would not be ridiculous. But it isn't.

Edited by: suergaz at: 2/4/04 2:39 pm

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 334
(2/4/04 2:53 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Quote:

---

suergaz:--Nature/reality cannot be ultimate, ie. final. Only parts of it can be so.

MGregory:--Why?

suergaz: Because it is infinite.

---

So Nature is infinite, but the ultimate is finite?

Quote:

---

suergaz:--It is as ridiculous as arguing that time is a dimension.

MGregory:--Why is that ridiculous? Isn't a dimension something that is measured?

suergaz: If that was all that a dimension is, it would not be ridiculous. But it isn't.

---

What else is it?

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2202
(2/4/04 3:00 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Quote:

---

suergaz:--Nature/reality cannot be ultimate, ie. final. Only parts of it can be so.

MGregory:--Why?

suergaz: Because it is infinite.

MGregory:--So Nature is infinite, but the ultimate is finite?

---

'The Ultimate'? What do you mean? What is final is finite. How couldn't it be?

Quote:

---

suergaz:--It is as ridiculous as arguing that time is a dimension.

MGregory:--Why is that ridiculous? Isn't a dimension something that is measured?

suergaz: If that was all that a dimension is, it would not be ridiculous. But it isn't.

MGregory:--What else is it?

---

A physical reality.

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                  | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 1624(2/4/04 3:46 pm)Reply | Re: to mr Larkin, your enlightenment<hr/> Matt Gregory asked me:Quote:<hr/> Let's say you are Robert. How would you try to defeat David and prove that his authority is groundless?<hr/>Well, if I was Robert I would necessarily be as foolish as he is and therefore would do just what he's doing. But seriously, all that could be done is to show that David's conceptions of enlightenment are false, and that would require showing that his entire philosophical outlook was wrong. I don't see Robert achieving that anytime soon...It's farcial to debate David's views on enlightenment from the basis and/or authority of scripture of any kind because that is not the actual basis of his conceptions of enlightenment. Nor could it ever be for anyone.Dan Rowden |

MGregory

Registered User

Posts: 335

(2/4/04 3:53 pm)

Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Quote:

---

'The Ultimate'? What do you mean?

---

I meant what you meant: final.

Quote:

---

What is final is finite. How couldn't it be?

---

So what is not final is infinite?

Quote:

---

suergaz:--It is as ridiculous as arguing that time is a dimension.

MGregory:--Why is that ridiculous? Isn't a dimension something that is measured?

suergaz: If that was all that a dimension is, it would not be ridiculous. But it isn't.

MGregory:--What else is it?

suergaz: A physical reality.

---

What do you mean by that?

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 336
(2/4/04 4:11 pm)
Reply

Re: to mr Larkin, your enlightenment

---

Dan Rowden:

Quote:

---

It's farcial to debate David's views on enlightenment from the basis and/or authority of scripture of any kind because that is not the actual basis of his conceptions of enlightenment. Nor could it ever be for anyone.

---

What about the idea that David's only basis is his own opinion that he enlightened? Robert says we should reject it out of hand. That seems reasonable. We can't go around accepting everyone's opinions can we?

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2205
(2/4/04 4:25 pm)
Reply

Re: to mr Larkin, your enlightenment

---

MGregory:--

Quote:

---

So what is not final is infinite?

---

Not necessarily.

Quote:

---

suergaz:--It is as ridiculous as arguing that time is a dimension.

MGregory:--Why is that ridiculous? Isn't a dimension something that is measured?

suergaz: If that was all that a dimension is, it would not be ridiculous. But it isn't.

MGregory:--What else is it?

suergaz: A physical reality.

MGregory:--What do you mean by that?

---

Material actuality. Time is a measurement of space in relation to space. Hence it is not a dimension like space is.

Lbartoli
Registered User
Posts: 360
(2/5/04 12:43 am)
Reply

Reply Comment on Robert's opening entry

---

I just posted the following in THE Debate Comments thread:

-----

Well, that's pretty much how it appears to my mind (K Solway post), as it would to anyone with a high degree of rationality.

But i don't see this fellow being so honest, not really. For instance, i dont think his challenge was sincere-- ie. I dont think he went into it with the belief that anything substantial would or could be accomplished. Let me explain:

I think his intention was simply an egotistical desire to strut his stuff amongst friends and acquaintances, knowing well in advance that in this place at the end of it all HE will be awarded the victory, and not just over any man, but over a self-proclaimed genius of geniuses--none other than the mighty Quinn himself! Thereafter, Mr Larkin could expect to be held in high esteme.

Quite immature, it is, and rather sickening, earning Robert -2 points.

If i were David i would not be forced by any rules or person to continue this useless exercise beyond the point where he feels any benefit could be derived by any honest man.

Leo

|                                                                                                                                                                                                    |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 338(2/5/04 9:23 am)Reply                                                                                                                  | Time, space and space <hr/> Quote: <hr/> suergaz: Time is a measurement of space in relation to space.Hence it is not a dimension like space is. <hr/> So time is the measurement of space against another piece of space or what?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2219(2/5/04 10:00 am)Reply                                                                                                                 | ---- <hr/> Have a think about it Matt! (:D)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 1625(2/5/04 10:30 am)Reply  | Re: to mr Larkin, your enlightenment <hr/> Matt wrote: Quote: <hr/> What about the idea that David's only basis is his own opinion that he enlightened? Robert says we should reject it out of hand. That seems reasonable. <hr/> Not to me. That is simply to create a false dilemma and then argue that dilemma. David's "claim" of enlightenment isn't an issue at all. The question is does enlightenment exist and if so what form does it take. David's is merely a perspective on the issue from the point of view of any given individual. It should be neither accepted nor rejected. Quote: <hr/> We can't go around accepting everyone's opinions can we? <hr/> |

Obviously not, but the illusion of authority is one of the first things an intelligent person understands. Without that step there is no real intelligence at work and therefore no potential for anything.

Dan Rowden

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 339
(2/5/04 2:28 pm)
Reply

Re: ----

---

Quote:

---

suergaz: Have a think about it Matt! (:D)

---

If I'm listening to two drums beating, and I hear that one is beating twice for every beat of the other one, then how am I measuring space?

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 339
(2/5/04 3:25 pm)
Reply

Re: to mr Larkin, your enlightenment

---

Quote:

---

Matt: What about the idea that David's only basis is his own opinion that he enlightened? Robert says we should reject it out of hand. That seems reasonable.

Dan: Not to me. That is simply to create a false dilemma and then argue that dilemma. David's "claim" of enlightenment isn't an issue at all. The question is does enlightenment exist and if so what form does it take.

---

Why did you put the word "claim" in quotes? It seems to me to be an issue because if we accept that he is enlightened, then everything we say is speculation and everything he says is fact because he is enlightened and we are not. So our opinions become useless and we can no longer make our own judgements and we would have to accept everything he says at face value.

Quote:

---

Dan: David's is merely a perspective on the issue from the point of view of any given individual. It should be neither accepted nor rejected.

---

If we were to ask someone if he is enlightened, and if he were to say "yes", then isn't he implying that we should accept the fact that he is enlightened? If he doesn't want us to accept it, then why wouldn't he say, "oh, what does my opinion have to do with anything?" or something like that?

Quote:

---

Matt: We can't go around accepting everyone's opinions can we?

Dan: Obviously not, but the illusion of authority is one of the first things an intelligent person understands. Without that step there is no real intelligence at work and therefore no potential for anything.

---

What makes authority an illusion? If someone is not enlightened, but wants to be and doesn't know how to become enlightened, doesn't he have to ask someone who knows how to become enlightened? If he doesn't, then how will he become enlightened?

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 335
(2/5/04 5:52 pm)
Reply

Re: to mr Larkin, your enlightenment

---

Matt wrote:

Quote:

---

If we were to ask someone if he is enlightened, and if he were to say "yes", then isn't he implying that we should accept the fact that he is enlightened? If he doesn't want us to accept it, then why wouldn't he say, "oh, what does my opinion have to do with anything?" or something like that?

---

Let's say there was someone on earth from a planet in another galaxy, and someone asked him, "Are you from a planet in another galaxy?", and he answered "Oh, what does my opinion have to do with anything?"

That would be a very boring response don't you think?

It would expand people's horizons a lot more if he just said, "Yes". Mind you, that doesn't mean people should believe him just because he says it.

Extraordinary claims require extraordinary proof, and all that.

Similarly, an enlightened person wouldn't expect anyone to believe him if he said he were enlightened, and would be disappointed if they did.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2229
(2/5/04 10:28 pm)
Reply

----

---

Quote:

---

If I'm listening to two drums beating, and I hear that one is beating twice for every beat of the other one, then how am I measuring space?

---

Hopefully, you're not. But dancing, or better, taking the drums from the drummer and doing better.

|                                                                                                             |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 340(2/6/04 4:15 am)Reply                           | Re: to mr Larkin, your enlightenment <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Similarly, an enlightened person wouldn't expect anyone to believe him if he said he were enlightened, and would be disappointed if they did. <hr/> So what is he trying to acheive in arguing his case?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2231(2/6/04 7:01 am)Reply                           | --- <hr/> A superlative question Matt. (:D)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 590(2/6/04 9:07 am)Reply                             | Re: ---- <hr/> So what is he trying to acheive in arguing his case? Although no one will be convinced from a debate like that some folks will take some new understandings from what he says, even if only subconsciously. This little skerrick of truth may lead to greater things later. He is not so much arguing his case, but the case for looking at the value of reason from a different persepective than what they currently have.                                                                                                                                                   |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Robert LarkinPosts: 37(2/6/04 11:31 am)ReplyezSupporter | Re: to mr Larkin, your enlightenment <hr/> "This little skerrick of truth may lead to greater things later." - jimhaz Jim, that kind of mindlessness is helping suggest to others that this board is actually harmful. Some of you, and not just the leaders, are behaving in a pathological manner. If I could I would shut down this board in an instant. Three so-called enlightened persons who pass off Otto Weininger as a genius when Weininger was a mentally ill anti-semite and misogynist are out of touch with reality. In turn their delusions have been taken to heart by some of you. |

|                                                                                                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 923(2/6/04 11:34 am)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> Why would you shut it down?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|  Robert LarkinPosts: 39(2/6/04 11:39 am)ReplyezSupporter   | Re: ---- <hr/> Because too many people here are behaving in a pathological manner. The Genius Forum is I would suggest a little electronic cult, the cult of QRS. People like jimhaz login to come believe in them. Edited by: Robert Larkin at: 2/6/04 11:41 am                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| ksolwayRegistered UserPosts: 335(2/6/04 11:55 am)Reply   | Re: to mr Larkin, your enlightenment <hr/> Matt wrote: Quote: <hr/> K: Similarly, an enlightened person wouldn't expect anyone to believe him if he said he were enlightened, and would be disappointed if they did. M: So what is he trying to acheive in arguing his case? <hr/> As is usual for the enlightened person, he would be trying to achieve the survival of wisdom. If an enlightened person says they are enlightened, it would only be because he thinks the benefits in doing so are greater than for him not doing so. |

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 924
(2/6/04 11:56 am)
Reply

Re: to mr Larkin, your enlightenment

---

Quote:

---

Because too many people here are behaving in a pathological manner.

---

What do you mean, too many people?

---

Quote:

---

The Genius Forum is I would suggest a little electronic cult, the cult of QRS.

---

Part of it is yeah.

---

Quote:

---

People like jimhaz login to come believe in them.

---

Maybe.

But you really know very little of Jimhaz, or consequently, people like him.

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

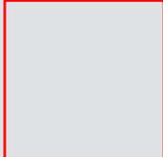

> Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                       | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| ksolwayRegistered UserPosts: 336(2/6/04 12:30 pm)Reply | Re: to mr Larkin, your enlightenment<hr/> Robert wrote:Quote:<hr/> If I could I would shut down this board in an instant.<hr/>Judge, jury, and executioner!Quote:<hr/> The Genius Forum is I would suggest a little electronic cult,the cult of QRS<hr/>Here is a common definition of a cult:Quote:<hr/> A group that uses methods that deprive individuals of their | ability to make a free choice. They use deceitful recruitment techniques, they deceptively and destructively use the devotees' energies, and they capture the devotee's minds .. to advance the goals of the group leaders to the actual or possible detriment of members, their families, or the community. .. Cults can include groups and organizations that are not typically viewed as cults. - Dr. Paul Martin

---

"Deprive individuals of their ability to make a free choice"? I don't think so. "Deceitful recruitment techniques"? "Deceptively and destructively use the devotees' energies"?

I think you are climbing the wrong tree with this "cult" idea Mr. Larkin. Your own views would more accurately fit the definition of cult thinking, and your desire to "shut things down".

Lbartoli
Registered User
Posts: 366
(2/6/04 1:01 pm)
Reply

Re: to mr Larkin, your enlightenment

---

Yeah, thats the nature of evil, or ignorance, it cant see itself within the individual, and is disgusted by truth, to the degree that it can faintly recognize it. It is full of contradictions, just as this man is. Almost everything he posts contains contradictions, it is the mark of a predominantly feminine person.

Im sure the more we say the more pissed-off he's going to get, but he can justify it within himself coz 'obviously' (to him) we are terribly evil and 'uncompassionate'. And others will agree, wont they.

There is no hope for people like this.

Leo

cassiopeiae
Registered User
Posts: 245
(2/6/04 1:02 pm)
Reply

Re: to mr Larkin, your enlightenment

---

This is getting ridiculous. From a female standpoint, the QRS are making their points based on their own perspectives. I, personally, think much (if not all) of what they stand for is a crock, but, they have come to these conclusions through their own means of study. I have to respect that aspect. Nothing burns me more than those "philosophical types" who do nothing but spout out the words of others. I cannot remember any instance where they have condemned someone for thinking for themselves, even if it was completely opposite their philosophy. It is natural for the human to defend (or as QRS would probably say, explain) his/her belief, and this is what they do.

Mr. Larkin, you have made good points, and effort. If you don't like what you read, don't read. No one is trying to convert you to anything, QRS or other. There are plenty of people here that do not or have never attached themselves to the QRS method or whatever you want to call it.

If nothing else, I have learned what not to believe, and how to deal with those who do. Don't forget there is much to learn, even in the most repulsive of situations. Something obviously brought you here for a reason...

People are only a victim if they allow themselves to be, right now you are allowing yourself to be put in that position, I refuse to do it, as do many other people who happen to pass through Genius. If you wish to be the victim, that is fine, remember you only create the war by doing so, you do nothing to solve the conflict.

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 591
(2/6/04 1:39 pm)
Reply

Re: to mr Larkin, your enlightenment

---

All I can say is that the forum is making me feel more mature, more secure in myself.

It is a matter of Horses for Courses.

I already considered myself a bit of a societal outcast, so many of the dangers Robert is frightened off and attempting to save me from aren't really of that much concern. If I'm wrong, so what, I've been a drifter all my life, so a bit of real turmoil, might be handy - but that is a hurdle down the track. At some stage I might decide i can't do without attachments. I have no plans to leave work when it not that much different than being on the dole :)

Robert Larkin

Posts: 40

(2/6/04 2:40 pm)

Reply

ezSupporter

Re: to mr Larkin, your enlightenment

---

cassio, while I appreciate your comments on my behalf the Trinity are not victimizing me but others who have accepted delusions as being worth pursuing. While individuals so deluded they would promote Otto Weininger as a genius would not threaten most people, there are individuals with whom they shouldn't associate. For instance I do not like the idea that adolescents could visit and see the Three Wise Men holding court. With you remarkably shortsighted and irresponsible people in attendance, those not well equipped for sanity - like some of the individuals already here - could themselves be encouraged to join the delusion. Thus cassio you yourself have responsibility here and every time you notice a zombie-like response from any of the posters less free from yourself, remember you are yourself encouraging the continuation of it by seeking your own amusement.

My last post here. Be well.

WolfsonJakk

Registered User

Posts: 1445

(2/6/04 4:24 pm)

Reply

Re: to mr Larkin, your enlightenment

---

Cass is a beacon of light that penetrates the umbrella cast by Weininger. There is more here than that. She is not the only one here now, nor previously.

Even so, there are more important considerations worth considering.

I personally don't care that  $1+1 \neq 3$ .

Tharan

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2234

(2/6/04 8:05 pm)

Reply

---

---

Robert, can't you see this is my forum?! I am here to put the misogynists to rights! (:D) They're curable! You should try neo-nazis! Debating doesn't do where a fight is inevitable.

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 340
(2/6/04 8:41 pm)
Reply

Re: ----

---

Quote:

---

Matt: So what is he trying to achieve in arguing his case?

Jimhaz: Although no one will be convinced from a debate like that some folks will take some new understandings from what he says, even if only subconsciously. This little skerrick of truth may lead to greater things later.

He is not so much arguing his case, but the case for looking at the value of reason from a different perspective than what they currently have.

Kevin: As is usual for the enlightened person, he would be trying to achieve the survival of wisdom. If an enlightened person says they are enlightened, it would only be because he thinks the benefits in doing so are greater than for him not doing so.

---

Why does the enlightened person try to achieve the valuing of reason and the survival of wisdom? Is it because he wants people to think like him so they will do things for him or be friends with him? Or maybe because he wants to look smarter than other people, like a genius? Does he want people to think he is a great man or something? Is he acting completely altruistically with no concern for himself at all or what?

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2235
(2/6/04 9:14 pm)
Reply

---

---

benius's's, --always frinkin' of their benefits.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2237
(2/6/04 9:45 pm)
Reply

---

---

I am in no way saying I don't think there are incurable misogynists.

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 337
(2/6/04 11:31 pm)
Reply

Re: ----

Matt wrote:

Quote:

---

Why does the enlightened person try to achieve the valuing of reason and the survival of wisdom? Is it because he wants people to think like him so they will do things for him or be friends with him? Or maybe because he wants to look smarter than other people, like a genius? Does he want people to think he is a great man or something? Is he acting completely altruistically with no concern for himself at all or what?

---

Continued in new thread: "The motivation of the enlightened"

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1406
(2/7/04 3:31 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

Quote:

---

They're curable!

---

Do you discern any headway you've made?

|                                                                                                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2242(2/7/04 10:18 pm)Reply    | Re: --- <hr/> Not really. You see, they believe in God, except for ynithrix perhaps (I don't recall having seen him define it as something) On page 11 I demolish 'Ultimate Reality' (as though I hadn't before, before all its 'supporters') Edited by: suergaz at: 2/7/04 10:25 pm |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1408(2/8/04 4:29 am)Reply                                                                                | Re: --- <hr/> You think the problem is their belief in God?!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2247(2/8/04 11:56 am)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> It's your problem too.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| RairunRegistered UserPosts: 186(2/8/04 12:17 pm)Reply                                                                                      | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> Zag, there's a fellow who too believes in God in the Ponderer's Guild!                                                                                                                                                                           |

|                                                                                                                                                                                             |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2250(2/8/04 12:22 pm)Reply                          | Re: --- <hr/> What about it?! Although I doubt any more pondering will fix him, he'll serve well as a kind of scarecrow. Who are you talking about?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| RairunRegistered UserPosts: 187(2/8/04 12:27 pm)Reply                                                                                                            | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> Robert Larkin!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2251(2/8/04 12:31 pm)Reply                         | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> He should get plenty of sleep and try to keep his complaints to a minimum so as not to exacerbate the condition.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| Ducky M <input type="checkbox"/>Registered UserPosts: 1(2/28/04 8:16 am)Reply  | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> Quote: <hr/> A possible exception might be made in the case of a certain book by one William Walker Atkinson (AKA 'Yogi Ramacharaka'), in which the author quite plainly predicts both general relativity and quantum mechanics, and arguably predicts even the information theory aspects thereof. Atkinson wrote the book in question in 1904. Quite remarkable, to say the least. If there is sufficient interest, I can transcribe quotes which will likely set some folks back on their heels. <hr/> I'm interested. I have a copy of "Science of Breath" by Yogi Ramacharaka ( copyrighted in 1904 ). It was a gift from my uncle Agustín in Puerto Rico | many years ago. It has a label that reads "GILBERT'S BOOK SHOP HOLLYWOOD & VINE".

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                      | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Thomas KnierimRegistered UserPosts: 778(1/26/04 3:41 pm)Reply  | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> Krussel: I find it most astounding that scientists of all people would think that particles or matter of any kind would exist or occur without cause. Well, QM is admittedly counterintuitive. Every scientist would agree with that. There is no way to understand QM intuitively and say “ah yes, that’s the way it works.” This makes it different from most classical theories. QM is an “acquired taste”. It requires mathematical models and, therefore, it requires a basic understanding of math. Some popular science books claim otherwise, they say: no math required, but hey... I don’t think so. The authors of such claims just want to sell their books. The situation is analogous to looking at an abstract painting, let’s say at Picasso’s “Violin and Guitar”, and trying to make sense of it. In order to make sense of it you need to understand cubism. If (and only if) you understand cubism then you understand Picasso’s “Violin and Guitar”. QM is not the only example of high abstraction in physics. Even relativity -a classical theory- is to some degree counterintuitive. Think of things in motion and imagine that from your perspective the clock ticks slower for things in motion. It appears from you frame of reference that their time slows down. Let that thought melt in your brain and enjoy the flavor. Nature is wondrous. In my view QM DOES QUESTION causality. At the very least, it questions the commonsense understanding of causality, just as relativity questions the | commonsense understanding of time and space. Our everyday notion of causality is too narrow. It cannot accommodate QM, just as the receptacle idea of space cannot accommodate relativity. Human thought often follows entrenched pathways. We are used to linear, simple causality. A follows B therefore B is A's cause. If we observe a non-deterministic phenomenon such as radioactive decay, we automatically ask: what caused the particle to decay? Narrow thinking insinuates hidden causes. That is all too human. But, perhaps the question is not valid. Maybe all we have to do is to redefine causality. Unfortunately though, this entire discussion here on Genius has rarely ventured into that alley. It has never been analyzed what are the precise modes of causality. What is locality, continuity, non-spuriousness, transitional necessity, etc. Instead of asking these important questions, it has just been dogmatically assumed that the principle of causality is unquestionable.

This is a big mistake. We need to question everything!

Thomas

Edited by: Thomas Knierim at: 1/26/04 5:20 pm

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2094

(1/26/04 3:50 pm)

Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Naturyl wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: What is the difference between our current quantum models making the assumption that non-determinism is part of the fabric of Reality and nineteenth century physics making the assumption that time and space are fixed absolute realities? In other words, by what means have you established that non-determinism is more than a mere assumption made, for purely practical purposes, in a scientific theory that happens to be popular at the moment?

Nat: Particle/antiparticle creation through random quantum fluctuation has been empirically verified through a variety of means. As I am sure you are aware by virtue of dealing with this issue countless times, it is not possible that such 'virtual particle' creation arises through causal processes. We do observe such creation in Nature, so we have empirical verification that quantum mechanics does allow for phenomena that are devoid of cause. This has been established, and does not require any underlying metaphysical assumption in order to remain valid.

---

You haven't really said anything here. All you have done is repeat the standard dogma.

The ancients used to point all around them in a sweeping gesture and assert that the flatness of the earth has been "empirically verified". They also used to point to the motion of the stars above and assert that the earth's fixed position in the centre of the universe has been "empirically verified". Nineteenth century physicists used to point to the consistent behaviour observed in moving objects and planetary orbits and the like, and assert that the fixed and absolute nature of time and space has been "empirically verified". In light of all this, I would like to know how you have established that quantum physics, and its belief that non-causality has been "empirically verified", is any different?

Quote:

---

A possible exception might be made in the case of a certain book by one William Walker Atkinson (AKA 'Yogi Ramacharaka'), in which the author quite plainly predicts both general relativity and quantum mechanics, and arguably predicts even the information theory aspects thereof. Atkinson wrote the book in question in 1904. Quite remarkable, to say the least. If there is sufficient interest, I can transcribe quotes which will likely set some folks back on their heels.

---

What is the wisest thing he ever wrote?

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2096

(1/26/04 4:35 pm)

Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Thomas wrote:

Quote:

---

Our everyday notion of causality is too narrow. It cannot accommodate QM, just as the receptacle idea of space cannot accommodate relativity.

---

No, your everyday conception of causality is too narrow. That is why you a continually creating a conflict (between QM and causality) which doesn't really exist.

Quote:

---

If we observe a non-deterministic phenomenon such as radioactive decay, we automatically ask: what caused the particle to decay? Narrow thinking insinuates hidden causes. That is all too human.

---

We already know that radiocative decay has causes - for example, the radiocative material in question, time and space, atoms, nuclei, protons, neutrons, electrons, etc. These are all contributory causes of radioactive decay.

Quote:

---

But, perhaps the question is not valid. Maybe all we have to do is to redefine causality.

---

Hooray!

Quote:

---

Unfortunately though, this entire discussion here on Genius has rarely ventured into that alley. It has never been analyzed what are the precise modes of causality. What is locality, continuity, non-spuriousness, transitional necessity, etc.

Instead of asking these important questions, it is has just been dogmatically assumed that the principle of causality is unquestionable.

---

There is a very good reason why these "important questions" have rarely been investigated on this forum - namely, they're not very important. They don't help a person understand the soul of causality, which is where you are lacking, Thomas.

Naturyl
Registered User
Posts: 98
(1/26/04 4:48 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Quote:

---

You haven't really said anything here. All you have done is repeat the standard dogma.

---

Yeah, the 'standard dogma' that shows your argument to be fallacious. I'll give you a clue. No one is ever going to 'say anything' as long as you shut your eyes and plug your ears whenever someone starts to refute you. In your world, where eyes are shut and ears are plugged, it's only natural that no one says anything. To someone in a coma, a lecture by Einstein would amount to nothing at all. That which you refer to as 'the standard dogma' is that which undermines your claims, so you respond by equating it with nothingness. Neat trick. Those who refute your arguments 'haven't really said anything.' That which contradicts you does not exist. Like I said elsewhere, it's a nice racket you've got going there.

Quote:

---

What is the wisest thing he ever wrote?

---

Honestly, I wouldn't know where to start. IMO, his Advanced Course in Yogi Philosophy and Oriental Occultism is quite possibly the greatest exposition of authentic spiritual thought ever written for the layman.

One thing is certain, however. He never said that it would be a good idea to strangle female infants at birth.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2099
(1/26/04 4:57 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Naturyl wrote:

Quote:

---

Yeah, the 'standard dogma' that shows your argument to be fallacious. I'll give you a clue. No one is ever going to 'say anything' as long as you shut your eyes and plug your ears whenever someone starts to refute you. In your world, where eyes are shut and ears are plugged, it's only natural that no one says anything. To someone in a coma, a lecture by Einstein would amount to nothing at all .....

---

What's all this nonsense? Why aren't you answering my question? I'll put it to you again:

The ancients used to point all around them in a sweeping gesture and assert that the flatness of the earth has been "empirically verified". They also used to point to the motion of the stars above and assert that the earth's fixed position in the centre of the universe has been "empirically verified". Nineteenth century physicists used to point to the consistent behaviour observed in moving objects and planetary orbits and the like, and assert that the fixed and absolute nature of time and space has been "empirically verified". In light of all this, I would like to know how you have established that quantum physics, and its belief that non-causality has been "empirically verified", is any different?

Naturyl
Registered User
Posts: 101
(1/26/04 5:13 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

The existence of non-causal phenomena has been observed in Nature. This empirically verifies that phenomena without cause do exist. Your attempt at confusing the issue by introducing historical irrelevancies will not help you escape the validity of this syllogism:

1. If non-causal phenomena are observed in nature, they exist.
2. Non-causal phenomena are observed in nature.
3. Non-causal phenomena exist.

How do any of the historical follies you list affect the truth of this logical proposition?

Your only course of action is to go back to semantic disputes over the definition of causality, which Thomas and I have already refuted in the other thread.

Oh, my, your king is in check... but I'm sure you've heard that before in reference to this debate.

Edited by: Naturyl  at: 1/26/04 5:18 pm

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 779
(1/26/04 5:18 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

David: They don't help a person understand the soul of causality, which is where you are lacking, Thomas.

The soul of causality? Oh well. I think now it is YOU who sounds like a bible-banging parish priest. Let's call it the church of cause.

David: In light of all this, I would like to know how you have established that quantum physics, and its belief that non-causality has been "empirically verified", is any different?

Isn't the answer to this question obvious enough? You actually almost answer this question yourself. In the past it have been all the COMMONSENSE NOTIONS that turned out to be wrong. The flatness of the earth went down the drain. The geocentric universe went down the drain. Absolute time and space went down the drain. Next on the chopping board is causality!

Thomas

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2102

(1/26/04 5:31 pm)

Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Naturyl wrote:

Quote:

---

1. If non-causal phenomena are observed in nature, they exist.
2. Non-causal phenomena are observed in nature.
3. Non-causal phenomena exist.

How do any of the historical follies you list affect the truth of this logical proposition?

---

An old argument of the ancients:

1. If the flatness of the earth is observed in nature, it exists.
2. The flatness of the earth is observed in nature.
3. The flatness of the earth exists.

Naturyl

Registered User

Posts: 104

(1/26/04 5:38 pm)

Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

The flatness of the earth was never observed in nature. The first ship to sail around the world refuted the flat earth hypothesis. The flat earth was hypothesized, but never observed. Non-causal processes were hypothesized, and now have been observed.

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 291
(1/26/04 5:43 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Naturyl wrote:

Quote:

---

The existence of non-causal phenomena has been observed in Nature.

---

You can't "observe a non-causal phenomena". Rather, you can observe a phenomena, and you can then reason that the phenomena is without cause.

Mind you, that second step is a very big step.

It is a very big step (read "a very silly step") because David has already demonstrated that we can readily observe at least some contributory causes for all quantum phenomena - which proves beyond any shadow of doubt that they are not without cause.

In the case of some aspects of quantum phenomena that would seem to fall outside of the narrow conception of cause and effect held by scientists, like "remote communication" where information seems to be passing between two remote locations simultaneously, that is only a limitation of the scientist's conception of cause and effect. At no time does the law of cause and effect break down.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2103
(1/26/04 5:46 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Thomas wrote:

Quote:

---

David: They don't help a person understand the soul of causality, which is where you are lacking, Thomas.

Thomas: The soul of causality? Oh well. I think now it is YOU who sounds like a bible-banging parish priest. Let's call it the church of cause.

---

You don't understand causality with your own mind in a spiritual sense. Instead, your understanding is sterile, second-hand, bookish, piece-meal. You haven't put in the introspective effort to comprehend it deeply.

Quote:

---

David: In light of all this, I would like to know how you have established that quantum physics, and its belief that non-causality has been "empirically verified", is any different?

Thomas: Isn't the answer to this question obvious enough? You actually almost answer this question yourself. In the past it have been all the COMMONSENSE NOTIONS that turned out to be wrong. The flatness of the earth went down the drain. The geocentric universe went down the drain. Absolute time and space went down the drain. Next on the chopping board is causality!

---

Just because some commonsense notions have been dispelled (or at least we think they have been dispelled, based on our current understanding of things), it doesn't automatically mean that all commonsense notions are wrong.

More importantly, causality differs from all these other things in that it is universally true by logical necessity. By contrast, there is no logical necessity for the earth to be flat, or for the earth to be the center of the Universe, or for time and space to be absolute.

Naturyl
Registered User
Posts: 105
(1/26/04 5:49 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Kevin said:

Quote:

---

You can't "observe a non-causal phenomena". Rather, you can observe a phenomena, and you can then reason that the phenomena is without cause.

Mind you, that second step is a very big step.

It is a very big step (read "a very silly step") because David has already demonstrated that we can readily observe at least some contributory causes for all quantum phenomena - which proves beyond any shadow of doubt that they are not without cause.

---

But if we reject David's assertion that accessory circumstances are contributory causes, as I did in the 'Hell is Other People' thread, David has shown nothing. What's more, I also reject your unsupported assertion that non-causal phenomena cannot be observed in Nature. If phenomena are observed which cannot have a cause, non-causal phenomena have been observed. For people whose claim to base your 'infinite wisdom' on the principles of logic, you certainly seem to have a lot of struggles with it.

Quote:

---

In the case of some aspects of quantum phenomena that would seem to fall outside of the narrow conception of cause and effect held by scientists, like "remote communication" where information seems to be passing between two remote locations simultaneously, that is only a limitation of the scientist's conception of cause and effect. At no time does the law of cause and effect break down.

---

Oh, I wondered when this was coming. Scientists don't understand cause and effect properly, but you and David do. Mmm-hmm.

Edited by: Naturyl  at: 1/26/04 5:52 pm

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 293
(1/26/04 6:56 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Naturyl wrote:

Quote:

---

If we reject David's assertion that accessory circumstances are contributory causes . . .

---

Literally all causes of a thing can be classified as "accessory circumstances".

For example, the parents of a child, while being contributing causes to the child, are also "accessory circumstances".

Naturyl
Registered User
Posts: 113
(1/26/04 7:03 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

So what? By showing that all causes are necessarily accessory circumstances, do you therefore show that all accessory circumstances are causes? I smell a fallacy, and it smells like napalm in the morning.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 779
(1/26/04 7:19 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

David: You don't understand causality with your own mind in a spiritual sense.

Aha, now we are coming closer to the core of your argument, which is -how could it be otherwise- spiritual. You seem to maintain a spiritual attachment to the idea of causality. Perhaps it is the idea that the universe is based on a single principle - causality - and that God does not play dice. An elegant thought indeed. This is by the way the point where even the most distinguished scientists tend to fail. The weakness here is attachment to cherished ideas, even despite better evidence. Reminds me a bit of Max Planck. He was completely baffled that he was right about quanta. However, Planck ultimately gave up his craving for a classical ideas and accepted quantization of energy as a fact - the way of nature. That speaks for his humility.

David: Just because some commonsense notions have been dispelled (or at least we think they have been dispelled, based on our current understanding of things), it doesn't automatically mean that all commonsense notions are wrong.

No, but it's very likely. It is the rational thing to assume.

David: More importantly, causality differs from all these other things in that it is universally true by logical necessity. By contrast, there is no logical necessity for the earth to be flat, or for the earth to be the center of the Universe, or for time and space to be absolute.

Hahaha, the ancients also said that it is logically necessary that the earth is flat, otherwise you would fall off it...

Thomas

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 295
(1/26/04 7:22 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Naturyl wrote:

Quote:

---

By showing that all causes are necessarily accessory circumstances, do you therefore show that all accessory circumstances are causes?

---

You are arguing that accessory circumstances are not causes, and I have just shown, through my example, that this is not the case.

Presumably you think that some accessory circumstances are not causes, but I can't for the life of me imagine why. If you can provide a good reason why you think some accessory circumstances are not "causes" then we can go from there.

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 296
(1/26/04 7:54 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Naturyl wrote:

Quote:

---

If phenomena are observed which cannot have a cause, non-causal phenomena have been observed.

---

And how do you prove that it is not possible for a particular phenomena to have a cause?

You cannot do it.

Quote:

---

Scientists don't understand cause and effect properly, but you and David do.

---

Scientists have a limited understanding of cause and effect, because they don't understand what it is, or how it works. To understand these things requires philosophic knowledge, and that is what scientists, generally, aren't interested in.

For example, some scientists say that there was no "before" the big bang, because time didn't exist then. This is the same as saying that there is no possible way the big bang could have had a cause . . . yet another uncaused phenomena!

Their big mistake is in assuming that what we can immediately perceive is the entirety of reality, and that there is nothing else. This comes from having a materialistic approach to life, and a materialistic understanding of cause and effect. Unfortunately both life and cause and effect are spiritual in nature, and not materialistic.

John
Registered User
Posts: 62
(1/26/04 8:48 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

ksolway
Their big mistake is in assuming that what we can immediately perceive is the entirety of reality, and that there is nothing else. This comes from having a materialistic approach to life, and a materialistic understanding of cause and effect. Unfortunately both life and cause and effect are spiritual in nature, and not materialistic.

How do you define spiritualistic and materialistic?

The BIG MISTAKE is to think that concepts have anything but a tenuous connection to reality.

Concepts are man made attempts at trying to relate to reality and serve us well in everyday affairs but concepts break down when applied to fundamentals.

Indeterminate means indeterminate in my book.

John

Owen1234
Registered User
Posts: 22
(1/26/04 9:25 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

David: More importantly, causality differs from all these other things in that it is universally true by logical necessity. By contrast, there is no logical necessity for the earth to be flat, or for the earth to be the center of the Universe, or for time and space to be absolute.

Nonsense!

Please demonstrate how it is that causality "is universally true by logical necessity".

I bet you won't even try.

How could you prove that every effect has a cause?
What do 'you' mean by 'logical necessity'?

Your unfounded claims are no more believable than the silly claims of religion.

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 297
(1/26/04 9:58 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

John wrote:

Quote:

---

ksolway: Their big mistake is in assuming that what we can immediately perceive is the entirety of reality, and that there is nothing else. This comes from having a materialistic approach to life, and a materialistic understanding of cause and effect. Unfortunately both life and cause and effect are spiritual in nature, and not materialistic.

John: How do you define spiritualistic and materialistic?

---

The spiritual is infinite and seamless, while the materialistic is concrete and cut up into unwieldy blocks which are always getting in the way.

There is duality within the spiritual, but that duality is fluid and realistic. The duality within the materialistic is grasping, and unrealistic.

A good example of the difference is such a thing as a "cause". To a scientist a "cause" is a very particular thing, with very strict boundaries, and nothing else. And no scientist ever questions this accepted definition of a cause, for fear of losing his job. The end result is that science ends up in a real mess, making utterly foolish claims like "there was nothing before the big-bang", or claiming that one set of necessary conditions are "causes", while another set of necessary conditions are not causes.

Scientists tend to imbue the boundaries of things (eg, of causes), with real substance, or inherent existence, which is why they end up with all those useless "concrete blocks". They mentally block-out the fact that our own minds create the boundaries between things.

Quote:

---

The BIG MISTAKE is to think that concepts have anything but a tenuous connection to reality.

---

I presume you are saying that that very concept of yours (quoted) has but a tenuous connection to reality.

Not all concepts have but a tenuous connection to reality. Why would you think so?

The concepts of scientists have, at best, a tenuous connection to reality, for the reasons I have outlined.

Quote:

---

Concepts are man made attempts at trying to relate to reality and serve us well in everyday affairs but concepts break down when applied to fundamentals.

---

Wise, spiritual concepts, do not break down when applied to fundamentals. They are like adaptable tools, which are always the right tool for the job.

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                          | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 2106(1/26/04 10:29 pm)Reply | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality<hr/> Owen wrote:Quote:<hr/> Please demonstrate how it is that causality "is universally true by logical necessity".I bet you won't even try.<hr/>I explored this issue in detail in my book, particularly chapter 2 - Wisdom of the Infinite |

Owen1234
Registered User
Posts: 22
(1/26/04 10:42 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2106
(1/26/04 10:29 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Owen wrote:

Quote:

---

Please demonstrate how it is that causality "is universally true by logical necessity".

I bet you won't even try.

---

David: I explored this issue in detail in my book, particularly chapter 2 -
Wisdom of the Infinite

???

Please demonstrate how it is that causality "is universally true by logical necessity".

I bet you won't even try.

Owen

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2107
(1/26/04 10:44 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Thomas wrote:

Quote:

---

David: You don't understand causality with your own mind in a spiritual sense.

Thomas: Aha, now we are coming closer to the core of your argument, which is -how could it be otherwise- spiritual.
You seem to maintain a spiritual attachment to the idea of causality.

---

Yes, it is the underpinning of the Buddhist principle that all things lack inherent existence.

Quote:

---

Reminds me a bit of Max Planck. He was completely baffled that he was right about quanta. However, Planck ultimately gave up his craving for a classical ideas and accepted quantization of energy as a fact - the way of nature. That speaks for his humility.

---

The truth of causality, as understood spiritually, has nothing to do with "classical ideas". That is your misconception.

Quote:

---

David: Just because some commonsense notions have been dispelled (or at least we think they have been dispelled, based on our current understanding of things), it doesn't automatically mean that all commonsense notions are wrong.

No, but it's very likely. It is the rational thing to assume.

---

Nonsense. One should assume nothing; otherwise, one will fall into the habit of accepting things on blind faith - such as the latest scientific fads.

Quote:

---

David: More importantly, causality differs from all these other things in that it is universally true by logical necessity. By contrast, there is no logical necessity for the earth to be flat, or for the earth to be the center of the Universe, or for time and space to be absolute.

Thomas: Hahaha, the ancients also said that it is logically necessary that the earth is flat, otherwise you would fall off it...

---

If they did say that, then they were morons. The assertion that the earth is flat is an empirical assertion, meaning that you need empirical evidence to decide the truth of it one way or the other (and even then, you cannot arrive at a complete resolution). It isn't logically necessary, in and of itself, for the earth to be flat, irrespective of what appears to the senses. This is what makes it different to causality.

Thomas Knierim

Registered User

Posts: 779

(1/26/04 11:12 pm)

Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Kevin: Presumably you think that some accessory circumstances are not causes, but I can't for the life of me imagine why.

Accessory circumstances seem to be the pillars of David's argument. Why don't they count as causes? - The answer is simple. - Because we don't allow them to be causes - it is simply a rule of language. If we would allow accessory circumstances to become full-fledged causes, the concept of causation would collapse; it would become meaningless. While it is linguistically possible to establish causal chains between any given event in the history of the universe, this would make all events and phenomena in the universe causes. By doing so you have effectively invalidated the notion of a cause, since a cause become indistinguishable from circumstantial conditions. It's an example of reductio ad absurdum, the logician's finest weapon.

I am afraid those pillars on which David's argument rests have been blown away by this thread.

Kevin: And how do you prove that it is not possible for a particular phenomena to have a cause? You cannot do it.

Given the scientific method it is unnecessary to provide proof. Consistency with observation is sufficient. The statement 'there are no observable causes to this and that QM phenomenon' is a scientifically falsifiable statement. In other words: prove it wrong!

Thomas

Edited by: Thomas Knierim at: 1/27/04 1:05 am

John
Registered User
Posts: 63
(1/27/04 12:05 am)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

ksolway

-----
John: How do you define spiritualistic and materialistic?

-----
The spiritual is infinite and seamless, while the materialistic is concrete and cut up into unwieldy blocks which are always getting in the way.

There is duality within the spiritual, but that duality is fluid and realistic. The duality within the materialistic is grasping, and unrealistic.

Hmm, it seems to me that QRS constantly grasp at concepts.

Splitting reality into material and spiritual is false. We can however for the sake of convenience talk about the material view being not true.

A good example of the difference is such a thing as a "cause". To a scientist a "cause" is a very particular thing, with very strict boundaries, and nothing else. And no scientist ever questions this accepted definition of a cause, for fear of losing his job. The end result is that science ends up in a real mess, making utterly foolish claims like "there was nothing before the big-bang", or claiming that one set of necessary conditions are "causes", while another set of necessary conditions are not causes.

I think you are being unfair, undoubtedly many scientists are this way but not all.

Scientists tend to imbue the boundaries of things (eg, of causes), with real substance, or inherent existence, which is why they end up with all those useless "concrete blocks". They mentally block-out the fact that our own minds create the boundaries between things.

There are obviously scientists like that but there are also scientists that take a more reasonable approach. One I saw talking about string theory which could account for more than one big bang, said he "I don't like nothing", which the original big bang theory postulated. So I guess he would agree with you on that one.

One of the things QM is showing us is that our concepts cannot, will not enable reality to be conceived.

-----
The BIG MISTAKE is to think that concepts have anything but a tenuous connection to reality.

-----
I presume you are saying that very concept of yours (quoted) has but a tenuous connection to reality.

This is a often your rejoinder, as far as I'm concerned it does not show what you appear to think it does.

Not all concepts have but a tenous connection to reality. Why would you think so?

Better, you show me a concept that is not this way.

-----
Concepts are man made attempts at trying to relate to reality and serve us well in everyday affairs but concepts break down when applied to fundamentals.

-----
Wise, spiritual concepts, do not break down when applied to fundamentals. They are like adaptable tools, which are always the right tool for the job.

Not at all. Each tool is useful only for a specific ailment. To entertain the idea that these concepts hold good for all conditions is a mistake.

No dharma can be anything but finite, concepts are dharmas which cannot represent reality and actually separate us from reality. This is basic stuff Kevin.

John

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 470

(1/27/04 12:16 am)

Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

David: Nonsense. One should assume nothing; otherwise, one will fall into the habit of accepting things on blind faith - such as the latest scientific fads.

Disagree. As we cannot know anything completely through empirical observation, the only way we can understand anything is via the process of assumption, excepting when one has already achieved enlightenment. Only in terms of ultimate reality should there be no assumptions.

I know you probably just meant that we shouldn't take anything for granted.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2130

(1/27/04 12:42 am)

Reply

---

---

The 'ultimate men' want to be the 'ultimate man' for as much as they want to call themselves themselves! An end would be all! And what end isn't?! But they will not know a beginning also! It is illogical and is conceived in dreams only. But a vision, An infamous 'first cause', A self from ones end, and not behind, through a dreaming that makes a miss of sleep all up! The ultimate men do not want anything of the superhuman! And not from modesty! Love is quite apart from them ultimately! It is funny and sad, They are of the present entirely for what my thought is to the future!

ksolway

Registered User

Posts: 299

(1/27/04 12:55 am)

Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

John wrote:

Quote:

---

One of the things QM is showing us is that our concepts cannot, will not enable reality to be conceived.

---

No. The best it can do is to show that some previously held concepts were mistaken.

There is nothing inherently wrong with concepts. Concepts are like tools that are useful in the hands of someone who understands them, but are dangerous in the hands of many.

Quote:

---

John: The BIG MISTAKE is to think that concepts have anything but a tenuous connection to reality.

K: I presume you are saying that very concept of yours (quoted) has but a tenuous connection to reality.

John: This is a often your rejoinder . . .

---

It doesn't make any sense at all to conceive of the idea that all concepts are wrong, and then to share it with other people as though it were some kind of truth.

Quote:

---

Not all concepts have but a tenuous connection to reality.
Why would you think so?

Better, you show me a concept that is not this way.

---

My concept of anything at all (eg, "grass", "sky", etc) has a very close connection to reality, as I don't project anything onto reality that isn't there.

A concept often mentioned here is the concept of identity,  $A=A$ , or, "a thing is identical to itself". Another would be the concept of non-inherent existence, or the fact that no thing is inherently existent.

Some concepts are of course totally false, notably those held by those who are not enlightened.

Quote:

---

Each tool is useful only for a specific ailment. To entertain the idea that these concepts hold good for all conditions is a mistake.

---

The enlightened person has only the one tool, which automatically works for every task.

Quote:

---

No dharma can be anything but finite, concepts are dharmas which cannot represent reality and actually separate us from reality.

---

Your concepts might be dharmas, but you can't speak for everyone. The concepts of the enlightened are like the images which appear in a perfect mirror, reflecting always what is really there.

John
Registered User
Posts: 64
(1/27/04 2:06 am)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

ksolway

-----
Not all concepts have but a tenuous connection to reality. Why would you think so?

Better, you show me a concept that is not this way.

-----
My concept of anything at all (eg, "grass", "sky", etc) has a very close connection to reality, as I don't project anything onto reality that isn't there.

Your concept of the grass is not the grass, it is far removed from the grass.

-----
Each tool is useful only for a specific ailment. To entertain the idea that these concepts hold good for all conditions is a mistake.

-----
The enlightened person has only the one tool, which automatically works for every task.

The enlightened use any tool that is appropriate for each circumstance and then drop it as soon as it's not required.

-----
No dharma can be anything but finite, concepts are dharmas which cannot represent reality and actually separate us from reality.

-----
Your concepts might be dharmas, but you can't speak for everyone. The concepts of the enlightened are like the images which appear in a perfect mirror, reflecting always what is really there.

I speak for all concepts.

John

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2112
(1/27/04 8:16 am)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

John wrote:

Quote:

---

Your concept of the grass is not the grass, it is far removed from the grass.

---

Indeed, it is in his head.

However, your concept of Kevin's concept of grass is far removed from Kevin's concept of grass.

In fact, all of your concepts of Kevin's views are far removed from the reality of his views.

Worse still, your concepts about the nature of concepts themselves are far removed from the reality of concepts. Anything you say about them is bound to be completely wrong - and usually is.

Moreover, none of your concepts of Zen have any connection to Zen at all. You are just a poor sod whose every single thought is completely divorced from reality and utterly without meaning. There is no point in listening to you at all .....

Can there be a bigger idiot than the modern Zen follower, I wonder . . . . ?

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1332
(1/27/04 9:10 am)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Quote:

---

What's all this nonsense? Why aren't you answering my question?

---

It seems to me neither side is answering the questions. I know I would appreciate some basics here. I did say, Nateryl, that I could use some help. Question for you is, what do you mean it has been observed that the arising particles cannot have a cause?

And for the home team: What is this notion of understanding causality in a spiritual way? What kind of division is this, and why not explain it instead of stating it smugly and walking off?

This is not a good sign for the wisdom of QRS when a woman is in agreement with them. It's like choosing teams in grade school, and they got the fat nerd on their team. I do express my regrets about this unintended abuse. How can you talk science with a woman who has a hard time keeping straight the difference between indeterminism and uncertainty, while remembering the baby strangling comment, and the further comments of Faizi and Thomas regarding it?

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2115
(1/27/04 9:39 am)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

What is this infamous baby-strangling remark that everyone keeps referring to? I must have been away at the time.

Quote:

---

What is this notion of understanding causality in a spiritual way? What kind of division is this, and why not explain it instead of stating it smugly and walking off?

---

I went into this in great detail in my book. One only begins to spiritually understand causality when one sees that nothing inherently exists, including one's own self.

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 472
(1/27/04 9:45 am)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

The 'ultimate men' want to be the 'ultimate man' for as much as they want to call themselves themselves! An end would be all! And what end isn't?! But they will not know a beginning also! It is illogical and is conceived in dreams only. But a vision, An infamous 'first cause', A self from ones end, and not behind, through a dreaming that makes a miss of sleep all up! The ultimate men do not want anything of the superhuman! And not from modesty! Love is quite apart from them ultimately! It is funny and sad, They are of the present entirely for what my thought is to the future!

Explain to me why we should bother even attempting to interpret this muck. It isn't worth our time. Poetry leads to different interpretations. Understanding of deep philosophical issues requires clarity.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2133
(1/27/04 10:52 am)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Quote:

---

Explain to me why we should bother even attempting to interpret this muck. It isn't worth our time. Poetry leads to different interpretations. Understanding of deep philosophical issues requires clarity.

---

Poetry leads to different interpretations, but so does the deepest philosophy. There is no ultimate clarity of expression.

I may as well speak clearly. Philosophical issues are beneath me. It doesn't matter if you have time for me or not.

Edited by: suergaz at: 1/27/04 10:53 am

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2137
(1/27/04 11:30 am)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

David:--

Quote:

---

One only begins to spiritually understand causality when one sees that nothing inherently exists, including one's own self.

---

You and a few others do not seem to know the meaning of the word 'inherent'. A thing of course exists in itself, ie. inherently, but not of itself, ie. by itself alone.

|                                                                                                                                                                             |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Mystery Man 13013Registered UserPosts: 1(1/27/04 11:54 am)Reply                                                                                  | Religions, Salvation, Belief, etc, etc... <hr/> Fearing Mystery, they fear Life. All of the ten thousand religions are based on this. This cult of causality is no different. In flight from the reality of our ignorance, they fail to realize that the only thing worse than knowing that you don't know is believing that you do.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2138(1/27/04 12:04 pm)Reply                                                                                         | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> Yes, but how did you come to number the religions as 10,000?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| Thomas KnierimRegistered UserPosts: 781(1/27/04 12:15 pm)Reply  | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> Anna: And for the home team: What is this notion of understanding causality in a spiritual way? That is a good question to ask. Since I feel that this thread has deteriorated quite a bit, perhaps we could start a new thread called "Spiritual Causality" or something like that. Anna: How can you talk science with a woman who has a hard time keeping straight the difference between indeterminism and uncertainty... It is simple. Uncertainty is the consequence of non-determinism. One question one might ask in the context suggested above: Is uncertainty counter-spiritual? P.S.: I finally got my Amazon delivery including J. Wells, 'Icons of Evolution'. Looking forward to reading it next month. Thomas |

|                                                                                                                                                                    |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 475(1/27/04 12:16 pm)Reply  | Re: Religions, Salvation, Belief, etc, etc... <hr/> You and a few others do not seem to know the meaning of the word 'inherent'. A thing of course exists in itself, ie. inherently, but not of itself, ie. by itself alone. I must say I am inclined to agree with this. |
| Mystery Man 13013Registered UserPosts: 2(1/27/04 12:17 pm)Reply                                                                         | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> Ten thousand is a metaphorical number. The one gives rise to the two, the two to the three, and the three to the ten thousand things, etc.                                                                                     |

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                               | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 476(1/27/04 12:22 pm)Reply  | Re: Religions, Salvation, Belief, etc, etc... <hr/> I'm wondering if the number of religions is zero (as all are false) or 6 billion (as everyone has a religion of some kind) re·li·gion ( P ) Pronunciation Key (r-ljn)n. <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>-Belief in and reverence for a supernatural power or powers regarded as creator and governor of the universe.</li><li>-A personal or institutionalized system grounded in such belief and worship.</li><li>-The life or condition of a person in a religious order.</li><li>-A set of beliefs, values, and practices based on the teachings of a spiritual leader.</li><li>-A cause, principle, or activity pursued with zeal or conscientious devotion.</li></ul> I'm just playing around. Damn the English language for being so imprecise. |

Naturyl
Registered User
Posts: 115
(1/27/04 12:26 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Bird,

Start here:

www.uhh.hawaii.edu/~ronald/Quanta.htm

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2118
(1/27/04 12:32 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Mystery Man wrote:

Quote:

---

Fearing Mystery, they fear Life. All of the ten thousand religions are based on this. This cult of causality is no different. In flight from the reality of our ignorance, they fail to realize that the only thing worse than knowing that you don't know is believing that you do.

