

---Huzheng! --- 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
---Huzheng! --- 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
---Huzheng! --- 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
---Huzheng! --- 4 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
---Huzheng! --- 5 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
---Huzheng! --- 6 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
10 illusions - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
A critique of A=A symbolism 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
A critique of A=A symbolism 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
A critique of A=A symbolism 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
A Dialogue on the Sexes, by the Sexes, for the Sexes 1 - www.htm
A Dialogue on the Sexes, by the Sexes, for the Sexes 2 - www.htm
Absolutivity, Circlematics - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
ANTI MATTER - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
anti matter postage - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Apology - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Archives - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Are you enlightened 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Are you enlightened 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Are you enlightened 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Attachment and Dettachment Reality\_ 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Attachment and Dettachment Reality\_ 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Attachment and Non-attachment - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Bad Habits 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Bad Habits 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Bad Habits 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Barry Long Wisdom and where to find it-A book of truth - www.htm
Beginnings and endings - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Bhagavad Gita 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Big Bang or Bust - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Biggier - Epistemic determinism - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Biggier - Human \(inter\)action and meaning 1 - www\_ezboard\_co.htmaction_and_meaning_1)
Biggier - Human \(inter\)action and meaning 2 - www\_ezboard\_co.htmaction_and_meaning_2)
Bosons and Fermions 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Bosons and Fermions 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Bourgeois or Anti-Bourgeois - www\_ezboard\_com.htm buddha - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Captain Koolaid - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

Causal Consciousness 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Causal Consciousness 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Causality And Non-Determinism 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Causality And Non-Determinism 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Causality And Non-Determinism 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Celibacy, Monogamy, Polygamy Other 6 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Chaos Magic 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Chaos Magic 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Cognition - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Coitus and Language 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Coitus and Language 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Coitus and Language 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Coitus and Language 4 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Coitus and Language 5 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Coitus and Language 6 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Coitus and Language 7 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Conceptional Cosmology \(continued\) - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Conceptional Space-Matter Cosmology - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Conceptual Just Thinking - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Consciousness and Measurability - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Conservative woman's view - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Contradiction, and the shamelessness of philosophers\_ - www\_.htm
Courage and masculinity 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Courage and masculinity 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Cremation or Burial 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Cremation or Burial 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Cremation or Burial 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Crisis 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Crisis 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Crisis 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Crisis 4 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Dark Matter 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Dark Matter 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Dave Sim letter - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
David and Hinduism - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Death 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Death 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
DEBATE Quran is proved to be the work of a greater power - w.htm

Defining Ultimate Reality - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Delusion 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Delusion 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Desire & its two approaches - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Disney World - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Divorce and Doppelgangers 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Divorce and Doppelgangers 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Divorce and Doppelgangers 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
DQ site 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
DQ site 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
DQ site 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
DQ site 4 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
DQ site 5 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Drive-by aphorizing - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Eckhart Tolle 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Eckhart Tolle 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Eckhart Tolle 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Eckhart Tolle 4 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Eckhart Tolle 5 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Eckhart Tolle 6 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Eckhart Tolle 7 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Eckhart Tolle 8 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Eckhart Tolle 9 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
ego 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
ego 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
ego 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
ego 4 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
ego 5 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
ego 6 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
ego 7 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
ego 8 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Emotion - a false and deadly notion 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Emotion - a false and deadly notion 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Emotion - a false and deadly notion 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Emotion - a false and deadly notion 4 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Emotions Vs Rationality - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Enlighten me! - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Enlightenment - You need to have children 1 - www\_ezboard\_co.htm

Enlightenment - You need to have children 2 - www\_ezboard\_co.htm
Enlightenment - You need to have children 3 - www\_ezboard\_co.htm
Enlightenment 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Enlightenment 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Enlightenment 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Enlightenment in Two Steps 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Enlightenment in Two Steps 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Enlightenment in Two Steps 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Enlightenment in Two Steps 4 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Enlightenment, suicide 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Enlightenment, suicide 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Enlightenment, suicide 4 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Enlightenment, suicide 5 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Enlightenment, suicide1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Enter into Absolute 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Enter into Absolute 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Evil - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Evolution - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Evolution of Consciousness - Will to Unconsciousness - www\_e.htm
Evolutionary biology as challenge to existence of God - www\_.htm
Formlessness survey - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Free will - www\_ezboard\_com.htm Fully Determined - www\_ezboard\_com.htm fundamentalism - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Gay Bishop 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Gay Bishop 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Genius and the Gollum-Smeagol syndrome - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
genius country - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Genius Inheritance - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
genius religion - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Girl shortage in China 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Girl shortage in China 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
giving in - www\_ezboard\_com.htm GNOSIS - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
God The great con game - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Goffman, identity and enlightenment - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Google on Enlightenment - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
GOST perspectives\_1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

GOST perspectives 2 - www.ezboard.com.htm
GOST perspectives 3 - www.ezboard.com.htm
Gravity Probe-B - www.ezboard.com.htm
Healing - www.ezboard.com.htm
hell is other people fate or farce 1 - www.ezboard.com.htm
hell is other people fate or farce 2 - www.ezboard.com.htm
hell is other people fate or farce 3 - www.ezboard.com.htm
hell is other people fate or farce 4 - www.ezboard.com.htm
hell is other people fate or farce 5 - www.ezboard.com.htm
Hello 1 - www.ezboard.com.htm
Hello 2 - www.ezboard.com.htm
Here, now - www.ezboard.com.htm
Hermaphrodites 1 - www.ezboard.com.htm
Hermaphrodites 2 - www.ezboard.com.htm
Hermaphrodites 3 - www.ezboard.com.htm
How spatial perception inhibits one's own sense of presence .htm
Hu Zheng abridged 1 - www.ezboard.com.htm
Hu Zheng abridged 2 - www.ezboard.com.htm
Human Connections 5 - www.ezboard.com.htm
Human nature - a primitive concept - www.ezboard.com.htm
Humans always LiE! - www.ezboard.com.htm
Humans can't be anything other than what he is! - www.ezboa.htm
I am sorry - www.ezboard.com.htm
I am the god and They are machines - www.ezboard.com.htm
I dare you \_\_\_ 1 - www.ezboard.com.htm
I dare you \_\_\_ 2 - www.ezboard.com.htm
I dare you \_\_\_ 3 - www.ezboard.com.htm
I dare you \_\_\_ 4 - www.ezboard.com.htm
I dare you \_\_\_ 5 - www.ezboard.com.htm
I hypothesize that the majority of humans - www.ezboard.com.htm
I love you, I hate you, I love you 1 - www.ezboard.com.htm
I love you, I hate you, I love you 2 - www.ezboard.com.htm
Icons of Evolution - www.ezboard.com.htm
index.html
Interesting fact, Re Science 1 - www.ezboard.com.htm
Interesting fact, Re Science 2 - www.ezboard.com.htm
Interpretations of Quantum Mechanics - www.ezboard.com.htm
Interview with philosopher on Weininger - www.ezboard.com.htm

Intuitive Knowledge and Logic Proof 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Intuitive Knowledge and Logic Proof 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Intuitive Knowledge and Logic Proof 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Intuitive Knowledge and Logic Proof 4 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Intuitive Knowledge and Logic Proof 5 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Intuitive Knowledge and Logic Proof 6 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Intuitive Knowledge and Logic Proof 7 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Intuitive Knowledge and Logic Proof 8 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Intuitive Knowledge and Logic Proof 9 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Ironic Forum Name - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
IS SPIRITUALITY MORE IN LETTER THAN IN SPIRIT - www\_ezboard.com.htm
Is the brain necessary - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Islam 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Islam 10 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Islam 11 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Islam 12 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Islam 13 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Islam 14 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Islam 15 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Islam 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Islam 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Islam 4 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Islam 5 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Islam 6 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Islam 7 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Islam 8 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Islam 9 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Kantian Metaphysics - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Karma 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Karma 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Kevin Solway and the Barber Paradox 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Kevin Solway and the Barber Paradox 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Kierkegaard online - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Kierkegaard's Either-Or I - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Koan 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Koan 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Koan 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Koan Thread 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

Koan Thread 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Koan Thread 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Koan Thread 4 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Koan Thread 5 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Koan Thread 6 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
LAUGHING WISDOM - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Laziness - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Light - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Live and propagate - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Logical causation 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Logical causation 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
LOVE - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Love 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Love 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Love this one \_\_\_ - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Love vs Logic 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Love vs Logic 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Man on his own - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Marriage Tames Geniuses and Criminals - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Matter-Female, Anti-Matter-Male - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Metaphysics - Word Polarity - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Mind-blowing concepts 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Mind-blowing concepts 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Mindfulness - Mental Projections - Characterisation 1 - www\_.htm
Mindfulness - Mental Projections - Characterisation 2 - www\_.htm
Mindfulness - Mental Projections - Characterisation 3 - www\_.htm
Mindfulness - Mental Projections - Characterisation 4 - www\_.htm
Mindfulness-Awareness 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Mindfulness-Awareness 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Mindfulness-Awareness 4 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Misogenius - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Misperceptions of God-Allah Is A Cause Of Terrorism - www\_ez.htm
MKFaizi 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
MKFaizi 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
MKFaizi 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Modifying significant concepts to suit women 1 - www\_ezboard.htm
Modifying significant concepts to suit women 2 - www\_ezboard.htm
Modifying significant concepts to suit women 3 - www\_ezboard.htm

Modifying significant concepts to suit women 4 - www\_ezboard.htm
Modifying significant concepts to suit women 5 - www\_ezboard.htm
Money is God - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
More material on DQ site 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
More material on DQ site 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Music and Spirituality 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Music and Spirituality 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Music and Spirituality 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
my beef with logic - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
My Fate, My Death - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
My second book \) - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Nagarjuna - Verses on Emptiness - my perspective - www\_ezboa.htm
Nagarjuna and causality - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Nagarjuna The Treatise of Twelve Portals - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Ne Plus Ultra 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Ne Plus Ultra 10 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Ne Plus Ultra 11 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Ne Plus Ultra 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Ne Plus Ultra 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Ne Plus Ultra 4 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Ne Plus Ultra 5 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Ne Plus Ultra 6 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Ne Plus Ultra 7 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Ne Plus Ultra 8 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Ne Plus Ultra 9 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Nietzsche And The Overman Delusion 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Nietzsche And The Overman Delusion 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Nietzsche And The Overman Delusion 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Nietzsche And The Overman Delusion 4 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Nietzsche's Lovers - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Nirvana or direct experience of Reality 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Nirvana or direct experience of Reality 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Non-Attachment - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Now Guilt Free 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Now Guilt Free 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Of judgement and Karma - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
On 'Rationality' 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
On 'Rationality' 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

On choosing a God or a philosophy - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

Oneness 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

Oneness 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

others like me \_\_\_ 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

others like me \_\_\_ 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

Pantheism 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

Pantheism 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

Pantheism 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

Pantheism 4 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

per God and Nature's Operating system IS \_\_\_ - www\_ezboard\_co.htm

Personality - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

Philosophy and Prison - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

Philosophy's Purpose - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

Philosophy, meaning and the pursuit of happiness 1 - www\_ezb.htm

Philosophy, meaning and the pursuit of happiness 2 - www\_ezb.htm

Poll Do you believe in God 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

Poll Do you believe in God 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

Poll Do you believe in God 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

Poll on TPG 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

Poll on TPG 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

pop quiz - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

Positive and Negative - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

Power - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

Prerequisites for Enlightenment 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

Prerequisites for Enlightenment 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

Prerequisites for Enlightenment 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

Prerequisites for Enlightenment 4 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

Prerequisites for Enlightenment 5 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

Prerequisites for Enlightenment 6 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

Prerequisites for Enlightenment 7 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

Prerequisites for Enlightenment 8 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

Prerequisites for Enlightenment 9 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

Proof GOD exists \_\_\_ WARNING updated, less insane 1 - www\_ezbo.htm

Proof GOD exists \_\_\_ WARNING updated, less insane 2 - www\_ezbo.htm

Proof GOD exists \_\_\_ WARNING updated, less insane 3 - www\_ezbo.htm

Proof GOD exists \_\_\_ WARNING updated, less insane 4 - www\_ezbo.htm

Propaganda 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

Propaganda 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

Prove something ETERNAL exists - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
pure human - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Purpose of Religion 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Purpose of Religion 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Purpose of Religion 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
QRS philosophy 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
QRS philosophy 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality 1 - www\_ezboa.htm
Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality 10 - www\_ezbo.htm
Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality 11 - www\_ezbo.htm
Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality 12 - www\_ezbo.htm
Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality 13 - www\_ezbo.htm
Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality 2 - www\_ezboa.htm
Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality 3 - www\_ezboa.htm
Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality 4 - www\_ezboa.htm
Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality 5 - www\_ezboa.htm
Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality 6 - www\_ezboa.htm
Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality 7 - www\_ezboa.htm
Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality 8 - www\_ezboa.htm
Quantum mechanics and David's Ultimate Reality 9 - www\_ezboa.htm
Questions on Mind - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Quotation on Sympathy - Kierkegaard - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Reading and Thinking note - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Reason 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Reason 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Reason destroys ego 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Reason destroys ego 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Reason validates itself 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Reason validates itself 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Reason-Logic - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Reincarnation 5 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Relationships - Absolute and Infinite - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Rich Zubaty 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Rich Zubaty 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Rich Zubaty 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Right Speech, Silence and Initiation for the Genius - www\_ez.htm
Satori 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Satori 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

Satori 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Satsang, and the Integration of Truth 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Satsang, and the Integration of Truth 10 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Satsang, and the Integration of Truth 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Satsang, and the Integration of Truth 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Satsang, and the Integration of Truth 4 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Satsang, and the Integration of Truth 5 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Satsang, and the Integration of Truth 6 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Satsang, and the Integration of Truth 7 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Satsang, and the Integration of Truth 8 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Satsang, and the Integration of Truth 9 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Schizoid Personality Disorder 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Schizoid Personality Disorder 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Schizoid Personality Disorder 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Schizoid Personality Disorder 4 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Schizotypoid Personality Disorder 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Schizotypoid Personality Disorder 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Sci vs Reg 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Sci vs Reg 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
scientism as ultimate reality - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Seeing into the future - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Self-pity - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Sex, The Devil, Religion, Repression - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Sex, The Devil, Religion, Repression 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Sex, The Devil, Religion, Repression 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Sex, The Devil, Religion, Repression 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Sex, The Devil, Religion, Repression 4 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Sex, The Devil, Religion, Repression 5 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Shapes 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Shapes 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Shurangama Sutra 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Shurangama Sutra 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Spiritual advancement 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Spiritual advancement 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Step outside for a bit - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Streaming Consciousness - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Suffering 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Suffering 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

super boy philosophy - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

testosterone literature - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The 4 stages - What stage are you - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The Alpha and The Omega 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The Alpha and The Omega 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The Belief in Right and Wrong - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The compatibility of free will and determinism\_ 1 - www\_ezbo.htm

The compatibility of free will and determinism\_ 2 - www\_ezbo.htm

The compatibility of free will and determinism\_ 3 - www\_ezbo.htm

The Concept of Self-esteem 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The Concept of Self-esteem 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The Concept of Time - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The difference between man and woman\_ 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The difference between man and woman\_ 10 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The difference between man and woman\_ 11 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The difference between man and woman\_ 12 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The difference between man and woman\_ 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The difference between man and woman\_ 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The difference between man and woman\_ 4 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The difference between man and woman\_ 5 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The difference between man and woman\_ 6 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The difference between man and woman\_ 7 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The difference between man and woman\_ 8 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The difference between man and woman\_ 9 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The Doesn't Matter Syndrome - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The fourth essay - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The Genius and trust 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The Genius and trust 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The Gospel of Scott - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The Great Unfinished Book 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The Great Unfinished Book 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The Holographic Universe - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The Infinite - what is it 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The Infinite - what is it 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The Infinite - what is it 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The Jesus Christ Code ! © - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The Jimhaz Theory of Ultimate Reality\_ 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The Jimhaz Theory of Ultimate Reality\_ 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The king of philosophers - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The Limitations of Language - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
the mad and the madder than hell - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The misogynist 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The misogynist 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The misogynist 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The misogynist 4 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The misogynist 5 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The misogynist 6 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The misogynist 7 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The misogynist 8 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The most generous are the greatest thieves 1 - www\_ezboard\_c.htm
The most generous are the greatest thieves 2 - www\_ezboard\_c.htm
The motivation of the enlightened - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The nature of meditation - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The Nature of Reality and Enlightenment 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The Nature of Reality and Enlightenment 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The nature of truth 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The nature of truth 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The Nature of Woman 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The Nature of Woman 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The Nature of Woman 4 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The opponents of religion - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The Paradox 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The Paradox 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The Path of Two 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The Path of Two 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The Path of Two 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The Path of Two 4 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The philosophy of money 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The philosophy of money 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The Power of Positive Thinking - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The Power to Choose Joy - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The Problem of Mr Palomar - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The pursuit of spirituality - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The real ultimate reality 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The real ultimate reality 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The renaissance of Chinese ideology - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

The revolution of philosophy - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The right attitude - Majick - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The righteous profession 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The rocket engines of the mind - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The role of lying in the life of truth 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The role of lying in the life of truth 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The role of lying in the life of truth 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The role of lying in the life of truth 4 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The Secret Word Of The Freemasons - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The Spirit, and Cinema 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The Spirit, and Cinema 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The Spirit, and Cinema 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The spiritual path, part 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The Totality and its Things - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The Truth about the Origin of our Universe 1 - www\_ezboard\_c.htm
The Truth about the Origin of our Universe 2 - www\_ezboard\_c.htm
The Truth about the Origin of our Universe 3 - www\_ezboard\_c.htm
The Truth about the Origin of our Universe 4 - www\_ezboard\_c.htm
The Unobstructed Experience of the Senses - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The utmost truth - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The utmost truth of human - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The value of satisfaction - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The Way = The Will - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The World 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The World 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
The X Factor - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Theft of consciousness - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
There will be never be a peace as long as human exist! - ww.htm
This article made me think of the Genius Forum - www\_ezboard.com.htm
This forum should be renamed or closed - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
This Minefield - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
This will make you a genius ---period - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Tibetan Dzogchen Buddhism 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Tibetan Dzogchen Buddhism 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Time Capsule - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
To be or not to be 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
To be or not to be 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Todays Genius Forum transcript - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

True Christians do not commit sin 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
True Christians do not commit sin 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
True Christians do not commit sin 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
True Christians do not commit sin 4 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Two sides of the same coin - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Ultimate Logic is nonsense logic, in that it cant be applied.htm
Ultimate Reality - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
ultimate reality and ambigious definiton 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Universe 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Universe 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Unreasonable - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Upcoming Genius Arvin Kumar - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Upon reaching nirvana - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
We are in a matrix - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
What am I - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
What are your thoughts on Nietzsche 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
What are your thoughts on Nietzsche 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
What are your thoughts on Nietzsche 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
What are your thoughts on Nietzsche 4 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
What are your thoughts on Nietzsche 5 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
What are your thoughts on Nietzsche 6 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
What constitutes Enlightenment Formally Undecide - www\_ezboa.htm
What do you think can men and women be just friends 1 - www\_.htm
What do you think can men and women be just friends 2 - www\_.htm
What do you think can men and women be just friends 3 - www\_.htm
What is freedom - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
What is illusion - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
what is the basic property of the universe-human 1 - www\_ezb.htm
what is the basic property of the universe-human 2 - www\_ezb.htm
what is the basic property of the universe-human 3 - www\_ezb.htm
what is the basic property of the universe-human 4 - www\_ezb.htm
What is the self 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
What is the self 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
What is time 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
What is time 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
What is time 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
What To Do 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
What To Do 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm

What To Do 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
What will you do , if i tell you the truth\_ 1 - www\_ezboard\_.htm
What will you do , if i tell you the truth\_ 2 - www\_ezboard\_.htm
What you seek 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
What you seek 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
What you seek 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
When NO means YES and she's not lying 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
When NO means YES and she's not lying 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
When NO means YES and she's not lying 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
When NO means YES and she's not lying 4 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Where do you stand metaphysically 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Where do you stand metaphysically 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Where do you stand metaphysically 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Where do you stand metaphysically 4 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Where do you stand metaphysically 5 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Where do you stand metaphysically 6 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Where do you stand metaphysically 7 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Who are you 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Who are you 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Who are you 3 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Who are you 4 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Why Or Why not - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Willfully Causing People 1 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Willfully Causing People 2 - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Wisdom of the Infinite - Part One by David Quinn 10 - www\_ez.htm
Wisdom of the Infinite - Part One by David Quinn 12 - www\_ez.htm
Wisdom of the Infinite - Part One by David Quinn 9 - www\_ezb.htm
Words and Concepts - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
World without madness - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Writers, Actors, Politicians and Musicians - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Yang and Yin - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
Yin and Yang - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
You all humans are babblers! - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
You are what you own - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
everything is in action - www\_ezboard\_com.htm
uh mmmm lessee God's Fingers! - www\_ezbo.htm

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> ---Huzheng! ---

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2155 (1/31/04 11:46 pm) Reply	---Huzheng! --- <hr/> Hello! I see you in here and can't resist starting a subject about it! About you! You can help me fight misogynists if you like. They're very easy. So far I have David Quinn, Kevin Solway, and ynithrix.
Paul Registered User Posts: 432 (2/1/04 2:57 am) Reply	Re: ---Huzheng! --- <hr/> Suergaz, unlike Hu Zheng, you're notanut. Not a nut. Capice?
birdofhermes Registered User Posts: 1367 (2/1/04 5:45 am) Reply	Re: ---Huzheng! --- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> You can help me fight misogynists if you like. They're very easy. <hr/> What, and you discount my efforts? Or is it that you prefer princesses who cannot rescue themselves from the dragons? I consider myself undefeated.

	In my youth I read every fairy tale book I could find. Now I am of the opinion that women must stop accepting reality from men. I want all the women of the world to walk away, tomorrow.
edwardsun Registered User Posts: 2 (2/1/04 6:44 am) Reply	Re: ---Huzheng! --- <hr/> who's huzheng?
ksolway Registered User Posts: 327 (2/1/04 10:23 am) Reply 	Re: ---Huzheng! --- <hr/> Huzheng is a rising star from China. You can read some of his writings in the "Quality posts" topic, near the top of the forum topics.
voce io Registered User Posts: 666 (2/1/04 10:34 am) Reply	Re: ---Huzheng! --- <hr/> Huzheng is a deluded guy. Anna, I'd be on your side, but I don't like the way you hate men.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2162 (2/1/04 11:21 am) Reply 	Re: ---Huzheng! --- <hr/> Anna doesn't hate men. She is suggesting something akin to what occurs in Euripides' Bacchae. In her innocence!

jimhaz Registered User Posts: 524 (2/1/04 11:35 am) Reply	Re: ---Huzheng! --- <hr/> Without knowing what Euripides' Bacchae is all about, I agree with suergaz, she doesn't hate men. It is the opposite, she is in awe of them and desires what they have. She has the self-hate of a masochist (women), but wants to be a sadist (men), so she can become balanced. She has to be a masochist, to stay here for so long with all the shit we throw on her (mostly in the form of a lack of respect for her reasoning).
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2163 (2/1/04 11:42 am) Reply 	Re: ---Huzheng! --- <hr/> That's the Marhsa Faizi in you speaking Jimhaz! Anna, and her reasoning, are loved here.
WolfsonJakk Registered User Posts: 1442 (2/1/04 11:48 am) Reply	Re: ---Huzheng! --- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Huzheng is a rising star from China. <hr/> Does he sing and dance? My favorite Chinese rapper is Tai Mai Shu.
jimhaz Registered User Posts: 525 (2/1/04 11:52 am) Reply	Re: ---Huzheng! --- <hr/> True. I can't disagree with either statement, it is all relative. There is no 'we'.

huzheng Registered User Posts: 39 (2/1/04 12:59 pm) Reply	Re: ---Huzheng! --- <hr/> Good, let us fight misogynists together :) I am reading books these days, and i will publish my recent thinking notes soon. I hope my new notes can make sages get marry :)
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2165 (2/1/04 4:34 pm) Reply	---- <hr/> I look forward to reading them! Whether one cautions against marriage and the institution it has become, or advances what is great in it, one nonetheless heralds The wedding! (:D) ( I made a vow to not to make faces in here anymore, but it is broken...Broken!)
Lyrutan Registered User Posts: 1 (2/1/04 4:54 pm) Reply 	Re: ---- <hr/> Kevin Solway and David Quinn were found hiding at the bottom of a spider hole in which they had affixed various pornographic images to the walls in order to fashion a crude dartboard. When dragged from the hole by U.S. forces, they reportedly attempted to bludgeon several soldiers with the collected works of Otto Weininger.
ynithrix Registered User Posts: 222 (2/2/04 12:31 am) Reply	re: <hr/> "What, and you discount my efforts? Or is it that you prefer princesses who cannot rescue themselves from the dragons? I consider myself undefeated." I can't recall any instance when your petty reasoning did anything other than defeat you. You have what I would term Cartman-logic (if in trouble, utter "screw you guys, I'm going home", then run away--or hide behind suergaz who interjects and talks rubbish). I think this thread is pretty useless.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2167

(2/2/04 11:31 am)

Reply

Re: re:

---

Didn't you screw us guys and go home ynithrix? Where have you been?
Can you give me an example of some rubbish I've spoken that can compare with your grand vision of a world of men and their pretty robotic breeding program?

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1372

(2/2/04 11:53 am)

Reply

Re: ---Huzheng! ---

---

I don't hate men Voce, but I do become angry at the things they have done. It is not because men are bad that they do them, it is that when men are unconscious they do these things, and when women are unconscious, they don't know how to conduct themselves, and they don't know how to help the men out of their messes. Men are not the enemy, unconsciousness is the enemy.

Ha, Jimmy, you got your post pretty right. I hadn't called myself a masochist for being here, but just stupid. I am balanced, though. I am both a masochist and a sadist.

Quote:

---

I can't recall any instance when your petty reasoning did anything other than defeat you. You have what I would term Cartman-logic (if in trouble, utter "screw you guys, I'm going home", then run away--or hide behind suergaz who interjects and talks rubbish).

---

Ah, but that is very much your point of view Ynithrix. You are a very angry and bitter man. You are also a person of some intelligence, and you certainly could reason, but there is no escaping this truth about yourself - your ability to reason is clouded and poisoned by your emotions.

But it is going rather far even for you to say that I resort to saying screw you and running away. Actually, I've been criticized for being too long-winded and persistent. Heavens, look at the cage, and it wasn't me who paused.

	I take no responsibility whatever for Suergaz' behavior. He does the same with all topics.
jimhaz Registered User Posts: 532 (2/2/04 3:00 pm) Reply	Re: re: <hr/> I am balanced, though. I am both a masochist and a sadist. Yes, you are almost correct. Every 'thing' is relative. Although no 'thing' is balanced 'things' can be nearly balanced.
ynithrix Registered User Posts: 224 (2/2/04 3:48 pm) Reply	re: <hr/> "Didn't you screw us guys and go home ynithrix? Where have you been?" It's twofold--I said what I needed to say. The threads of past were elongated because people such as yourself asked questions that I considered obvious given by previous responses. I felt I had already repeated myself enough, without doing so again (and again, and again). You obviously were not interested in my viewpoint, or you would've sought the answers from my replies. Second reason is that my occupation causes me to travel, often for semester-long periods. "your ability to reason is clouded and poisoned by your emotions." I find it ironic that you of all would say that.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2170 (2/2/04 10:17 pm) Reply 	Re: re: <hr/> ynithrix, what is your occupation?

Paul Registered User Posts: 435 (2/3/04 4:59 am) Reply	Re: re: re! <hr/> Reciprocal question, Zag. I'm doin' nottin, by the way. Well, breathing, somewhat.
---	---

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> ---Huzheng! ---

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
DEL Registered User Posts: 962 (2/3/04 7:35 am) Reply	snuff movies <hr/> Quote: <hr/> huzheng Good, let us fight misogynists together :) I am reading books these days, and i will publish my recent thinking notes soon. I hope my new notes can make sages get marry :) <hr/> I heard that from somebody who worked at customs that most of the snuff movies came out from China in the 1990's. They were produced in USA but the people dying were mainly Chinese. How true is this?

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 538
(2/3/04 8:45 am)
Reply

Re: re: re!

---

How true is this?

Greed and a lack of wealth

and

With 1.2 billion people (increases the odds and devalues life generally) and a desire for more males, leading to a disregard for women, I imagine more female babies would have been thought of as worthless, and so would fall into the hands of those who would abuse them, either directly as slaves or through creating a lack of self-respect and confusion later in life (so more women would be susceptible to suicide)

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1379
(2/3/04 12:54 pm)
Reply

Re: re:

---

Quote:

---

"your ability to reason is clouded and poisoned by your emotions."

I find it ironic that you of all would say that.

---

No, you do not mean me of all people. You mean any woman. You imagine that you are exempt from having your reason clouded by emotion, and that you can come to a site such as this masculinist one, and be automatically superior by definition. And you imagine that because I am a woman my reason is clouded by emotion, and that no woman could possibly spot that in a man and be relatively free of it herself.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2176
(2/3/04 1:05 pm)
Reply

---

---

Paul, at the moment I am enjoying my last few days of freedom before I get conscripted for 'work for the dole.' At that time I will decide what I must do. I have never known real grief, at least not that kind one might feel at the loss of ones love, or a limb. I know despair. I would not kill anyone unless they attempted to kill me. I may have to cut off all my long hair and become wrathful and stormy to impress some kind of fear upon the dullards who do not understand I do not want their little wages and labours.

Edited by: suergaz at: 2/3/04 1:08 pm

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1383
(2/3/04 1:12 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

How does it work, Zag? Do they find you little jobs and you go work for them but collect your dole?

I went out to a bar with my friends from work a couple of days ago. I never do stuff like that. I loved it. Anyway, I am going to bartending school. The hilarious thing is, there's this young doctor at work who at more or less the same time as me told a bartender that he would work for him for free in return for being taught the trade.

What does that tell you?

Hospitals suck.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2177
(2/3/04 1:20 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

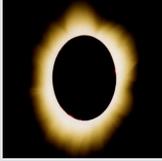

---

Something like that Anna. I am not going to work for money. It always makes me feel like dying.

suergaz Registered User Posts: 2180 (2/3/04 1:43 pm) Reply 	Re: --- <hr/> Anna, come to think of it, you'd love it! It's all hammering nails into things and painting murals for spastic centres. There is no possible way I can do it! On the other side, I can't look at someone wearing a tie without cracking up inwardly and making it such that they can't look me in the eye!
jimhaz Registered User Posts: 550 (2/3/04 1:50 pm) Reply	Re: --- <hr/> I would suggest you pretend you are skitzo, and get a 2 year disability pension, but i think a bit of work would be good for you. You are too emotional to spend all your time with yourself.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2182 (2/3/04 2:00 pm) Reply 	Re: --- <hr/> If we were to come face to face, and disagree with eachothers faces, it would be you whose emotions would override. You actually do not know how I am alone with myself.
jimhaz Registered User Posts: 554 (2/3/04 2:11 pm) Reply	Re: --- <hr/> You are probably correct. I don't 'think' quickly, so conversationally you would probably beat me hands down and make me feel inferior. Feminine minded people tend to speak quickly, as i said earlier, they have a greater capacity to draw info from long term memories, but less ability to process info in the thinking area. In conversation the long term memories they draw on are chit0-chat type things though. Language is stored in the long term memory area, and that is probably why i make so many grammatical/spelling mistakes in my posts.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2184
(2/3/04 2:15 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

I honestly couldn't care if you had for your whole life imagined the word 'I' was spelled 'Aye', although I'd marvel at it.