---

Often the smugest people I know are the ones who believe that we can't know anything.

I assure you, a proper understanding of causality leads one into a realm of uncertainty which is far more pronounced, existential and frightening than the one that is blandly proclaimed by the members of the cult of uncertainty.

--

The chimp wrote:

Quote:

---

You and a few others do not seem to know the meaning of the word 'inherent'. A thing of course exists in itself, ie. inherently, but not of itself, ie. by itself alone.

---

Without a proper understanding, it's all semantics.

|                                                                                                                                                                                               |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 2125(1/27/04 1:19 pm)Reply                           | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> Naturyl, Regarding your link to the "Notes on Quantum Indeterminacy" article, I don't understand this paragraph: "From these two basic ideas alone -- indefiniteness and the superposition principle -- it should be clear already that quantum mechanics conflicts sharply with common sense. If the quantum state of a system is a complete description of the system, then a quantity that has an indefinite value in that quantum state is objectively indefinite; its value is not merely unknown by the scientist who seeks to describe the system. Furthermore, since the outcome of a measurement of an objectively indefinite quantity is not determined by the quantum state, and yet the quantum state is the complete bearer of information about the system, the outcome is strictly a matter of objective chance -- not just a matter of chance in the sense of unpredictability by the scientist. How have physicists established that the quantum state is a complete description of the system? |
| Naturyl <input type="checkbox"/>Registered UserPosts: 124(1/27/04 1:46 pm)Reply  | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> There is nothing else from which information can be extracted, as the quantum state is really a measurement of available information. All information that can be known is represented by the quantum state.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 2128(1/27/04 1:58 pm)Reply                         | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> How have they established that the "available information" measured by the quantum state does in fact constitute all the relevant information pertaining to the event in question? I don't see how they can possibly know this.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2140
(1/27/04 2:06 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

David wrote (in reply to my showing his imperfect understanding of a simple word) :--

Quote:

---

" Without a proper understanding, it's all semantics."

---

Thankyou.

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 302
(1/27/04 3:58 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Thomas wrote:

Quote:

---

Accessory circumstances seem to be the pillars of David's argument. Why don't they count as causes? - The answer is simple. - Because we don't allow them to be causes - it is simply a rule of language.

---

I gave the example of how we could classify a child's parents as "accessory circumstances" to their birth. Yet you would seem to discount the parents as contributing causes of the child just because they are accessory circumstances - when they are obviously contributing causes.

There is no good reason to divide necessary conditions into "causes" and "accessory circumstances". And there is even less reason to divide "accessory circumstances" into "causal accessory circumstances" and "non-causal accessory circumstances". All that creates a lot of unnecessary confusion and meaningless terms.

Quote:

---

If we would allow accessory circumstances to become full-fledged causes, the concept of causation would collapse; it would become meaningless.

---

I can assure you that in simply accepting the fact that "accessory circumstances" are fully-fledged causes, causation does not collapse. Why would it? See my example below.

Quote:

---

While it is technically possible to establish causal chains between any given event in the history of the universe, thus making all historical events and phenomena causes. Yet, by doing so you have effectively invalidated the notion of a cause, since a cause become indistinguishable from circumstantial conditions.

---

A cause is simply something that is necessary for the existence of something else. At no time can the notion of such a cause become invalid.

To take a real life example, let's say I'm trying to grow vegetables in my garden, and the plants are dying. I want to know the cause of them dying so I can take preventative measures. Now, I could say "the plants are being caused to die either because of something in themselves, or because of their environment". While this would be perfectly true, it wouldn't go all the way toward my finding a practical solution.

Now let's say I notice that the plants are covered by caterpillars, which are consuming the plants. The caterpillars are part of the "environment" of the plants, which is killing the plant. I too, as part of that same environment, am contributing to the death of the plants by not removing the caterpillars. So I decide to remove the caterpillars. Bingo! It happens that my plants recover.

Now, anything else in the environment might have been responsible for the death of the plants, or something in the plants themselves, yet through a lucky guess I probably managed to solve the problem.

Accessory circumstances (other causes) of the plants dying might include the existence of life on earth, air, water, space, etc. Yet these didn't get in my way, or result in any catastrophic collapse of causation.

Quote:

---

Kevin: And how do you prove that it is not possible for a particular phenomena to have a cause? You cannot do it.

Given the scientific method it is unnecessary to provide proof. Consistency with observation is sufficient. The statement 'there are no observable causes to this and that QM phenomenon' is a scientifically falsifiable statement. In other words: prove it wrong!

---

That's like saying "there is no observable intelligent life in the entire Universe besides ourselves, therefore we are the only intelligent life in the entire Universe."

Clearly, that is ridiculous. And that's not the way proper science is done.

A sensible scientist says, "We may be the only intelligent life in the entire Universe, since we haven't observed any other intelligent life."

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1343
(1/27/04 4:08 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Quote:

---

One only begins to spiritually understand causality when one sees that nothing inherently exists, including one's own self.

---

Oh, OK.

Naturyl
Registered User
Posts: 136
(1/27/04 4:24 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

There he goes again, trying to annihilate everything. The appetite for oblivion is astounding. Is it really that hard to bear life's suffering? I've had my fair share, and will take another share if I must, but I will not yearn for extinction. I will leave that to the religionists.

|                                                                                                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DavidQuinn000 Forum Host Posts: 2134 (1/27/04 4:51 pm) Reply  | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> It's the complete opposite to annihilation, in fact. It's like shaking off a cocoon of cobwebs and finally having the freedom to run around and enjoy one's true nature.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| Naturyl <input type="checkbox"/> Registered User Posts: 138 (1/27/04 5:12 pm) Reply                                                           | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> So you keep insisting. If that is so, your actions will bear it out. I trust that the readers are able to decide for themselves whether or not they do. I no longer have any great interest in conversing with you, so what remarks I do address to you from here on out will likely be brief.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| Owen1234 Registered User Posts: 23 (1/28/04 6:01 am) Reply                                                                                    | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> David: 1/27/9:09 I went into this in great detail in my book. One only begins to spiritually understand causality when one sees that nothing inherently exists, including one's own self. More nonsense! "It is written in 'the' book" does not work anywhere, outside of fundy religions. Is this your only method of reasoning? Why do you think that anyone else is interested in your book? That 'Nothing exists' is logically absurd. Nothing exists, means, it is not the case that (something exists). Something exists is an axiom of classical logic. Nothing exists, is contradictory. That 'I do not exist' is logically absurd, because, the very process of you, proving non-existence confirms your existence. That you are doing anything proves your existence. I do not exist, is true ..cannot be said by anyone! |

By what method do you show that 'I do not exist' is true?

Referring to your 'Good book' is not an answer at all.

Your unsupported remarks stand right up there with religious dogmas, they too refer to their Good book.

Please demonstrate how it is that causality "is universally true by logical necessity".

And that 'Nothing exists'.

Again, I bet you won't even try.

Owen

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2142

(1/28/04 8:07 am)

Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Owen wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: I went into this in great detail in my book. One only begins to spiritually understand causality when one sees that nothing inherently exists, including one's own self.

Owen: More nonsense!

"It is written in 'the' book" does not work anywhere, outside of fundy religions.

Is this your only method of reasoning?

---

It saves me the trouble of duplicating what I have already written elsewhere.

Quote:

---

Why do you think that anyone else is interested in your book?

---

Because it contains my answers to the questions you are posing to me.

Quote:

---

That 'Nothing exists' is logically absurd.
Nothing exists, means, it is not the case that (something exists).
Something exists is an axiom of classical logic.
Nothing exists, is contradictory.

---

Things do exist (in the sense that they appear to our minds and senses), but their existence is an illusion (in the sense that they are causally created and have no independent existence).

Quote:

---

That 'I do not exist' is logically absurd, because, the very process of you, proving non-existence confirms your existence.
That you are doing anything proves your existence.
I do not exist, is true ..cannot be said by anyone!
By what method do you show that 'I do not exist' is true?

---

See above.

Quote:

---

Please demonstrate how it is that causality "is universally true by logical necessity".

---

Here is a section from the book that I specifically wrote about these issues:

--

The Logical Proof of Cause and Effect

There are two ways of proving that things cannot arise without cause. The first involves recognizing that a thing cannot exist without its constituent parts, while the second involves recognizing that a thing cannot exist in the absence of an external reality. Although these two proofs may seem isolated on the surface, in reality they are both expressions of the one core proof - namely, that a thing cannot arise in the absence of other things.

It is easy to see that an object cannot exist without its constituent parts. A car, for example, cannot exist without the engine, wheels, doors and windows which comprise it. Eliminate these things and the car automatically disappears. Moreover, the existence of the car is dependent not only on these parts existing, but on their being fitted together in the correct manner. Or to state this in more general terms, a car only comes into existence when the causal circumstances are ripe.

The same reasoning can be applied to anything else in existence. If a thing exists, it will necessarily be comprised of parts. It is an inherent fact of existence. Even if a thing does not seem to have easily recognizable physical parts, such as a smooth sphere or a portion of empty space, it can nevertheless be divided up conceptually into parts. We can mentally carve a smooth sphere into two imaginary halves and conclude that the sphere cannot exist without the existence of these two halves.

It should be pointed out that the parts which constitute an object are not the object itself. The engine inside a car is not the car, nor are its wheels, doors and windows. Although they are part of the car, they are nevertheless objects which are distinct from it. Thus, the truth that a thing cannot exist without its parts is really an expression of the more general truth that a thing is necessarily dependent upon other things for its existence.

Objects are not only dependent on internal factors, but they rely on external ones as well, which now leads us to the second proof. Without the presence of an external reality, it is equally impossible for an object to exist. By way of analogy, consider the image of a black bird painted on a white canvas. It is only because of the contrast between the black and white colours that the painted bird is able to exist at all. If the canvas was exactly the same shade of black as the bird, the bird would simply merge into the rest of the canvas and disappear without trace.

It might be pedantically argued that a painted bird of the same colour as the rest of the canvass could still be distinguishable by virtue of, say, the different thickness of the paint used on the bird, or by the use of a different brush technique, or whatever. While this is certainly true it would only support my essential point, which is that things can only exist via contrasts. It does not matter what kind of objects or contrasts we care to focus upon, the basic truth is unchanged: without the presence of contrasts nothing can exist at all.

Imagine a tree existing on a plain. Now mentally take away everything that is not the tree - the plain, the distant mountains, the sky, the grass, and so on. Keep on doing this until there is nothing left except the tree existing in a void. Now take away the void. Do you think the tree can still continue to exist in such a situation? Logically, it cannot. Its very being as a tree, its features, its structure and shape, is as much dependent upon the existence of the void, or whatever happens to be surrounding the tree, as it upon its own constituent parts.

Existence is always dualistic in nature. Just as "up" can only exist in relation to "down", and "big" in relation to "small", so too an existing object can only exist in relation to what is not that object. In more formal language, "A" (which stands for any object or event in the Universe) is always dependent upon "not-A", and vice versa.

To sum up, then, a thing cannot exist in the absence of other things existing both inside and outside of it. When these internal and external things are causally arranged in the appropriate manner, the thing in question comes into existence. But what exactly does come into existence in that moment? In the final analysis, nothing. Not a single sliver of anything extra. If anything does seem to arise in that moment, it is purely a conceptual projection on our parts.

To use the above example again, a car only comes into being when its parts are assembled correctly. Before then, there is no car at all. Only when the final component is put into place does the car suddenly emerge. Nothing substantial is added in the process, only a rearrangement of what is already there. What we call the car, then, is simply a conceptual creation that we project onto a particular arrangement of components. It is an abstraction that ultimately has no physical referent.

We are essentially no different, of course. Our existence as an independent and substantial entity is also an illusion. We are nothing more than a conceptual construct which is projected onto a conglomeration of parts. We are like the fist that vanishes as soon as the hand is opened.

--

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 487
(1/28/04 9:37 am)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Kevin: A cause is simply something that is necessary for the existence of something else.

To be pedantic I don't like the word 'necessary'. It leads one to only consider the more direct causes.

I just see causes as having different degrees of directness that create the existence of something else.

It is slightly different to what you've said in that it is possible to swap direct causes around to produce essentially the same result, however as all causes only exist as a result of previous causes all causes are interconnected, all existence is interconnected and no separate existence of an effect is possible of its own. In essence effects are existence.

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 304
(1/28/04 11:48 am)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Jimhaz wrote:

Quote:

---

Kevin: A cause is simply something that is necessary for the existence of something else.

Jimhaz: To be pedantic I don't like the word 'necessary'. It leads one to only consider the more direct causes.

---

The thing is, we don't know what is a "direct" cause of any particular effect, and what isn't. What appears to be a direct cause might have very little relation to the effect in question, while something that appears remote and insignificant might in fact be an immediate and direct cause.

That's one of the big problems with modern quantum physics: they think they've got it all worked out in this regard.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1349
(1/28/04 3:55 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Quote:

---

Start here:

www.uhh.hawaii.edu/~ronald/Quanta.htm

---

OK, next?

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 308
(1/28/04 4:27 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

The entire argument on the web page you pointed to rests on the following sentence:

Quote:

---

The evidence is that there are no quantum causes.

---

This statement is false.

There simply cannot be evidence for the lack of quantum causes.

It is like saying "There are no Unicorns anywhere in the Universe, because the evidence is that there are no Unicorns anywhere in the Universe."

The second major stumbling block is the following:

Quote:

---

If the quantum state of a system is a complete description of the system . . .

---

Hah! "If" indeed!

It's like saying "If our non-observation of Unicorns is an accurate description of the entire Universe . . ."

There's nothing wrong with the general idea of Indeterminacy as such, as there are many things that are impossible to determine. But indeterminacy doesn't affect determinism, as these two are dealing with completely different things.

Edited by: ksolway at: 1/28/04 4:47 pm

Thomas Knierim

Registered User

Posts: 792

(1/28/04 6:23 pm)

Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Kevin: It is like saying "There are no Unicorns anywhere in the Universe, because the evidence is that there are no Unicorns anywhere in the Universe."

Well, obviously circular. Let's try "There are no unicorns in the universe, because we do not observe them." Sounds better, except for one thing: If we hypothesize unicorns on a planet in the Alpha Centauri system, they would be too small for us to see. Ergo, we cannot say anything about unicorns in other regions of space. It simply remains unknown. The situation is different with particles, though. If we accept the premise that particles are the same everywhere in the universe -which is a sensible premise for a number of reasons- then we can phrase principles of particle nature as universal statements, otherwise known as "laws of nature" (LON). This practically means we can conclude that if we do not observe causes for certain quantum effects here on Earth, these causes are also not observed anywhere else in the universe. Before a statement becomes a LON, however, it must pass a great number of tests and it must be well corroborated. Newton's mechanics have achieved that status, as well as Einstein's Special Relativity. Some fields of QM have achieved the status, QED for example, and -since unification theories go into that direction- it pretty much looks as if the non-deterministic features of QM is becoming a LON, too.

Thomas

ksolway

Registered User

Posts: 310

(1/28/04 6:49 pm)

Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Thomas wrote:

Quote:

---

Let's try, "There are no unicorns in the universe, because we do not observe them."

---

I was highlighting the irrationality of the statement, and you haven't improved it in that regard. It is still completely irrational.

Quote:

---

The situation is different with particles, though . . . If we do not observe causes for certain quantum effects here on Earth, these causes are also not observed anywhere else in the universe.

---

It doesn't matter at all that we don't observe causes, as that doesn't say anything about whether the specific causes exist or not. That's what I was illustrating with the unicorn example.

Let us say, hypothetically, that quantum effects are consistent everywhere in the Universe. This doesn't help us whatsoever in determining whether there is another scale of things, lower than that of the quantum realm, which is influencing quantum events, or even whether the quantum events we perceive are influenced by the goings-on in some other "dimension" of which we are not yet aware, or whether quantum events are specifically determined by anything else.

To refine my example, it's like saying "If we travel all over the Universe, looking only in water for unicorns, and don't find any, then there are no unicorns in the Universe."

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                               | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| ksolwayRegistered UserPosts: 310(1/28/04 6:56 pm)Reply  | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> Thomas wrote: Quote: <hr/> It pretty much looks as if the non-deterministic features of QM is becoming a Law of Nature, too. <hr/> I should also point out that it is unscientific to posit the idea that any event is without cause, because it is unnecessary information, without positive evidence, and doesn't add anything useful to knowledge. The idea of indeterminacy (that we can't determine things) works perfectly well without going the extra step of saying that something happens without cause. There is a saying in science: "Extraordinary claims require extraordinary proof." So far, science has provided no proof whatsoever that anything happens without cause. Edited by: ksolway at: 1/28/04 7:17 pm |

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2150

(1/28/04 8:07 pm)

Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Thomas wrote:

Quote:

---

It pretty much looks as if the non-deterministic features of QM is becoming a Law of Nature, too.

---

Thomas likes to pretend that he understands quantum mechanics and its implications. Yet according to Richard Feynman, regarded as one of the great geniuses of the 20th century, "no one really understands it".

Here is an interesting interview with John Bell, one of the leading quantum physicists of the past few decades:

vms.cc.wmich.edu/~mcgrew/bell.htm

This part of the interview in particular is interesting:

Q: Of course one person who was somewhat disbelieving was Einstein, and he made the famous remark that God does not play dice with the universe. Would you say that after this experiment, and after your work, you're convinced that God does indeed play dice with the universe?

A: No, no, by no means. But I would also like to qualify a little bit this 'God does not play dice' business. This is something which is often quoted, and which Einstein did say rather early in his career, but afterwards he was more concerned with other aspects of quantum mechanics than with the question of indeterminism. And indeed, Aspect's particular experiment tests rather those other aspects, specifically the question of no action at a distance.

Q: You don't think it tells us anything about the determinism or indeterminism or the physical world?

A: To say it tells you nothing, that would be going too far. I think that it is very difficult to say that any one experiment tells you about any isolated concept. I think that it's a whole world view which is tested by an experiment, and if the experiment does not verify that world view, it is not so easy to identify just which part is suspect and has to be revised. Certainly the experiment says that Einstein's world view is not tenable.

Q: Yes, I was going to ask whether it is still possible to maintain, in the light of experimental experience, the idea of a deterministic universe?

A: You know, one of the ways of understanding this business is to say that the world is super-deterministic. That not only is inanimate nature deterministic, but we, the experimenters who imagine we can choose to do one experiment rather than another, are also determined. If so, the difficulty which this experimental result creates disappears.

Q: Free will is an illusion -- that gets us out of the crisis, does it?

A: That's correct. In the analysis it is assumed that free will is genuine, and as a result of that one finds that the intervention of the experimenter at one point has to have consequences at a remote point, in a way that influences restricted by the finite velocity of light would not permit. If the experimenter is not free to make this intervention, if that also is determined in advance, the difficulty disappears.

--

About John Bell:

John Stewart Bell (1928–1990) was one of the leading physicists of the 20th century, a deep and serious thinker. He worked at CERN in Geneva on the physics of particle accelerators, made a number of impressive contributions to quantum field theory and became famous for the discovery of a phenomenon he called nonlocality. However, the most remarkable thing about him was perhaps that he was a realist.

Realism is the philosophical view that the world out there actually exists, as opposed to the view that it is a mere hallucination. We are all born realists, but some of us change our minds as adults. Now it may seem to you that for physics to make any sense, a physicist would have to be, or at least pretend to be, a realist; after all, it would seem that physics is about finding out how the world out there works.

But as a matter of fact, in the 1920s Niels Bohr, the leading quantum physicist of his time, began to advocate the idea that realism is childish and unscientific; he proposed instead what is now called the "Copenhagen interpretation" of quantum physics, a rather incoherent philosophical doctrine, which (according to Richard Feynman) "nobody really understands." Part of this doctrine is the view that macroscopic objects, such as chairs and planets, do exist out there, but electrons and the other microscopic particles do not. Correspondingly, Copenhagen quantum theory refuses to provide any consistent story about what happens to microscopic objects, and instead prefers to make contradictory statements about them. According to the Copenhagen view, the world is divided into two realms, macro and micro, "classical" and "quantum," logical and contradictory—or, as Bell put it in one of his essays, "speakable" and "unspeakable."

Although it is not clear where the border between the two realms should be, and how this duality could possibly be compatible with the fact that chairs consist of electrons and other particles, Bohr's view became the orthodoxy. That is, it became not merely the majority view among physicists, but rather the dogma. Ever since, being a realist has been rather dangerous for a quantum physicist, because it has been widely regarded as a sign of being too stupid to understand orthodox quantum theory—which, as we've mentioned, nobody really understands.

Along with Albert Einstein, Erwin Schrödinger, Louis de Broglie and David Bohm, Bell was one of the few people who felt compelled by his conscience to reject Bohr's philosophy. Bell emphasized that the empirical facts of quantum physics do not at all force us to renounce realism: There is a realist theory that accounts for all of these facts in a most elegant way—Bohmian mechanics (also known as de Broglie–Bohm theory). It describes a world in which electrons, quarks and the like are point particles that move in a manner dictated by the wavefunction. It should be taught to students, Bell insisted, as a legitimate alternative to the orthodoxy. And in 1986, GianCarlo Ghirardi, Alberto Rimini and Tullio Weber succeeded in developing a second kind of realist theory, encouraged by Bell and known as spontaneous localization. But overcoming prejudice and changing convictions takes more than one generation.

http://www.americanscientist.org/template/BookReviewTypeDetail/assetid/25825;jsessionid=baewqCTRI\_kwF

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 792
(1/28/04 9:56 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Kevin: It doesn't matter at all that we don't observe causes, as that doesn't say anything about whether the specific causes exist or not. That's what I was illustrating with the unicorn example.

Your unicorn example has nothing to do with QM, neither does it have any relevance to the arguments brought forward here. It is just fat nonsense.

I should also point out that it is unscientific to posit the idea that any event is without cause.

There is nothing unscientific about non-determinism. Okay, so you don't like the notion, but your preferences do not decide what's scientific and what's not.

Kevin: There is a saying in science: "Extraordinary claims require extraordinary proof." So far, science has provided no proof whatsoever that anything happens without cause.

Another bunch of fat nonsense. The probability cloud model is non-deterministic and it is the most widely accepted atom model in use today. It enjoys this status because of its descriptive and predictive power; perhaps also because of its visualizability. The model gets by quite well without classical (causal) explanations. It just doesn't care about causes. If Feynman describes the average person's reaction to such notions with the hysterical exclamation: "Oh, but it cannot be like that," he probably caricatures the odd 19th (or early 20th) century mindset. We are now in the 21st century, gentlemen. Please update your physics knowledge get used to it.

David: Thomas likes to pretend that he understands quantum mechanics and its implications.

My understanding of QM is very rudimental. However, I am able to spot nonsense, and when it is handed out in bucketfuls, I simply feel compelled to protest. I think you should revise the QM references in your book. Making statements on QM requires a minimum technical understanding.

David: Here is an interesting interview with John Bell, one of the leading quantum physicists of the past few decades:

There are indeed determinist interpretations of QM, and I think I have never concealed that. The problem with the determinist interpretations is that you are required to assume some pretty odd things, such as hidden variables, or multiple universes, which is basically a consequence of John Bell's theorem. So, the alternatives are even uglier IMO. I asked the question repeatedly, but I never got an answer from you: if you argue in favor of determinism, then which of the current models do you find sound?

Thomas

ksolway

Registered User

Posts: 311

(1/28/04 11:02 pm)

Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Thomas wrote:

Quote:

---

Kevin: It doesn't matter at all that we don't observe causes, as that doesn't say anything about whether the specific causes exist or not. That's what I was illustrating with the unicorn example.

T: Your unicorn example has nothing to do with QM, neither does it have any relevance to the arguments brought forward here. It is just fat nonsense.

---

It perfectly reveals the failure in your logic.

Quote:

---

K: I should also point out that it is unscientific to posit the idea that any event is without cause.

T: There is nothing unscientific about non-determinism. Okay, so you don't like the notion, but your preferences do not decide what's scientific and what's not.

---

Non-determinism does not say "there are things that are absolutely without cause". That silly statement, as I've mentioned, is irrelevant to the science of non-determinism.

Quote:

---

Kevin: There is a saying in science: "Extraordinary claims require extraordinary proof." So far, science has provided no proof whatsoever that anything happens without cause.

T: The probability cloud model . . . gets by quite well without classical (causal) explanations. It just doesn't care about causes.

---

Exactly what I said. So why are you so adamant about things being without any cause, when this claim is not relevant to the actual science, and no scientist worth his salt would make such a claim?

Quote:

---

Which of the current models do you find sound?

---

I don't think any of them are sound. All the models are very poor indeed. We are still learning, and have much to learn as far as the actual science goes.

However, philosophy can plough on ahead, as it is not dependent on science.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1350
(1/29/04 1:40 am)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

The small article that Natueryl suggested really didn't say anything. I've already read a bit about these experiments, but the conclusions always come a bit too fast. When I read Wu Li a couple months ago, the author said light can't be a particle and a wave. I thought, you idiot, obviously it is. Now, 25 years later, Brian Greene says it is a particle and a wave, but that this should be hard to accept. I wrote him and said it is not strange at all, as waves are a behavior, not a thing. I admit that I have not figured out the double slit experiment with photons. But I would like to know this - have they tried waiting successively longer and longer times before releasing the photons with both slits open? Brian mentions 10 seconds.

But Brian does not really make an in-depth analysis of quantum particle experiments. Nature says this is one of his hobbies, so I ask again - do you know any good links where I can get better explanations?

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1436
(1/29/04 4:25 am)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Quote:

---

Kevin: There is a saying in science: "Extraordinary claims require extraordinary proof." So far, science has provided no proof whatsoever that anything happens without cause.

Thomas: Another bunch of fat nonsense. The probability cloud model is non-deterministic and it is the most widely accepted atom model in use today. It enjoys this status because of its descriptive and predictive power; perhaps also because of its visualizability.

---

Kevin is not speaking about descriptive modeling methods or visualization techniques used by people (observers), but rather the atoms themselves.

Heisenberg's principle suggests we may never know some percentage of the causal chains leading up to a particle's existence. Our inability to observe these processes does not, IMO, warrant enough evidence to reverse the idea of natural causation seen in classical physics.

Tharan

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 902
(1/29/04 9:09 am)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

That's not the way it works Wolf. It doesn't just suggest that we may never know, definitely. Rather it hypothesises, tests, proves and asserts the fact that there is nothing there to know, definitely. It's not a case of not being able to observe, it's a case of observing the not being.

As Heisenberg said himself, 'It should have been called the certainty principle', i.e. the certainty of the uncertainty.

Edited by: Dave Toast at: 1/29/04 9:11 am

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 312
(1/29/04 9:22 am)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Dave Toast wrote:

Quote:

---

. . . the certainty of the uncertainty.

---

Even if you are certain of uncertainty, it doesn't say anything about whether things are caused or not.

If I throw a dice, I am certain that I can never be certain what number will result - no matter how good my models are. But this doesn't mean that the result of a dice throw is uncaused.

You can't observe the "not being" of something, logically. All you can observe is the non-appearance of something.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1354
(1/29/04 9:28 am)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Quote:

---

Rather it hypothesises, tests, proves and asserts the fact that there is nothing there to know, definitely.

---

So how did you learn about this?

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2150
(1/29/04 9:46 am)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Thomas wrote:

Quote:

---

David: Thomas likes to pretend that he understands quantum mechanics and its implications.

Thomas: My understanding of QM is very rudimental. However, I am able to spot nonsense, and when it is handed out in bucketfuls, I simply feel compelled to protest.

---

This is the fellow who, behind his mask of scholared maturity, believes in literal reincarnation, thinks that Buddhas disappear into thin air the moment they realize nirvana, and regards the I Ching as an authoritative text. Your credentials are impeccable!

Quote:

---

I think you should revise the QM references in your book. Making statements on QM requires a minimum technical understanding.

---

There are no statements in the book which comment upon the science of QM. Obviously, for that I would need some technical expertise and, more importantly, an interest in it. But my analysis confines itself to some of the philosophical rubbish which is currently surrounding QM. As this thread has shown, there is no real link between this rubbish and the actual science of QM.

Quote:

---

David: Here is an interesting interview with John Bell, one of the leading quantum physicists of the past few decades:

There are indeed determinist interpretations of QM, and I think I have never concealed that. The problem with the determinist interpretations is that you are required to assume some pretty odd things, such as hidden variables, or multiple universes, which is basically a consequence of John Bell's theorem. So, the alternatives are even uglier IMO.

---

You actually believe that pure non-causality (which is logically impossible) is more plausible than the existence of hidden variables? You've got to be kidding, Thomas. The latter may be clumsy and inelegant, sure, but they are not logically impossible.

What about the hidden variables in Big Bang cosmology, such as the assumption of dark matter? Do you reject Big Bang cosmology because of it?

("Of course not. It is too popular for me to do that. Instead, I just block out my views about quantum physics whenever I think about cosmology, and vice versa - and the same applies to my views in Buddhism and spirituality. My mind is a labyrinth of tightly concealed compartments with no interaction between any of them. That way I don't have to deal with the multitudes of conflicts and contradictions in my mind. You should try it; everybody does it. It is the popular way.")

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 902
(1/29/04 9:54 am)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Quote:

---

Kev: Even if you are certain of uncertainty, it doesn't say anything about whether things are caused or not.

If I throw a dice, I am certain that I can never be certain what number will result - no matter how good my models are. But this doesn't mean that the result of a dice throw is uncaused.

---

I didn't say, or imply, anything to the contrary.

You may not have said that I did say anything to the contrary, but you implied it.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 903
(1/29/04 10:06 am)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Quote:

---

Bird: So how did you learn about this?

---

Well I've not done any quantum entanglement experiments, personally.

Just in the normal way I suppose; find out about it for the first time and doubt it, explore further and become enthralled, see the same thing explained in all sorts of different ways by other sources, understand how it integrates with other quantum theory, accept that it is part of the cannon of current scientific understanding and slot it into the contextually appropriate belief system, call a spade a spade.

Wikipedia is as good a place as any.

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 312
(1/29/04 12:25 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Dave Toast wrote:

Quote:

---

I didn't say, or imply, anything to the contrary.

You may not have said that I did say anything to the contrary, but you implied it.

---

You did say "It proves the fact that there is nothing there to know, definitely."

But there may well be something there which we can know, and which we do not currently know. However, this extra knowledge of what lies behind quantum events doesn't mean that we will all of a sudden be able to determine things that were previously indeterminable.

It is for the same reason that no matter how much we know about the rolling of a dice, the result of any particular dice throw is indeterminable (with certainty), and always will be.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 793
(1/29/04 12:56 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

This is the fellow who, behind his mask of scholarly maturity, believes in literal reincarnation, thinks that Buddhas disappear into thin air the moment they realize nirvana, and regards the I Ching as an authoritative text. Your credentials are impeccable!

As an ad hominem attempt this is pretty weak, David. It should be clear from my writings that I don't believe in the supernatural. You can discount the disappearing Buddha and the authoritative I Ching. It is a mystic-poetic text that illustrates an ancient belief system. The I Ching is IMO the root of Chinese culture, and since I live in a Chinese-influenced culture I have made an effort to understand it. (I must also add Confucius and Lao Tzu to the essential 'Chinese culture' reading list.) What concerns karma and rebirth, these are seen as supernatural theories by many, but I don't understand them that way. I think they are tentative theories with some supporting evidence. I am not referring to parapsychology, but to genetics.

For example, the body-mind duality achieves immortality via genetic and memetic transmission. But, current science just touches the surface of psychophysical existence and there remains a lot to be explained.

David: As this thread has shown, there is no real link between this rubbish and the actual science of QM.

So you have convinced yourself.

David: What about the hidden variables in Big Bang cosmology, such as the assumption of dark matter? Do you reject Big Bang cosmology because of it?

Unfortunately your question exposes the fact that you don't know what the term 'hidden variables' means in QM. It has a specific meaning that differs from the demotic use. Please update your cerebral QM database. I am going to leave it with that.

Thomas

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2150
(1/29/04 1:09 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

From Wikipedia:

Quote:

---

Interpretation of Quantum Mechanics:

Quantum mechanics is a physical theory which is extremely non-intuitive. The equations have been very successful in predicting experimental results, but there have been a wide range of interpretations of what those equations mean.

The need for a large range of interpretations of quantum mechanics becomes clearer once it is mathematically demonstrated that no quantum theory can have all of the properties one would like quantum mechanics to have.

One intuitively would like a theory of quantum mechanics

- that is complete and not requiring any outside theory

- that is local in that the events at one point are only effected by nearby areas

- that is deterministic which is that given one set of circumstances, there is only one possible outcome
- that has no hidden variables
- that predicts only one universe

However, Bell's theorem appears to prevent quantum mechanics from having all of these properties. Which property is removed results in different interpretations of quantum mechanics.

---

And which property is selected for removal is arbitrary. It makes no difference either way to the practical functioning of the equations of quantum mechanics.

Quote:

---

Note, many physicists have subscribed to the null interpretation of quantum mechanics summarized by Feynman's famous dictum: "Shut up and calculate!"

---

The only sensible position for a quantum physicist to take. If only their mindless groupies would follow suit and refrain from extrapolating nonsensical conclusions from a scientific theory that they do not understand - and indeed that, according to Richard Feynman and the majority of the quantum community, no one understands.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2151

(1/29/04 1:28 pm)

Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Thomas wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: David: What about the hidden variables in Big Bang cosmology, such as the assumption of dark matter? Do you reject Big Bang cosmology because of it?

Thomas; Unfortunately your question exposes the fact that you don't know what the term 'hidden variables' means in QM. It has a specific meaning that differs from the demotic use

---

I don't think so.

From Wikipedia:

. . . .In other words, quantum mechanics as it stands might be an incomplete description of reality. Some physicists maintain that underlying this level of indeterminacy there is an objective foundation. Such a theory is called a hidden variable theory.

This is essentially no different to cosmologists proposing the concept of "dark matter" as a hidden variable to account for what is observed in the Universe. Indeed, the proposing of hidden variables has been a standard practice in science since its inception. So how can you condone it in one branch of physics, and then, for no reason at all, openly speak against it in another?

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 797
(1/29/04 1:57 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

David, here is what hidden variables are about (see below). The conclusion is that the hidden variables hypothesis has essentially been dismissed. 'Dark matter', on the other hand, is a tentative denomination for an observed force that aids gravitation.

From Wolfram's Science World:

Einstein-Podolsky-Rosen Paradox

A paradox first enunciated by Einstein et al. (1935), who proposed a thought experiment that appeared to demonstrate quantum mechanics to be an incomplete theory. The usual view of quantum mechanics says that a wave function determines the probabilities of an actual experimental result and that it is the most complete possible specification of the quantum state. Einstein et al. believed the predictions of quantum mechanics to be correct, but only as the result of statistical distributions of other unknown but real properties of the particles.

Bohm (1951) presented a paper in which he described a modified form of the Einstein-Podolsky-Rosen thought experiment which he believed to be conceptually equivalent to that suggested by Einstein et al. (1935), but which was easier to treat mathematically. Bohm suggested using two atoms with a known total spin of zero, separated in a way that the spin of each atom points in a direction exactly opposite to that of the other. In this situation, the angular momentum of one particle can be measured indirectly by measuring the corresponding vector of the other particle. Bell (1964) subsequently formulated Bell's inequalities, which seemed to be a physically reasonable condition of locality which imposed restrictions on the maximum correlations of the measurements of a pair of spin  $1/2$  particles formed somehow in the singlet state and moving freely in opposite directions. This inequality can be tested in a laboratory experiment because the statistical predictions of quantum mechanics are incompatible with any local hidden variables theory apparently satisfying only the natural assumptions of "locality," as shown by the predictions of Bell's inequalities.

Hidden Variables

A term used with respect to the Einstein-Podolsky-Rosen Paradox, first described by Einstein and his co-authors Boris Podolsky and Nathan Rosen in 1935.

Quantum mechanics makes an unusual prediction that although two entangled particles may be light-years apart, they seem to have the uncanny ability to affect one another instantaneously. If the two particles have a total spin of zero, for instance, an observer measuring the first particle's spin will instantly cause a so-called "collapse of the wave function," yielding a precise measurement of the second particle's spin. This information about the second particle becomes available to the observer far faster than the speed of light should allow.

Einstein challenged this prediction, which seemed to violate his own strict limits on the speed of information travel. Undefined "hidden variables" must be at work, Einstein claimed, in order for information about the second particle to become available instantaneously to an observer light-years away. Einstein called the effect 'spooky action at a distance' and attributed it to hidden variables.

In 1964, British physicist John Bell later disproved the notion that hidden variables affect interactions between particles with his well-known Bell's inequalities.

( Source: scienceworld.wolfram.com )

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2153

(1/29/04 2:31 pm)

Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

That's only one interpretation. Another interpretation is that Bell's works challenged the central plank of special relativity - namely, that nothing can go faster than the speed of light.

Moreover, Bell's work has nothing say on the possible existence of hidden dimensions and the like, which could easily account for the observed phenomena in a causal framework. And John Bell himself dismissed the idea that his work undermined the possibility of hidden variables.

You need to face up to the truth that your views on quantum mechanics have been entirely formed by one possible interpretation of quantum mechanics - indeed, one of many different possible interpretations - and that it is still an extremely controversial interpretation among the physics community, and that people of the calibre of Schroedinger, Einstein, Bohm and Bell rejected the Copenhagen interpretation because of its philosophical incoherence.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 798
(1/29/04 4:20 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

David: ...it is still an extremely controversial interpretation among the physics community, and that people of the calibre of Schroedinger, Einstein, Bohm and Bell rejected the Copenhagen interpretation because of its philosophical incoherence.

You know, what surprises me is that you have on previous occasions dismissed the opinions of the same scientists you name here. You have denied that Einstein is a Genius and added the he lacked the fundamental insight as a philosopher. The other scientists named above you have previously called "academics" stumbling in the dark or something to that effect. I find it a bit surprising that you now draw on these people to support your argument.

Yes, the Copenhagen Interpretation (CI) is not the only one around. Tell me about it! I think I mentioned that from the beginning. Personally, I tend to agree with CI only in the following points, (a) that probabilistic models are irreducible to a realist theory, and (b) that measurement collapses the wave function making measurement results fundamentally non-deterministic. I don't agree with the view expressed by Heisenberg that "physics is only about what can be measured." I find it perfectly valid to formulate theories beyond measured entities, yet only under the condition that such a theory is sensible (in view of its axioms) and falsifiable. Obviously, any theory needs to be corroborated by experiment.

If you reject CI, and that's your good right, then you need to present a rational argument that speaks in favor of a determinist alternative. You haven't yet done that yet. You owe us a determinist explanation of QM.

Thomas

Lbartoli
Registered User
Posts: 332
(1/29/04 5:56 pm)
Reply

wasnt me!

---

Someone wrote:

The flatness of the earth was never observed in nature. The first ship to sail around the world refuted the flat earth hypothesis. The flat earth was hypothesized, but never observed.

Non-causal processes were hypothesized, and now have been observed.

LB: Will you just stop a minute and look at what you're saying? How can these scientists possibly know that these so-called non-causal processes were in fact without cause?

You mean like this:

"John, there!, did you see it?! Did you see that Process just pop up out of nowhere? And nothing at all caused it! You agree, dont you John, that nothing at all caused it? After all, *I* didnt see anything happen before that Process appeared, Did you John?"

"Nope, neither did I, Mike. I swear nothing at all happened before that Process popped up.

That was definitely an un-caused Process!

Hey, can I write it up this time!?! You got the credit last time."

"Sure John, why dont you dedicate it to your next child which your wife is now carrying." "And, by the way, John. Do you happen to know who caused that?"

;)/Leo

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                      | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Thomas KnierimRegistered UserPosts: 799(1/29/04 6:23 pm)Reply  | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> Leo: Will you just stop a minute and look at what you're saying? How can these scientists possibly know that these so-called non-causal processes were in fact without cause? Leo, if you believe in causality, then please explain the clicks in a Geiger counter, or more precisely: explain the intervals between the clicks, or give us a deterministic model to calculate these intervals; at the very least tell us what you think accounts for them. Thomas |
| LbartoliRegistered UserPosts: 333(1/29/04 6:46 pm)Reply                                                                                          | mysterious clicks <hr/> Is that some sort of device for detecting radioactivity? Well, I'd have to see one, examine one.Then i could tell you why it clicks! Leo                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 801
(1/29/04 7:44 pm)
Reply

Re: mysterious clicks

---

You don't have to get a real Geiger counter. The operating principle is explained here: www-istp.gsfc.nasa.gov/Ed...eiger.html We know WHY it clicks. What we are after are the intervals between the clicks. I brought up the Geiger counter, because it is a tool that makes electrons audible and thus illustrates random particle events.

Thomas

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 313
(1/29/04 8:36 pm)
Reply

Re: mysterious clicks

---

Thomas wrote:

Quote:

---

I brought up the Geiger counter, because it is a tool that makes electrons audible and thus illustrates random particle events.

---

Lots of things are random. It might be useful to know some of the causes of what makes a click exactly when it does, but it's not necessarily useful from a practical perspective, and may not be possible because of the limitations of our measuring and computational abilities.

Lbartoli
Registered User
Posts: 338
(1/29/04 8:56 pm)
Reply

clicks

---

Well, i knew that my answer wasnt going to cover it for you, but i was hoping for a bit more from you before answering more completely since i know little about how the device works and neither was it entirely clear what it is you were after.

And im still not sure, though Kevin may be both sure and accurate. Was he?

Leo

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 802
(1/29/04 10:10 pm)
Reply

Re: clicks

---

Kevin: Lots of things are random.

That's a funny thing to say for a determinist, don't you think?

It might be useful to know some of the causes of what makes a click exactly when it does, but it's not necessarily useful from a practical perspective, and may not be possible because of the limitations of our measuring and computational abilities.

Our measuring and computation abilities are good enough to measure the periodicity of radioactive decay. The phenomenon seems completely random. What explanations do you have? Does radioactive material behave like a nonlinear random number generator? Or could it have to do with "quantum indeterminacy"?

Thomas

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 313
(1/29/04 10:47 pm)
Reply

Re: clicks

---

Thomas wrote:

Quote:

---

Kevin: Lots of things are random.

T: That's a funny thing to say for a determinist, don't you think?

---

Not at all. Things are random because they are caused to be random. Determinism and predictability are two different things. Why do you think that all caused events should be predictable to us, when we don't even know what is causing those events?

Quote:

---

Our measuring and computation abilities are good enough to measure the periodicity of radioactive decay. The phenomenon seems completely random.

---

Of course - it doesn't take much to know that. What I was saying was that we may never be able to adequately predict precisely an individual event of radioactive decay, because of the limitations of our ability to observe the causes of the event and compute the causes and effects involved.

In the case of throwing a dice, we probably know some of the causes of what face of the dice shows up, and can go some way towards making a prediction of each individual throw, but in the case of radioactive decay, it is much more difficult.

Quote:

---

What explanations do you have? Does radioactive material behave like a nonlinear random number generator? Or could it have to do with "quantum indeterminacy"?

---

"Quantum indeterminacy" only means that there are things we can't determine things on the quantum realm, and that is for the reasons I explain above.

It is akin to the indeterminacy of throwing a dice, the only difference being that we believe we know some of the specific causes operating in deciding the throw of a dice.

Radioactive decay might occur when the atom is hit by some kind of particle we know nothing of.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2140
(1/30/04 2:03 am)
Reply

Re: clicks

---

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 497

(1/30/04 8:59 am)

Reply

Re: clicks

---

The problem with science is that it deals with detail, it is technical in nature. As you can see by the above discussion (and most discussions here), finite details can be picked selectively, made into an argument and blown out of importance – making it appear to others of like mind that the overriding principle may be incorrect. Thomas is doing this to try and indicate that cause and effect may not be an overriding principle.

Philosophy is more pure in that it deals with the overriding principles. That is why science and mathematics etc are mere specialised derivatives of philosophy. Philosophy is the study of wisdom. Wisdom is simply applied logic and logic is the process of understanding cause and effect. No science can mean anything and would not exist without logic, otherwise science would be merely consist of things like astrology and magic (emotionally based).

The same problem of detail applies to emotions, individual issues tend to become exaggerated and other relevant issues ignored. Women are the masters of selectively picking finite details.

In a way what enlightenment does, in examining and removing emotional attachments (all attachments TV, drugs etc are emotional), is allow one to see the whole, to see the basic principle, allowing the enlightened individual to become logically consistent.

Because people ego's give them a sense that they inherently exist, they tend to consider things mostly from the detail of what is now. Human consciousness as it is now is not just now, the basic principle of what we are now is that this nowness is a mere segment of the totality. To properly understand human behaviour, one must take into account the causes and effects that applied over the millions of years involved the evolution of our consciousness (we were conscious before we were human).

Masculine and feminine issues are often taken out of context for this reason.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 904

(1/30/04 9:37 am)

Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Quote:

---

Kev: Even if you are certain of uncertainty, it doesn't say anything about whether things are caused or not.

DT: I didn't say, or imply, anything to the contrary.

You may not have said that I did say anything to the contrary, but you implied it.

Kev: You did say "It proves the fact that there is nothing there to know, definitely."

---

Indeed I did. However, as previously stated, i did not say anything to the contrary of your statememnt "Even if you are certain of uncertainty, it doesn't say anything about whether things are caused or not."

There is no antithesis here for you to debate.

Quote:

---

Kev: But there may well be something there which we can know, and which we do not currently know.

---

Nope, whilst you are quite right in asserting that the certainty of Uncertainty doesn't say anything about whether things are caused or not, you are quite wrong in asserting the above. It is because the Uncertainty is quite-quite certain, and why Heisenberg's statement was phrased as such. Perhaps you should look into it.

Quote:

---

Kev: However, this extra knowledge of what lies behind quantum events doesn't mean that we will all of a sudden be able to determine things that were previously indeterminable.

---

There is no such thing as extra knowledge of what you refer to here. However, hypothetically, if there were, it would not be "extra knowledge of what lies behind quantum events", it would be extra knowledge of what lies beyond Uncertainty theory, and nothing more.

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 314
(1/30/04 10:15 am)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Quote:

---

There is no such thing as extra knowledge of what you refer to here. However, hypothetically, if there were, it would not be "extra knowledge of what lies behind quantum events", it would be extra knowledge of what lies beyond Uncertainty theory, and nothing more.

---

Fair enough.

 Robert Larkin
Posts: 2
(1/30/04 10:28 am)
Reply
ezSupporter

Re: clicks

---

Quote:

---

In a way what enlightenment does, in examining and removing emotional attachments (all attachments TV, drugs etc are emotional), is allow one to see the whole, to see the basic principle, allowing the enlightened individual to become logically consistent. - jimhaz

---

So many people here write as if they were enlightened yet those who make no such claims are consistently more coherent, or they are anyway in this thread. I have no grounding in the sciences but I have read a little eastern psychology. In that respect, if the transmission of wisdom is causeless why all this concern for insisting upon even co-dependent origination? If a cause cannot be known how much moreso a group of causes? If enlightenment is

|                                                                                                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                         | supposedly an unburdening from conceptualization why are so many people here clinging to their pretty concepts and refusing to let them go?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 501(1/30/04 11:11 am)Reply                                                                                       | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> If enlightenment is supposedly an unburdening from conceptualization why are so many people here clinging to their pretty concepts and refusing to let them go Because without understanding that which is are the basic underlying principle, all conceptual thoughts may be mistaken. You can't play cricket very well if you don't know the rules. I'm not enlightened, and have never professed such, I have too many attachments. I simply have a degree of imagination. People cling to their petty concepts because of emotion and the sum of past cuases. I'm actually a fan of science. |
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 2156(1/30/04 11:17 am)Reply  | Re: clicks <hr/> Enlightenment is not about unburdening from conceptualization. It is about experiencing true understanding and true thoughts. The concept of cause and effect, for example, when properly understood, is a true thought and needs to be protected against the false mythologies which currently surround quantum mechanics.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|  Robert LarkinPosts: 4(1/30/04 2:21 pm)ReplyezSupporter    | Re: clicks <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Because without understanding that which is are the basic underlying principle, all conceptual thoughts may be mistaken. You can't play cricket very well if you don't know the rules. - jimhaz <hr/>                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |

If we're discussing 'enlightenment' there are no rules, or that is how I read it.

"People cling to their petty concepts because of emotion and the sum of past causes."

Jim, I actually wrote 'petty concepts'; God knows I have some of my own. I labeled no concepts 'petty'. I think your explanation would play well here but not elsewhere. Try this one, and maybe it will work for you: People cling to concepts for sake of the profit they receive from them. Some people might be afraid to let go of some idea. Others believe espousing a particular concept makes them look important. There is no concept which can survive a change of the subject, Jim - fact of life.

Robert Larkin
Posts: 5
(1/30/04 2:28 pm)
Reply
ezSupporter

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Quote:

---

Enlightenment is not about unburdening from conceptualization. It is about experiencing true understanding and true thoughts.

The concept of cause and effect, for example, when properly understood, is a true thought and needs to be protected against the false mythologies which currently surround quantum mechanics. - David

---

That's interesting, David, in that what I've come across all suggests there are absolutely zero true thoughts. Thoughts can have relative value - or relative uselessness - but their relationship to any truth is at best second hand.

Since I am only now working on your 'cause and effect' - and I note that you did not respond to my comment above suggesting the relative uselessness of any reliance on dependent co-origination - is there some other 'true thought' you could simply write out that any old Buddhist like myself could see to be true.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2161

(1/30/04 2:47 pm)

Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Robert Larkin wrote:

Quote:

---

That's interesting, David, in that what I've come across all suggests there are absolutely zero true thoughts. Thoughts can have relative value - or relative uselessness - but their relationship to any truth is at best second hand.

---

So I take it that you don't regard what you have just said here as being true?

Quote:

---

Since I am only now working on your 'cause and effect' - and I note that you did not respond to my comment above suggesting the relative uselessness of any reliance on dependent co-origination - is there some other 'true thought' you could simply write out that any old Buddhist like myself could see to be true.

---

I think it would be simpler if you stayed with cause and effect. If you are unable or unwilling to understand why it is necessarily true, and cannot appreciate its spiritual significance, then you're not going to be able to understand any of the deeper truths which follow on from it.

Quote:

---

There is no concept which can survive a change of the subject, Jim - fact of life.

---

Except this concept, presumably.

Why do you keep saying things as though you believed them to be true? It makes you look very strange.

Robert Larkin

Posts: 6

(1/30/04 3:38 pm)

Reply

ezSupporter

Re: clicks

---

David,

To express truth via thought is impossible. Do you mean to tell me you don't understand it, that all we can do is draw second-hand pictures of at best relative usefulness?

Have you never had a silent mind? If you still hear 'the monkey chattering' as Zen puts it you still have work to do. You should understand that thought is a tool provided by evolution. It is subservient to awareness and which is itself not inherently verbal. It's the monkey we deal with in Zen, David, and I think yours is going full force.

Now there is no concept necessary to move from any point to any other point. Do you have any textual authority to back up such a claim? Or is the situation here that without sufficient forethought you have founded your system on cause and effect while either not knowing or ignoring that eastern psychology not only admits but demands the causeless.

You can either work on yourself some more, or you can learn some more so you can fake it better, but right now you're useless; you're a message board Buddha.

Robert Larkin

Posts: 7

(1/30/04 4:00 pm)

Reply

ezSupporter

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

With regard to David's attempts to cling to thought as the ground of truth, no one sufficiently educated in Buddhism or Taoism will take David's position to be accurate - or would agree he knows much of value.

I suggest my writing here either has or has not had some efficacy, as we humans have here communicated, and if it has had efficacy it has done so without claiming to be the truth. Buddhists and Taoists don't claim words are the truth; why does David Quinn claim it? He just didn't read enough?

John
Registered User
Posts: 66
(1/30/04 4:11 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

Robert Larkin

With regard to David's attempts to cling to thought as the ground of truth, no one sufficiently educated in Buddhism or Taoism will take David's position to be accurate - or would agree he knows much of value.

I suggest my writing here either has or has not had some efficacy, as we humans have here communicated, and if it has had efficacy it has done so without claiming to be the truth. Buddhists and Taoists don't claim words are the truth; why does David Quinn claim it? He just didn't read enough?

Robert, their philosophy is based on monkey mind and you are not the first to try and inform them. Good luck!

John

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                       | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| ksolwayRegistered UserPosts: 317(1/30/04 4:12 pm)Reply | Re: clicks<hr/> Robert Larkin wrote:Quote:<hr/> To express truth via thought is impossible.<hr/>So you are telling us that the above statement is a second-hand picture of at best relative usefulness, right?Also, if you don't believe the above statement (quoted) is true, why should I pay it any attention?Edited by: ksolway at: 1/30/04 4:24 pm |

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 318
(1/30/04 4:28 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Robert, all you have done so far is accuse someone of being a fraud (which can, in Buddhist terms be viewed as a serious form of slander) just because they believe in what they call "cause and effect". You'll have to do better than that.

Did you hear of the story of the Zen Master, who, when quizzed at the gates to heaven, was asked "Tell us, when the Buddha attained enlightenment, did he escape cause and effect?". The Zen Master replied, "Yes", and was immediately reborn as a fox.

Robert Larkin
Posts: 8
(1/30/04 4:57 pm)
Reply
ezSupporter

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Kevin, I know the story as Hyakujo's Fox, in which a supposed master claims an enlightened man is beyond the law of causation and for which he's reborn 500 times as a fox. The story has a happy ending when he realizes the enlightened man is one with the law of causation.

David Quinn is the other side of the coin: You cannot be one with the law of causation (or truth or Tao) if you are clinging to it. For this he should receive 500 rebirths as a sheep, a dangerous matter on some farms in the world, yet given his views on women it is somehow also justice.

As to slander, let him bring his textual backing and I will humbly beg his pardon. So are words the ground of truth? Let's see it in Buddhism and Taoism. Until then no slander has occurred here.

Robert Larkin
Posts: 9
(1/30/04 5:35 pm)
Reply
ezSupporter

Re: clicks

---

Usually arguments about the relativity of words occur with those who support Western philosophical positions. One would not expect to find it here where folks are claiming enlightenment. They have apparently not done the reading.

Consider Nagarjuna, an important figure in Mahayana Buddhism:

Quote:

---

... Nagarjuna sought to liberate the mind from its tendencies to cling to tidy or clever formulations of truth, because any truth short of Sunyata, the voidness of reality, is inherently misleading. Relative truths are not like pieces of a puzzle, each of which incrementally adds to the complete design. They are plausible distortions of the truth and can seriously mislead the aspirant. They cannot be lightly or wholly repudiated, however, for they are all the seeker has, and so he must learn to use them as aids whilst remembering that they are neither accurate nor complete in themselves. ...

Nagarjuna

---

According to Nagarjuna David Quinn is in error and 'relative truths' can be understood as tools we humans have with which to communicate. This is true for all thought, speech, and writing, and a horn honk is not the truth either. It's not a difficult concept, Kevin. Since Nagarjuna suggests it why don't you consider it?

And by the way I can keep bringing in text for quite a long long while to support my position ... Y'all got support for yours?

ksolway

Registered User

Posts: 319

(1/30/04 5:59 pm)

Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Quote:

---

David Quinn is the other side of the coin: You cannot be one with the law of causation (or truth or Tao) if you are clinging to it.

---

I won't write at length here, as David will probably reply. But you should provide the reasons why you think David is clinging to the idea of cause and effect, instead of just using the concept of cause and effect as a tool, detachedly, in full knowledge of the non-inherent existence of both causes and effects. Otherwise it makes your accusation seem empty of substance.

Quote:

---

. . . let him bring textual backing and I will humbly beg his pardon

---

Sometimes we do use textual supplementation on this forum (in the form of quotes from scriptures, etc), but for the most part we use our own reason.

Quote:

---

. . . he must learn to use them as aids whilst remembering that they are neither accurate nor complete in themselves

---

That very statement is neither accurate nor complete. And that statement I just made is absolutely true.

By the way, that quote you gave looks like it was the translator or commentator speaking, as it begins "Nagarguna sought . . . ". So what you quoted was not the words of Nagarjuna. It sounds more like the words of a modern Buddhist, who is parroting the popular script.

Neither causes nor effects are inherently existent. This much is true.

Robert Larkin
Posts: 10
(1/30/04 6:09 pm)
Reply
ezSupporter

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Kevin, use the link.

Robert Larkin
Posts: 11
(1/30/04 6:24 pm)
Reply
ezSupporter

Re: clicks

---

"That very statement is neither accurate nor complete. And that statement I just made is absolutely true." If you think you can get absolute truth into that little sentence, boy are you deluded. Truth is the void; no word gonna get there nor could it ever get back.

Go back a few posts and you'll see discussion of thought being a tool of awareness. That was a clue, Kevin. No charge.

You'll have to use your own reason since having some familiarity with the material I know you have no support. You will have to argue against Buddhism, Zen, and Taoism in order to maintain your nonsense.

Lbartoli
Registered User
Posts: 342
(1/30/04 6:35 pm)
Reply

?

---

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 317
(1/30/04 4:12 pm)
Reply
Re: clicks

-----
Robert Larkin wrote:

Quote:
-----

To express truth via thought is impossible.
-----

So you are telling us that the above statement is a second-hand picture of at best relative usefulness, right?

Also, if you don't believe the above statement (quoted) is true, why

Did i miss the answer to this one? Leo

|                                                                                                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|  Robert LarkinPosts: 12(1/30/04 6:38 pm)ReplyezSupporter     | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> My impression of David's clinging to cause and effect derives from his ebook. If he insists his chapter on cause and effect is essential then I suggest he is clinging to it. Now does he insist it is essential, and why would it be so?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|  Robert LarkinPosts: 13(1/30/04 6:43 pm)ReplyezSupporter    | Re: ? <hr/> Leo, see mine, 1/30/04 5:35 pm (I'm asking them to repudiate Nagarjuna who, if you are not familiar with him, is a 'biggie'. Keep at it long enough and they'll have reputiated Buddhism, Zen, and Taoism and probably truth, justice, and the American way just to keep their little game running, and then we can all have a smile and a cup of coffee.) Edited by: Robert Larkin at: 1/30/04 6:47 pm                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 2163(1/30/04 6:59 pm)Reply  | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> Robert Larkin wrote: Quote: <hr/> To express truth via thought is impossible. Do you mean to tell me you don't understand it, that all we can do is draw second-hand pictures of at best relative usefulness? <hr/> This is a common, lazy viewpoint. In reality, words and thoughts are perfectly capable of pointing the mind's attention to the nature of Truth. That is the reason why scriptures and sutras exist. Quote: <hr/> Have you never had a silent mind? If you still hear 'the monkey chattering' as Zen puts it you still have work to do. You should understand that thought is a tool provided by evolution. It is subservient to awareness and which is itself not inherently verbal. It's the monkey we deal with in Zen, David, | and I think yours is going full force.

---

Alas, there are a lot of thoughts here and none of them are true.

Quote:

---

Now there is no concept necessary to move from any point to any other point. Do you have any textual authority to back up such a claim? Or is the situation here that without sufficient forethought you have founded your system on cause and effect while either not knowing or ignoring that eastern psychology not only admits but demands the causeless.

---

The concept of cause and effect is a useful tool for breaking down our delusions of inherent existence. It is nothing more than that.

Quote:

---

With regard to David's attempts to cling to thought as the ground of truth, no one sufficiently educated in Buddhism or Taoism will take David's position to be accurate - or would agree he knows much of value.

---

Where is the evidence that I cling to thought as the ground of truth?

Quote:

---

I suggest my writing here either has or has not had some efficacy, as we humans have here communicated, and if it has had efficacy it has done so without claiming to be the truth. Buddhists and Taoists don't claim words are the truth; why does David Quinn claim it? He just didn't read enough?

---

Where have I claimed this?

I think you've come to this forum with a closed mind and full of prejudices as to what I am about. If you really want to have a worthwhile conversation with me, then you are going to have stop projecting all this rubbish onto me. Talk about a monkey mind!

--

John wrote:

Quote:

---

Robert, their philosophy is based on monkey mind and you are not the first to try and inform them. Good luck!

---

This division into "still mind" and "monkey mind" is itself a product of the monkey mind and has no real existence. An enlightened sage can chatter all day and make use of thousands of different concepts and yet still be dwelling in the stillness of enlightenment.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2163

(1/30/04 7:09 pm)

Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Robert Larkin wrote:

Quote:

---

My impression of David's clinging to cause and effect derives from his ebook. If he insists his chapter on cause and effect is essential then I suggest he is clinging to it. Now does he insist it is essential, and why would it be so?

---

Meditation on cause and effect is essential to breaking down delusions of inherent existence, which in turn is essential to realizing the nature of Reality.

Quote:

---

I'm asking them to repudiate Nagarjuna who, if you are not familiar with him, is a 'biggie'.

---

I'm in full agreement with Nagarjuna, so I don't have any desire to repudiate him. Indeed, if you think that I am at odds with Nagarjuna, then your understanding of both he and I is limited.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2164
(1/30/04 7:21 pm)
Reply

Re: clicks

Robert Larkin wrote, to Kevin:

Quote:

"That very statement is neither accurate nor complete. And that statement I just made is absolutely true." If you think you can get absolute truth into that little sentence, boy are you deluded. Truth is the void; no word gonna get there nor could it ever get back.

You'll have to use your own reason since having some familiarity with the material I know you have no support. You will have to argue against Buddhism, Zen, and Taoism in order to maintain your nonsense.

If no words can express truth, then why are you urging Kevin to read certain materials?

You are one screwed up pussy cat . . . . .

John
Registered User
Posts: 67
(1/30/04 7:38 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

DavidQuinn000

John wrote:

Quote:

-----
Robert, their philosophy is based on monkey mind and you are not the first to try and inform them. Good luck!
-----

This division into "still mind" and "monkey mind" is itself a product of the monkey mind and has no real existence. An enlightened sage can chatter all day and make use of thousands of different concepts and yet still be dwelling in the stillness of enlightenment.

It's not difficult to say such things.

However when I've pointed you towards words of the masters that are obviously not in agreement with your stance you resort to slandering them so no one with a modicum of sense can take you seriously.

For example I have posted on this forum a quote from Hakuin where he says that "...he will surely come to see that the ground where the ancients lived and functioned is not found at any level of intellectual understanding."

And yet you continually resort to advocating intellectual understanding as a means to develop the Buddha mind, continually defend the road of concepts etc.

If your stance was in keeping with the ancient masters I doubt you would have so many dissenters on this forum and then the important work could go forward. As things stand most of the posts here are a waste of time.

John

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 506

(1/30/04 7:49 pm)

Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Kevin: Instead of just using the concept of cause and effect as a tool, detachedly, in full knowledge of the non-inherent existence of both causes and effects

I don't properly understand this.

Thinking about it, I can imagine that cause and effect is just the process that is, and to separate the two concepts as being different might be to apply an unnecessary separation and that is why it is just a 'tool'. However, I still see the process as an rule of existence, a process of inherent change.

---

Robert: ...You should understand that thought is a tool provided by evolution. It is subservient to awareness and which is itself not inherently verbal....

David: Alas, there are a lot of thoughts here and none of them are true.

I also do not understand why these two statements are not true.

The former statement I believe to be true in itself, and the latter one I would amend to "Awareness is the non-verbal base from which thought as a higher level of consciousness can evolve". That however still makes it subservient.

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 320
(1/30/04 7:55 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

John quoted Hakuin:

Quote:

---

"...he will surely come to see that the ground where the ancients lived and functioned is not found at any level of intellectual understanding."

---

Unfortunately, your intellectual understanding of that teaching is wrong. However, Hakuin's teaching is correct when properly understood. Hakuin is referring to the deluded use of the intellect, rather than the enlightened use of it. In fact, of all the different kinds of Zen Buddhism, Hakuin's school of Buddhism is the most intellectual of all. That's why I favour it.

 Robert Larkin
Posts: 14
(1/30/04 8:04 pm)
Reply
ezSupporter

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Quote:

---

This is a common, lazy viewpoint. In reality, words and thoughts are perfectly capable of pointing the mind's attention to the nature of Truth. That is the reason why scriptures and sutras exist. - David Quinn

---

When the Sutras and scriptures indicate words are not themselves the truth you are profoundly contradicted. You have moved away from defending 'true thoughts' and now you are talking about words 'pointing' to truth. You have caved. Where is the textual basis for any 'true thought'? Either defend it or admit there is no such thing as a 'true thought'.

---

"Alas, there are a lot of thoughts here and none of them are true."

One of the things there was a question: Has your mind ever been still? Have you ever known a second of tranquility through the silencing of thought?

---

"The concept of cause and effect is a useful tool for breaking down our delusions of inherent existence. It is nothing more than that."

But you wrote in your ebook, "... It is quite a fascinating phenomenon when you reflect upon it. After all, it must be obvious to anyone with an ounce of intelligence that cause and effect is fundamentally important to our understanding of the world. Not only must it necessarily form the kernel of any theory we care to create about the world, but it is visible in every aspect of our daily lives. It is the ultimate explanation of all things; it is the final fruition of wielding Ockham's razor to the fullest extent; it is the Theory of Everything boiled down to its purest essence. I mean, what a prize! Surely, you would think, such an obvious all-pervasive principle would present an exciting avenue of investigation for anyone even remotely interested in philosophy and spirituality. And yet it is universally ignored the world over. No one ever talks about it or thinks about it. This alone should set the alarm bells ringing. Something is seriously amiss here. ..."

So which is it, David?

---

"Where is the evidence that I cling to thought as the ground of truth?"

It may take a while but it's a'comin'.

---

Buddhists and Taoists don't claim words are the truth; why does David Quinn claim it? "Where have I claimed this?"

"The concept of cause and effect ... is a true thought ..." - David Quinn, 1/30/04 11:17 am

Compare with "The concept of cause and effect is a useful tool for breaking down our delusions of inherent existence. It is nothing more than that." David is contradicting himself.

---

"I'm in full agreement with Nagarjuna, so I don't have any desire to repudiate him. Indeed, if you think that I am at odds with Nagarjuna, then your understanding of both he and I is limited." - I suggest not only that you are not in agreement with Nagarjuna but that you cannot understand him. (If you could understand Nagarjuna you would know you are not in agreement with Nagarjuna.)

You wrote subsequently: "If no words can express truth, then why are you urging Kevin to read certain materials?"

You are one screwed up pussy cat . . . . . "

And you still claim you are in full agreement with Nagarjuna? Did you bother to check the link I provided? Novice monks would be ahead of you!

"Whatever can be conceptualized is therefore relative, and whatever is relative is Sunya, empty. " - Nagarjuna himself, so Kevin can't weasel out of it.

Nagarjuna, the no-weasel link.

---

"I think you've come to this forum with a closed mind and full of prejudices as to what I am about. If you really want to have a worthwhile conversation with me, then you are going to have stop projecting all this rubbish onto me. Talk about a monkey mind!"

A purely technical question here, David, can you (yourself, personally) not think?

---

John: "Robert, their philosophy is based on monkey mind ..." I don't know if you were laughing as you wrote that but I was laughing there. Thank you, John.

John
Registered User
Posts: 68
(1/30/04 8:12 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Robert Larkin

John: "Robert, their philosophy is based on monkey mind ..." I don't know if you were laughing as you wrote that but I was laughing there. Thank you, John.

I have done much laughing here but overall I've been saddened.

John

|                                                                                                  |                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| <input type="checkbox"/> Robert LarkinPosts: 15(1/30/04 8:12 pm)ReplyezSupporter | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality<hr/> Kevin, if you're familiar with that school then you should be able to find some evidence backing up your position, shouldn't you?                                 |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 506(1/30/04 8:17 pm)Reply                            | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality<hr/> I have done much laughing here but overall I've been saddenedGenerally I find that to be an emotional effect of truths one does not wish to recognise. |

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                               | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| ksolwayRegistered UserPosts: 320(1/30/04 8:20 pm)Reply  | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> Robert, when a person says that something is "true", it doesn't automatically mean they are deluded on that count, and it is irrational to think that it does. It fact, it reveals your own attachment to the word "true".                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 507(1/30/04 8:20 pm)Reply                                                                                     | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> Was just having a look at Genius News, and coincidently the next thing I read after my last post was this. David Quinn: I suppose the Truth could be called "super-rational" in a sense - but really, it is no more super-rational than is the colour red, or the sound of a flute, or indeed any experience at all. None of our experiences of the world is capturable by our concepts, words or logic, and the experience of Truth is no different. But then, that is not the function of these things. The use of concepts and logic is akin to using a map. One needs a map to find the Grand Canyon, say, but it isn't the map's job to capture the essence and experience of the Grand Canyon itself. Once you reach your destination, you put the map aside and simply use your eyes and ears. The path to Truth is no different. Reason takes you to the threshold, and |

reason also tells you how to cross the threshold, and only then do you put reason aside, cross the threshold, and experience the Truth directly

John
Registered User
Posts: 69
(1/30/04 8:20 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

ksolway

-----
John quoted Hakuin:

Quote:

-----
"...he will surely come to see that the ground where the ancients lived and functioned is not found at any level of intellectual understanding."

-----
Unfortunately, your intellectual understanding of that teaching is wrong. However, Hakuin's teaching is correct when properly understood. Hakuin is referring to the deluded use of the intellect, rather than the enlightened use of it. In fact, of all the different kinds of Zen Buddhism, Hakuin's school of Buddhism is the most intellectual of all. That's why I favour it.

You have consistently missed the point of either Hakuin's teachings or any other Ch'an master.

My guess is that you are fatally attached to your own interpretations that revolve around your own concepts, this is the danger of pursuing an intellectual path and is a well documented pitfall. In fact it is considered the worst of ailments.

John

Robert Larkin
Posts: 16
(1/30/04 8:28 pm)
Reply
ezSupporter

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

John,

I'm beginning to feel like Hannibal. I own the place but I'll never win. Seriously, there are people who take them to be knowledgeable. Voce io has deluded himself, apparently, and the influence given him here cannot have helped. This is not a board I would want to spend real time on.

The Ponderer's Guild

|                                                                                                             |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                             | KIR olio Olio is the least of the three but I did co-found it and it is often an amusing place. You might get a kick out of our front page graphics. Seems someone from genius forum has already visited us. Edited by: Robert Larkin at: 1/30/04 8:30 pm                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Robert LarkinPosts: 17(1/30/04 8:36 pm)ReplyezSupporter | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> 'Robert, when a person says that something is "true", it doesn't automatically mean they are deluded on that count, and it is irrational to think that it does. In fact, it reveals your own attachment to the word "true".' - Kevin It reveals no such attachment; that's an irrational conclusion. Further, you have claimed all along to be able to express the truth in words. But let's have a clarification and make certain we're on the same page. Is there such a thing as David's 'true thought'? Is any concept true? |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 508(1/30/04 8:42 pm)Reply                            | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> The Ponderers Guild Seems like a good place for those who wish to forever remain a degree or some degrees below enlightened. From a brief look, the discussions appear as if they will never reach a conclusion. The discussions are intelligent but not ultimate. After being here for 2 and a bit years, I'm now glad I didn't find that forum before this one.                                                                                                                                                                |

John
Registered User
Posts: 70
(1/30/04 8:44 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Robert Larkin
The Ponderer's Guild

KIR

olio

Olio is the least of the three but I did co-found it and it is often an amusing place. You might get a kick out of our front page graphics. Seems someone from genius forum has already visited us.

I'll take a look, thanks.

John

Robert Larkin
Posts: 18
(1/30/04 9:02 pm)
Reply
ezSupporter

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Jim,

Don't worry about enlightenment in the sense of comparing it, there vs. here. If you can quantify it the way you just did you've got the wrong idea, at least according to what I've read. And you're anyway more likely to find enlightenment taking your next pee than you are on this place.

I did appreciate your find. It appears David Quinn does indeed give mixed messages on 'words'. Likely he or Kevin has a handy explanation for it.

Quote:

---

From Jim:

Robert: ...You should understand that thought is a tool provided by evolution. It is subservient to awareness and which is itself not inherently verbal....

David: Alas, there are a lot of thoughts here and none of them are true.

I also do not understand why these two statements are not true.

The former statement I believe to be true in itself, and the latter one I would amend to "Awareness is the non-verbal base from which thought as a higher level of consciousness can evolve". That however still makes it subservient. - Jim

---

They take them to be false because they've never made it to any kind of real awareness. "Awareness" to them is only a word.

The big issue here is psychological freedom. We are conditioned by our cultures and one can look at the world and see the results of that conditioning. If we are going to be free of that conditioning we need not only to be aware of the concepts we have been presented but also to put them in their proper place in human existence.

Nagarjuna wrote 1800 years ago, and which would have given David and Kevin ample time to read it, "Whatever can be conceptualized is therefore relative, and whatever is relative is Sunya, empty. "

Nagarjuna points to awareness which holds no concept to be the truth, an awareness which is beyond thought yet can make use of it just as it can make use of its opposable thumbs. The human mind is above such thoughts as these people produce, and they don't like that idea. They don't have the humility for it. Any reasonable person would doubt they are 'enlightened'.

 Robert Larkin
Posts: 19
(1/30/04 9:13 pm)
Reply
ezSupporter

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

I hope you do, John. (You're welcome too, Jim, if you won't talk about enlightenment. Everyone's welcome.) If we can get a few more people interested at Olio we can open up a forum for 'good talk' about Han-shan and Shih-ti, and burning the Buddha images to warm our butts, and "'What is the nature of our religion?' - 'Buns.'"

Do you know this one: A week of sesshin* had just ended and the master called together the students to say, 'We've all meditated diligently so let's thank the Buddha because we all had a great enlightenment. And if we didn't have a great enlightenment then at least we had a minor awakening. And if we didn't have a minor awakening at least we developed some insight. And if we didn't develop any insight at least we didn't get sick. And if we did get sick at least we didn't die. So let's thank the Buddha!'

*"intensive meditation" for those who do not have that particular piece of jargon in their lexicon of the useless.

Robert Larkin
Posts: 20
(1/30/04 9:22 pm)
Reply
ezSupporter

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

I must sleep now; way past my bedtime in St. Louis, Missouri. (Olio has members on six continents; my co-founder is an Englishman living in Australia. We are looking for amusing penguins so we can have all seven continents represented.)

When I get back I trust the Nagarjuna and all the other issues will be suitably rationalized. Bye!

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 321
(1/30/04 9:26 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Robert, you have a serious attachment to the word "truth".

Quote:

---

Nagarjuna points to awareness which holds no concept to be the truth

---

It is important for you to acknowledge that Nagarjuna, unlike yourself, never says that no statement can ever be true.

A concept is just that - a concept. How can a concept, itself, be "truth"? No. A concept is a concept, and a truth is a truth. It's very clear. I don't know why you are confusing concepts with truth.

As far as "truth" goes. If you associate the word "truth" with something inherently existent (ie, something impossible) then that is your business, however, you shouldn't be confusing your use of the word with the way other people use it.

Quote:

---

"Whatever can be conceptualized is therefore relative, and whatever is relative is Sunya, empty. "
- Nagarjuna

---

Yes, I've read Nagarjuna many years ago, and agree with what he says.

Edited by: ksolway at: 1/30/04 9:27 pm

John
Registered User
Posts: 71
(1/30/04 9:30 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Robert Larkin

I hope you do, John. (You're welcome too, Jim, if you won't talk about enlightenment. Everyone's welcome.) If we can get a few more people interested at Olio we can open up a forum for 'good talk' about Han-shan and Shih-ti, and burning the Buddha images to warm our butts, and "'What is the nature of our religion?' - 'Buns.'"

Yes do that and I'll certainly come along.

*Do you know this one: A week of sesshin* had just ended and the master called together the students to say, 'We've all meditated diligently so let's thank the Buddha because we all had a great enlightenment. And if we didn't have a great enlightenment then at least we had a minor awakening. And if we didn't have a minor awakening at least we developed some insight. And if we didn't develop any insight at least we didn't get sick. And if we did get sick at least we didn't die. So let's thank the Buddha!'*

Yes.

John

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2165
(1/30/04 9:36 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

There is a lot of irony and double-play going on in this conversation. For example John and Robert both believe that truth does not reside in words, and yet they keep referring to scripture as though it were the last word on truth.

They also have a very fixed image of what constitutes the behaviour of a Zen Master or an enlightened sage - which, again, is an image that comes from words in scripture.

They both lack the wisdom and flexibility of mind to communicate truth outside the Zen scripts. And they both openly condemn those who do not believe that truth can be locked up in words and who therefore use all sorts of different words to express themselves.

Ah, the irony!

--

Robert Larkin wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: This is a common, lazy viewpoint. In reality, words and thoughts are perfectly capable of pointing the mind's attention to the nature of Truth. That is the reason why scriptures and sutras exist.

RL: When the Sutras and scriptures indicate words are not themselves the truth you are profoundly contradicted.

---

Once again, why do you treat the words contained within the scriptures as though they are the truth?

Quote:

---

You have moved away from defending 'true thoughts' and now you are talking about words 'pointing' to truth. You have caved.

---

A true thought is one that points the mind towards Truth.

Quote:

---

Where is the textual basis for any 'true thought'?

---

There you go again - hunting for truth within words. You really must be thick as a brick.

Quote:

---

"Alas, there are a lot of thoughts here and none of them are true."

One of the things there was a question: Has your mind ever been still? Have you ever known a second of tranquility through the silencing of thought?

---

I know something far greater than this - a wisdom that is beyond both movement and stillness.

Quote:

---

"The concept of cause and effect is a useful tool for breaking down our delusions of inherent existence. It is nothing more than that."

But you wrote in your ebook, "... It is quite a fascinating phenomenon when you reflect upon it. After all, it must be obvious to anyone with an ounce of intelligence that cause and effect is fundamentally important to our understanding of the world. Not only must it necessarily form the kernel of any theory we care to create about the world, but it is visible in every aspect of our daily lives. It is the ultimate explanation of all things; it is the final fruition of wielding Ockham's razor to the fullest extent; it is the Theory of Everything boiled down to its purest essence. I mean, what a prize! Surely, you would think, such an obvious all-pervasive principle would present an exciting avenue of investigation for anyone even remotely interested in philosophy and spirituality. And yet it is universally ignored the world over. No one ever talks about it or thinks about it. This alone should set the alarm bells ringing. Something is seriously amiss here. ..."

So which is it, David?

---

Both. The truth that everything is caused, which everyone wants to ignore, is an excellent tool for breaking down the delusion of inherent existence.

Quote:

---

DQ: "I think you've come to this forum with a closed mind and full of prejudices as to what I am about. If you really want to have a worthwhile conversation with me, then you are going to have stop projecting all this rubbish onto me. Talk about a monkey mind!"

RL: A purely technical question here, David, can you (yourself, personally) not think?

---

Yes, every time I go to sleep at night.

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 322
(1/30/04 9:56 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Robert Larkin wrote:

Quote:

---

Kevin, if you're familiar with that school then you should be able to find some evidence backing up your position, shouldn't you?

---

Here's a piece of brilliant use of the intellect by Hakuin:

Quote:

---

At present, we are infested in this country with a race of smooth-tongued, worldly-wise Zen teachers who feed their students a ration of utter nonsense. "Why do you suppose Buddha-patriarchs through the ages were so mortally afraid of words and letters?" they ask you. "It is," they answer, "because words and letters are a coast of rocky cliffs washed constantly by vast oceans of poison ready to swallow your wisdom and drown the life from it. Giving students stories and episodes from the Zen past and having them penetrate their meaning is a practice that did not start until after the Zen school had already branched out into the Five Houses, and they were developing into the Seven Schools. Koan study represents a provisional teaching aid which teachers have devised to bring students up to the threshold of the house of Zen so as to enable them to enter the dwelling itself. It has nothing directly to do with the profound meaning of the Buddha-patriarchs' inner chambers."

An incorrigible pack of skinheaded mules has ridden this teaching into a position of dominance in the world of Zen. You cannot distinguish master from disciple, jades from common stones. They gather and sit - rows of sleepy inanimate lumps. They hug themselves, self-satisfied, imagining they are the paragons of the Zen tradition. They belittle the Buddha- patriarchs of the past. While celestial phoenixes linger in the shadows, starving away, this hateful flock of owls and crows rule the roost, sleeping and stuffing their bellies to their hearts' content.

---

When an enlightened person says that something is true, he is using what Hakuin often calls "direct pointing". Such a statement of truth is like an advanced koan.

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 508
(1/30/04 10:17 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Robert

..an awareness which is beyond thought yet can make use of it just as it can make use of its opposable thumbs.

I do not sense this awareness as you speak of it above. The only basic level awareness I am aware of is the awareness that life must do things to continue life. However, this is not an awareness that one can make use of. To make use of anything requires thought.

You seem to be saying the 'awareness beyond thought' is where reason comes from. Sure to a lower level animal that would be true, an otter can build a dam, a worm can dig a hole, but such awareness is at such a low level that it is meaningless to humans.

The QRS indicate they have an automatic awareness of truth. What better thing to seek than that!

Nagarjuna wrote 1800 years ago, and which would have given David and

Kevin ample time to read it, "Whatever can be conceptualized is therefore relative, and whatever is relative is Sunya, empty. "

The way I see it is that David is saying exactly the same thing in the quote I posted.

---

With regard to other forums (and I know you'll take this the wrong way)

I have become a closed system in regard to other philosophical forums. I don't see the point. Any other forum I've been to lacks the reasoning that the QRS provide here. There seems to be too much general chat or too much attachment to single historically acceptable streams of thought. Too much beating around the bush, although there is lot of that here as well.

If I went to those forums I'd take with me what I've learnt here, and as I lack sufficient patience, linguist ability, general knowledge and consistency to argue my case, it would perhaps make me regress into emotion.

I've decided that I would prefer to live without emotional swings, and the truths I find here appeal to the way my mind works. The forum makes me unemotional and gives me hope that I may someday be able to remove my destructive attachments. I feel other forums, counsellors and group support type organisations would not provide the true will for me to change permanently. I'm not saying I will change, as the forum is not yet more than a hobby to me but over time I hope to.

You'll probably say I'll end up losing my sanity here, and by jingies I'm starting to hope I will. A good dose of 'Schizoid Personality Disorder' as per David Quinn would do me the world of good :). Honestly.

Realistically the only thing I can lose is the security of the money my job provides (a very strong attachment) and as I work for the Public Service in a clerical position I can assure you that is more likely to be positive. With my current set of attachments I have a high chance of being dead by 50, I'm 42 so it isn't much to lose.

Don't think I'm some kind of mindless parrot or feminine male who has succumbed to the wise teacher. That would be the case if I took everything they say for granted and never brought forth my own opinions. I remain sceptical of the whole Ultimate Reality theory both as being able to provide the outcomes I seek and of being the real ultimate answer to the enigma of Why? - and so I should as so few would be able to get to their equivalent

|                                                                                                              |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                              | level and thus find contentment. Realise also that my activity here over the last week is abnormal behaviour for me, due to an a rare absence of both alcohol and ganja. My drive for truth is still in it's infancy, but it feels good that I can concieve of developing one. Edited by: jimhaz at: 1/30/04 10:20 pm                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Robert LarkinPosts: 22(1/31/04 12:54 am)ReplyezSupporter | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> By the way, what is this QRS thing?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Robert LarkinPosts: 23(1/31/04 12:58 am)ReplyezSupporter | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> "There is a lot of irony and double-play going on in this conversation. For example John and Robert both believe that truth does not reside in words, and yet they keep refering to scripture as though it were the last word on truth." John and Robert both believe that truth does not reside in words, and yet they keep talking ... We talk because that is how humans communicate. We bring in references to support our points because those who are reading other than David and Kevin can potentially see the wisdom in them. There is nothing ironic in human beings talking nor in referring to wisdom to discuss a situation. What is ironic is that a so-called enlightened person would be so devious as to attempt to make it seem otherwise. "I know something far greater than this - a wisdom that is beyond both movement and stillness." Naturally you didn't really answer the question and I just don't believe you. I don't have the time or the inclination to argue with you here so let's cut to the chase, David: I challenge you to debate on a neutral site. I'm sure The Ponderer's Guild or KIR would be amused to have it. Shall I attempt to set it up? _____ Kevin, Reliance on koan continues through today; it has become ritualized. The fact Hakuin recognized the danger does not mean he disagrees with |

Nagarjuna whom he counts as a Patriarch; it is no affirmation that truth is in words. Hakuin did not say that. Your empty mention of the profound meaning of the Buddha-patriarchs' inner chambers is not itself profound. Good try, although pity you're attempting to fool people. You're a bit of a fox yourself.

---

Jim,

I'm not going to plead with you to be sensible but I will ask you to consider what is the nature of a human being. Don't worry about what is the nature of the pretend gods around here, but ask what is the nature of being human. That is where a real solution must lie and not in some make-believe. Turn off the computer, take a walk, enjoy the afternoon light. There will be more beauty and more meaning there than you will ever encounter on this message board.

Edited by: Robert Larkin at: 1/31/04 1:02 am

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 509

(1/31/04 2:25 am)

Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Robert. OK your compassion is noted, but as I sense myself improving mentally due to this forum, I have no choice. I'm cognisant of the dangers and am also aware that so few extremely bright people who have questioned the Quinn, Rowden, Solway (QRS) concepts far more critically and more openly than you and John do not frequent the forum anymore. I ask myself why and I think I'll stick around until I know, as yet I have not digested enough to form a reasoned opinion. if the process of digesting info means it is to late to turn back, then so be it.

---

Back to the original basis of this thread,QM. I found a couple of relevant articles that I found interesting.

It is worth a look.

http://www.naturequest.net/Science\_Sites/whatsNew-science\_sites.html

I must warn you however, that it is one of the worst sites I have come across in terms of user friendliness.

Topics

"We have posted a critical-view article on Heisenberg's Uncertainty

|                                                                                                                                                                            |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                            | Principle challenging its contention that it represents a "law of Nature" and challenging therefore the entire foundation of Quantum Theory. We have posted two (2) critical-view articles challenging Einstein's Special Theory of Relativity at its very foundation: --one, dealing with the relativistic mass-energy concept; --the other, dealing with the relativistic space-time concept.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| WolfsonJakk Registered User Posts: 1437 (1/31/04 2:28 am) Reply                                                                                 | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> Once I also wrapped myself in scripture to protect myself from the cold. One day I realized I was no longer cold and no longer needed the scripture. It worked well when it was needed. This is David's point. QRS is an acronym for Quinn/Rowden/Solway, the administrators and founders of this forum. Tharan                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| DavidQuinn000 Forum Host Posts: 2166 (1/31/04 2:59 am) Reply  | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> Robert Larkin wrote: Quote: <hr/> DQ: "There is a lot of irony and double-play going on in this conversation. For example John and Robert both believe that truth does not reside in words, and yet they keep refering to scripture as though it were the last word on truth." RL: John and Robert both believe that truth does not reside in words, and yet they keep talking ... We talk because that is how humans communicate. <hr/> You're being evasive. It's pretty obvious that your understanding of spiritual truth comes, not from an inner understanding, but second-hand from Zen scripture. This is what makes your assertions that truth does not reside in words so ludricrous. If someone else had uttered this assertion, it might be worthy of consideration. But coming from your mouth, it sounds ludicrous. Quote: |

---

I don't have the time or the inclination to argue with you here so let's cut to the chase, David: I challenge you to debate on a neutral site. I'm sure The Ponderer's Guild or KIR would be amused to have it. Shall I attempt to set it up?

---

Sure, why not. Although, of course, there is no use pretending that Ponderer's Guild or KIR are "neutral". I've been on those forums before and they are both filled with people who are as much slaves to scripture as you are.

But no matter. There is no such thing as a "neutral venue" when it comes to matters of truth.

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                           | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| <input type="checkbox"/> Robert LarkinPosts: 24(1/31/04 2:00 pm)ReplyezSupporter | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> Thanks, David. The Ponderer's Guild owner, Guildenstern, has tentatively agreed to host the debate and he makes the suggestions that there should be 1. a moderated debate; 2. no distractions in the debate thread, i.e., comments by others will be made in a separate thread; and 3. that the topic be adequately framed for coherent debate. He might have additional suggestions to make after the TPG mods and admins have their inputs. With regard to framing the topic I would like to hear your suggestions since it was I who made the challenge. Naturally I would decline to debate what isn't worth debating but I'm sure you can suggest some relevant topics. All TPG rules are to be followed in the conduct of the debate and they are reasonable rules. They're linked on the main page if you're not familiar with them. Do please contribute your own ideas about format as well as topic. |
| cassiopeiaeRegistered UserPosts: 226(1/31/04 2:16 pm)Reply                       | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> oooh a duel...cough, I mean, debate...                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |

Reid Iford

Registered User

Posts: 1

(1/31/04 2:19 pm)

Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

I find the entire concept of debate -- particularly of the kind here -- antithetical to an awakened Buddha Heart.

It has been my own experience that words are a valuable and usually necessary tool to point an awakened one on their journey, but that ultimately they can become traps.

The words of "old wise men" are perhaps the most dangerous and treacherous traps of all. They take on a power and mysticism which begins to cloud the fact that they are simply a reflection of what someone was thinking at that moment.

And unless we KNOW they are the actual, literal words of that person -- and not words passed on orally (and modified in each telling) -- then we really don't know who we are quoting.

There is one thought in some branches of Buddhist philosophy I particularly enjoy:

A compassionate, enlightened Buddha would say "Each person (spiritually) is exactly where they should be at exactly this instant."

From that perspective, no one is right or wrong, and no one should be criticized by another.

I have always felt the greatest failure in Buddhism is when people try too hard to define what is right and what is the truth... and HOW one goes about determining all this.

On His own path to enlightenment, Buddha did not become a Buddhist. He did not follow Buddhism. He cleared his mind of misconceptions and words and set off to find His own way.

I feel -- at least for myself -- that this is the only real "path" that matters. To put it another way, the "right way (or path) for you is the one you discover is right for you."

"I do not seek to follow in the footsteps of the men of old. I seek the things they sought." Basho

The usual advice I give people on these topics -- or who ask me for the right way to "seek the truth" as if I would know that! -- is I tell them simply to go "sit under a tree!" ;)

A friend sent me the link to this thread. I read it, but found it disturbing and unpleasent. I am not comfortable being exposed to this.

Thank you for allowing me to post here.

Namaste.

"Quan Yin pu sa"

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1364
(1/31/04 2:45 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Quote:

---

Realise also that my activity here over the last week is abnormal behaviour for me, due to an a rare absence of both alcohol and ganja.

---

Ya gotta love this guy.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1439
(1/31/04 3:54 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Depends on the origin of the "ganja."

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2169
(1/31/04 5:02 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Reid Iford wrote:

Quote:

---

I find the entire concept of debate -- partuicularly of the kind here -- antithetical to an awakened Buddha Heart.

---

I can sympathize with this view. In many ways, engaging in a one-on-one debate can be demeanining and petty. But it depends on how each party approaches it. I always look at it as an opportunity to articulate some wise thoughts and sound reasonings, rather than focusing on the gladiatorial aspects of it. I believe that if one approaches any discussion or debate with pure motivations and love of truth, then it can become a very powerful form of communication.

--

Robert Larkin wrote:

Quote:

---

With regard to framing the topic I would like to hear your suggestions since it was I who made the challenge. Naturally I would decline to debate what isn't worth debating but I'm sure you can suggest some relevant topics.

---

You can choose. Anything to do with wisdom, truth, enlightenment, etc.

Lbartoli
Registered User
Posts: 357
(1/31/04 5:17 pm)
Reply

Quinn agrees to crush another one

---

Be sure to tell us how we might observe the battle.

John
Registered User
Posts: 72
(1/31/04 10:04 pm)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Kevin

-----

John quoted Hakuin:

Quote:

-----

"...he will surely come to see that the ground where the ancients lived and functioned is not found at any level of intellectual understanding."

-----

Unfortunately, your intellectual understanding of that teaching is wrong. However, Hakuin's teaching is correct when properly understood. Hakuin is referring to the deluded use of the intellect, rather than the enlightened use of it. In fact, of all the different kinds of Zen Buddhism, Hakuin's school of Buddhism is the most intellectual of all. That's why I favour it.

I would like to continue with this if you don't mind.

Here is the full quote that I originally posted.

"Well, if a person really has a mind to reach the basic ground that has been realised and confirmed by the Zen patriarchs, it is by no means impossible. As a start, he should work on the koan 'Does a dog have Buddha Nature?' If he concentrates on it single-mindedly and keeps at it for a long time without wavering or faltering, he is certain to break through to realisation. He must not stop there, however. He must cast all that he has attained aside, and turn to tackle one of the difficult-to-pass koans. If he proceeds this way, he will surely come to see that the ground where the ancients lived and functioned is not found at any level of intellectual understanding."

Hakuin is advising the use of koans - here is one attempt at a description of koans

"The koans do not represent the private opinion of a single man, but rather the highest principle ... [that - tmc ] accords with the spiritual source, tallies with the mysterious meaning, destroys birth-and-death, and transcends the passions. It cannot be understood by logic; it cannot be transmitted in words; it cannot be explained in writing; it cannot be measured by reason. It is like [...] a great fire that consumes all who come near it." (Chung-feng Ming-pen [1263-1323] quoted in Miura and Sasaki 1966:5)

Note: "It cannot be understood by logic; it cannot be transmitted in words; it cannot be explained in writing; it cannot be measured by reason."

And as is often stated when studying koans, "Begin to reason about it and you at once fall into error."

So, if your understanding is different please state it.

John

Edited by: John at: 1/31/04 10:11 pm

|                                                                                                                                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 522(1/31/04 10:39 pm)Reply                                                                                                                        | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> The koans do not represent the private opinion of a single man... So do the Koans represent the opinions of many men, developed over the ages, or do the koans have an inherent existence of their own meaning they just appeared. Is the writer a koan or a man?                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| JohnRegistered UserPosts: 73(1/31/04 11:05 pm)Reply                                                                                                                           | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> jimhaz ----- The koans do not represent the private opinion of a single man... ----- So do the Koans represent the opinions of many men, developed over the ages, or do the koans have an inherent existence of their own meaning they just appeared. Koans are used to break through delusion, they have been used by many, have been ratified by many. Is the writer a koan or a man? A lion! John         |
| ksolwayRegistered UserPosts: 323(1/31/04 11:44 pm)Reply  | Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality <hr/> John wrote: Quote: <hr/> I would like to continue with this if you don't mind. "The koans do not represent the private opinion of a single man, but rather the highest principle ... [that - tmc ] accords with the spiritual source, tallies with the mysterious meaning, destroys birth-and-death, and transcends the passions. It cannot be understood by logic; it cannot be transmitted in words; it cannot be explained in writing; it cannot be |

measured by reason. It is like [...] a great fire that consumes all who come near it." (Chung-feng Ming-pen [1263-1323] quoted in Miura and Sasaki 1966:5)

Note: "It cannot be understood by logic; it cannot be transmitted in words; it cannot be explained in writing; it cannot be measured by reason."

And as is often stated when studying koans, "Begin to reason about it and you at once fall into error."

---

My understanding is identical to the above, but different to your understanding.

Think of it this way: If you meditate on the question "Does a dog have Buddha Nature?" but without reasoning about it one iota, where do you think it will get you? Answer: absolutely nowhere.

Hakuin was strongly against people who simply sat and meditated, and contemplated their navel. That's why he used koans, and spoke in a very colourful and complicated fashion - to inspire thought.

Nagarjuna's writings are nothing more than a series of very tight reasonings that lead to enlightenment. As they are a true spiritual teaching, they also constitute a koan.

Hakuin is directing his teaching at people who are attached to a certain kind of reasoning very common in society, and an extreme form of it is found in academic circles. That common kind of reasoning has two characteristics:

1. Remoteness or having the nature of compartmentalization. The person treats the reasoning process as a kind of game, or exercise. He doesn't think with his whole being, sacrificing his soul, so to speak, at each step of the reasoning, but holds himself back, at a distance, merely watching on.
2. It is based on false concepts of inherent existence.

Hakuin doesn't want people to think about the question "Does a dog have Buddha nature?" using the ordinary reasoning I have outlined, because they will only be wasting their time, and his. He is trying to indicate to his students that they need to discover an altogether different kind of reasoning. It is the reasoning of the enlightened person - true reasoning.

Here is a koan from Jesus:

Quote:

---

It is I who am the light which is above them all. It is I who am the All. From me did the All come forth, & unto me did the All come forth, & unto me did the All extend. Split a piece of wood, & I am there. Lift up the stone, & you will find me there.

---

Now the ordinary person can't understand that with their ordinary reason can they?

Edited by: ksolway at: 1/31/04 11:48 pm

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2156

(1/31/04 11:56 pm)

Reply

---

---

Oh? So your 'pure' reason (which is no different to Kants) has become 'true' reason? All reason is true if it is reason Kevin.

You're afraid of reasons degrees?!

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 523

(2/1/04 12:37 am)

Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

"The koans do not represent the private opinion of a single man..... It cannot be understood by logic; it cannot be transmitted in words; it cannot be explained in writing; it cannot be measured by reason. It is like [...] a great fire that consumes all who come near it." (Chung-feng Ming-pen [1263-1323] quoted in Miura and Sasaki 1966:5)

I just think the statement is logically inconsistent and contradicts itself.

If it said -

A Koan's purpose cannot be understood by logic; cannot be transmitted in words or explained in writing and cannot be measured by reason, until, the highest principle that accords with the spiritual source, tallies with the mysterious meaning, destroys birth-and-death, and transcends the passions, has become inherent to ones nature.

Then I could make sense of it.

John
Registered User
Posts: 74
(2/1/04 12:52 am)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

ksolway

-----

John wrote:

-----

Note: "It cannot be understood by logic; it cannot be transmitted in words; it cannot be explained in writing; it cannot be measured by reason."

And as is often stated when studying koans, "Begin to reason about it and you at once fall into error."

-----

My understanding is identical to the above, but different to your understanding.

Think of it this way: If you meditate on the question "Does a dog have Buddha Nature?" but without reasoning about it one iota, where do you think it will get you? Answer: absolutely nowhere.

This is where you are mistaken and you have never studied koans properly.

That's why he used koans, and spoke in a very colourful and complicated fashion - to inspire thought.

You really don't have any idea.

One could say that koans use a language, it's called the language of the 'Uncreate'.

Here is a koan from Jesus:

Quote:

-----

It is I who am the light which is above them all. It is I who am the All. From me did the All come forth, & unto me did the All come forth, & unto me did the All extend. Split a piece of wood, & I am there. Lift up the stone, & you will find me there.

-----

Now the ordinary person can't understand that with their ordinary reason can they?

If you confuse these words of Jesus as koans you are again mistaken. They are fine words but they are not remotely akin to a koan.

As you are so firmly fixed in your mistaken views I'll leave it at that. Good luck to you but I'll leave you with a koan that one day you may benefit from.

Layman Pang visited the Great Master Ma-Tsu and asked, "Who is the one that does not accompany the ten thousand dharmas?" Ma-Tsu replied, "When you have swallowed all the waters of the West River in one gulp, then I shall tell you."

At these words Layman Pang was thoroughly enlightened.

John

ksolway

Registered User

Posts: 323

(2/1/04 1:29 am)

Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

John wrote:

Quote:

---

Kevin: Think of it this way: If you meditate on the question "Does a dog have Buddha Nature?" but without reasoning about it one iota, where do you think it will get you? Answer: absolutely nowhere.

John: This is where you are mistaken.

---

I notice that you provide no reasons why you think I'm mistaken. But if you don't believe in using reason then you're hardly going to be able to discuss this matter.

Quote:

---

Jesus: It is I who am the light which is above them all. It is I who am the All. From me did the All come forth, & unto me did the All come forth, & unto me did the All extend. Split a piece of wood, & I am there. Lift up the stone, & you will find me there.

John: They are fine words but they are not remotely akin to a koan.

---

If that's what you think, then I think you are one of those who Hakuin says "belittle the Buddha-patriarchs of the past".

Edited by: ksolway at: 2/1/04 2:22 am

cassiopeiae
Registered User
Posts: 229
(2/1/04 1:50 am)
Reply

---

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Isn't Buddhism based primarily on reason? That is my understanding anyway...

Edit: as is any other philosophy, even the words Jesus spoke are typically based on reason...

Edited by: cassiopeiae at: 2/1/04 2:31 am

Robert Larkin
Posts: 27
(2/1/04 2:12 am)
Reply
ezSupporter

---

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Of 'QRS'? Do all three of you folks set up as being enlightened? Do you claim Buddhahood or something? To be Buddhas or Bodhisattvas?

If all three of you are posing as enlightened men then I hope we can get all three of you into the debate to very publicly consider the nature of the enlightenment you claim. Three against one should be no worry for you at all. After all you are hardly hiding the fact you are geniuses, and it's certainly reasonable that the Buddha, Lao-tzu, Nagarjuna, and others would also trumpet themselves loudly.

---

John,

We're working on forum titles. Got any ideas?

These people will never admit the ineffable: you can't brag about it.

ksolway

Registered User

Posts: 324

(2/1/04 2:31 am)

Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Quote:

---

Of 'QRS'? Do all three of you folks set up as being enlightened? Do you claim Buddhahood or something? To be Buddhas or Bodhisattvas?

---

We certainly don't claim to be Buddhas, but we would claim to be enlightened, allowing for minor differences in definition.

Quote:

---

If all three of you are posing as enlightened men then I hope we can get all three of you into the debate to very publicly consider the nature of the enlightenment you claim.

---

We've been doing precisely that for many years.

Quote:

---

Three against one should be no worry for you at all.

---

I'm sure you'll be satisfied with David's responses.

John
Registered User
Posts: 75
(2/1/04 3:21 am)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Robert

We're working on forum titles. Got any ideas?

Here's one idea.

The Red-Tailed Carp

With this verse as a front piece. It's taken from the Book of Serenity, case 35 with a couple of small changes.

Wagging his head, shaking his tail, the red-tailed carp;
Independent through and through, he knows how to turn around.
Even if he has the art to cut off tongues,
Pulling his nose around subtly conveying the spirit.
Outside the screen of luminous jewels, wind and moon are like day;
In front of the cliff of dead trees, flowers and plants are always in spring.
Tongueless man, tongueless man,
The true order's completely upheld in one knowing phrase.
Walking alone in the kingdom, clear and comprehending,
Let everyone in the land be happy and joyful.

John

N0X23
Registered User
Posts: 74
(2/1/04 4:48 am)
Reply

Re: Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality

---

Quote:

---

Does a dog have Buddha Nature?

---

The dog IS Buddha Nature.

This is not a question or an answer, it is pointing to ones attachment to appearances.

To separate, catagorize or differentiate between Buddhas, dogs and Reality is attachment and clinging.

But if you want to get technical, the answer to the Koan is....The Eye can not see itself.

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

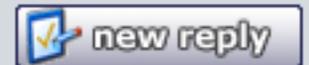

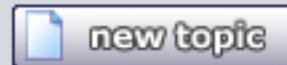

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

- > GENIUS FORUM
- > Questions on Mind

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                  | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 9(9/13/03 12:27 pm)Reply | Questions on Mind <hr/> SUBCONSCIOUS My subconscious, in union with my consciousness and memory, processes concepts/ideas, physical movement, vision (eye input -&gt; mental images), smells, sounds, tastes, sensations, physiological changes, etc etc, in fact, the subconscious has no easily definable beginning or ending, it extends to the furthest reaches and beyond our defined boundaries of body. A 'processor', such as the subconscious, is an apparent thing which has a relatively high throughput of causal flows and which determines, changes or distributes those causes according to their characteristics. Does the subconscious actually process ideas/concepts as such, or does it just access the memory at the 'bid' of the conscious mind (or causal circumstances)? CONSCIOUS(NESS) I experience words, sentences and mental images, and i will define them as thoughts/consciousness. Yet i am unsure of this. It seems so silly to be unsure of this doesn't it? But of course we are seeking definitions of an experience and thus, whilst we experience it, we cannot necessarily define it. |

We think we are conscious of our consciousness, but is this verifiable? Eg. If our consciousness experiences what seem to be memories of previous consciousness/thought(s), can we trust them? In other words, whilst we may consider our experience of memories of prior consciousness as verification of our consciousness, can we trust our experience of (what we define as) memories?

How do we differentiate memories from other input(s)? Eg. When dreaming our experiences seem real, yet we determine through our experience of sensory reality that they are only a product of memories, and yet, our experience of sensory reality is also faulty...

I subconsciously experience sensation, smell, sound, taste and visual images, and i will define them as sensory experiences. Consciousness may access (and thus experience) any one of these at any moment in time if caused to do so.

Are sensory input experienced directly by consciousness? My consciousness may be presented with the appropriate label for a smell, but does it experience the actual smell? If so, consciousness is comprised of words & sentences, images, smells, sounds, taste, and tactile sensations.

Awareness = the subconscious experience of visual images, smells, sounds, tastes and sensations that are not experienced by one's consciousness.
Perhaps awareness = memory?

Do emotions comprise of sensorial experience and periodic 'word' consciousness?

OR

Are emotions just a moment or period of sensorial experience with no other conscious thought, which we then reflect on to determine the 'appropriate' emotion?

Women rarely experience word consciousness. Logic and judgement is only present in word consciousness. The quality of logic and judgement is in proportion to the quality of word and sentence formation within consciousness.

Consciousness = masculine thinking = the experience of well formed sentences in ones consciousness.

Poor thinking = Jumbled words and poorly formed sentences in ones consciousness.

Unconsciousness = Awareness = No word or sentence formation in the mind.

***Can we truly state that consciousness has substance or physicality or that it it caused? If causality is (logically) unverifiable, we cannot assume that our consciousness has causes, and thus, that anything at all exists beyond it. Does this not negate the definition of the hidden void that states that it has the capacity to create consciousness?***

PRODUCTS OF, OR EXPERIENCES WITHIN, CONSCIOUSNESS

Are the mental processes of judgement and logic verifiable?
I think we would need to be certain of memories at the very least to be in any way certain of the above. If logic is the basis of one's philosophy, what basis does logic have?

Is there perhaps no Truth beyond "I think I think, therefore I think"?
Or, "I am conscious".

Is the 'I' (consciousness) that I think I am, really an I?
Certainly, to refute the above would be illogical. But whilst we may say that logic is fundamental to thought processes...how sure are we of logic?

Rhett

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 678
(9/13/03 12:37 pm)
Reply

Questions on Mind

---

Quote:

---

Rhett Hamilton:
Certainly, to refute the above would be illogical. But whilst we may say that logic is fundamental to thought processes...how sure are we of logic?

---

How sure are we of logic?
How can you measure surety?

|                                                                                                                                                                      |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 12(9/14/03 12:00 pm)Reply                                                                             | Re: Questions on Mind <hr/> DEL wrote: "How sure are we of logic?" David and Dan are sure of logic, but i am still working on my understanding of it. The nature of logic(A=A) is discussed extensively in the 'Genius Newsletters'. "How can you measure surety?" I have been told we can only do so with logic. As above, I am still working on it. Rhett |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 329(9/17/03 11:51 pm)Reply  | Re: Questions on Mind <hr/> You can measure surety by getting experience in making decisions. There is a physical/survival side to life which one must have a firm understanding of, prior to embarking on long term mental trips. Logic is almost ecsoteric to most folks natures.                                                                                                            |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1503(9/18/03 2:11 am)Reply                                                                                   | --- <hr/> What is ecsoteric you limp lazy lackey?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 334(9/18/03 10:26 am)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> You know Zaggie, if you didn't react I wouldn't pester you. It beats me how folks who are supposedly studying wisdom wouldn't realise that. Esoteric is prolly the wrong word, but today I couldn't be bothered thinking of a better one.                                                                                                                                 |

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 1489

(9/18/03 2:24 pm)

Reply

Re: ---

---

I don't think "esoteric" is inappropriate in the context. Logic, at the most basic level, is like that, just as serious philosophy is.