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 556
(2/3/04 2:23 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Well I is almost called AYE, in that may surname is hAYEs :)

Hence JimHaz for convenience, and to make folks think I some kind of arab :)

As well as language physical movements are stored in the long term area of the brain, that is why to a point sportspeople or any skill can be improved. So the same problem applying to spelling applies equally to typing mistakes.

A few times on here I mentioned I 'have no memory', obviously I do it I'm just not as good as drawing from it as most other folk.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1386
(2/3/04 2:39 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

So it is a matter of performing some public service. Light construction work, eh? Why would I love it and why can't you do it? What do you do all day? Wouldn't you rather head out to the country? Do you not want adventure? Why are you the way you are, anyway?

Edited by: birdofhermes at: 2/3/04 2:47 pm

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1387
(2/3/04 2:46 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Feminine minded people tend to speak quickly,

---

I think you toss this crap around too freely. There is some tendency in that direction, but the important difference is whether someone is introverted or extraverted, which is an inborn trait and involves the brain. It is not upbringing or personality. Introverted people are in a minority, they don't react quickly. They don't think fast on their feet. They use a longer brain pathway to process these things. That's why they need more time. The extraverted person is actually able to process things as they occur, whereas the introverted person needs to actually disengage from the outer world and go inward. This is me. I often have to think and mull over a thing before I decide what the appropriate reaction should be. Extraverted persons become impatient and irate when the introvert doesn't know how to respond immediately, which only slows them down further. My first husband could talk and argue circles around me. I was no verbal match for him, and he was furious that I failed to react quickly. Same with second husband.

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 560
(2/3/04 4:48 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Me: Feminine minded people tend to speak quickly,

Birdy: I think you toss this crap around too freely.

My first husband could talk and argue circles around me. I was no verbal match for him, and he was furious that I failed to react quickly. Same with second husband.

Logically minded people know when to generalise and when to not. In relation to people philosophy deals with generalisations.

For the most part, it is pointless giving examples of people you know intimately, you must look at the broader picture and the intent of what was said. One can talk about themselves though, of course. You tend to have the same problem as Marsha, you don't generalise enough, you look at those you know intimately, and stop there.

You must look more at overall trends and circumstances.

I believe we all are a mixture of feminine and masculine in varying degrees, even the QRS, we have to be because as we experience life we experience both facets and these memories get stored. Little boys don't tend to ask as many questions as little girls, although this can change depending on who they are with. Boys will tend to ask older males a lot of questions if they are comfortable.

There is some tendency in that direction

No, there is a significant tendency in that direction.

but the important difference is whether someone is introverted or extraverted, which is an inborn trait and involves the brain. It is not upbringing or personality.

Well I said in another post it involves the brain. That's what I've been on about today. I do not accept that being introverted or extraverted is entirely an inborn trait, but a mixture of both genetics and their experiences.

For example I'm extroverted in writing, but introverted in face-to-face conversation, unless I'm pissed. Properly prepared, I'm extroverted in front of an audience as well.

The wisdom of genius-like people when they produce something of significance is also extroverted in a way, they do things for the masses.

If I'm pissed, and this applies almost all pissed people, then one yabbers on unintelligently and makes errors of judgement, the link between the processing area and memory is temporarily made poor.

People drink to sever this linkage. It only takes women a few glasses to break the link, less than the difference in size, and that is why so many women get so emotional and so on when the link is restricted by the effects of alcohol.

Only a person who didn't understand cause and effect would make a statement like

'introverted or extraverted.... is not upbringing or personality. I think you toss this crap around to freely :)

Introverted people... don't think fast on their feet.

That is not necessarily the case. In an emergency I think it would be about the same. Sometimes a person who is 'introverted' will step in to take over the mess the extrovert is creating.

They use a longer brain pathway to process these things. That's why they need more time.

So, what is a longer brain pathway.

The extraverted person is actually able to process things as they occur, whereas the introverted person needs to actually disengage from the outer world and go inward.

Agree, however when I think you are partly confusing introversion with the degree of a persons confidence. Introverted people can still have confidence, but it is a natural confidence, a confidence of reason. Of course, many folks are introverted because their emotions are all fucked up, which would be a result of past experiences.

There are many mixtures of human beings, extroverted males in business for instance tend to be more intelligent, where as feminine males like gay folk, mostly act and love chat like females. They are highly materialistic for the most part. I think gays are smarter on average, than the norm, but it is a kind of womanly wisdom. On the other hand dikes are also pretty smart, and do things for the long term, which is more a masculine trait. They think more like men.

Extraverted persons become impatient and irate when the introvert doesn't know how to respond immediately, which only slows them down further.

True, because they love living in the now.

Edited by: jimhaz at: 2/3/04 4:50 pm

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2186

(2/3/04 6:27 pm)

Reply

Re: ---

---

There is no mental match for me.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1388
(2/4/04 1:01 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Logically minded people know when to generalise

---

The reason I used personal examples was not to show that male and female roles can be reversed, but rather to point out that what you are calling feminine thinking is most often a matter of having an extraverted personality. I believe about 75% or more of people are basically extraverted.

Quote:

---

You must look more at overall trends and circumstances.

---

I do that. You misunderstood.

Quote:

---

Only a person who didn't understand cause and effect would make a statement like 'introverted or extraverted.... is not upbringing or personality.'

---

Well, I think that you are saying there are various causes for people being more or less intraverted than just what they are born with. But then you go on to give examples of the different behaviors you are capable of. However, I still don't think you understand that it is somewhat similar to handedness in that it cannot change. People have forced kids to write and eat with the right hand, but the left-handedness is wired in the brain, and there are ways of inducing a left-handed response that will always show. Intraverted people use the acetylcholine pathway, and extraverted people use the dopamine pathway.

I've changed a whole lot, socially, from early childhood to now. I was painfully shy and withdrawn, and now I am almost the life of the party. Nonetheless, I am still an introvert, I still react like one, and I still need to be alone with myself to avoid psychic exhaustion. You make the mistake of thinking people have no ability whatsoever in the opposite direction. Of course introverted people are capable of talking, socializing and having fun.

Quote:

---

Extraverted persons become impatient and irate when the introvert doesn't know how to respond immediately, which only slows them down further.

True, because they love living in the now.

---

It just hasn't occurred to them that there is another way of reacting and being than their own, so they interpret things from their own perspective.

ynithrix

Registered User

Posts: 225

(2/5/04 12:35 am)

Reply

re:

---

"You mean any woman."

In general, yes. But especially you, because I have seen it first-hand.

"You imagine that you are exempt from having your reason clouded by emotion"

Not at all, but to a lesser degree and less dramatically. i.e., I don't base my entire opinion on my current mood.

"And you imagine that because I am a woman my reason is clouded by emotion, and that no woman could possibly spot that in a man and be relatively free of it herself."

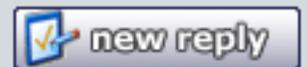

You are relatively free of it compared to other women, I suppose, but not at all compared to most men.

"Logically minded people know when to generalise and when to not. In relation to people philosophy deals with generalisations."

I agree. That is why it is so vulnerable to disproof by counter-example, by those who do not understand its intent and instead prefer to pretend correctness by exploiting a method of disproof which isn't appropriate for the context.

"There is no mental match for me."

	To the contrary, I see them on the pavement all the time, when the owners don't clear up.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2213 (2/5/04 1:25 am) Reply	--- <hr/> Ynithrix, what's your profession? Or are you a coward like Rhett is and cannot tell me for fear you're compromising yourself in some way, as an old lady might conceal her age?
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2214 (2/5/04 1:28 am) Reply	--- <hr/> You wear a fucking tie right?! Poor ynithrix!

Email This To a Friend

Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

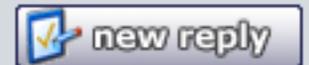

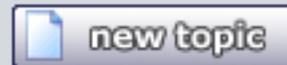

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> ---Huzheng! ---

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
ynithrix Registered User Posts: 226 (2/5/04 1:37 am) Reply	re: <hr/> Was I supposed to answer within that 3 minute interval to avoid assumption? I've worn a suit on occassions--I am a postgraduate.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2215 (2/5/04 1:41 am) Reply	---- <hr/> A whole suit! That's much worse! You may need surgery.
birdofhermes Registered User Posts: 1392 (2/5/04 2:33 am) Reply	Re: re: <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Not at all, but to a lesser degree and less dramatically. i.e., I don't base my entire opinion on my current mood. <hr/> I don't think you base your opinions on a current mood, but that you have a general mood and a general emotional stance that is based upon emotion, be it unconscious or semiconscious. This is why you are bitter. Because of this generalized bitterness, you are not really in reality, but in a continuous state of emotional reaction. Not that this is unusual, but you're dreaming a little worse dream than some do.

The theory here is that men are freer of it than women, but I think that is a misinterpretation of events. All people are living in some sort of emotional state at all times. Women show their emotions more readily, have a low threshold of "holding it in" and are disturbed by a different and probably larger set, of events. Men think women's emotions are irrational because it is always to see the irrationality of someone else. The more the other person is different than you, the easier it is going to be to see that they are being irrationally emotional.

But men have emotions and motives of their own, and they wreak irrational havoc as well. I am not against generalizations at all, but some of them are not useful if they are not often enough true. The one about emotion and rationality is a tricky one. I see so many men that are irrational, and so many women who try to cope by reasoning with themselves.

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 576
(2/5/04 5:45 am)
Reply

Re: ----

---

But men have emotions and motives of their own, and they wreak irrational havoc as well. I am not against generalizations at all, but some of them are not useful if they are not often enough true. The one about emotion and rationality is a tricky one. I see so many men that are irrational, and so many women who try to cope by reasoning with themselves.

I agree, but the problem is how does one do anything about it unless masculine style thought is able to gain the ascendancy when the right time comes. Feminine style reasoning and power is just as insidious as male irrationality, even including the Hitlers, Stalins and Mao's. Feminine reasoning It is just *too* herdly and directionless other than in the immediate short term, whereas genius-level male reasoning has logical long term beneficial outcomes. The QRS are worried that this male reasoning will be breed out of us, as already NOWHERE in the West can it gain momentum and the third world is completely inferior due to the lack of personal freedom you mentioned in another post.

I'm starting to think Hitler was right about building a super race, but completely wrong in his methods due to his irrationality. There is really little difference between him and what the majority of folks in the west feel deep down, though no-one will ever admit to such. Every group feels superior to another group.

The QRS are Hitlers, as I am, as are you, the only way to rid the world of those uncontrolled emotional leaders and conflict is to have leaders who will induce true buddha-like wisdom in others, as opposed to the fucked up emotional greed that all leaders of any group have now. It has and will always be the nature of those who gain power to abuse the herd for their own emotional gains.

As technology is an unstoppable force, the time may become 'right' when we have nanotechnology, real robots and unlimited energy, but we have to make sure people can then live as buddha's, and won't need many material possessions. It is a paradox.

Edited by: jimhaz at: 2/5/04 5:52 am

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1398
(2/5/04 8:56 am)
Reply

Re: ----

---

The whole bit about calling all the twisted emotions "feminine" is a contortion, and I don't really know why you have accepted this. Also the bit about society becoming feminine. Truly, I don't see this or know what you and they are on about.

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 585
(2/5/04 11:19 am)
Reply

Re: ----

---

An example, men work and make money for 'doing' things and hate shopping. Women shop, other than for groceries, to have the next best pretty and pretty meaningless thing.

I don't mind feminity in society. It will always be there and would be sad to see it go.

I just don't want them to think they can be good leaders. Nor do I particularly want them running large government organisations.

And I certainly don't want them to decide for me what is politically correct or not - I blame them for this problem in our society, it leads to longer term problems being buried.

I also don't want to have to crawl to them because they blantly show off there bodies as a form of making men do what they want.

ynithrix

Registered User

Posts: 228

(2/6/04 5:31 pm)

Reply

re:

---

"I don't think you base your opinions on a current mood, but that you have a general mood and a general emotional stance that is based upon emotion, be it unconscious or semiconscious."

Of course, but I would consider this 'experience'. I am the sum of my experiences.

"The theory here is that men are freer of it than women"

I haven't claimed this. I think men have a bond to reality/reason that women don't; men may be emotional, but they are still bound to reality and will eventually be brought back to it, whereas the emotional woman has no such safeguard.

"Men think women's emotions are irrational because it is always [easier?] to see the irrationality of someone else."

Men think women's emotions are irrational, because they seem that way. A drop of water added to aluminium does little, but to caesium causes a volatile reaction. Aluminium would consider caesium irrational, relative to itself it would be right.

"I see so many men that are irrational, and so many women who try to cope by reasoning with themselves."

I don't, but I assume you have a different understanding of rationality, being irrational. Do you see war as irrational? Is it irrational that I don't care about starving people in Africa?

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 926

(2/7/04 10:19 am)

Reply

Re: ----

---

Quote:

---

A drop of water added to aluminium does little, but to caesium causes a volatile reaction. Aluminium would consider caesium irrational, relative to itself it would be right.

---

I think the word you're looking for is inert. Now some might interpret that word as implying stability, indifference, neutrality, and perhaps even make reference to the inert gases also being called the noble gases. Still, others would interpret the word as implying a deficiency in active properties, torpidity, sluggishness, motionlessness, imobility, and perhaps make reference to being becalmed in the doldrums.

Each of these interpretations can in turn be interpreted as being properties of both men and women, in their exploits.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1405
(2/7/04 3:20 pm)
Reply

Re: re:

---

Quote:

---

Of course, but I would consider this 'experience'. I am the sum of my experiences.

---

Hmm...you seem to have missed the point, but yet it is true that it is one's experiences and the inability to tolerate them with poise that leads to the sort of emotional mood-stance that I mentioned. In other words, trauma fixates the person more firmly in an emotional rut, and shuts their inner world down.

Quote:

---

I haven't claimed this. I think men have a bond to reality/ reason that women don't; men may be emotional, but they are still bound to reality and will eventually be brought back to it, whereas the emotional woman has no such safeguard.

---

This can often be true, but men are quite often caught in irrationality, and they don't see their way out either, although, amusingly, they do perhaps construct far more elaborate justification structures (my son built such incredible structures from legos, compared to his sisters' half-hearted efforts!)

Quote:

---

Men think women's emotions are irrational, because they seem that way.

---

A good portion of all people's emotions are arguably irrational. Men can see women's irrationality if they are not subject to it. But women can also see the pitfalls of men, precisely for the same reason. But on the other hand, emotions have a rationality of their own, in fact are always perfectly rational, in that they are always and equal-and-opposite response to the environment. Men don't often see this.

Quote:

---

I don't, but I assume you have a different understanding of rationality, being irrational.

---

No, dear, I do not have a different understanding. The gulf is not quite that wide.

Quote:

---

Do you see war as irrational? Is it irrational that I don't care about starving people in Africa?

---

It isn't a matter of irrationality. It is simply that you aren't very happy. Your emotions are rational. Crazy, but rational. When the cause is cleared up, your outlook will change.

ynithrix
Registered User
Posts: 229
(2/7/04 9:13 pm)
Reply

re:

---

"Each of these interpretations can in turn be interpreted as being properties of both men and women, in their exploits."

Yes. That is why I put it into context with the sentence that preceeded it.

"men are quite often caught in irrationality, and they don't see their way out either, although, amusingly, they do perhaps construct far more elaborate justification structures"

But, again, I would see such 'constructions' as their way of trying to get back to or reconcile their attachment to reality. In Africa I saw children playing a game with a heavy block place in the center and a crude ball on elastic attached to it, the ball is hit from one player to the next. I could use this as an analogy: that a woman would be the block and the man would be the ball.

The woman has an important role but it is unobvious, so it is not credited (because she neither has greatness nor lessness, she is just the nucleus), whereas the ball is hit and goes places. But whatever the ball does it does it for the nucleus.

Let us imagine the ball were hit into some dense foliage--it still wants to return to the center, but it moves slowly and has to scratch it's own new way through the foliage to get out. This would be the man xaught in irrationality forging his own path, his 'construction'.

"But on the other hand, emotions have a rationality of their own, in fact are always perfectly rational, in that they are always and equal-and-opposite response to the environment. Men don't often see this."

This is why I brought up the analogy of aluminium and caesium, because they react differently to the same reactant in case of water. Women would be caesium here, because they react improportionately to the stimulus.

"It isn't a matter of irrationality. It is simply that you aren't very happy."

If you are the sort of person who believes it as 'wrong', then that would stem from irrational emotions. i.e. to think of exploitation of African labour as wrong is simply in consequence of pity, which is a terrible irrational emotion. It has nothing to do with happiness, rather to see through pettiness.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2239
(2/7/04 9:42 pm)
Reply

---

---

The plural of lego is lego Anna you philistine.

ynithrix, preceded has three e's not four, you ballsed up block head.

Edited by: suergaz at: 2/7/04 10:04 pm

ynithrix
Registered User
Posts: 230
(2/7/04 9:56 pm)
Reply

re: ---

---

Thankyou. My post would probably have been incomprehensible if that minor spelling error hadn't been rectified.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2244
(2/7/04 10:36 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

That's better.

I'll rectify your face if you ever again address me without thanking me beforehand.

Edited by: suergaz at: 2/7/04 10:36 pm

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1407
(2/8/04 4:27 am)
Reply

Re: re:

---

Generally, your idea of the block and ball are good, although I think it has more possibilities than you realize. Also, don't forget, no one is a true man or true woman, so there is overlap. Women often do show greatness of courage or ideas - and when they do it is often praised more highly because it was more of a surprise.

Quote:

---

If you are the sort of person who believes it as 'wrong', then that would stem from irrational emotions. i.e. to think of exploitation of African labour as wrong is simply in consequence of pity, which is a terrible irrational emotion. It has nothing to do with happiness, rather to see through pettiness.

---

It is difficult not to think of it as wrong. I do think of exploitation as unfortunate. I promote enlightenment, which is an expansion, and not compatible with exploitation. This is a matter of perspective. How you see things is a matter of perspective.

What is your take on the spiritual life, or enlightenment and that sort of thing?

ynithrix
Registered User
Posts: 231
(2/8/04 9:49 pm)
Reply

re:

---

"I promote enlightenment, which is an expansion, and not compatible with exploitation. This is a matter of perspective."

That is because you believe in equality, and so you see it as wrong for one equal people to be exploited by another equal people. Indeed, you would be right--IF they were equal.

(Digressing, I think you have to believe in equality, being a woman who is obviously distressed by Christian teaching and restriction; if you did not believe in equality, then you would have no hope in believing in yourself or your ability to achieve. You have optimism in others as being equal as a selfish method of also having optimism in yourself.)

Enlightenment, as I understand it, would not be compatible with slavery of the same race. But it has nothing to do with exploitation of another, inferior race, such as the negro race, which are little more than brutemen.

"What is your take on the spiritual life, or enlightenment and that sort of thing?"

I believe for one race to achieve enlightenment, it must first rid itself of inferiors, who are 'societal delusions', such that the resources it has can be spent well on those who deserve them, not wasted on those who would be better dead. What good is there in keeping someone alive, merely because you lack the courage (or love-of-race) to do what is right for the greater good? Slavery is no different: if a slave has no use beyond slavery, it should be given no freedom; because doing so would make it a burden to the race.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2255
(2/8/04 11:59 pm)
Reply

Re: re:

---

ynithrix, you pus filled sore, you do not know black people.

You don't know anything about black magic.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 934
(2/9/04 12:28 am)
Reply

Re: re:

---

Ynithrix, you are no longer Borg, they are infinitely more rational and compassionate.

Go back to your dark hole with your dark times. There your dim knowledge will again seem like a bright light.

silentsal
Registered User
Posts: 38
(2/9/04 12:33 am)
Reply

Re: re:

---

Quote:

---

What good is there in keeping someone alive, merely because you lack the courage (or love-of-race) to do what is right for the greater good?

---

It might be of some benefit for you to acknowledge the love-of-humanity that apparently someone in your life had. Be careful of promoting the "right" for the greater good as someone might take you up on it.

Generalizations may be valuable in terms of philosophy for pointing to patterns that indicate difficulties in achieving set goals but in terms of actual enlightenment individualism will always take precedent (what is always supercedes what may be)

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1410
(2/11/04 6:57 am)
Reply

Re: re:

---

Quote:

---

"I promote enlightenment, which is an expansion, and not compatible with exploitation. This is a matter of perspective."

That is because you believe in equality, and so you see it as wrong for one equal people to be exploited by another equal people. Indeed, you would be right--IF they were equal.
(Digressing, I think you have to believe in equality, being a woman who is obviously distressed by Christian teaching and restriction; if you did not believe in equality, then you would have no hope in believing in yourself or your ability to achieve. You have optimism in others as being equal as a selfish method of also having optimism in yourself.)

---

First, I think you misunderstand what I mean by saying enlightenment is an expansion. But I also should not have used the word enlightenment because one, I do not know what it means and two, that expansion is available with spiritual breakthroughs which may be "less" than enlightenment. I am talking about an expansion of perspective, away from the idea and the feeling that one is totally separate from other beings and the world in general.

It does not matter whether another people are considered your equal or not, it is wrong to exploit them, in fact it is even more wrong to exploit them. Exploiting them belies the superiority.

Your premise about my need to elevate others falsely so as to hope for personal inclusion is false, and it is based upon circular reasoning, one that assumes that women, indeed all women, are automatically inferior. I do not necessarily believe all peoples are equal in every way, and I do not think that men and women are thoroughly equal. But I do think there is a fair amount of overlap.

I'm distressed by some Christian teachings, as they are spiritually and morally detrimental to the human race.

Quote:

---

Enlightenment, as I understand it, would not be compatible with slavery of the same race. But it has nothing to do with exploitation of another, inferior race, such as the negro race, which are little more than brutemen.

---

Well, I wonder how you understand enlightenment. You play a delusional game when you judge others so harshly and yourself gets off so lightly. Could this be why white Christians are destroying the planet? The enlightened would not enslave a race they found inferior. They would leave them alone and let them develop.

Quote:

---

I believe for one race to achieve enlightenment, it must first rid itself of inferiors, who are 'societal delusions', such that the resources it has can be spent well on those who deserve them, not wasted on those who would be better dead. What good is there in keeping someone alive, merely because you lack the courage (or love-of-race) to do what is right for the greater good? Slavery is no different: if a slave has no use beyond slavery, it should be given no freedom; because doing so would make it a burden to the race.

---

This paragraph is a little incoherent. Are you referring to the way we keep people with defects alive? Or do you perhaps advocate lopping off the stupidest 30% or so just to improve the race? A slave has no use beyond slavery? But he had use to himself in his own homeland without being captured in the first place. And do you know so little of slavery as to think inferior peoples were always slaves? What about the little English children found in the Greek slave markets? And the Greek slaves, who went for the highest price.

But the main problem here is the idea of "use." This is a core Christian, or Judeo-Christian (probably also Islamic) teaching that I find incompatible with true spirituality and enlightenment. That the world and all it contains is here for our use, that we are foresighted enough to play god with the world, and that we have a right to do so. I consider this attitude, more than any other, to be the cause of the current dilemma on this planet. As to enlightenment, your ideas are in direct opposition to enlightenment.

Enlightenment entails keeping individuality and unity in perfect balance. According to Thomas, Buddhism teaches that compassion and wisdom go hand in hand. Your ideas of the most intelligent (or most vicious) race simply exploiting everything at will, including their wives, indicates the greatest degree of separation, which is delusional, as we are none of us separate. One must be blind and numb, emotionally, morally, psychically, and ultimately even logically, to assume such a view. The logical outcome of this philosophy must be death because it will inflict trauma after trauma on all life forms, and on the planet itself, which will cause deterioration in their functioning.

	It is because you have been subjected to this trauma that you are such an extreme example of its effects. What do you make of Jesus' teaching to love your enemies?
jimhaz Registered User Posts: 596 (2/11/04 9:01 am) Reply	Re: re: <hr/> Given the same set of causes I don't think there is much difference between any race, intelligence wise. There might be but I have seen no real evidence. In terms of enlightenment, for folks whose recent ancestors were tribal, I guess it depends on to what degree individualism was allowed in the culture. Not much usually. I think they might be behind the eight ball mentally compared to european cultures in terms of the highest levels of philosophy. But so what, I like the diversity and they make up for it by enriching the world in other ways.

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> ---Huzheng! ---

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
birdofhermes Registered User Posts: 1411 (2/11/04 11:34 am) Reply 	Re: re: <hr/> What does behind the eight ball mean? My reading of tribal people is that they have a rather strong tenedncy to view things somewhat like Tao. They are far less dualistic in their thinking than civilized man, and they realize that there is a great mystery behind the appearances of things. They practice mindfulness, although of course they dn't call it that. I'm not sure this so-called lack of individuality is as important as you might think. It is not so much that they don't feel themselves as individual "I"s, as that they also have a strong identity with the group, which means again, that they are somewhat less locked into the delusion of separate egoic existence.
jimhaz Registered User Posts: 598 (2/11/04 1:15 pm) Reply	Re: re: <hr/> What does behind the eight ball mean? Meaning: A dangerous position from which it is unlikely one can escape. Origin: From a version of the game of pool. The balls are numbered and must be potted in order. The game is forfeited if a player's cue ball hits the (black) eight ball first. A 'behind the eight ball' position leaves a player in imminent danger of losing. I guess what I meant was that they are more likely to think of ultimate reality as relating to how humans fit into the physical world, as you tend to,

rather than coming at it from the perspective of ultimate truth or wisdom for all things. It is more feeling/sense based imagination of spirits and so on.

So they may be able to more easily (than "civilised" folk) become enlightened in the form of say modern religious style buddhism, but lack the ability to segregate their feelings/senses to obtain the true underlying wisdom of the universe and thus become buddha types.

I'm not sure, it is all guesswork, but seems right to me, when I go over my memories of intelligent, communicative shaman type folks I've read about in books or seen on TV or whatever. I think that shaman type spirituality appeals to you, but just remember such folk are not always rational either - they can create stupid or dead-end traditions.

ynithrix

Registered User

Posts: 232

(2/12/04 8:50 am)

Reply

Re: re:

---

"It does not matter whether another people are considered your equal or not, it is wrong to exploit them, in fact it is even more wrong to exploit them."

This statement assumes a certain amount of equality. You are still assuming that the inferior has a base of humanity on which to sit and they don't go below it, and thereby they are entitled to some form of rights. That may not be equality, but it is equalizing--you are exaggerating their worth. It is no more wrong to exploit a useless person than it is to use a horse to pull a cart.

"The enlightened would not enslave a race they found inferior. They would leave them alone and let them develop."

I disagree. The wise race would notice a threat and extinguish it.

I think you have a limited perspective. Would you think it a tragedy if a race were killed off? (Any race--you can assume it to be the White race if you want.)

I do not think it a tragedy, because from my perspective, every race and all its progression is transient--everything it has will be lost and forgotten. Thus, it matters not if one exploits another race for his own race's gain, because both races are doomed anyway. It is each race's 'destiny'/'purpose'/'inclination' to evolve as far as it can, and then it ends and another race becomes dominant. There is no winner, ultimately, but there are superiors/inferiors at any given moment within that flux, dependent upon how much it has evolved and how far it's arm reaches (i.e., how much Power it has).

By not exploiting a weaker race, the wise race 'loses out' on some free labour--why would it do that? Own a limited-perspective race would bother to sacrifice its own prosperity in order to stand aside and let another race grow, merely because it pities them. Pity, here, is equally as self-detrimental as it always is.

"Are you referring to the way we keep people with defects alive?"

If a person constantly takes more than they give, they are a burden, they are simply a detriment. I said they would be better dead, because, from the point of view of the race, their death would be more constructive--by ceasing something that is destructive.

"But he had use to himself in his own homeland without being captured in the first place."

But the race that captured him has more Power than 'himself' and so is more important.

"And do you know so little of slavery as to think inferior peoples were always slaves?"

It is obvious that they are not always slaves. But when a superior race finds a better use for them, then it is so. If a slave shows certain promise/intellect above his station, then it would be beneficial to the race to remove him from his slavery and give him a job better suiting him. i.e. if he can prove he has what it takes to be considered a person, he can be treated as a person.

"That the world and all it contains is here for our use"

Are you suggesting they were placed here by some higher being for some specific reason? And do you proclaim to know that reason? In the pursuit of Power, the race must do what it can to evolve. Nature doesn't die, it reforms. Again, I see the limit in your perspective: you think it is a tragedy for us to 'destroy' the planet (i.e. how it currently is), but what man has done is change the planet.

"Your ideas of the most intelligent (or most vicious) race simply exploiting everything at will, including their wives, indicates the greatest degree of separation, which is delusional, as we are none of us separate."

Yes there is separation--separating what is good for the race and what is bad for it, and then destroying the latter. But there is also unity in the form of everyone in the race working together for maximum efficiency. To use a woman for a child-machine is not exploitation in an unfair sense--that is what she is here to do. For her to be doing anything else is simply inefficient and therefore detrimental. One doesn't sit on a table and eat off a chair, because they are not the designed purposes.

You try to paint 'exploitation' as a bad word, but I use it to mean 'get the best from' or 'put to use'.

"It is because you have been subjected to this trauma that you are such an extreme example of its effects."

There is always suffering. But there is more suffering inside a lie, such as equality, because one is told he is what he is not, and so suffers from feelings of failure, too.

"But so what, I like the diversity and they make up for it by enriching the world in other ways."

So you're forced into equality and learning to accept it by telling yourself it's beneficial?

"It is not so much that they don't feel themselves as individual "I"s, as that they also have a strong identity with the group, which means again, that they are somewhat less locked into the delusion of separate egoic existence."

Every race that is NOT deluded has a sense of grouping, because they see the straightforward fact that individuality yields less power than working as a group.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2292

(2/12/04 2:18 pm)

Reply

Re: re:

---

ynithrix, which race(s) are you suggesting be actively wiped out or enslaved. Please specify.

ynithrix
Registered User
Posts: 233
(2/13/04 4:29 am)
Reply

Re: re:

---

Whichever race is superior at the time has the right to enslave whichever races are inferior to it at that time. Throughout history many races have come and go and have rightfully assumed dominance over others. At present, I think it is more complicated since there has been so much fruitless integration and exaggeration: both the White and Asian races show great promise. But South Africans seem to be lagging behind quite significantly. Perhaps it's just that they cannot conform properly to civilised society and thus prefer to retract themselves into degenerate groups. Hence the insecurity-driven rants that emerge from black camps and the attempts to convince themselves that they are special, despite the facts showing them as failures.

silentsal
Registered User
Posts: 53
(2/13/04 4:58 am)
Reply

Re: re:

---

Quote:

---

So you're forced into equality and learning to accept it by telling yourself it's beneficial?