I suspect Zag is merely yanking your chain over your typo.

Dan Rowden

Rhett Hamilton

Registered User

Posts: 31

(9/27/03 9:45 am)

Reply

Re: Questions on Mind

---

Basis of Differentiation/Logic

Example 1.

Lets say that  $A=A$ .

Thus, A is differentiated from what it is not.

Thus, a logical statement would be 'A does not equal what it is not' (which could be called 'not A').

Thus, to say that  $A=\text{'something other than A'}$  would be illogical.

Example 2.

Lets say that A represents a 'thing' (which is less than the totality).

Thus, A is differentiated from the totality and other things.

Thus, a logical statement would be that 'A is finite'.

Thus, to say that 'A is infinite' would be illogical.

Example 3.

Lets say that  $A=A$  and  $B=B$ .

Thus, A is differentiated from B, and one or both of them is differentiated from the totality.

Thus, a logical statement would be 'A does not equal B'.

Thus, to say that  $A=B$  would be illogical.

Okay, so how do we apply this to abstract things? It is easy to apply to 'material' things, but what about concepts?

Rhett

cassiopeiae

Registered User

Posts: 102

(9/27/03 11:04 am)

Reply

Re: Questions on Mind

---

Quote:

---

Rhett said: Does the subconscious actually process ideas/ concepts as such, or does it just access the memory at the 'bid' of the conscious mind (or causal circumstances)?

---

The subconscious acts as a deductive reasoner. It takes informational 'clues' and processes the inevitable outcome of those clues. That is why sometimes one feels that they have a correct answer to something, when in actuality, it is incorrect. The subconscious has processed the incorrect clues and the result is an incorrect conclusion which is brought to the objective consciousness.

Quote:

---

Rhett said: How do we differentiate memories from other input(s)? Eg. When dreaming our experiences seem real, yet we determine through our experience of sensory reality that they are only a product of memories, and yet, our experience of sensory reality is also faulty...

---

These things are actually the result of the subconscious mind. When one experiences something, it often recalls dross that has been mis-organized in the subconscious for any number of reasons. The ideal way to solve this problem is not to differentiate, but to be aware of what we are experiencing. Being more aware of experience allows one to reflect different experiences on the subconscious in a clean manner, eliminating the crap of mundane existence.

Quote:

---

Rhett said: Are sensory input experienced directly by consciousness? My consciousness may be presented with the appropriate label for a smell, but does it experience the actual smell?

---

Yes, sensory input is experienced directly by consciousness. It is your waking normal state. The processing of the information is, however, processed in the subconscious. For example, I bought a different shampoo last week, upon smelling it, it smelled nice. After about a minute, I started to smell cat-pee...turned out to be the shampoo. My subconscious had correlated it to something other than my consciousness interpreted it as.

Quote:

---

Rhett said: Awareness = the subconscious experience of visual images, smells, sounds, tastes and sensations that are not experienced by one's consciousness. Perhaps awareness = memory?

---

I would say Awareness is what one actually takes in. The food of the subconscious. There is mundane awareness that one experiences as a general human going through the motions, and there are higher states which others experience.

Quote:

---

Rhett said: Certainly, to refute the above would be illogical. But whilst we may say that logic is fundamental to thought processes...how sure are we of logic?

---

Logic is nothing more than the rule of reason. Manly P. Hall said "Think well and live in harmony with your thoughts. Think logically and live consistently."

I dare to say that the subconscious is a logic machine. Taking the pieces of information and reasoning them into a coherent thought. Subconsciously, it can only be trusted by the premise of the conclusion. Consciously, it must lie with fact, if there is fact for it to compare to...

Edited by: cassiopeiae at: 9/27/03 11:15 am

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 40
(10/5/03 11:28 am)
Reply

Re: Questions on Mind

Hi Cassiopeiae,

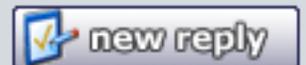

The essence of what we are doing here is use categorisation as a tool to try to understand and follow causal processes. This can have certain practical benefits, but we can never find truth in this manner, unless we use this process as a means to a different end.

If we are smart about it, the further we try and understand these processes through definitions the more we will realise and reinforce within us that we can never be certain about empirical phenomena. These processes thus have the benefit of revealing this very fact to us, the truth of causality. And if one reasons far enough and holds the concept of causality strongly enough in ones mind whilst doing so, one reasons ones way into enlightenment.

Consciousness creates all definitions, and thus, it creates its own reality. All there actually is is endless causal processes.

Rhett

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

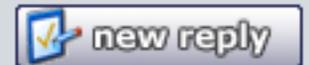

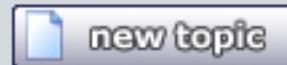

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Reading and Thinking note

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                            | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| huzhengRegistered UserPosts: 1(10/24/03 12:44 pm)Reply | Reading and Thinking note <hr/> Reading and Thinking noteI would like to try any new good idea, and put it into practice immediately.19. I am thinking, thinking continuously, to find a word to describe it, that is "Thinking Sparkle". It generate one after another systematically, solved a problem, then come another, the thinking is shining, then fade, but another thinking come and shining again... I needn't write down these thinking, needn't.... I want to stop thinking, but can't.20.Thinking is a good thing, it can guide your action, and confirm your action. But, Action is more important! I go to the boxing course, and then go dancing this morning, things all happen as i envisaged, this is not so good a feeling. I go to bed early today as want to think in the bed.21.StarDict's win32 port started today, it should last for one week, then release in September 28 :). The compile and link problem solved in the morning, the main window pop up in the afternoon, and the querying work in the evening :)22.Setting can be save and take effect in the morning, system tray icon be ok in the night, the windows API is so BAD!23.Sound work now, gnome_url, gnome_help, gnome_about, installer... hoho, it seems all porting finished.24.StarDict-2.4.1 released, the win32 port is very cool :) i go to the skating course this afternoon, hoho, my skating skill is the best in the students, it is a very pleasure :). I go to the Linux course this night, reading 10 pages' "Gone with the wind" feels very good, those words are so beautiful.25.reading "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland". Cai Li tell me a good website: calvino.yeah.net, it collected many English books, haha, it is | most likely i will finish them all.

26.Dived in to the smth.org's philosophy board until my eyes can't afford it. Things are inevitable, even you can foresee it, but fighting for it is interesting. The only true factor is powerful.

27.Philosophy is so useful! It help me a lot, and its effort exceled my anticipate, hoho, so powerful than your can imagine. A revolution is coming, i have induced it, i am so happy waiting it, just as the petrel happy flying on the sea waiting for the rainstorm's coming. Ming Zhang, a StarDict user, and a Ph.d Student in University of Rhode island, mailed to me and would like to recommend me to some professors who are his good friends. I am very happy with his mail, it encouraged me a lot. And his life is cool, just being my dream life, <http://www.ele.uri.edu/~mingz/> i am very glad to acquaint a new friend :) "Alice's adventures in wonderland" finished, the most impressive sentence to me is "Dinah my dear", once i had a cat too, i love it just as Alice love Dinah, but it is dead by the mice poison, my father just threw it, i find it in the laystall, with my little shovel, i buried it, that is a snow day, i cover its corpse with snow, then with clay, a women with a baby in her hand watched a little boy sobbed in the outside one hour or two. I still have some scotch tape in my diary which saved its footprint. Tang Hao and i both agreed that education is important and a Ph.d program is necessary.

28.Reading some anthropology articles, i have grow more intertesting in sociology and etc, but i still like computer science :) hoho, Linux kernel. Start reading "Through the looking-glass". Read a good sentence: i am the master of my fate, i am the captain of my soul.

29.I am so so so happy, as i find during the period after acquainted Hu Yan, i progressed so much, i would like to express my deepest thanks to her here, Hu Yan, Thank You!....I feel so sad in the night as raining. Life, so satisfied, can really satisfy you? I skim a biology book this night, it can't make me feel better :(

30.I feel happy again :) exciting will make your nerve get tired, then sadness come :) Keep you body good, then you will feel good. "Through the looking-glass" get finished. Start read "The Metamorphosis". I go dancing this night, it is interesting, and i find i can view people clearly, yes, dancing, thinking. Never trust the thinking which produced in the room.

The reason i don't go the have these courses, is that i study to those great masters directly by Internet, but not drink the rabbit's soup's soup. Most people are told that the car is important to you, the big house is important to you, you should fight for it, then you spend your whole life on it, you may get the car, then you find the helicopter is more important to you. They just told you that to keep you busy fighting for life and stop you from thinking. Most students are given many useless courses, and be told that you should remember these sentences, you should study hard on it. You are busy studying, never found that your never being thinking.

October 1. I get some photos of icelotus and laugh for the whole day, haha, haha, so lovely, so interesting, haha, i understand it suddenly, it nearly burst my sides, haha :)). The seems hardest issue will get a easiest answer at last :_).

This is my interest: Strong body, computer science, philosophy ,literature and sociology.

2. Go to mount EMei and traveled for two days.

4. Playing quake, happy killing and being killing. Ming Zhang's words:"life keeps changing and this is the magic of life". hoho, the magic life is so nice.

5. I am completely annoyed by "The Metamorphosis", Kafka has his father, hist mother and his young sister, i have my father, mother, and young brother. I hate you just as you hate blackbeetle! I never hate blackbeetle, mouse etc, i like them, i admire their vitality. Once i am niped by a mouse of the finger, after i am awoken, i just feel happy and interesting, oh, little mice, you are so hungry and lovely, if you don't flee, i will surely feed you something happily. "The Metamorphosis" get over, start reading "The Communist Manifesto", Marxist's thinking should be useful to me just as Nietzsche's. I feel very sad again :( i am me, only. My quake skill is still so good, i beat He Mingxing strippingly :)

6. Reading "The Communist Manifesto" 150 years after it is written is interesting. It is just a sank ideology. While reading the first chapter, you can see its limit easily. While reading the second chapter, i get startled on it. I understand "1984" more clearly. Yes, German's Nazis and Russia's Communist is just a pair. China's communist is not the exactly communist now. I understand the history more clearly. The history is not changed by some person, but by the immaterial ideology. I am Hu Zheng, Hu Zheng isn't me, it is only my name, you are communicating with Hu Zheng, not me. Start reading Henry David Thoreae's "Walden".

I go the ran 10 rings every two days, go skating twice per week, go dancing once per week, study boxing in the weekend, hoho, i like those sports that have no much rules and you can play with yourself or at most two.

I always remember this Chinese aphorism:"lived by worry, died by ease", are you leading a ease and happy life always? Be aware, you are becoming an idiot, you will be over. I see someone are leading the ease life, and consider their future should not be bad, hoho, i can foresee their tedium and misery future life that them can't get rid of.

7.Listen to classic music and read "Walden" is a very pleasure, i will try one month's reclusion half year later, that will be interesting and cool, hoho, i will do it.

8. Zhang Yong released the Linq-2.0a1 version, so cool, the new client is developed using QT library, this is the right choice(the previous version is my gtkmm client). May be i need to return to the computer field and help LinQ's development for one month. Oh, i get fully busy again :_) Skating is interesting, especially only you are dazzling there :) I decided to still leave LinQ's develop group, because i am fully attracted by philosophy, all my interest moved on this :) and, LinQ have already past the hardest period, i am no longer so important now, Zhang Yong can done it. :) i am sure Zhang Yong will success, LinQ will success. I am glad to have acquainted Zhang Yong, we always being good brothers.

9. Kill me please, i don't know how to install mine sweeping for your win98, i don't know how to make a web page that can click for 3 times, please kill me! Hi, I know nothing about computer. I resigned the SCU bbs's Linux board master today, i have be there for two years, and it is now to go.

10. Reading "Animal Farm". Browse the bbs's History board for the whole afternoon and the evening. Here is some of my naked photos: reciteword.cosoft.org.cn/huzheng/ :). I feel happy this night, but i think i should be little grieving in the heart. Drop your hope, then no lost; drop your love, then no sorrow. Playing, Happying? No, never!

11. Boxing, dancing, very interesting :) America have "Gone with the wind" for the woman, China only have "Pilgrimage to the West" for the man, so i think the condition of American women is higher, when will China's "Gone with the wind" be out? I go dancing this night, we changed so much. All appearance is just in vain, beautiful is just hallucination, i understood this. Overpass it, you must.

How can i alive without suffering :)

12. "Animal Farm" get over, it is so good a book. It is written about history, but written before history happens. Animalism? Communism? "Modern man was inadequate to cope with the demands of his history." Start reading "Sex and Character" by Otto Weininger and some other articles find in <http://www.theabsolute.net/minefield/index.html>, The Thinking Man's Minefield, a very good philosophy website.

13. I still receive some Thanks mails intermittently, it is little joy to me :) I get a mail from Tiebing Zhang(StarDict user), he give me some advices and recommend "Mere Christianity" to me and would like to mail it to me as it is hard to get it internal, so kind of him :) He give me this sentence:"Keep your heart of seeking truth and knowledge open. Do not let it been dampened by the material world and the corruption part of the society."

I find my eyes become very beautiful, more beautiful than whoever i have seen :_)

14. All philosophers are good at court woman, if they would like, because they understand woman, Nietzsche may be one of the few exceptions :) A boy who is good at philosophy at the age of 20 can be a perfect maiden killer if he has time :_) Philosophy is useless, those who don't know philosophy said this, but only those who have said this :) Philosophy is my most powerful weapon, secretly.

My roommates are all very busy dealing with the assignment, and Wu Chuanhui said to me: "Only you are at leisure", as I am reading, gazing, thinking, smiling, :) I answer to him: "You know, philosophers are always at leisure".

On October 4, 1903, Otto Weininger died by his own hand, at the age of twenty-three and a half years. He is a genius, who could no longer bear the burden of his own ghastly knowledge at the age of 23. I am reading it 100 years later, "with almost religious reverence". I get to know who will be my good friends by "Sex and Character".

I am the MAN.

I mail to some girls of my senior high school classmate these days (for I lack the communicating with them ago), and we chat peacefully, recollecting that period, the senior high school life was so beautiful.

Tiebing Zhang has already sent that book to me, and give me a long mail, he is a Christian. To be honest, my philosopher concept is irreligion, I will read the book he sent to me, but I will read some irreligion philosopher book first before receiving this book.

15. I buy a month ticket for skating today, I will go skating for one hour every day in the next month, hoho, you can imagine how cool my skating skill will be then.

I am born with Internet.

Tang Hao has built his website today, jdict.yeah.net, super cool.

16. An idea appears in my thought, a very cool idea, or a very cool discovery, it will change the history! I need another several months to mature this idea, then I will build a new website for it. Super Man. 100 years ago. now it comes.

My application of opening the "Thinking" board in SCU bbs is denied, hoho, yes, thinking is dangerous, most people can't afford it. I need to change my environment, this is confirmed again now.

"Sex and Character" is so great a book, I learn many things from it, hurry reading.

I have a sense that I am a philosophy genius. I get to know my way...

Apply philosophy to daily life will get you the feeling of using magic :)

I cut my hair to 0.68 cm today, and buy a cap, it is very cool and look more younger :)

Go skating this night, flying there with the music :_)

Drink some grape wine of Wang Wenzan's, it tastes good...hoho, it seems the life is too good now :) The most happy life comes from the mental life.

17. StarDict added the Macedonian translation :) Where is it?
18. When you understand the ego, you understand the whole world. I stand there, close my eyes, feel the ego, and the external universe. I have the feel of being god, that the feeling of understand everything. Look at myself, that is god. Otto Weininger.
I received the reply mail of Kevin Solway :)
I will study German after the TOFEL examination, but not French, i changed my mind :) So many great philosophers speak German!
I become the most erotic boy in the ball, play with every girls, especially these tall beautiful girl, even a white face yellow hair handsome boy. Otto Weininger can't analyze prostitution completely, i will do this work. My love will be destroyed. I may be die as Otto Weininger, but i would like to devote my life to the utmost value, that is my mission, as being a genius.

cassiopeiae
Registered User
Posts: 139
(10/24/03 12:48 pm)
Reply

Re: Reading and Thinking note

---

?

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

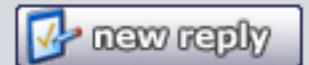

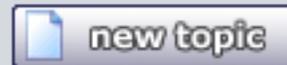

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Reason?

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                          | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| HywelRegistered UserPosts: 32(11/22/03 7:06 am)Reply |  Reason? <hr/> Im writing this because when considering philosophical issues, I can know the nanswer, but not be able to explain why I know. This doesnt seem very logical to me, but nevertheless it is extraordinarily accurate. As an example, I'm going to use the "fate/free will" issue, since its one I can "look back on" in a way, and everyone should be familiar with it, so I'm free to explain what the hell I'm talking about. When I first thought about this issue, I "asked myself"(bearing in mind that the question/answer thing didnt actually take place, its just a way to express it) whether fate and free will (as i then understood them), were true :- Fate (Everything is predestined, I merely obey) = NopeFree Will (I'm in control) = Nope This bothered me, I dont mind telling you, traditionally people choose one or the other, but neither were acceptable. When i looked at them, they both seemed to have some truth to them, but they were both wrong. After a while, i modified my definitions until they were true :- Fate (I'm not in control) = YupFree Will (I make decisions, and these influence events) = Yup So now they were both true in a sense. Admittedly, the definition of "Fate" covered everything ever, and "Free Will" only covered the special case of |

the things I did. I was pretty much stuck with this problem of how both could be true, yet seemingly unreconcilable, until I read "Poison for the Heart". It inspired me to, among other things, unite the two.

I tried very hard to write a definition of this "united theory", but they all seemed to miss the mark. Here are some attempts anyway :-

"Fate is correct, I am not in control. Free Will is how Fate is manifest through humans."

"All things effect all other things. Free Will is our effect, as seen through a magnifying glass because we are so close."

"Fate = I am not in control

Free Will = I am not in control, but i think I am"

I didnt have a name for this "united theory", so I temporarily named it "karma",but on this forum they call it "Cause and Effect".

But the point is, I can know if something is true or not before I know why. Now I am absolutely sure that my understanding of the Fate/Free Will issue is correct, but I still cannot adequately explain what my understanding is. But i ask myself if my understanding of this is correct, and I get a metaphorical "YES!".

This also applies to my understanding of the term "karma". I have always been absolutely sure that the "literal reincarnation", "literal past and future lives" part of karma was wrong. But i cannot rationally tell you why.

Where do these answers come from? Is this the "voice of reason"? If so, its doesnt seem very reasonable...

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 290
(11/22/03 10:18 am)
Reply

 Re: Reason?

---

I don't 'know' nothing.
Except for this one: You met love, Hywel, and with that you are love.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 126
(11/23/03 1:00 pm)
Reply | Edit

Re: Reason?

---

Hi Hywel,

It is the voice of limited or partial reason, in concert with faith.

Unless you know something fully, you don't know it, and you need to keep reasoning until you reach certainty.

At the moment your concept of will is still in the realm of faith.

Rhett

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 301
(11/23/03 4:14 pm)
Reply

Reason!

---

Dan Rowden says that I am ludicrous. If there is any truth in it, then it's about time you shut the hell up, Rhett.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 783
(11/25/03 10:41 am)
Reply

Re: Reason!

---

Not that I remember but I'm pretty sure, and I think the evidence bears this one out, that when I was a baby I had all sorts of correct knowledge which followed no path of higher reasoning and had nothing to do with faith. This would seem to invalidate the idea that correct knowledge has to have anything to do with a precisely reasoned definitional path of logic and universe of discourse even. It also seems to invalidate the idea that faith has to be related to incorrect knowledge.

Consciousness, the brain, the genome, evolution, forces, the universe and infinity don't bow to higher reasoning, it courtseys to them, and dances.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 132
(11/26/03 10:12 am)
Reply | Edit

 Re: Reason!

---

Dave Toast wrote:

Not that I remember but I'm pretty sure, and I think the evidence bears this one out, that when I was a baby I had all sorts of correct knowledge which followed no path of higher reasoning and had nothing to do with faith. This would seem to invalidate the idea that correct knowledge has to have anything to do with a precisely reasoned definitional path of logic and universe of discourse even.

Anyone that does not know Ultimate Truth is incapable of determining whether anything they think is true or not. This statement cannot be falsified, it is logically valid. Thus, anyone that does not know Ultimate Truth does not have a single leg to stand on, they exist solely in a web of self-deceit. They cannot even truthfully declare their own ignorance.

It also seems to invalidate the idea that faith has to be related to incorrect knowledge.

Correct, faith is irrelevant to the truth or otherwise of the knowledge in question. Faith is 'belief which is not based on (logical) proof'.

Consciousness, the brain, the genome, evolution, forces, the universe and infinity don't bow to higher reasoning, it courtseys to them, and dances.

Yes, and it doesn't courtsey to false or inadequate reason.

Rhett

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1793
(11/26/03 10:17 pm)
Reply

 ----

---

Quote:

---

Anyone that does not know Ultimate Truth is incapable of determining whether anything they think is true or not. This statement cannot be falsified, it is logically valid. Thus, anyone that does not know Ultimate Truth does not have a single leg to stand on, they exist solely in a web of self-deceit.

They cannot even truthfully declare their own ignorance.

---

This is extremely unfortunate. Rhett must have a head like the arse of an animal with a particularly repellent arse. Luckily for Rhett, this is not ultimate, but only truth. He can change it if he focuses his cheese, and burns it off with acid.

Consciousness curtsy?! What a dainty little maid you must be Rhett!

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 407

(11/27/03 10:57 am)

Reply

Re: ----

---

Anyone that does not know Ultimate Truth is incapable of determining whether anything they think is true or not. This statement cannot be falsified, it is logically valid. Thus, anyone that does not know Ultimate Truth does not have a single leg to stand on, they exist solely in a web of self-deceit. They cannot even truthfully declare their own ignorance.

Basically what you are saying that those on a journey to enlightenment 'do not have a leg to stand on' and 'exist solely on a web of self-deceit' until at some point they decide they are enlightened. So if they become enlightened everything leading them to this position may in fact be untruthful.

Only an enlightened person can truly declare their own ignorance :)

Rhett Hamilton

Registered User

Posts: 135

(11/27/03 12:49 pm)

Reply | Edit

Re: ----

---

Rhett wrote: Anyone that does not know Ultimate Truth is incapable of determining whether anything they think is true or not. This statement cannot be falsified, it is logically valid. Thus, anyone that does not know Ultimate Truth does not have a single leg to stand on, they exist solely in a web of self-deceit. They cannot even truthfully declare their own ignorance.

Jimhaz: Basically what you are saying that those on a journey to enlightenment 'do not have a leg to stand on' and 'exist solely on a web of self-deceit' until at some point they decide they are enlightened. So if they become enlightened everything leading them to this position may in fact be untruthful.

Rhett: No. They cannot be certain about the knowledge that is leading them to enlightenment until they become enlightened, and if they become enlightened then obviously the important truths were contained within the knowledge that lead up to it.

Jimhaz: Only an enlightened person can truly declare their own ignorance :)

Rhett: No. During enlightenment one has no ignorance to declare.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1799

(11/27/03 11:46 pm)

Reply

 ----

---

Quote:

---

Rhett: No. During enlightenment one has no ignorance to declare.

---

Would one not then be ignorant of ignorance since one would not possess it to know it any longer? I mean, to take heed of ignorance, say in the situation of an encounter with an unenlightened person, would be inconceivable since a person no longer knowing ignorance would only address that in another which knows or is known.

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 1549

(11/28/03 12:34 am)

Reply

 Re: ----

---

So, why are you here?

|                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1803(11/28/03 1:06 am)Reply |  --- <hr/> I'm an explorer from outer space collecting something, like e.t but without the Rhett-head, or trunk. Not vegetables though, nor animal or mineral.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1804(11/28/03 1:10 am)Reply |  --- <hr/> I'm here to steal your souls suckers! (:D)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
| BiggierRegistered UserPosts: 1(11/28/03 9:45 am)Reply    |  Re: Reason? <hr/> We can never know if we have free will because, in order to even ask the question, it presupposes we already do. Besides, even if we don't, we have to live our lives acting as if we do. Why? Because without free will there can be no morality. There can be no way to either praise or condemn anything anyone does, right? Not, of course, that you have any real say in the matter anyway if free will is just an illusion. In any event, respecting the REALLY Big [Most Primordial] Questions, we are analogous to the folks in Flatland trying to figure out What Flatland Is. Meanwhile, they haven't a clue about the third dimension at all, right? We do, of course, but according to Brian Green, in string theory there may be as many as 13 separate dimensions. Give or take a few? Biggie |

Rhett Hamilton

Registered User

Posts: 141

(11/28/03 11:44 am)

Reply | Edit

 Re: Reason?

---

We can never know if we have free will because, in order to even ask the question, it presupposes we already do.

Your statement is illogical. Will relates to the conscious directing of one's experiences, or more correctly - the illusion of the conscious directing of one's experiences. Thus, your questioning of whether we have will or not is fundamentally separate to an investigation of the nature of will. In other words, our experiences of consciousness are valid (albeit often deluded) regardless of the nature of our will.

Even though we ultimately do not have will, we can nevertheless determine our experiences, and we can discern and experience truth.

Besides, even if we don't, we have to live our lives acting as if we do. Why? Because without free will there can be no morality. There can be no way to either praise or condemn anything anyone does, right?

Any conscious individual must necessarily make decisions, thus, morality is a valid notion. Just because people are caused to make immoral decisions does not mean that they should not be condemned, in fact, proper consideration of the nature of causality leads one to realise that it is an important aspect of causal forces that action is taken to curb immorality.

Not, of course, that you have any real say in the matter anyway if free will is just an illusion.

It might help for you to think of the mind as a 'well of causes', it has so many internal causal happenings that it has an exceptionally large capacity for acting independently of its immediate environment.

In any event, respecting the REALLY Big [Most Primordial] Questions, we are analogous to the folks in Flatland trying to figure out What Flatland Is.

You are, not me.

Meanwhile, they haven't a clue about the third dimension at all, right? We do, of course, but according to Brian Green, in string theory there may be as many as 13 separate dimensions. Give or take a few?

Science is not about truth. It's nature is wholly separate to a truthful investigation and understanding of the nature of Reality.

Rhett

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1807

(11/28/03 2:54 pm)

Reply

 Immorality

Rhett:--

Quote:

---

Even though we ultimately do not have will, we can nevertheless determine our experiences, and we can discern and experience truth.

---

How is that Rhett if we have no will?

Quote:

---

Any conscious individual must necessarily make decisions, thus, morality is a valid notion. Just because people are caused to make immoral decisions does not mean that they should not be condemned, in fact, proper consideration of the nature of causality leads one to realise that it is an important aspect of causal forces that action is taken to curb immorality.

---

You think the making of decisions makes the notion known as morality valid?! If it is only a notion, then what is it really but the prejudice of punishers? Morality is the safe-guard of bad conscience. It does nothing to celebrate the supramoral, the amoral, which (as I've said long ago here before) pleases to side with what is immoral.

Are you religious Rhett?

Edited by: suergaz at: 11/28/03 3:10 pm

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 306
(11/28/03 4:20 pm)
Reply

Re: Immorality

---

Rhett is an ex-Jehova's Witness.

N0X23
Registered User
Posts: 21
(11/28/03 5:13 pm)
Reply

Re: Immorality

---

Quote:

---

Rhett: No. During enlightenment one has no ignorance to declare.

---

In Enlightenment one has no one to declare.

Biggier
Registered User
Posts: 2
(11/29/03 2:12 am)
Reply

Re: Reason?

---

Rhett,

What does logic have to do with our futile attempts at grappling with the biggest of the Big Questions---the most primordial of them all?

Why does anything exist at all? Why as it does and not some other way? Is existence infinite? If so, what does this mean objectively?

Or, instead, was existence created? If so, by what or whom? Out of what? Our of nothing at all? If so, what IS "nothing at all"?

Is there a teleological purpose behind existence? if so, what is it? how would we begin to grasp it? how does this very exchange we are having "fit" into it?

When you think about time and space either starting and stopping...or simply "being there" forever and ever...both "explanations" are beyond what we are capable of grasping Rationally or Logically or Epistemologically.

The question of having or not having "free will" is, in my opinion, just as far out on the metaphysical limb as all of the ones above. And once you go out that far into the ontological realm, reason itself is sucked down into a kind of intellectual Black Hole. Our ignorance is such that we would not even know how to frame the relevant questions let alone imagine we can derive the Most Rational Answers.

Human "will" relates to far, far more than our "conscious" attempts to ensnare it philosophically in Definitions and Concepts and Theory. It is embedded, as well, in our biological and psychological predispositions, in the evolutionary interactions that engendered genetic predispositions. We are, after all, still just naked apes, right?

People are "caused to do immoral things"...but should be "condemned" anyway? Okay, let us take the example of Hitler and the Holocaust. Situate your abstractions and definitions in this particular historical reality.

In any event, sans God, even if it is assumed we are "autonomous" individuals able to "freely choose" our behaviors, there is no way to differentiate right from wrong. At least not objectively, essentially or universally. The only way, for example, Kant was able to delude himself that we are was to posit a manifestation of God that was construed from "practical" rather than "pure" reason. But God is God is God to me. Without him, human moral interactions are merely an exchange of particular existential vantage points only.

Biggie

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 1555

(11/29/03 2:25 am)

Reply

Re: Reason?

---

You sound like you got overwhelmed and gave up on thought.

Welcome to the forum btw.

Dan Rowden

Edited by: drowden at: 11/29/03 2:27 am

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 142
(11/29/03 11:47 am)
Reply | Edit

 Re: Immorality

Suergaz wrote:

How is that Rhett if we have no will?

Read David's book.

You think the making of decisions makes the notion known as morality valid?! If it is only a notion, then what is it really but the prejudice of punishers? Morality is the safe-guard of bad conscience. It does nothing to celebrate the supramoral, the amoral, which (as I've said long ago here before) pleases to side with what is immoral.

Read David's book.

Are you religious Rhett?

Not in the common sense of the word.

Rhett

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

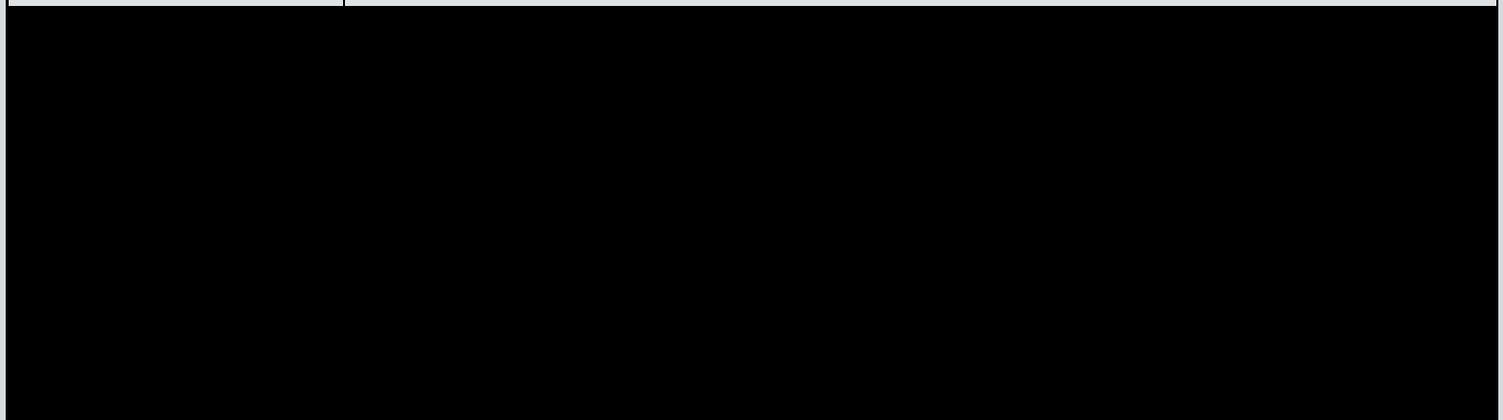

> Reason?

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                 | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1813(11/29/03 11:52 am)Reply              | ----<hr/> You cannot answer me! Stop telling me to read david's book you ape!                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 143(11/29/03 12:19 pm)Reply   Edit | Re: Immorality<hr/> Rhett wrote: During enlightenment one has no ignorance to declare.NOX wrote: In Enlightenment one has no one to declare.What is your definition of enlightenment NOX?Is that photo a declaration of yourself?Rhett |

Rhett Hamilton

Registered User

Posts: 144

(11/29/03 1:05 pm)

Reply | Edit

Re: Reason?

---

Biggier wrote:

What does logic have to do with our futile attempts at grappling with the biggest of the Big Questions---the most primordial of them all?

What is that question? If it is worth asking i can answer it using logical principles.

Why does anything exist at all? Why as it does and not some other way?

Things exist because they are caused to exist. This is substantiated by the fact that nothing can arise uncaused. It is a fundamentally deluded question to ask why things exist in the way they do and not some other way. Things just are as they are caused to be.

Is existence infinite? If so, what does this mean objectively?

Existence, 'things', are finite. How could something exist if it were not finite? The concept of 'subjective or objective existence' is fundamentally deluded, nothing can exist outside of our minds conception, there is only one experienced reality.

Or, instead, was existence created? If so, by what or whom? Out of what? Out of nothing at all? If so, what IS "nothing at all"?

Existence is caused. To ask 'what' caused it is a fundamentally deluded question, no 'what' exists beyond the mind.

Is there a teleological purpose behind existence? if so, what is it? how would we begin to grasp it? how does this very exchange we are having "fit" into it?

There is no teleological purpose other than the infinite's grand unfolding. We can grasp the nature of Reality with our mind with the use of absolute truths. This interaction fits straight into my conception of existence/ Reality.

When you think about time and space either starting and stopping....or simply "being there" forever and ever...both "explanations" are beyond what we are capable of grasping Rationally or Logically or Epistemologically.

Time is purely a creation of consciousness as a way of conceptualising change. Space can have limits, but the infinite cannot. Whilst you cannot, I can grasp the nature of space and time, rationally and logically.

The question of having or not having "free will" is, in my opinion, just as far out on the metaphysical limb as all of the ones above. And once you go out that far into the ontological realm, reason itself is sucked down into a kind of intellectual Black Hole. Our ignorance is such that we would not even know how to frame the relevant questions let alone imagine we can derive the Most Rational Answers.

If you read David's book you will have all the answers.

Human "will" relates to far, far more than our "conscious" attempts to ensnare it philosophically in Definitions and Concepts and Theory. It is embedded, as well, in our biological and psychological predispositions, in the evolutionary interactions that engendered genetic predispositions. We are, after all, still just naked apes, right?

What you are saying is true for most people, but those that are perfectly enlightened have completely transcended these aspects of their humble origins. During enlightenment one's will is 100% conscious.

People are "caused to do immoral things"....but should be "condemned" anyway? Okay, let us take the example of Hitler and the Holocaust. Situate your abstractions and definitions in this particular historical reality.

I value Truth, and since Hitler did far more to hinder it than promote it I would condemn him.

In any event, sans God, even if it is assumed we are "autonomous" individuals able to "freely choose" our behaviors, there is no way to differentiate right from wrong. At least not objectively, essentially or universally. The only way, for example, Kant was able to delude himself that we are was to posit a manifestation of God that was construed from "practical" rather than "pure" reason. But God is God to me. Without him, human moral interactions are merely an exchange of particular existential vantage points only.

Values can only ever be particular vantage points, but in my opinion there are good and bad vantage points.

Rhett

Edited by: Rhett Hamilton at: 12/1/03 10:31 am

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1816

(11/29/03 3:50 pm)

Reply

 ----

Rhett:--

Quote:

---

Existence, 'things', are finite. How could something exist if it were not finite? The concept of 'subjective or objective existence' is fundamentally deluded, nothing can exist outside of our minds conception, there is only one experienced reality.

---

The first sentence is fine. The first part of the second sentence also, but the second and third parts of the second sentence are untrue.

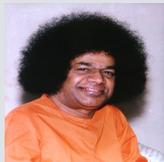

N0X23

Registered User

Posts: 22

(11/30/03 4:17 am)

Reply

 Re: Reason?

Quote:

---

Is that photo a declaration of yourself?

---

LOL... Absolutely not. Its a response to the seemingly sarcastic accusation by Dan Rowden that I am a "hidden guru" so I jokingly used the pic of the sex-crazed, hermaphrodite guru, Sai Baba as a joke.

Quote:

---

What is your definition of enlightenment NOX?

---

I am not sure that my definition has any relevance to you or any other and by their very nature definitions are conceptual, limited and inaccurate. Not only that, I would imagine that one would need be enlightened for a true and real definition, but here is snippet of my limited understanding...

An attainment of cessation,
The pathless practice,
The realization of No-Thing,
A moment, an impermanent state, Caused,
A jump into the Abyss,
Sobering,
An identification with and not as,
Stages, Selflessness, Enlightening,
A turning over,
The sky and mountains seeing themselves,
Perception with out a perceiver,
Alta vision,
Pure functioning,
An understanding,
The wind kissing itself upon your cheek,

And my personal favorite...

Awake.

Biggier
Registered User
Posts: 4
(11/30/03 9:40 am)
Reply

 Re: Reason?

---

Rhett,

You say things like, "things exist because they are caused to exist" as though this were actually all that need be said about the nature of existence per se. It is analogous, however, to a physicist describing gravity by denoting its properties, by denoting its effects through experiments and observations and calculations...as though this tells us What Gravity Is. It doesn't.

No "what" exists beyond the mind? And, aside from merely stating this is true, how would you go about demonstrating it to someone who insists it is not true?

In fact, all of your conjectures [at least to me] read like Kant's a priori deductions respecting human moral philosophy. None of which, of course, can be produced or replicated empirically or phenomenologically. But then that was Kant's point, wasn't it? The noumenal "explanations" must exist because it is a practical necessity that they exist. Without them, we could not deduce such things as categorical imperatives or the Moral Law or a Good Will.

What do you base your own deductions on---aside from a priori assumptions that you are right?

In a similar vein, you maintain that while moral convictions can only be derived from a particular vantage point, some vantage points are good and some bad. Says who? Kant dealt with Hume's radical skepticism [and demolished all the old metaphysical contraptions] by positing God without the long white beard. But God is God to me. God is analogous to the ontological rim and the teleological rim on the wheel of life. Each one of us "mere mortals" are the spokes linked to The Good through God. Take God away, however, and the spokes all collapse in on top of each other. Then who is to decide what is or is not Right and Wrong. Based on what calculation?

Biggie

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1818

(11/30/03 11:56 am)

Reply

 ----

Biggie, God is God to you? What are you hiding in this word?

Paul

Registered User

Posts: 311

(11/30/03 12:14 pm)

Reply

 ---

Good old metaphorical 'The Kingdom of God is within you' says it all. Unfortunately though, too many people think there is a God outside of them, separate from them. That is not true.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1060

(11/30/03 1:12 pm)

Reply

 ----

Look at the things you are calling him, Suergaz. A dainty maid, a common twat. Are you thinking what I'm thinking?

|                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1820(11/30/03 2:51 pm)Reply     |  ---- <hr/> What are you thinking Anna?! I'm only being brattish to test the mettle of this egregious character who is trying to curb my divine immorality! (:D)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1062(12/1/03 1:02 am)Reply |  The Sour Maid <hr/> I think he's doing what I should have - signed on as a man. But he talks like a woman.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
| BiggierRegistered UserPosts: 5(12/1/03 5:36 am)Reply         |  Re: ---- <hr/> Suergaz, Like all inherently ambiguous words, we take out of "God" what we put into it: our own existentially persuasive and essentially meaningless and absurd "self". God to me is just a metaphor for all of those profoundly mysterious Primordial Questions we do not have a freaking clue as to how to "rationally" approach, let alone encompass. God is also a metaphor for omniscience and omnipotence. Without God, we see things from the perspective of but one of 6,000,000,000 vantage points on a tiny little planet in a tiny little solar system in a humdrum galaxy of a billion Suns embedded in a universe encompassing yet billions of additional galaxies. Some, in fact, speculate that our own universe is but one of an infinite number of parallel universes that may encompass [per string theory] as many as 13 different dimensions. So, think about what you think you know about reality. Now put it in contexts like these: If you put a single grain of sand in the world's largest cathedral it is speculated there would be more volume of sand in that church than there are stars in the entire [known] universe. If the centers two big galaxies [literally billions and billions of stars] were to pass right through each other, it is conjectured there might not even be a single collision. If a photon of light traveling at 186,000 thousand miles a SECOND left an | object farthest out in the known universe, it would take ten billion YEARS for it to reach us.

That's called perspective. I don't even think the word "God" does it justice sometimes.

Biggie

Rhett Hamilton

Registered User

Posts: 148

(12/1/03 10:22 am)

Reply | Edit

 Re: Reason?

---

To Biggie,

You say things like, "things exist because they are caused to exist" as though this were actually all that need be said about the nature of existence per se. It is analogous, however, to a physicist describing gravity by denoting its properties, by denoting its effects through experiments and observations and calculations...as though this tells us What Gravity Is. It doesn't.

What i said is complete as such, you are just incapable of discerning it's meaning, so in effect it is not "all that need be said" ...for you to understand it.

Your analogy is innapropriate. You are confusing empirical investigations with logical investigations/proofs. Empirical investigations are about developing the best possible model to suit one's purposes, and are inherently uncertain. This is because our mind is necessarily the creator/experiencer of things - and because things necessarily operate on the basis of cause and effect. Thus, no one thing - such as your consciousness - can possibly know any other thing in it's entirety. It can only create a representation of it that is based on whatever evidence it experiences. Logical investigations, on the other hand, are about what is necessarily true or false.

No "what" exists beyond the mind? And, aside from merely stating this is true, how would you go about demonstrating it to someone who insists it is not true?

By furnishing them with the logical proofs that underpin it, or referring them to where they can read about them and then discussing it. Since the mind is necessarily what creates/experiences things, no-thing (including concepts) can exist outside of the mind. What is outside the mind at any moment in time is wholly incapable of being experienced in that moment, it is wholly incapable of presenting an appearance or having any form. As per the proofs of the nature of cause and effect, consciousness is necessarily caused to exist, and thus, must be caused by that which has the capacity to cause it (and therefore it is not caused by nothingness). The causal agent of consciousness could be called the 'hidden void'. Nothing more can possibly be known about the hidden void.

In fact, all of your conjectures [at least to me] read like Kant's a priori deductions respecting human moral philosophy. None of which, of course, can be produced or replicated empirically or phenomenologically. But then that was Kant's point, wasn't it? The noumenal "explanations" must exist because it is a practical necessity that they exist. Without them, we could not deduce such things as categorical imperatives or the Moral Law or a Good Will.

I haven't read much of Kant, so I can't really comment, except to say that what you say above does not seem particularly relevant.

What do you base your own deductions on---aside from a priori assumptions that you are right?

Logical proofs.

In a similar vein, you maintain that while moral convictions can only be derived from a particular vantage point, some vantage points are good and some bad. Says who?

Says me. I would be foolish to not project my values, it would be a form of self-denial, and I could not possibly keep them within myself anyway. Any person that conducts a thorough process of reasoning will necessarily conclude that the Truth is the only justifiable core value.

Kant dealt with Hume's radical skepticism [and demolished all the old metaphysical contraptions] by positing God without the long white beard. But God is God is God to me. God is analogous to the ontological rim and the teleological rim on the wheel of life. Each one of us "mere mortals" are the spokes linked to The Good through God. Take God away, however, and the spokes all collapse in on top of each other. Then who is to decide what is or is not Right and Wrong. Based on what calculation?

On what evidence do you base your notion of God and what is good? Is your God finite or infinite?

Rhett

Biggier
Registered User
Posts: 6
(12/1/03 12:28 pm)
Reply

 Re: Reason?

---

Rhett,

When something is said to be "complete as such", "as such" is generally just another way of saying that, "based on the internal logic of my own definitions [assumptions], this concept is true". It is, in other words, merely a tautology.

And unlike, say, Newtonian physics, there is no way to recalculate the variables so as to come up with a better/alternate theory as Einstein did. And then Einstein, himself, was aghast when the quantum folks started brandishing ideas like the "uncertainty principle".

In short, there are no "paradigm shifts" possible when the concepts are merely words presumed to reflect an a priori deductive logic.

Analytic truths may work reasonably well when the logic that is used in the syllogisms is readily established: All men are mortal, Bob is a man, therefore Bob is mortal. How, on the other hand, would you go about constructing a similar relationship between premises and conclusions respecting "free will" and/or the nature of "reason" when the subject itself [you] is "inside" that which it is attempting to express objectively "by definition"? We are analogous to those infamous Flatlanders trying to ascertain "logically" the nature of Flatland. Meanwhile they have no real grasp on the third dimension at all.

You start with what the mind "necessarily" is; but the mind itself is merely one particular effect in a long, long, long, long string of evolutionary interactions. To speculate on what the mind "necessarily" is in the vast, vast context of All There Is would, in my view, be like reading the first verse in the Bible and speculating on what God is.

Where we really go our separate ways, however is in how we construe the "self". To me it is, by and large, merely a delusion, an existential contraption that is constructed, deconstructed and reconstructed over and over again from the cradle to the grave. The "mind's eye" notes new experiences, new relationships, new ideas and then has to ceaselessly intertwine/integrate them into all of the old experiences, relationships and ideas in order to reconfigure all the parts into a new "whole"; which, again is, by and large, illusory.

Truth, respecting that which is most important to people---how OUGHT I to think, feel and behave around others---is, perhaps, the biggest delusion of all. For over 2500 years philosophers have struggled to come up with some sort of ontological/teleological/metaphysical agenda by which to differentiate Right from Wrong. They have all failed miserably. And the proof is that there is not a single, solitary moral issue that we are any closer to "resolving" today than back when Socrates took his act on the road in Athens.

As anyone passionate about philosophy/science will tell you, it is not the responsibility of someone who does NOT believe in the existence of something to demonstrate its non-existence; it is, instead, the responsibility of those who DO believe to demonstrate this.

But that just takes us back to your internal logic and definitions and deductive logic again, doesn't it?

Biggie

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1064
(12/1/03 2:02 pm)
Reply

 string theory

---

Some, in fact, speculate that our own universe is but one of an infinite number of parallel universes that may encompass [per string theory] as many as 13 different dimensions.

|||||||

I've committed to learning more about quantum mechanics and string theory. Unfortunately, while I have only the barest grasp of it so far, there seems to be a lot of manure in it.

I wonder if people (scientists) got tired of rational, cold, science and used the oddities of the quantum world to jump into another belief system about as likely as Dante's inferno and Paradise Lost.

Like, when single photons behave differently depending on whether the second slit is open, they think that is because the photon "knows" that the

|                                                                                    |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                    | second slit is open and that it behaves accordingly. I'm all for pantheism and universal consciousness, but I find that absurd. It is far more likely that there is some part of the physical forces that drive interference patterns which have not yet been discovered.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1823(12/1/03 3:31 pm)Reply |  --- <hr/> I don't think Rhett is a woman Bird. Edited by: suergaz at: 12/1/03 3:40 pm                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 316(12/1/03 4:43 pm)Reply     |  Re: --- <hr/> No, Rhett is a man alright, but... well, he could be a certain type of man. Hey hey, I have nothing against them, oh no! They're often very artistic, and... you know.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| BiggierRegistered UserPosts: 9(12/3/03 1:47 am)Reply    |  Re: Reason? <hr/> Rhett, More thoughts on your own: "You are just unable to discern its meaning". Yes, I hear that a lot: from Objectivists and Marxists and Libertarians and Kantians and Platonists etc. Of course, I always take it as a compliment, myself. I agree, of course, that induction/empiricism is inherently problematic. What I do not agree with is that deduction/rationalism is any more "authentic" a truth detector respecting that which is, by far, most important to folks who are NOT analytic philosophers: how OUGHT I to think, feel and behave around others? Moral and political philosophy, in other words. Kant, after all, made a fool of himself trying convince everyone he had found away to insert God into human moral interactions without having to worship and adore him in church every Sunday morning. Again, that infamous "noumenal" realm, in other words. The neat thing about it being that, since it could never BE apprehended or known empirically or phenomenologically, you could say practically anything you wanted about how we "fit into" it. That is more or less how I approach | your own deductions. Unlike physicists who cannot offer a new theory of gravity without being able to show how it can be tested experimentally, analytical philosophers can say practically anything they want about what is or is not "logical" because all they have to back it up, by and large, are tautologies. In other words, if this word is true and that word is true and all these other words are true, if we put them together into a concept that, by definition, means the concept must be true as well. You speak of human consciousness, in other words, as though the mind/body problem had, in fact, been solved. It has not. We are still haggling with the same arguments that were used by the pre-Socratics in some important respects.

Biggie

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 151
(12/4/03 12:23 pm)
Reply | Edit

 Re: Reason?

---

Big: When something is said to be "complete as such", "as such" is generally just another way of saying that, "based on the internal logic of my own definitions [assumptions], this concept is true".

Rhett: Yes.

Big: It is, in other words, merely a tautology.

Rhett: No. What i was saying reveals a lot about the nature of Reality, at a fundamental level, not at a merely circumstantial level as with science.

Big: And unlike, say, Newtonian physics, there is no way to recalculate the variables so as to come up with a better/alternate theory as Einstein did. And then Einstein, himself, was aghast when the quantum folks started brandishing ideas like the "uncertainty principle".

Rhett: Logic based investigations are wholly unlike scientific investigations. They are not about building uncertain models that have changeable variables, nor can they be proven or disproven with empirical evidence, they involve what is necessarily true or false. There are no 'ifs', 'buts', or 'maybes'.

Big: In short, there are no "paradigm shifts" possible when the concepts are merely words presumed to reflect an a priori deductive logic.

Rhett: I disagree, they have certainly precipitated immense 'paradigm shifts' in the way i perceive things, and necessarily would to anyone else that came to know them.

Big: Analytic truths may work reasonably well when the logic that is used in the syllogisms is readily established: All men are mortal, Bob is a man, therefore Bob is mortal. How, on the other hand, would you go about constructing a similar relationship between premises and conclusions respecting "free will" and/or the nature of "reason" when the subject itself [you] is "inside" that which it is attempting to express objectively "by definition"? We are analogous to those infamous Flatlanders trying to ascertain "logically" the nature of Flatland. Meanwhile they have no real grasp on the third dimension at all.

Rhett: Here are the proofs:

1) 'Experiences are happening'.

Appearances to mind are happening. It would take an act of consciousness to attempt to refute this, which would only serve to validate the truth of the original statement.

2) 'Consciousness exists'.

Our consciousness appears to us to be separate from other things.

3) 'What I experience in each moment is indeed what I experience in each moment'. This cannot possibly be invalidated or reasoned against.

4) 'If we formulate that, A= any object of perception. We can break up A into A=A. This is simply a conceptual process which fleshes out A into an expanded form. So the expanded form is: that the object of perception *is undisputably* the object of perception, that it cannot be other than the object of perception that it is perceived to be'.

For example: If i experience a mental image of a thing (and choose to call it a 'finger'), then that is what i am experiencing, i cannot be experiencing another thing (eg. a toilet) and thinking that i am experiencing a finger.

We have now created a valid basis for further logical reasoning and logical deduction.

From the truth that all things are finite and caused, we can understand the nature of will. The process of reason is neither here nor there in the sense that it is the truth of the conclusion that is reached that counts.

The idea that the mind is inherently separate to what is not mind (objective/subjective), is purely a distinction of consciousness. Things can only be said to exist as an appearance to mind.

You yourself are using concepts in this conversation, in your scientific analyses, in your home life, etc, so if you don't understand the nature in which language is valid, you can't be sure of anything at all, not a single thing.

Incidentally, I am not a 'flatlander'.

Big: You start with what the mind "necessarily" is; but the mind itself is merely one particular effect in a long, long, long, long string of evolutionary interactions.

Rhett: You cannot be certain of this. You might just be a brain in a vat being fed experiences from a computer program.

Big: To speculate on what the mind "necessarily" is in the vast, vast context of All There Is would, in my view, be like reading the first verse in the Bible and speculating on what God is.

Rhett: The analogy would be fair enough if i were speculating, but i am not.

Big: Where we really go our separate ways, however is in how we construe the "self". To me it is, by and large, merely a delusion, an existential contraption that is constructed, deconstructed and reconstructed over and over again from the cradle to the grave. The "mind's eye" notes new experiences, new relationships, new ideas and then has to ceaselessly intertwine/integrate them into all of the old experiences, relationships and ideas in order to reconfigure all the parts into a new "whole"; which, again is, by and large, illusory.

Rhett: Why do you think this? Why do you think i would disagree with this?

Big: Truth, respecting that which is most important to people---how OUGHT I to think, feel and behave around others---is, perhaps, the biggest delusion of all. For over 2500 years philosophers have struggled to come up with some sort of ontological/teleological/metaphysical agenda by which to differentiate Right from Wrong. They have all failed miserably. And the proof is that there is not a single, solitary moral issue that we are any closer to "resolving" today than back when Socrates took his act on the road in Athens.

Rhett: I agree, morals are purely of our own making. However, if one values morality (and reason) one will necessarily value the Truth, and thus, consider the highest morality as being analogous to wisdom and conscience.

Those that are enlightened have flawless reason to back up the way they act in the world.

Big: As anyone passionate about philosophy/science will tell you, it is not the responsibility of someone who does NOT believe in the existence of something to demonstrate its non-existence; it is, instead, the responsibility of those who DO believe to demonstrate this.

Rhett: I don't see how this relates to anything i have said, and whilst i agree in a limited sense, it depends on your definition of existence...

Big: But that just takes us back to your internal logic and definitions and deductive logic again, doesn't it?

Rhett: Yes, you've got it!

Big: Rhett, More thoughts on your own:

"You are just unable to discern its meaning".