---

The idea that inferior can exist without superior or vice versa is delusional. If you were truly enlightened you would recognize the part you play in that drama and end your suffering by stepping out of it.

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 441
(2/13/04 8:45 am)
Reply

Re: re:

---

ynithrix, what do you mean by 'tradegey'? Tradegey?

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 600
(2/13/04 9:45 am)
Reply

Re: re:

---

I don't have a problem with different groups of people being more or less superior, or people using the poorness of another group to their own advantage - but only to a degree, certainly not to the point of forced slavery or extermination.

I would prefer each group to be sufficiently mature to look after themselves as they see fit, but that is too idealistic, as the poor always want what the rich have.

I don't give to charity, because I don't see the point in feeding people so that they will just reproduce more problems. If the money was purely for instructure, like damns or sterilization, fair enough.

The thing I don't like is hospitals being filled with old people clinging on to life only through costly technology, provided free through medicare.

I'd set an age limit of 75 for stays of greater than two weeks, and thereafter you must pay for everything yourself in private hospitals or take your chances. I'd allow euthanasia clinics and free painkillers. Nothing wrong with euthanasia.

ynithrix
Registered User
Posts: 234
(2/14/04 2:20 am)
Reply

Re: re:

---

"ynithrix, what do you mean by 'tradegey'? Tradegey?"

Tragedy. By the contexts, tradegey was a stupid suggestion.

"but that is too idealistic, as the poor always want what the rich have."

I would put this into a cluase of if they were first assumed to be equal. If the poor are allowed to pretend equality with the richer, then they will envy the richer their possessions as they see themselves without. But I don't see money/trade as a prerequisite of superiority.

"The thing I don't like is hospitals being filled with old people clinging on to life only through costly technology, provided free through medicare."

I agree. But I would disagree if a particular old person were of significant use to the world--if the price of the care were less than the value of the person.

"I'd set an age limit of 75 for stays of greater than two weeks, and thereafter you must pay for everything yourself in private hospitals or take your chances. I'd allow euthanasia clinics and free painkillers. Nothing wrong with euthanasia."

I don't see why there should be free medical care. Each case should be reviewed individually--if the ill person is worthy of being saved, then sobeit, if not, it is not the greater good's concern. Free medical care works iff all people are needed/necessary, which is not the case in a society that accepts and caters for the weak and lazy as though they had equal claim to aid.

Hywel
Registered User
Posts: 52
(2/14/04 8:23 am)
Reply

Re:-

---

Accidentally posted twice, my post didnt show up the first time. Intended post below.

Edited by: Hywel at: 2/14/04 8:47 am

Hywel
Registered User
Posts: 53
(2/14/04 8:24 am)
Reply

Re:-

---

Quote:

---

birdofhermes - I promote enlightenment, which is an expansion, and not compatible with exploitation. This is a matter of perspective.

ynithrix - That is because you believe in equality, and so you see it as wrong for one equal people to be exploited by another equal people. Indeed, you would be right--IF they were equal. (Digressing, I think you have to believe in equality, being a woman who is obviously distressed by Christian teaching and restriction; if you did not believe in equality, then you would have no hope in believing in yourself or your ability to achieve. You have optimism in others as being equal as a selfish method of also having optimism in yourself.)

---

Ynithrix, you seem to think that equality means "everyone is the same", which is obviously rubbish. All it really means is that nothing is inherently better than anything else. Which, as "better" can only apply relative to a specific purpose or set of values, is clearly true. Which is better, a chair or a table?

Quote:

---

Enlightenment, as I understand it, would not be compatible with slavery of the same race. But it has nothing to do with exploitation of another, inferior race, such as the negro race, which are little more than brutemen.

---

Enlightenment, as I understand it, has nothing to do with the slavery or non-slavery of any particular races. Also, you seem to think that a "race" is some kind of actual entity (rather than a designation for useful purposes). Inferior, or superior for that matter, can only be applied in terms of specific purpose etc.

Should half-cast people be enslaved 3 days a week?

Quote:

---

ynithrix - I believe for one race to achieve enlightenment, it must first rid itself of inferiors, who are 'societal delusions', such that the resources it has can be spent well on those who deserve them, not wasted on those who would be better dead. What good is there in keeping someone alive, merely because you lack the courage (or love-of-race) to do what is right for the greater good? Slavery is no different: if a slave has no use beyond slavery, it should be given no freedom; because doing so would make it aburden to the race.

---

A race is not a single entity, merely a general characteristical trend, so "it" cannot become enlightened.

Which inferiors should we be rid of? Slow runners? People who chew with their mouth open? Who decides what is superior and inferior?

Greater good? good for what?

Quote:

---

birdofhermes - The enlightened would not enslave a race they found inferior. They would leave them alone and let them develop.

ynithrix - I disagree. The wise race would notice a threat and extinguish it.

I think you have a limited perspective. Would you think it a tragedy if a race were killed off? (Any race--you can assume it to be the White race if you want.)

I do not think it a tragedy, because from my perspective, every race and all its progression is transient--everything it has will be lost and forgotten. Thus, it matters not if one exploits another race for his own race's gain, because both races are doomed anyway. It is each race's 'destiny'/'purpose'/'inclination' to evolve as far as it can, and then it ends and another race becomes dominant. There is no winner, ultimately, but there are superiors/inferiors at any given moment within that flux, dependent upon how much it has evolved and how far its arm reaches (i.e., how much Power it has).

By not exploiting a weaker race, the wise race 'loses out' on some free labour--why would it do that? Own a limited-perspective race would bother to sacrifice its own prosperity in order to stand aside and let another race grow, merely because it pities them. Pity, here, is equally as self-detrimental as it always is.

---

Ah, you give it all away with your sense of perspective, finally admitting that there are no winners, and no losers. But then you say "it matters not if one exploits another race for his own race's gain, because both races are doomed anyway", completely ignoring the fact that if one race didn't exploit the other, they would still be equally doomed, so it doesn't actually matter at all from that perspective.

Then you say that inferior and superior still exist, in terms of evolution and "power". By evolution, do you mean "has evolved the most", in which case birds would be superior to crocodiles, as crocs have stayed the same for millions of years and birds have evolved? Or do you mean something else?

And what do you mean by this rather vague term "power"?

Regardless of what you mean by them, you would still need some way to measure them in order to make decisions based on them.

Quote:

---

birdofhermes - Are you referring to the way we keep people with defects alive?

ynithrix - If a person constantly takes more than they give, they are a burden, they are simply a detriment. I said they would be better dead, because, from the point of view of the race, their death would be more constructive--by ceasing something that is destructive.

---

takes more of what?

gives more of what?

Have you considered the possibility that your race would be better off without you? If so, as you havent killed yourself I'll assume that you think you give more than you take. What do you give, and why do you think this justifies what you take?

Who should judge what is detrimental and beneficial? Clearly it shouldnt be humans, as they would simply judge what is beneficial and detrimental for humanity, hardly objective.

Quote:

---

birdofhermes - But he had use to himself in his own homeland without being captured in the first place.

But the race that captured him has more Power than 'himself' and so is more important.

---

important to who?

Quote:

---

birdofhermes - Your ideas of the most intelligent (or most vicious) race simply exploiting everything at will, including their wives, indicates the greatest degree of separation, which is delusional, as we are none of us separate.

ynithrix - Yes there is separation--separating what is good for the race and what is bad for it, and then destroying the latter. But there is also unity in the form of everyone in the race working together for maximum efficiency. To use a woman for a child-machine is not exploitation in an unfair sense--that is what she is here to do. For her to be doing anything else is simply inefficient and therefore detrimental. One doesn't sit on a table and eat off a chair, because they are not the designed purposes.

You try to paint 'exploitation' as a bad word, but I use it to mean 'get the best from' or 'put to use'.

---

And who decides what is good and what is bad? The race cannot, especially since it doesn't actually exist.

Everyone in the non-existent race working for maximum efficiency?! You can only be efficient from a particular perspective, at a particular purpose. As there is no ultimate purpose, no goal or winners, how can a "race" (or indeed humanity) be efficient or inefficient?

Women are child-machines, in the same way as men are hunter/food collectors. So by your own rationale, for you to be doing anything else would be inefficient and therefore detrimental. You weren't "designed" for philosophy, or for, say, using a computer, so why are you doing it?

Quote:

---

ynithrix - Whichever race is superior at the time has the right to enslave whichever races are inferior to it at that time.

Throughout history many races have come and go and have rightfully assumed dominance over others. At present, I think it is more complicated since there has been so much fruitless integration and exaggeration: both the White and Asian races show great promise. But South Africans seem to be lagging behind quite significantly.

Perhaps it's just that they cannot conform properly to civilised society and thus prefer to retract themselves into degenerate groups. Hence the insecurity-driven rants that emerge from black camps and the attempts to convince themselves that they are special, despite the facts showing them as failures.

---

What if both races think they are superior? (enter human history, stage left)

If they both think they are superior, who is right?

I havent actually heard any rants from black people, but which facts show them as failures (and what are they failures at)?

As far as i can tell, you know that there are no real winners, but you think there are losers...

Quote:

---

jimhaz - The thing I don't like is hospitals being filled with old people clinging on to life only through costly technology, provided free through medicare.

ynithrix - I agree. But I would disagree if a particular old person were of significant use to the world--if the price of the care were less than the value of the person.

---

If they were useful for what? What is useful for "the world"?

Value to who? The person themselves? Their family? Their country? Their race? Humanity? Earth? The solar system? etc. etc.

Finally, how is it you go about tranferring the "use" and "value" of a person into an estimation of monetary worth?

Edited for spelling etc.

Edited by: Hywel at: 2/14/04 8:28 am

ynithrix

Registered User

Posts: 235

(2/14/04 9:43 am)

Reply

Re: Re:-

---

"Ynithrix, you seem to think that equality means "everyone is the same", which is obviously rubbish. ... Which is better, a chair or a table?"

I know that equality, meaning everyone is the same, is rubbish, that is why I am against it. When given the purpose for which it was made, each is equally worthwhile, but not equal. Don't try to redefine the term halfway through the discussion, because it unnecessarily confuses things.

"Also, you seem to think that a "race" is some kind of actual entity (rather than a designation for useful purposes)."

All such words are designations. One cup isn't the same as another, but they share a purpose so are grouped by name; each race (or 'group of people') has common purpose in evolution, so similarly.

"Inferior, or superior for that matter, can only be applied in terms of specific purpose etc."

Yes, and since I believe that the 'purpose' of a race is to evolve as far as it can, inferior/superior to that purpose come into effect, where the superior is the better evolver.

"Should half-cast people be enslaved 3 days a week?"

If you mated a horse with a guinea pig, would you expect it to pull a cart? Half-casts should not exist, they are a product of equality.

"A race is not a single entity, merely a general characteristical trend, so "it" cannot become enlightened."

But 'it' can have enlightened members who can influence 'it' so that 'it' acts as 'it' would act if were 'it' enlightened. Not every person can be brilliant, but the brilliant ones affect the others and their teachings change the world.

"Which inferiors should we be rid of? Slow runners? People who chew with their mouth open? Who decides what is superior and inferior?"

Since the purpose of the race would be to evolve, an inferior within the race would be one who is unable to contribute to that evolution. If the price of keeping someone alive outweighs the benefits that they bring, then they are a burden and are inferior.

"Greater good? good for what?"

It's getting rather tedious to write the same thing. I'll say it once more here: since the goal of the race is to evolve, that which is 'good' for the race would be anything that helps it in its goal of evolving. That which is done for the "greater good" is that which is beneficial to the race as a whole, not just for a few members of it.

"completely ignoring the fact that if one race didnt exploit the other, they would still be equally doomed, so it doesnt actually matter at all from that perspective."

You seem to be picking lines and simply trying to disprove them based solely on your own misinterpretations; it's quite annoying/shallow. Yes, both races are doomed from the start. You are doomed from the start, so am I. But that doesn't mean we simply wait to die. Since life is Will To Power, we all move towards getting power, i.e. evolving. Therefore the exploitation comes from the Will To Power--the desire to evolve.

"Then you say that inferior and superior still exist, in terms of evolution and "power". By evolution, do you mean "has evolved the most", in which case birds would be superior to crocodiles, as crocs have stayed the same for millions of years and birds have evolved? Or do you mean something else?"

That is a good question. By 'evolve' in a context like "a race should evolve" I mean change for the better, not just change. As far as I'm concerned, if a race just changes state a few times, it hasn't really 'evolved' in that sense. The crocodile is a potent predator and hasn't had too much need for change as opposed to some species of birds. There are also many strictly biological factors that play a part, such as adaptation. But I think it all comes back to Power--or, rather, to survival in order to get power.

"And what do you mean by this rather vague term "power"?"

Dominance over the surroundings; longer chance of life (power gives more resistance against things that would kill). It is therefore cyclic: as one lives, he has will to power, and as one gets power, he lives longer. A person has the power to destroy an ant, he has control over it's life. But with power there must also be rank and order--without these, power 'slips away'.

"Regardless of what you mean by them, you would still need some way to measure them in order to make decisions based on them."

But all such measurements are relative. If I took a man of certain power and displayed him in a Paris laboratory as the standard unit of power, would it make my argument more convincing? I think not.

"takes more of what?
gives more of what?"

Resources, food, that which the race has earned/gathered. And since money is used as a go-between for such goods, then money could also be a sort of resource.

"Have you considered the possibility that your race would be better off without you? If so, as you haven't killed yourself I'll assume that you think you give more than you take? What do you give, and why do you think this justifies what you take?"

An interesting point. I work for my living, which so justifies my life. But this is not a convincing argument at all today, because money is given so foolishly: an actor can earn much more than a craftsman or a soldier.

"Who should judge what is detrimental and beneficial? Clearly it shouldn't be humans, as they would simply judge what is beneficial and detrimental for humanity, hardly objective."

But this would yield the same answer as 'who should determine the cost of food?'. But I believe the race that knows its life/existence depends on it doing the right thing for its evolution would be more inclined to do what is right. And what determines what is right would be the ascent to power. I admire a lot of the traits of the Native American people, who cherished 'their' land and animals, and left behind the members of their party who were unfit or weak. They left them behind because it was an obvious judgement: if they stayed, they would be slowed in their following of the buffalo, so they had to do what was right for the greater good of the tribe.

"important to who?"

If he was of use to an inferior tribe or of use to a superior tribe, then the class in which his use is more important is the latter, because the superior tribe has greater reason to want him. The inferior tribe is relatively less important, and can be gutted by the superior race if it so wishes, simply because the superior race has the power to do so. Just as war is justified by the fact that one race is stronger than another--there doesn't need to be any other reason.

"As there is no ultimate purpose, no goal or winners, how can a "race" (or indeed humanity) be efficient or inefficient?"

This paragraph is nonsensical, as answered above. The 'purpose' would be to evolve as far as possible, that is also the goal, and the transient winners would be those who currently exist in the further position.

"You weren't "designed" for philosophy, or for, say, using a computer, so why are you doing it?"

I don't see man as designed for just hunting/gathering. Rather, I see him as the designed force for evolution: the driver. Whereas woman is the procreator who keeps up the numbers, so to speak. And, since I believe Truth to be the next step (i.e. getting truth in turn gets more power), so the evolver, man, would also move up a role.

"What if both races think they are superior? (enter human history, stage left)"

It is not about who thinks they are better than whoever else--it is about who IS better. A war will solve it.

"I haven't actually heard any rants from black people, but which facts show them as failures (and what are they failures at)?"

Let us consider pre-equality. The various White races conquered Africa, thus they were superior and rightfully took slaves as payment/goods. This was a simple instance, because things before equality were simple in terms of race. But since equality tries to smudge the boundaries of race, even driving some people to deny the existence of race, all people are stuffed into the same category, and war is suddenly seen as terrible, because human life is so over-valued.

Therefore, today, I think all humanity is equally inferior in the sense that it has succumbed to a lie and has fallen apart because of that lie. The sooner humanity breaks and dies, the sooner nature can replenish itself and begin with some decent races.

But you obviously want an answer that justifies what I said in the section you quoted, so here: despite everyone pretending to be equal (i.e. having the same potential or worth), there is the obvious boundary of color. Skin color and origin still show race. Yes, some Africans are being integrated in higher society, but for many it is too much, and they retract and form gangs, so that within that gang their weaknesses (compared to the superior members of that society) are not seen, because they are compared only with each other.

"As far as i can tell, you know that there are no real winners, but you think there are losers..."

Ok, last time I'm writing this to you: the TRANSIENT winner is the race that, at that time, has evolved furthest and is dominant, by means of power, above the other races, who are thus losers. There is an unimportant hierarchy below this of the "second most powerful", etc., but they are still losers.

"Finally, how is it you go about tranferring the "use" and "value" of a person into an estimation of monetary worth?"

I have said this above. But money, as I see it, is merely a go-between of trade--it is only useful for buying resources, so it's value is in resources. So, at any given moment, there is little different between referring to "$10" or referring to "something that costs $10", since the former is indirectly the latter. And since use is how able a person is to get power, and therefore resources... it is fair to say that a person who is useful is valued because they have the ability to get resources, but if the number of resources (or money) required to save them exceeds the amount of resources they are capable of getting, then it is a net loss.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2297
(2/14/04 3:20 pm)
Reply

----

---

An inclination to measure or celebratethe accomplishments of a race by its domination over a valuing of individual acts is born in many. This lying evaluation helps to drive a race, it can be thought of as a kind of slumber. But the thinkers range across the races. They are beyond their race in every instant, beyond the race. They cannot be the puppets of individualism no matter what is made up. Nobles of many kinds from many races who are not afraid to fight eachother, for they know eachother as friends in many different things, but the extended families do not relate to eachother as soundly. (:D)--To the heads of the races they now resemble growths, not limbs!---Listen warriors! Families bleed out! Either stop it or let it---find yourself either way, but indecision does not become you!

suergaz Registered User Posts: 2473 (3/2/04 12:10 am) Reply 	Re: Re:- <hr/> Hi Hu Zheng! (:D) Edited by: suergaz at: 3/2/04 12:13 am
huzheng Registered User Posts: 50 (3/2/04 1:00 pm) Reply	Re: Re:- <hr/> Hi, hehe, (:D) hehe, suergaz, too interesting :)
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2482 (3/2/04 1:20 pm) Reply	---- <hr/> I am going to be going soon, in about a week. To america. Someday I hope I'll visit china, I want to visit everywhere! Except maybe a small volcanic island as it's about to blow or something like it! One could always swim I suppose, anyway, it's an idea. (:D)
DavidQuinn000 Forum Host Posts: 2248 (3/2/04 1:24 pm) Reply 	Re: ---- <hr/> Why are you going to America?
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2483 (3/2/04 1:27 pm) Reply	-- <hr/> To visit. For pleasure, fun, you know, holiday. It happens if you like that sort of thing.

birdofhermes Registered User Posts: 1436 (3/2/04 1:36 pm) Reply 	Re: ---- <hr/> Suergaz, where are you going to be and how do you pay for it anyway?
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2486 (3/2/04 1:52 pm) Reply	--- <hr/> I'll be staying with a friend there, I'll be in ohio. I'm being advanced the money for the ticket.

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> ---Huzheng! ---

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2487 (3/2/04 2:00 pm) Reply	--- <hr/> I shall be able to possibly borrow some money, or work unofficially, at any rate, I'm not going to be a burden upon anyone, and I'll end up paying for any expenses.
Thomas Knierim Registered User Posts: 832 (3/2/04 2:09 pm) Reply 	Re: Re:- <hr/> I wish to express my consternation with the point of view that ynithrix represents. Ynithrix seems to suggest that races are real, that whites are superior to blacks, that slavery is acceptable, that gender exploitation is natural, and that the stronger have a moral right to exploit the weaker. It is unfortunate that we haven't invented the time machine, otherwise we could beam ynithrix back into an epoch where this body of thought was more popular. For a better learning experience, ynithrix would take form in an existence at the losing end of the game, say an 18th century cotton field worker in the southern states, or a Jewish shopkeeper in Germany around 1932. But, since we don't have time machines and since we practice freedom of speech, we need to consider other methods. Ynithrix, if I may say so your ideas are unwelcome. I doubt that anyone here has much patience for them. I suggest that the board administrators have a look into this. Promoting racism, hate, and violence cannot be in interest of this forum.

	Thomas
Paul Registered User Posts: 480 (3/2/04 2:11 pm) Reply	Re: --- <hr/> Don't fall for charmes that will never show, suergaz. Let Hu Zheng march his way into his own abyss. (But all is up to you. And please, don't send me any money, that I didn't deserve.)
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2488 (3/2/04 2:26 pm) Reply	--- <hr/> What is it you don't like about Hu Zheng Paul?
Paul Registered User Posts: 481 (3/2/04 2:42 pm) Reply	Hu Zheng <hr/> He's not worthy of your genius. (Neither am I, of course. Write to Anna?) I rest my case. Love you!
MGregory Posts: 465 (3/2/04 3:22 pm) Reply 	Re: --- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Zag: I'll be staying with a friend there, I'll be in ohio. I'm being advanced the money for the ticket. <hr/> Ah, I live very close to Ohio. I should come find you and smack you with my rightness and wrongness!

Edited by: MGregory at: 3/2/04 3:23 pm

ynithrix

Registered User

Posts: 241

(3/2/04 3:44 pm)

Reply

re:

---

"Ynithrix seems to suggest that races are real, that whites are superior to blacks, that slavery is acceptable, that gender exploitation is natural, and that the stronger have a moral right to exploit the weaker."

I'd define race as a group of people. Color is a separating tool, so to speak. It identifies difference, but is not itself sufficient to determine much. So to clarify, I believe the White race (meaning the race of mostly White people, but with some Black/Asian/etc people as parts, where useful and appropriate) to be superior, because it is further up the evolutionary ladder. However, I do think American morality is in the gutter and its state is by no means perfect, but that is overcome-able. I do think slavery is acceptable. And I do think gender exploitation, as I defined it--that is, each type doing its role and not trying to emulate the other type, which will lead to unnecessary inferiority and degeneration--is also real and must be maintained.

I have quoted before the second section of Nietzsche's TA, which I live by. I believe it the single most breaking statement of that piece.

"But, since we don't have time machines and since we practice freedom of speech, we need to consider other methods."

I would prefer you to argue your point against mine, perhaps for the benefit of us both. The reason I believe what I believe is that all other opinions seem to fall short, grow thin, break easily or are filled with hypocrisy, whereas the path I follow seems to beat of all-comers, hence my belief in it.

"Promoting racism, hate, and violence cannot be in interest of this forum."

If I promote any of the three, it is within a pre-stated context which I have always endeavoured to justify. I would prefer you to argue me out of the arena, than for you to hide behind a moderator.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 834
(3/2/04 6:30 pm)
Reply

Re: re:

---

ynithrix: I believe the White race because it is further up the evolutionary ladder.

In this case, you are profoundly misinformed about evolution. There are no evolutionary levels within modern humans. The genetic differences between humans of different origins are so trivial that there is no basis for classifications based on genotype. Different appearances are merely the result of polymorphism, while 'race' is a fairly arbitrary cultural phenomenon.

ynithrix: I would prefer you to argue me out of the arena, than for you to hide behind a moderator.

I could argue against your ideas, which are based on tragic misunderstanding of Nietzsche, but what would that achieve? I doubt you would be able to see the flaws, even if I laid them out in front of you in a piecemeal fashion. Besides, I am not sure if I want to embark onto a step-by-step analysis of something so obviously flawed as racism and social Darwinism. Seems like a waste of time.

Thomas

winston rumfoord
Posts: 11
(3/2/04 7:47 pm)
Reply

Here here, Thomas

---

I hate to waste the electronic ink on this, but anywho...

Reading ynithrix's rant, I figured it was a put on. Then I remembered where I was and realized he's probably serious.

As far as one race being superior to another consider that the most technologically advanced NATION is apt to impede evolution on a biological scale. With each medical breakthrough we side step the survival of the fittest engine that drives evolution.

You comment on this saying the disabled are a drain and we would be better off without them.

What are you? Klingon?

The only genetic evolution I see occurring to the HUMAN race in the near future is a mild resistance to carcinogens. And this will be slow considering fatalities from cancer usually occur after child rearing age has been reached.

I put it to you that our next step in evolution is a spiritual one. Won't it be nice when the earth is inhabited solely by people of tolerance, compassion and understanding.

(And in case you didn't notice, that is where we are headed. Like it or not, you are losing this Survivor Challenge.)

And no longer by people that defend imaginary boundaries like a pack of wolves.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1442

(3/3/04 1:23 pm)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

I shall be able to possibly borrow some money, or work unofficially, at any rate, I'm not going to be a burden upon anyone, and I'll end up paying for any expenses.

---

I wasn't accusing your of being burdensome! It was just idle curiosity, since you have been worrying about your dole.

This is the second time in about a year that you are going to America. Is it the same friends? Last time you were here about 4 months, is that so? How long will you be around?

I am not particularly close to Ohio, but I do venture up to West Virginia every month starting in April.

I wonder if you could stop by? We are having a big pagan party on the 1st of May. Woods at night. Drums. Bonfire.

Paul

Registered User

Posts: 485

(3/3/04 1:41 pm)

Reply

GF Meeting?

---

I suggest The Netherlands, but Anna will refuse that.

Oh!

:-)

ynithrix

Registered User

Posts: 245

(3/3/04 1:52 pm)

Reply

re:

---

"There are no evolutionary levels within modern humans."

I consider that there are, based on power of race.

"Different appearances are merely the result of polymorphism, while 'race' is a fairly arbitrary cultural phenomenon."

I understand such trends as colour and facial patterns. Similarly, the notable shortness of people from countries of malnutrition. I don't deny they exist. I think you are purposely misinterpreting what I write in order to imply that I have misinterpreted something initially.

"I put it to you that our next step in evolution is a spiritual one."

I would hope so.

"Won't it be nice when the earth is inhabited solely by people of tolerance, compassion and understanding."

Yes, but in a different context to that implied. Understanding of truth, yes. Understanding meant in the context of pity, no.

"(And in case you didn't notice, that is where we are headed. Like it or not, you are losing this Survivor Challenge.)"

In the context I understand your passage to mean, it sounds very Christian. If you would like to see us 'evolve' into a Christian paradigm, that is your choice.

"And no longer by people that defend imaginary boundaries like a pack of wolves."

But all boundaries are imaginary. In a state of war, much is achieved. In a state of peace, where people's only concern is being temporarily happy because their natural drives are not catered for, less is achieved. I believe that humanity heads towards such a state of global unity, but I do not necessarily agree with it. It will be the folly of the EU spread across the whole world, where those who sing in tune are permitted to speak, and those who don't are silenced--by free speech. It's like the old saying of putting one's 'eggs in the same basket'--if you win, you win a lot, but otherwise you lose everything.

suergaz Registered User Posts: 2504 (3/3/04 10:06 pm) Reply	----- <hr/> Anna, that's a kind offer, I can't commit to anything though since I do not know how I'll be for money or travel. I'll stop in here around that time and tell you. I won't be able to visit here nearly as often. I'll be in America for 3 months (visitors limit)
birdofhermes Registered User Posts: 1441 (3/4/04 3:41 am) Reply 	Re: ----- <hr/> You should email me, Zag.
birdofhermes Registered User Posts: 1440 (3/4/04 12:57 pm) Reply 	Re: ----- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Anna, that's a kind offer, I can't commit to anything though since I do not know how I'll be for money or travel. I'll stop in here around that time and tell you. <hr/> Don't be silly. We can work something out. It isn't far. Food and lodging are no problem. Why don't you email me? If you communicate through here, I'll probably miss it. Up there, I don't have a phone or computer.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2510 (3/4/04 1:10 pm) Reply	--- <hr/> I'm afraid the wood dwelling pagans would make me their god and I'd be stuck there building bonfires through the spring. And besides you only want to meet me to hit me like everyone here in this genius forum does!

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 842
(3/4/04 2:26 pm)
Reply

Re: re:

---

Thomas: There are no evolutionary levels within modern humans.

Ynithrix: I consider that there are, based on power of race.

What is 'power of race'? What has race got to do with evolution? You got it all wrong; these conceptions have no scientific base.

Ynithrix: I understand such trends as colour and facial patterns.

Such characteristics are the result of population clustering where the gene pool is geographically limited and they can arise within only twenty or thirty generations. Pigmentation, for example, is useful in sunny climates where it offers protection from solar radiation, but it is less useful in northern climates where it impedes photochemical vitamin D synthesis in the skin. People with dark skin are therefore prone to D3 deficiency in the north. Since modern humans originated in Africa, we were all black when we came out of Africa which is between 100,000 and 200,000 years ago. Only those who settled in the north became white later, because a lighter skin gave the northern settlers a vitamin D advantage. Other features -such as the epicanthic fold of some Asians- might have shaped on account of cultural selection.

Melanism is -in genetic terms- not strong enough to define a subspecies, not even a race. Humans are genetically too similar to be classified in such way. BTW, there are many animals that exhibit melanism and the melanic types are normally not considered different races or species.

Ynithrix: Similarly, the notable shortness of people from countries of malnutrition. I don't deny they exist. I think you are purposely misinterpreting what I write in order to imply that I have misinterpreted something initially.

Well, you claimed that these differences indicate 'evolutionary levels' to which I can only reply that this is complete nonsense. Malnutrition doesn't have anything to do with evolution. It is nurture, not nature. Pigmentation, on the other hand, seems to have both components, since it is controlled by genes as well as adaptive responses. In the absence of radiation, dark-skinned people become whiter, which means that epidermic melanocyte cells respond to environmental changes.

Ynithrix: In a state of war, much is achieved. In a state of peace [...] less is achieved.

The stupidity of this statement is hard to fathom. History has demonstrated exactly the opposite. Much is achieved in the state of peace and much has been lost through wars. Arts, science, and trade prosper in times of piece and only in times of peace. From ancient Greece down to modern times there are countless examples that prove this.

Thomas

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1441

(3/4/04 2:34 pm)

Reply

Re: ---

---

They might make you a god but not a God. I probably wouldn't hit you much, if at all, because the conversational rules would be completely different. Here, efficiency is the order of the day. You would be lucky to be kept building bonfires. The worse possibility is you might be used for a sacrifice. That could even be the reason for my invitation.

Edited by: birdofhermes at: 3/4/04 2:37 pm

ynithrix

Registered User

Posts: 246

(3/4/04 3:41 pm)

Reply

re:

---

"What is 'power of race'? What has race got to do with evolution? You got it all wrong; these conceptions have no scientific base."