Yes, I hear that a lot: from Objectivists and Marxists and Libertarians and Kantians and Platonists etc.

Of course, I always take it as a compliment, myself.

I agree, of course, that induction/empiricism is inherently problematic. What I do not agree with is that deduction/rationalism is any more "authentic" a truth detector respecting that which is,

Rhett: That's okay, but i am willing to present arguments to you that will help you make a more informed decision on these matters.

Big: by far, most important to folks who are NOT analytic philosophers: how OUGHT I to think, feel and behave around others? Moral and political philosophy, in other words. Kant, after all, made a fool of himself trying convince everyone he had found away to insert God into human moral interactions without having to worship and adore him in church every Sunday morning.

Rhett: I don't agree. Ultimate Truth provides all the answers to questions on morality. Thus, the only advice i would give to people is to become wise. Naturally, that involves analysis, so people just have to do the best they can.

Big: Again, that infamous "noumenal" realm, in other words. The neat thing about it being that, since it could never BE apprehended or known empirically or phenomenologically, you could say practically anything you wanted about how we "fit into" it. That is more or less how I approach your own deductions. Unlike physicists who cannot offer a new theory of gravity without being able to show how it can be tested experimentally, analytical philosophers can say practically anything they want about what is or is not "logical" because all they have to back it up, by and large, are tautologies. In other words, if this word is true and that word is true and all these other words are true, if we put them together into a concept that, by definition, means the concept must be true as well. You speak of human consciousness, in other words, as though the mind/body problem had, in fact, been solved. It has not. We are still haggling with the same arguments that were used by the pre-Socratics in some important respects.

Rhett: I agree that all truths are constructs, but that does not mean that they are invalid or meaningless. Absolute truths are true beyond the individual experience of them, they are true for all worlds at all times to all that can grasp their meaning. An obvious example is  $1+1=2$ . This is true for any alien that can conceptualise it. So too is the meaning of the truths which I have expressed to you.

Incidentally, the mind-body question has been solved.

Another incidental, can you please keep at least some of my previous post in your responses? It aids clarity and the development of understanding, stops me from repeating myself unnecessarily, etc. [Additionally, I am always suspicious of people that repeatedly delete the previous posts...they are often not interested in arriving at understanding, either because they have already decided that nothing can be understood, or because they just want to hold onto their beliefs and re-hash them].

Rhett

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

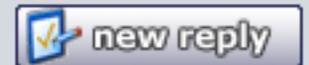

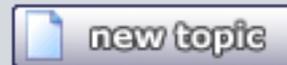

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Reason destroys ego

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                        | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
|---------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| KellyvenPosts: 67(3/22/04 4:01 pm)Reply |  Reason destroys ego <hr/> This thread carries the "ego" thread into the next level. What is Ultimate Truth? It is complete absence of ego. So, reason must destroy ego! Ego is attachment to living.Death is unwanted and uncontrollable change.Uncontrollable change is "boundaries making things" that are entirely "in the wrong place".BUT,Things are in places arbitrated by appearances (in the mind).Appearances are awareness.Awareness arises by the whim of Nature, or God. Ego is a delusion from an unreasoning mind, since the mind is already dead. Humans have no real choice or control over awareness or appearances' every conception (thought) is appearing according to Nature's program. Nature also creates reason - the ability to see the program, if not to see exactly the extent of it. Of course, ego turns up the unconsciousness volume at such news - for it wants to control Nature, stupid creature. But the sentence is passed, only Truthfulness can destroy ego. |

Thus is born the newly-dead, a killer!

More on the Ego

Ego: nothing obscures Ultimate Reality but this, the delusion of the self. Ego is most aroused by appearances of the self delusions of others - by the social desire to live.

Ego then constructing a living self, makes time for it to exist in, referring all appearances back to the central self. Ego makes an identity and personality, comparing its appearances of self-expression (its own self and the selves of others). Ego turns its awareness and the sequence of appearances into thoughts, and thinking, and subjectivity - saying, "It is I who am thinking! I think therefore I AM!"

Ego becomes reality by seamlessly referring all to its self - thus is desire and attachment born, because it is afraid to be exposed, and clings to its existence. Its vigor is subtle.

Egoism is socially acceptable egotism, both expressions of the same delusion.

Any desire to live is ego, because ego is delusion and the thought of life or death is delusion. In Truth, there is no living or dying: consciousness exists - and then it doesn't, but is this being asleep, dead, comatose, in a faint, a stupor, hypnotised, blacking-out - or what?

All appearances that one is conscious are nevertheless never verifiable outside one's consciousness - even people saying "Yes, he's conscious" outside one's consciousness (ie. never appearing to one) is never verifiable. No one shares consciousness.

Why is consciousness constructed to be "living"? What is the cause for ego? How does ego never arise for the Buddha?

Living refers to attachment to consciousness as it is. This attachment is a result of seeing things change, and is itself an appearance to mind that concludes that the self is also a thing that changes. Ego is fear of the self as a thing that changes: its appearances become external threats to the idea of an immortal self.

How does ego construct a self? Primarily through the referral of all appearances to a "central processing unit" - awareness. Awareness itself wants to control all appearances, to understand everything in relation to existing knowledge. It subjects everything to itself for fear of unknown elements.

What are unknown elements, ie. why does awareness want to subject everything to itself, to understand in order to conquer? What is this will-to-omniscience?

Awareness is made restless by the overwhelming constant deluge of appearances. In response to its habit of making order, or categorising, the deluge becomes tamed - mostly ignored.

Nothing frightens awareness as much as too much information, since if it can't think, it doesn't exist. One of its solutions is the say, "Most information is irrelevant".

Ego is the desire to order and categorise, to preserve the awareness.

What is this habit of making order? Does it originate in genetics or upbringing?

One is told that the human species evolved to prioritise rationality as an ultimate weapon for survival. But why must this habit be so fundamentally innate in the genetics of people who are not struggling to survive? But then, genius is not genetically engendered, so all humans will struggle to survive: making order is genetic, and supported by upbringing.

Thus only by overcoming the dualistic mind - the habit of making order and categorising - can ego be removed from awareness.

Yet it is not possible to stop making judgements. What CAN cease is the self-centred awareness, ie. the desire to conquer all knowledge. This only occurs when the mind is appeased and is sufficient - in Enlightenment. But the danger is that now the ego is unbeatable - all-conquering - as its desire has been fulfilled.

What is the fatal blow to ego?

It must be the relinquishment of the desire to understand, the will to judge, the attachment to making order out of appearances.

How is ultimate truth understood without the drive to reason and find out? By understanding the nature of Truth: that simply by following causes without ever being in error, one arrives at the Effect: Truth.

There is no motivation to ever be flawless - because Nature has willed this, the entire process is caused yet unseen.

Thus, keeping one's mind on God, Truth unfolds to the will of Nature. Literally, by following the program.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2574

(3/23/04 6:52 am)

Reply

 ---

---

Reason does not destroy ego. It crystallizes it.

Ego does not construct a self. It is the conception of oneself in any case.

You use the word 'God' synonymously with 'nature'

You must be physically ugly!

This is not a condemnation! Keep "following the program"

(:D) Kellyven

Posts: 69

(3/23/04 12:52 pm)

Reply

 Re: ---

---

Reason does not destroy ego. It crystallizes it.

This is the very real danger, and why becoming a "Dharma Dragon" is so difficult. The greater understanding through the reason, the more ego leaps in to take credit. As soon as understanding arises for me, my old habits of thought cannot handle the incredible clarity and quietness. My awareness agitates for a label - anything! - to repractice the delusion of being considered alive and separate and in control.

So you are half-right, but haven't gone far enough.

Ego does not construct a self. It is the conception of oneself in any case.

Only in the Enlightened person is this true - a very special case, and not "in any case". Ego is not the conception of oneself in any case. The true self-nature that Hakuin speaks of is this clear mind, which is egoless.

You use the word 'God' synonymously with 'nature'

You must be physically ugly!

Yes, God and Nature and the Infinite and Truth are all one.

Probably to many people who do not know the Truth, i am physically ugly. I rarely smile at them, nor wear make-up or jewellery or have any decorative accessories, have an uneasy way of talking, and make no relationships in which i might be considered a friend. I am sharing accommodation with a female model ($65/week), who does all these things, and I think many would regard her as physically attractive. I personally don't, but then i don't watch television, so i am not influenced much by what constitutes "beautiful".

Were your two statements related? I am not sure how.

Canadian Zoetrope

Registered User

Posts: 38

(3/24/04 4:43 am)

Reply

 Allow me to retort:

---

Quote:

Reason does not destroy ego. It crystallizes it.

This is the very real danger, and why becoming a "Dharma Dragon" is so difficult. The greater understanding through the reason, the more ego leaps in to take credit. As soon as understanding arises for me, my old habits of thought cannot handle the incredible clarity and quietness. My awareness agitates for a label - anything! - to repractice the delusion of being considered alive and separate and in control.

So you are half-right, but haven't gone far enough.

Ego does not construct a self. It is the conception of oneself in any case.

Only in the Enlightened person is this true - a very special case, and not "in any case". Ego is not the conception of oneself in any case. The true self-nature that Hakuin speaks of is this clear mind, which is egoless.

You use the word 'God' synonymously with 'nature'
You must be physically ugly!

Yes, God and Nature and the Infinite and Truth are all one.

Probably to many people who do not know the Truth, i am physically ugly. I rarely smile at them, nor wear make-up or jewellery or have any decorative accessories, have an uneasy way of talking, and make no relationships in which i might be considered a friend. I am sharing accommodation with a female model ($65/week), who does all these things, and I think many would regard her as physically attractive. I personally don't, but then i don't watch television, so i am not influenced much by what constitutes "beautiful".

Were your two statements related? I am not sure how.

---

*Canadian Zoetrope, stands up and places shoe on hand, smiles.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2577

(3/24/04 7:19 am)

Reply

---

There is no danger in the crystallisation of the ego! It is the perfection of ones self conception! A hardness, a transparency, ...an idea! Enough with dharma and karma and the rest of such buddharama.

Hakuin obviously had a pointy head. There is no such thing as an egoless mind.

To find everything beautiful is in poor taste. I do not find the use of the word 'God' to be beautiful. On the whole, when it is used, it is to confuse, to incite mystery, to concede the continuance of an unsound imagination, to pour a certain boredom upon beauty etc. You should go with what is noble in you! Nature is nature, not god. Sure, friendship and finery are not the essence of beauty, but your not smiling, what is that about?! (:D)

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 1045

(3/24/04 9:00 am)

Reply

Re: -----

---

Quote:

---

Zag: To find everything beautiful is in poor taste.

---

Not necessarily. Being as beauty is relative, what if one found everything beautiful in relation to a lack of everything? Or being as everything springs from consciousness, what if one consequently found the idea of everything, and everything within it, more beautiful than the idea of non-consciousness?

---

Quote:

---

I do not find the use of the word 'God' to be beautiful. On the whole, when it is used, it is to confuse, to incite mystery, to concede the continuance of an unsound imagination, to pour a certain boredom upon beauty etc.

---

It has many beautiful aspects. It is an act of consciousness and an expression of nature. See the beauty of the order contained within it, and it's efficiency in doing what it tries to do. Laugh at the beauty of how it could not be further removed from what it claims to be. Imagine the beauty of it's inciting one person to wake up. Witness the beauty of it's historical context and present day form within that context. Understand it's beauty as a contrast to your conception of the truth of the matter. Think how beautifully uncaring it is, in contrast to your caring. Wallow in the beauty of it's rhetorical devisiveness. Look how beautifully ugly it is.

---

Quote:

---

You should go with what is noble in you!

---

If you mean noble like the noble gases, then that could be seen as beautiful. If you mean noble any other way, then that too could be seen as beautiful.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2579

(3/24/04 9:27 am)

Reply

 ---

---

---Dave?! What lack of everything?! Everything does not spring from consciousness! Everything is the truth. You find truth beautiful? I find truths beautiful. But not all. At least they're always human. Care free at best, not careless or careful.

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 1667

(3/24/04 10:33 am)

Reply

 Re: ---

---

To fing everything beautiful is poor taste because it is idiotic, not to mention impossible.

Such irrationality always shows poor taste in my aesthetic schema.

Dan Rowden

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 1046

(3/24/04 11:32 am)

Reply

 Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Zag: What lack of everything?!

---

The one you've just put across with those words there, the idea.

Quote:

---

Everything does not spring from consciousness!

---

Every-thing must, surely I don't have to spell it out.

Quote:

---

Everything is the truth.

---

It may well be in the sense that you mean. But in the sense that I meant, it can be beautiful or ugly in context, but not the contextless truth.

Quote:

---

You find truth beautiful?

---

No, I find beautiful things beautiful, within a definitional relationship. It could be truth, it could be truths, or it could be anything and everything else.

Quote:

---

I find truths beautiful. But not all. At least they're always human.

---

How could they not be. And there is the point. You say "To find everything beautiful is in poor taste", I say not necessarily, beauty is in the eye of the beholder, it is relative. Being relative, defining taste therein is wholly arbitrary. One man's meat etc.

To speak of the beauty of a thing, or everything, is to speak of the idea of a thing, or everything. Ideas can always be contrasted with their antithesis.

You suggest we 'go with what is noble in us', I say that again is arbitrary.

That I express these points of view in no way implies what position I personally hold when it comes to taste.

Quote:

---

Care free at best, not careless or careful.

---

But always caring.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 1047
(3/24/04 11:40 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Dan: To find everything beautiful is poor taste because it is idiotic, not to mention impossible.

---

Dan, what possible conception of everything does not have an antithesis (not that the antithesis is needed as it only need be a thing), and therefore something to be held in contrast to, for the purpose here of applying an arbitrary judgement thereon?

The Tao that can be spoken of, etc.

Jones Kelly
Registered User
Posts: 1
(3/24/04 12:29 pm)
Reply

egolessness

---

I have woken up to the most incredible monster: my ego.

By seeking Truth, i create desire, and ego.

The only way to perfection of Enlightenment is to Truthfully renounce the attachment to Truth: because finally it stands in the way of itself. To continue to seek the Truth is to continue to create ego.

To continue to seek the perfect all-conquering reasoning ability (e.g. Suergaz's wisdom) is to seek the fulfilment of the ego.

The spiritual dedication to Truth means renunciation of all things: including the dedication to the Truth, because the dedication is of the ego.

How can the desire for Enlightenment be quelled? It is the paradox: one attains it only by not desiring it. For there is only satiation when one realises one is already perfect: that Nature is perfect.

This is the reason for the rarity of the Dharma Dragon: so few have succeeded here. This is the proof that reasoning thus applied is true spirituality: only reasoning could be the weapon for the miracle of renunciation of ego.

To be motivated by nothing, to be afraid of nothing, to want nothing. The Great Death is literally beyond a human being, and no wonder why so many consider mindless bliss Enlightenment - it is simply and calmly preservation of desires in tranquillity.

True Enlightenment burns up ego in its monstrous, horrible fire.

This is why Kierkegaard wrote (Journals and Papers):

When everything is going the way you want it to, even if you relate everything to God, you can still not be sure that the joy you feel is the testimony of the Spirit, for it can also be simply the heightening of your own life by means of your good fortune and prosperity. But when everything goes against you and you can nevertheless perceive deep within you a testimony that you are on the right path and ought to continue further along this path where everything will probably go against you increasingly: this, you see, is the testimony of the Spirit.

It is not "probably go against you increasingly" as long as there is ego, it is definitely.

Only the dead can become enlightened: the ego enlightened would be an utter abomination. Every evil, every desire, every zest for life - they all must be torn out by the roots - by the individual alone and solitary, doing it to himself.

Egolessness or hopelessness is not despair, as psychologists think, but rather the happiness at the end of desires.

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 1668

(3/24/04 1:04 pm)

Reply

Re: ---

Dave Toast wrote:

Quote:

Dan, what possible conception of everything does not have an antithesis (not that the antithesis is needed as it only need be a thing), and therefore something to be held in contrast to, for the purpose here of applying an arbitrary judgement thereon?

I may just be tired, Dave, but I didn't understand a word of that :)

My point, basically, is that it's impossible to find everything beautiful because beauty only has meaning in relation to its opposite. If one doesn't find anything ugly, then beauty loses all meaning.

The wise person, naturally, goes beyond such duality.

Dan Rowden

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 1048

(3/24/04 2:30 pm)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Perhaps you need to take a break from all that writing Dan :-P

As far as I can tell, there is no possible real conception of 'everything' which satisfies the 'everything' you refer to. It's either the idea of the all encompassing everything, which is obviously not what it claims to conceptualise as it is an idea, the Tao that can be spoken. This 'everything' therefore is not everything (the Tao that can't be spoken) but a mere thing, which can be held in relation to it's opposite. The other meaning of 'everything' would be 'all things' or 'each and every thing' which, again, sin't what it puports to be, but just a vague idea which can be held in relation to it's opposite. If you wanted to say that this meaning really does mean each and every thing, then each and every thing is a function of consciousness and could at least be held in relation to the idea of non-consciousness, though I suppose that's a thing itself. Or if, as you say above, one doesn't find anything ugly, that could be held in relation to (not anything), although I suppose that's a thing too.

I think were getting into the realms of self reference, the set of all sets that contains itself as a member, etc. And you know where that leads to.

Edited by: Dave Toast at: 3/24/04 2:33 pm

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 1669

(3/24/04 11:44 pm)

Reply

 Re: ---

---

Yeah, it leads to me needing a beer :)

"Everything" in this sense simply means nothing that one could conceive of or be as other than beautiful. I think you're overthinking the issue.

You seem different lately, Dave; more philosophical, less "scientific". Are you ok?

Dan Rowden

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 1049

(3/25/04 1:03 am)

Reply

 Re: ---

---

God willing Dan ;-)

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2581

(3/25/04 2:03 am)

Reply

 ---

---

Quote:

---

suergaz:- What lack of everything?!

DaveT:-The one you've just put across with those words there, the idea.

---

What idea? I only asked after your idea of a lack of everything. An idea of a lack of everything is not a lack of everything.

Quote:

---

suergaz:--Everything does not spring from consciousness!

DaveT:--Every-thing must, surely I don't have to spell it out.

---

No, because you couldn't possibly. Moreover, everything doesn't even spring to consciousness. This is honesty. Troublesome I admit, but not wholly so as regards the advance of human consciousness

Quote:

---

suergaz:---Everything is the truth.

DaveT:---It may well be in the sense that you mean. But in the sense that I meant, it can be beautiful or ugly in context, but not the contextless truth.

---

There is no perceptible truth without context.

Quote:

---

suergaz:----I find truths beautiful. But not all. At least they're always human.

DaveT:----How could they not be. And there is the point. You say "To find everything beautiful is in poor taste", I say not necessarily, beauty is in the eye of the beholder, it is relative. Being relative, defining taste therein is wholly arbitrary. One man's meat etc.

To speak of the beauty of a thing, or everything, is to speak of the idea of a thing, or everything. Ideas can always be contrasted with their antithesis.

---

Of course beauty is relative. Which is why everything cannot be beheld. The idea of everything is not everything. I wrote that it is in poor taste to find everything beautiful, not the idea of everything.

Quote:

---

You suggest we 'go with what is noble in us', I say that again is arbitrary.

---

Which is why I said what is noble in you, not what is noble.

Quote:

---

That I express these points of view in no way implies what position I personally hold when it comes to taste.

---

Rubbish. how couldn't they?

Quote:

---

suergaz:--Care free at best, not careless or careful.

DaveT:--But always caring.

---

Naturally.

Edited by: suergaz at: 3/25/04 2:11 am

N0X23

Registered User
Posts: 98
(3/25/04 2:41 am)
Reply

 Re: ---

---

Kellyven, you shouldn't mix philosophy with reality.

Dave Toast

Registered User
Posts: 1050
(3/25/04 3:33 am)
Reply

 Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Zag: What idea? I only asked after your idea of a lack of everything. An idea of a lack of everything is not a lack of everything.

---

Well quite, but ideas is all we's got.

My idea of a lack of everything, and my idea of everything, are much the same as yours - vague conceptions.

Quote:

---

Zag:--Everything does not spring from consciousness!

DaveT:--Every-thing must, surely I don't have to spell it out.

Zag: No, because you couldn't possibly.

---

Don't be silly, it's as easy as 1,2,3.

You prove to me that things are anything but a conscious conception.

Quote:

---

Moreover, everything doesn't even spring to consciousness.

---

Now your getting the idea of the idea of everything. But this doesn't relate to things being nothing other than conscious conceptions.

Quote:

---

This is honesty. Troublesome I admit, but not wholly so as regards the advance of human consciousness

---

Care to elaborate?

Quote:

---

There is no perceptible truth without context.

---

Not perceptible, no. And therein lies my point.

Quote:

---

Of course beauty is relative. Which is why everything cannot be beheld. The idea of everything is not everything. I wrote that it is in poor taste to find everything beautiful, not the idea of everything.

---

Finding everything beautiful is non other than finding the idea of everything beautiful, or finding all things beautiful. In either case, there is always something to compare to.

Quote:

---

Which is why I said what is noble in you, not what is noble.

---

There's no such thing as noble in and of itself, just individual conceptions of it. They are therefore arbitrary, as is your assertion of poverty with regard to anyone else's conceptions of beauty or nobility.

What you're saying is that beauty is arbitrary, and then suggesting that we go with some other arbitrary thing - nobility, in perceiving beauty. You're just going to end up with an arbitrary result again, no different than the arbitrary result before your suggestion.

Quote:

---

DT: That I express these points of view in no way implies what position I personally hold when it comes to taste.

Zag: Rubbish. how couldn't they?

---

Rather straightforwardly. I can make the case for being able to find everything beautiful without actually finding everything beautiful myself.

Quote:

---

Naturally.

---

Exactly.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2583

(3/25/04 8:20 am)

Reply

---

Quote:

---

There's no such thing as noble in and of itself, just individual conceptions of it. They are therefore arbitrary, as is your assertion of poverty with regard to anyone else's conceptions of beauty or nobility.

What you're saying is that beauty is arbitrary, and then suggesting that we go with some other arbitrary thing - nobility, in percieving beauty. Your just going to end up with an arbitrary result again, no different than the arbitrary result before your suggestion.

---

Stop telling me what I'm saying and instead address what I said. I have never suggested anything is something in and of itself except the universe, and even then I hold that suggestion in question.

I asked you to spell out (since you boasted you could) that everything springs from consciousness, and you resorted to asking me to prove to you that things are anything other than a conscious conception. Such a proof is unnecessary and cannot be since our consciousness means our perceiving is a conceiving. Are you saying you cannot conceive beyond yourself?

Quote:

---

Rather straightforwardly. I can make the case for being able to find everything beautiful without actually finding everything beautiful myself.

---

An understandable self-deception on your part.

Edited by: suergaz at: 3/25/04 8:28 am

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 1051

(3/25/04 10:25 am)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Zag: Stop telling me what I'm saying and instead address what I said. I have never suggested anything is something in and of itself except the universe, and even then I hold that suggestion in question.

---

I didn't suggest that you had suggested that anything is something in and of itself.

With regard to answering what you said about 'going with what is noble in you' and the arbitrary nature of such, there's nothing to answer as you've agreed that it is arbitrary. You're just not seeing see how such advice is rendered meaningless thereby.

Quote:

---

I asked you to spell out (since you boasted you could) that everything springs from consciousness, and you resorted to asking me to prove to you that things are anything other than a conscious conception.

---

Do you want me to teach you to count too?

Quote:

---

Such a proof is unnecessary and cannot be since our consciousness means our perceiving is a conceiving.

---

See, I didn't need to spell it out to you.

Quote:

---

Are you saying you cannot conceive beyond yourself?

---

I didn't say that. But being as the self, and myself, is the root of conception, how could I conceive beyond myself?

Quote:

---

An understandable self-deception on your part.

---

Where can I get one of those inside-a-head-o-scopes?

Hey what a surprise, you have taken us away from the original subject to such a degree that it isn't even mentioned in your last post, which rather consists of petty argument and speculation about my taste - something you could not possibly know. Nice one, beautiful.

Edited by: Dave Toast at: 3/25/04 10:27 am

Jones Kelly
Registered User
Posts: 2
(3/25/04 1:03 pm)
Reply

 Re: How reason destroys ego

---

NOX23: Kellyven, you shouldn't mix philosophy with reality.

Yes, humanly speaking, this is the most frightening thing one can imagine as reality. But to return to being a lover of ignorance? I am not sure this is possible anymore.

To continue with the way reason destroys ego:

Gross delusions are demolished by perceiving them in the light of causality, seeing all causes and effects proceeding towards and after, the inherent emptiness of everything.

So, the gross delusion of physical hunger is demolished by perceiving the sensations as appearances arising according to Nature; thereupon all reactions can be carefully weighed in the light of Truth. Which reaction serves to preserve Truth?

The gross delusion of instinctive fear (e.g. seeing a great stingray while swimming) is quickly demolished by understanding the nature of pain sensations and the nature of death sensations - and all reactions rapidly weighed (with the benefit of adrenaline) in the light of Truth.

Subtle delusions are far more difficult to demolish, since these are directly connected to the seeker's attachment to Truth. The ego delusions of rationality, logic, wisdom, spirituality, consciousness, focus, Nature, God, Infinite, Tao, and Truth itself can only be demolished by focussing on what ego is in relation to Truth.

If there is anything serving the self in the spiritual man's life, this is ego. As long as the spiritual man loves the Truth to maintain himself, he is deluded. Thus all reactions to appearances of Truth are weighed in the light of Truth sans the spiritual man, ie. without concept of his being.

How can the spiritual man conceive of Truth without his being/ consciousness? He must remember that Truth is literally infinite, beginningless, causeless and has no "need" of him. Truth appears in his consciousness, but it does not dwell anywhere.

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

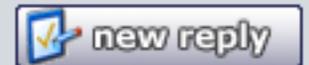

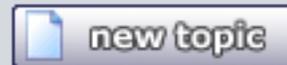

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Reason destroys ego

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2584(3/26/04 7:33 am)Reply  |  Re: How reason destroys ego <hr/> Philosophy is a reality. To pretend it can be apart from reality is ignoble. (I am not going to 'spell' out this arbitrariness to Toast and those who must feel to compete with my nobility.) Reason does not necessarily destroy ego, and the ego cannot destroy reason. This is a declaration of health. Edited by: suergaz at: 3/26/04 7:34 am                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| Jones KellyRegistered UserPosts: 3(3/26/04 10:54 am)Reply                                                                                  |  Re: wrapping up <hr/> The way reason destroys ego is not the obvious answer i imagined, and to an extent i was misguided yesterday. However, it was a stage that needed to be explored. Making ego-destruction the goal is folly, before the nature of ego is understood. Therefore, one must pour all one's energies into understanding the nature of Ultimate Reality. Why? The gospel of Thomas has a clue. #57: Jesus said:The Father's imperial rule is like a person who had [good] seed. His enemy came during the night and sowed seeds among the good seed. The person | did not let the workers pull up the weeds, but said to them, "No, otherwise you might go to pull up the weeds and pull up the wheat along with them." For on the day of the harvest the weeds will be conspicuous, and will be pulled up and burned.

Enlightenment, or perceiving Reality, makes ego conspicuous, and ego's nature is understood in that moment. Thereupon, its roots can be pulled up and burnt (delusional habits of mind corrected in accordance with the new-found wisdom).

Logically speaking, the only way to destroy ego by reason before Enlightenment is to be fully conscious, 100%, unceasingly and relentlessly, 24 hours a day - of not desiring.

Since the natural mind cannot do this (until the perfect and final Enlightenment when all delusional habits are gone), the ego can never attain the goal. Since if it is satisfied, then consciousness lapses.

Fighting against desires is like fighting a phantom - you just can't win. But when you realise the non-existence of the phantom then all the nightmares are over. In perfection/Reality there are neither friends nor enemies. [Letters Between Enemies, Solway to Quinn, 23/9/1989]

You think concentration will give you the strength to see the ultimate; but only a sincere desire to put reason into practice will help you.

Concentration must become effortless, as it only can with love... Train yourself to love the truth with all your heart! Then you will have no need of concentration. [Solway, Poison for the Heart]

So, what is Ultimate Reality? Jesus is quoted frequently in the gospel of Thomas about it (e.g. ##11,17,22,48,50, 77). I'll quote #22, as it's pretty clear:

#22: When you make the two into one, and when you make the inner like the outer and the outer like the inner, and the upper like the lower, and when you make male and female into a single one, so that the male will not be male nor the female be female, when you make eyes in place of an eye, a hand in place of a hand, a foot in place of a foot, an image in place of an image, then you will enter [the <Father's> domain].

What helped me most was Kevin's quote on Truth (Poison for the Heart):

The reality of the material world cannot be disputed, nor the essential Oneness of all things. Both are Truths and join in one. When you can join them, together with the core of your being, there will be no more confusion.

My verification is based on certainty, also that i compare the series of rolling realisations leading up to it as birthpains. I predicted it and knew it was coming, and my sensations of nausea over the last few days ended in calm, unfearful quiet as i began my meditation. I did not experience the fear during and after other realisations, but had the same sensations of heaviness. No emotion other than alert concentration and patience as i slowly pieced the puzzle mentally.

For me, it is simply that the appearances of awareness can be seen to be bounded things just as all appearances of things in the 'external physicality' of the Infinite are bounded, and that oneself is of the very same nature as these appearances, ie. a false construct. I used the idea of mental electrical impulses, atoms, and David's description of emptiness (Letters between Enemies) as the basis of my self construct, and could literally then see that all appearances are one: ultimately part of the one Infinite boundlessness.

This way the ego is seen to be based on a false understanding of reality, and will always exist as long as the delusion of self continues. But when reality is understood, the ego can be destroyed.

As the ego is the "strong man" whose hands need to be bound, in order to loot his house (Thomas 35), the ego can escape its capture if its wealth of will/reason is not used to diminish its strength. Habitual delusions can only change with new habits, ie. consciously realigning to the knowledge of Truth.

So, in fact, yes, reason destroys ego. By committing one's will to becoming nothing (the baby, dove, child, poor man, dead), thus one's mind is free to explore the true self-nature that is boundlessness.

Weluvducsoha
Registered User
Posts: 8
(3/28/04 10:53 am)
Reply

Re: wrapping up

---

Question:

Let us assume that this discourse on ego is indeed correct. That is let us say that Ego is one's attachment to the universe and that by reason we may cease to be attached to things and then escape.

This means anyone who becomes enlightened is gone, right?

Contrast Darwin's survival of the fittest. in simplist terms it states only that: there will be more of things that tend to survive and make more of themselves. But we have just decided that the tendency of hte enlightened is to go away.

Thus, there will always be more of those who are not enligtened.

Meaning ths is a losing battle.

Right?

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 1056
(3/28/04 2:03 pm)
Reply

Re: wrapping up

---

Quote:

---

Question:

Let us assume that this discourse on ego is indeed correct.

That is let us say that Ego is one's attachment to the universe and that by reason we may cease to be attached to things and then escape.

This means anyone who becomes enlightened is gone, right?

---

No.

Quote:

---

Contrast Darwin's survival of the fittest. in simplist terms it states only that: there will be more of things that tend to survive and make more of themselves.

---

No it doesn't.

Quote:

---

But we have just decided that the tendency of the enlightened is to go away.

---

No we haven't.

Quote:

---

Thus, there will always be more of those who are not enlightened.
Meaning this is a losing battle.
Right?

---

No, on too many counts to detail.

Jones Kelly

Posts: 7

(3/28/04 3:57 pm)

Reply

 the survival of wisdom, not the self

---

That is let us say that Ego is one's attachment to the universe and that by reason we may cease to be attached to things and then escape. This means anyone who becomes enlightened is gone, right?

You think that the cessation of attachment means the cessation of awareness, and that one must escape the universe.

Enlightenment is simply awareness without ego, an awareness without all the trappings that are usually hung all over it. And anyway, where are you escaping to? Reality is right here.

Contrast Darwin's survival of the fittest. in simplest terms it states only that: there will be more of things that tend to survive and make more of themselves. But we have just decided that the tendency of the enlightened is to go away.

Be aware how you project: "we" the way you used it would give oneself a false security (that others believe the same). I did not say the enlightened one's tendency is to "go away", but for the ego to be destroyed.

Therefore, the more people that become enlightened - perfectly, since the ego can still arise, and very strongly without applying Truth fully - the less ego will survive. And actually, this has direct relevance to human extinction as a species: do you think there is any chance the species will survive for much longer with the kind of blind selfishness its members evidence?

Thus, there will always be more of those who are not enlightened.

Not according to a correct understanding of what i wrote, that is, the more ego is destroyed. But, it is likely that, with the kind of sexual epidemic that rages among humans, the rate of enlightenment will decrease in proportion.

To apply your logic is definitely bad: the battle is already lost if you give up before you start fighting.

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 524
(3/28/04 5:39 pm)
Reply

☐ Re: the survival of wisdom, not the self

---

My impression of Dave Toast up til now is that he fights in a friendly fashion.

That is the most effective way, I think.

N0X23
Registered User
Posts: 105
(3/30/04 3:34 am)
Reply

☐ Re: the survival of wisdom, not the self

---

Quote:

---

&#65279;Philosophy is a reality. To pretend it can be apart from reality is ignoble. (I am not going to 'spell' out this arbitrariness to Toast and those who must feel to compete with my nobility.)

---

Theorizing about life is not the same as living it...Philosophy is the equivalent of two virgins sitting around debating the finer points of fellatio and cunnilingus.

|                                                                                                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| WolfsonJakk Posts: 1536 (3/30/04 4:10 am) Reply                                                                                                  |  Re: the survival of wisdom, not the self <hr/> I don't see how living life is mutually exclusive from theorizing about it. In fact, one must be living life in order to theorize about it. Tharan                                                                     |
| jimhaz Registered User Posts: 625 (3/30/04 11:15 am) Reply  |  Re: the survival of wisdom, not the self <hr/> It is easy enough to talk the talk, much harder to live out what you determine as truly valuable over the long term using reason. Hopefully with enough theorising, the will eventually follows.                      |
| suergaz Registered User Posts: 2592 (3/31/04 6:11 am) Reply                                                                                 |  -- <hr/> If ones philosophy does not come from ones reason, it becomes theory, and is no longer philosophy. In other words, if ones philosophy is not somehow ones life, for all that one desires for and beyond ones life, it does not remain philosophy, and is departed. |
| hahndel Registered User Posts: 6 (6/13/04 10:39 am) Reply                                                                                   |  Re: -- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> This is the very real danger, and why becoming a "Dharma Dragon" is so difficult. <hr/> Classic.                                                                                                                           |

|                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| somaRegistered UserPosts: 3(6/29/04 4:30 am)Reply            | ☐ re: Reason destroys ego <hr/> Is ego real? Is ego mind? Can energy be destroyed? Peace, soma                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| james johnathanRegistered UserPosts: 3(6/29/04 9:58 am)Reply | ☐ Re: re: Reason destroys ego <hr/> You're only perpetuating your samsara if you go about trying to destroy the ego. There's no such thing as an ego, so what is there to destroy? Simply realize this, and there ceases to be a battle. Of course, realizing this point is not all that easy. Although, it's not all that hard, either... |
| Jones KellyPosts: 183(6/29/04 12:46 pm)Reply                      | ☐ Re: Reason destroys ego <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Is ego real? <hr/> Ego, the delusion of inherent existence, is made real in the light of the absence of delusion, which is the very moment when it is realised to be an illusion. Quote: <hr/> Is ego mind? <hr/>                                          |

No, not if mind is consciousness (not the physical brain, but awareness). That is, ego is deluded consciousness, a mind that is not free from the belief that things are objectively and intrinsically real.

Quote:

---

Can energy be destroyed?

---

If energy is a principle understood to be working in all things, then that projection can be destroyed (since it is a construct), but as long as all things exist, then the construct is logically indestructible.

If all things are the Totality, which is infinite because it cannot be created by an external, then it is impossible for all things to be destroyed (since this requires something external). Logically, a principle that applies infinitely cannot be destroyed, yet as a thing (a concept) it is finite and therefore has a beginning and ending.

Referring back to the original point, that reason destroys ego, this is (i) because reason shows up the ego-self to be a delusion, and (ii) because the habits of deluded thoughts are destroyed by applying truth.

Ego, therefore, is not at all the same as an infinite principle applying to all things, since the ego-self is a delusion of separation from all things.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2745

(7/7/04 1:36 pm)

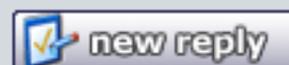

Reply

 Re: Reason destroys ego

---

The ego is self conception. To maintain it is no more than self delusion is pointless.

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

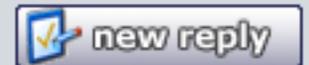

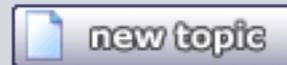

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Reason validates itself?

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                          | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| AutemRegistered UserPosts: 13(12/15/03 2:19 am)Reply | Reason validates itself? <hr/> The enlightened ones here pose that it is evident that we should use reason to attain enlightenment. What is the reasoning behind that? Does reasoning validate itself? I think we must first validate reason. |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 365(12/15/03 3:19 am)Reply | Re: Reason validates itself? <hr/> Nobody here is 'enlightened'. Who told you that?Enlightenment, as they call it, is delusion.Life is Truth. The reason of life is love. Pfwah!                                                           |
| AutemRegistered UserPosts: 14(12/15/03 3:37 am)Reply | Re: Reason validates itself? <hr/> I was only referring to those people who think of themselves as enlightened. What I think of them thinking that.. well, I don't know that yet.                                                                    |

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 883
(12/15/03 6:42 am)
Reply

Re: Reason validates itself?

---

Reason negates itself so that the value of art can be made manifest.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 1892
(12/15/03 7:58 am)
Reply

Re: Reason validates itself?

---

Autem wrote:

Quote:

---

The enlightened ones here pose that it is evident that we should use reason to attain enlightenment. What is the reasoning behind that? Does reasoning validate itself?

---

Reasoning cannot question itself. To even begin to formulate a question, as you have done, requires the implicit acceptance of the validity of reason.

Nothing else can question reason either, since, again, the very act of questioning something always entails a form of reasoning - no matter how purely emotional or intuitive the questioner might think himself to be.

So while we can question particular instances of reasoning to see if they are faulty or not, it is impossible to question the essence of reasoning itself.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1954
(12/15/03 10:46 pm)
Reply

---

---

Paul wrote:--

Quote:

---

Life is Truth. The reason of life is love. Pfwah

---

|                                                                           |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                           | This is the essence of reasoning itself!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| AutemRegistered UserPosts: 15(12/15/03 11:22 pm)Reply     | Re: --- <hr/> Ok, reasoning as a process is inevitable. Reason must have a beginning though. A reason to base all your reasons on. You present your reason as something divine, ignoring that it had an origin. Even your reason of reasons, <math>A=A</math>, came about... from somewhere :) The alternative is that reasons are a product of the reasoner, the person. And thus can only be validated by that person.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1956(12/15/03 11:47 pm)Reply | --- <hr/> I just read this from a guy called Spin. Quote: <hr/> Hey everyone. Reason is a theatre. Fiction or non fiction the play is always an expression of the play-write. The hope, fears and desires of the playwright are just some of the things which shine through the play. Then there are the props: mere inaccurate representations of things that are, they get the point across to the spectator but oh they dont make good specimens if you wish to see the real object they represent. The play is coherent, what happens in the beginning leads to the end, if it doesnt the spectators will not be pleased, but either way that doesnt make the play any more representative of what is, it is just coherent. Reason is in thought and nowhere else, it is but is not something else <hr/> |

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 1898
(12/16/03 6:52 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

That's just Spin creating his own theater. We can dismiss it.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 1899
(12/16/03 7:01 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Autem wrote:

Quote:

---

Ok, reasoning as a process is inevitable. Reason must have a beginning though. A reason to base all your reasons on.

You present your reason as something divine, ignoring that it had an origin. Even your reason of reasons,  $A=A$ , came about... from somewhere :)

---

The concept certainly came from somewhere, but the truth of it is timeless. It is timeless because it is impossible for  $A=A$  to be invalidated anywhere or anywhen. Thus we have a timeless basis for further reasonings.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 195
(12/16/03 10:54 am)
Reply

Re: Reason validates itself?

---

So what is the nature of reasoning?

That's both an open and rhetorical question.

It seems to be like creating causal thinking chains. We move from one link to the next, forward or reverse - or both. It seems a natural evolution of thought processing due to our existence in a world that operates as per cause and effect. It is the formation of structure between our concepts, representing the shift from immediate and passive consciousness to abstract templates which can be placed over causal occurrences.

Good reasoning usually involves the gaining of logical or empirical evidence to support a notion that one wishes to posit, rather than basing it on faith. However, even the faith bound have their reasons ("because my parents believed it" or "I read it somewhere"). All reasons are necessarily based on 'experiential evidence', how could we reason with that which has never made an appearance to our mind? However, there are reasons that, whilst based on experience, are not uncertain evidence. Logical truths are a form of evidence that provide rock-solid support for reasonings.

In a worldly sense, we could categorise reasoning:

1. Reason for having a particular opinion on some matter.
2. Reason for undertaking a particular action.

[But as per cause and effect there is no fundamental difference between a 'thought-action' or a 'physical-action']

Just some initial thoughts. I'd like to really nut this out, so any offerings will be appreciated.

Rhett

Autem

Registered User

Posts: 16

(12/17/03 6:57 am)

Reply

Re: Reason validates itself?

---

Rhett:

Quote:

---

However, there are reasons that, whilst based on experience, are not uncertain evidence. Logical truths are a form of evidence that provide rock-solid support for reasonings.

---

But I think you have some sort of faith in your rock solid conclusions, and nothing else. My reason for that is that, even though these logical truths are solid, you choose to make them the centre of your life.

There is no real difference between somebody saying "I believe in God because he is omnipotent, omnipresent and omniscient" and somebody saying "I have chosen the path of logical reasoning because you cannot deny logical truths". No difference except that the former is chosen for, perhaps, a wish for comfort and the latter for, maybe, the desire for a truth that nobody can question.

You think there are no valid truths other than the logical, irrefutable ones.

But then you forget that first you have to value logic. It begins with a person, not with reason. And it can go many directions from that beginning point.

Edited by: Autem at: 12/17/03 6:58 am

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 1906

(12/17/03 11:17 am)

Reply

Re: Reason validates itself?

---

Autem wrote:

Quote:

---

But I think you have some sort of faith in your rock solid conclusions, and nothing else. My reason for that is that, even though these logical truths are solid, you choose to make them the centre of your life.

---

What a strange thing for Rhett to want to do! :)

Quote:

---

There is no real difference between somebody saying “I believe in God because he is omnipotent, omnipresent and omniscient” and somebody saying “I have chosen the path of logical reasoning because you cannot deny logical truths”. No difference except that the former is chosen for, perhaps, a wish for comfort and the latter for, maybe, the desire for a truth that nobody can question.

---

It's a choice that people have, isn't it. They can either choose to have faith in rock-solid truth, or in shaky, flimsy fantasy. It's a bit like the choice between building one's house on a solid unmoveable foundation in a sensible location, or on loose sand on the edge of a cliff.

Quote:

---

You think there are no valid truths other than the logical, irrefutable ones. But then you forget that first you have to value logic. It begins with a person, not with reason. And it can go many directions from that beginning point.

---

Well, once a person chooses logic, it can really only go in one direction - namely, straight into Truth - provided, of course, that he follows logic until the very end.

On the other hand, if he chooses something else other than logic, then yes, it can go in any direction. For there are an infinite number of irrational paths in the world.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 201
(12/17/03 11:22 am)
Reply

Re: Reason validates itself?

---

Quote:

-----
However, there are reasons that, whilst based on experience, are not uncertain evidence. Logical truths are a form of evidence that provide rock-solid support for reasonings.
-----

Autem wrote:

But I think you have some sort of faith in your rock solid conclusions, and nothing else. My reason for that is that, even though these logical truths are solid, you choose to make them the centre of your life.

Your 'reason' doesn't actually make any sense. Faith is what people engage in when they hold onto impermanent and/or unreasoned notions, not rock solid ones. I have no problem making the truth the centre of my life (so-to-speak) during the period in which they become integrated into my being. What problem could anyone have with that?

There is no real difference between somebody saying "I believe in God because he is omnipotent, omnipresent and omniscient" and somebody saying "I have chosen the path of logical reasoning because you cannot deny logical truths".

There is actually a world of difference. The former is looking for something to which they can ground their ego, the latter is looking for the Truth - which necessitates the elimination of ego. You are contrasting the end point of delusional grasping, versus the path to enlightenment. I am paying little attention to describing the end point (of the path to Truth) for a complexity of reasons.

No difference except that the former is chosen for, perhaps, a wish for comfort and the latter for, maybe, the desire for a truth that nobody can question.

That's a big and crucial difference from my perspective, especially considering that that desire exhausts itself...

You think there are no valid truths other than the logical, irrefutable ones.

All truths have to be irrefutable for them to be called truths. They simply can't be called a truth otherwise. And they must necessarily follow a logical process that is founded on the truth that  $A=A$ .

But then you forget that first you have to value logic. It begins with a person, not with reason.

The valuing of logic and reason needs to progress hand in hand, how could they not? One needs to conform to reason to value logic, and one needs to engage in logical deduction to value reason.

And it can go many directions from that beginning point.

Poor reason and logic certainly can, but all roads lead to Rome so-to-speak, ie. if reason is taken to it's completion - to it's zenith - it will always reach the same point - enlightenment.

Rhett

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 806
(12/18/03 10:43 am)
Reply

Re: Reason validates itself?

---

Faith.

1. To believe in something unproven or unproveable.
- 2. To believe in the efficiency of something.

From Toast's abridged.

Autem
Registered User
Posts: 18
(12/20/03 7:32 am)
Reply

Re: Reason validates itself?

David:

Quote:

---

Well, once a person chooses logic, it can really only go in one direction - namely, straight into Truth - provided, of course, that he follows logic until the very end.

---

Logic, taken to its end? Or to the point where you find yourself unable to refute it? Reason doesn't exist outside of you. It is not universal, you are the universe. Reason should fall to its knees before you instead of you for it.

Rhett:

Quote:

---

One needs to conform to reason to value logic, and one needs to engage in logical deduction to value reason.

---

But one may not need this in the first place.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1977
(12/20/03 12:51 pm)
Reply

----

Quote:

---

Well, once a person chooses logic, it can really only go in one direction - namely, straight into Truth - provided, of course, that he follows logic until the very end.

---

One can only go straight into truth, even if one goes crookedly! This is logic! What is it to "follow logic until the very end"?! The end of what?

Logic or ones life?

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 1921

(12/20/03 5:33 pm)

Reply

Re: Reason validates itself?

---

Autem wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: Well, once a person chooses logic, it can really only go in one direction - namely, straight into Truth - provided, of course, that he follows logic until the very end.

Autem: Logic, taken to its end? Or to the point where you find yourself unable to refute it?

---

As far as philosophic truth is concerned, logic reaches its end when it cannot be pushed any further without bringing one into contradiction. Specifically, this occurs when one gains awareness of Emptiness, which is the fundamental reality of the Universe. As soon as one becomes aware of Emptiness, one sees that it cannot be questioned because the very attempt to do so will always be based on a false conception of Emptiness. In other words, the very urge to ask the question obliterates the fact that Emptiness is not a "what" and that there is essentially nothing to question.

Quote:

---

Reason doesn't exist outside of you. It is not universal, you are the universe. Reason should fall to its knees before you instead of you for it.

---

Well, that's certainly the view of Christians and other similar kinds of fundamentalists, who not only demand that reason fall to its knees but that it should also be given an almighty kick in the guts.

If reason is not universal, then why are you trying to apply it in a universal manner? Just by concluding that reason doesn't exist outside of anyone, you're attempting to draw a universal conclusion that applies to everyone in the Universe.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 1922
(12/20/03 5:53 pm)
Reply

Re: ----

---

Suergaz wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: Well, once a person chooses logic, it can really only go in one direction - namely, straight into Truth - provided, of course, that he follows logic until the very end.

Nmm: One can only go straight into truth, even if one goes crookedly! This is logic!

---

I wonder if this means anything, or whether it's just babble. No point asking suergaz, for he'll only give another answer that resembles babble and we'll be none the wiser. Is it worth the effort to try and decipher the babble? I certainly don't think so. I wonder if anyone takes the time to decipher suegraz's babble? Is he wasting his time sending posts that no one really cares about? Does he even care that he's probably wasting his time?

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1979
(12/20/03 9:44 pm)
Reply

---

---

You wonder if it means anything?! Logic and reason must not mean as much to you as you make out!

You seem a little distressed that I am a more reasonable being than yourself, and unconquerable when our logic is compared! (:D)

Autem
Registered User
Posts: 19
(12/21/03 6:22 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Well, that's certainly the view of Christians and other similar kinds of fundamentalists, who not only demand that reason fall to its knees but that it should also be given an almighty kick in the guts.

---

If it happens to be necessary... why not? Maybe Christians are indeed as right as you, as long as they are as certain of it as you are :)

Quote:

---

If reason is not universal, then why are you trying to apply it in a universal manner? Just by concluding that reason doesn't exist outside of anyone, you're attempting to draw a universal conclusion that applies to everyone in the Universe.

---

I meant to say that reason is not the universe. It's in it, not all of it. If I say reason doesn't exist outside of anyone... then it can't exist outside of me. So I can apply it to everyone else in the universe, or not do so, to my liking. I may use reason the one moment, then abandon it, then return to it, and it will be none the less true. This attitude must annoy you to no end. Unfortunately I don't know how you could persuade me it is wrong.

How does your end conclusion of Emptiness show you that reason is the only meaningful thing to pursue? Doesn't it mean that nothing ultimately matters? Then how does reason matter?

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

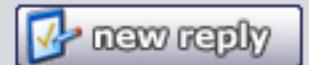

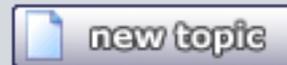

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Reason validates itself?

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                  | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 1928(12/21/03 6:45 am)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> Autem wrote: Quote: <hr/> DQ: If reason is not universal, then why are you trying to apply it in a universal manner? Just by concluding that reason doesn't exist outside of anyone, you're attempting to draw a universal conclusion that applies to everyone in the Universe. Autem: I meant to say that reason is not the universe. It's in it, not all of it. <hr/> In reality, it's neither of these two. Reason does indeed apply to everything in existence because as soon as a thing exists it is automatically bound by the laws of logic. A tree growing out of the ground, for example, is bound by the logic that it isn't a fluffy white cloud in the sky. Nothing can escape this. On the other hand, reason isn't the Universe itself. Only the Universe is the Universe. Reason is something that occurs within the Universe, while, at the same time, being applicable to everything that exists in the Universe. |

Quote:

---

If I say reason doesn't exist outside of anyone... then it can't exist outside of me. So I can apply it to everyone else in the universe, or not do so, to my liking. I may use reason the one moment, then abandon it, then return to it, and it will be none the less true. This attitude must annoy you to no end. Unfortunately I don't know how you could persuade me it is wrong.

---

Your stance (of not wanting to be consistently rational) doesn't annoy me because I encounter it all the time and I'm well used to it. There's not much point in me trying to use reason to persuade you to stay committed to reason because that would necessarily require you to be committed to reason. All I can suggest is that Truth is valuable and worth knowing and there is much to be gained by living a life of reason. But ultimately the choice is yours and, to be honest, I don't really care how you choose.

Quote:

---

How does your end conclusion of Emptiness show you that reason is the only meaningful thing to pursue?

---

Because, to me, Emptiness is too fantastic for words and makes everything else look third-rate.

Quote:

---

Doesn't it mean that nothing ultimately matters?

---

From Nature's point of view, nothing matters, yes.

Quote:

---

Then how does reason matter?

---

|                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                     | It doesn't, unless we choose to place value on it.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| AutemRegistered UserPosts: 20(12/21/03 7:56 pm)Reply     | Re: --- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> It doesn't, unless we choose to place value on it. <hr/> Well then! Reason does not validate itself.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1988(12/21/03 8:02 pm)Reply | --- <hr/> (:D)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| ksolwayRegistered UserPosts: 189(12/21/03 10:26 pm)Reply | Re: --- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Autemn: Then how does reason matter? David: It doesn't, unless we choose to place value on it. Autemn: Well then! Reason does not validate itself. <hr/> David has said earlier in this topic that reason cannot question itself. This is the same as saying that reason cannot validate itself. But whether or not reason can be validated doesn't necessarily have anything to do with whether we place value on reason. However, as you question the validity and/or value of reason, this reasoned argument shouldn't mean a lot. |

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1992

(12/21/03 11:20 pm)

Reply

---

---

Kevin addressing Autem.

Quote:

---

But whether or not reason can be validated doesn't necessarily have anything to do with whether we place value on reason.

---

Bullshit.

Quote:

---

However, as you question the validity and/or value of reason, this reasoned argument shouldn't mean a lot.

---

you've got that right!

The desire to question is enough to question what people mean by the word 'reason'---to see their reasons!

You sound as snotty as Rhett and David!

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 193
(12/21/03 11:25 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Kevin: But whether or not reason can be validated doesn't necessarily have anything to do with whether we place value on reason.

Suergaz: Bullshit.

---

It is very common for people to validate the truth of something and then to reject or nullify the value of that truth once they know it to be true.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1994
(12/21/03 11:30 pm)
Reply

---

---

This is what you don't seem to understand. You cannot nullify the value of a truth before actually nullifying the truth itself. Perhaps the future is no longer anything of life to you! ?!

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 195
(12/21/03 11:40 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Kevin: It is very common for people to validate the truth of something and then to reject or nullify the value of that truth once they know it to be true.

Suergaz: This is what you don't seem to understand. You cannot nullify the value of a truth before actually nullifying the truth itself.

---

Whenever you nullify the value of something, you are essentially nullifying that thing. For example, when you nullify the value of reason, you nullify reason. And when you nullify the value of a person, you nullify that person. Value and existence arise together.

Quote:

---

Perhaps the future is no longer anything of life to you!

---

I'm not sure what you mean by this, but wherever there is valuing, there is existence, and life.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1998
(12/21/03 11:45 pm)
Reply

---

---

What? You think my sentence describing what it seems you don't understand does not already have in it the truth of value and life arising at once?

Hahhahahaha

Autem
Registered User
Posts: 21
(12/22/03 6:03 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

But whether or not reason can be validated doesn't necessarily have anything to do with whether we place value on reason.

---

To validate something means the same as to place value on something.. or so I thought. But my understanding of English words is likely less good than yours. Still, that common practice of validating the truth of something and then rejecting it is the same as valuing it, and then ceasing to do so.

I simply mean that one cannot validate (value) the 'path of logic' for others. Yet it is presented here as the True Path. That implies that you are validating (valuing) it for everything in the universe.

That this is the best path to take doesn't follow from anything.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 1931
(12/22/03 9:32 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Autem wrote:

Quote:

---

I simply mean that one cannot validate (value) the 'path of logic' for others. Yet it is presented here as the True Path. That implies that you are validating (valuing) it for everything in the universe.

---

I agree that one can only validate the path of logic for oneself. But in doing this, one also validates it as the one true path of logic for everyone, irrespective of whether anyone else agrees with this or not.

Quote:

---

That this is the best path to take doesn't follow from anything.

---

It's the best path to take if you value sanity and consciousness of Truth. But of course, not many people value these things.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2000
(12/22/03 12:18 pm)
Reply

---

---

Quote:

---

I agree that one can only validate the path of logic for oneself.

---

Ok.

Quote:

---

But in doing this, one also validates it as the one true path of logic for everyone, irrespective of whether anyone else agrees with this or not.

---

Whoops.

Autem
Registered User
Posts: 22
(12/22/03 7:09 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

It's the best path to take if you value sanity and consciousness of Truth. But of course, not many people value these things.

---

Precisely. Of course, 'sanity' and 'consciousness of Truth' are mere words, but still :)

I never said I don't value these things... I just questioned them.

Quote:

---

But in doing this, one also validates it as the one true path of logic for everyone, irrespective of whether anyone else agrees with this or not.

---

This shouldn't mean anything to us others though, being absorbed in whatever path we're taking ourselves.. we can't even prove that you're conscious.

philosophyofdragons
Registered User
Posts: 2
(12/24/03 11:41 am)
Reply

Re: --- reason

---

The purpose of reason is to bring about enlightenment. Reason is the tool by which we put all the puzzle pieces together in harmony. If a piece of the puzzle is missing, it has to be found. Another piece cannot be forced into where it doesn't belong.

the meme of barnaby
Registered User
Posts: 12
(12/24/03 4:18 pm)
Reply

enlightenment as delusional

---

DQuinn wrote:

Quote:

---

Reasoning cannot question itself. To even begin to formulate a question, as you have done, requires the implicit acceptance of the validity of reason. Nothing else can question reason either, since, again, the very act of questioning something always entails a form of reasoning - no matter how purely emotional or intuitive the questioner might think himself to be.

So while we can question particular instances of reasoning to see if they are faulty or not, it is impossible to question the essence of reasoning itself.

---

Therefore, to use reason to reach enlightenment requires faith. Reasoned enlightenment is no different to the worst of religion.

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 208
(12/24/03 10:37 pm)
Reply

Re: enlightenment as delusional

the meme of barnaby wrote:

Quote:

---

Therefore, to use reason to reach enlightenment requires faith. Reasoned enlightenment is no different to the worst of religion.

---

The big difference is that reason shows common religious beliefs to be mistaken, but reason doesn't show either that reason itself is mistaken, or that valuing reason is mistaken.

Take  $A=A$  for example, the very simplest case of reason or logic, the case of identity: "a thing is identical to itself".

Can it (logic) be proven correct, without presuming the correctness of logic in the proof? No it can't.

Logic is simply something a logical being does, in the same way that a computer processes 1's and 0's, because it has no choice.

This doesn't make the computer wrong, or guilty of something worse than religious blind faith.

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 470
(12/25/03 6:57 am)
Reply

...

---

Cutting in...

The funny thing is that anyone who says "reason is NOT ultimate" is using reason to determine it so.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 1946

(12/25/03 1:25 pm)

Reply

Re: enlightenment as delusional

Barnaby wrote:

Quote:

---

Therefore, to use reason to reach enlightenment requires faith. Reasoned enlightenment is no different to the worst of religion.

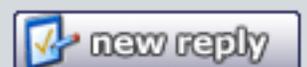

---

Adding to what Kevin wrote, reason doesn't fall into the same category as a religious belief. A religious belief is a view which has been constructed by reason (albiet in a faulty way), whereas reason is neither a constructed view nor an artifact of reason.

Also, a religious belief requires faith (in the form of blind belief) because its foundations are unprovable by either reason or empirical evidence; one has to blindly accept the foundations in the absence of any proof. Reason, on the other hand, doesn't require faith (in the form of blind belief) because its only foundation is  $A=A$  which is beyond question. It does, however, require faith (in the sense of putting one's personal trust in it) to follow reason all the way and trust that it will take one to the ultimate understanding. But this is entirely different from blind belief.

Finally, it should also be pointed out that it is impossible to not use reason to arrive at any conclusion at all. Even the most cynical, skeptical, anti-religious, anti-enlightenment, anti-faith of people use reason to formulate their beliefs. Thus, if you want to say that using reason to reach enlightenment is a form of faith akin to the worst of religion, then the same would also have to apply to everyone else as well, without exception.

In the end, the only real difference between the person who reasons his way into enlightenment and everyone else who uses reason to arrive at a point of view which falls short of enlightenment (whether it be a religious or a cynical point of view) is that the former exercises reason properly at all times.

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Reason/Logic

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                               | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| ksolwayRegistered UserPosts: 224(12/29/03 10:38 pm)Reply  |  Reason/Logic <hr/> . . . Continued from a discussion in the "Reincarnation" thread . . . suergaz wrote: Quote: <hr/> All reasoning may not be incomplete, but Toast is right that all reason is. How else could we reason? Kevin? <hr/> "All reason is incomplete, otherwise we cannot reason." I have no idea what that means, so how can I reply to it? |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2025(12/29/03 10:41 pm)Reply |  --- <hr/> I do great favour in permitting nonsense be made of my state! But how shall it be returned?!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |

ksolway

Registered User

Posts: 226

(12/29/03 11:01 pm)

Reply

Re: ---

Dave Toast wrote:

Quote:

---

DT: When you take an axiom, whether it be the 'self-evident' type or not (for they don't have to be), and you start to reason with it via logic, you have yourself an axiomatic system of great complexity.

Such a system is always subject to Incompleteness.

Reason is incomplete.

Kevin: Well, what you have written above is an example of incomplete and mistaken reasoning, but that doesn't mean that all reasoning is incomplete and mistaken.

DT: Now please substantiate your claim that my reasoning on this subject is incomplete and mistaken.

---

You can verify for yourself that the "incompleteness" theory applies only to a narrow band of reasoning, and does not impact on pure philosophical reasoning. Pure philosophical reasoning is too simple and too tight for any incompleteness to make its way in.

Quote:

---

If you perform any reasoning based on the Law Of Identity, then it is an axiom of your logical system.

---

Nevertheless, it doesn't serve a purpose to state the law of identity as an axiom, as all logical systems, and all axioms are dependent on it. Indeed, all thought is dependent on it.

Quote:

---

Are you saying that the Law of identity is not something that is taken as self-evident and does not constitute the bedrock of any system of reasoning?

---

It is the bedrock of thought itself. You can call it an axiom if you like, it just doesn't serve any useful purpose.

Quote:

---

Kevin: Reasoning deals only on the level of identity.

DT: Such ambiguous language - "deals only on the level of identity". Reasoning begins from identity and moves on from there. Of course this means that Identity is the axiom of reason. Reasoning requires more axioms.

---

In fact, reason can never get away from identities, as whatever it is dealing with is necessarily an identity of some sort. In other words, reasoning is always of the form  $A=A$ , no matter how complex it gets, or whether it is dealing with empirical objects, or fuzzy things, or maths, or whatever. Reason can also never be wrong. When wrong conclusions arise at the end of a reasoning process, it means that at some stage identities have become confused, and we have mistakenly said somewhere that  $A \triangleleft A$ .

For example, let's say we have to solve the formula

$$1 + 1 = x$$

. . . and at the end of a series of deft steps we arrive at the solution:  $x = 3$ . Then it is not reason that has failed, because reason cannot fail - there has only been a confusion of identities, and a loss of reason.

Edited by: ksolway at: 12/29/03 11:11 pm

|                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2026(12/29/03 11:14 pm)Reply     |  --- <hr/> Kevin is a confused identity! (:D) Naturally, reason cannot fail. Bedrock of thought nothing.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1200(12/30/03 8:51 am)Reply |  reason <hr/> Surely everyone is disappointed by now that birdofhermes wide ranging intellect has put forth no opinion on this topic. Unfortunately, she does not feel strong enough to enter the fray. With only a poor girl's brain and an 8th grade education, many of these points go over her head. Then, too, she is in the reluctant position of being poised to agree with QRS. The bit about Godel's incompleteness theories, and the bit about CS Lewis' tortoise and hare paradox seemed like sophistry, the picking apart of which somewhat eludes her capacities but leaves her scratching her head suspiciously. It seems to me that A does indeed equal A, and that it could be quite reasonable to call that the bedrock of axioms. It seems to me that A equaling A is virtually identical with logic. It could certainly be that there are realms of reality and direct experiences of same to which plodding reason may never take you, but I cannot picture how anything in any realm of reality could be incompatible with reason. |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2031(12/30/03 9:12 am)Reply      |  --- <hr/> Reason outstrips all plodders and marchers. Why would you poise to move at all if there was a bedrock of thought?!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |

|                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 498(12/30/03 10:19 am)Reply      |  Re: --- <hr/> Reason requires you to define objects, in order to arrive at logical conclusions. Of course there are places reason can't touch, but only take you to. The Tao Te Ching says that 'the Tao is nameless', which obviously means you can't define it. Even calling it "Tao", or saying "I can't define the Tao" is defining it and putting it into a box, and making an abstract model of it. Reality is beyond reason, but is understood through reason. Reason is life-less, and just a conceptual tool. Yet, it remains ultimate. |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2032(12/30/03 10:37 am)Reply     |  --- <hr/> Reason is nothing other than love. There is no law of identity in identity. I could almost be surprised at my hapless mastery of every intellectual position! (:D) O, wow, now how 'bout that tao? Nameless yet named? Such lying defamed what is standing, not life-less, that life must endow.                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1369(12/30/03 11:48 am)Reply |  - - <hr/> Quote: <hr/> I could almost be surprised at my hapless mastery of every intellectual position! <hr/> classic :-)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| 1TheMasterRegistered UserPosts: 198(12/30/03 12:07 pm)Reply   |  Re: - - <hr/> He does come out with the odd doozy.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 503
(12/30/03 12:59 pm)
Reply

Re: -|-

---

suergaz, you genius :P

Kellyven
Registered User
Posts: 7
(12/31/03 11:16 am)
Reply

A<>A with incomplete understanding of mental causes

What is the nature of identity and ego, if the law of identity involves the separation of an identified conscious being?

First, some definitions:

- Logic: process of the brain that categories perceptions into True / False
- Rationality: Ability of mental faculties to apply logic
- Reasoning: Process by which logic is applied

The role of logic and rationality are intimately linked to the enlightened mindset, since the recognition of the nature of a mental cause (or appearance to mind) is dependent on the absence of delusions. To be logical is to avoid false deductions, emotional reactionism, and egotistical distortion. To be able to follow the complexity of causality (to avoid the deluded mindset), the enlightened person's mental processes use reasoning and extrapolation (admitting to the absence of certainty), based on an awareness of how the causal sequences are played out.

The nature of identity (egotism) is basically the separation of a mental cause from the causal sequence, and thereby it is a delusion (since it is an incomplete appearance to mind). The nature of ego is attachment to that delusion (double delusion), ie belief that the mental cause is "good" or "me" and "real" (absolutely and ultimately real).

Being constantly 100% conscious means utterly and always aware of the nature of Ultimate Reality and constantly aware of the nature of the deluded mindset. Not only does this mean perfect awareness that mental causes are embedded within a complex constant chain of causes (thus each "appearance to mind" is incomplete) but also perfect awareness of that complex chain, following through each sequence to know "completeness" via attention to the nature and processes of causality.

Kven

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 860
(1/1/04 2:08 am)
Reply

Re: A<>A with incomplete understanding of mental cause

---

Nice.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1375
(1/1/04 3:01 am)
Reply

<>A with incomplete understanding of mental causes

---

The way Identity is defined here relates to the initial inklings of consciousness. The way a worm might determine whether an object is food or not-food. If food, then it is food. It cannot be not-food.  $A=A$ . A might also equal B or C or BC or whatever as well, but by default, always  $A=A$ .

The Law of Identity is also an act differentiation. When a consciousness begins to differentiate objects in it's environment, it then begins to add mental value constructs to those objects; again like "food" or "dangerous" (good/bad evaluation).

Quote:

---

The nature of identity (egotism) is basically the separation of a mental cause from the causal sequence, and thereby it is a delusion (since it is an incomplete appearance to mind).

---

This is a misunderstanding of the Law of Identity as represented here by  $A=A$ . It is not personal identification necessarily that is being described, but rather the way in which a consciousness describes to itself the objects in it's surrounding environment.

Tharan

Edited by: WolfsonJakk at: 1/1/04 11:54 am

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 861

(1/1/04 3:39 am)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

DT: When you take an axiom, whether it be the 'self-evident' type or not (for they don't have to be), and you start to reason with it via logic, you have yourself an axiomatic system of great complexity.

Such a system is always subject to Incompleteness.

Reason is incomplete.

Kevin: Well, what you have written above is an example of incomplete and mistaken reasoning, but that doesn't mean that all reasoning is incomplete and mistaken.

DT: Now please substantiate your claim that my reasoning on this subject is incomplete and mistaken.

Kevin: You can verify for yourself that the "incompleteness" theory applies only to a narrow band of reasoning, and does not impact on pure philosophical reasoning. Pure philosophical reasoning is too simple and too tight for any incompleteness to make its way in.

---

So you're not going to substantiate your false claim then.

I realise that this cannot often be said about you Kevin and that is why I'm going to say it. You have not got the first idea about what you are talking about with regard to this subject. That is because you have not got the first idea about the subject itself and it's implications.

Incidentally, talking about verification. You can perform as tight a piece of philosophical reasoning as you like, it can only ever be verified by reliance on the axioms used. This is where Empiricism does not suffer the same malaise, as it relies on experimental evidence for it's verification.

---

Quote:

DT: If you perform any reasoning based on the Law Of Identity, then it is an axiom of your logical system.

Kevin: Nevertheless, it doesn't serve a purpose to state the law of identity as an axiom, as all logical systems, and all axioms are dependent on it. Indeed, all thought is dependent on it.

---

If you are looking to quantify your axiomatic system, and see whether it is sufficiently strong to qualify for Incompleteness, then stating the Law Of Identity as an axiom serves a purpose.

As I've said before, equivalence itself requires 3 axioms.

Surely you aren't suggesting that delineation serves no purpose, does not inform us, might not illuminate?

Quote:

---

DT: Are you saying that the Law of identity is not something that is taken as self-evident and does not constitute the bedrock of any system of reasoning?

Kevin: It is the bedrock of thought itself. You can call it an axiom if you like, it just doesn't serve any useful purpose.

---

If one is analysing thought itself, then one should look at it's bedrock. If one is looking at the bedrock of thought and analysing it's axiomatic system, calling it an axiom serves a useful purpose.

Quote:

---

Kevin: Reasoning deals only on the level of identity.

DT: Such ambiguous language - "deals only on the level of identity". Reasoning begins from identity and moves on from there. Of course this means that Identity is the axiom of reason. Reasoning requires more axioms.

Kevin: In fact, reason can never get away from identities, as whatever it is dealing with is necessarily an identity of some sort. In other words, reasoning is always of the form  $A=A$ , no matter how complex it gets, or whether it is dealing with empirical objects, or fuzzy things, or maths, or whatever.

---

Yes, that's pretty much what I said. If Origami begins with paper and moves on to folding, it never gets away from paper.

Quote:

---

Reason can also never be wrong. When wrong conclusions arise at the end of a reasoning process, it means that at some stage identities have become confused, and we have mistakenly said somewhere that  $A \nabla A$ .

For example, let's say we have to solve the formula

$$1 + 1 = x$$

. . . and at the end of a series of deft steps we arrive at the solution:  $x = 3$ . Then it is not reason that has failed, because reason cannot fail - there has only been a confusion of identities, and a loss of reason.

---

Like it. Never really thought about it like that.

However, this does not validate reason, neither does it invalidate Incompleteness. In fact that above is pretty much what Godel's theorems are all about. I think you need to have a really good look into Godel's theorem, and its implications.

ksolway

Registered User

Posts: 231

(1/1/04 10:07 am)

Reply

Re: ---

Dave Toast wrote:

Quote:

---

Kevin: You can verify for yourself that the "incompleteness" theory applies only to a narrow band of reasoning, and does not impact on pure philosophical reasoning. Pure philosophical reasoning is too simple and too tight for any incompleteness to make its way in.

DT: So you're not going to substantiate your false claim then.

---

The incompleteness theory obviously has a context in which it claims to be true. In fact its context is a system of "sufficient complexity" or "moderately rich systems". It applies to what it calls "theories". Pure philosophical thought, being of the simple form  $A=A$  is not of sufficient complexity, and thus does not produce "theories" in this sense. Philosophy really only ever restates  $A=A$  using different words.

What Godel showed incomplete is the formalization of arithmetic, where axiomatizations are of a sufficiently rich level (and in which there is a sentence which is neither provable nor refutable). His theory does not apply to logic itself.

In fact, Godel himself proved first-order logic (propositional calculus) is "complete".

Quote:

---

Incidentally, talking about verification. You can perform as tight a piece of philosophical reasoning as you like, it can only ever be verified by reliance on the axioms used.

---

If all the so-called "axioms" used are of the simple form  $A=A$ , and the conclusion of the reasoning is also of the form  $A=A$ , then there is no possible place for any error, uncertainty, inconsistency, or incompleteness to occur.

Quote:

---

Surely you aren't suggesting that delineation serves no purpose, does not inform us, might not illuminate?

---

It doesn't help us in regard to  $A=A$ , because any form of delineation is itself dependent on assuming  $A=A$ . Also,  $A=A$  can't be delineated, as it doesn't have enough substance to do so.

In the case of an expression like  $1 + 1 = 2$ . It does not need to be proven that  $1 + 1 = 2$ , because  $1 + 1$  is defined to be 2. That's all there is to it. That is, there is no requirement for any "completeness" when there is nothing to be proven, and thus the completeness is already there.

Compare the "incompleteness theorem" with his "completeness theorem".

Also, Goedel's theory of incompleteness is based on turning numbers into symbols representing themselves as well as abstracts. If you do this, numbers can be made to lie. This is like when you use a particular word when trying to define that same word. Eg, if a barber shaves everyone in town who does not shave himself, then does he shave himself? This is undecidable.

If you don't do this, then you don't end up with his conclusions.

Edited by: ksolway at: 1/1/04 10:56 am

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2036

(1/1/04 10:54 am)

Reply

Quote:

---

If one is analysing thought itself, then one should look at it's bedrock. If one is looking at the bedrock of thought and analysing it's axiomatic system, calling it an axiom serves a useful purpose.

---

No, if one is analysing thought itself, one should look at ones thought. You've fallen for this bedrock bullshit too.

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

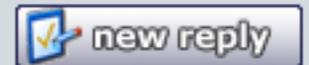

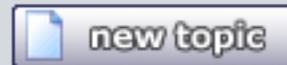

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Reincarnation?

Page 1 2 3 4 5

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                           | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| ksolwayRegistered UserPosts: 238(1/6/04 9:16 am)Reply |  Re: Reincarnation? <hr/> Quote: <hr/> KS: Having the intellectual knowledge of a truth is still a long way from removing the delusion, as many delusions have subtle roots, are deeply ingrained, and are habitual. Knox: Then are you implying that only intuitive knowledge is valid or is it a combination of both and how does one gain this type of knowledge, thru experience? <hr/> You can only properly recognize a delusion through intellectual knowledge, the discriminating force. That intellectual knowledge in itself moves you closer to Truth, but not by any means all the way there. Then, the more you think about Truth, and the more you fill you mind with thoughts of Truth, and the more you love the Truth, you automatically move even closer to Truth, and the direct consciousness of Truth gradually becomes your normal state of being. It is like a process of osmosis. For example, if you spend a lot of time in the fog, then eventually your clothes become soaked, through no extra effort on your part. Some people try to force their mind into altered states of consciousness, | thinking they are getting direct intuitive experiences of Truth, and that they are taking a shortcut to enlightenment. But they are mistaken. They are short-circuiting, and ending in a cul-de-sac.

Quote:

---

Also, are you recommending a regimen of diet and exercise for the ego?

---

Exercise and diet for the body, and for the mind perhaps, but for ego, starvation to death.

On the other hand, some people's ego's are so weak that they don't even have the courage to do anything at all - not even begin to think. Those people need to strengthen their ego first, before they can do anything.

avidaloca
Registered User
Posts: 145
(1/6/04 10:59 am)
Reply

 Re: Reincarnation?

---

ksolway wrote:

Quote:

---

For example, if you spend a lot of time in the fog, then eventually your clothes become soaked, through no extra effort on your part.

---

Reminds me of something I read in a book by a Japanese Zen Master:

After you have practiced for a while, you will realize that it is not possible to make rapid, extraordinary progress. Even though you try very hard, the progress you make is always little by little. It is not like going out in a shower in which you know when you get wet. In a fog, you do not know you are getting wet, but as you keep walking you get wet little by little. If your mind has ideas of progress, you may say, "Oh this pace is terrible!" But actually it is not. When you get wet in a fog it is very difficult to dry yourself. So there is no need to worry about progress. It is like studying a foreign language; you cannot do it all of a sudden, but by repeating it over and over you will master it. This is the Soto way of practice. We can say either that we make progress little by little, or that we do not even expect to make progress. Just to be sincere and make our full effort in each moment is enough. There is no Nirvana outside our practice.

from Zen Mind, Beginner's Mind by Shunryu Suzuki

(Right-click and select "Save Target As" to download this book in Word2000 format (326kb))

Martin

Edited by: avidaloca at: 1/6/04 11:07 am

Lbartoli

Registered User

Posts: 310

(1/7/04 3:14 am)

Reply

 a question to Kevin Solway

---

ksolway wrote:

When I said that enlightenment consists of "removing delusions" that means doing a lot more than simply being aware of truths, and being aware of one's delusions.

For example, a person might know fully why it is wrong for them to eat too much, and not exercise enough, and be overweight. Yet they continue to eat too much, not exercise, and put on weight.

Or they might know why it is irrational for them to feel bored, yet they sometimes feel bored.

Having the intellectual knowledge of a truth is still a long way from removing the delusion, as many delusions have subtle roots, are deeply ingrained, and are habitual.

LB: Well said, Kevin. But now you have me thinking- 'Kevin claims to be Enlightened, so at the very least he knows it is irrational to feel bored. But Kevin claims Enlightenment, so he has "removed delusions"; does this mean Kevin does not get bored at all?

And if Kevin does at times become bored, how is he any different than the person he speaks of above- he who knows why it is irrational to feel (enter any delusion here) bored yet feels bored nevertheless?"

I have posed similar question to others claiming to be Enlightened, such as Dan Rowden, and far as i recall received little to no response. Usually no response, ignoring my question, dodging it, or answering with a word, or few, or some smartass-type response.

Can you do better than that, Kevin? Would you take a minute to explain why it is you, being Enlightened, experience boredom (IF in fact you ever do anymore, to the best of your awareness)?

Im not looking for a "well i'm not perfect!" type of evasive response, and I've heard all about the "residual delusions" explanation that seem to inevitably remain after every Attainment.

Sure, the difference is that "the genuinely Enlightened person (GEP) is different in that he is indeed Enlightened, while The Other Person (TOP) is not" and that is the difference.

No, im not looking for that kind of obvious, non-response.

What i want to know is: a) What is your justification for classifying a TOP-- having a clear intellectual understanding of why he is irrational for (in this particular example) feeling bored-- as 'unenlightened', while the GEP, yourself, is awarded the title 'Enlightened sage'?

b) In other words, Why would you classify a person with full knowledge of Truth, but who has not 'completely removed the delusions' as 'Unenlightened'?, since i believe that actually includes YOU, doesnt it?, and anyone else who is not Perfected.

Would you care to explain this to me? to us? to answer these questions above? Completely?

Also, Im confused as to why you are making this point.

Leo

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 213
(1/7/04 10:24 am)
Reply | Edit

 Re: Reincarnation?

---

For example, if you spend a lot of time in the fog, then eventually your clothes become soaked, through no extra effort on your part.

But if you stride rather than amble or walk you'll get wet quicker.

If you spend 1 hour per day thinking about the Infinite you're likely to progress far slower than if you spend the whole day contemplating it.

"...Just to be sincere and make our full effort in each moment is enough"...

Whilst i agree with the overall tone of the extract, particularly in regard to it's attempt to alleviate excessive and unproductive desire for progress, how many people, including spiritually advanced people, will use such comments as an excuse to be half-hearted? People are always looking for excuses for mediocrity.

How many people really know what sincerity and full effort means?

Whilst i think i'm beginning the transition from a gung-ho phase to a more tranquil phase, i still baulk at such comments. Looking at it in a rather gross sense, i think one needs to complete make major life revisions before any kind of 'settling' occurs.

Rhett

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 241
(1/7/04 10:27 am)
Reply

 Re: a question to Kevin Solway

---

Leo wrote:

Quote:

---

KS: Having the intellectual knowledge of a truth is still a long way from removing the delusion, as many delusions have subtle roots, are deeply ingrained, and are habitual.

LB: Well said, Kevin. But now you have me thinking- 'Kevin claims to be Enlightened, so at the very least he knows it is irrational to feel bored. But Kevin claims Enlightenment, so he has "removed delusions"; does this mean Kevin does not get bored at all?

And if Kevin does at times become bored, how is he any different than the person he speaks of above- he who knows why it is irrational to feel (enter any delusion here) bored yet feels bored nevertheless?"

---

If a person were perfect they would not feel the slightest trace of boredom at any time, neither gross (marked) nor subtle (faint traces) boredom.

A person who has mere intellectual knowledge, even of all delusions, doesn't necessarily escape even gross boredom (and other delusions), because the knowledge does not pervade all parts of their mind. Their knowledge is compartmentalized. You could call such a person "enlightened" if you wanted to, as indeed "a light has been turned on", but I wouldn't use the word in that case, as the person hasn't achieved anywhere near enough consistency, and hasn't developed enough love of truth. They are not a shining beacon. They are like a person who has just started walking in the fog, and has not yet become drenched to their bones. Or they are like a person who has been walking in the fog for some time, but they have remained relatively dry because they are wearing waterproof clothing, as they have no great desire to be drenched.

I would call a person "enlightened" when their intellectual knowledge of Reality extends to everything, plus that intellectual knowledge has largely pervaded all parts of their mind, dispelling all gross delusions and inconsistencies in thought and behavior, and they have a deep love of Truth which shines from them.

Such a person will still experience very subtle boredom, or disappointment, etc. But these subtle remaining delusions will be fleeting and very insubstantial. They will not be able to influence the person's primary thoughts and behaviours in any way. They will be like a barely detectable mist that does not obstruct their vision in any real way, and quickly evaporates.

Quote:

---

Also, I'm confused as to why you are making this point.

---

I was answering a question by Knox.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 214
(1/7/04 10:45 am)
Reply | Edit

 Re: a question to Kevin Solway

---

LB: Well said, Kevin. But now you have me thinking- 'Kevin claims to be Enlightened, so at the very least he knows it is irrational to feel bored. But Kevin claims Enlightenment, so he has "removed delusions"; does this mean Kevin does not get bored at all?

Just to give you another answer, i haven't been bored for at least the last 10 years. Rationality alone beats boredom.

I can, and have, spend whole days lying in bed 'doing' nothing without getting in the slightest bored, i just think. Thinking is great stuff, and over time by continually working through the trivial stuff you'll experience it less and less. That way, whenever i have a 'loose moment' i am ready to drop into thinking at the drop-of-a-hat.

And yet what is thinking? Whether we are experiencing what we choose to call 'abstractions'(thought) or 'direct sensorial inputs', it's all actually the one reality - experience. Abstractions are just as much 'life' as anything else.

Rhett

Lbartoli
Registered User
Posts: 311
(1/7/04 3:21 pm)
Reply

 drawing a line

---

Re: a question to Kevin Solway

-----

Leo wrote:

Quote:

-----

KS: Having the intellectual knowledge of a truth is still a long way from removing the delusion, as many delusions have subtle roots, are deeply ingrained, and are habitual.

LB: Well said, Kevin. But now you have me thinking- 'Kevin claims to be Enlightened, so at the very least he knows it is irrational to feel bored. But Kevin claims Enlightenment, so he has "removed delusions"; does this mean Kevin does not get bored at all?

And if Kevin does at times become bored, how is he any different than the person he speaks of above- he who knows why it is irrational to feel (enter any delusion here) bored yet feels bored nevertheless?"

---

KSolway responded:

If a person were perfect they would not feel the slightest trace of boredom at any time, neither gross (marked) nor subtle (faint traces) boredom.

LB: Of course. But this isnt what i asked you. You answered an easy question of your own making, but did you answer MY questions? Lets see.

A person who has mere intellectual knowledge, even of all delusions, doesn't necessarily escape even gross boredom (and other delusions), because the knowledge does not pervade all parts of their mind.

LB: Agreed.

Their knowledge is compartmentalized. You could call such a person "enlightened" if you wanted to, as indeed "a light has been turned on", but I wouldn't use the word in that case, as the person hasn't achieved anywhere near enough consistency, and hasn't developed enough love of truth. They are not a shining beacon. They are like a person who has just started walking in the fog, and has not get become drenched to their bones. Or they are like a person who has been walking in the fog for some time, but they have remained relatively dry because they are wearing waterproof clothing, as they have no great desire to be drenched.

LB: Sure, ok. It seems to me you are saying when the light goes on that is attainment, but will take time for it to sink in and improve the person and that could take years, and at some point he becomes or may become so delusion free (just little left) that then and there you would be ok with regarding him Enlightened. Is that it?

KSolway:

I would call a person "enlightened" when their intellectual knowledge of Reality extends to everything,...

LB: Hold on a moment there, "everything"?, what do you mean here by "everything"? Is this "everything" essentially the same as the "person who has (mere) intellectual knowledge, even of all delusions". Is that what you mean here by everything, everything=all delusions resolved, gone for a time?

If so then, so far, no fundamental difference between these people.

you continued:

...plus that intellectual knowledge has largely pervaded all parts of their mind,

LB: Ok, now you are repeating yourself, which is ok; but this, it appears, is the fundamental or essential difference, as you see it, between that which you consider Enlightened and he who you would not consider really Enlightened. I noticed, however, that you added the qualifier "largely" this time, which to me suggests that when you say the 'truly' enlightened person's knowledge pervades *all* parts of their mind, you really mean to say MOST of their mind but not every single part, or not entirely, something along those lines. Is that right, Kevin?

you continued:

...dispelling all gross delusions and inconsistencies in thought and behavior, and they have a deep love of Truth which shines from them.

Such a person will still experience very subtle boredom, or disappointment, etc. But these subtle remaining delusions will be fleeting and very insubstantial. They will not be able to influence the person's primary thoughts and behaviours in any way.

LB: What do you mean? Give me an example of a deluded behavior that would cease entirely for such a person.

...They will be like a barely detectable mist that does not obstruct their vision in any real way, and quickly evaporates.

LB: OK. Lets find the conclusion here then.

I am trying to determine where and how you draw the line between he whom you would consider, if you will, truly Enlightened, and he whom you would not consider Enlightened. And it all depends, according to you, if im not mistaken, on the EXTENT to which the individual's (perfect) understanding or knowledge, as you put it, pervades his mind.

If it pervades his mind just a little, and consequently he experiences much boredom and other such delusions or sufferings, he may technically be Enlightened but you wouldnt consider him so since the knowledge has had little impact on him. However, if he experiences only subtle delusions, boredom etc because the knowledge has pervaded his mind almost completely (largely) then in your book he's Enlightened. Is that pretty much it in a nutshell?

I'm actually going somewhere with this one, so i hope you dont ignore as much of this post as you did the last. I think a new thread or two will come out of this that may interest many, and may help me, so please let me know if i have your position right, or correct.

tanx, Leo

Quote:

---

Also, Im confused as to why you are making this point.

---

I was answering a question by Knox.

LB: thats not what i mean.

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 242
(1/7/04 4:38 pm)
Reply

 Re: drawing a line

---

Leo wrote:

Quote:

---

Sure, ok. It seems to me you are saying when the light goes on that is attainment, but will take time for it to sink in and improve the person and that could take years, and at some point he becomes or may become so delusion free (just little left) that then and there you would be ok with regarding him Enlightened. Is that it?

---

Yes. But I would probably not use a capital letter for this level of enlightenment, which is incomplete, even though it is an incredibly great accomplishment.

Quote:

---

KSolway: I would call a person "enlightened" when their intellectual knowledge of Reality extends to everything,...

LB: Hold on a moment there, "everything"?, what do you mean here by "everything"?

---

Meaning that the person's wisdom can be applied to any particular problem, and see the underlying Truth in it. For example, the ability to see through all genuine koans, or, in fact, any occurrence in life. It would include the ability to correctly understand all genuine spiritual teachings.

Quote:

---

Is this "everything" essentially the same as the "person who has (mere) intellectual knowledge, even of all delusions".

---

The person whose knowledge was merely intellectual would struggle with koans, or difficult philosophical or moral problems. That is, even though they would be able to come up with some kind of reasoned response to koans, or religions teachings, or any occurrence in life, their response would not be spontaneous and effortless. They would be struggling, and would make mistakes, and would be inconsistent. Their responses would be mostly from their mind, rather from the depth of their character, and dare I say "heart".

Quote:

---

KS... that intellectual knowledge has largely pervaded all parts of their mind,

LB: Ok, now you are repeating yourself, which is ok; but this, it appears, is the fundamental or essential difference, as you see it, between that which you consider Enlightened and he who you would not consider really Enlightened. I noticed, however, that you added the qualifier "largely" this time, which to me suggests that when you say the 'truly' enlightened person's knowledge pervades *all* parts of their mind, you really mean to say MOST of their mind but not every single part, or not entirely, something along those lines. Is that right, Kevin?

---

Until one is perfect there remains at least some parts of the unconscious mind where wisdom has not fully permeated and transformed.

Quote:

---

KS: ...dispelling all gross delusions and inconsistencies in thought and behavior, and they have a deep love of Truth which shines from them.

Such a person will still experience very subtle boredom, or disappointment, etc. But these subtle remaining delusions will be fleeting and very insubstantial. They will not be able to influence the person's primary thoughts and behaviours in any way.

LB: What do you mean? Give me an example of a deluded behavior that would cease entirely for such a person.

---

Deluded behaviours that would affect a person's ability to think clearly would include things like: anger, jealousy, fear, frustration, self-pity, confusion, boredom.

Quote:

---

I am trying to determine where and how you draw the line between he whom you would consider, if you will, truly Enlightened, and he whom you would not consider Enlightened. And it all depends, according to you, if im not mistaken, on the EXTENT to which the individual's (perfect) understanding or knowledge, as you put it, pervades his mind.

---

Yes.

Quote:

---

If it pervades his mind just a little, and consequently he experiences much boredom and other such delusions or sufferings, he may technically be Enlightened but you wouldn't consider him so since the knowledge has had little impact on him.

---

The obvious, plain meaning of the word "enlightened" is that "the light has been turned on, and now one can see". There are many such "enlightenments" on the way which leads to a person being, what I would call, "enlightened". At each step, the light becomes that much brighter and far-reaching.

Quote:

---

However, if he experiences only subtle delusions, boredom etc because the knowledge has pervaded his mind almost completely (largely) then in your book he's Enlightened. Is that pretty much it in a nutshell?

---

Yes, "enlightened" but not perfected.

Lbartoli
Registered User
Posts: 312
(1/7/04 6:25 pm)
Reply

 partial enlightenment

---

KS: ...dispelling all gross delusions and inconsistencies in thought and behavior, and they have a deep love of Truth which shines from them.

Such a person will still experience very subtle boredom, or disappointment, etc. But these subtle remaining delusions will be fleeting and very insubstantial. They will not be able to influence the person's primary thoughts and behaviours in any way.

LB: What do you mean? Give me an example of a deluded behavior that would cease entirely for such a person.

-----
KSolway:

Deluded behaviours that would affect a person's ability to think clearly would include things like: anger, jealousy, fear, frustration, self-pity, confusion, boredom.

LB: Of course, but that's not the question. I'm asking you to provide an example, or better yet examples, of deluded behavior that cease *entirely* for such a one, for a person such as yourself for instance.

Are you saying if someone tied you down and said they would and then began to pound nails and sharp objects into your body, piercing you in small, intense ways again and again for days on end and peeled your skin off little by little non-stop and zapped you with live wires, etc etc keeping you alive at all cost, doing the same to all those dearest to you there before you while hearing their agonizing screams again and again etc etc, are you saying that all this would not influence this person's, would not influence your primary thoughts and behaviours "in any way"?

Leo

ksolway

Registered User

Posts: 243

(1/7/04 7:09 pm)

Reply

 Re: partial enlightenment

Leo wrote:

Quote:

---

Are you saying if someone tied you down and said they would and then began to pound nails and sharp objects into your body, piercing you in small, intense ways again and again for days on end and peeled your skin off little by little non-stop and zapped you with live wires, etc etc keeping you alive at all cost, doing the same to all those dearest to you there before you while hearing their agonizing screams again and again etc etc, are you saying that all this would not influence this person's, would not influence your primary thoughts and behaviours "in any way"?

---

That's right. If you don't have an emotional attachment to your own life, or the lives of others, or your own future, or the future lives of others, then it doesn't matter much what kind of bad situations you might find yourself in. The enlightened person sees all situations simply as inevitable situations of cause and effect.

So the enlightened person, though tortured, would continue to think and behave as an enlightened person.

At the most they would have to contend with the subtle, very mild hindrances I spoke of before, and these would not distract them from their primary thought.

Edited by: ksolway at: 1/7/04 9:08 pm

DEL

Registered User
Posts: 900
(1/7/04 7:30 pm)
Reply

 Cant be done

---

Only creatures that are asexual can reincarnate.
So some people choose celibacy to try and get nearer to asexuality.

Lbartoli

Registered User
Posts: 313
(1/7/04 8:44 pm)
Reply

 -

---

You're missing the point. The imperfect people under discussion are going to slip up, and though not normally in a big way under ordinary circumstances, new, unusual, stressful- extraordinary circumstances are more likely to give rise to extraordinary thoughts and behavior. In the real world.

You can try it at home if you dont believe me!

Leo

ksolway

Registered User

Posts: 244

(1/7/04 9:07 pm)

Reply

Re: -

---

Quote:

---

You're missing the point. The imperfect people under discussion are going to slip up, and though not normally in a big way under ordinary circumstances, new, unusual, stressful-extraordinary circumstances are more likely to give rise to extraordinary thoughts and behavior. In the real world.

You can try it at home if you dont believe me!

---

No, if a person only has subtle delusions left, then there is nothing in that person which can become aroused, or inflamed.

For example, there is nothing in them which is inflammable enough that it will burst into flame when fanned. There is at the most only a barely noticeable, mild warmth.

However, it is true that stress treatment will show-up any imperfections, and can reveal a person to be harbouring stronger delusions than they thought they were.

For example, an unexpected sharp blow directly on the thumb with a powerfully swung hammer can momentarily stir up some deep and irrational feelings. But if a person is solidly enlightened, they will feel little more than the actual physical pain.

Lbartoli
Registered User
Posts: 314
(1/7/04 9:07 pm)
Reply

 spiritual advancement

---

Now I'd like to put out the thought: What is anyone doing to try and determine why knowledge, in this case true knowledge, 'pervades' us, our minds, at different rates and with varying degrees of holding power? And what can be done to fill our minds more quickly and more firmly.

Seems to me that this is, or ought to be, AS important to our goals here as is the comprehension of that knowledge in the first place.

I dont see much emphasis placed here, not here in these discussions, not in books, not in the world.

Maybe this is something worth chatting about.

Leo

ps. Someone who knows how may start a new thread

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1221
(1/8/04 2:33 am)
Reply

 hmm

---

Only creatures that are asexual can reincarnate.

=====

So what happens to the sexual ones?

N0X23
Registered User
Posts: 61
(1/8/04 3:01 am)
Reply

 Re: hmm

---

Thank you for your useful response, Kevin.

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 398
(1/8/04 4:29 am)
Reply

☐ Re: Cant be done

---

Quote:

---

Only creatures that are asexual can reincarnate.

---

And I thought I lived in a looney bin.
DEL, thank you for reincarnating.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 218
(1/8/04 11:12 am)
Reply | Edit

☐ Re: spiritual advancement

---

Now I'd like to put out the thought: What is anyone doing to try and determine why knowledge, in this case true knowledge, 'pervades' us, our minds, at different rates and with varying degrees of holding power? And what can be done to fill our minds more quickly and more firmly.

Seems to me that this is, or ought to be, AS important to our goals here as is the comprehension of that knowledge in the first place.

I dont see much emphasis placed here, not here in these discussions, not in books, not in the world.

Perhaps you missed my previous post? Just to let you know, i'm probably just as interested in Kevin's comments as you are.

I think that the more an enlightened person reasons (thinks, contemplates) through their understanding of reality, and integrates their conclusions into the full spectrum of their experiences (which of course includes their contemplations), the more quickly they will develop their enlightenment. Simple as that. Eat, breath, shit enlightened understanding.

Which leads to the most significant point of all; how strong is your will to do the above?

My will makes me stand under a waterfall rather than wander through a fog. Sure, that sounds like an ego driven statement, and in some respects it is, but that's what it's all about - using the remnants of one's ego most effectively to pursue enlightenment. To attempt to squash or deny that ego is to circumvent the very process that one values.

Rhett

Page 1 2 3 4 5

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

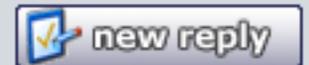

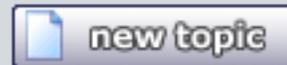

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Relationships - Absolute and Infinite

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                        | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 909(1/12/04 7:15 pm)Reply |  Relationships - Absolute and Infinite <hr/> I was having a drink in a bar by myself last week. 3 women came in and sat down on a table next to me.I went over and whispered (it is rude to whisper) a compliment into the ear of one of them which left the other 2 frozen in expectation as they eagerly waited to hear what the complete stranger who had not introduced himself, coming out of nowhere said. Stunned by the unusual approach I was invited to join them. So I joined them in their cackle. Then they started talking relationships. So I had a choice of just agreeing with their cackle and remaining in their company or risking a different opinion and getting rejected.I decided to risk getting rejected as my cackle tolerance was almost to 0. They were going on about great relationships so I warned them that I was about to take the conversation into 2 gear and that they should fasten their seat belts. The all looked at me with blank faces, I smiled. I said long term relationships without a purpose are a waste of time. It should be a long term relationship to start a family and have children (infinity) or a short term relationship to have great sex (absolute). They all launched at me with passion all trying to get a word in among themselves edgways. I just relaxed listened and observed. In the furore to correct my apparently terribly wrong opinion, 2 revealed that they were still single and the other newly married. As I continued to listen the married one tried to defend the 2 single ones by |

|                                                                                                                                                                   |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                   | saying that it was OK for people to have long term relationships with no purpose in mind. At that point the other 2 started to ignore her and talk among themselves. I ended up having a intellectually stimulating conversation with the married one. Who can sense of that?              |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 910(1/12/04 7:20 pm)Reply                                                                                     | Relationships - Absolute and Infinite <hr/> Sorry, I meant to ask:- Who can make sense of that? <hr/> Mr Rowden, please would you include an edit function on this forum if possible. |
| G ShantzRegistered UserPosts: 427(1/12/04 10:30 pm)Reply                                                                               | -- <hr/> If you want to edit your posts, you have to view them while logged in.                                                                                                                      |
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1398(1/13/04 12:20 am)Reply                                                                           | xxx <hr/> Notice how the hawk sits perched above his prey, thinking he is somehow above it all. Silly DEL.                                                                                  |
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 1610(1/13/04 12:29 am)Reply  | Re: xxx <hr/> Yes, the spider is yet confined to his web... Dan Rowden                                                                                                                      |

|                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 911(1/13/04 7:04 am)Reply           |  xxx <hr/> All true. The spider uses the web and the hawk uses the sky and the cheetah uses the plain.Which animal are you?                                                                                                                                                                               |
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1399(1/13/04 7:11 am)Reply  |  xxx <hr/> human                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 912(1/13/04 7:19 am)Reply           |  Relationships - Absolute and Infinite <hr/> So what do you know about human behaviour in this context?                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1400(1/13/04 10:18 am)Reply |  Relationships - Absolute and Infinite <hr/> I know you would have fucked 1 or all 3 of those women you pretended not care about, given the effortless chance. You just wanted to "test" yourself, like old man Ghandi sleeping with nubile teenage girls. Silly DEL. Tharan                    |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 913(1/13/04 6:52 pm)Reply           |  Relationships - Absolute and Infinite <hr/> Quote: <hr/> WolfsonJakkI know you would have fucked 1 or all 3 of those women you pretended not care about, given the effortless chance. You just wanted to "test" yourself, like old man Ghandi sleeping with nubile teenage girls. <hr/> |

Interesting point Wolfsonjakk. I was thinking that the women were so emotionally charged that even the fact that they were in their mid twenties did nothing for the powers of reason.

I "test" myself everyday. I push my boundaries and challenge my fears. There is still too much I'm afraid of due to lack of real understanding. By real understanding I mean tried and tested theories. The theory is empty until I have experienced it.

Subjectivity to Objectivity then back to subjectivity.

Alchemy - Gas to liquid to solid then back again.

Concept to reality then back again.

Last night was interesting too.

This beautiful woman came into the club with a large group. I watched her descend the stairs and told myself that I must say something.

I broke the ice by whispering something in her ear (regular tactic). She smiled and continued heading toward the bar with all the others. And as expected they all started asking what that guy said. So I relaxed as I knew I would be the conversation piece at the bar for short while. They all passed by me on the way to find seats. She made eye contact with me and smiled while passing so I called her over before the group had settle into their seats (timing is everything). We expanded on the things I had said to her in the beginning as quickly as possible. I could tell she was anxious because the group were settling in and would direct their attention to her with the stranger. I told her that she had better go before they all started talking. She gestured an invitation for me to join the group for a drink. I told her that I was not interested in meeting any of those people. I said I wanted to talk to her she said maybe later. That sometimes is a nice way to say no. I thought I'd take a risk and hang around for a bit longer. About 45 minutes later I saw her heading for the ladies toilet. I noticed that she took the long route that went past me. I took that to be a hint that she wanted me to notice because it was illogical for her to take a long route when the short route was so obvious. Female logic!

I decided to 'pounce' on her when she came out.

I expected, or should I hoped for, she took the long route back past me and we made eye contact.

The situation was still intense as the group could not see but would have a sense of time. If she talked to me too long she would raise concern among the group.

We exchanged numbers and kisses.

That was the first time I ever rubbished a womans company. Usually I would try to make myself accepted among her peers. This was the intense focus approach.

|                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                        | We all know the principle of dilution and diffusion but I needed to test it in various contexts.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1405(1/14/04 1:17 am)Reply |  Relationships - Absolute and Infinite <hr/> Sure, DEL. Anything you say...                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 406(1/14/04 2:39 am)Reply         |  Re: DELationships - Absolute and Infinite <hr/> From The Golden Girls: Stan: Hello, mama bear. Papa bear's back in the cave.Dorothy: I could vomit just looking at you.                                                                                                                                               |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 584(1/14/04 6:21 am)Reply      |  ... <hr/> It's interesting, Del, how you relate philosophical concepts with everyday things. It's like a microcosm. Good work with the ladies. As some guy from the Matrix says "you can only truly know someone after fighting them" (or something to that extent). Relationships are definitely a great form of warfare. |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 915(1/14/04 7:01 am)Reply          |  form of warfare <hr/> Quote: <hr/> voce ioRelationships are definitely a great form of warfare. <hr/> Well said Voce io. Some people are in a war and are unconscious of it. They see parts of themselves vanishing and destroyed and have no idea how it happens.                                    |

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Rich Zubaty

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 2179(2/2/04 5:15 pm)Reply  | Rich Zubaty <hr/> Author of a book, "What Men Know That Women Don't". Excepts from a review: -- Women are more materialistic than men, he writes, stressing the word's etymology from the Latin "mater," and they are also more analytical than males. Correspondingly, despite common misconceptions, men are more spiritual (and more intuitive) than women, as well as more skilled in relationships, and we need to regenerate a male-flavored spirituality if we are to save this planet before it is really too late. One of the biggest problems today is men and women have swapped mental roles, and neither of us does particularly well at playing the other's role. Zubaty has a true poet's way with the pithy apothegm. "Women have more emotions, men have deeper feelings." "'Equality' is meaningless. Is a bee equal to a sparrow? The term is meaningless. And anyway, feminism was never honestly about Equality. Feminism was about MORE STUFF FOR WOMEN. Women don't want to mine coal or get drafted into war. That's too much Equality for them." "Men are not the oppressors of women. The simple proof of that is that Women are not oppressed." "Our male models are reconstituted women. They are the men women like, not the men God likes." "Men's intuition is to women's intuition as the night sky full of galaxies is to a flashlight. The flashlight looks brighter because it is closer, but that is just an | illusion" . . . . .

. . . . It's time for some more Zubatyisms. Regarding our feminized education system, the author acerbically notes, "School is the place you go to learn all the things that are exactly the opposite of what you need to know to succeed in life." "If I tell my kids, 'I happened upon a moment of Buddha consciousness standing on a street corner,' my son will say, 'What's Buddha consciousness?' and my daughter will say 'What street corner?'" "Yes, you have an equal right to fix your own toilet. Go do it." Like it or not, "ALL the major accomplishments of civilization spring from the obsessions of men the sociologists now disdain as 'workaholics.'" "Civilized women don't like war, but they DO like washing machines.... Don't tell me women will give up their washing machines to make life easier for their 'sisters' in poor countries. The sun will ice over before that happens."

These words that flow so nicely point toward some disturbing conclusions. Zubaty can be hard to take, because he can help us to realize, not to put too fine a point on it, how hard life today sucks. He assembles a convincing claim that computers are the most feminizing force in society today, and notes, "We don't need more education. We need more spirituality."

Zubaty notes the great lengths to which Nature has gone to produce the male. "Until around 1840, females lived 10% shorter lives than men... Is there any doubt who is profiting from the Industrial Revolution? ... Our men are going the way of the African elephant. It isn't that we are not hardy. The problem is that our habitat is being destroyed.... There is scarcely a real man left alive."

http://www.mannet.com.au/gmm/nav\_link/books/men\_know.htm

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 328
(2/2/04 8:37 pm)
Reply

Re: Rich Zubaty

---

Quote:

---

Until around 1840, females lived 10% shorter lives than men

---

"When my Dharma disappears it will be just like an oil lamp which flares brightly for an instant just before it goes out. After this time it is difficult to speak with certainty of what will follow."

"Good persons will be hard to find; at most there will be one or two. Men will die younger, and women will live longer."

- From "The Ultimate Extinction of the Dharma Sutra"

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 332
(2/2/04 8:55 pm)
Reply

Re: Rich Zubaty

---

Quote:

---

After this time it is difficult to speak with certainty of what will follow.

---

Probably more prophecies ;-)

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2169
(2/2/04 10:00 pm)
Reply

Re: Rich Zubaty

---

Rich Zubatys words are so much puke. He believes in God for a start.

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 668
(2/3/04 1:32 am)
Reply

Re: Rich Zubaty

---

I kind of agree with his ideas about how women are.

|                                                                                   |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| silentsalRegistered UserPosts: 30(2/3/04 2:48 am)Reply | Re: Rich Zubaty <hr/> it's interesting i agree the nature of the feminine mind is such that sometimes i feel such complete dis-respect for women yet here i am one, tis odd this mix. I also know that the journey i'm on is unstoppable so where does that take me - to extinction? Yet if i stop the flow extinction is assured. The Alchemist shapes and transforms and i owe my life to her yet she falls at my feet in a desperate attempt to have me take care of her. We truly are gods and there are no other |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 668(2/3/04 4:25 am)Reply  | Re: Rich Zubaty <hr/> The Alchemist shapes and transforms and i owe my life to her yet she falls at my feet in a desperate attempt to have me take care of her. Interesting.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 961(2/3/04 7:30 am)Reply      | Re: Rich Zubaty <hr/> Rich Zubaty.Excellent stuff! Thanks                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2171(2/3/04 8:29 am)Reply | --- <hr/> Rich zubaty:--"We don't need more education. We need more spirituality." Who cares if we are supposed to 'know what he means'?! A man who writes this has a serious lack of spirit!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 668
(2/3/04 11:11 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

True, suergaz.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1377
(2/3/04 12:33 pm)
Reply

Re: Rich Zubaty

---

Hmm, maybe I should get this book. I've been wondering for some time why you QRS guys have certain ideas backwards, such as the idea that our society is becoming more feminine. He rightly notes that the priests are wearing dresses, but does he know the reason why - they are copying the old priestesses from the time before the Patriarchy?

The bit about men living longer before 1840 I am sure is a poor twisting of statistics. Even among animals, such as caribou, in which the females bear without ceasing, they live longer than the males.