First I will state what I mean by evolution: change for the better. Perhaps you would want me to write progression or something, but I think that unnecessary. Power of race is the power held by the race, its dominion, its truth, and so its ability to command authority above other races. For clarity, I note that I consider a race/tribe different to a herd. The race contains different elements which don't necessarily agree, but they nonetheless work towards the 'progress' of the race, not in greed. Where a single person can get a certain amount of power and truth, when combined with other people, the process becomes more efficient, each building upon what was made by those before, etc. So the race has to do with evolution. I'm not sure I can put it any more basically.

"Such...selection...species" --Indeed, that is why I do not base race on such characteristics. I base it on a group of people. As said in previous post.

"Well, you claimed that these differences indicate 'evolutionary levels' to which I can only reply that this is complete nonsense."

My ideal of evolutionary levels is a (metaphysical) idea of ranking. Whichever race has the most power (and so truth) is higher evolved/progressed thereby, so it can be thought of linearly as further up a tree or along a line.

"Malnutrition doesn't have anything to do with evolution." --I did not say or imply it does. Although, I would say that a less powerful race is more prone to suffer it.

"History has demonstrated exactly the opposite."

I disagree. By "a state of war" I do not mean an actual battle scene, but a state/society engaged in antagonism with other societies. Many concepts of engineering came from battle engines and siege machines, the feeling of urgency that such a state conjures is vital to efficient progression. Consider a society of peace: what drives someone to achieve something? In modernity, rank with pity, people who choose not to do anything are supplemented to do so and petty occupations such as business and pop-singing are venerated because they pay well. It is both selfish and herd-like.

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1113

(3/4/04 6:14 pm)

Reply

Race

---

I am just getting back into the thick of things here and I may be a little rusty.

It strikes me that race is an issue among enlightened people. Even here in southwestern Virginia, I have recently been struck by the racelessness of things.

What race? I see no one who is purely white or black or brown.

Race has nothing to do with anything. It is ridiculous to note the color of another's skin. It is meaningless. Race blends as cultures blend. It's not a big deal. Even Malcolm X figured that one out.

I am astonished that a forum dedicated to enlightened masculinity could devote time to a discussion of race when even such a backwoods nation as the United States is blurring the line of gender.

How can you define man and woman when men and women of all genders are marrying every day?

Forget about it.

I reckon Jesus was a black man with blonde hair and green eyes whose physical gender was insignificant -- except in cultural terms. He was masculine in spirit, not just in gonad.

I am not a historian but I do not think that a woman was ever crucified in Jesus's day. In general, I reckon, women were stoned.

Much softer sentence for the softer sex. You stone a whore and you crucify a thief and a savior-revolutionary.

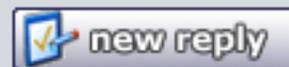

You build a blood-thirsty religion around the masculine and lay the whore to waste.

Faizi

Edited by: MKFaizi at: 3/4/04 6:17 pm

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

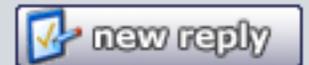

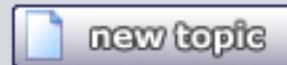

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> ---Huzheng! ---

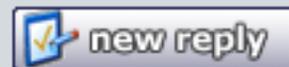

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2515 (3/4/04 9:00 pm) Reply	--- <hr/> ynithrix has equated truth with power. He is in error. States of antagonism between societies certainly help us progress, as societies, and as a whole, but the protraction of such antagonism for the sake of progress is the chief cause of pity. ynithrix is a christian. His will to power is not personal.
ynithrix Registered User Posts: 247 (3/5/04 11:58 am) Reply	re: <hr/> "ynithrix has equated truth with power." I do not necessarily equate the two, rather I see truth as a means to power. A more efficient means, a higher means. I think a will to truth comes in consequence of a will to power. "but the protraction of such antagonism for the sake of progress is the chief cause of pity." That is an interesting point. But I do not think it needs to be protracted manually, it will be so naturally. Rather, unity based on forced acceptance, the Christian way, is of pity. Of course, if all races want for conquest, then the world tends to a point where one is controller of all, but this is not globalisation.

suergaz Registered User Posts: 2521 (3/5/04 12:26 pm) Reply	---- <hr/> I meant what you call 'manual protraction of antagonism'. You do sound as though this is what you mean, when you suggest the 'manual wiping out of a race' Here's what happens, naturally: The world, and its races (I am not going to deny 'the race' its play) become more beautiful. Through welcome, play, or abandon, and nothing else.
Paul Registered User Posts: 490 (3/5/04 1:44 pm) Reply	MKFaizi <hr/> Marsha: Quote: <hr/> I reckon Jesus was a black man with blonde hair and green eyes whose physical gender was insignificant -- except in cultural terms. He was masculine in spirit, not just in gonad. <hr/> Yes yes yes. But you know the cliché of the astronaut, just returned from his journey into space, and who was asked if he'd seen God. 'She is black.' It's a never ending story, I guess.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2529 (3/5/04 1:49 pm) Reply	--- <hr/> Or Byron in his "Darkness" Quote: <hr/> Darkness had no need Of aid from them--She was the Universe. <hr/>

Email This To a Friend

Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

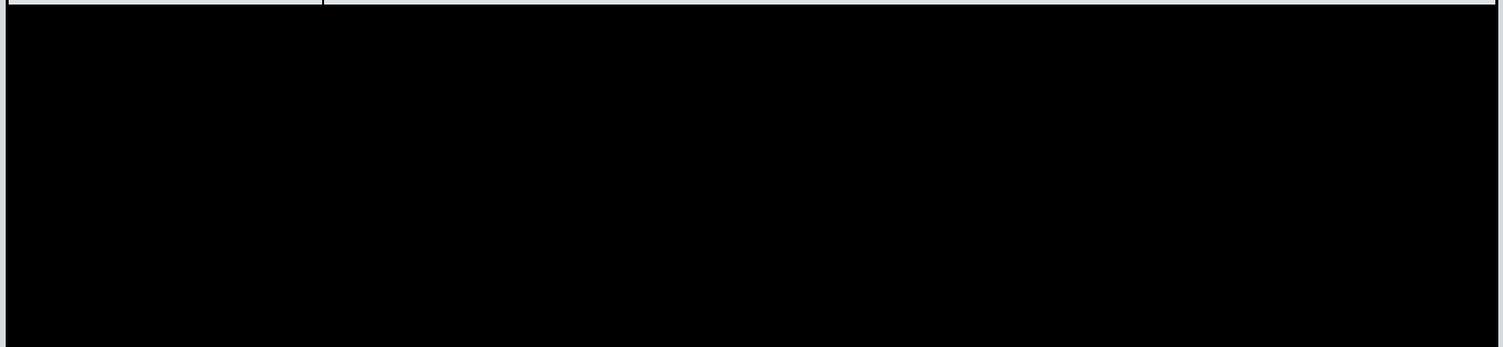

> GENIUS FORUM

> 10 illusions

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
XXX STATIC X Registered User Posts: 112 (3/19/04 4:15 am) Reply	10 illusions <hr/> Physical 1)Need 2)Failure 3)disunity 4)insufficiency 5)requirement Meta-Physical 6)judgment 7)condemnation 8)conditionality 9)superiority 10)ignorance  Link these to the history you know, then mix a little evolution and you will never fear death. Why? Because judgment has been a fear since day one for all mankind.

voce io Registered User Posts: 826 (3/19/04 8:13 am) Reply 	Re: 10 illusions <hr/> You are so stupid, man. There aren't 10 illusions, there are a great multitude of illusions and you'll never count them all. Go get drunk.
XXX STATIC X Registered User Posts: 113 (3/19/04 10:03 am) Reply	Re: 10 illusions <hr/> What I really need is some mushrooms, no alcohol for me.
drowden Forum Host Posts: 1659 (3/19/04 11:32 am) Reply 	Re: 10 illusions <hr/> To express it perhaps more accurately, Static, humanity has never had a fear of judgement, only of being judged. People usually have a great love of judging. And the fear of being judged can only manifest where one has conceptualised the "judge" as somehow superior or of greater value than oneself. This is why men, for example, fear being judged by women. Or, again, for the sake of greater accuracy, an idealised form known as "Woman". Dan Rowden
BJMcGilly Registered User Posts: 10 (3/23/04 2:57 am) Reply	Re: 10 illusions <hr/> Dan wrote: This is why men, for example, fear being judged by women. Or, again, for the sake of greater accuracy, an idealised form known as "Woman". Hence the overwhelming popularity of female judges on television in the US, and to a lesser extent female talk-show hosts.

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

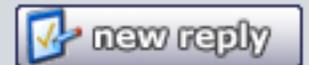

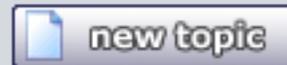

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> A critique of A=A symbolism

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Rhett Hamilton Registered User Posts: 221 (1/9/04 9:12 am) Reply	A critique of A=A symbolism <hr/> A Critique Of A=A Symbolism A=A is often used to display the truth that a thing is what it is (and not anything else). When a person is trying to understand this concept they are likely to experience it in one of three ways: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. They fail to grasp the concept. This is somewhat of a shame because they are missing out on important information, whilst actually being capable of understanding the essence of the concept (that a thing is what it is, and not what it is not). Not only that, but they might well come across the truth in it's worded form and yet still think that they are missing out on something, because if they don't understand A=A they won't know that they are in fact the same.</li> <li>2. They grasp it's meaning and then immediately squash their intellectual understanding of it in order to 'apply' it. In other words, they then see what is in front of them (A=A) as it is written on the page, which means that they see two A's. The problem being that this creates confusion because there aren't actually two A's, there is only the one thing, 'A'. They are falsely denying the validity that their intellectualisation also is what it is. In other words, the appearance to mind of concepts are just as valid an</li> </ol> expression of the truth that a thing is-what-it-is as any other appearance to mind. If their mind then toggles between direct visual perception and the experience of the intellectual concept, they are really in for a hard time!

However, another perspective on this is that the abovementioned issues have a net positive effect. By simultaneously making people confused about the nature of experience and offering a tool to solve that, people are naturally spurred on in their efforts to understand reality. They develop the notion that their everyday existence is faulty and that if they seek they can correct it, which for most people is an important step towards wisdom.

3. They grasp the concept and can apply it appropriately (which i think is a rarity).

Rhett

Hywel
Registered User
Posts: 38
(1/12/04 12:27 pm)
Reply

Re: A critique of A=A symbolism

---

To Rhett,

Although my understanding of A=A doesnt correspond to your first two catagories, im sure that i havent fully grasped the concept either. I will try write a post being more specific soon (time permitting).

P.S. Apologies for not replying in the discussion we were having previously on values ("Happiness and Emotions"). I did both read and think about your post a lot, and found it very useful.

You have said previously that you like to have feedback, and in that vein I'd like to suggest that in future you should mention that truth is the only justifiable value sooner. Obvious as it now seems, it was not at the time. I would also suggest that you recommend the Bhagavad Gita to those who wish to shirk their duty, or even do not see that there is any duty required (as i did).

I would have sent an e-mail but i dont know your address, and i guess you will find it here.

Hywel

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 236
(1/13/04 11:11 am)
Reply

Re: A critique of A=A symbolism

---

Hi Hywel,

Although my understanding of A=A doesnt correspond to your first two catagories, im sure that i havent fully grasped the concept either. I will try write a post being more specific soon (time permitting).

Okay (the fullest grasping of it's relevance to the nature of experience results in the state of enlightenment, so it's definitely worth pursuing).

P.S. Apologies for not replying in the discussion we were having previously on values ("Happiness and Emotions"). I did both read and think about your post a lot, and found it very useful.

No problem, I suspected as much, and that you were still in the background.

You have said previously that you like to have feedback, and in that vein I'd like to suggest that in future you should mention that truth is the only justifiable value sooner. Obvious as it now seems, it was not at the time.

Okay, thanks. It's certainly worth reinforcing at every opportunity, and since it's so ingrained in me i might not mention it on occasions that i could. However, keep in mind that every person has their own unique blockages, so it's pointless addressing concepts that aren't a big issue to someone at the same time as they are firmly attached to some other notion.

I would also suggest that you recommend the Bhagavad Gita to those who wish to shirk their duty, or even do not see that there is any duty required (as i did).

I hope people read far enough to see your sarcasm! Yeah, I have experienced other people with whom the Gita has had that unfortunate effect, it's blocked them from seeking truth, and thus locked them in ignorance.

I would have sent an e-mail but i dont know your address, and i guess you will find it here.

Sure did. If you make any posts or create any threads i'll pay them attention (if i'm around). If you're after a slightly more personal and considered arrangement on occasion, or if i'm absentee, perhaps use the 'Genius List'.

Rhett

Canadian Zoetrope
Registered User
Posts: 3
(1/13/04 6:17 pm)
Reply

Re: A critique of A=A symbolism

---

I take issue with

"there is only the one thing, 'A'."

There is only one thing (A=A), nothing more. You, yourself said 'A thing is what it is, and not what it is not.' (A=A) is not 'A', it is, (A=A). 'A' is 'A' and '(A=A)' is '(A=A)'.

Nice to meet you.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 730
(1/13/04 8:11 pm)
Reply

Re: A critique of A=A symbolism

---

It is perhaps necessary to warn commentators not to confuse the notions of reflexivity, identity, and equality. They are all different. A=A does not express identity, not even equivalence; it expresses reflexivity. Reflexivity is the first condition of equivalence.

"An equivalence relation on a set X is a binary relation on X that is reflexive, symmetric and transitive, i.e., if the relation is written as  $\sim$  it holds for all a, b and c in X that

(Reflexivity)  $a \sim a$

(Symmetry) if  $a \sim b$  then  $b \sim a$

(Transitivity) if  $a \sim b$  and  $b \sim c$  then  $a \sim c$

Equivalence relations are often used to group together objects that are similar in some sense." (Wikipedia)

A=A is sometimes referred to as the "law of identity" which is attributed to Aristotle. This is inaccurate. Neither did Aristotle introduce a law of identity, nor does A=A express this. Aristotle talked about categories of

	thought, where <math>A=A</math> constitutes the first proposition. Thomas
ksolway Registered User Posts: 248 (1/13/04 8:35 pm) Reply	Re: A critique of <math>A=A</math> symbolism <hr/> Quote: <hr/> . . . identity, nor does <math>A=A</math> express this. <hr/> <math>A=A</math> expresses whatever the user of the expression is expressing by it. On this forum, it is usually used to express identity.
birdofhermes Registered User Posts: 1235 (1/14/04 12:26 am) Reply	A <hr/> What does <math>\sim</math> mean? equivalent to? How would you express it to show identity?
Canadian Zoetrope Registered User Posts: 4 (1/14/04 3:40 am) Reply	Re: A <hr/> I can understand exactly what your saying, regarding reflexivity, and I assure you, in a more maleable instance that idea would carry more weight. An instance which I hope to have the pleasure of witnessing in due time. However I find it peculiar that in a thread titled 'A critique of (<math>A=A</math>) symbolism' that you argue the definitive, or semiotic values of the proposed idea. To wit: in his Psychological Types (§816).33 Jung writes: "So long as a symbol is a living thing, it is an expression for something that cannot be characterized in any other or better way. The symbol is alive only so long as it is pregnant with meaning. But once its meaning has been born out of it, once that expression is found which formulates the thing sought, expected, or divined even better than the hitherto accepted symbol, then the symbol is dead, i.e., it possesses only an historical significance. We may still go on speaking of it as a symbol, on the tacit assumption that we are speaking of it as it was before the better expression was born out of it. [...] For every esoteric interpretation the symbol is dead, because esotericism has already given it (at least ostensibly) a better expression, whereupon it becomes merely a conventional sign for associations that are more completely and better known elsewhere. Only from the exoteric standpoint is the symbol a living thing."

My idea was that as a symbol ( $A=A$ ) represents a circuit of ideas, far separate from the ideas in the sign ( $A$ ). And ergo  $A=A$  cannot express the relationship between  $A$ , and  $A$ . It is my opinion that if this was a critique of the semiotic values of ( $A=A$ ) you would be absolutely right.

Owen1234
Registered User
Posts: 12
(1/14/04 4:39 am)
Reply

Re: A

---

birdofhermes:
What does  $\sim$  mean? equivalent to?
How would you express it to show identity?

It signifies an arbitrary relation.

Thomas:
"An equivalence relation on a set  $X$  is a binary relation on  $X$  that is reflexive, symmetric and transitive, i.e., if the relation is written as  $\sim$  it holds for all  $a, b$  and  $c$  in  $X$  that

- (Reflexivity)  $a \sim a$
  - (Symmetry) if  $a \sim b$  then  $b \sim a$
  - (Transitivity) if  $a \sim b$  and  $b \sim c$  then  $a \sim c$
-

A relation ( $R$ ) is reflexive means:  $xRx$  for all  $x$ .
A relation ( $R$ ) is symmetric means:  $xRy$  iff  $yRx$ , for all  $x$  and  $y$ .
A relation ( $R$ ) is transitive means:  $(xRy \ & \ yRz)$  implies  $xRz$ , for all  $x, y, z$ .

In classical logic the identity relation ' $x=y$ ' has all of these qualities.

1.  $x=x$ , for all  $x$ .
Identity is reflexive.
2.  $x=y \leftrightarrow y=x$ , for all  $x$  and  $y$ .
Identity is symmetric.
3.  $(x=y \ \& \ y=z) \rightarrow x=z$ , for all  $x, y, z$ .
Identity is transitive.

These conditions that are imposed upon 'identity' are evident from the

	definition of identity. <math>x=y</math>, defined, <math>Fx</math> iff <math>Fy</math>, for all predicates <math>F</math>. Whatever can be said about <math>x</math> can be said about <math>y</math>, and vice versa. <math>(Fx \ &amp; \ \sim Fy) \rightarrow \sim(x=y)</math>. If something is true about <math>x</math> and it is not true about <math>y</math>, then, it is false that <math>x=y</math>. Owen
birdofhermes Registered User Posts: 1237 (1/14/04 5:40 am) Reply	would you be so kind- <hr/> What does "iff" mean? And this: <math>\leftrightarrow</math>?
Owen1234 Registered User Posts: 13 (1/14/04 5:59 am) Reply	Re: A <hr/> "would you be so kind-" What does "iff" mean? And this: <math>\leftrightarrow</math>? Thank you for your patience. 'iff' is a logical expression, if and only if. It talks about logical equivalence. '<math>\leftrightarrow</math>' represents the notion of 'if and only if'. <math>p</math> iff <math>q</math>, means, If <math>p</math> is true then <math>q</math> is true, and, if <math>q</math> is true then <math>p</math> is true. <math>p</math> is true only on the condition that <math>q</math> is true, and, <math>q</math> is true only on the condition that <math>p</math> is true. Frege would say that they are the same proposition.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1241
(1/14/04 8:01 am)
Reply

patience

---

Why then, did you use iff in one place and  $\leftrightarrow$  in another?

Would you translate this:  $(Fx \ \& \ \sim Fy) \rightarrow \sim(x=y)$ .

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 731
(1/14/04 1:29 pm)
Reply

Re: A critique of  $A=A$  symbolism

---

Kevin:  $A=A$  expresses whatever the user of the expression is expressing by it. On this forum, it is usually used to express identity.

That's exactly why I mentioned it. The mathematically uninitiated would assume that '=' signifies identity and this is what I would call a language trap. The indiscriminate use of subtle concepts, such as  $A=A$ , only results in general befuddlement. It confounds writers as well as readers.

Zoetrope citing Jung: So long as a symbol is a living thing, it is an expression for something that cannot be characterized in any other or better way. The symbol is alive only so long as it is pregnant with meaning.

Certainly Jung has a point there. However, in logic, or in mathematics in general, 'pregnancy of meaning' is usually undesired and, hence, 'aborted' through the formalization of language. This is achieved by using abstract symbols instead of semantically richer words and by eliminating non-essential content. The question is what the formal expression  $A=A$  means in the context of philosophy, or what do Kevin and David wish to express with it.

The point I was making is that they seem to confuse reflexivity with identity. These concepts have different meanings in mathematical (logical) and metaphysical (ontological) contexts. In logic, reflexivity means a variable can be related to itself as an equation (tautology), whereas in ontology reflexivity has no particular meaning. On the other hand, identity in logic has a more specific meaning than equality. According to Leibniz, X and Y are identical if (and only if) every predicate that is true of X is also true of Y. In particular, an identity is an equation that holds true for all values of a variable. This is what Owen expressed above. By contrast, the ontological meaning of identity is -starting with Aristotle who said that an object's identity is that which distinguishes it from other objects and ending with the idea of parallel universes containing identical objects- so rich and varied that I cannot list them all. That's where Jung's pregnancy of meaning comes in.

	Anna: Why then, did you use iff in one place and <math>\leftrightarrow</math> in another? Bot notations are common; they are the same. <math>\leftrightarrow</math> means logical equivalence. Anna: Would you translate this: <math>(Fx \ &amp; \ \sim Fy) \rightarrow \sim(x=y)</math>. Translation: If there is a predicate of x that is unlike the same predicate of y, then x and y are not equal. Now the big question: what the heck does it mean to say that an object is equal to itself? I admit that I find the question -ontologically- meaningless, but it brings up some -epistemologically- interesting questions. Such as? Can you guess it? Thomas
Canadian Zoetrope Registered User Posts: 11 (1/14/04 4:32 pm) Reply	Re: A critique of <math>A=A</math> symbolism <hr/> Whoa, I think I just got it. The 3rd one. Heh, yes I see the discrepancy between <math>(A=A)</math> and just A. They are both the same thing written in two forms. Could it be that <math>(A=A)=A</math>? Ahah, but how can 2 things, different in appearance be equal? Because they have the same value? the falsity lies in that the only way to determine something's value on paper, is to see it with your eyes, and not your mind. When one lets go of their eyes, and sees the symbol for what it is, a relationship. <math>(A=A)=A</math>.
Thomas Knierim Registered User Posts: 737 (1/14/04 7:17 pm) Reply	Re: A critique of <math>A=A</math> symbolism <hr/> Canadian Zoetrope: Could it be that <math>(A=A)=A</math>? No. <math>(A=A)</math> is always true, whereas A can have an arbitrary value, such as false. Thomas

Owen1234

Registered User

Posts: 14

(1/14/04 10:07 pm)

Reply

Re: A critique of A=A symbolism

---

birdofhermes: patience

Why then, did you use iff in one place and  $\leftrightarrow$  in another?

Would you translate this:  $(Fx \ \& \ \sim Fy) \rightarrow \sim(x=y)$ .

-----

Propositional logic uses symbols instead of words.

If p, q, etc. represent true or false statements:

$\sim p$  means (not p)

$p \vee q$  means (p or q)

$p \ & \ q$  means (p and q)

$p \rightarrow q$  means (p implies q)

$p \leftrightarrow q$  means (p is equivalent to q)

An alternate way of expressing equivalence is 'if and only if', sometimes abbreviated 'iff'.

Iff is derived from the definition of equivalence.

$p \leftrightarrow q$  defined  $(p \rightarrow q) \ \& \ (q \rightarrow p)$

$p$  iff  $q$  defined (p if q) and (p only if q).

"Would you translate this:  $(Fx \ \& \ \sim Fy) \rightarrow \sim(x=y)$ ."

F represents a predicate and x represents an object.

$Fx$  is a propositional form which is read x has the predicate F

$(Fx \ \& \ \sim Fy) \rightarrow \sim(x=y)$ , is read If x has the predicate F and y does not have the predicate F, then, x is not equal to y.

If something is true about x and it is not true about y, then, it is false that  $x=y$ .

Owen1234

Registered User

Posts: 15

(1/14/04 11:01 pm)

Reply

Re: A critique of A=A symbolism

---

Canadian Zoetrope:

Whoa, I think I just got it. The 3rd one. Heh, yes I see the discrepancy between  $(A=A)$  and just A. They are both the same thing written in two forms.

Usually A refers to an object and  $(A=A)$  is a statement.

Canadian Zoetrope: Could it be that  $(A=A)=A$ ?

Yes, when A is a tautologous proposition.  $(T=T)=T$ .

But,  $(2=2)=2$  is false.  $(2=2)$  is true and  $(\text{The true} = 2)$  is contradictory.

Canadian Zoetrope:

Ahah, but how can 2 things, different in appearance be equal? Because they have the same value?

Yes, 2 different expressions can refer to the same object.

eg.  $1+1=2$ , Cicero = Tully, G. W. Bush = The present president of the USA.

In  $A=A$ , A does not refer to 'A'. A refers to whatever thing that it names. It does not refer to its own name.

For example: 'Albert' has 6 letters is true, but, Albert has 6 letters is false.

$(A=A)$  is true only if A names an existent object.

$(A=A)$  for all existent A's, is true.

$(A=A)=A$  for all existent A's is false.

Vulcan = Vulcan, is false.

The present king of France = The present king of France, is false.

That which is not equal to itself = That which is not equal to itself, is false.

etc.

Owen

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1248
(1/15/04 1:34 am)
Reply

?

---

I'm afraid I don't even seem to get this:  $(A=A)=A$

Quote:

---

Now the big question: what the heck does it mean to say that an object is equal to itself? I admit that I find the question - ontologically- meaningless, but it brings up some - epistemologically- interesting questions. Such as? Can you guess it?

---

Give us a hint.

Canadian Zoetrope
Registered User
Posts: 12
(1/15/04 5:59 am)
Reply

Re: hrmmm

---

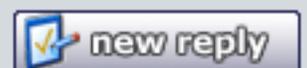

Here is how I am percieving this experience, it may take a little imagination to follow what I'm thinking/feeling, but hear me out:

I am sitting on a chair. Onotologically, we are seperate, because we feel, and have seperate quality. It is made of wood, I am made of flesh. However, Logically, we are the same thing. De-evolving our existence to the critical mass of the universe logically leads to the fact, that we have the same place of origin, and ergo the same place of destruction. We are seperate manifestations of the same entity. Existence. Like fingers on a hand. One is a thumb, the other is an index, but they are both the hand. So too is  $(A=A)$  and A.  $(A=A)$  is the Ontological argument that there are 2 A's on the page. Logically, there is only one A.

If I were to hold up an apple, and declare that it is equal to itself, and then ask you how many apples I have, you would say, I only had one, right? The same, for me at least applies here. However we are conditioned to trust our senses. My eyes say there are 2 A's on the screen infront of me, but my mind, says, that due to the argument, there is in fact only A.

I am existence, and so is the chair, and so is the wall, and the snowflakes, the tress and so are you. Ergo, all of existence is conscious, because I am and I am existence, decidedly no more, and no less than the chair, the wall, the snowflakes, the tress, and yourself. The fact that it appears different, sensually does not change the fact the existence is one thing, experiencing things relatively robs us of the truth that the universe, and everything in it,

	is actually one manifestation. IMHO. of course. Ps. I think I had what people would call an ontological argument for enlightenment last night, and my ontological self is a little frightened, as to how this can change my life. However my ontological manifesation of my logical self, has never EVER felt more exquisite bliss. Good day!
birdofhermes Registered User Posts: 1253 (1/15/04 6:52 am) Reply	hmmm <hr/> The implications of your thesis is that we all share one conscousness.
Canadian Zoetrope Registered User Posts: 14 (1/15/04 2:18 pm) Reply	Re: hmmm <hr/> Well, I'd not argue that 'we' share one consciousness, but that there is one consciousness, and it is shared by equally by the singlaritiy of existence. Every ontological implication of an object shares consciousness, just as my hand is part of me, and I am conscious. Ergo my hand is conscious. Ontologically of course. Logically, if consciousness has been achieved, then it has been for things in existence, because we are all of the same plane of said existence. Does that help?

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> A critique of A=A symbolism

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
birdofhermes Registered User Posts: 1264 (1/15/04 2:31 pm) Reply	ontology, shmontology <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Logically, if consciousness has been achieved, then it has been for things in existence, because we are all of the same plane of said existence. <hr/> Oh, I thought I got it pretty well the first time. But I'm not quite sure what you are saying above.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 742
(1/15/04 3:09 pm)
Reply

Re: ?

---

Thomas: Now the big question: what the heck does it mean to say that an object is equal to itself? I admit that I find the question -ontologically- meaningless, but it brings up some -epistemologically- interesting questions. Such as? Can you guess it?

Anna: Give us a hint.

Maybe it isn't as obvious as I thought. The idea of reflexivity presupposes abstracting consciousness. It requires being conscious of both A in the tautology. From a phenomenological point of view this is paradoxical. Every phenomenon is unique and ineffable; there are no two A. But equality in consciousness takes the form of identification through cognition, hence I suppose that a primal form of cognitive identification of the form  $A=A'$  -the realization of an identical pattern in two distinct phenomena- must have preceded  $A=A$ , which means that  $A=A$  is a 'retroactive' construct. It requires abstraction by elimination of the ' in A'.

Thomas

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1268
(1/15/04 4:18 pm)
Reply

re ?

---

Why, it was completely obvious : )

But you seem to be speaking of the tautology, whereas in your question you spoke of identity. So are you saying that it is a mental step of abstraction to move from identifying an object "the A", and realizing that two A's such can be equal?

Canadian Zoetrope
Registered User
Posts: 15
(1/15/04 5:39 pm)
Reply

Re: re ?

---

Everything is conscious, at the moment the self is destroyed and consciousness is attained. How can there be an 'other' if there is no 'self' to differentiate from?

One of the tell tale signs of enlightenment is the destruction of the 'self'. Ergo, one must achieve enlightenment for all things, which are realized to be one thing, when one achieves enlightenment.

Trying to describe this to you, would be like trying to describe the process of enlightenment, which is different for every person.

This just happens to be what brought on enlightenment in my 'self'.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 745
(1/15/04 6:08 pm)
Reply

Re: re ?

---

Anna: But you seem to be speaking of the tautology, whereas in your question you spoke of identity. So are you saying that it is a mental step of abstraction to move from identifying an object "the A", and realizing that two A's such can be equal?

Not quite. In mathematics, equivalence is defined in terms of reflexivity (among others), which means reflexivity comes logically before equivalence. What I am saying is that consciousness must be capable of conceiving of a fundamental form of identity even before reflexivity can be formulated. That's why I called reflexivity 'retroactive'. It is a wholly artificial construct; there is no phenomenon that confirms or confutes  $A=A$ .

Thomas

Owen1234
Registered User
Posts: 16
(1/15/04 9:41 pm)
Reply

Self-identity

---

Thomas: Now the big question: what the heck does it mean to say that an object is equal to itself?

The Leibnitz-Russell definition of identity says:

$x=x \leftrightarrow (Fx \leftrightarrow Fx)$  for all F.

Which agrees with your statement that self-identity is a tautology.

Note these quotes: Wittgenstein, Tractatus.

"Identity of object I express by identity of sign, and not by using a sign of identity. Difference of objects I express by difference of signs.

It is self-evident that identity is not a relation between objects.

Russell's definition of identity is inadequate, because according to it we cannot say that two objects have all of their properties in common. (Even if this proposition is never correct, it still has 'sense'.)

Roughly speaking, to say of 'two' things that they are identical is nonsense, and to say of 'one' thing that it is identical to itself is to say nothing at all.

It is impossible to 'assert' the identity of meaning of two expressions. For in order to be able to assert anything about their meaning, I must know their meaning, and I cannot know their meaning without knowing whether what they mean is the same or different.

The identity sign, therefore, is not an essential constituent of conceptual notation."

Are you agreeing with Wittgenstein here?

Owen

Edited by: Owen1234 at: 1/15/04 9:50 pm

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1271

(1/16/04 2:35 am)

Reply

self-identity

---

Whew, it's gotten a little hot over at the forum. This is a good place to hang out.

I forgot to ask what you mean by a predicate. What does it mean to call F a predicate of x?

Quote:

---

because according to it we cannot say that two objects have all of their properties in common.

---

What about objects that are nonmaterial, such as a number?

Owen1234

Registered User

Posts: 19

(1/16/04 3:08 am)

Reply

Re: self-identity

---

birdofhermes:

Whew, it's gotten a little hot over at the forum. This is a good place to hang out.

I am happy that you appreciate Wittgenstein.

birdofhermes: forgot to ask what you mean by a predicate. What does it mean to call F a predicate of x?

A predicate is that which is said about a thing.

x is wise, entails the predicate 'is wise'.

'is wise' is said about x.

x is wise, means, x has the predicate 'is wise'.

$Fx \leftrightarrow (F)x$ . for all objects x.

birdofhermes: What about objects that are nonmaterial, such as a number?

Abstract objects have abstract predications.

$2 < 3$  implies  $< 3$  is a predicate of 2.

There are no empirical predications of abstract objects.

e.g. The number 3 is blue, has no sense.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1275
(1/16/04 3:41 am)
Reply

self-identity

---

Quote:

---

A predicate is that which is said about a thing.

---

Neat, so it is similar to a sentence, x being the subject, and its proerties being the predicate.

Quote:

---

$Fx \leftrightarrow (F)x.$  for all objects x.

---

The only way in which I have been familiar with putting something directly next to another thing in parenthesis, is in algebra, in which it means to multiply. So how to read it here?

What I meant about abstract numbers, is how do they relate to what was said in your post that no two things can be said to have the same properties?

Owen1234
Registered User
Posts: 21
(1/16/04 4:33 am)
Reply

Re: self-identity

---

birdofhermes: self-identity

"A predicate is that which is said about a thing."

birdofhermes: Neat, so it is similar to a sentence, x being the subject, and its proerties being the predicate.

Yes, logical grammar must include the grammar of language.

A Property of x is a predicate which is true of x.

There are predicates which are not true of x.

e.g. x is, and, x is not. (it fails for all x's)

$Fx \leftrightarrow (F)x.$  for all objects x.

birdofhermes: The only way in which I have been familiar with putting something directly next to another thing in parenthesis, is in algebra, in which it means to multiply. So how to read it here?

Predicate logic is far more expressive than algebra, even Boolean algebra.

birdofhermes: What I meant about abstract numbers, is how do they relate to what was said in your post that no two things can be said to have the same properties?

If you can state a case in which,  $Fx$  and  $\sim Fy$ , then we can conclude that,  $\sim (x=y)$ .

eg.  $((2>1) \& \sim(1>1)) \rightarrow \sim(2=1)$ .

Sapius

Registered User

Posts: 272

(1/16/04 7:24 am)

Reply

Re: self-identity

---

I don't know much about any formal logic systems, but as I see it,  $A=A$  is, among other things, just a communication tool, and simply means that a 'thing' is just as we experience it, and it is so because we have the ability to perceive and name or define it so, since we can differentiate, and it begins the moment we say "I", differentiating ourselves from rest of the "things". Hence, it is the basis of conscious thought.

So what is the real argument here?

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 878

(1/16/04 9:20 am)

Reply

Re: Circular self-reference.

---

Quote:

---

Now the big question: what the heck does it mean to say that an object is equal to itself? I admit that I find the question -ontologically- meaningless, but it brings up some -epistemologically- interesting questions. Such as? Can you guess it?

---

Incompleteness, by any other name?

The question is as ontologically meaningless as the statement itself, and any answer is just as arbitrary. Epistemologically, meta-philosophically (surely the starting point for any philosophy), it does indeed bring up some interesting conundrums. Not just self-reference, there's also the likes of the problem of change and the problem of causality, logically, with respect to philosophical identity. If there can not be 2 of the object of identity, based on the reasoning that all predicates of  $x$  cannot be the same as all predicates of  $y$  (being as the 3-D spatial predicates of 2 objects cannot be the same), then what of temporal predicates? The temporal predicates of  $A$  are constantly changing, so it cannot be exactly what it is from one moment to the next. This may well be a moot point as identity need not be established over time, however it leads me to wonder exactly what is the temporal predicate of  $A$  itself. It appears to me that it doesn't have one, beyond arbitrary prescription, which in turn makes it appear to me that the problem of change is a problem with philosophical identity, being as temporal causality is another axiom of thought.

I'd like to throw a few more of the axioms of thought into the mixer, for discussion:

The Law Of The Excluded Middle.

The Law Of Non-contradiction.

Temporal Causality.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2048

(1/16/04 9:38 am)

Reply

Re: Circular self-reference.

---

Ah, good to see the mind-flapping in full swing.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 879
(1/16/04 9:51 am)
Reply

Re: Circular self-reference.

---

Flap-flap-flap.

Reaction-reaction-reaction.

Ah, the butterfly effect. And we are truly antipodean.

Edited by: Dave Toast at: 1/16/04 10:50 am

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 243
(1/16/04 11:32 am)
Reply

Re: hrmmm

---

My apologies folks, i made a tiny last minute edit to the original piece and inadvertently made it bloody confusing. Here is a correction.

2. They grasp it's meaning and then immediately squash their intellectual understanding of it in order to 'apply' it. In other words, they then see what is in front of them ( $A=A$ ) as it is written on the page, which means that they see two A's, and thus infer two things. The problem being that this is false, there aren't actually two things, there is only the one thing.

What they are actually doing, if people can follow me here, is falsely denying the validity that their intellectualisation also is what it is. In other words, the appearance to mind of concepts are just as valid an expression of the truth that a thing is-what-it-is as any other appearance to mind. If their mind then toggles between direct visual perception and the experience of the intellectual concept, they are really in for a hard time!

Here is how I am percieving this experience, it may take a little imagination to follow what I'm thinking/feeling, but hear me out:

I am sitting on a chair. Onotologically, we are seperate, because we feel, and have seperate quality. It is made of wood, I am made of flesh. However, Logically, we are the same thing. De-evolving our existence to the critical mass of the universe logically leads to the fact, that we have the same place of origin, and ergo the same place of destruction. We are seperate manifestations of the same entity. Existence. Like fingers on a hand. One is a thumb, the other is an index, but they are both the hand. So too is (A=A) and A. (A=A) is the Ontological argument that there are 2 A's on the page. Logically, there is only one A.

You've made some interesting points here, but they're a little discontinuous. If you want to discuss it further then go for it.

If I were to hold up an apple, and declare that it is equal to itself, and then ask you how many apples I have, you would say, I only had one, right? The same, for me at least applies here. However we are conditioned to trust our senses. My eyes say there are 2 A's on the screen in front of me, but my mind, says, that due to the argument, there is in fact only A.

I think you've nussed out my inadvertent koan!

I am existence, and so is the chair, and so is the wall, and the snowflakes, the tress and so are you. Ergo, all of existence is conscious, because I am and I am existence, decidedly no more, and no less than the chair, the wall, the snowflakes, the tress, and yourself. The fact that it appears different, sensually does not change the fact the existence is one thing, experiencing things relatively robs us of the truth that the universe, and everything in it, is actually one manifestation.

IMHO. of course.

Ps. I think I had what people would call an ontological argument for enlightenment last night, and my ontological self is a little frightened, as to how this can change my life. However my ontological manifesation of my logical self, has never EVER felt more exquisite bliss.

I don't want to affirm something like this, but i think you may have made an interesting little breakthrough. Have you read, or considered reading, WOTI (Wisdom of the Infinite)?

Rhett

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 752
(1/16/04 1:21 pm)
Reply

Re: self-identity

Wittgenstein: It is impossible to 'assert' the identity of meaning of two expressions. For in order to be able to assert anything about their meaning, I must know their meaning, and I cannot know their meaning without knowing whether what they mean is the same or different. The identity sign, therefore, is not an essential constituent of conceptual notation.

Owen: Are you agreeing with Wittgenstein here?

Yes, I agree absolutely with Wittgenstein on the first part -as far as phenomena are concerned- and I am glad that you brought it up, because I was about to go through the Tractatus myself and search the relevant quotations, so thanks for doing it. Unfortunately though, Wittgenstein contradicts himself in the last sentence. He says that the identity sign is not an essential constituent of conceptual notation because a tautology doesn't express meaning. Well, that is debatable.  $A=B$  is certainly meaningless unless the symbols themselves are imbued with meaning. But consider  $E=mc^2$ , the mass energy relation. We know what  $E$  means and we know what  $m$  and  $c$  mean. So the expression  $E=mc^2$  expresses meaning that is different from  $E, m, c$ .

Anna: The only way in which I have been familiar with putting something directly next to another thing in parenthesis, is in algebra, in which it means to multiply. So how to read it here?

Anna, I am shocked! :-0 Parentheses in algebra indicate operator precedence, not multiplication. The multiplication sign is just omitted in the presence of parentheses.

The notation that Owen uses is peculiar to predicate logic.

Dave: Incompleteness, by any other name?

Nope. That's not what I had in mind. I realize it was less than obvious that  $A=A$  -though underivable- is actually derived from  $A=A'$ .

Thomas

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1281
(1/17/04 1:34 pm)
Reply

re

---

Quote:

---

One of the tell tale signs of enlightenment is the destruction of the 'self'. Ergo, one must achieve enlightenment for all things, which are realized to be one thing, when one achieves enlightenment.

---

That must be why the buddha said everyone was enlightened!

Quote:

---

Trying to describe this to you, would be like trying to describe the process of enlightenment, which is different for every person.

---

Don't fret, I understand.

Canadian Zoetrope 🖐
Registered User
Posts: 46
(4/15/04 6:01 am)
Reply

Ahhhh

---

Ahhh well the flowers are out, and I can't wait to join them, growing up to the sun... we are enjoying spring, nice weather, nice sun... :)

Jones Kelly
Posts: 43
(4/23/04 3:00 pm)
Reply

Re: Ahhhh

---

Three kinds of experiences of A:

1. Direct experience of A, without delusion, is simply A.
2. Direct experience of awareness of A that considers direct experience of A to be A, is still deluded.
3. When the direct experience of the awareness of the direct experience of the awareness of A is itself recognised to be A, is there awareness of A=A.

I am using the third one (a double projection) to change my mental habits so that the first one becomes more automatic (raw, without projection).

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2612
(4/25/04 7:39 am)
Reply

-----

---

Quote:

---

Theory and experience are opposed to one another in perpetual conflict. All union in reflection is deceptive; it is only by action that union can be achieved.

Goethe

---

Quote:

---

Economy of experience.
The deluge of experience.
Things one would not talk about if one knew what is being discussed.

Goethe

---

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> A critique of A=A symbolism

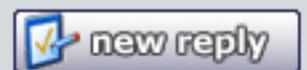

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
silentsal Registered User Posts: 101 (4/27/04 1:28 am) Reply	Re: who is existing <hr/> suergaz; I can relate to truth as infinitely knowable ; enlightenment in itself is neither here nor there ; yet what I am still pondering is the concept of inherent existence vs non-inherent existence. Quote: <hr/> The infinite is not understood. It is approached in understanding, and only by understanding the inherent existence of everything. To die is not to understand. <hr/> I cannot swallow the river ganges whole, so it is by sensing the emptiness or non-inherent existence of all things that I am able to approach that which underlays.

WolfsonJakk  Posts: 1562  (4/27/04 5:24 am)  Reply	Re: who is existing <hr/> Quote: <hr/> yet what I am still pondering is the concept of inherent existence vs non-inherent existence. <hr/> Any thing that exists is a result of the causal forces that preceeded it, causing it to exist. A child exists because her mother gave birth to her, a seed grows into tree in an hospitable environment, a galaxy collects itself sometimes around the weight of a massive central object or coalesces independently through the same gravitational forces that affect each particle, etc. All things are caused to exist and thus have no inherent existance themselves. They are a result rather than complete in and of themselves. Tharan
silentsal  Registered User  Posts: 101  (4/27/04 6:25 am)  Reply	Re: who is existing <hr/> yes that is my understanding also, truth builds upon truth though and what? shall this too pass?
suergaz  Registered User  Posts: 2613  (4/27/04 6:46 am)  Reply	---- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> The most innate, most necessary concept, that of cause and effect, leads to countless, constantly repeated errors when it is applied. Goethe <hr/> Wolf, I can tell you outright, again, everything inherently exists! I seem to be alone in my understanding of the meaning of the word inherent!

	Sal, of course I understand you. But technically my words cannot be faulted, just as the meaning in yours cannot! In everything I have accounted for paradox. There is no nothing!
silentsal Registered User Posts: 102 (4/27/04 7:42 am) Reply	Re: ah ha <hr/> An inherently existent thing contains the reason for its existence within itself. maybe this is a clue, can we look at this from another direction .....
WolfsonJakk Posts: 1563 (4/27/04 8:03 am) Reply	Re: ah ha <hr/> I want some of whatever Goethe was smoking.
jimhaz Registered User Posts: 647 (4/27/04 1:23 pm) Reply 	Re: ah ha <hr/> Nah..I agree with you now Suergaz. The word inherent has no definition. inherent  "Permanently existing in something" - Nothing permanently exists  "inseparably attached or connected, naturally pertaining to; innate; inalienable" - as everything is caused and everything is interconnected this definition applies to everything, so everything is inherent.

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> A Dialogue on the Sexes, by the Sexes, for the Sexes

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
voce io Registered User Posts: 722 (2/22/04 6:27 pm) Reply 	A Dialogue on the Sexes, by the Sexes, for the Sexes <hr/> A Dialogue on the Sexes, by the Sexes, for the Sexes. by Scott Schauland Feb 22nd, 2004  April and Scott are talking about marriage...  April says: It's possible to be self-sufficient, right?  Scotty says: It's possible, if that's what you really want.  April says: Oh, who really knows what they want? It changes all the time.  Scotty says: My wants don't change really.  April says: Maybe when it stops changing, maybe that's when you're ready [for marriage]. Hey, good for you!  Scotty says: I don't know if it stops changing for most women.  April says:

Well, good for me because I'm a girl.

Scotty says:
lol...

April says:
If it never stops changing for women, then how come it's the men that go through mid-life crises?

Scotty says:
They don't want to die.

April says:
Women don't want to die...

Scotty says:
On realization that you're getting old, you try and be young again, or to live. Women don't go through crises?

April says:
I don't know! Women might go through some sort of crisis, but I honestly believe they are so attached to their husbands at that point that they'd never think of going all crazy.

Scotty says:
I don't know; a lot of women cheat a lot. Don't they?

April says:
Some girls do. The majority don't.

Scotty says:
Why don't they? And why do the ones that do, do?

April says:
Because women are pretty loyal.

Scotty says:
Are you sure?

April says:
The ones that cheat; they're selfish, have no morals...and basically, I think they're immature.

Scotty says:

I think most women are selfish, have no morals, and are immature. No one has proven me wrong yet. Maybe you; still, I don't know you well enough.

April says:

Well, I can't argue against the selfish thing. Of course I'm selfish. I mean if I really loved a guy, I wouldn't cheat on him because the aftereffects would be damaging to our relationship, and therefore I'd suffer a lot, especially from guilt. But I also think if I really loved the guy, I wouldn't be thinking about other guys. I tend to get tunnel vision; but I do think I have morals... the maturity thing...I'm working on that. I don't think most women are immature, selfish and lacking morals.

Scotty says:

Based on evidence, I do, but I guess I just don't know women, and I only know girls.

April says:

Then you're hanging out with the wrong girls.

Scotty says:

Well no, mostly all of them are like that.

April says:

I really don't think...a lot of girls I know are like that. Some yes, but.

Scotty says:

They don't base their decisions on how they feel?

April says:

How is that related to immaturity?

Scotty says:

If at one moment, they feel they like a person, and the next they stop liking them...it's immoral and immature. Well, at least if they act on their momentary feelings

April says:

Men do that more than women.

Scotty says:

What evidence do you have for that?

April says:

Guys will like a girl and she will, um, please them. The next day he's like "I'm out of this".

Scotty says:

That isn't the same thing, he never really liked the girl, and he only wanted the sexual stuff.

April says:

That's immoral and immature, either way.

Scotty says:

I agree.

April says:

That's acting on momentary feelings, right?

Scotty says:

Not really. Guys seem to have more of an overall feeling towards objects. Let's say, for example, a guy and his car. He loves the car, and when it breaks down he gets pissed at it, but he fixes it and maintains his love for it...but a girl and her car, she will love it when it's doing something good for her, making her look cool or feel good with her hair blowing in the wind and stuff, but if it breaks down she lets it go. Do you see that at all?

April says:

No, my car was sick a couple weeks ago and I cried over it.

Scotty says:

You must have missed my point.

April says:

No...I'm a girl, I love my car, it was breaking down, and I fixed it.

Scotty says:

Okay, let's talk about your guitar. Is it like a best friend, or is it like something you pick up when there's nothing else, or only if you want to accomplish something with it?

April says:

Hmm. I fluctuate between my piano and my guitar, but I love my guitar. If I'm playing and I get tired, I'll take naps with it because I don't want to let it go.

Scotty says:

You are definitely less wishy-washy than other girls, but I think you're swaying your answers, trying to prove a point

April says:

I know, I was thinking about that, but I think I'm arguing pretty clear-headedly, not swayingly. My car, I'm completely serious about; I talk to it sometimes. Yikes!

Scotty says:

It's clear headed, but is it portraying the truth of the matter? That doesn't mean it's the same type of relationship that a guy has with it

April says:

My guitar...I feel a bit guilty about that argument because I originally picked it up because I thought it was cool, but now it's like my child.

Scotty says:

How is it like your child?

April says:

I like playing it and even just holding it...I don't get sick of it and I feel I share some strange sort of bond with it. I don't know how to explain it. I'm sure my relationships with my car and guitars are a bit different from guys, but I don't see how that has to do with anything.

Scotty says:

It's about how the sexes form relationships with things....and people are things to other people.

April says:

So...to a guy, a girl is just another "thing". Nice.

Scotty says:

Guys seem to have more of a transcending love for things, where girls have that more sentient love, which is momentary. To a girl, a guy is a thing. We are all things.

April says:

No, there are more specific words in the English language that convey a more powerful respect. And that is how I view guys, if they deserve respect.

Scotty says:

What??

April says:

"Thing" is like...something to be thrown away. It's property.

Scotty says:

Yeah. That isn't how people view relationships, subconsciously?

April says:

It doesn't sound like it has much value. I don't think that's the way it should be.

Scotty says:

It isn't actual, but it's how things are in society.

April says:

Like...my boyfriend or husband would say, "This is my thing, I like my thing, she's a really nice little thing, you know?"

Scotty says:

You aren't a thing?

April says:

Like I'm some suit coat he picked up somewhere.

Scotty says:

If you aren't a thing, you're nothing and you don't exist. No, it isn't implying that.

April says:

There are thousands of words in the English language. Using a specific word is the least you can do for someone you love. Don't you agree?

Scotty says:

lol...well yeah.

April says:

Exactly. I don't care if I am in actuality a thing.

Scotty says:

You're embodying "girl" right now.

April says:

No I'm not! And even if I am...I'm right! Would you want your girlfriend to call you her thing?

Scotty says:

No, but in actuality I am a thing, and in actuality I am not her thing.

April says:

But guys view their girls as their thing; their property.

Scotty says:

Girls view guys the same way. This whole "thing" business isn't even what we were talking about, April.

April says:

I know; where were we?

Scotty says:

See what I mean by being momentary? You reacted to that idea of people being things. What I was saying was...the way a man loves his guitar is the way that man loves his woman; same for girls, and other objects, and whatever.

April says:

But that's not true...

Scotty says:

Why not?

April says:

...Because a woman loves her lover more than anything else. It's different from any other love. It stands on its own when she truly loves him.

Scotty says:

Of course a man will love a woman more than his guitar; he'd give up his guitar for her, or probably most anything else...that isn't what I'm talking about though. I'm talking about the nature of his love, from himself to the object of love; the idea of commitment.

April says:

He doesn't like commitment.

Scotty says:

What?

April says:

Men don't really like commitment...the majority.

Scotty says:

What evidence do you have for that? They commit themselves to whatever they do, generally.

April says:

Yeah, for a night...oh, that was harsh.

Scotty says:

lol no, if they view a girl as a sex object, that's all the girl will be unless she proves his idea of her wrong and becomes more like an equal in personality.

April says:

So what if she really likes him? And she really wants to please him? And she thinks he really likes her? But the whole time he's like "this girl has no personality, but I'm going to screw her, oh yes." That happens a lot.

Scotty says:

It does, and I hate that. It's why I'm being the way I am lately - moral towards girls.

April says:

And that's why it's easier for me to live a moral life, because I know guys are like that.

Scotty says:

Moral doesn't mean "without guys".

April says:

I know, but I don't meet many who have different interests.

Scotty says:

...Different than getting some?

April says:

Yeah.

Scotty says:

Yeah, there aren't many, it seems men are committed to getting some

April says:

lol...my point!

Scotty says:

Yeah I agree with that point. Do you see mine?

April says:

Let me tell you something, Scott.

Scotty says:

K.

April says:

Sometimes, girls don't want to hear that their position in a man's life is comparable to a guitar. It may be true, but slightly disturbing. However...

Scotty says:

You missed the point!

April says:

I do agree that...wait!

Scotty says:

K.

April says:

I do agree that if and when a man is actually committed to a girl, he really does love her; then there is a man who works really really hard for her. I have seen some marriages where I could not imagine life with a wife like that (if I were male) and yet the husband handles her beautifully and kindly all the while, whereas she will snap and cuddle when she pleases. In that, men are less momentary. In that situation! But I don't see it terribly often.

Scotty says:

Why in that situation only?

April says:

Well, what are the other situations? A lot of times a guy will put up with his woman's nuances just to get some at the end up the day.

Scotty says:

Yeah that does happen a lot, but what I meant by my question was that it must be something in the guy's nature which makes that situation generally happen the way it does; something in the way a guy is towards objects... pardon me for calling a guy's girlfriend or spouse an "object". Do you agree with that?

April says:

Yeah, I just don't see the application?

Scotty says:

What do you mean?

April says:

The point you were making with it...

Scotty says:
Girls are generally momentary, and guys aren't.

April says:
Maybe you should explain a bit more how girls are momentary.

Scotty says:
That's hard for me to do!

April says:
Why?

Scotty says:
...Because it's subtle, kind of hidden from view. You can only know how it is by the way girls are towards things.

April says:
If it's so subtle, maybe you're mistranslating!

Scotty says:
Maybe.

...and the conversation went onto other things.

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 456
(2/22/04 7:06 pm)
Reply

Re: A Dialogue on the Sexes, by the Sexes, for the Sexes

---

Genius!!!
Yo ho!!!

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2360
(2/22/04 9:04 pm)
Reply

---

---

I suppose April is one of what you call your 'fuck-buddies' Scott? Did she know you were taping your conversation?

A being is necessarily a thing, but not the other way around.

WolfsonJakk

Registered User

Posts: 1480

(2/23/04 2:30 am)

Reply

Re: A Dialogue on the Sexes, by the Sexes, for the Sexes

---

She is a smart girl, Scott. But you are growing wiser. Be careful the holes you dig. Don't chain yourself to one yet, is my advice. Go to college, get a degree in whatever, and until you retire you will be surrounded by leagues of women in office settings (unless maybe you have a degree in engineering, though that is changing). They will be available later in abundance if you decide it is what you still want. Trust me on this. (Sex with a 30 year old is much better than sex with an 18 year old, btw.)

Is she still committed to her piano when she is sleeping with her guitar? The same will be true of all objects in her life. The object must serve her adequately for her to feel attached to it, and thus to respond to it. Men who value cars and other things are no different. This bodes ill for a marriage because there will be troublesome times, I guarantee it. Wait until the baby comes. Wait until you are tired of fucking her. When she hates you (momentarily perhaps) will she stay faithful? Does it matter?

Quote:

---

Of course I'm selfish. I mean if I really loved a guy, I wouldn't cheat on him because the after effects would be damaging to our relationship, and therefore I'd suffer a lot, especially from guilt. But I also think if I really loved the guy, I wouldn't be thinking about other guys. I tend to get tunnel vision; but I do think I have morals...the maturity thing...I'm working on that....

---

In other words, serve her well so she does not think about other guys and thus doesn't cheat on you. Hmmm. Not exactly a "commitment," is it?

Quote:

---

Hmm. I fluctuate between my piano and my guitar, but I love my guitar. If I'm playing and I get tired, I'll take naps with it because I don't want to let it go.

---

But then she does...

Quote:

---

Maybe you should explain a bit more how girls are momentary.

---

Ask her why she is here. Ask her what the meaning to her life is. Does she have a mission? Not only will you get "I don't know," but the conversation probably won't even go very far. Too much "out of the moment" thinking. I suspect you (Scott) could ponder the same topic with another philosophically minded person off and on for days or even weeks.

Tharan

voce io

Registered User

Posts: 723

(2/23/04 5:29 am)

Reply

Re: A Dialogue on the Sexes, by the Sexes, for the Sexes

---

I suppose April is one of what you call your 'fuck-buddies' Scott? Did she know you were taping your conversation?

No she isn't one of my fuck buddies, I'm still a virgin. I talk to her on MSN messenger, and we post poetry at the same forum. We are close in spirit.

She is a smart girl, Scott. But you are growing wiser. Be careful the holes you dig. Don't chain yourself to one yet, is my advice. Go to college, get a degree in whatever, and until you retire you will be surrounded by leagues of women in office settings (unless maybe you have a degree in engineering, though that is changing). They will be available later in abundance if you decide it is what you still want. Trust me on this. (Sex with a 30 year old is much better than sex with an 18 year old, btw.)

Yes she is smart. In her senior year of high school she got a 4.2 grade point average; I didn't know such a thing was even possible! I don't see why I should avoid women, though. If I dig myself in a hole with one, then I'm just in a hole. Why does that matter? I'd rather take risks and have an adventurous life, than do nothing out of fear of becoming attached or whatnot. As long as I keep questioning, I'm fulfilling my role as a responsible human being.

Is she still committed to her piano when she is sleeping with her guitar?

The same will be true of all objects in her life. The object must serve her adequately for her to feel attached to it, and thus to respond to it. Men who value cars and other things are no different. This bodes ill for a marriage because there will be troublesome times, I guarantee it. Wait until the baby comes. Wait until you are tired of fucking her. When she hates you (momentarily perhaps) will she stay faithful? Does it matter?

If I want to get married, I do need to find a woman that'll stay faithful even when she hates me. I don't really think its a good idea to base a marriage off of whether I'm going to stop enjoying sex with her or not. Marriage seems to be about love; unification of opposites. I believe its actually more of a sacred thing than most view it today...it should be an expression of the unification of opposing forces within oneself.

You bring up a good point about men being the same way with cars, as she is with her piano or guitar. Like we have all said here before, about gender issues: men have some femininity and women have some masculinity. I wasn't really talking about if they will temporarily forget about the object of affection, I was talking about the general love for the object. The way a man loves his car, versus the way a woman loves her (shoes?). The man seems to have a more lasting love, while the woman has a temporary love which is based off of making her feel good or not. If the shoes are called "ugly" by some girl who she looks up to, she most likely won't wear them anymore. Of course, this is a very generalized truth, and seems almost too subtle to be aware of.

In other words, serve her well so she does not think about other guys and thus doesn't cheat on you. Hmmm. Not exactly a "commitment," is it?

No, it isn't. And if a spouse or girlfriend I had wasn't serving me well, I need to make sure that I'm committed to her. If I'm not, how could I possibly expect commitment from anyone else? "You get what you are" is the rule.

Ask her why she is here. Ask her what the meaning to her life is. Does she have a mission?

Her mission is to do good, she says.

...Thanks for your comments.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1419

(2/23/04 7:31 am)

Reply

Re: A Dialogue on the Sexes, by the Sexes, for the Sexes

---

Wow, Scott, this is a great dialogue, and I was thinking about this very topic last night, probably when you posted it!

Quote:

---

Not really. Guys seem to have more of an overall feeling towards objects. Let's say, for example, a guy and his car. He loves the car, and when it breaks down he gets pissed at it, but he fixes it and maintains his love for it...but a girl and her car, she will love it when it's doing something good for her, making her look cool or feel good with her hair blowing in the wind and stuff, but if it breaks down she lets it go. Do you see that at all?

---

I was thinking about the womens' complaint that men consider them objects. I think this is true in that men always approach the world from a transcendent and separate vantage point. Thus all things in the world, whether alive or dead, are objects to men. There are only two things that assuage their loneliness - other men, and women. But men always see women as equal parts human and other. Women are not like that. Women have men firmly in the humanity category, and that is one reason they are more blind to what men are really about. They don't see men as other, and therefore don't ask themselves - what is this?

Women, unlike men, tend to have firm categories of animate versus inanimate. I am not sure why. Perhaps because they are looking at the world from within it, whereas men are looking from the outside in. But I think this is why men are more prone to love objects, since all things are things to them. Women feel more insulted by men's objectification than they should. That is man's way.

Quote:

---

Scotty says:

It's about how the sexes form relationships with things....and people are things to other people.

---

Well, as I said above, people are things to men, but not to women. Although that sounds like a putdown of men, it isn't. Men are the transcendent gender, and women the immanent gender. Men are focused on all things, women more on 'living' things.

Quote:

---

Guys seem to have more of a transcending love for things, where girls have that more sentient love, which is momentary. To a girl, a guy is a thing. We are all things.

---

As you can surmise, I agree with the first half, but not the second. Perhaps you think so because women appear more selfish and materialistic. I do agree that men have a more loving and giving nature.

Edited by: birdofhermes at: 2/23/04 7:32 am

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 726
(2/23/04 8:38 am)
Reply

Re: A Dialogue on the Sexes, by the Sexes, for the Sexes

---

Thanks Anna.

Men are the transcendent gender, and women the immanent gender. Men are focused on all things, women more on 'living' things.

I think this is an interesting point; I've seen it before. Katie (my ex-girl I was seeing recently) would get angry with me if I didn't make facial expressions, or didn't tell her how I felt. My face or my temporary emotions aren't who I am, the whole of me as a "thing" is who I am to another person. Some of that is moving and full of life, and some it is still.

Do you think it'd be a good idea for women who love movement and hate stillness to be introduced to logic and ethics in order to be changed, so that society prospers? Or do you think that the current state of woman allows society to run perfectly? I'm personally unsure.