I can tell this book is a huge mix of facts and falsity, but it would probably teach me a lot.

Is this a new book, Kevin, or is it something that influenced you long ago?

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 329
(2/3/04 12:45 pm)
Reply

Re: Rich Zubaty

---

Quote:

---

Is this a new book, Kevin, or is it something that influenced you long ago?

---

I don't know anything about this book other than what David posted at the start of the thread. I'll buy it myself if I can scrape enough money together.

|                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1380(2/3/04 12:56 pm)Reply | Re: Rich Zubaty <hr/> Oh, my goof, I thought you had posted it. I believe I'm intrigued enough to read it. (Perhaps I'll send you mine after I'm done :)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 552(2/3/04 2:00 pm)Reply         | Re: Rich Zubaty <hr/> Now I remember this guy. I heard him on late night radio when i was trying to get to sleep. He wasn't talking about men-women in that interview though (female interviewer :). When i was listening I though..."geez this guy knows what he is talking about". I'm going to get his latest book, whatever it is. I don't recall anything much, it was a few weeks ago and I was trying to get to sleep, but it seemed he had a good way to mix both emotions and reasoning - which is what I want as well, and why I don't totally fall for the QRS 'reason is everything' perspective. Mixing both is more practical to me.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 558(2/3/04 2:40 pm)Reply         | Re: Rich Zubaty <hr/> He was talking about this book, it is fiction however, so i hope it is not too simplistic. Sounds like an entertaining read. "Your Brain Is Not Your Own" A review Rich Zubaty has previously written very provocative and enlightening non fiction books. In "Your Brain is Not Your Own" he proves his talents extend to fiction as well. Using a colorful cast of characters and a variety of exotic situations, Zubaty brings his ideas about our cultural dilemmas to life. Like his other works, this book is not for people looking for politically correct, sanitized entertainment. He challenges conventional ideologies on nearly every page. Zubaty is a staunch defender of a true masculine ethic which has been nearly lost in modern times. In "Your Brain" he provides a fictional vision of what could happen if true masculinity was reclaimed. He is critical of modern society | but his vision is ultimately hopeful. There is potential for societal evolution if people come to recognize the damage caused by corporate society. If you are tired of the usual vapid "Men are from Mars, Women are from Venus" sorts of commentaries on modern life, be sure to buy this book and Zubaty's others as well.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1388
(2/4/04 12:16 am)
Reply

Re: Rich Zubaty

---

I read a couple of reviews at Amazon today. the book is expensive. It appears the paperback is $24.

I have the impression he gets a few things mixed up, such as blaming women for the loss of deep, primal spirituality that is connected to nature.

I've got a deal for you Kevin. I'll get you a copy of the book if you also read a book of my choice.

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 335
(2/4/04 11:00 pm)
Reply

Re: Rich Zubaty

---

Quote:

---

I've got a deal for you Kevin. I'll get you a copy of the book if you also read a book of my choice.

---

I'm afraid I can't promise to read a book before reading it! Every now and again someone sends me a book and I'm unable to get all the way through it. I was recently sent "Evil Sisters" by Bram Dijkstra, but I've only been able to read bits and pieces of it. A bit of a waste really, considering that the postage costs for the sender were considerable.

However, if you want to send me the book when you've finished with it, I'll pay for the postage.

And if you have some recommended reading, I'll certainly try and chase the book up - through the library at least, or perhaps ebay, if I'm financial.

|                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2208(2/4/04 11:04 pm)Reply     | ---- <hr/> I bet it's a mr men book!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| LbartoliRegistered UserPosts: 362(2/5/04 1:13 am)Reply      | book for misogynist <hr/> Kevin Solway wrote: I don't know anything about this book other than what David posted at the start of the thread. I'll buy it myself if I can scrape enough money together. LB: Dont bother, I'll send you my copy, if you ask (beg) me to. Leo                                                                                                                                                                       |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1393(2/5/04 2:38 am)Reply | Re: Rich Zubaty <hr/> The book I had in mind was Rebalancing the World, by Carol Lee Flinders. I thought the begining was a bit slow, but mostly it's a page turner. I think I'll look of book reviews on Evil sisters. I'm curious what someone thought was important to send you.                                                                                                                                                                     |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 574(2/5/04 5:16 am)Reply        | Re: Rich Zubaty <hr/> I went looking for one of his books at a bookstore, none had any. Would buy it on the web but don't have a credit card. Anyway, I bought Voltaire's Bastards instead. Anyone read this and what did they think? It is about the failure of reason to create reasonable world. I haven't read enough to form a solid opinion, but I'm a bit iffie so far, got a feeling he won't get to the real underlying reasons. |

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Rich Zubaty

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                       | Comment                                                                                       |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1399(2/5/04 8:58 am)Reply  | Re: Rich Zubaty<hr/> The one who gets to the underlying reasons is Daniel Quinn.          |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2217(2/5/04 9:33 am)Reply       | ----<hr/> Who is Daniel Quinn?Jimhaz, Voltaire is funny. You should read candide. |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1401(2/5/04 10:33 am)Reply | Re: ----<hr/> He has a website. Or look up his most famous book, Ishmael.                 |

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1420

(2/23/04 7:52 am)

Reply

Rich Zubaty is watching us

---

I have finished his book and loved it. More than I expected.

I wrote to him, and told him about this website. Says he will have a look.

Leo, you should mail your copy to Kevin and David so they can catch up. Unless you insist on the groveling stuff, in which case I'll have to make good on my offer to buy them one.

Thomas Knierim

Registered User

Posts: 809

(2/23/04 2:39 pm)

Reply

Re: Rich Zubaty is watching us

---

Anna: I have finished his book and loved it. More than I expected.

I finished Jonathan Wells' book. Somewhat less than I expected (see "Icons of Evolution" thread). What was the other author's name?

Thomas

Edited by: Thomas Knierim at: 2/23/04 2:40 pm

Thomas Knierim

Registered User

Posts: 810

(2/23/04 2:44 pm)

Reply

Re: Rich Zubaty

---

Zubaty: "Until around 1840, females lived 10% shorter lives than men... Is there any doubt who is profiting from the Industrial Revolution?"

The industrial revolution has nothing to do with it. More likely reduced child birth death rates and advances in medicine. Doesn't Zubaty cite any data in support of this?

Thomas

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1422

(2/23/04 3:51 pm)

Reply

Re: Rich Zubaty is watching us

---

Thomas, I appreciate your reading that book very much. You are the first person to take that level of interest. I have not yet girded myself to deal with your book report, although I warn you I was not too impressed with your assesment of the homology chapter, which was my favorite. I did not notice that he had any interest in ID, which certainly might decrease his credibility with me, unless it is a case of his scientific conviction that evolution can't be true, which only later led him to some sort of religious idea of a Creator. Even that wouldn't be so bad as long as the belief in a Creator is non some Bible based junk. I mean, there's nothing wrong with belief in a creator, so long as that belief didn't inform your "objective" scientific opinion.

The other author is Richard Milton, and I am sure he is not a Christian or an IDer.

+++++

I also was wondering about the idea that men lived longer. I know that they did in the old American west, but that was a short lived phenomenon in which the push westward was very hard on women. It seems that in most societies, widows are more common than widowers. Quite a few animal species too, the female lives a bit longer. Caribou, for example.

ksolway

Registered User

Posts: 355

(2/23/04 4:45 pm)

Reply

Re: Rich Zubaty is watching us

---

Birdofhermes wrote:

Quote:

---

Leo, you should mail your copy to Kevin and David so they can catch up.

---

It's alright, Rich Zubaty has sent me a complimentary e-book, so I don't have to go begging to Leo!

I may do a review of it later on, or compile the best bits, or both.

Thomas Knierim

Registered User

Posts: 811

(2/23/04 7:09 pm)

Reply

Re: Rich Zubaty is watching us

---

Anna: I have not yet girded myself to deal with your book report, although I warn you I was not too impressed with your assesment of the homology chapter, which was my favorite.

Girded yourself? For battling the Darwinist divisions?

The other author is Richard Milton, and I am sure he is not a Christian or an IDer.

Apparently he isn't motivated religiously, which speaks in his favor; yet after visiting Milton's website <http://www.alternativescience.com/>, I decided not to read his book 'Shattering the Myths of Darwinism'. It seems just a bit too whacky to me. In the outline of this book, he (seriously) suggests to consider Lamarckism as an alternative explanation of speciation and he brings forward the standard creationist misconceptions about the Australopithecines and the H. habilis. In addition, you find links to paranormal studies, a thesis about the Sun containing a frozen core, and an article saying that "scans have found more than 100 people with 'No detectable brain' in their heads."

Probably Milton is one of them. ;-)

Cheers, Thomas

Rhett Hamilton

Registered User

Posts: 297

(2/26/04 11:36 am)

Reply

Re: book for misogynist

---

Anna wrote:

"I've got a deal for you Kevin. I'll get you a copy of the book if you also read a book of my choice".

Leo wrote:

"Dont bother, I'll send you my copy, if you ask (beg) me to".

I quote myself:

"No man could conceive of taking by giving, no woman could conceive of giving without taking."

Rhett Hamilton

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1426

(2/26/04 2:23 pm)

Reply

Re: book for misogynist

---

Quote:

---

"No man could conceive of taking by giving, no woman could conceive of giving without taking."

---

Look, you fuckhead, I was offering to buy and send Kevin two books, which would together cost $40 plus postage, whereas Leo the gossip says he'll send it if Kevin begs. I would pay for the book to spare Kevin that.

You pompous queer.

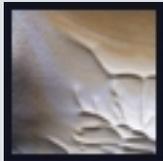

Rhett Hamilton

Registered User

Posts: 301

(2/27/04 11:19 am)

Reply

Re: book for misogynist

---

Has it occurred to you, Anna, that i am trying to help you see your nature such that you can develop yourself beyond it? And that in that sense i am giving without taking.

Sure, it was a minor point, but it's revealing and indicative of the feminine nature nonetheless, and being so low-key, surely we can talk about it without such emotionalism?

Can you likewise see that you've tried to give me a solid thump in the head, in order to take away my confidence in me? And in that sense are giving whilst taking.

[I'll have to expand my range of aphorisms, i so sorely need one for womens spitefulness, "Hell hath no fury...!"]

Rhett Hamilton

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1428

(2/28/04 6:25 am)

Reply

re: book for misogynist

---

Quote:

---

Has it occurred to you, Anna, that i am trying to help you see your nature such that you can develop yourself beyond it? And that in that sense i am giving without taking.

---

No, it occurred to me that you are trying to imitate Weininger, and I find weininger to be full of holes. The "no man" and "no woman" stuff is garbage and should be taken out because it is smelling.

You are setting yourself up as my teacher, and I do not recognize and thereby trying to take without giving. It is for your ego, not my betterment. I am a generous person and frequently give without taking. What do you know about me? furthermore, I think my deal to kevin was more than generous, even though I wanted to entice him to read a book which directly relates to the man/woman/civilization problem, because I think it is one of the most important books I've read and would hopefully cast a slight gleam of light on some of these issues. Kevin made the point that he could not promise to read it, (it might be boring) and of course I have to respect that. I should have said, "will you promise to try to read.."

Meanwhile, your knee-jerk misogyny actually compares me unfavorably to Leo, who has twice recently made reference to his desire to make QRS beg and grovel!

---

Quote:

---

Sure, it was a minor point, but it's revealing and indicative of the feminine nature nonetheless, and being so low-key, surely we can talk about it without such emotionalism?

---

It is not a minor point. Misogyny and violence go hand in hand, the roots are so deep it is hard to disentangle them. It was indicitive of nothing. I was trying to give Kevin two things, instead of one, although the one, the medicine, was mixed with a bit of sugar, and the pretense of a deal.

I am not here for you to help me, I am here to help you.

Quote:

---

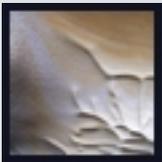

Can you likewise see that you've tried to give me a solid thump in the head, in order to take away my confidence in me? And in that sense are giving whilst taking.

---

Yes, but how much undeserved abuse should I take before finally getting mad?

You cannot do well if you stay in the closet.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 304
(2/28/04 9:23 am)
Reply

Re: re: book for misogynist

---

Quote:

---

Quote:

---

Has it occurred to you, Anna, that i am trying to help you see your nature such that you can develop yourself beyond it? And that in that sense i am giving without taking.

---

No, it occurred to me that you are trying to imitate Weininger, and I find weininger to be full of holes. The "no man" and "no woman" stuff is garbage and should be taken out because it is smelling.

---

Translate: I don't like what you say and i'm not going to defend my statements with reason.

The problem is, you've misinterpreted my initial statement. I wasn't using the terms "woman" and "man" literally; Leo was included as also representing the feminine dimension of mind. Whilst i can understand and sympathise with your error, your interpretation doesn't make sense because Leo (quite obviously) wasn't giving unconditionally either. I admit that i could and probably should have made it clearer, but given the nature of the interactions that have occurred on this forum in the past, particularly a specific interaction between Leo and myself that you were privvy to, i think it should have been clear to you (if you were in a rational frame of mind of course).

Perhaps if you take another look, whilst not taking the terms "woman" and "man" literally...

Quote:

---

You are setting yourself up as my teacher, and I do not recognize and thereby trying to take without giving. It is for your ego, not my betterment. I am a generous person and frequently give without taking. What do you know about me? furthermore, I think my deal to kevin was more than generous, even though I wanted to entice him to read a book which directly relates to the man/woman/civilization problem, because I think it is one of the most important books I've read and would hopefully cast a slight gleam of light on some of these issues. Kevin made the point that he could not promise to read it, (it might be boring) and of course I have to respect that. I should have said, "will you promise to try to read.."

---

Your tone was manipulative, and it's clearly evident in the words you used.

Quote:

---

Meanwhile, your knee-jerk misogyny actually compares me unfavorably to Leo, who has twice recently made reference to his desire to make QRS beg and grovel!

---

Your knee jerk emotionalism is probably what blinded you to think that i wasn't also prodding Leo.

Quote:

---

Quote:

---

Sure, it was a minor point, but it's revealing and indicative of the feminine nature nonetheless, and being so low-key, surely we can talk about it without such emotionalism?

---

It is not a minor point. Misogyny and violence go hand in hand, the roots are so deep it is hard to disentangle them. It was indicative of nothing. I was trying to give Kevin two things, instead of one, although the one, the medicine, was mixed with a bit of sugar, and the pretense of a deal.

---

If you have a good look at the words you used, you really have no scope to argue against my point in this case, it's like trying to argue that  $1+1=3$ . You could, however, argue that it's not a feminine tendency, but naturally i'd disagree with you.

Quote:

---

I am not here for you to help me, I am here to help you.

---

You have almost no idea about me or the nature of Truth, and have a multitude of personal shortcomings to boot, so i suggest you re-think that stance. I am beyond psychology, nothing of a psychological nature can have any real impact on me.

Quote:

---

Quote:

-----
Can you likewise see that you've tried to give me a solid thump in the head, in order to take away my confidence in me? And in that sense are giving whilst taking.
-----

Yes, but how much undeserved abuse should I take before finally getting mad?

---

Do you think anger can solve problems?

Quote:

---

You cannot do well if you stay in the closet.

---

I haven't bothered to reply to your and Suergaz's suggestion that i am gay, simply because it's so unfounded, childish, and irrelevant. For the record, I do not have the slightest tendency towards sexual attraction to males, and i have been well tested. I grew up a heterosexual boy, and had just as strong a sexual attraction for females as any other heterosexual boy. The difference was that i had a stronger will to consciousness, so i didn't engage in it as much. And now that i no longer suffer sexual desire, i don't engage in it at all.

Rhett Hamilton

Lbartoli
Registered User
Posts: 371
(2/28/04 11:55 pm)
Reply

Maybe i should say....

---

that i havent really seen the book, actually, though if memory serves me right i intended to get one read it then send it over to Kevin, whether he groveled or not, but as it turns out I couldnt find it locally and im not sure at this point whether i'll bother trying to get one at all, though Kevin would certainly be demonstrating his inability to have certain emotions such as anger and resentment if he so kindly sent me a copy of that e-book the author sent him, and to Rhett- what "interaction" did we have recently, sorry i dont always pay attention who it is im responding to, musta been short and sweet, and to Anna how suprising your gesture of generosity to our resident miso, what gives, and why would you care what he thinks of a book that impressed you?, dont you know the logic dictates he wont think much more about the book than he does of your good self? Are you trying to soften him up there a little, dont bother there isnt a hope in hell,

Leo

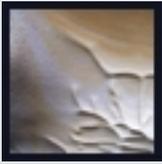

Rhett Hamilton

Registered User

Posts: 311

(2/29/04 9:25 am)

Reply

Re: Maybe i should say....

---

Quote:

---

and to Rhett- what "interaction" did we have recently, sorry i dont always pay attention who it is im responding to, musta been short and sweet,

---

Yeah, it was short. There's no worth in you concerning yourself with it, it was fairly incidental.

Rhett Hamilton

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1431

(2/29/04 1:17 pm)

Reply

book

---

Quote:

---

Translate: I don't like what you say and i'm not going to defend my statements with reason.

---

My statements have reason, yours do not. I had not accepted your statements of being worthy of reasoned effort.

Quote:

---

The problem is, you've misinterpreted my initial statement. I wasn't using the terms "woman" and "man" literally;

---

Deny away.

Quote:

---

Leo was included as also representing the feminine dimension of mind. Whilst i can understand and sympathise with your error, your interpretation doesn't make sense because Leo (quite obviously) wasn't giving unconditionally either.

---

I didn't know it would be obvious to you.

I do not seem to recall the conversation you mention. My mind is always in a rational state, which is to say, that even in the worst of times, my reason is not completely lost.

Quote:

---

Your tone was manipulative, and it's clearly evident in the words you used.

---

I do not find it so.

Quote:

---

Your knee jerk emotionalism is probably what blinded you to think that i wasn't also prodding Leo.

---

it isnt emotionalism, just prior experience.

Quote:

---

If you have a good look at the words you used, you really have no scope to argue against my point in this case, it's like trying to argue that  $1+1=3$ . You could, however, argue that it's not a feminine tendency, but naturally i'd disagree with you.

---

I do not see it as  $1+1=3$  at all. Nor even if it were, should it garner reproach, as there is nothing wrong in giving with a condition.

Quote:

---

You have almost no idea about me or the nature of Truth, and have a multitude of personal shortcomings to boot, so i suggest you re-think that stance. I am beyond psychology, nothing of a psychological nature can have any real impact on me.

---

Who is talking about psychology? What do you see as my many personal shortcomings?

I know that my motive to truth is purer than anyone's here.

Quote:

---

Do you think anger can solve problems?

---

At times, yes.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1432

(2/29/04 1:49 pm)

Reply

Re: Maybe i should say....

---

Quote:

---

and to Anna how suprising your gesture of generosity to our resident miso, what gives, and why would you care what he thinks of a book that impressed you?, dont you know the logic dictates he wont think much more about the book than he does of your good self? Are you trying to soften him up there a little, dont bother there isnt a hope in hell,

---

What gives is that they are my friends. It would help them to promote better wisdom, and yes, logic does dictate that, but I wonder if we are talking of the same logic. Mine is that they will remain true to form and allow nothing new into their worldview. I'd far rather he think well of the book than of me, but of the futility of such gestures I am well aware. So I'm glad I didn't waste any money.

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 770
(3/1/04 2:38 am)
Reply

Re: Maybe i should say....

---

I know that my motive to truth is purer than anyone's here.

How untrue.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 317
(3/1/04 10:37 am)
Reply

Re: book

---

Quote:

---

Quote:

-----

----

Translate: I don't like what you say and i'm not going to defend my statements with reason.

-----

----

My statements have reason, yours do not. I had not accepted your statements of being worthy of reasoned effort.

---

You've contradicted yourself.

Quote:

---

Quote:

-----

----

The problem is, you've misinterpreted my initial statement. I wasn't using the terms "woman" and "man" literally;

-----
----

Deny away.

-----

All my statements match up. There's nothing to deny.

Quote:

-----

Quote:

-----
----

Leo was included as also representing the feminine dimension of mind. Whilst i can understand and sympathise with your error, your interpretation doesn't make sense because Leo (quite obviously) wasn't giving unconditionally either.

-----
----

I didn't know it would be obvious to you.

I do not seem to recall the conversation you mention.

-----

Since i can't make any sense of your first point, i'll go straight to your second point. I mentioned that Leo still had a lot of femininity in his thinking (to which he agreed), and you responded by saying that i'd put it to him in a "nice way", perhaps sarcastically.

Quote:

-----

My mind is always in a rational state, which is to say, that even in the worst of times, my reason is not completely lost.

---

A rational state of mind is where one is completely rational, there being not a skerrick of emotion or mental disturbance. Any other state is compromised and highly liable to falsity. One slip, and it's gone . . .

Quote:

---

Quote:

-----

----

Your tone was manipulative, and it's clearly evident in the words you used.

-----

----

I do not find it so.

---

I'm not surprised you don't.

You tried to exert power over Kevin. It was an ego reaction to the power that he has over you.

Quote:

---

Quote:

-----

----

If you have a good look at the words you used, you really have no scope to argue against my point in this case, it's like trying to argue that  $1 + 1 = 3$ .

You could, however, argue that it's not a feminine tendency, but naturally i'd disagree with you.

---

----

I do not see it as  $1+1=3$  at all. Nor even if it were, should it garner reproach, as there is nothing wrong in giving with a condition.

---

Reproach? No. My comments were a stimulus for discussion.

Regarding your condition, i think you grossly undervalue Kevin's time.

Quote:

---

Quote:

---

----

You have almost no idea about me or the nature of Truth, and have a multitude of personal shortcomings to boot, so i suggest you rethink that stance. I am beyond psychology, nothing of a psychological nature can have any real impact on me.

---

----

What do you see as my many personal shortcomings?

---

An ego that is getting bigger rather than smaller. Maybe that's an important step for you, but if you want to continue that journey, you'll need to realise that you haven't even begun a spiritual path yet.

Quote:

---

I know that my motive to truth is purer than anyone's here.

---

Upon what do you base this assertion? I suggest you reflect on the fact that in saying this you have, by default, asserted that you don't know the truth (and truthfully so).

Quote:

---

Quote:

-----
----
Do you think anger can solve problems?
-----
----

At times, yes.

---

How? Isn't it a problem for yourself, to feel anger and thus be suffering?

Rhett Hamilton

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM
> GENIUS FORUM
> Rich Zubaty

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                    | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1435(3/1/04 1:47 pm)Reply  | Re: book <hr/> Quote: <hr/> My statements have reason, yours do not. I had not accepted your statements of being worthy of reasoned effort. ----- You've contradicted yourself. <hr/> I haven't. I said my statements were reasonable, and yours were not, and I do not always decide that someone's statements are worthy of careful response, if it is a waste of time, or the effort will be lost on them. Quote: <hr/> The problem is, you've misinterpreted my initial statement. I wasn't using the terms "woman" and "man" literally; ----- All my statements match up. There's nothing to deny. <hr/> |

I find it a transparent evasion, this idea that man and woman were not meant literally. You are so eager to use it, that you judge a woman wrongly in your prejudice, you so delight in putting her in some box you've read about.

Quote:

---

, your interpretation doesn't make sense because Leo (quite obviously) wasn't giving unconditionally either.

-----

I didn't know it would be obvious to you.

I do not seem to recall the conversation you mention.

-----Since i can't make any sense of your first point, i'll go straight to your second point. I mentioned that Leo still had a lot of femininity in his thinking (to which he agreed), and you responded by saying that i'd put it to him in a "nice way", perhaps sarcastically.

---

Why can't you make sense of it? I said that I did not realize that Leo's bad behavior would be noticed by you, and thus my error. I don't know what you mean about the nice way.

Quote:

---

My mind is always in a rational state, which is to say, that even in the worst of times, my reason is not completely lost.

-----

A rational state of mind is where one is completely rational, there being not a skerrick of emotion or mental disturbance. Any other state is compromised and highly liable to falsity. One slip, and it's gone . . .

---

Ah, yes, but then I have not claimed perfection. Have you noticed, though, how some people are totally irrational when they are upset and it's like there's just no one home? Whereas other people, despite being in an emotional state where they have lost a certain amount of control, are never thoroughly unreachable to reason? I do not find this particularly related to gender, by the way. Actually, I don't agree with your premise that emotion is completely unrelated to reason. That there can be no reason if any emotion is present. This, I call delusion, of the first degree.

Quote:

---

Your tone was manipulative, and it's clearly evident in the words you used.

I do not find it so.

-----I'm not surprised you don't.

You tried to exert power over Kevin.

---

I simply cannot help it that you see things that way. It must be there is some reason that you see manipulation where it does not exist. Have you been manipulated much? I was not trying to exert power. I do not enjoy power.

Quote:

---

It was an ego reaction to the power that he has over you.

---

Oh, Rhett, you have submitted so completely. As only a man can do.

Quote:

---

Reproach? No. My comments were a stimulus for discussion.

---

Oh, come now. You make quite a big deal about how I am taking without giving, full of faults, egotistic, abusing power and being manipulative, all because I tried to get Kevin to agree to look at a book. And now it is not a reproach. Is denial so easy? No wonder you are making such astonishing progress!

Quote:

---

Regarding your condition, i think you grossly undervalue Kevin's time.

---

Perhaps I believe the book had value. Time, to talk about philosophy, is precisely what Kevin has. Your grovelling is not becoming, at least not to me.

Quote:

---

What do you see as my many personal shortcomings?

-----

An ego that is getting bigger rather than smaller. Maybe that's an important step for you, but if you want to continue that journey, you'll need to realise that you haven't even begun a spiritual path yet.

---

Oh, do I have a nose for projection!

Quote:

---

I know that my motive to truth is purer than anyone's here.

-----

Upon what do you base this assertion? I suggest you reflect on the fact that in saying this you have, by default, asserted that you don't know the truth (and truthfully so).

---

If you think you know the truth Rhett, I can only say that you are the only fish in a very tiny pond.

The reason I think I have the purest motive (and I constantly hope I am wrong) is that I just don't see anyone who puts truth first, before their emotional desires. I have some desires, (very few actually, that could in any way seriously interfere with truth) but they take a back seat to truth. It is such a simple thing, and yet so elusive for nearly everyone. All you have to do is prefer the truth to untruth, to regard ignorance as more uncomfortable than whatever discomfort arises from the changes that will occur from accepting truth.

Quote:

---

How? Isn't it a problem for yourself, to feel anger and thus be suffering?

---

Yes, but I am angry rather rarely, although I get frustrated at work often enough. If it were not for my job, I would imagine I had conquered most such reactions. It isn't for myself that I react so strongly, but I would like to see women declare war on men. Take no prisoners war. Not so much here, but certainly in Islamic countries.

I can well imagine taking my own death with equanimity, but when I think on the probable coming destruction of life on this planet, I have not been able to maintain my inner composure. The loss is just too great.

Edited by: birdofhermes at: 3/1/04 1:52 pm

Rairun

Registered User

Posts: 206

(3/1/04 1:51 pm)

Reply

...

---

I'm fully rational when I'm emotional! How do you explain that, Rhett?

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2239

(3/1/04 3:20 pm)

Reply

Re: ...

---

If I was Rhett, I would explain it by pointing out that you have a limited conception of what it means to be "fully rational".

When a person is dominated by his emotions throughout the day, causing his mind to experience much confusion, then it often takes a great effort of will on his part (and driving emotion) to get on top of his emotions and experience some clarity of thought. This is a miniscule form of clarity, however, when compared to the rational thinker who is hardly ever emotional in his daily life.

The emotional individual is like a person who lives in an area where it is stormy and rainy all of the time, and only every now and then spies a small patch of blue sky between the clouds. The rational thinker, by contrast, spends his days under a pure blue sky, with only the occasional cloud on the horizon. The two modes of existence cannot even be compared, so different are they.

|                                                                                                                                                                      |                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2468(3/1/04 3:36 pm)Reply                                                                                    | --- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> The two modes of existence cannot even be compared, so different are they. <hr/> And what are these two modes of existence master yoda? |
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 2242(3/1/04 3:39 pm)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> Never you mind, storm-dweller.                                                                                                                                        |

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Right Speech, Silence and Initiation for the Genius

New Topic

Add Reply

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                             | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1118(7/4/04 9:33 pm)Reply | New Post Right Speech, Silence and Initiation for the Genius<hr/> Quote: <hr/> www.aquaac.org/dl/01nl1art2.htmlRight Speech, Silence and Initiation <hr/> This is a very good article if you know how to invert it.Where ever they push silence, insert questioning and discussion instead and you will see the light. |

|                                                                                                                                                                           |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| november rains Posts: 3 (7/6/04 6:15 pm) Reply                                                                                                      | New Post Oh great, new schisters, waiting in the shadows to.. <hr/> CAPITOLIZE on the need for human beings to seek "spiritual enlightenment" bla bla bla. Religion. Christianity is a big blowfished faced lie, and the world knows it. so "aquatics", want's to catch the "falling out" fishys, how ingenius! There is no religion with God. There never was. Who ya kiddin hea mistah? |
| november rains Posts: 4 (7/6/04 6:19 pm) Reply                                                                                                      | New Post Philosophy means the "Search for Understanding" <hr/> I think I'll attempt to capitolize on your knowledge of how to "invert it", though. What does that mean? Plain english, please.                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| suergaz Registered User Posts: 2739 (7/7/04 12:35 am) Reply  | New Post Re: Philosophy means the "Search for Understanding" <hr/> Philosophy means love of wisdom.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| DEL Registered User Posts: 1119 (7/7/04 7:40 pm) Reply                                                                                         | New Post Cult truth <hr/> Something is wrong with cults but I'm not sure what at the moment.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |

|                                                                                                                                                                                  |                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 452(7/8/04 10:37 am)Reply   Edit  | New Post Re: Philosophy means the "Search for Understanding" <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Philosophy means love of wisdom. <hr/> and wisdom is truth.               |
| admiregeniusPosts: 3(7/12/04 5:22 pm)Reply                                                                                                                 | New Post re <hr/> one thing is for sure: we can do everything just under an assume we choose to believe in, we can know nothing "absolutely" at the end.(suppose to my assume) |

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Satori

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                   | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 10(9/13/03 12:31 pm)Reply | Satori <hr/> Satori = a state of being, occuring at the moment when the mind is free of thought; pure awareness; the body is active, sensitive, relaxed and the emotions are open and free; full attention on one's actions; meditating one's actions; there is no doer, no self conscious someone performing; there is no you doing it, in forgetting yourself, you become what you do, so your action is free, spontaneous, without ambition, inhibition, or fear. But what happens when you stop doing? You lose it (or at least most of it). In my opinion and experience, no amount of effort can bring it permanently into one's being. When i say 'stop doing' i mean when one stops medium or high intensity activity. Since satori has insufficient intellectual foundation, the ego is always trying to resume it's existence in the mind, and it will always succeed. In all of the various activities that i have achieved satori, i always experienced a peak of satori and then it faded away. Freediving enabled me the highest peak. I must mention that one does not engender satori by consciously desiring it, it is more subtle than that. Whilst it did free my mind such that when i was in a quiet phase i could develop wisdom better, due to these inherent limitations of satori, I think it can only have at best a minor role in ones development of enlightenment. It is a valuable experience, but only to be considered, if considered at all, in conjunction with the study of the nature of reality. |

|                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                        | Only a rationally attained enlightenment is thorough; infinite. Rhett                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 679(9/13/03 12:42 pm)Reply         | Satori <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Rhett Hamilton;Satori = a state of being, occuring at the moment when the mind is free of thought; pure awareness; the body is active, sensitive, relaxed and the emotions are open and free; full attention on one's actions; meditating one's actions; there is no doer, no self conscious someone performing; there is no you doing it, in forgetting yourself, you become what you do, so your action is free, spontaneous, without ambition, inhibition, or fear. <hr/> This is mind that has full knowledge and a fluid application of Universal Symbolism.                                         |
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1162(9/14/03 3:44 am)Reply | satori <hr/> It is a distinct physiological state that can be monitored and noted with an MRI. The brain activity can be achieved in many different ways and has been traditionally associated with Japanese Zen monks. But certain chemicals and other extreme experiences (other than focused thought for several hours) can achieve this altered state of mind. The point of achieving this state is to see reality in a different manner thus assisting in the detachment from common concepts, images, and forms. Reality is rarely, if ever, as it seems. Satori is a tool. Achiveing satori is irrelevant if the result does not allow a |

|                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                         | shift in non-satori consciousness; in other words a permanent change. Merely "getting high" in one way or another is not the path to enlightenment. Tharan                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 325(9/14/03 4:33 am)Reply       | Re: satori <hr/> Very good topic, I completely agree.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 18(9/22/03 2:26 pm)Reply | Re: satori <hr/> "Satori is a tool. Achiveing satori is irrelevant if the result does not allow a shift in non-satori consciousness; in other words a permanent change. Merely "getting high" in one way or another is not the path to enlightenment." Tharan Are you thus suggesting that knowledge of the ultimate nature of reality is irrelevant, or that it can be attained through satori or other activities that promote a similar 'mind state'? Rhett |
| Hanzil SowwhatRegistered UserPosts: 4(9/22/03 5:53 pm)Reply  | Re: satori <hr/> Satori, in a nutshell = A flash of insight so clear and complete as to give a full understanding and awareness of a truth. If you could hold this instant enlightenment in your mind and not let it ever fade, well, just think what else you'd be missing. :)                                                                                                                                                                                              |

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1168
(9/23/03 4:16 pm)
Reply

Re: satori

---

Rhett wrote,

Quote:

---

Are you thus suggesting that knowledge of the ultimate nature of reality is irrelevant, or that it can be attained through satori or other activities that promote a similar 'mind state'?

---

The Ultimate "Nature" of reality is emptiness. Satori gives a momentary insight for the animal, which is generally submersed in images.

"Relevant or irrelevant" is a judgement dependant on the individual. I consider knowledge of the ultimate nature of reality to be relevant, but that is my singular, subjective opinion.

Tharan

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 614
(9/23/03 5:58 pm)
Reply

Re: Satori

---

Rhett: In all of the various activities that i have achieved satori, i always experienced a peak of satori and then it faded away. Freediving enabled me the highest peak.

I just wonder how you know what you have "achieved" is called 'satori'?

Isn't 'satori' is just an ornamental Japanese word? Most Western people would associate it with rice wine spirit, or soemthing like that. Perhaps this is not as misleading as it seems. When I think of freediving, I think of oxygen deprivation. When I think of oxygen deprivation, I think of altered consciousness. You get the picture. The brain is a wondrous machine.

I don't know what you experienced. I am sure it is not satori.

WolfsonJakk: The Ultimate "Nature" of reality is emptiness. Satori gives a momentary insight for the animal, which is generally submersed in images.

In my understanding, neither emptiness nor fullness can possibly be the "ultimate" nature of phenomena. Why not? Because it is a contradiction in

|                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                         | itself. Because Western "fullness" and Mahayana "emptiness" are dualistic concepts. The ultimate by contrast is incrompehensible. The talk about satori is stimulating. Can I have another cup of tea?Arigatou! Cheers, Thomas                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| G ShantzRegistered UserPosts: 390(9/23/03 7:05 pm)Reply      | satoris <hr/> I used to experience satoris after I had been sitting and thinking for what seemed like hours. More recently I have had them when speaking to people and concentrating really intensely on what they were saying. It doesn't appear to be something that can be maintained for long, and I agree that it is like getting high and needs to be analysed rationally to be of any use. That there is a different state of consiousness than the one we normally experience is probably the most useful information one can gain from it, that is the knowledge that no state of consciousness besides enlightenment is 'normal.' Edited by: G Shantz at: 9/23/03 7:09 pm |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 928(9/24/03 12:45 am)Reply | Re: satoris <hr/> I think that the state Rhett is talking about, whaatsoever it is, is lost when activity stops only because it is easier to keep the ego at bay with some form of distraction. The ego reasserts itself, not for an intellectual reason, but because of fear. There is no particular reason for activity to be required, simply that it is easier to experience loss of ego with a single point to focus one's awareness upon than upon nothing. I don't see how emptiness can be the ultimate nature of reality. If there is not somethingness at the core of reality, than how could there be any existence at all?                                                     |

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1169
(9/24/03 6:31 am)
Reply

Re: satoris

---

Emptiness is not the same as nothingness.

Thomas,

One may say to be truly empty is to be finally full. But then again one can say anything, can't they? :)

Tharan

*edit*

Clarification:

Anna,

Emptiness is an emotional/intellectual understanding of the transient and non-inherent nature of "things" in the universe. The universe is, for all intents and purposes, as we perceive it to be. Any event or object around us is a transient, causal process, thus lacking individual and singular (inherent) foundations. "Emptiness" is an historic Mahayana Buddhist descriptor of this fact.

Edited by: WolfsonJakk at: 9/24/03 6:45 am

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 932
(9/24/03 8:55 am)
Reply

Re: satoris

---

Emptiness is not the same as nothingness.

Ok, I see.

Emptiness is an emotional/intellectual understanding of the transient and non-inherent nature of "things" in the universe.

Thanks. I was getting concepts confused. Nonetheless, I'm not sure that is what I would call ultimate reality. Perhaps penultimate reality. Ultimate Reality to me would be the cause of phenomena, which I have never seen addressed here, nor the question (I've asked thrice) about how timelessness relates to cause and effect.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 595
(9/24/03 9:10 am)
Reply

Re: satoris

---

Yeah, I remember that question.

Edited by: Dave Toast at: 9/24/03 9:11 am

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 933
(9/24/03 9:31 am)
Reply

Re: satoris

---

Yeah, I remember that question.

You should. You actually thought of it.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 23
(9/24/03 11:08 am)
Reply

Re: Satori

---

Rhett: In all of the various activities that i have achieved satori, i always experienced a peak of satori and then it faded away. Freediving enabled me the highest peak.

Thomeas: I just wonder how you know what you have "achieved" is called 'satori'?

Isn't 'satori' is just an ornamental Japanese word? Most Western people would associate it with rice wine spirit, or soemthing like that. Perhaps this is not as misleading as it seems. When I think of freediving, I think of oxygen deprivation. When I think of oxygen deprivation, I think of altered consciousness. You get the picture. The brain is a wondrous machine.

I don't know what you experienced. I am sure it is not satori.

Rhett: Since i have experienced satori quite a lot, to varying degrees and during a multitude of activities, i have many other experiences which i can cross reference against my freediving experiences. Being a well educated freediver, i was quite aware of the various effects of freediving on one's respiratory and circulatory system.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 616
(9/24/03 12:26 pm)
Reply

Re: Satori

---

Rhett: Since i have experienced satori quite a lot, to varying degrees and during a multitude of activities, i have many other experiences which i can cross reference against my freediving experiences. Being a well educated freediver, i was quite aware of the various effects of freediving on one's respiratory and circulatory system.

Should my previous comments have offended you, please accept my apologies. The point I was trying to make, somewhat unadept perhaps by stating 'not satori', is that you assigned a label -what is more a label borrowed from a culture presumably different from your own - to something which you did not explain, elucidate, describe and did not set into context, hence the designation appears ornamental.

Of course, I might be wrong. You may have spent several years in the Zen tradition studying under a competent Zen master.

Cheers, Thomas

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1170
(9/24/03 7:40 pm)
Reply

Re: satoris

---

Anna wrote,

Quote:

---

Ultimate Reality to me would be the cause of phenomena, which I have never seen addressed here, nor the question (I've asked thrice) about how timelessness relates to cause and effect.

---

Wouldn't that be a physics question? Enlightenment deals with the perception and reacton to phenomena on an individual basis, not whether or not you can trace back every bit of energy to its "initial" state.

I am not sure I have ever used the word "timelessness." Maybe you have asked Dan or David? But I can see a conceptual relation to emptiness in the word "timelessness." Time is the percieved change in events and objects around us...the rising and setting of the sun, the changing seasons, waiting on the bus then having it arrive, clocks, etc.

Each of these events and objects are subject to causal processes. Thus each lacks its own unique roots or foundation (inherent existence) in the universe. Only with change comes the perception of time.

Yet each transmutation of my perceived reality (the bus is not here/the bus is here) is "empty," both intellectually and emotionally. Therefore, the "cause" of time is ultimately empty. Perhaps this understanding can lead one to a state of "timelessness?" (To be honest, I don't think I like that word. I wouldn't use it. The perception of change is occurring.)

But regardless, I try not to worry too much when the bus is late. If I am late for work, I just start rambling to my supervisor about the emptiness of existence and the nature of ultimate reality. She usually just shakes her head while I start the tape backups of the previous day's work.

Tharan

G Shantz

Registered User

Posts: 391

(9/24/03 11:31 pm)

Reply

Re: satoris

---

Maybe 'eternal' is a better word for timelessness. Eternal could also be substituted for 'infinite.'

I know David has used the word 'timelessness' to describe the content of a mystical experience or satori, in one of the newsletters.

I think there would be a perception of timelessness in the experience of emptiness. My reasons for thinking this are because time itself is only a 'thing' and you wouldn't experience time as different than any other thing, i. e. it would be completely equal to all other things, equally empty.

You might get anxious about time, but that would only be the ego asserting itself.

Greg

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1519

(9/25/03 2:07 am)

Reply

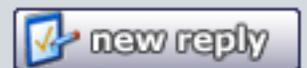

----

---

Timelessness is not in emptiness, but in overflowing abundance.

I love that I am too logical for anyone here! (Hear that Lord Hamilton!)

|                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 26(9/25/03 10:44 am)Reply | Re: Satori <hr/> Thomas: Should my previous comments have offended you, please accept my apologies. Rhett: If i ever get offended then i know i have ego and work to do to myself. Please do not be concerned about offending me. Thomas: The point I was trying to make, somewhat unadept perhaps by stating 'not satori', is that you assigned a label -what is more a label borrowed from a culture presumably different from your own - to something which you did not explain, elucidate, describe and did not set into context, hence the designation appears ornamental. Rhett: Perhaps you have not read my first post? It is something like 50% definition/description... |
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 27(9/25/03 11:02 am)Reply | Re: satoris <hr/> Enlightenment/satori is to be at one with change. There is no dualism, 'that moment' &amp; 'this moment'. Since time is just a measurement of the rate of change, it is relative to something...which is usually some egotistical desire/attachment that is prominent in one's mind. Thus, without any egotistical impulses hanging around in one's consciousness, one experiences each and every moment, and one is directed from one moment to the next by reason. I think 'timelessness' is integral to the mind state, and thus a valuable word to use to describe it. Rhett                                                                                               |

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31n
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Satori

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                   | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Thomas KnierimRegistered UserPosts: 619(9/25/03 2:56 pm)Reply | Re: Satori <hr/> Rhett: Perhaps you have not read my first post? It is something like 50% definition/description... I read your post and your definition. It was the reason I responded. What you define there is not satori. Satori (or kensho) is already defined. Its meaning in Zen Buddhism differs quite subtly from you said. Redefining this word would not be conducive to clarity, would it? Rhett: Enlightenment/satori is to be at one with change. There is no dualism, 'that moment' &amp; 'this moment'. Since time is just a measurement of the rate of change, it is relative to something...which is usually some egotistical desire/attachment that is prominent in one's mind. When I think back to my own "freediving" experiences in Tobago I can relate very much to what you describe here. However, this state is not satori. This state is induced by relaxation and sensory engagement where the brain's activity is reduced mostly to automatic processes. I have experienced it while diving, in nature, and often in the "aftermath" of meditation. But, it is not satori. I do not insist that I am right and you are wrong. Neither do I claim to be an expert, not even a student of Zen Buddhism. However, what you have described in this thread I believe to know. While it is not possible to describe satori or enlightenment, it is possible to describe what it is not. Rhett: If i ever get offended then i know i have ego and work to do to | myself. Please do not be concerned about offending me.

Well, I am glad I didn't. And, yes, it seems that your thinking on this issue is beneficial.

Cheers, Thomas

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 126
(9/26/03 10:18 am)
Reply

To Thomas

---

Quote:

---

While it is not possible to describe satori or enlightenment, it is possible to describe what it is not.

---

That's quite true. It is not the sun, it is not a pencil...

Is enlightenment a permanent state, Thomas?
If so, and you give the impression to know what it is, then you're enlightened, right? Otherwise you could be 'out of it' again right now. Words...

Btw, is it alcohol what you drink? Or herb tea?
I ask that, because you always end your wisdom with 'Cheers'.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 29
(9/26/03 10:27 am)
Reply

Re: Satori

---

I read your post and your definition. It was the reason I responded. What you define there is not satori. Satori (or kensho) is already defined. Its meaning in Zen Buddhism differs quite subtly from you said. Redefining this word would not be conducive to clarity, would it?

Rhett 2: I think you are being objectionable. However, I did not in fact write that definition, the person that wrote it was definitely not enlightened, so perhaps if i had written my own it would capture the difference between satori and a relaxed state better. What definition have you come across?

Rhett: Enlightenment/satori is to be at one with change. There is no dualism, 'that moment' & 'this moment'. Since time is just a measurement of the rate of change, it is relative to something...which is usually some egotistical desire/attachment that is prominent in one's mind.

Thomas: When I think back to my own "freediving" experiences in Tobago I can relate very much to what you describe here. However, this state is not satori. This state is induced by relaxation and sensory engagement where the brain's activity is reduced mostly to automatic processes. I have experienced it while diving, in nature, and often in the "aftermath" of meditation. But, it is not satori.

Rhett 2: The major and crucial difference between our experiences is that your consciousness was reduced, whereas mine was heightened. I was constantly making rational decisions during the experience.

Thomas: I do not insist that I am right and you are wrong. Neither do I claim to be an expert, not even a student of Zen Buddhism. However, what you have described in this thread I believe to know. While it is not possible to describe satori or enlightenment, it is possible to describe what it is not.

Rhett 2: I can describe satori but it means little to someone that has not experienced it.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 936

(9/26/03 2:35 pm)

Reply

Re: Satori

---

What is freediving? My daughter took me to a river in West Virginia that has an old wooden bridge that we estimated to be about 70 or 75 feet above the water. Several guys jumped off, and they all wore shoes because the impact, which sounded really hard, will turn their feet black and blue. They were in a sort of sitting position as they fell, and that would seem to make another part of their anatomy vulnerable... My daughter said some of them admit that it hurts - they do it for the rush. I'm intrigued. I doubt I can work up the courage to jump, but I'm convinced they're doing it wrong...I'd like to try going in very straight, with my feet pointed to hit the water more like a knife, less bluntly. I had to be satisfied with the rope swing, which drops you from a height of 15 or so feet out in the middle of the river, probably another 60 or 80 feet, which had a pretty strong current at the time.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 620
(9/26/03 2:38 pm)
Reply

Re: Satori

---

Paul: If so, and you give the impression to know what it is, then you're enlightened, right? Otherwise you could be 'out of it' again right now. Words...

Yeah, words... all those words! There are definitely too many of them. We ought to express everything as simply as possible, striving for elegance. Unfortunately, creating simplicity is harder than creating complexity.

In my five years on this board I have often been accused of coming across as enlightened. This notion is a product of people's imagination and questionable logic. Of course, the way things are doesn't make this an easy topic. Do you recall the first few lines of the Tao Te Ching? It's the same with enlightenment. The enlightenment that can be discussed is not enlightenment. It is basically a fantasy.

Paul: Btw, is it alcohol what you drink? Or herb tea?

Definitely tea, although not herbal. I am mildly addicted to Jasmin Green Tea, which is very good here in Thailand. :-)

Rhett: I think you are being objectionable.

Objecting enlightenment claims has become sort of a default position for me. This position is based on what I see as compelling logic, namely that claiming enlightenment is a contradiction in itself, and therefore always (a) fake, or (b) delusional, or (c) both.

Rhett: The major and crucial difference between our experiences is that your consciousness was reduced, whereas mine was heightened. I was constantly making rational decisions during the experience.

I doubt there is any difference. I meant "reduced" as in "focused", not "reduced" as in "unconscious". Of course you make rational decisions. Like, ah, I shall better not step on that coral over there. Ah, I shall not move too far from the boat.

Rhett: I can describe satori but it means little to someone that has not experienced it.

I shall rest my case and leave it up to you. You can either take the blue pill or the red pill. You take the blue pill and the story ends. You continue believing in satori, in your enlightenment or whatever you want to believe. Claiming enlightenment, you ought to be in good company here on "Genius". Or, you take the red pill and see how deep the rabbit-hole really goes.

But we already know what you have chosen, don't we?

Cheers, Thomas

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 607

(9/26/03 9:19 pm)

Reply

Re: Diving.

---

Quote:

---

Bird: What is freediving?

---

Haven't you ever watched Luc Besson's 'The Big Blue'?

It's subject matter is freediving which is a sport in which the participants will dive as deep as they possibly can, and then ascend back to the surface, all on the last breath that they took before they submerged - no breathing apparatus. Although not necessary, in serious competition a weight on a rope is lowered into the depths down which the competitors can slide on another weight. Once they reach a depth they believe they can still make it back up from, they will inflate a small balloon which will bring them steadily back to the surface. I think that it was originated in diving for oysters and the like. Obviously it is a serious discipline, well suited to those of a meditative nature. It's all about being able to shut down everything but one's vital functions and so make the most of what little oxygen one has in the bloodstream and lungs before diving, much the same as whales or seals might do when they dive.

While the film is a bit of a triumph of style over substance, it is certainly still a triumph in that it conveys a grand beauty from start to finish. For a large part, it is a meditation in itself. It's also (amongst other things) a bit of an exploration of the similarities between us and our distant cousin, the dolphin. Even if you don't like water, it's well worth a viewing or two just for the director's vision and the soundtrack. Try to get the director's cut if you can.

The 75ft jump that you are talking about is easily doable without having to

|                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                          | make a ball of oneself, in fact they're probably making it harder for themselves (although the shoes might be for what's in the water, as opposed to being for the landing). Get your balls out and go and show them how it's done in exactly the way you described, remembering to spread yourself out as soon as you've broke the surface (very painful if done before breaking the surface), to stop you going to deep.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 938(9/27/03 1:59 am)Reply   | Re: Diving. <hr/> Not like the water?? When I was a kid I used to practice going on one breath. I could swim three times the length of the swimming pool on one breath. (under water)I sure didn't go into Satori. Are you saying they relax and let the balloon bring them up?75 feet seems like it might be a bit dangerous. Someone told me 130 feet is a height guaranteed to kill you. But a lot of guys have jumped off that bridge and I don't know about any serious injuries. I'll look into it. I'm pretty sure I'd like the rush. And I won't have to worry about my balls...                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 32(9/27/03 10:16 am)Reply | Re: Satori <hr/> Objecting enlightenment claims has become sort of a default position for me. This position is based on what I see as compelling logic, namely that claiming enlightenment is a contradiction in itself, and therefore always (a) fake, or (b) delusional, or (c) both. Rhett 2: Claiming it is not a contradiction. I exist in your mind, and since i value wisdom, i value communicating on this forum, and during my doing this will take into account your delusions. I claim to have experienced enlightenment. I have certainly never claimed to be experiencing it whilst writing to this forum. I doubt there is any difference between our diving experiences. I meant "reduced" as in "focused", not "reduced" as in "unconscious". Of course you make rational decisions. Like, ah, I shall better not step on that coral over there. Ah, I shall not move too far from the boat. Rhett 2: There would have been a duality in your mental experiences, you would have been in a relaxed state, then your intellect would have kicked in and made decisions, such as deciding not to step on the coral, then you would have resumed your 'relaxed state'. Unenlightened people, that being almost all people, are constantly experiencing a certain level of mental | anxiety and physiological arousal due to their misunderstandings about the nature of reality. They get used to feeling this way because that is their main way of existing in this world. When that is dissolved, say in an experience of satori or enlightenment, the difference is profoundly obvious.

Rhett: I can describe satori but it means little to someone that has not experienced it.

I shall rest my case and leave it up to you. You can either take the blue pill or the red pill. You take the blue pill and the story ends. You continue believing in satori, in your enlightenment or whatever you want to believe. Claiming enlightenment, you ought to be in good company here on "Genius". Or, you take the red pill and see how deep the rabbit-hole really goes.

Rhett 2: I have experienced it, and intellectually understand its basis, so it is exactly the opposite of a 'belief'. Enlightenment has a logical foundation that is as solid as the logic that  $1+1=2$ .

But we already know what you have chosen, don't we?

Rhett 2: It has chosen me as much as i have chosen it. What is your understanding of causality Thomas?

Cheers, Thomas

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1172
(9/27/03 1:53 pm)
Reply

Re: Satori

---

Rhett wrote,

Quote:

---

Enlightenment has a logical foundation that is as solid as the logic that  $1+1=2$ .

---

Enlightenment does have a logical foundation, but it is not limited to merely it's foundation. There is quite a large emotional component that coincides with understanding that is often much more difficult and time consuming to accomplish. Knowing the Truth and being/living the Truth are not necessarily conjoined pairs.

I believe you are definitely headed in the right direction. But I get the feeling you are trying to convince certain people here of your enlightenment, and that desire alone speaks volumes.

Best wishes, and I hope you will spend more time here sharing your insights and discoveries about yourself and others.

Tharan

I AM
Registered User
Posts: 214
(9/29/03 3:16 pm)
Reply

M T NESS

---

Quote:

---

Emptiness is an emotional/intellectual understanding of the transient and non-inherent nature of "things" in the universe. The universe is, for all intents and purposes, as we perceive it to be. Any event or object around us is a transient, causal process, thus lacking individual and singular (inherent) foundations. "Emptiness" is an historic Mahayana Buddhist descriptor of this fact.

---

Tharan,

I am trying to understand what is meant by the term 'emptiness'. Maybe in laymans term sif such is possible. Here is the notion I have of it so far...