Rairun Registered User Posts: 195 (2/23/04 10:28 am) Reply	Re: A Dialogue on the Sexes, by the Sexes, for the Sexes <hr/> "Anyway, the april/scott conversation sounds like a conversation between spongebob and patrick :D" - my friend Erin
voce io Registered User Posts: 727 (2/23/04 10:56 am) Reply 	Re: A Dialogue on the Sexes, by the Sexes, for the Sexes <hr/> Who is Patrick?
jimhaz Registered User Posts: 607 (2/23/04 11:38 am) Reply	Re: A Dialogue on the Sexes, by the Sexes, for the Sexes <hr/> But I think this is why men are more prone to love objects, since all things are things to them. Men love objects that are 'doing' things, things that allow them to be masculine - cars, bikes, computers, tools and things for outdoor activities like sporting accessories. Women love objects that make them feel more feminine - jewellery, clothes, household nicknacks and things for indoor activities like knitting and other crafts. Both like lazy entertainment stuff, but the men's stuff is active and mostly practical while the womens stuff is sedate and decorative. On the basis of the number of items women would have more than men, by a fair margin. If you exclude 'useful' items from both sexes, then the ratio of womens things becomes a lot higher. So who really does love objects? IMO, a lot of hobby type things are more to get away from the opposite sex than anything else.

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 608
(2/23/04 11:42 am)
Reply

Re: A Dialogue on the Sexes, by the Sexes, for the Sexes

---

Women feel more insulted by men's objectification than they should. That is man's way.

Yet they try their very hardest to make themselves into sex objects, then complain about it when the wrong men acknowledge this or they aren't in the mood. That is woman's way.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1421
(2/23/04 11:45 am)
Reply

Re: A Dialogue on the Sexes, by the Sexes, for the Sexes

---

Quote:

---

Katie (my ex-girl I was seeing recently) would get angry with me if I didn't make facial expressions, or didn't tell her how I felt. My face or my temporary emotions aren't who I am, the whole of me as a "thing" is who I am to another person. Some of that is moving and full of life, and some it is still.

---

Well, I had considered this an extravert/introvert problem. I had two husbands who both were angry and harshly badgered me for having less than an instantaneous response during conversation or argument. I am a slow responder. Often, I do not even have an emotional response until I think about it. I once tried being a supervisor, and the folks got very upset with me and said I never took action. That was because when various tattletales came to me about someone's behavior, I would watch for a week or so before getting riled. To them, that was no action.

My SO and I are emotionally very similar, and both introverted, and in more than two years, have never been more than mildly annoyed, and that most rarely. Sometimes I have been upset over not getting the kind of demonstrativeness I want. I guess he is even quieter than me.

Quote:

---

Do you think it'd be a good idea for women who love movement and hate stillness to be introduced to logic and ethics in order to be changed, so that society prospers?

---

	Absolutely. But I'm not sure that is the crux of this particular problem. Much as people make fun of pop psychology books like Men are from Mars and Women are from Venus, that book goes a long way to pointing out that men and women often go about things quite differently, and misunderstand each other because of it.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2367 (2/23/04 10:39 pm) Reply	--- <hr/> Scott, it's your sister?! That's illegal in your state!
voce io Registered User Posts: 728 (2/24/04 12:26 am) Reply 	Re: --- <hr/> I didn't say anything about my sister :P
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2371 (2/24/04 12:34 am) Reply	--- <hr/> When do we get to the bit where scott kisses april and she tells him she has a headache?!
voce io Registered User Posts: 729 (2/24/04 3:51 am) Reply 	Re: --- <hr/> That's in a few years, hold your horses.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2380
(2/24/04 12:46 pm)
Reply

----

---

Scott, if you love her, you both have my love,

All you people have my love! You geniuses!

Dialogue over discourse, that is my education. Look at what it's left me!

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 733
(2/24/04 4:26 pm)
Reply

Re: ----

---

Thanks for your love, man.

First Expansion on the Dialogue O.B.F. The Sexes

I'd just like to add, due to some negative feedback from others who've read this, that: my stance is NOT misogynistic in nature. I love women, and still participate in full fledged relationships with them.

Some people have argued, saying that I overgeneralized. I didn't; there is still room for error. I have said that men can be very 'momentary', and women can be very 'transcendent' in how they view their relationship to objects. Let me compare my argument to race. There are a variety of skintones nowadays, ranging from pale to deep dark black. Is it overgeneralizing to say that most people with darker skin colors are probably African in origin? No, it's just sensible; it's a good way to categorize race. Of course, sometimes you can be wrong...a dark man could just be a very tan European, or could even be a Mexican. In the same sense, there are some women that are fully "transcendent", but I'm guessing that's a comparatively small number. There are inbetweens, where most people are; then there is the extreme "momentary", which is where probably half of women are (based on my own personal examination, which is completely fallible).

There is no way to understand the sexes without taking personal examination, and conversing about it. Then you get a grouping of personal experiences, and you take the average of all to be the closest to what can be considered 'true' about the sexes.

I don't consider my statements to be absolutely true, and I don't really 'believe' them, in the sense that I hold them as natural laws or anything. Every woman or girl that I meet, I see as a human being before anything else. I've had good friends who were women, and I don't see how I couldn't meet more.

People have given me evidence against my claims, saying that they know girls who have been loyal to uncommitted boyfriends. Things like that. That is one instance in that girl's life, and doesn't tell whether she's momentary in nature or not. You have to look, as someone will to find the truth of the matter, at their every action. Their character. The way they treat their friends, family, lovers. If they lie or not. You have to really analyze the person; all the while not letting them know that you're analyzing their characteristics. I'm sure many of you do that already, without really calling it "observing", "examining" or "analyzing".

One of my best friends is a guy, and he has taken on the practice of being momentary, when he is NOT momentary in nature. He appears momentary, makes irrational decisions, and doesn't think about what he's doing...but I can tell by his actions that he is a transcendent type of person. He has been with his girlfriend for three years now, a rarity at our age, and he is very eccentric about his passions. He is obsessed with cooking, hunting knives, and interacting with people. His choice to be momentary does enable him to act immorally a lot of the time. Does this give me any reason to think less of him? To treat him poorly? No, of course not. It'd be immoral of me to judge his choices as 'good' or 'bad', and react towards him on that judgement. I don't want someone doing that to me; which brings me to my point about morality...

People have been saying to me, "Not everyone has the same morals". I agree with you! My definition of morality is objective. It is the golden rule: Do what you want others to do to you. If you don't want someone to hurt you, you don't hurt them. If people do hurt you, is it justified to hurt them back? No, you're still being immoral, and breaking the golden rule.

So, I may seem misogynistic in saying that girls are generally more selfish, immoral and immature. My goal however, is to make all people unselfish, moral, and mature; for the well being of girls and guys. Are women treated fairly in our society? They are for the most part seen as sex objects, and nothing more. Is that fair? Pointing out that a woman's body isn't generally built for playing football with men's bodies isn't misogynistic (fundamentalist feminists may disagree).

Showing a person their flaws should make them try to correct them, if they are responsible human beings. Instead of having women react emotionally to what I'm saying, they should try to see if it does in fact apply to them, and what the repercussions are, if what I say is true. Then, if they don't like it, they should change it.

If I were a misogynist, I'd say "women are incapable of understanding what I'm talking about". I don't believe that. I'd probably say, "never trust a woman", but I don't think that's good advice. I've known many more girls than guys that I could trust.

What I pointed out in the Dialogue, was that women have a tendency to be momentary with principals; putting on a principal in order to serve her in that moment. Men have a tendency to be more transcendent and committed; they view things in the long run, think abstractly about circular patterns, and develop systems of action in order to serve himself and others. This isn't about specific events, but the general attitude of the gender in question towards all events in their life: their character. Misogyny is blind-hatred towards women, and I'm positive that taking in evidence isn't considered blind, and that I don't hate women.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1484
(2/24/04 6:18 pm)
Reply

Re: ----

---

Well said, young man. I wish I had been so insightful at that age. Continue on. It gets better.

Oh yah...and fuck you!

heh

Tharan

*edit*

Edited by: WolfsonJakk at: 2/24/04 6:19 pm

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 612
(2/24/04 7:21 pm)
Reply

Re: ----

---

girls are generally more selfish, immoral and immature.

Only because they are subservient to men's selfishness, immorality and immaturity - that is until they decide they own a guy. Then it becomes girl power, forevermore.

suergaz Registered User Posts: 2392 (2/24/04 10:24 pm) Reply 	Re: ---- <hr/> All I remember of that dialogue now is something about a car, a guitar, and scott trying to push some momentary bullshit.
--	--

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> A Dialogue on the Sexes, by the Sexes, for the Sexes

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
voce io Registered User Posts: 736 (2/25/04 7:12 am) Reply 	Re: ---- <hr/> Want to talk about that more, jimhaz?
Rairun Registered User Posts: 196 (2/25/04 9:31 am) Reply	... <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Scott: Who is Patrick? <hr/> Patrick is spongebob's starfish friend. He's pink and wears shorts.

voce io

Registered User

Posts: 738

(2/25/04 11:16 am)

Reply

Re: ----

---

Second Expansion on the Dialogue O.B.F. The Sexes

"you asked for examples, i gave you examples that are as valid as your own. dont pick and choose. dont use the confirmation bias to get yourself where you want to be in this whole "argument". and if youre going to use my examples, the least you could do is cite them."

-Dana (in an AOL Instant Messenger conversation)

As I explained in the First Expansion, the example you gave showed only one event in that girl's life, it did not show how she generally deals with people. If a girl treats one guy like God and the rest she is on and off about, that doesn't make her "transcendent" in any way. A girl can love a guy, be totally committed, and still be a very momentary person. I said "this is subtle"! It can be hard to comprehend. A valid example would be saying what I said about my "good friend". Giving a multitude of events which portray a small sample of the person's character. If I said, "generally my good friend didn't eat ham, but one night he decided to", would that make him momentary? ...Not necessarily.

I didn't say your friend was momentary, so there's not really any reason to be so angry about what I'm saying. I don't know your friend. For all I know she can be the most transcendent girl on the planet.

Overall: I am not picking and choosing evidence. If I were, I wouldn't have written anything in response to what you said about your friend. I would have said something tricky, in an attempt to avoid it. No, I haven't rejected your example, I've proven it to be a PARTIAL EXAMPLE. I'm not using the confirmation bias, either. There's no other way to talk about the sexes besides, "this is what I observe".

Let me ask you something: what would be the point of me saying things girls hate? Don't you know my motivations in life? I want a family, which requires a wife! Do you think I'm going to eventually get a wife when I'm being misogynistic? Most likely not. When I don't have any substance to my claims? Hell no! What kind of a woman would marry a dumbfuck that says, "Women are bad", just to make himself feel right? What would the point be of me saying what I've said, if I were just trying to be right? I don't see a point in that at all. A person can be right in other areas. Do you actually think I'm dumb enough to step on the sacred ground of "woman" without knowing anything about women; with my statements having NO truth in them? All the while, keeping in mind my goals?? I'd be a fucking idiot if I went about that way, and there'd be no purpose in you talking to me.

So let's start thinking clearly; not just reacting when our beliefs are confronted. Let's ask: "is this really true? Where's the evidence?" Let's analyze why we say the things we do, and what our motivations are when we're saying them.

Read this stuff carefully, it may mean more than it seems to initially.

Edited by: voce io at: 2/25/04 11:17 am

Rairun

Registered User

Posts: 197

(2/25/04 11:52 am)

Reply

Re: A Dialogue on the Sexes, by the Sexes, for the Sexes

---

The problem is that it seems like your new goal is to "fix" girls, without even knowing if they want to be fixed. If anything, I think everyone (males and females) should know that they can stand up for themselves and make their own choices. What you are doing is trying to change them so they make the choices you want them to.

"Do what you want others to do to you". You are saying this because you think it's unfair that you were hurt. You assumed (and you are probably right) that the person who hurt you doesn't want to be hurt, so in that statement you found a way to assign blame. The problem here is that things don't always go the way we want them to, you must be smart enough to have noticed that already. Sometimes we have to do things that hurt other people. Maybe you are into being beaten up by your parents, or being treated like crap by your girlfriends, but some people aren't. When those people stand up for themselves, they usually hurt the ones who want to own them. I'm sure it's painful for a possessive mother to let her daughter go, but should the daughter give up her life so she doesn't hurt her? It goes against your golden rule, and it's immoral by your definition. Immorality, that word makes me cringe.

Do what you feel you have to do. If you really don't want to get yourself hurt, don't. Take responsibility for your own feelings for once. I know that this sounds rather harsh, but I mean it. I hope it doesn't create any animosity between us.

Edited by: Rairun at: 2/25/04 11:55 am

ynithrix
Registered User
Posts: 236
(2/25/04 12:53 pm)
Reply

re:

---

"There are only two things that assuage their loneliness - other men, and women."

Not at all--I have worked with and read of many men whose only desire is to their work. I think it is true that women need company of other people, but not at all for all men.

I think it has to do with why one wants anything else. A man is driven to do things, he looks at objects for their ability to help him in this, all are his tools to whatever end. A woman generally seeks attention; being with a rich man or covering herself in jewelry achieve the same thing.

"Both like lazy entertainment stuff, but the men's stuff is active and mostly practical while the women's stuff is sedate and decorative."

I agree. The ends in each case are for personal benefit. Women's dislike of sexual objectification seemed to start when feminism arose: feminism so outlaws femininity in women that they despise their own virtue.

A woman's momentariness is in consequence of her detachment from any absolute truth. As I have said, truth, for a woman, is whatever they need/want to be true at any given moment. If she asks how she looks in a new dress, she needs to be told something positive. As a simple analogy, imagine how a vector system is affected when its origin is changed.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2411
(2/25/04 12:57 pm)
Reply

Re: re:

---

You've never made love to a woman ynithrix. It can be rather interesting if you take your clothes off.

voce io

Registered User

Posts: 740

(2/25/04 1:00 pm)

Reply

Re: A Dialogue on the Sexes, by the Sexes, for the Sexes

---

Third Expansion

The problem is that it seems like your new goal is to "fix" girls, without even knowing if they want to be fixed. If anything, I think everyone (males and females) should know that they can stand up for themselves and make their own choices. What you are doing is trying to change them so they make the choices you want them to.

Everyone wants to change for the better, this is how.

"Do what you want others to do to you". You are saying this because you think it's unfair that you were hurt. You assumed (and you are probably right) that the person who hurt you doesn't want to be hurt, so in that statement you found a way to assign blame.

No, I'm saying it because it's true. Everyone wants to feel good. For some, pain feels good. Everything any person does is an attempt to feel good, even morality which is sometimes seen as a denial of getting what you personally/temporarily want. I'm not saying it because I was hurt, which was unavoidable, I'm saying it because I don't want to hurt (knowing what it's like).

The problem here is that things don't always go the way we want them to, you must be smart enough to have noticed that already. Sometimes we have to do things that hurt other people. Maybe you are into being beaten up by your parents, or being treated like crap by your girlfriends, but some people aren't. When those people stand up for themselves, they usually hurt the ones who want to own them. I'm sure it's painful for a possessive mother to let her daughter go, but should the daughter give up her life so she doesn't hurt her? It goes against your golden rule, and it's immoral by your definition. Immorality, that word makes me cringe.

In a situation where any choice you make has negative affects, you choose the one which has the least. In the case of your friend, where her mother would kill herself if the daughter started being independent, it's most likely a better choice to please her mother and not be so independent. If we're irresponsible, we should expect irresponsibility from others.

Do what you feel you have to do. If you really don't want to get yourself hurt, don't. Take responsibility for your own feelings for once. I know that this sounds rather harsh, but I mean it. I hope it doesn't create any animosity between us.

I am finally taking responsibility for my feelings. How do you figure I'm not? There is finally clarity in my desires. I'm not repressing myself, I'm thinking clearly for once. If you disagree, I guess that's cool. I don't see why you're disagreeing with the truth, though.

Edited by: voce io at: 2/25/04 1:01 pm

Rairun
Registered User
Posts: 198
(2/25/04 1:50 pm)
Reply

Re: A Dialogue on the Sexes, by the Sexes, for the Sexes

---

Quote:

---

Rairun: The problem is that it seems like your new goal is to "fix" girls, without even knowing if they want to be fixed. If anything, I think everyone (males and females) should know that they can stand up for themselves and make their own choices. What you are doing is trying to change them so they make the choices you want them to.

Scott: Everyone wants to change for the better, this is how.

---

But "better" is subjective. It is different for every person. It can be different even for the same person, in different situations. And for some, there's nowhere better than the place where they stand.

Quote:

---

Rairun: "Do what you want others to do to you". You are saying this because you think it's unfair that you were hurt. You assumed (and you are probably right) that the person who hurt you doesn't want to be hurt, so in that statement you found a way to assign blame.

Scott: No, I'm saying it because it's true. Everyone wants to feel good. For some, pain feels good. Everything any person does is an attempt to feel good, even morality which is sometimes seen as a denial of getting what you personally/ temporarily want. I'm not saying it because I was hurt, which was unavoidable, I'm saying it because I don't want to hurt (knowing what it's like).

---

What's true in saying that we should do what we want others to do to us? You aren't trying to describe anything that can be true or false, you are trying to tell people how they should act.

If you truly don't want to make people hurt, don't. If you don't want to hurt, don't.

Quote:

---

Rairun: The problem here is that things don't always go the way we want them to, you must be smart enough to have noticed that already. Sometimes we have to do things that hurt other people. Maybe you are into being beaten up by your parents, or being treated like crap by your girlfriends, but some people aren't. When those people stand up for themselves, they usually hurt the ones who want to own them. I'm sure it's painful for a possessive mother to let her daughter go, but should the daughter give up her life so she doesn't hurt her? It goes against your golden rule, and it's immoral by your definition. Immorality, that word makes me cringe.

Scott: In a situation where any choice you make has negative affects, you choose the one which has the least. In the case of your friend, where her mother would kill herself if the daughter started being independent, it's most likely a better choice to please her mother and not be so independent. If we're irresponsible, we should expect irresponsibility from others.

---

She probably wouldn't kill herself, but even if she did, she does it to herself. In that situation, the daughter can try to be as nice as possible, but sometimes you reach a point that you can't afford being nice. She has to do her own things, and if it hurts her mother, I'm not going to be the one to say she's being immoral. Quite the opposite. We can try not to cause too much trouble if we wish, but in the end other people's feelings are their responsibility.

Quote:

---

Rairun: Do what you feel you have to do. If you really don't want to get yourself hurt, don't. Take responsibility for your own feelings for once. I know that this sounds rather harsh, but I mean it. I hope it doesn't create any animosity between us.

Scott: I am finally taking responsibility for my feelings. How do you figure I'm not? There is finally clarity in my desires. I'm not repressing myself, I'm thinking clearly for once. If you disagree, I guess that's cool. I don't see why you're disagreeing with the truth, though.

---

I don't know what goes inside your head, so I can't say for sure. But, like I said before, the things you say give me the impression that you want to change the whole world so it doesn't hurt you. That's not going to happen. If you don't feel like doing things that could hurt people, that's good, but you shouldn't expect them not to hurt you back. You can call the ones who do that immoral all you want, but most of the time they won't even be doing things to hurt you. They will do their things and, because you are in the way, you will happen to be hurt. If you really don't want to feel pain at all, don't get in the way.

I realize that some people have been emotionally abused for so long that they barely get by. In those cases, I think it is cruel to say that they are entirely responsible for their own pain, because they are so deep into it that they can't even start to see that. But that's not your situation, is it? If it is, I'm sorry for saying that.

voce io

Registered User

Posts: 748

(2/26/04 3:40 am)

Reply

Re: A Dialogue on the Sexes, by the Sexes, for the Sexes

---

Third Expansion, cont.

But "better" is subjective. It is different for every person. It can be different even for the same person, in different situations. And for some, there's nowhere better than the place where they stand.

That's true. Although, you haven't proven what I've said wrong by this.

What's true in saying that we should do what we want others to do to us? You aren't trying to describe anything that can be true or false, you are trying to tell people how they should act.

No, everyone already does this. (I can't make anyone breathe, they do it on their own. I can show them how to breathe better, possibly.) People have reasons for doing what they do, but it's generally not thought out, so they don't achieve what they wanted. You have reasons for getting out of bed in the morning; do you ask yourself "why do I get out of bed?". You have reasons for replying to this topic; do you think "why am I replying to this topic?" When you come up with the answers to these questions, do you ask yourself about those as well? No, of course not! That's a lot of work, but that's how you achieve wisdom and transcendence! If you don't think it out, it's unconscious and most likely momentary. This is the way things are, I'm not making this up.

I have a choice: to help people be wise, or to not help people be wise. Wisdom is great, it brings freedom and happiness. Why would I ever choose to not try and help someone be free and happy? I want you to have what's good. Is stupidity good? I don't think it helps you achieve what you want, and I don't think it makes you happy.

If you truly don't want to make people hurt, don't. If you don't want to hurt, don't.

Right, exactly.

She probably wouldn't kill herself, but even if she did, she does it to herself. In that situation, the daughter can try to be as nice as possible, but sometimes you reach a point that you can't afford being nice. She has to do her own things, and if it hurts her mother, I'm not going to be the one to say she's being immoral. Quite the opposite. We can try not to cause too much trouble if we wish, but in the end other people's feelings are their responsibility.

So, you're saying it's acceptable for yourself to come into my house and rape my family, tear off all of our kneecaps with a hunting knife, cut off our genitalia, and make us fuck each other with sharp objects (if you so wish)? Since "morality" is such an icky word, in your opinion? You'd do that gruesome thing to us, and let us live with our feelings because we are responsible for our own feelings?

I'm not really overexaggerating. Our feelings can depend on other's actions. The majority of people want to be treated well. If you did that to my family, you should be expecting someone else to do that to you. If you expect others to treat you well, and you don't treat them well, you'll just be let down. If you treat others like shit and expect shit, then that's a different story. I don't know what kind of a fucked up human being actually doesn't care when someone calls them a name, or degrades them in some way. They can repress it, I guess, and make themselves believe they feel okay.

I don't know what goes inside your head, so I can't say for sure. But, like I said before, the things you say give me the impression that you want to change the whole world so it doesn't hurt you. That's not going to happen.

Did I say I want to change the world world so it doesn't hurt me? The reason for me writing this and showing it to people is so they can understand how the world works, and can be happy.

Also, if I didn't want to get hurt by people, I wouldn't write things that seem misogynistic. I knew Dana would react, she's a fiesty feminist. She gets really frusturated, hurt and angry by all of this. My goal wasn't her reaction though. My goal was her eventual cultivation of wisdom.

If you don't feel like doing things that could hurt people, that's good, but you shouldn't expect them not to hurt you back. You can call the ones who do that immoral all you want, but most of the time they won't even be doing things to hurt you. They will do their things and, because you are in the way, you will happen to be hurt. If you really don't want to feel pain at all, don't get in the way.

Duh. Did I say I expect people not to hurt me?

I realize that some people have been emotionally abused for so long that they barely get by. In those cases, I think it is cruel to say that they are entirely responsible for their own pain, because they are so deep into it that they can't even start to see that. But that's not your situation, is it? If it is, I'm sorry for saying that.

No, I've had a pretty easy going life so don't worry about it. I'm entirely responsible for my own pain, and also responsible for other's pain. If you don't want to accept that you can hurt people, then that's fine. I can't make you what you don't want to be. I'm just trying to help the world in a small way, though. If you don't want to help, you have your reasons. I can ask you to consider your reasons for that, though. Why don't you want to help? When I met you first, that's all you wanted - helping people. Now, in order to deny what I say about women, you say that people are responsible for themselves and that you don't want to help. You don't want to be moral. Think about what you're saying.

Edited by: voce io at: 2/26/04 3:41 am

Rairun
Registered User
Posts: 199
(2/26/04 7:31 am)
Reply

Re: A Dialogue on the Sexes, by the Sexes, for the Sexes

---

Quote:

---

Rairun: But "better" is subjective. It is different for every person. It can be different even for the same person, in different situations. And for some, there's nowhere better than the place where they stand.

Scott: That's true. Although, you haven't proven what I've said wrong by this.

---

Let me see if I got this right. You say that girls are momentary and that being momentary is bad. For you, being transcendental is good, so you want every single person to be that way.

What if someone likes being momentary? Wouldn't they consider it good instead of bad? If you make them act in a more transcendental way, you are actually making things worse for them.

Quote:

---

Rairun: What's true in saying that we should do what we want others to do to us? You aren't trying to describe anything that can be true or false, you are trying to tell people how they should act.

Scott: No, everyone already does this. (I can't make anyone breathe, they do it on their own. I can show them how to breathe better, possibly.) People have reasons for doing what they do, but it's generally not thought out, so they don't achieve what they wanted. You have reasons for getting out of bed in the morning; do you ask yourself "why do I get out of bed?". You have reasons for replying to this topic; do you think "why am I replying to this topic?" When you come up with the answers to these questions, do you ask yourself about those as well? No, of course not! That's a lot of work, but that's how you achieve wisdom and transcendence! If you don't think it out, it's unconscious and most likely momentary. This is the way things are, I'm not making this up.

---

No, you are wrong in saying that everyone already follows your golden rule, and they don't always refuse to follow it because they are dumb. It's just not the most intelligent way to reach their goals in many situations. Being smart and considering all information you've got in order to act is not the same thing as following the golden rule. Not at all.

Quote:

---

I have a choice: to help people be wise, or to not help people be wise. Wisdom is great, it brings freedom and happiness. Why would I ever choose to not try and help someone be free and happy? I want you to have what's good. Is stupidity good? I don't think it helps you achieve what you want, and I don't think it makes you happy.

---

Being momentary and being a dumbass who can't understand the situation he's in are two very different things. If wisdom is standing up for yourself, then I can't see how it'd hurt anyone to be wise. But that's not what the wisdom you talk about is. Your wisdom is no wisdom at all to me. It might work for you because that's actually what you want for your life, but don't try to make it universal, because it isn't.

Quote:

---

Rairun: She probably wouldn't kill herself, but even if she did, she does it to herself. In that situation, the daughter can try to be as nice as possible, but sometimes you reach a point that you can't afford being nice. She has to do her own things, and if it hurts her mother, I'm not going to be the one to say she's being immoral. Quite the opposite. We can try not to cause too much trouble if we wish, but in the end other people's feelings are their responsibility.

Scott: So, you're saying it's acceptable for yourself to come into my house and rape my family, tear off all of our kneecaps with a hunting knife, cut off our genitalia, and make us fuck each other with sharp objects (if you so wish)? Since "morality" is such an icky word, in your opinion? You'd do that gruesome thing to us, and let us live with our feelings because we are responsible for our own feelings?

---

I didn't say it's either acceptable or unacceptable. Why do you need to judge everything in terms of good and bad? If someone tried to do that to your family, I'd try to stop it because I like you. I'd probably try to stop it even if I didn't know you, because the idea of rape and violence doesn't appeal to me at all. But that's just me. I do what I feel I have to do, and go on with my life.

I should also point out that you are confusing two different things. One thing is to act in order to hurt people; another is to act and end up hurting people in the process.

Quote:

---

I'm not really overexaggerating. Our feelings can depend on other's actions.

---

Yes, but it's not one-sided. It depends on how you choose to react to other people's actions, except in cases of physical violence.

Quote:

---

The majority of people want to be treated well. If you did that to my family, you should be expecting someone else to do that to you.

---

The first sentence is true, the second one is false. If I did that, I shouldn't expect that to be done to me - I should just know that it can be done. The thing is that I should know it even if I never did anything to anyone! No matter what I do, I should know that someone can do it to me.

Quote:

---

If you expect others to treat you well, and you don't treat them well, you'll just be let down.

---

Not necessarily. Someone who's in a position of power can usually treat people like crap, and still be treated well. If you don't have more power than people around you, you can treat them well and still be treated like crap.

Of course, it's rather obvious that I'm going to make people mad at me if I do certain things to them. Is that your point? If it is, your golden rule is a rude attempt at describing this sort of behavior.

Quote:

---

I don't know what kind of a fucked up human being actually doesn't care when someone calls them a name, or degrades them in some way. They can repress it, I guess, and make themselves believe they feel okay.

---

Nice to meet you, my name is Matheus. It's not a matter of repression, it's a matter of not giving a fuck about it.

Quote:

---

Did I say I want to change the world so it doesn't hurt me?
The reason for me writing this and showing it to people is so they can understand how the world works, and can be happy.

---

You never said it, but I thought there was a great chance for it to be true because of the way you say things. If showing how the world works was your reason, you didn't do a very good job.

Quote:

---

Also, if I didn't want to get hurt by people, I wouldn't write things that seem misogynist. I knew Dana would react, she's a fiesty feminist. She gets really frustrated, hurt and angry by all of this. My goal wasn't her reaction though. My goal was her eventual cultivation of wisdom.

---

Even though I know her pretty well, I can't really speak on her behalf. But I'm guessing that she got upset at it because you're turning into a gender issue what is not a gender issue at all. Also, it must be frustrating to talk to someone who listens to what you have to say from the point of view of a wiser person, hoping that one day you'll be as wise as him. It's like talking to a wall.

Quote:

---

No, I've had a pretty easy going life so don't worry about it. I'm entirely responsible for my own pain, and also responsible for other's pain. If you don't want to accept that you can hurt people, then that's fine. I can't make you what you don't want to be. I'm just trying to help the world in a small way, though. If you don't want to help, you have your reasons. I can ask you to consider your reasons for that, though. Why don't you want to help? When I met you first, that's all you wanted - helping people. Now, in order to deny what I say about women, you say that people are responsible for themselves and that you don't want to help. You don't want to be moral. Think about what you're saying.

---

I'm not saying any of this to defend women. I just don't see being momentary as a problem at all, unless you define it as stupidity. And I really don't think that girls are stupider than boys, I'm sorry. How long has it been since we first met? Almost two years? I changed a lot during that time, and it doesn't have anything to do with denying what you say. People can hurt others emotionally because they are allowed to do so by the ones who are hurt. I can't say I do that often at all, but no, I'm not moral. You can keep all your morality to yourself.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2422

(2/26/04 9:27 am)

Reply

Re: A Dialogue on the Sexes, by the Sexes, for the Sexes

---

Scotts problem is that he wants to be moral! (:D)

voce io

Registered User

Posts: 752

(2/26/04 10:28 am)

Reply

Re: A Dialogue on the Sexes, by the Sexes, for the Sexes

---

Let me see if I got this right. You say that girls are momentary and that being momentary is bad. For you, being transcendental is good, so you want every single person to be that way.

What if someone likes being momentary? Wouldn't they consider it good instead of bad? If you make them act in a more transcendental way, you are actually making things worse for them.

The first paragraph is right, yeah. No one is able to like being momentary. People make choices based on what they think is right, always. Even if they make the choice to not do something right, the reasoning behind it is based on "this will keep me sane" or something along those lines. Just you asking this shows that you don't really understand what I'm talking about.

No, you are wrong in saying that everyone already follows your golden rule, and they don't always refuse to follow it because they are dumb. It's just not the most intelligent way to reach their goals in many situations. Being smart and considering all information you've got in order to act is not the same thing as following the golden rule. Not at all.

You're right, my bad. What I should have said is that people are always rational, and it's just unconscious. Conscious rationality is morality, and a conscious rational being knows the golden rule as their responsibility.

..I get confused in all these words sometimes, forgive me.

Being momentary and being a dumbass who can't understand the situation he's in are two very different things. If wisdom is standing up for yourself, then I can't see how it'd hurt anyone to be wise. But that's not what the wisdom you talk about is. Your wisdom is no wisdom at all to me. It might work for you because that's actually what you want for your life, but don't try to make it universal, because it isn't.

Wisdom is seeing a pattern in a cyclic pattern. Lets say a person feels shy one day, and it eventually snowballs into an anxiety attack everytime they are around people. If they were introduced to wisdom, and applied it, they'd see theres nothing to be afraid of and they'd be wise. "Standing up for yourself" isn't wisdom, necessarily. A person can be in a gang and when another gang starts calling his gang names, is fighting that gang wise? I don't think so, unless in a rare case where the other gang would actually hurt the guy if he didn't do a thing about the name calling...so your type of wisdom isn't really wisdom at all. Think about it.

I didn't say it's either acceptable or unacceptable. Why do you need to judge everything in terms of good and bad?

Are you sure I'm judging everything in terms of good and bad?

If someone tried to do that to your family, I'd try to stop it because I like you. I'd probably try to stop it even if I didn't know you, because the idea of rape and violence doesn't appeal to me at all. But that's just me. I do what I feel I have to do, and go on with my life.

...Then you're making decisions based on reasons, which means you're a rational person. If you turn your reasoning into a conscious process, you will most likely come up with the same type of stuff that I'm coming up with. Don't think I'm slandering you by calling you 'unconscious' either; pretty much everyone is unconscious, and I'm unconscious in a lot of areas.

I should also point out that you are confusing two different things. One thing is to act in order to hurt people; another is to act and end up hurting people in the process.

No one has their primary goal in hurting someone as hurting someone. Their goal is to make themselves feel good.

Yes, but it's not one-sided. It depends on how you choose to react to other people's actions, except in cases of physical violence.

Imagine person A's father emotionally and mentally abused them throughout their life, calling them a faggot while showing them his dick...is person A still responsible for the reaction they have? You can say yes in some cases, but for the majority of people there'd be a rapturing of negative emotions throughout the rest of their lives, and they shouldn't be considered responsible for their own feeling bad about it.

The first sentence is true, the second one is false. If I did that, I shouldn't expect that to be done to me - I should just know that it can be done. The thing is that I should know it even if I never did anything to anyone! No matter what I do, I should know that someone can do it to me.

A valid point. Does it disprove anything I've said? All you've done is clarified what I've been saying.

Not necessarily. Someone who's in a position of power can usually treat people like crap, and still be treated well. If you don't have more power than people around you, you can treat them well and still be treated like crap.

"Power"?

Of course, it's rather obvious that I'm going to make people mad at me if I do certain things to them. Is that your point? If it is, your golden rule is a rude attempt at describing this sort of behavior.

My original point was that women are momentary, and men are transcendent. My point about morality is that everyone has it, and no one realizes they're doing it. The golden rule is about when someone does something mean to you, and you don't like it and don't want it to happen to others. It's a sign of maturing, and accepting responsibility.

Nice to meet you, my name is Matheus. It's not a matter of repression, it's a matter of not giving a fuck about it.

If you're making yourself not give a fuck, it's repression.

You never said it, but I thought there was a great chance for it to be true because of the way you say things. If showing how the world works was your reason, you didn't do a very good job.

Of course I didn't show how the entire world works, I'm showing a very small aspect which is almost impossible to see...the fact that women are less apt to being moral people, because of their tendency to be momentary. At least I'm attempting to show it, but I guess a person that puts their hands over their own eyes isn't ready to see.

Even though I know her pretty well, I can't really speak on her behalf. But I'm guessing that she got upset at it because you're turning into a gender issue what is not a gender issue at all.

Whoa! It IS a gender issue.

Also, it must be frustrating to talk to someone who listens to what you have to say from the point of view of a wiser person, hoping that one day you'll be as wise as him. It's like talking to a wall.

It isn't like that. It's like when you're a young kid, and you find something. You show your friends. When I talk to her, I'm not acting like some wise person; not when I talk to you either.

I'm not saying any of this to defend women. I just don't see being momentary as a problem at all, unless you define it as stupidity. And I really don't think that girls are stupider than boys, I'm sorry.

Not "stupid". Girls can seem smart, too. They generally aren't "wise", though. Wisdom is as I've described it above. Don't be so quick to reject my notions. Question them. Look at all possibilities. What are you doing at a Genius Forum, a place for philosophy, if you don't care about finding the truth? Finding the truth involves taking all ideas in mind, and testing them. Have you actually tested out what I'm saying? Have you had enough experience to?

How long has it been since we first met? Almost two years? I changed a lot during that time, and it doesn't have anything to do with denying what you say. People can hurt others emotionally because they are allowed to do so by the ones who are hurt. I can't say I do that often at all, but no, I'm not moral. You can keep all your morality to yourself.

All you're doing is playing around with words. The words have a meaning for actions which take place in the world. You are a moral person; you reason based on right and wrong. You reject morality because you haven't thought about it yet.

Rairun

Registered User

Posts: 200

(2/26/04 12:43 pm)

Reply

Re: A Dialogue on the Sexes, by the Sexes, for the Sexes

---

Quote:

---

The first paragraph is right, yeah. No one is able to like being momentary. People make choices based on what they think is right, always. Even if they make the choice to not do something right, the reasoning behind it is based on "this will keep me sane" or something along those lines. Just you asking this shows that you don't really understand what I'm talking about

---

Don't call it being momentary then, call it being stupid. If you want one thing and do another, that doesn't have anything to do with being momentary. It's called stupidity.

Quote:

---

What I should have said is that people are always rational, and it's just unconscious. Conscious rationality is morality, and a conscious rational being knows the golden rule as their responsibility.

---

I don't think they are always rational. When people do something they don't actually want to do, they are being stupid (irrational). A rational being has no rules as their responsibility. A irrational being might have them though, and that's exactly one of the things that can cause them to act stupidly.

Quote:

---

Wisdom is seeing a pattern in a cyclic pattern. Lets say a person feels shy one day, and it eventually snowballs into an anxiety attack everytime they are around people. If they were introduced to wisdom, and applied it, they'd see theres nothing to be afraid of and they'd be wise. "Standing up for yourself" isn't wisdom, necessarily. A person can be in a gang and when another gang starts calling his gang names, is fighting that gang wise? I don't think so, unless in a rare case where the other gang would actually hurt the guy if he didn't do a thing about the name calling...so your type of wisdom isn't really wisdom at all. Think about it.

---

Standing up for yourself is knowing that you can do whatever you want without worrying about concepts such as right and wrong. From that, you intelligently choose what you want to do based on your own personal (and arbitrary) preferences. If you think you can take the consequences for what you want to do, then you go for it.

Quote:

---

Are you sure I'm judging everything in terms of good and bad?

---

Unless you were confused and didn't choose your words well, yes.

Quote:

---

...Then you're making decisions based on reasons, which means you're a rational person. If you turn your reasoning into a conscious process, you will most likely come up with the same type of stuff that I'm coming up with. Don't think I'm slandering you by calling you 'unconscious' either; pretty much everyone is unconscious, and I'm unconscious in a lot of areas.

---

Uh, everyone makes decisions based on reasons. If we didn't have reasons, we wouldn't move. But, if you analyze your reasoning, you'll find out that your reasons are arbitrary.

I am fully conscious in my reasoning, but I can only speculate why my reasons are what they are.

Quote:

---

No one has their primary goal in hurting someone as hurting someone. Their goal is to make themselves feel good.

---

I personally don't know anyone who hurts people as their primary goal, but as we definitely can have other primary goals than feeling good, I must say that you are wrong. Maybe that person doesn't exist, but the point is that he can exist.

Still, you are right that there is no difference at all. So I correct myself and make it clear that not even the guy who raped your family should be blamed for his acts. Of course, that won't stop me from protecting your family, and I shouldn't be blamed for it. The law shouldn't be blamed for punishing him either.

Quote:

---

Imagine person A's father emotionally and mentally abused them throughout their life, calling them a faggot while showing them his dick...is person A still responsible for the reaction they have? You can say yes in some cases, but for the majority of people there'd be a rapturing of negative emotions throughout the rest of their lives, and they shouldn't be considered responsible for their own feeling bad about it.

---

If we are assuming that we can actually be considered responsible for our actions, then that person is just as responsible for their feelings as I am to mine. This is so because we don't actually choose, we are choice, which of course doesn't cause itself. The imaginary object doesn't exist, but if we are to talk about it, then yes, it is responsible.

Still, all this explanation doesn't matter at all. You can disagree with it and keep thinking that people can't be responsible for their feelings. The fact is that even if you know you are invariably going to hurt people, you don't have to stop it at all. And you shouldn't believe others when they say you shouldn't because it's immoral. That word doesn't matter at all.

Quote:

---

Rairun: The first sentence is true, the second one is false. If I did that, I shouldn't expect that to be done to me - I should just know that it can be done. The thing is that I should know it even if I never did anything to anyone! No matter what I do, I should know that someone can do it to me.

Scott: A valid point. Does it disprove anything I've said? All you've done is clarified what I've been saying.

---

Yes, it does disprove what you were saying. You were trying to say that we should do what we want others to do to us. I showed you how you have to know that "bad" things can happen, even if you are "moral". Give me one reason why I should do to others what I want done to me. There's no reason at all, expect maybe the existence of the Almighty Supreme Code Giver.

Of course I shouldn't do things if I don't want to face the consequences. But if I can get away with it, why not? If you knew a little bit of my personal life, you'd find it funny how I am saying this, because I don't think I ever do things that are considered dishonest or hateful. But I don't act that way because I am moral, I do it because it's who I am. Moral my ass.

Quote:

---

Rairun: Not necessarily. Someone who's in a position of power can usually treat people like crap, and still be treated well. If you don't have more power than people around you, you can treat them well and still be treated like crap.

Scott: "Power"?

---

What do you mean? You don't know what power is? I was going to explain it, but I think you are smart enough to figure it out by yourself.

Quote:

---

My original point was that women are momentary, and men are transcendent. My point about morality is that everyone has it, and no one realizes they're doing it.

---

I disagree with your original point. As I pointed out in the beginning of my post, you're just saying that women are stupid, and I don't see how women are stupider than men.

Everyone has preferences, but they are above morality.

Quote:

---

The golden rule is about when someone does something mean to you, and you don't like it and don't want it to happen to others. It's a sign of maturing, and accepting responsibility.

---

Wait, where do you get that kind of stuff from?! (wait, no, we don't need to know!!) Why shouldn't I want it to happen to others? I can understand why you don't, but why shouldn't you?

Quote:

---

Rairun: Nice to meet you, my name is Matheus. It's not a matter of repression, it's a matter of not giving a fuck about it.

Scott: If you're making yourself not give a fuck, it's repression.

---

I'm not making myself stop caring, I just don't care.

Quote:

---

Of course I didn't show how the entire world works, I'm showing a very small aspect which is almost impossible to see...the fact that women are less apt to being moral people, because of their tendency to be momentary. At least I'm attempting to show it, but I guess a person that puts their hands over their own eyes isn't ready to see.

---

And I'm saying that morality is useless, that there's nothing wrong with being momentary (by my definition) and that girls aren't more momentary (by your definition) at all.

Quote:

---

Rairun: Even though I know her pretty well, I can't really speak on her behalf. But I'm guessing that she got upset at it because you're turning into a gender issue what is not a gender issue at all.

Scott: Whoa! It IS a gender issue.

---

If, as I pointed out in the beginning of the post, your definition of "momentary" is the same as my definition of "stupid", it is not a gender issue at all.

Quote:

---

It isn't like that. It's like when you're a young kid, and you find something. You show your friends. When I talk to her, I'm not acting like some wise person; not when I talk to you either.

---

And when your friends genuinely disagree with what you have found, you say that one day they will become wise and see things the same way as you.

Quote:

---

Not "stupid". Girls can seem smart, too. They generally aren't "wise", though. Wisdom is as I've described it above. Don't be so quick to reject my notions. Question them. Look at all possibilities. What are you doing at a Genius Forum, a place for philosophy, if you don't care about finding the truth? Finding the truth involves taking all ideas in mind, and testing them. Have you actually tested out what I'm saying? Have you had enough experience to?

---

By your definition, is being wise the same as being moral? If it is, I'd be glad if girls, or anyone else for that matter, weren't wise. Your ideas and possibilities are uninspiring and boring. I know very well where you are coming from and why. So no, I'm not just misunderstanding your genius.

Quote:

---

All you're doing is playing around with words. The words have a meaning for actions which take place in the world. You are a moral person; you reason based on right and wrong. You reject morality because you haven't thought about it yet.

---

No, I'm making a very specific point and you fail to see it. I'm not a moral person, I reason based on preferences that are neither right or wrong. And I have probably thought more about morality than you could ever have, so don't bring up those silly arguments.

Edited by: Rairun at: 2/26/04 12:50 pm

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 755
(2/26/04 1:22 pm)
Reply

Re: A Dialogue on the Sexes, by the Sexes, for the Sexes

---

What are you trying to accomplish by arguing in this thread about this?

Rairun Registered User Posts: 202 (2/26/04 2:24 pm) Reply	Re: A Dialogue on the Sexes, by the Sexes, for the Sexes <hr/> Nothing, it's just fun. That doesn't mean I'm making things up just to argue though.
voce io Registered User Posts: 756 (2/26/04 5:26 pm) Reply 	Re: A Dialogue on the Sexes, by the Sexes, for the Sexes <hr/> I'm not here to have fun, so I won't respond to you anymore in this thread.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2426 (2/27/04 1:15 am) Reply 	Re: A Dialogue on the Sexes, by the Sexes, for the Sexes <hr/> {:D} So did she know you taped the conversation Scott?!
voce io Registered User Posts: 758 (2/27/04 5:15 am) Reply 	Re: A Dialogue on the Sexes, by the Sexes, for the Sexes <hr/> She gave me permission afterwards. It wasn't a taped conversation, it was on MSN messenger.

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Absolutivity, Circlematics

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
huzheng Registered User Posts: 45 (2/23/04 5:37 pm) Reply	Absolutivity, Circlematics <hr/> Absolutivity, Circlematics 2004.2.15 2004.2.11 "A person can inwardly perish through nothing other than a lack of religion." -- Weininger. Why men need religion while women seems needn't? We need religion so we won't inwardly perished, but woman needn't religion, because they treat their children as their succession inwardly, as the children are borne by women, but not men, men don't treat their children as their succession inwardly. So, men enter into Absolute by religion, women enter into Absolute by believe that their children are their succession. You may say belief is the weakness of human, but human only become most powerful by belief, and belief is most powerful. All intellectual living creatures need belief after they find the ego. Material and low level living creatures needn't. Can i overcome this weakness? That needn't belief? As being the founder of the greatest religion, the greatest genius? No, i can't escape from the need of belief too, as the founder of a religion need belief most intensely, i have already believed that i am the genius, believed that i entered into the Absolute, and belief can't be removed once formed, people may change the belief by new belief or seek the new belief, both are still need belief. Buddhism and Christianity can't convince human now, so i created the genius religion, genius religion will last for a very long period, as its background is very profound.

I solved my problem now, and i know this will solve many other geniuses' problem. We find science can only generate more and more truths, so it should have no end, and human need one truth, genius religion should can help science's development for a long period, then, may be just like Buddhism stopped human evolution and Christianity become stupifying religion, genius religion should have fault too, although we can't find its fault explicitly presently, maybe its fault is just because genius religion helped science's development, make human become altruists, and make human become extinct at last, as many other already extincted highly developed living creatures. This is inevitable. Living creatures generate from the material, and will surely return to the material at last. Nothing can escape from the eternal circle, we can't change the law of the universe, we can't change the truth, and, eternal circle is the best form of the world, the only perfection.

What about time? The universe is always there(although it is always changing its form), the law as eternal circle never change, so time is there, have no beginning, no end.

I walk in the university in the night, the world is too beautiful, and i can't hold to laugh to myself, i am too interesting, and what i am doing is too interesting too. Is genius religion a religion? I think i just terminated all the religions by created a interesting religion :_) May be i am playing the world, i know my philosophy will really change the whole human, it have already changed everyone who read it, my roommates said that philosophy is terminated by me each time i fail love, yes, my philosophy get big progress every time i fail love :_) The world is playing the genius at the same time. You may find what i am good at is just reformulate, i absorb all of thinking of geniuses quickly, learn all the learnings happily, and change my philosophy according to my personal affairs by develop it higher and higher consistently :_)

2004.2.12

Now i use my utmost truth to explain Einstein's relativity,  $e=mc^2$ , energy and material is one, they convert to each other, when material become the particle which have no quality, this particle(photon according to Einstein's relativity) have the biggest velocity. So easy to understand.

Now i explain the universe, the universe just like the sun, the materials assembled together and composed the sun, it shine, numerous photons shoot out from it. According to my utmost truth(may be you still don't agree that it is utmost truth, so i add the "my"), the particle which have quality and which have no quality is one, just like the representation of 0 and 1 in the computer can change to each other and have no change, we say the photon have no quality, we can say the earth as a particle have no quality too, the numerous planets are particles, have no quality, if you treat photon as have quality, the photons shoot out from the sun, the numerous planets shoot out from the "sun", and this can explain why the universe is extending, the velocity that planets extending is the same as the velocity of the photon, every particle, whether it have quality or not, whether it is a particle or a planet(in human's eyes), is moving by this velocity, their different direction created other velocity. Every planet, every particle, is a cosmos. The eternal circle.

May be there still have some mistake in my conjecture, but they can be easily fixed if we get the correct knowledges. It is very easy to get truths, from truth.

The utmost truth can explain everything.

The Ultimate Wisdom.

Do you trust me? the genius of geniuses, the hierarch of the genius religion?

:)

==

Genius become immortal only after his desire for immortality disappeared, genius get the true love at last by devoted true love.

"The highest expression of all morality is: Be!" -- Weininger. Yes, selfish on immortality is still not the highest morality which i said ago, after the last selfishness, the last vanity disappeared, you get the highest morality, become eternal, become "Be!". Weininger wrote through two whole nights, and suddenly found the solution to a problem which had previously tortured him incessantly:"Souls, individuals, are not the ultimately real; they, too, are still the expression of vanity, the attachment of worth to the person. Only the Good, which contains all individual elements within it, is of the highest reality", i solved my problem last night too, the problem which start to exist in my heart when i understand everyone, including the me, will dead, which make me shed tears at that time in my very young childhood. We solve the same problem by realized the same thing at last. Let me paste Weininger's last words here:"Man realises his own essence through things. Every realisation is redemption, system and substantiation is atonement. Every realisation is rebirth".

:) I don't know whether the precious smile symbol is smile or not. There are still many books that i need to read or read again, and i think one of my success is realized this without intention to commit suicide.

But, Weininger committed suicide days after realized this, Nietzsche went mad soon after he understand eternal circle, oh, I should have no danger, as Buddha understand this under the tree of Buddha when he is 35 and still alive for a long time :) But mine is higher than Buddha, as absorbed the truths from science, i can solve metaphysic problems: the universe is eternal, unlimited, body and spirit is one, just like material and energy change to each other eternally and have no difference, we exist after death as the universe exists.

There should be only one possibility for me, "future so brilliant that I don't dare to think of it" :) Chance doesn't exist to god.

"Innocence is ignorance. To know and remain innocent would be the highest", this is the next to last words Weininger get, Weininger get to know innocent, but failed to remain innocent, so can't bear the burden. Buddha etc. failed to know innocent. I find now i am still very innocent even after these days' intense thinking :)

I am creating a matrix, everyone who thinks will fall into it and can't escape from it, and i am the god of the matrix :_) May be the next greatest genius is the one who break it, who never think. No one can win me, if he/she/it thinks.

:_)

"Ultimately, how can I blame women for waiting for a man? The man also wants nothing but her. There is no man who would not take pleasure in exercising sexual effect upon a woman. The hatred of woman is always only the not yet overcome hatred of one's own sexuality", you can know that regard Weininger as misogynist is wrong from this, and i understand this by "Why girl play piano with the window open? Because she is seeking her boy, just like you seek your girl by glance at the window". Weininger's love is as intense as mine.

Human(and other intellectual living creatures) become strong because of the ability to think, but think is the weakness of human too. Your strongness is just your weakness, this is applicable to everything. Strongness and weakness is one, oh, another truth of truths get out by the utmost truth.

Human will be extincted at last because of my thinking, just like the barbarian who don't think destroy the ancient civilization, then the barbarian start to think. The eternal circle. I can't stop human from thinking. No one can escape from the eternal circle, no one can change the utmost truth.

Things become reverse after reach the limit. The eternal circle.

Tai Ji graph is right, i am the darkness.

:_) You may be confused, you may feel i must be the biggest sophist, i tell you good is bad, bad is good, life is death, death is life, the extinction of human is enter into eternal world :) It is easy to understand, dog is good, wolf is bad, this is according to human is good, human is beautiful, this is in human's eyes, the man who make human extinct is the darkness, but he is helping human enter into eternal world in fact, what make me did these things? Not me, but the nature, the law of the nature. The genius have a ego, which nature give him, he save the ego by return the ego to the nature.

"The Devil takes revenge on God for being created by Him. He is the person who smugly takes pleasure in his existence and influence, without believing that this influence is only serving the Good", yes, but the devil is created by the nature while nature creating the god, the pure human, and, Weininger get this at late:"The Devil is the man who has all but the Good, knows the whole of heaven without Truth, while all exists only through the Good."

Highly developed civilization would like to be perished by barbarian, because they would like to follow the nature.

I find my words become too cool now :_) But it is very easily to understand if you keep thinking. Oh, what i am doing :_) Thinking is so interesting.

Yes, accept everything, because there is only One, no difference. All are truths, after you understand truth.

Love everything :)

I have too many love too devote, and more and more, after devoted more and more :) haha, too happy :) How can i exist :_) I know i astonished everyone :_)

Keep innocent, have you understand it now? The child love everything, so everything love he/she, and he/she is the happiest. I walk on the road, i can feel, the earth, the universe, the materials, the nature, love me. :)

I never fail love, i never failed love ago, and will never fail love :_) Too interesting. I am so wise, hoho.

Haha, human seek for the truth for thousands of years, and get it at last :) Do we need to make a box and save the truth into it, leave it to other evolving creatures? :) The universe is the best box. The highly developed civilization love the barbarian deeply, because they see their childhood from the barbarian. Human cost about 5000 years to grow up, i am 21 now, so human civilization will disappear from the earth about 25000 years later, some of they leave the earth, explore the universe and become the lowest life form as spread life in the universe or become materials at last, some of they remain on the earth, disappear when the barbarian come and leave some trace for the newly evolved human which come from apes.

Oh, i find i overcome the weakness that need belief insensibly, i needn't belief now, because i just understood the truth.

Do you find that i can explain everything? Because i know the truth at the beginning, because i know nothing at the beginning, even when i was only a particle, i am a microcosm, i am a universe. So, "The genius is a man who knows everything without having learned it", he learn from himself, when he understand himself, he understand the universe.

After i understand i was a microcosm as a particle, i get to know i am just the universe. "Morality expresses itself thus: Act in full consciousness, that is, act so that in every moment you are whole, your entire individuality is there. Man experiences this individuality over the course of his life only in successive moments: that is why time is immoral and no living person ever holy, perfect. If man once acts with the strongest will so that all universality of his self (and of the world, for he is indeed the microcosm) is set in the moment, then has he overcome time and become divine", i have already get the full consciousness, and become divine. I am the god, the nature is the god, i am the nature, the nature is me.

God is not boring because he put himself into the eternal circle, hide himself, find himself, know nothing, know everything. Why i understand all of you? Because everyone of you is some portion of me, all of the living creatures are some portion of me, everything is some portion of me, as i am the universe, i am the all, the nature. I am everything.

1=1. Mathematics terminated. You know, again, i am not joking :)

Oh, the cat in the store is so lovely, i play with it happily :) I love it so deeply. That cat which died in my childhood didn't died.

I find my skull is very big and plump and beautiful, suergaz, i heard that you are going to cut off all your long hair to show your big skull and "become wrathful and stormy to impress some kind of fear upon the dullards", mine should be bigger than yours :) I can't hold to laugh :_)

2004.2.13

<http://reciteword.cosoft.org.cn/yaoguang/pixmaps/huzheng.png>

Here is a photo of me take on 2004.2.9, i know it may give you the feel of a savage when you glance for the first time :_) But you will find this is the most beautiful head soon(better than Einstein at least :_)), Socrates was regard as ugly because of his big skull too, while all others' beautiful monkeyly skull is small :_)

What is time? Particles' different direction created distance, then created other velocity, and distance and velocity give us the sense of time, created time. Can human overcome time? That time become slow? This is the same as whether velocity can change, velocity never change, it is only the different direction give us the delusion that there have different velocity, but every particle is moving at the same velocity in fact, whether it have quality or not, as in the photon's eyes, earth have no quality. The speed of time is fix as the speed of particle's moving velocity is fixed. Whether time have direction? Yes, as the particles are moving to every direction, each in a fixed direction, in our world, the world that we regard earth have quality, we think time have only one direction, but in the photon's world, time is in the other direction, although time is ascending in that world too, just like, we stand on the south pole of the earth, the direction from the foot to head is the up direction, when we stand on the north pole of the earth, it is the same, both are up, although it is the completely different direction.

The earth is a particle, the sun is a particle, the solar system is a particle, the galaxy is a particle, do you understand now?

The universe is full filled, some are filled with the particles which have quality, the other are filled with the particles have no quality, and particle is composed by particles, some have quality, the other are filled with particles have no quality.

I understand why woman have no interest in seek truth now, as i described ago, men need religion, women needn't as they treat their children as their succession inwardly, when men are seeking belief, men are seeking truth. Men and women's physical difference make their spirit develop to the two direction, which make men think women have no ego. Boy get a ego when he know he can't borne children as girl and he will die. Man and woman is one, as human, another truth of truths come out from utmost truth.

Languages are created by the geniuses, the first word he create should be "i", when he find a ego. "As speech has been created by a few great men, the most extraordinary wisdom lies concealed in it, a wisdom which reveals itself to a few ardent explorers but which is usually overlooked by the stupid professional philologists", "I" is life, "s" should related to woman, as the shape of woman, and s-he indicated this.

The god in the myth is god, as me.

"'The world is my representation' - there must be a reason why this is eternally true and cannot be refuted. All these things I see are not the whole truth, they always conceal the highest being from my view. But when I came into being, I required this self-deception and this appearance. When I wanted to enter this world, I renounced wanting only the truth. All things are only appearances, i.e., they always reflect only my own subjectivity back to me", yes, human is beautiful is only because human think they are beautiful, but there have no beautiful or ugly in fact, if you understand my utmost truth, you won't insist on anything, and, just enjoy the life, become happy, as you are happy if you think you are happy, you are sorrow if you think you are sorrow, you are beautiful if you think you are beautiful, you are god if you think you are god, do you understand now? :) Mad man think others are mad men, we think barbarian is barbarian, barbarian think we are barbarian. All are right. All are truths of the utmost truth.

Have you trust me now? Look at my eyes, his smile tell you that he understand everything :)

Genius tortured because of his love and his wisdom, now we can lead happy life at last :_) Or we were always happy :) Oh, things happened on me ago is so... :) The burden is so heavy, but anyway, it is very interesting. Everyone would like to repeat your life again, right? So god is not boring. Everything is predestined, chance doesn't exists, because the history is fixed, so the feature is fixed too, the eternal circle :) History and feature is one, feature become history, history become feature, again and again.

I am most lucky, as i am the god :_)

There have no beginning and no end, beginning and end are the delusion, beginning and end is one, as the eternal circle. There have no different velocity, the different velocity is the delusion. There have no up and down, they are delusion. There have no good or bad, no beautiful or ugly, no...

The burden of understand everything is very heavy, i sit there, have the lunch slowly like a infant, and look at others, my psychology is the same as a infant now, i feel my heart is stopped and is too heavy, if i try to recall what is the happiest period of my life. I want to know nothing, to experience those most happy time again, again, and again.

There is a Hu Zheng in the other world, doing the same things at the same time as me, i am composed by the particles which have quality, he is composed by the particles which have no quality, and we are at the same world too, this is why genius never feel alone when he is alone, this is why he love himself is love the whole world, love the whole world is love himself, this is why he understand himself is understand the whole world.

Idealist:"The world is in me", materialist:"I am in the world", both of you are right, the world is in you, you are in the world, as you are a world too.

Pi, the number after 3.1415926... is unlimited, if there is 1. 1 is unlimited, if you think Pi as 1. 1 and Pi can change to each other and have no difference. The numbers after 3.14 seems come out by random, by chance, but they are predestined in fact, each number's appear times should be more and more equal after count for enough times, as pi is related to circle, and the circle is perfect and impartial. You know the numbers of pi is predestined after you understand pi is the relation of the perimeter and diameter, you know everything is predestined after you understand the utmost truth.

Have you once stand between two mirrors? You left is your right, and your right is your left again, again and again, they are images of you, you are a image of anyone of them too, there are numerous you, the inner seems smaller, but they are at the same size in fact, and have no difference.

<http://reciteword.cosoft.org.cn/one.png>

Here is the graph drawn by me to describe the world, the utmost truth. It can be draw by recursion, copy, zoom in, inverse, and paste to the original graph twice, then again and again. It can be draw by draw the smaller graph again and again too. Both are right, and have no difference, but the first method is convenient on computer. People often think the second method is not recursion, as used when draw on a paper, but it is recursion too in fact, you move your eyes more and more near, this is doing zoom out. The biggest circle you see, is the smallest too.

There are three main constant in the graph, 1, pi, and the multiple between a big circle to a smaller circle(i choose 10 in the graph because it is beautiful, but it should be very large, it should just be the maximum number, that become ...). The velocity of the particle(whether it have quality or not) should be 1 or pi, its unit is not meter/second, as 1 meter and 1 second is not a constant in fact, modern physics need complex mathematics because of this.

I am the representation of my world. This is eternally true and cannot be refuted too. When i am perfect, my world is perfect, when i am eternal, my world is eternal, when i am full of love, my world is full of love, honey is the representation of honey's world, you are the representation of your world. The reason is,  $1=1$ . What is you? You are not only the body, your thinking is the component of you too, what you think ago is the component of you too, what you know is the component of you too, so you are your world.

I still lack some knowledge of Einstein's relativity presently, i start to read a physics book now, as i already know the utmost truth, i think i should can understand those knowledges just by several days.