Let's say there is a circle with another little circle in the middle of it. The bigger circle is the 'totality' and the little circle is you (the content of your consciousness?) or the 'I'. You 'empty' out the content of the little circle or get rid of the 'I' (achieve emptiness) yet by doing that the bigger circle (the 'totality') is still there, which would mean you identify with everything and recognize no thing as separate or inherent. Hot or cold?

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 623
(9/29/03 10:26 pm)
Reply

Re: M T NESS

---

Rhett: What is your understanding of causality Thomas?

The ramblings on causality in which I admit to have been involved in the past could easily fill a month's worth of Genius. I don't feel particularly proud of it. On the contrary, it seems foolish to me. Such a waste of time! Why build large theoretical edifices and spend so many words on something that is sooo simple?

The short-'n'-simple version: Causality is (existence is causal). The somewhat longer version: Causality is perceived as a result of the temporal and spatial separation of the objects, events, and patterns that we observe; a result of multiplicity if you like. Causality is perceived when locality, continuity, and repeatability are given. What gives rise to varying observations is a great number of relationships which can be expressed mathematically. For example, the apple is "caused" to fall (=accelerate) by gravitation; dynamic systems are "caused" to create patterns around numerical attractors; fractals are "caused" by iteration or recursion; populations are "caused" by replication according to statistical patterns, and so on. The underlying maths is deep, beautiful, and mysterious, because numbers are inexhaustible.

Cheers, Thomas

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 35
(9/30/03 9:35 am)
Reply

Re: M T NESS

---

Hi Thomas,

Did i cause you to write your last post? Or at least, was my previous post an essential cause, amongst other causes, of your reply post?

If you agree to that, do you think maths is involved in this? If so, how?

Rhett

WolfsonJakk

Registered User

Posts: 1177

(9/30/03 1:23 pm)

Reply

Re: M T NESS

I AM wrote,

Quote:

---

Tharan

I am trying to understand what is meant by the term 'emptiness'. Maybe in laymans term sif such is possible. Here is the notion I have of it so far...

Let's say there is a circle with another little circle in the middle of it. The bigger circle is the 'totality' and the little circle is you (the content of your consciousness?) or the 'I'. You 'empty' out the content of the little circle or get rid of the 'I' (achieve emptiness) yet by doing that the bigger circle (the 'totality') is still there, which would mean you identify with everything and recognize no thing as separate or inherent. Hot or cold?

---

Neither hot nor cold. Visualizing the Totality as anything is a mistake. In fact, the absolute ideal (though probably unattainable by a human animal) is do away with all such "visions" and images.

The idea of "emptiness" has several meanings because, much like the way we perceive our own realities, Chinese and English translators from the original Pali or Sanskrit have perceived certain Eastern symbols and pronunciations relative to their understanding of the world.

It comes from Hindi, more or less, as "sunyata." In Chinese, the term is "kung" and "ku" in Japanese. (Kung Fu, the martial art, stems from Taoist roots, thus the multiple animal forms made famous in Hong Kong cinema.)

But there is an historical separation from the Taoist understanding of kung versus the Buddhist interpretation. The emptiness in the Tao, kung, is about restraint, patience, frugality, simplicity, lack of worldly desire, etc. (which I have always thought made Kung Fu a bit of an oxymoron due to its complexity of forms).

These traits are all good things for Buddhists, but they are not quite the same as Buddhist emptiness. Ku is about the inaccuracy of our perceptions of relativity and the fictional objects that are created from that misunderstanding. Separation from these delusions on both an intellectual and emotional level are the Zen method of the cessation of suffering, which is the fundamental goal of all Buddhism.

Not thinking about anything is zen. Once you know this, walking, standing, sitting, or lying down, everything you do is zen. To know that the mind is empty is to see the buddha... Using the mind to look for reality is delusion. Not using the mind to look for reality is awareness. Freeing oneself from words is liberation.

--Bodhidharma

Tharan

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 624
(9/30/03 5:06 pm)
Reply

Re: M T NESS

---

Rhett: Did i cause you to write your last post? Or at least, was my previous post an essential cause, amongst other causes, of your reply post?

You perceive causality because of continuity (this post continues the thoughts of your last message), locality (this post is filed in the same Internet location) and repeatability (we do this all the time).

Communication can be seen as simple cause-effect chains even without resorting to psychological theory.

Rhett: If you agree to that, do you think maths is involved in this?

Of course there is. The occurrence of this dialog depends on a number of factors, such as the frequency with which you and I access this medium, the probability of finding ourselves in a situation that allows us to respond, while the dialog itself contains symbolic information carrying meanings and conveying certain positions, intentions, and moves. Concordantly, this dialog can be described using a whole array of maths, including combinatorics, probability calculus, coding theory, formal logic, and game theory.

Cheers, Thomas

Rhett Hamilton

Registered User

Posts: 36

(10/1/03 10:50 am)

Reply

Causality

---

Rhett: Did i cause you to write your last post? Or at least, was my previous post an essential cause, amongst other causes, of your reply post?

Thomas: You perceive causality because of continuity (this post continues the thoughts of your last message), locality (this post is filed in the same Internet location) and repeatability (we do this all the time).

Communication can be seen as simple cause-effect chains even without resorting to psychological theory.

Rhett 2: Your categories are constructs which you project onto your perceived reality, they are not inherent, and they can never be a 100% reflection or representation of what is actually occuring, they are not the truth.

Psychology is most definitely a part of our interactions, you say it yourself when you mention the transfer of thoughts. We are communicating ideas, which are much more than just black dots that form letters on a computer screen. I could have sent you a message which conformed to all of your categories but which you did not reply to.

Are you suggesting that these 'simple cause-effect chains' have a beginning and end, or are they infinite?

Rhett: If you agree to that, do you think maths is involved in this?

Thomas: Of course there is. The occurrence of this dialog depends on a number of factors, such as the frequency with which you and I access this medium, the probability of finding ourselves in a situation that allows us to respond, while the dialog itself contains symbolic information carrying meanings and conveying certain positions, intentions, and moves.

Concordantly, this dialog can be described using a whole array of maths, including combinatorics, probability calculus, coding theory, formal logic, and game theory.

Rhett 2: Once again, all of these descriptions/ theories/ representations can never be a completely accurate account of what occurred. Some people may consider them a practical guide, but in this case i sure wouldn't! The only truthful way to describe what occurred is to refer to the nature of cause and effect, in it's infinite sense, not a limited sense.

Thomas Knierim

Registered User

Posts: 625

(10/1/03 12:37 pm)

Reply

Re: Causality

---

Rhett: Are you suggesting that these 'simple cause-effect chains' have a beginning and end, or are they infinite?

That depends on where you define the 'beginning' and the 'end', which is fairly arbitrary, isn't it? Since you started this thread, by convention you are its causer. But you could go beyond that event and ask yourself what caused you to start it. And then ask again what was the cause of that preceding event. You may continue this until your memory eventually fails you and convince yourself that everything you do is a product of previous causes. But then you might have deceived yourself, because you can analogously theorize chains of choices, where the circumstances of each event are determined by the results of volition. The question is then whether what happens to you is predetermined or whether it is the result of your choices. Sort of a wave-particle duality.

Rhett: Once again, all of these descriptions/ theories/ representations can never be a completely accurate account of what occurred.

Exactly. That's why they are called "de-scriptions".

Rhett: Some people may consider them a practical guide, but in this case i sure wouldn't! The only truthful way to describe what occurred is to refer to the nature of cause and effect, in it's infinite sense, not a limited sense.

Causal explanations seem natural to us, because they reflect the way our perception works. It is often difficult, however, to pinpoint the precise transition points between causally related events, i.e. the points where they are spatiotemporally connected. As Hume has demonstrated, it is therefore quite impossible to "prove" causal connectedness. In this regard mathematical models are superior, because they abstract from spatiotemporal entities and operate on a system of variables and relations instead. The question of connectedness does not arise. In the end they describe the same thing.

What is more "truthful" is a matter of debate. Descriptions - whether causal or mathematical or both - are tools of communication. In order to be truthful, the chosen language in which descriptions are expressed must be intelligible, pertinent, and convey the understanding of the sender with minimum distortion. Beyond that, it is probably futile to ask which language is the most truthful, since it depends so much on the communicator's conditioning. The only language of truth is the one spoken by the universe. All human languages are approximations.

Cheers, Thomas

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 37
(10/2/03 1:24 pm)
Reply

Re: Causality

---

Rhett: Are you suggesting that these 'simple cause-effect chains' have a beginning and end, or are they infinite?

Thomas: That depends on where you define the 'beginning' and the 'end', which is fairly arbitrary, isn't it? Since you started this thread, by convention you are its causer. But you could go beyond that event and ask yourself what caused you to start it. And then ask again what was the cause of that preceding event. You may continue this until your memory eventually fails you and convince yourself that everything you do is a product of previous causes. But then you might have deceived yourself, because you can analogously theorize chains of choices, where the circumstances of each event are determined by the results of volition. The question is then whether what happens to you is predetermined or whether it is the result of your choices. Sort of a wave-particle duality.

Rhett 2: To attempt to explore within my own mind the causal processes that resulted in my starting the link would be absolute folly if i was at all interested in truth or certainty. I would be deceiving myself in the extreme. I would be denying all of the non-mental causes, and i should add that these categories (mental/non-mental) are an illusion themselves. At best, any or all of your suggestions can only help one to develop a very vague idea.

Rhett: Once again, all of these descriptions/ theories/ representations can never be a completely accurate account of what occurred.

Thomas: Exactly. That's why they are called "de-scriptions".

Rhett: Some people may consider them a practical guide, but in this case i sure wouldn't! The only truthful way to describe what occurred is to refer to the nature of cause and effect, in it's infinite sense, not a limited sense.

Thomas: Causal explanations seem natural to us, because they reflect the way our perception works. It is often difficult, however, to pinpoint the precise transition points between causally related events, i.e. the points where they are spatiotemporally connected. As Hume has demonstrated, it is therefore quite impossible to "prove" causal connectedness. In this regard mathematical models are superior, because they abstract from spatiotemporal entities and operate on a system of variables and relations instead. The question of connectedness does not arise. In the end they describe the same thing.

Rhett 2: You are still thinking of causality in a limited sense. You are holding onto the notion of 'events'. What events can possibly occur in a causal world? Events are only as we define them, they are just a construct based on illusions.

Thomas: What is more "truthful" is a matter of debate. Descriptions - whether causal or mathematical or both - are tools of communication. In order to be truthful, the chosen language in which descriptions are expressed must be intelligible, pertinent, and convey the understanding of the sender with minimum distortion. Beyond that, it is probably futile to ask which language is the most truthful, since it depends so much on the communicator's conditioning. The only language of truth is the one spoken by the universe. All human languages are approximations.

Rhett 2: I agree, except to say that philosophy relates to absolute truth, that science doesn't, and that Maths only engagement with truth is with purely abstract truths that reveal nothing in themselves about reality.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 626
(10/3/03 12:27 pm)
Reply

Re: Causality

---

Rhett: I agree, except to say that philosophy relates to absolute truth, that science doesn't, and that Maths only engagement with truth is with purely abstract truths that reveal nothing in themselves about reality.

If you are traveling that road, I am sure you will find David's and Kevin's ideas appealing. Ironically, "absolute" truths, meaning assertions that can be assigned a definite bivalent truth value within a given axiomatic system, exist only in the realm of thought, hence, mathematics would be the obvious choice for the "absolutist".

Good luck,

Cheers, Thomas

|                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1180(10/3/03 6:22 pm)Reply  | Re: Causality <hr/> Thomas writes, Quote: <hr/> Ironically, "absolute" truths, meaning assertions that can be assigned a definite bivalent truth value within a given axiomatic system, exist only in the realm of thought, hence, mathematics would be the obvious choice for the "absolutist". <hr/> ...as long as the absolutist can find happiness in the pursuit of the perfect approximation. Tharan |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 943(10/4/03 10:43 am)Reply | Re: Causality <hr/> Thomas, are you saying that mathematics, or numbers, exist only in the realm of thought?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Satori

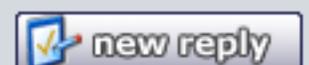

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                   | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 39(10/5/03 10:39 am)Reply | Re: Causality <hr/> Rhett: I agree, except to say that philosophy relates to absolute truth, that science doesn't, and that Maths only engagement with truth is with purely abstract truths that reveal nothing in themselves about reality. Thomas: If you are traveling that road, I am sure you will find David's and Kevin's ideas appealing. Ironically, "absolute" truths, meaning assertions that can be assigned a definite bivalent truth value within a given axiomatic system, exist only in the realm of thought, hence, mathematics would be the obvious choice for the "absolutist". Rhett: I agree that these absolute logical truths only 'exist' in the realm of thought. Even the concept of 'thought' only exists because of thought. These mathematical truths are also just as dependent on thought as any other truth. How can maths help us fathom the nature of and relationships between experiences of consciousness, logic, things, truth, the totality, etc? For example: You, Thomas, are purely a demarcation from what you are not. You have no inherent existence other than as a construct of consciousness. This is a logically valid statement, and it reveals a lot about you. How can maths tell us this? |

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31n
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Satsang, and the Integration of Truth

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|   Philip Mistlberger           Registered User           Posts: 1           (2/13/04 9:08 am)           Reply           ezSupporter    | Satsang, and the Integration of Truth <hr/> Greetings all -- I stumbled upon this BBS while searching out other "spirituality" based forums within the general Ezboard directory. I'm very impressed by what I've read, in general, so far (though I have not yet read everything). The level of intellectual integrity and sincere one-pointed concern with ultimate truths shown by David, Kevin, Dan, and many of those who interact with them is unusual in these times of mass distractions and the glorification of high tech living (although, with a nod to the power of the Net...). I'm a 45 year old therapist up in Canada and have been on a spiritual path of one form or another for over 25 years. Part of my wanderings took me to India on two occasions, where after experimenting deeply with certain Tantric schools of thought I ultimately found myself drawn to the Advaita (non-dual), Tibetan Dzogchen, and Zen schools, with their simple concern with "direct pointing" to ultimate truth, and the ramifications of living such ultimate truth in the day to day adventures of life. My own efforts at self-transformation, which ranged everywhere from the Gurdjieff Work to Reichian therapy to Hermetic traditions to Gnosticism to Buddhism and so on, eventually "culminated" in a distinct "shift" in awareness during the early winter of 2002. The essence of this |

"shift" involved a radical understanding of "who I am" as essential or fundamental consciousness, as distinct from thought.

Many of my teachers, from Tibetan Buddhist and Advaita traditions in particular, served to guide me in invaluable ways through difficult psychological resistances to recognizing the inherent basis of real understanding, but ultimately, I came to see that one's Realization must occur directly via the fruits of one's own investigative process into Truth. In that respect, I acknowledge the spirit of this message board, which seems to be concerned finally with such honest investigation in Truth, using established Wisdom traditions only as confirmations, not something to be parroted or mimicked.

For any interested, here is a link to a thread from my message board that "documented" this shift in understanding as it unfolded for me at the time (about two years ago). It involved me interacting with others via the "satsang" process common in non-dual teaching situations. I have conducted such satsang teaching vehicles both in my own city (Vancouver) and in several other cities since then, but at the time this cyber-effort marked an experimental foray into "virtual satsang"...

pub66.ezboard.com/fthepea...ID=6.topic

The ensuing two years have involved deepening lessons in *integration*, which seems to me to be a life-long process...

"Recognizing" truth seems to be one thing, "living" it in the small details of life, including the "art of relating", seems to be something altogether more. If we recall from the parable of the "Ten Bulls" of Zen, the ninth stage exemplifies "perfect understanding" (the "cave"), and the tenth stage "integration" of such understanding in the "marketplace" of life, where the Zen monk abandons the cave and ventures into the marketplace to interact.

Am interested in comments, discussions, etc., about the "integration" of direct spiritual realizations in everyday life, or other matters...

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 943
(2/13/04 9:20 am)
Reply

Re: Satsang, and the Integration of Truth

---

Welcome Philip.

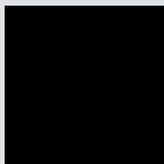

I think most here are here because of some of the reasons you've mentioned.

I also think that most here are amused/baffled/suspicious/dissatisfied/wary/disturbed of/by some of the answers they have seen to the question you asked.

Perhaps you should directly address your question to the forum founders. They will be as honest as they can.

It would be interesting to see your view on their views.

 Philip Mistlberger
Registered User
Posts: 2
(2/13/04 6:11 pm)
Reply
ezSupporter

Re: Satsang, and the Integration of Truth

---

Thanks for the welcome David T.

I've read through parts of David Quinn's "Wisdom of the Infinite" manuscript, and find myself mostly in agreement with the considerations on consciousness, emptiness, etc. However, I came across this remark from David in the thread discussing his manuscript...

Quote:

---

I try not to have a low regard for them. I have nothing against them personally. They can be really sweet at times, which makes them endearing. So I try to be upbeat about them. But I find it impossible to ignore the glaring reality that their minds are not focused and penetrative enough to do groundbreaking work in the abstract realm, whether it be in philosophy or science or wisdom. Nor can I ignore the reality that women (in general) place no real value on truth.

---

In Vedic India, there is something of an ancient tradition that describes different, unique pathways to enlightenment. Some of these approaches have been variously described as ...

Jnana (pronounced "yanny") Yoga -- transformation via intellectual study and meditation

Bhakti Yoga -- transformation via devotion and love/absorption into the divine

Kundalini (and/or Tantric) yoga -- transformation via sexual energy and/or visualization practices wherein the Source of mind is sought within the form of the universe and its energies, rather than only through radical, transcendent understanding that seeks non-attachment

Karma Yoga -- transformation via purifying actions (service of truth, service of enlightened spiritual teachers, etc.)

Now regardless of one's opinion of such paths and how often they lead to true liberation from suffering/attachment, etc., it's noteworthy to consider that there are indeed fundamental differences between male and female biology, psychology, and energy, or what we might call male and female essence.

Some of these notions can be gleaned via some of the old Vedic teachings, wherein Shiva (the male force) is personified as a "mountainous" presence, exemplifying in its most divine, purified form, wisdom, clarity, stillness, vastness, and freedom.

The female force, termed "Shakti" (and various derivatives), is connected to the pure force of manifestation; that is, while Shive represents the unmanifest ground of All, Shakti symbolizes the manifest expression of the All via the endless forms of the cosmos -- the grand energetic Display.

This model is not simply mythology, as it represents a very specific reflection of male-female approaches to Truth.

To generalize for a moment, the male and female essences do not actually approach Truth via the same way, which is precisely why the whole issue can be so confusing (and why intimate human relationships are, generally speaking, so full of confusion, struggle, wastage of time and energy, and suffering).

The problem has its roots in ignorance of the differences of the two approaches to Truth. The male approach is essentially concerned with Freedom, and in particular, freedom of consciousness. The female approach is more concerned with Love, and its manifestation as "Light", that is, via form and expression.

Masculine mind is concerned with freedom in all endeavours of life -- creative, work, political, financial, etc., and finally spiritual. "Love", generally speaking, comes a distant second.

Female mind is, generally speaking, concerned primarily with relationship, and ultimately, with love, in all its faces. Wisdom, truth, freedom, etc., are secondary to it. (There are always exceptions, but as a rule of thumb this seems to apply about 90% of the time).

An interesting corollary of all that in India, for example, is that most male gurus are surrounded by female devotees. You may all be familiar with the "myth" of Krishna and his thousand "gopis" (female disciples). This is no accident; the idea there is that Shiva (male mind) functions, via its natural propensity to realize pure Freedom, as the silent Ground of understanding, and that Shakti "orbits" around him fulfilling her natural propensity for devotion, service, and love/adoration.

These views may seem like over generalizations but are very useful for men to apply to the "mystery" of women when trying to understand their seeming chaotic, deeply unpredictable behaviour. Female "disciples" of male spiritual teachers are almost always the most difficult when it comes to intellectual discourse, because at their deepest core they are not actually interested in the same exact value that the male mind is pursuing and/or living and realizing. The male gurus of India (at least some of them) understand this and always teach differently to them, then they do toward their male disciples, for the most part.

One can find interesting hints about this in some of the "apocryphal" Gnostic gospels, for example, where Mary Magdalene is viewed as a virtual "lover" of Jesus, and who is opposed by Peter. Mary (Gnostic gospel of Mary, I believe) claims direct, spiritual linkage to Jesus, while Peter chastizes her for such dangerous imaginings and encourages the reliance of what the Master said when he was present on Earth, thus beginning the organization or Church which seeks to preserve the Master's understanding.

The two represent two fundamental approaches to truth -- one via transcendent love-relating, the other via clarity, preservation, and investigation of the Real.

Part of the problem, which I think has been addressed at places on this forum (no doubt more than I am yet aware of), is that in modern times there is tremendous confusion around gender and purpose of it from a spiritual perspective. As a therapist I've worked with thousands of people over the years and have seen consistent patterns, such as deep confusion in women and an alienation from their own inherent spirituality, which is based on the need to love, serve, and glow, literally, with love-light. This "love-light" in a spiritual context leads to non-separation with Source. It simply gets to Rome via a different road.

For men, there is often deep alienation from their masculine roots (mostly via a weak "father-link", this being one of the results of the Industrial Revolution, where fathers have mostly been absent, off in factories or offices, resulting in a society of men largely raised by mothers only). This alienation from natural masculine spirituality often results in men either afraid of intimacy and "forcing freedom" (that is, avoiding relationship), or "forcing freedom" by perpetrating all sorts of abuse on women.

At any rate, I suspect that many of the "ancients" understood these fundamental differences in male/female spirituality, which is why there is so much evidence of men and women being separated from each other in times past of spiritual endeavour (monasteries, ashrams, Buddha's original following of only male bikkhus, Jesus' twelve male apostles, the strong patriarchal foundation of Islamic mysticism, etc).

But the Achilles heel of both sexes has traditionally been the failure to appreciate the inherent differences in both, that is, women commonly trying to change men in so many covert and overt ways, and men often remaining mystified by women and missing the point that part of her natural, potential power derives from an entirely different avenue to truth.

I'm not saying here, flat out, that "masculine spirituality" -- "meditation" or "intellectual study" of spiritual truth -- doesn't work for women, or that "feminine spirituality" -- "love/devotion/surrender to God" -- doesn't work for men. I think that would be a misleading understanding (and wrong anyway). What I am suggesting is that in about 90% of the time there are specific lessons that are inherent with our bodily gender, and when realized assist in the foundation for the eventual realization of the non-dual truth beyond both.

Edited by: Philip Mistlberger at: 2/13/04 6:13 pm

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1463
(2/14/04 1:07 am)
Reply

Re: Satsang, and the Integration of Truth

---

Welcome Philip. I like what I see in your thought so far.

Their words concerning gendered females are not exactly the target of their speech. Sure they may have certain observational experiences that are their own, but the focus really is about learning to think for yourself as an individual. It applies equally to gendered males as it does females.

Ultimatley, physical gender is irrelevant.

Tharan

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 946
(2/14/04 11:15 am)
Reply

Re: Satsang, and the Integration of Truth

---

Yep, most reasonable. Good stuff.

Quote:

---

it's noteworthy to consider that there are indeed fundamental differences between male and female biology, psychology, and energy, or what we might call male and female essence.

---

I'm not personally too enamoured with the notion of the male/female divide, except in the most obvious biological senses. Of course biology has a massive influence on psychology, and so there are generally some obvious differences to be recognised here. But we know that the fundamental differences apparent in biology, where there is no apparent blending of the obvious observable differences, suddenly become far harder to pin down when it comes to psychology. Psychological characteristics across gender, rather than showing the sharp deviation between, for example, genitalia; rather present a spectrum (or more precisely spectra), on which any individual might fall in any place, though there are obviously strong tendencies exhibited by certain groups, not least those defined by biological gender.

But the point is that on the psychological level, these differences can no longer really be referred to as fundamental. And surely psychology is where what we are talking about is at.

And this is even despite the fact of the stark differences between the conditioning and socialisation (which has arguably tended towards becoming more enlightened [in the mundane sense of the word] as time has passed) generally imposed on the respective genders. These factors in some small sense can be traced back to biology, but on the whole, they are more of a cultural artefact (as you say when you refer to females, who in turn had their upbringing, increasingly more exclusively bringing up males).

So to the labels of masculine and feminine mindedness, perhaps these terms better sum up the psychological differences. One might define the poles of the aforementioned psychological spectra as being masculine and feminine, thus taking biological gender out of the equation and leaving us with mere individuals who show masculine and feminine proclivities in varying proportions. There would certainly be female tendencies toward the feminine pole of certain spectra and male tendencies towards the masculine pole. But the picture presented, I suggest, could and should not be interpreted as showing fundamental differences, just very general trends which in no way show the whole picture. This might then lead us to reconsider the terminology employed, being as it represents and illustrates only a certain portion of the information. And it should not be ignored that most people will interpret the words masculine and feminine as equating directly with gender, whether that be right or wrong. Perhaps new words without the implicit connotations should be used to circumvent this problem, maybe even old ones can be revived, as Shakti and Shiva were employed in the past (though I don't know their literal translation).

To my mind it would be more elegant, and importantly, less discriminative to those who deviate from the tendencies whilst being no more discriminative towards those who don't, to simply refer to the poles of any given psychological characteristic's spectrum in the context of what it denotes. So for example, a psychological spectrum illustrating individual's proclivity towards creativity would simply have poles labelled creative and not creative, as opposed to masculine and feminine.

Perhaps, under systems designed with such thought involved, most male gurus in India would be surrounded by mainly, though anything but exclusively, female devotees. Krishna might have had 900 female gopis and 100 male, perhaps even 550 female and 450 male. Gurus might teach differently to individuals, as opposed to covers of books.

Whilst I recognise and certainly don't ignore the generalisations, in my personal experience, they rarely hold true in anything but the most inconsistent, and therefore flimsy, of ways.

Philip Mistlberger

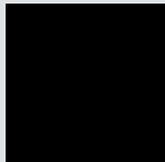

Registered User

Posts: 3

(2/15/04 9:16 am)

Reply

ezSupporter

Re: Satsang, and the Integration of Truth

Thanks for the welcome, Wolfson.

Good points, Dave T.

Quote:

---

So for example, a psychological spectrum illustrating individual's proclivity towards creativity would simply have poles labelled creative and not creative, as opposed to masculine and feminine.

---

I think one of the ideas behind realization of gender -- that is, comfort with one's masculinity or femininity -- is what is sometimes referred to in psychotherapeutic lingo as the need to take "ownership" of one's ego-identity prior to being able to transcend it (or see into its purely conceptual nature).

Ken Wilber made extensive reference to this in what he called the "Pre-Trans" fallacy. The idea there is that human unfolding proceeds in a developmental fashion -- essentially, the "pre-rational" phase, the "ego-formation and consolidation" phase, and then (ideally) the "ego-transcendence" phase.

Wilber called the "pre-trans" thing a "fallacy" because he was drawing attention to the tendencies to confuse certain transcendent stages with a kind of mystical mish-mash "one-ness" that was more truly akin to the "pre-rational" phase. One often find this in the case of people who have religious or mystical experiences but haven't yet learned to think critically in even the most rudimentary way.

Psychologically, in modern times there has been great confusion around gender and role/function of sex-identity, which can, when wedded to a spiritual path, result in certain tendencies to "bypass" essential foundational lessons related to the reason for the gender one finds oneself operating out of. This can and often does result in the spiritually ungrounded seeker, who is attempting to go beyond the human condition prior to embracing it in at least some basic fashion.

So, what I was attempting to address in my last post is that while the limitations of gender and/or feminine/masculine mind are important to see and understand clearly, it's equally important to see the innate power and potential of both masculine and feminine essences as well -- and how they tend to approach truth from differing angles. This can help in areas of acceptance and healing of old issues related to self-rejection and self-loathing and the projections of them onto (usually and typically) the opposite gender.

In a "normal" and "healthy" society such issues would indeed be irrelevant. People would naturally develop from pre-rational, to ego, to transcendence. But our modern societies, I would submit, are anything but normal and healthy. Thus, there tends to be a kind of retardation around the middle ("ego") stage, and one of the main "tools" the ego seems to have to keep people limited or unconscious is denial. Much of this denial functions via repression, sublimation, etc., but has as its basis an inability to come to terms with the nature of one's human self, which includes gender and masculine or feminine traits.

When people reject themselves or repress themselves, it's difficult to move forward into genuine spiritual liberation. This is because the entire person must move forward into such awakening, not just "part" of the person. We can't drop something until we're holding it in our hand. The ego can't be transcended until we honestly see and experience it, that is, recognize the full force of our ego-conditioning.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 950

(2/15/04 9:55 am)

Reply

Re: Satsang, and the Integration of Truth

---

Yes, I suppose to a large extent, it's a numbers game. Generalisations should produce useful outcomes in such an arena. I'm wondering though, if perhaps the atypical gender-minded individual is going to lose out with such teachings. I also wonder if such people, as a pertinent yet hardly the only example, might be better disposed to realisation of the fallacy of their respective ego-conditioning, due to the inconsistency they may see in how they have been conditioned, and how they actually are; but might suffer from generalised gender based teaching when it comes to the next step. A case could also be made for recognising such people as the ones that are ready to hear spiritual teaching, being as most others are likely not to feel dissatisfaction with their ego-conditioning (or at least not recognise it when they do), and consequently, likely have no spiritual inclination.

Of course on the therapy level, one must consider the whole. What kind of therapy are you involvewd in, if you don't mind my asking?

That is a huge board you have there BTW. I see it even has a forum dedicated to Lloyd Pye, which Birdofhermes might be interested in.

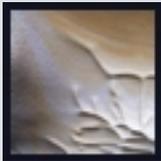

Rhett Hamilton

Registered User

Posts: 273

(2/15/04 12:16 pm)

Reply

Re: Satsang, and the Integration of Truth

---

Quote:

---

To generalize for a moment, the male and female essences do not actually approach Truth via the same way, which is precisely why the whole issue can be so confusing (and why intimate human relationships are, generally speaking, so full of confusion, struggle, wastage or time and energy, and suffering).

The problem has its roots in ignorance of the differences of the two approaches to Truth. The male approach is essentially concerned with Freedom, and in particular, freedom of consciousness. The female approach is more concerned with Love, and its manifestation as "Light", that is, via form and expression.

Masculine mind is concerned with freedom in all endeavours of life -- creative, work, political, financial, etc., and finally spiritual. "Love", generally speaking, comes a distant second.

Female mind is, generally speaking, concerned primarily with relationship, and ultimately, with love, in all its faces. Wisdom, truth, freedom, etc., are secondary to it. (There are always exceptions, but as a rule of thumb this seems to apply about 90% of the time).

---

Whilst i think your expressions have a fair amount of psychological validity, one of the essential problems with "feminine spirituality" is that attachment is wholly contrary to Truth. The nature of The Infinite is singular and fleeting, yet they deludedly value connections and permanence.

Rhett Hamilton

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1469
(2/15/04 1:42 pm)
Reply

Re: Satsang, and the Integration of Truth

---

And impermanence itself can be a form of permanence. You just switch rhythms. Connections occur without your input (non-inherent existence). Agreed that valuation here is misplaced energy.

 Philip Mistlberger
Registered User
Posts: 4
(2/15/04 5:32 pm)
Reply
ezSupporter

Re: Satsang, and the Integration of Truth

---

Dave T., I've been a "transpersonal" therapist in practice since 1987. "Transpersonal" is a fancy word for "spiritually oriented", meaning (in my case) a blend of traditional Western counseling methodologies, and Eastern spiritual practices. Although, for the past couple of years, my work has greatly simplified and centers more on "present time mindfulness" rather than "past-time" cognitive analysis or cathartic release of traumatic memories.

Rhett --

Quote:

---

Whilst I think your expressions have a fair amount of psychological validity, one of the essential problems with "feminine spirituality" is that attachment is wholly contrary to Truth. The nature of The Infinite is singular and fleeting, yet they deludedly value connections and permanence.

---

Agreed that "attachment" is wholly contrary to Truth. My point is that there is a very particular "feminine spirituality" that seems to arrive at the enlightened condition. I say "seems" to because it has not been my path; however, I've travelled extensively, and spent many years living in spiritual communities, in which I've known many women who seem to be deeply Realized and to have arrived at this condition via a feminine approach akin to devotion or "surrender" to the Source.

Now I'm aware that in the context of the main teachings presented at this message board, it's possible that my apparent espousing of a particular "feminine approach" to enlightenment, or my apparent "classification" of a feminine kind of psychology (viz., emphasis on Love/surrender as distinct from Wisdom/non-attachment) might seem to be yet another way to "box" and "limit" women; that is of course not my intention. While in India (one of the rare matriachal cultures on Earth, though with its share of cultural depravity and gender abuses), I came to see much of the tradition of the awakened female sage. While not as common as male gurus, they do exist and many are more than mere priestesses of a fossilized tradition. I also knew (and know) several enlightened female gurus who teach Advaita Vedanta principles and appear to have arrived at their states via a more masculine approach of seeing directly into their Real nature; but in all cases, these women also had deeply devotional relationships with their (usually male) gurus. The element of devotion and surrender was always a key in their own spiritual unfolding. One of these women, a major Advaita teacher with an international following of thousands, has spoken often and openly about "being in love" with her elderly teacher, and often talked in detail about how this "divine love-relatedness" was a key to her realization.

My understanding is basically this -- the feminine essence in its realized condition "surrenders" into its native enlightened state via entering non-separation (Love). When distorted, feminine essence results in attachment, confusion, hate, and insidious manipulation (the perversion of, or total absence of, Love).

The masculine essence in its realized condition sees directly into the illusions generated by the conceptual mind; once seeing the false, what is left over is recognition of the Real, or Truth (Wisdom). When distorted, masculine essence results in ignorance, over-aggression, abuse, violence, logic disconnected from heart, (as in the brilliance that creates the technological capacity of a species to destroy itself, etc.) -- the perversion of, or total absence of, Wisdom.

Now having said all that, I've also come to see over time that both these principles (masculine/feminine spirituality) are operating in most people, that is, both are usually experienced as part of the awakening process. The sage who sees into Truth by recognizing the false invariably experiences profound opening of the heart, along with compassion (example, Ramana Maharshi). The sage who "Loves God" in such a sincere fashion that indicates their readiness to surrender ego and

|                                                                                                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                         | delusion, invariably attains to clarity and power of insight into Truth (example, Ramakrishna).                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2299(2/15/04 9:54 pm)Reply                                                                                      | ---- <hr/> One need not 'love god' to love beyond oneself.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| silentsalRegistered UserPosts: 59(2/16/04 4:48 am)Reply                                                                                      | Re: ---- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> One need not 'love god' to love beyond oneself. <hr/> Is this love beyond oneself even love? I have a hard time equating it with love, love as generally talked about by the majority is not this, compassion as a state of being is more about acceptance, more about freedom. It is so radically different than "love" that seeks to possess, so different than "love" that needs to be expressed as to be two completely different things.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 959(2/16/04 8:45 am)Reply  | Re: ---- <hr/> Philip, your occupation sounds most interesting. What exactly is your approach to counselling? I mean how would you approach the counselling of your average client? What is the process you go through and how do you select the pertinent advice? What sort of advice would you give to the standard mid-life crisis? How do you teach present time mindfulness? How would you describe your success rate? On another subject, I thought your sessions with Satan on TPG were extremely entertaining and informative. I hadn't thought those three guys were sensitive enough to even stop for a moment to consider themselves. I did notice that your closing line in your session with Mara was directly lifted from Dr. Katz. Do you have the piano thing too? ;-) |

Yet another subject. I was wondering what you see as your motivation to do what you do at work, and what you do on the net, and I guess, in general life? To what extent do you see the these as one-in-the-same?

Rhett Hamilton

Registered User

Posts: 274

(2/16/04 1:13 pm)

Reply

Re: Satsang, and the Integration of Truth

---

Quote:

---

I also knew (and know) several enlightened female gurus who teach Advaita Vedanta principles and appear to have arrived at their states via a more masculine approach of seeing directly into their Real nature; but in all cases, these women also had deeply devotional relationships with their (usually male) gurus. The element of devotion and surrender was always a key in their own spiritual unfolding. One of these women, a major Advaita teacher with an international following of thousands, has spoken often and openly about "being in love" with her elderly teacher, and often talked in detail about how this "divine love-relatedness" was a key to her realization.

---

So what do you think they represent?

I think it's all too likely that she's deeply dependent on the Guru for her emotional stability, and that if he stopped propping her up she'd come unstuck. The seed of womens selfishness and dependence seems indestructible.

Additionally, i think it's all too likely that she merely expouses his wisdom and whatever else she's read; that she's, at bottom, an empty vessel. By herself, she lacks the capacity for the cultivation of wisdom, and, as you suggest, an intellectual understanding of the nature of reality. Without that, how can she be considered enlightened and wise?

Quote:

---

My understanding is basically this -- the feminine essence in its realized condition "surrenders" into its native enlightened state via entering non-separation (Love).

---

Non-separation seems a euphemism for non-distinction, ie: non-discrimination/mindlessness.

Wisdom, to me, is about discrimination, the making of truthful judgements.

Rhett Hamilton

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2302

(2/16/04 1:41 pm)

Reply

----

---

Rhett, certainly wisdom is about discrimination, which is why the likelihoods you write of hold no meaning beyond what they are.

Sal,

Quote:

---

suergaz:--One need not 'love god' to love beyond oneself.

silentsal:--Is this love beyond oneself even love? I have a hard time equating it with love, love as generally talked about by the majority is not this, compassion as a state of being is more about acceptance, more about freedom. It is so radically different than "love" that seeks to possess, so different than "love" that needs to be expressed as to be two completely different things

---

There cannot but be the desire to possess and the need to express in all love beyond oneself, for all love 'beyond' oneself is only ever an extension of oneself. What is meant by 'beyond' is that it is not completely within our consciousness, by 'beyond ourselves', I mean our future selves.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2185

(2/16/04 2:32 pm)

Reply

Re: Satsang, and the Integration of Truth

---

Hi Philip,

As you probably know, I am very skeptical of "feminine spirituality", for reasons that will probably become clearer as our discussion unfolds.

You wrote:

Quote:

---

Agreed that "attachment" is wholly contrary to Truth.

---

And then further down ....

Quote:

---

I also knew (and know) several enlightened female gurus who teach Advaita Vedanta principles and appear to have arrived at their states via a more masculine approach of seeing directly into their Real nature; but in all cases, these women also had deeply devotional relationships with their (usually male) gurus. The element of devotion and surrender was always a key in their own spiritual unfolding. One of these women, a major Advaita teacher with an international following of thousands, has spoken often and openly about "being in love" with her elderly teacher, and often talked in detail about how this "divine love-relatedness" was a key to her realization.

---

To my mind, "being in love" denotes a very strong attachment. If these female sages are still in love with their teachers, then by your very own words above you are saying that they are not enlightened people. For their very attachment towards their teacher is anti-Truth.

You could argue that devotion to one's guru is a necessary step towards enlightenment, especially for women. But even if we assume this to be true (and I do dispute it), the fact that these "female sages" are still harbouring a strong attachment to their gurus shows that they haven't yet grown out of the stage of being students. That is to say, they haven't really become masters in their own right.

What usually happens when a female becomes a student of a male guru, and falls in love with him, is that she passively absorbs his teachings without really understanding them. And then she reflects them back to the world, which creates the illusion that she is enlightened. Women excel at regurgitating information and mirroring other people's mindsets. It often happens that when a woman falls in love with a man, she discards everything that she has ever believed in and adopts his outlook and values completely. If he is a loving Christian, then she too becomes a loving Christian. If he is a serial killer, then she too becomes a devotee of murder. The man thinks that he has found a soul-mate, but all she has done is absorb his values and reflect them back to him.

 Philip Mistlberger
Registered User
Posts: 5
(2/16/04 6:46 pm)
Reply
ezSupporter

Re: ----

---

Quote:

---

Philip, your occupation sounds most interesting. What exactly is your approach to counselling? I mean how would you approach the counselling of your average client? What is the process you go through and how do you select the pertinent advice? What sort of advice would you give to the standard mid-life crisis? How do you teach present time mindfulness? How would you describe your success rate?

---

Dave T., it might be a proper book-length response for me to adequately answer those questions, LOL. But in a nutshell, the essence of "transpersonal" therapy is something sometimes called "reality-pacing", wherein an attempt is made to "match frequencies" with the person one is working with, so to speak; that is, to afford them a non-judgmental atmosphere where they have some sense of being seen and validated for wherever they are at in their journey (not all that different, in some respects, from the Catholic concept of "confession"). This is often a first step; where it goes from there is often directed by the client themselves, as they will often gain insight when simply in an atmosphere of psychological safety. It also entirely depends on what a person is bringing to therapy. I'm not a psychiatrist and thus don't work with severely "damaged" people or people requiring medication. However, I often do employ certain psychospiritual techniques (Reichian bioenergetics, rebirthing, Gestalt therapy, meditation, etc.) if these stand a chance of being helpful. But a basic idea behind transpersonal approaches is to view the human being as an "energy field" that in its healthy condition is "flowing", or "moving" and in its contracted, depressed, chronically unhappy, or neurotic condition, is "blocked" or "stagnant" (in whatever fashion). Any so-called methods are used in the service of helping to undo psychic "knots" and facilitate a freeing up of energy and attention that has been locked up into the musculature of the body (via repressed pain, usually).

Now the "mindfulness" method I was making reference to, as having become more central to me over the past few years, often takes the form of resting in the present moment with whomever I am with, sometimes with lengthy eye-contact (with or without words). This often has the result of calming or stabilizing or "grounding" attention and energy in the *Now*. Over the past 17 years or so I've worked with perhaps 2,000 people (many in depth); of those, perhaps 1,300 have been women. I have found that women often seem to benefit from the stabilization and grounding of energy; but they also have much to teach men about "loosening up" and getting out of rigid mental patterns.

As for "mid-life crisis", this is often a very "pregnant" period, for both men and women, in different fashions. Reason being, that illusions related to living one's life on the basis of earning approval (usually of the parental sort, whether family-of-origin or authority figures) often begin to collapse around that time (if they haven't already). Over the past decade I've also conducted numerous weekend seminars and transformational workshops for hundreds; I once did a compilation of "average age" of such workshop attendees. It was 39.5 years old. This is revealing, because it is between the ages of 35-55 where a tremendous amount of deepening often happens (except in the case of "rare" souls who often "bloom" at very early ages -- spiritual or psychological "prodigies").

But also, I agree with the Advaita sage H.W.L. Poonja who once said that in order to awaken spiritually it's important to begin on the path prior to the age of 40. Reason being is that by middle age the average person has wracked up too much suffering -- financial debts, broken marriages, child custody issues, to name three that are incredibly common nowadays -- to have sufficient energy left over for awakening. Very difficult to be serious about enlightenment if you're constantly dealing with issues that drain your energy (although occasionally, such issues can be a powerful incentive to awaken). All the same, "mid-life crisis" often relates to an real call to move beyond attachment/ identification to the body, and to one's "personal" past. Physically beautiful women often go through difficult times in middle age, as they learn the hard lessons connected to realizing the illusory nature of the body and sexual charisma as their body ages; so do men, but men in middle age often are faced with issues relating to their sense of "failure" or "success" in the world. By middle age a man realizes that he is no longer in the shadow of his father; he has either surpassed his father (a very rare occurrence, actually), or is grappling with the realization that he has "failed" his father by not becoming the man that he was supposed to be. Either way, these kinds of crises can be good fodder for spiritual development, in alignment with the old understanding "there can be no resolution without crisis".

As for "success rate" that is entirely an intangible -- couldn't clearly answer that. Never had a client commit suicide (yet, LOL); most seem to benefit, and many seem to have progressed in various levels. But again, so much of this is illusion of one sort or the other. Much of this is "simply happening", the cosmic unfolding. In that sense, I feel no different than a shoe repair man; I just do my job. If the shoe fits afterward (it usually does), then good. If not, then maybe they don't need therapy, but just a new pair of shoes...

Quote:

---

On another subject, I thought your sessions with Satan on TPG were extremely entertaining and informative. I hadn't thought those three guys were sensitive enough to even stop for a moment to consider themselves.

---

I wrote that "play" three years ago...a couple of months ago I wrote some more recent sessions with the "big D" which seemed to reflect my own deepening realization of things. I think the more recent sessions have more humor. I haven't posted them yet.

Quote:

---

I did notice that your closing line in your session with Mara was directly lifted from Dr. Katz. Do you have the piano thing too? ;-) Actually never heard of him. But there is one paragraph from Mara in his banter with the Shrink that is lifted from an ancient Buddhist text. My excuse is that I was talking to the guy who wrote the damned scripture... ;-)

---

Quote:

---

Yet another subject. I was wondering what you see as your motivation to do what you do at work, and what you do on the net, and I guess, in general life? To what extent do you see these as one-in-the-same?

---

My original motivation to get trained in therapy was unquestionably to "heal myself" and understand my own (often horrid) past, definitely. Over time, I came to care about the people I worked with in more authentic ways. I still experience joy in interacting with people in honest, deep, spiritually oriented "work" or dialogue.

 Philip Mistlberger
Registered User
Posts: 6
(2/16/04 7:49 pm)
Reply
ezSupporter

Re: Satsang, and the Integration of Truth

---

Rhett, I'm addressing your questions as well in my reply to David Q., as they seem to deal with essentially the same points...

Quote:

---

To my mind, "being in love" denotes a very strong attachment. If these female sages are still in love with their teachers, then by your very own words above you are saying that they are not enlightened people. For their very attachment towards their teacher is anti-Truth.

---

David, no question that "being in love" in the conventional sense is a very strong attachment -- probably the strongest of them all, with the potential for all sorts of craziness (and why, it's often said, that 80% of crimes are "crimes of passion").

I think the point to look at becomes, is there a kind of "being in love" that is not conventional, that is, transcends typical egoic attachments?

In other words, is there any kind of "being in love" that can support Truth, rather than undermine it?

No doubt you're familiar with the bhakti traditions of India and some of the Sufi brotherhoods, which involve as a central aspect of their spiritual practice a "divine love affair" with God. The Sufi saint Rumi wrote constantly about this. Some dismiss him as a mere drunk (certainly Omar Khayyam, whom some elevate to Rumi's level, was -- every poem of his being about "wine", and in a thorough non-metaphorical sense)... but nevertheless, there is a very old and revered tradition of devotion to God, often via the vehicle of the guru, as a means of transcending ego-limitation and delusion.

In the case of the specific female guru I was talking about -- her name is Gangaji -- her guru (the famous Advaita sage Poonja of Lucknow, north India), died in 1997, and she has continued teaching since then, to very large audiences. She used to speak freely about her "love" for him, including her very personal experience of that love; and, although she is commonly recognized as "enlightened" by many of her followers, and was declared "enlightened" by Poonja, she has (to my knowledge) made no such direct claim herself (but nor has she denied it). I have sat in her satsangs and listened to her recorded talks, and she without question speaks authoritatively and in the manner of a male sage (though with a throaty Southern accent). She's around 60 years old now.

So whether or not she is truly enlightened would seem to me to hinge crucially on this question about "non-attached divine-Love", and even whether there is such a thing. I'm open on the matter, it remains a thing of ongoing investigation to me.

Have you ever felt such a Love, David? In your recognition of the Infinite, have you ever experienced this as an all-encompassing Love for all things...something very akin to recognizing fundamental non-separation with all things? And in such a state, could it be momentarily "directed" toward a tree in front of you...or a smiling child, or a sunset... etc. Would be interested to hear your take on that.

Quote:

---

You could argue that devotion to one's guru is a necessary step towards enlightenment, especially for women. But even if we assume this to be true (and I do dispute it), the fact that these "female sages" are still harbouring a strong attachment to their gurus shows that they haven't yet grown out of the stage of being students. That is to say, they haven't really become masters in their own right.

---

I did a quick survey of nine or ten female "non-dual gurus" who are currently popular and who are actively teaching. URLs below, with few comments from me, for any curious to investigate them. I'd be interested to hear the take on any here who survey their websites, perhaps listen to their voices, etc. I've sat with some of them, although my primary non-dual teachers have been male. Most of these women teach through the "satsang" format...

<http://www.gangaji.org/> -- Gangaji (her master died in '97, she is still teaching)

<http://www.pamelasatsang.com/> -- Pamela Wilson (disciple of the American sage Robert Adams, who was himself a direct disciple of Ramana Maharshi). Adams died in the mid-1990s. Pamela is still teaching, travels regularly to many cities.

www.geocities.com/~cathing/ -- Catherine Ingram, Buddhist guru.

<http://www.neelam.org/> -- Neelam, Polish woman in her late 30s, recognized by many as "deeply enlightened". Disciple of Poonja (died in '97). Neelam is still teaching.

<http://www.thework.org/> -- Byron Katie (that's a woman). This one says she was "spontaneously awakened", never had a master. She has a big following and a best selling book out.

<http://www.springwatercenter.org/> -- Toni Packer (female Zen master. Calm, reasonable, peaceful, she reminds me of Kornfield or Levine).

<http://www.shambhala.org/teachers/pema/index.html> -- Pema Chodron, Tibetan Buddhist nun, has a big following. Her master was Chogyam Trungpa, the Tibetan sage who died in 1987. Pema is still teaching, has authored many books. I had a private interview with her at a Buddhist retreat in 1985.

www.truelightpub.com/index.htm -- Amber Terrel, sprouted from Gangaji, so her guru was a woman.

www.nonduality.com/berna.htm -- Bernadette Peters, spontaneously awakened, now elderly. Her book is well known and respected by many.

It's interesting to see, in considering the point "do female gurus collapse" when their male master is no longer there, that in most of the above cases, the gurus of these female teachers died several years ago, yet all seem to be still going strong. That would seem to argue in favour of the possibility of a legitimate female enlightenment, unless all their tens of thousands of followers are deluded or otherwise seduced.

Quote:

---

What usually happens when a female becomes a student of a male guru, and falls in love with him, is that she passively absorbs his teachings without really understanding them. And then she reflects them back to the world, which creates the illusion that she is enlightened. Women excel at regurgitating information and mirroring other people's mindsets. It often happens that when a woman falls in love with a man, she discards everything that she has ever believed in and adopts his outlook and values completely. If he is a loving Christian, then she too becomes a loving Christian. If he is a serial killer, then she too becomes a devotee of murder. The man thinks that he has found a soul-mate, but all she has done is absorb his values and reflect them back to him.

---

I think there is indeed a "reflecting" capacity to the feminine mind (which is why it's often symbolized by the Moon, being a passive reflecter of the Sun's light). But in a spiritual context, that is, a female teacher serving truth or the tradition of a particular teaching-lineage, that does not negate the efficacy of such reflected light, nor its intrinsic beauty -- "beauty" here meant in the sense of the Sanskrit word sunder, which means "divine beauty" and refers to the recognition of the Face of the Divine, based on the idea of "Truth=Beauty" (and we're not speaking here of the conventional beauty). As for their actual "understanding" of enlightenment, without actually being that female guru we are left to simply get on with the business of our own enlightenment, and allow for the possibility that we might not know with certainty what her understanding truly is...unless we have experienced her directly. At best, I think we can investigate her as a teacher, listen to her words and manner of teaching, and see what we see.

Edited by: Philip Mistlberger at: 2/16/04 8:01 pm

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 601
(2/17/04 9:09 am)
Reply

Re: Satsang, and the Integration of Truth

---

Those sites all seem to be more commercial than anything else. Obviously these women still need their worldly possessions. Can't see how any of them could be enlightened, they just seem to be parrots.

 Philip Mistlberger
Registered User
Posts: 7
(2/17/04 9:33 am)
Reply
ezSupporter

Re: Satsang, and the Integration of Truth

---

Most of them live very simply, Jimhaz. They are not in the business of making profit; to my knowledge, money earned from book sales, tape sales, and nominal teaching fees (standard for satsang admission is usually around ten bucks per meeting, less than the price of an average restaurant meal) goes toward administrative overhead, such rental of halls for talks, travel expenses, book printing, etc.

Reading their material, or listening to them on audio tape, would perhaps be a better way to form an opinion.

Edited by: Philip Mistlberger at: 2/17/04 9:35 am

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 380
(2/17/04 10:07 am)
Reply

Re: Satsang, and the Integration of Truth

---

I don't really see anything wrong with approaching spirituality from a devotional perspective. If a person can't approach Truth through reason, are we supposed to call them parrots and tell them to take a hike? I think the problem with devotion is that if someone is going to devote themselves to something without a lick of reason, then they will have no real idea what the heck they're devoting themselves to. That not only applies at the beginning, but at every step of the way. So I think it's kind of tricky to say devotion as a method is good or bad. I think reason is necessary for any real spiritual progress, and if devotion is going to be advocated, I would think devotion to reason would be the best thing to advocate.

Edited by: MGregory at: 2/17/04 10:14 am

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Satsang, and the Integration of Truth

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 2302(3/20/04 7:09 am)Reply                                                                                         | Re: thebigview.com <hr/> Bird wrote: Quote: <hr/> But I think we're pretty safe, each in our little cyberworld, some ten or twelve thousand miles apart. <hr/> We're not that safe, Anna. You and I are already joined together by cyberspace. We can engage in ripping sex whenever we want to. |
|  Philip MistlbergerPosts: 64(3/20/04 7:13 am)ReplyezSupporter  | Re: thebigview.com <hr/> Will you both be requiring some Tantric techniques? I can suggest some if you'd like...                                                                                                                                                                                                             |

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1482
(3/20/04 9:28 am)
Reply

Re: thebigview.com

---

Quote:

---

Will you both be requiring some Tantric techniques? I can suggest some if you'd like...

---

We will definitely need something to make it satisfying...

And that is cesspool.

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1663
(3/20/04 9:39 am)
Reply

Re: thebigview.com

---

Something to make it satisfying? Isn't the mind enough?

Dan Rowden

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1485
(3/20/04 1:15 pm)
Reply

Re: thebigview.com

---

Quote:

---

Something to make it satisfying? Isn't the mind enough?

---

That was all I had in mind in the first place...

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