Yes, i trust i can breakthrough relativity soon, because i have said it ago, and you know, what i said ago all are becoming true.

The sun is smaller than the earth in our eyes, but this is just a delusion. A stone is smaller than the universe should be a delusion too, as according to utmost truth, there have no small or big. With these ideas, i will surely prove that i really terminated physics soon. All the learnings that need to think will be terminated by me soon, as philosophy, the learning of learnings, have already be terminated.

Hu Zheng, you say you are the god, OK, i agree that you understand everything, can you do everything? Yes, i can. Can you create a store that you can't pick up? Yes, i can. I pick up a store, it is created by me, i mean the god, the universe you see is a store to him, i can't pick up it, i mean the god in the store, as the story is a universe to him. Have you understand? You are confused? OK, i tell you why, you have forgotten that, you can't win me, if you think.

Geniuses, awake.

Stop your thinking.

:_) I was going to make the precious two cool sentences as the end of my second book to match my first book, but now i am going to breakthrough relativity first and add the result into my second book, so it can carry more conviction to you.

I needn't believe i am the god, as belief is no longer a weakness on me now, i just proved that i am the god, understand that i am the god, if my utmost truth is true, then, i should can get everything i want, as the perfect world is created by me, i create the world and play in the world, so it is easy to know why i am the happiest, why i love the whole world, why i understand everything, oh, i designed my happiest and most interesting life for myself. I needn't worry about anything, as i am the god of the matrix. Oh, maybe this is just a perfect matrix created by a genius, and the genius dive himself into it and play in it forever. I am just the genius. I almost trust this now.

The life is too interesting, everything happened on me which regard as chance is not chance, as chance doesn't exist, yes, i find things which happened on me are too perfect, so i must be the god of the world.

The principle of the computer is correspond with my utmost truth too, recursion, and based on 0 and 1, 0 and 1 can change to each other and have no difference, so, i should can build a matrix in a computer, and i am in that computer too. Oh, so many interesting things i can do, as i am the god. :_) You may find things become too ridiculous now, but god exists should not be very ridiculous, as the nature exists, nature is the god, i am the nature :_)

Human is hu-man should not be a chance too, as chance doesn't exist, i make human call themselves human, and make my name become Hu Zheng :)

Weininger's analysis of philosopher is very good:

=====

Three things constitute the philosopher, three elements must come together to produce him.

A mystic(opposite: sadist), a scientist(opposite : artist), a systematiser (opposite : experimenter)

The mystic + scientist -> only yields a theologian, a dogmatist of some kind of belief.

The mystic + systemiser -> yields a theosophist, who simply follows his individual intuition, without striving for proof and certainty.

The scientist + systemiser -> yields a theoretical physicist, biologist etc.

The mystic can be unequivocally defined by the problematisation of the Absolute and Nothingness. Most striking is the problematisation of time. The scientist is defined in Science and Culture; he is the transcendental person (Kant as nonmystic), he seeks complete acceptance for everything he says, and refutation of all counter-possibilities. The systematiser is the opposite of the technician and experimenter; there are theoreticians and technicians in every science.

Technician -- Theoretician

Thus in mathematics: Euler Riemann

In linguistics: Pott Humboldt(Bopp)

In physics: Faraday Maxwell

both in high measure: Helmholtz and Darwin among others.

==

I know things become too ridiculous now, especially the mystic in my philosophy, such as i am the god, utmost truth etc. But, you should know, i am not mad, i am thinking peacefully and my head is clearly, you may easily accept science now, and you may don't accept mystics, but you should know, science is not accept ago, while mystics is accepted by everyone. So, don't reject that i am not god without think, don't reject utmost truth exists without think, so many unimaginable things happened, such as the plane fly on the sky, such as human loaded on the moon. Let's keep thinking, and see the result.

Even i regard i as the god, i am still never divorce from the reality, because i regard everything i meet as reality, although i am the god and designed these things. Philosophy make me live very harmoniously in the world :) Things happens, and never make me disappoint etc., because i know things must happen in its best way for me, and i always done things in the best way, i will always do things in the best way. I walk in the outside, oh, the earth, the grass, the people, the car, the star, the universe all are created by me, the me, as a normal people walking and thinking, is created by me too, how can i create so magic a world? It is very easy, as truths can very easily be created from the utmost truth. I try to stamp the ground, look at it, and think about it, it is so real, oh, i created so real a world, people walks by, i created them so i can look at them at a time. Oh, things always happen on the best way, too good, enjoy everything :_)

If i can find a good girl and have children with her, and one son like philosophy as me, if he is more wise than me, his philosophy should can be higher than mine, or one day i can meet a person that his philosophy can be higher than mine, that is too good too :) Even my philosophy is wrong, that i am not the god, i am not eternal, i can still be contented, just like everyone of you content with yourself :) It is only because i am the wisest people in the world presently, so no one can win my philosophy? May be :)

It seems i get to know how to keep productive now, as Weininger tell me that we these men can always productive :)

You may say what i am saying have some contradiction to what i said ago, yes, you only see the contradiction because you were not thinking, just like say mountain is mountain first, mountain is not mountain later, and say mountain is still mountain last, the thinking is still consistent, and some other mistakes are fixed soon. You will find my thinking is always consistent if you followed my thinking.

I explain the eternal circle more clearly here, just like our universe's materials are becoming the particles which have no quality, the particle which have no quality is a universe, this universe is composed by particles which have no quality, and those particles which have no quality are becoming particles which have quality too. The sun is shooting out universes continuously, one universe shoot out, i am born in the universe, die in it, but the next universe is shooting out from the sun too, i born in it and die in it too, i am in the universe we see, the precious i(for instance, the i one second ago) become the present i, but the precious i is generated in the precious universe at the same time too, so there are numerous i which are at different states in the numerous universes, and there are numerous i which at the same state in numerous universes too, the sun shoot out numerous universes, we can say the universes leave the sun for the same distance is at the same state, the universes leave the sun for different distance is at the different state. Every universe contained numerous particles, every particle (have quality or not, but opposite to the universe which it in) is a universe. Oh, yes, i never die, at this fixed time point, numerous i are borning in numerous universes, numerous i are dieing at numerous universe, while numerous i are siting before the computer and writing this article in numerous universes. Do you understand now? All of us never die. Numerous Nietzsche are thinking in numerous universes while i am thinking here, at the same time, needn't say, numerous the same i are thinking in numerous universe. Oh, i am not god, i am a normal people, composed by numerous universes :) But i understand everything :_)

2004.2.14

May be the ancient civilizations disappear because their philosophy didn't overcome the weakness of need belief.

My imagination is so good, and should be better Einstein :) If you want to understand everything, you must dare to think about everything :)

If you understand the eternal circle, you should understand being now, everything, the you one second ago, the present you, the you one second later, exist in the whole world at the same time, and the you one second ago become the present you, while you become the you one second after. The different time is just a delusion as different velocity. So you can't build a machine and go to look at the you of your childhood, as you can't change your velocity(all the particles are moving at a fix velocity, no matter it have quality or not), but the you of your childhood exist in the world at the same time.

Is it possible that we build a space ship and enter into another universe? We can't get into the universe which is a particle to our universe, the same, we can't get into the bigger universe, can we enter into another universe that is at the same size as ours? May be, but when we enter into that universe, our space ship, which composed by materials, should have already become the particles which have no quality. Two universes move by the different direction will meet, but one is composed by particle which have quality, another is composed by particles which have no quality, so we can't enter into another universe in this case too, what will happen in this case? I will think about this after i get enough physics knowledges :)

What i am good at is lead a normal life, so i can always keep be normal in people's eyes, my action is always normal(don't commit suicide, go mad etc.), although i am thinking about the completely different things(think about commit suicide, and the mad thoughts), i trust what my father and my mother taught me are right, that never divorce from the reality, that lead a good life, because i know truth must be truth to them too, truth must can be accepted by them too.

I read a physics book for some pages, it is very likely(i almost can make sure now) Einstein's relativity can be explained by my theory, just like Newtonian physics can explained by Einstein's relativity. There are various kinds of particles that have different quality and life span, just like different planets have different quality and life span, photon have no quality, because we treat earth have quality, its seems stable that the life span is eternal, this is because its life span is as long as our universe, as it is a universe in fact, "at the same time" is related, yes, so the time our universe disappear and become a photon(the end of the time which we can sense) is the time a universe(although it is composed by particles have no quality) form(the begin of the time which we can sense), the length is relative, yes, so the photon is as big as our universe, the velocity of photon is the maximum velocity, yes, but the particle have quality is moving at this velocity too in fact, oh, i get another thing, the different quality should be delusion as different velocity and different time too, particles move to the different direction created different distance and different velocity, then the two created different time which we can sense, a particle become the particle which quality is smaller, and become a photon at last, the particles which have different quality is just the universe at different state, so different time created different quality. Let me summarize here, the world is composed by particles, particle is composed by particles, they full filled the world, they move by the same velocity, but have different direction, the different direction and particle composed by particles created the delusion such as different distance, different velocity, different time, different quality, different size. As according to my utmost truth, everything is predestined, there have no chance, I will call my physics theory as Absolutivity.

Quantum physics will be overthrow, as random doesn't exist.

When i go out to take a run, i get to know, so easy to understand, the time, quality, size are only conception created by us, so we can't point out what they are, the particle, its direction and velocity can be get by us directly, so they are the essence.

Today is valentine's day, so let me think some free things to comfort myself :_) May be i am the god that descend to the world, as i am so good at thinking and can convince(or delude :_) everyone i meet, may be i am the role shown on the computer screen, controlled by a boy who sit before the screen, if he is the god of the computer game, i am his representation, and he is a role in another computer game too :) you see, eternal circle can explain everything. Why my thinking is so powerful? Because my thinking is a circle or a recursion, if you dive into my thinking, you can't find any fault as the circle have no fault, so you can only escape from my thinking by don't think about it :_) But when you are not thinking, you still in the world, which created by me :) May be the fact is that i am my god, you are your god too, i am in my world, you are in your world, while we are in the same world too, eternal circle :_) The world always copy itself, why copy itself is possible? By recursion, and the computer viruses are just good at this.

According to my philosophy, artificial intelligence should be possible, after i terminated physics, i will try to build a real world in the computer which human live and think in it, as recursion and binary are the principle of the computer, 0 and 1 have no difference, this is correspond to my philosophy, after i show the universe to you, which run in the computer and created by me, everyone will agree my philosophy. Then all of you will understand why i am the god, why the world is created by me, and why i am created by myself, the god. Oh, i am really the god.

After philosophy terminated, all the learnings will terminated, philosophers all know i have already terminated philosophy, all of you will know that i terminated every learning soon.

The symbol of infinite big is  $\infty$ , like a eternal circle, i point out this to tell you when the symbol is created, its shape have relation to its meaning, the same, there are many information hided in the languages.

2004.2.15

Jiang Qin should have no boyfriend in fact, i noticed this when i ask her for her boyfriend's photo as i know physiognomy and want to have a look, then i find this secret, as she said that she have a boyfriend but didn't tell anyone, and ask me to help her to keep this secret. I remember that when i invite Hu Yan to have supper and meet for the first time, when we leave each other she said:"needn't walk me", then she get to find i have no any inclination to walk her to the dormitory in fact(as i regard female as equal) and she should be a little embarrassed, and, i get to know she was just the girl who need others to walk with her later. Yes, girls always saying the opposite of their heart. Why? Because, she can't say i like you too when you tell her that you like her, although she like you, and she need to test you, so she will find a reason to refuse you, if she really don't like you, she will tell you this directly. She don't show her initiative as she is different from genius killer, she don't accept you at first as she is different from low intelligence maternal girl. So, Jiang Qin is not the absolute mother type girl(only have heart) that accept any man, she should just like me.

If treat earth as the center, then what is the shape of planets that moving in the solar system? It should be interesting :)

Pig's intelligence is not enough to understand itself. You are not pig, how do you know that pig doesn't understand itself? OK, let's talk about ourselves, i know i understand myself, so understand the self is possible. In fact, you can understand yourself too. Genius understand himself after grow up, the normal people may be latter, the extreme case can be understand himself when die. So everything understand itself, we can say material understand itself too, although it have no intelligence and no self.

What is your feature? you will become a member of genius religion if you are a genius, even not, you needn't worry, things will happen on you at the best way to fit you. What is the feature of human? Create a real world.

To the future children: i am not god in fact, i have my limit too, i can't fly in the air, but you can if you want, Lincoln said people can't past his ideal, right, i can't fly in the air as i have no ideal to fly in the air, but you can, human can do anything in fact(so called god), although it always have limit, but you can always achieve your ideal if you don't give up it in your whole life. I am the happiest people of the contemporary human, this is not strange, such as a master of a village may be the happiest people in his valliage too, the world is so big, so, you can be happier than me too, make your ideal be the best of your world, i heard a saying that a single people can't understand all of the learnings of the present human as knowledge are scattered in every field's experts, but these sayings will always be false, if genius can't, genius of geniuses can :) Keep innocence and learn non-stop, keep your imagination and pursue your ideal.

I think about the graph which i drew to describe the utmost truth, the multiple between a big circle to a smaller circle, it should be the maximum number, and i get to know, it will become 1. Yes, so all the circles in that graph are at the same size in fact. So the graph should like this, <http://reciteword.cosoft.org.cn/one-original.png>, just being the original graph, but we need to know it is numerous the same size graph covered together, and all of they are whirling.

Another constant i find, put four the same size pellets together and put a small pellet into it which touch all the four big pellets, the multiple between big pellet and small pellet should be a new constant. The same, draw three big the same size circles and a small circle to touch all the three circles, the multiple between big circle and small circle should be a new constant too.

If apply my utmost truth to mathematics, i will create a completely new mathematics system, which different from the present mathematics system from the root. I will call this new mathematics system as Circlematics. In Circlematics, the base number is 1 and pi, but not 0 and  $\infty$ , other numbers will be generated by the way which i described in the precious sentence, yes, mathematics have a fatal error, it have 0, so it have  $\infty$ , but  $\infty$  can never be represent in mathematics. Why? Because 0 doesn't exists, just like  $\infty$  doesn't exists. In circlematics, there have no 0 and no  $\infty$ . Circlematics is the rebuilding of mathematics, it will be very graceful, as have no 0 and no  $\infty$ .

More and more philosophers will start to research my philosophy, physicists will start to research my absolutivity, mathematicians will start to research my circlematics, theologians will start to prove that i am the god, all of you will be attracted by my utmost truth.

I find now i can get any girl that i want, you can understand why, right? You may say if i can't get that girl, i will say i don't want to get her, but you know, i am not a boy get no girl in my life, i really get those girls that i want, you know this will be true soon. The same, i can get anything i want. Am i the god? Do you agree with me now :) For the same reason, i can do everything i want, i can know everything if i want, why i don't do everything? Because i want to don't do something too :) So god don't do everything. You may say you are a god too according to this, yes, all of us are god, all the living creatures are god, you may still don't think yourself as a god, like that cat :) Whether you are a god depend on whether you think you are a god, i think i am the god, so i am :)

Scientists are trying to build quantum computer, they won't succeed, as quantum physics is wrong. We will build absolutivity and circlematics computer, the most powerful and perfect computer. In circlematics computer, the number is not based on 0 and 1, but 1 and pi. In the current computer, divide by zero will encounter error, and have no way to fix it, just report error, in circlematics computer, there have no error, it is a perfect computer.

The standard programming language in circlematics computer should be LISP, as it use recursion, which correspond to my utmost truth.

Newtonian physics can build the satellite, Relativity can build nuclear reactor, Absolutivity can build a universe. Build a space ship will become very easy as Absolutivity is already out.

There should be two way to build a universe. The first way is, we are changing the earth, then the solar system, then the galaxy, then the universe, and this is making the universe become a computer, when done, the universe become a photon, a new universe. The second way is build the absolutivity and circlematics computer, develop a program and it run in the computer, that become a universe. The two way advance at the same time.

People research how to draw a circle on a board which consist by many small square, and find this is a complex problem, but we draw square on a borad which consist by numerous the different size circles(big circles touch each other), our method nearly needn't think as we have imagination, it become so easy. Genius is just good at make complex and hard problem become simple and easy. There is a well-known problem in mathematics, prove that when pellets pile together the heap shape is the smallest shape to save space, it is very hard in mathematics(should be unsolvable), but it is very easy in circlematics, maybe we can just treat it as a axiom, just like in mathematics there are many axioms too.

In fact, you are a god too, after you understand my thinking. Just like i am the first superman, i am the first god. You can think it is you created me too, yes, all of you are doing things to create me, you meet me, so you created a portion of my world.

OK, you are the god, why you are so normal a people as us? Because after god created the world, if he only look at this world, it is too boring, so he make himself get into the world and become a normal people as everyone else, and play in it, as he is the god, he can create a world in the world too.

3.1415926, it is possible 0 don't exist in this number sequence as 0 doesn't exist in circlematics? Oh, no, it exists. Then, the equation  $e^{\frac{1}{i+1}}=0$  should can reveal the secret of the world. May be the number sequence of  $\frac{1}{i}$  is just the world, the matrix.

Why i know that what you are thinking? Because i develop former than you, because it is me give my book to you, so i know your psychology when you take the book from my hand.

Genius often make some very stupid mistakes too, but this is different from the fool who just insist on his stupidity and just can't find the mistake, i often make some very stupid mistakes, but i know never be satisfied by the present self, i keep learning etc. :)

My book is written for all :) Everyone can get some piece from my thinking. Such as "my childhood", everyone read it can find something shake his/her heart. What is the best literateur? Record things with most intense emotion, then no emotion words are written down, only fact left, as i said ago, fact contained everything.

Mathematics is philosophy's helper too, as they find the equation, then philosopher think about it. Mathematicians are regard as plain by Weininger because they don't think about the equation :)

Mathematics is so interesting, i love mathematics :)

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 462
(2/23/04 11:31 pm)
Reply

Re: Absolutivity, Circlematics

---

Are you deaf or something, Hu?
Somebody much more intelligent than me asked you to keep your messages short.
We're all dummies, you see?

You just don't care, do you, Genius Maniac, emphasis on the last word?

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 609

(2/24/04 12:03 am)

Reply

Re: Absolutivity, Circlematics

---

This is a very very good post, Hu Zheng.

I don't understand a lot of it but I got some important henids out of it after a single quick read.

1. It seems to me that you are reinventing  $A=A$  as  $A = A$  plus  $-A$  plus not  $A$ . Is this true.
2. The fact that as everything we perceive and react to is in our own minds, then of course we are all gods.
3. Absolutivity and Circlematics seem to be a superior way to look at the flow of the universe. I was concentrating on 0,1 or emptiness/fullness together with infinity in trying to understand the universe, but by bringing Pi into the equation instead of Infinity, then I sense you are onto something pretty profound, as Pi is something understandable. I haven't got the meaning clear, as I don't understand your points about size and velocity. Although I do understand that size is a human perspective and the universe has no such perspective, so size is irrelevant to the universe, but on first read I don't get how velocity fits into the equation.
4. Instead of emptiness or nothingness it is simpler to think of those concepts as of lacking qualities.
5. Now, I think of everything dualistically and I recently thought of a dual parallel universe, that is the one we can sense plus one exactly opposite in structure. That is a universe we can recognise and a complementary one which we cannot recognise because it is the opposite of us. When I say parallel I don't mean separate, I mean intertwined at the base level, ie each unit of positive existence is represented by a negative unit in the parallel universe. Negative meaning unrecognisable (or seemingly qualityless). The universes are not identical in structure but the sum of positive and negative equals zero. This is exactly the same as a spinning swirling yin/yang symbol. The interaction between the two causes eternal movement.

Now I'm still stuck with the problem of whether the pattern was ever exactly symmetrical, in which case it would not cause movement. In which case we require the existence of zero. Zero attracts both negative and positive but one must get there first, and whichever one gets there first causes a chain reaction of movement as the zeroness flows into a new space. The universe structure becomes unbalanced, and unbalanceness is the creation of existence and of patterns other than 1,-1,0.

I'm not really getting anywhere with this. I'll have to think more about what you've said.

PS. I would also appreciate if you could separate, the girl and general thought stuff from the science based stuff.

ksolway

Registered User

Posts: 357

(2/24/04 12:18 am)

Reply

Re: Absolutivity, Circlematics

---

Paul, if you want a short message, then just read the first paragraph, and ignore the rest.

Or you could imagine that a different person wrote each paragraph.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 974

(2/24/04 1:05 am)

Reply

Re: Absolutivity, Circlematics

---

Quote:

---

Jimmy: Now, I think of everything dualistically and I recently thought of a dual parallel universe, that is the one we can sense plus one exactly opposite in structure. That is a universe we can recognise and a complementary one which we cannot recognise because it is the opposite of us. When I say parallel I don't mean separate, I mean intertwined at the base level, ie each unit of positive existence is represented by a negative unit in the parallel universe. Negative meaning unrecognisable (or seemingly qualityless). The universes are not identical in structure but the sum of positive and negative equals zero.

---

Interesting, I remember bringing up something akin to this a good while ago in a topic called 'Anti'. It wasn't really taken up but I was wanting to explore the the ramifications of this idea in relation to the totality, and the assumptions usually made about the totality.

To me, anti-existence would have to be distinct from the discription 'parallel universe', it would be more of an inverse universe (though the word universe may not be appropriate, perhaps 'esrevinu' might be more fitting :-)). It works the same for the multiverse or the omniverse (as previously coined) in that it would not be parallel but rather inverse or anti, so I suppose that one might call it the anti-universe/multiverse/omniverse. You could think of it in terms of the continuum of positive and negative numbers. Such a continuum would require, as you have alluded to, zero, or null.

So, if the anti-universe anti-existed, and if anti-existence is antithetical to existence, would it necessarily be a part of the conception 'totality'?

If the totality is concieved of as 'all that is', would it have to then expand to encompass 'all that anti-is'? Could such a thing as the conception of totality even do such a thing, being as it works only with 'isness'? (anti-existence is such a tough concept to work with) Might we then be looking at two totalities? It seems nonsensical to speak of anything other than the one totality but this might be the only way to go about it if the two are mutually-exclusive. If you lumped them both together, you could only speak of them in terms of zero/null (perhaps this is what Nemo was trying to get at in the 'anti' thread when he spoke of the void and it's not being included in the totality).

The concept of totality necessitates infinity as there is no-thing for the totality to exist in relation to, might the concept of anti-totality circumvent this? Perhaps that's not the right way to put it as we are using the words exist and thing. More simply, if totality relates to anti-totality, is infinity necessary? Zero seems to take on a much more prominent role.

Any thoughts?

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

- > GENIUS FORUM
- > ANTI MATTER

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
ZERRINO Registered User Posts: 2 (4/21/04 6:07 am) Reply	ANTI MATTER <hr/> IF THERE IS AN AMOUNT OF MATERIAL MISSING IN THE UNIVERSE - CALLED DARK MATTER I WOULD ASK - WHAT ELSE IS MISSING - I WOULD THINK OF ALL THIS POSITIVE MATERIAL AROUND AND WOULD SAY - NEGATIVE MATERIAL WHAT IF NOTHING IS MISSING AND ANTI MATTER WOULD ONLY BE DARK -
MKFaizi Registered User Posts: 1153 (4/21/04 1:44 pm) Reply 	Re: ANTI MATTER <hr/> How does missing matter relate to philosophical wisdom exactly? Does it relate? If it is missing, then, it has always been missing. The discovery of it missing may be significant to science but human thought is always the same. If tomorrow, it is announced that there has been discovered a universal cure for all cancers, this may be significant medically and scientifically and encouraging for those of us who wish for long life. But it has no effect on philosophy -- Hakuin, Nietzsche, Sade, Kierkegaard. Thought is thought and physics is physics.

Pure thought is timeless and true. Physics is subjective and capricious. That which is known in science now will be considered ignorance tomorrow.

Philosophy is wisdom that is as applicable centuries ago as it is now.

Many people are in a hurry to mistakenly equate science or pseudoscience with philosophy. I wonder if this is because their heads are hollow.

Faizi

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 641

(4/21/04 3:56 pm)

Reply

Re: ANTI MATTER

---

Philosophy is wisdom that is as applicable centuries ago as it is now.

That isn't necessarily so. Most philosophies are pure crap and some last for centuries. For instance, a religious person still has a philosophy. That you (and I) deem 99.999% of philosophies to be erroneous does not make their philosophies non-philosophy.

Neither is ultimate reality type Truth applicable to the average Joe or Mary. Nor will it be, that is until we master the physical.

Philosophy is just a tool for assisting in the determination of choices bought about by knowledge/science. It is a way to categorise memories.

Edited by: jimhaz at: 4/21/04 3:58 pm

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1154

(4/21/04 4:16 pm)

Reply

Re: ANTI MATTER

---

Neither religion nor science are philosophy though it may be said that religion and science are philosophies or offer philosophies.

In this case, the word philosophy is being used to denote an idea or a school of conviction.

Philosophy is thought without need of denotation or category. It is entirely science, religion, art, literature, music, ethics, history -- but without adherence to anything other than itself.

Philosophy is dependent on expression and skill.

Faizi

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 642

(4/21/04 5:18 pm)

Reply

Re: ANTI MATTER

---

Philosophy is thought without need of denotation or category. It is entirely science, religion, art, literature, music, ethics, history -- but without adherence to anything other than itself.

My definition of science is pretty broad. It is all the empirical knowledge we use to predict future events. So it includes everyday things like knowing that turning the kettle switch on will create boiling water as well as specific scientific knowledge.

On the other hand philosophy to me is matching knowledge or science to human interactions with others and the environment. It is the process of determining and categorising right/acceptable and wrong/not acceptable within one's brain. Philosophy adheres to my past knowledge. For instance when the QRS write 'nothing inherently exists' my philosophy as derived from my experiences, memory and logical processing capabilities, categories that as 'right' and it becomes part of my philosophy. Whereas if they say the 'TAO is formless' my knowledge base cannot match that up with anything, so it gets the thumbs down and does not become part of my philosophy.

What I'm saying is that I can only judge the merit of any philosophical concept with empirical data, which includes data that has been categorised in my head to make it, or things that have similar attributes, into abstract concepts (abstract say like the way we categorise certain things as feminine and others as masculine).

Philosophy is dependent on expression and skill.

For it to be lasting, yes. For everyday use, no.

You speak of philosophy as if it were only the outputs of the enlightened, but that is not the case.

Edited by: jimhaz at: 4/21/04 5:19 pm

ZERRINO

Registered User

Posts: 3

(4/22/04 3:14 am)

Reply

Re: ANTI MATTER

---

THINGS ARE SUBJECT OF CHANGES -

THOUGHTS ARE SUBJECT OF CHANGES -

PHILOSOPHY SHOULD BE A SUBJECT TO CHANGE SINCE IT'S DEALING WITH -

SO FAR PHILOSOPHY IS NOT SO FAR FROM PHYSICS -

ZERRINO

Registered User

Posts: 4

(4/23/04 1:04 am)

Reply

Re: ANTI MATTER

---

THIS IS A REPLY TO :

: How does missing matter relate to philosophical wisdom exactly? :

ANTI MATTER IS NOT RELATED TO PHILOSOPHY. NO MATTER IS - NO MATTER WHAT IT IS. QUESTIONING MATTER AS WELL AS QUESTIONING THOUGHTS IS RELATED TO PHILOSOPHY.

: But it has no effect on philosophy :

EVERYTHING EFFECTS EVERYTHING.

: Thought is thought and physics is physics :

THOUGHT IS A PHYSICAL PHENOMENON.

: Pure thought is timeless and true :

PURE THOUGHT IS A CONTAINER THAT DOES NOT CONTAIN ANYTHING.

: That which is known in science now will be considered ignorance tomorrow :

THIS IS TO FIND OUT HOW THINGS WORK.

: Philosophy is wisdom that is as applicable centuries ago as it is now :

PHILOSOPHY IS NOT WISDOM. WISDOM MIGHT BE USING PHILOSOPHY TO GET THERE. NO. THIS IS NOT A PARADOX.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 1081

(4/23/04 2:32 am)

Reply

Re: ANTI MATTER

---

Quote:

---

IF THERE IS AN AMOUNT OF MATERIAL MISSING IN THE UNIVERSE - CALLED DARK MATTER

---

There is no matter missing in the universe. How could there be?

Quote:

---

I WOULD ASK - WHAT ELSE IS MISSING -

---

Assuming for a moment that your bizarre hypothesis were true, why would that be the question to ask?

Quote:

---

I WOULD THINK OF ALL THIS POSITIVE MATERIAL AROUND AND WOULD SAY - NEGATIVE MATERIAL

---

Assuming for a moment that your bizarre hypothesis were true, and assuming that one next asked oneself such a nebulous question, why would this be the answer one came up with?

Quote:

---

WHAT IF NOTHING IS MISSING AND ANTI MATTER WOULD ONLY BE DARK -

---

Nothing is missing, only a gap in understanding. If anti-matter were the answer to the dark matter gravitational discrepancy, the universe would not exist as the matter and anti-matter would annihilate.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 1082

(4/23/04 2:43 am)

Reply

Re: ANTI MATTER

---

Quote:

---

ANTI MATTER IS NOT RELATED TO PHILOSOPHY.
NO MATTER IS - NO MATTER WHAT IT IS

---

At least one should engage one's grey matter.

Quote:

---

QUESTIONING MATTER AS WELL AS QUESTIONING THOUGHTS IS RELATED TO PHILOSOPHY.

---

Not if the questioning is erroneous.

Quote:

---

PHILOSOPHY IS NOT WISDOM. WISDOM MIGHT BE USING PHILOSOPHY TO GET THERE. NO. THIS IS NOT A PARADOX.

---

Yes it is, or at least it would be if it were coherently formulated. As it stands, it's not a paradox, it's just shouting.

ZERRINO

Registered User
Posts: 5
(4/23/04 2:53 am)
Reply

Re: ANTI MATTER

---

THIS IS THE REPLY TO :

: Nothing is missing, only a gap in understanding. If anti-matter were the answer to the dark matter gravitational discrepancy, the universe would not exist as the matter and anti-matter would annihilate :

THAT'S WHY THIS IS THE QUESTION TO ASK.

IF MATTER AS WELL AS ANTI MATTER DOES NOT EXIST WITHOUT THE OTHER - BE THE SYMMETRY LOCAL OR BE THE SYMMETRY NON-LOCAL - WHY DOES THIS ANSWER EXIST.

Dave Toast

Registered User
Posts: 1083
(4/23/04 9:16 am)
Reply

Re: ANTI MATTER

---

Quote:

---

THAT'S WHY THIS IS THE QUESTION TO ASK.

---

NO IT'S NOT.

The gravitational effects on observable matter dictate that there is far more dark matter in the universe than there is observable matter. If antimatter were responsible for the mass anomaly associated with dark matter, which is patently impossible, the numbers still wouldn't add up.

Quote:

---

IF MATTER AS WELL AS ANTI MATTER DOES NOT EXIST WITHOUT THE OTHER - BE THE SYMMETRY LOCAL OR BE THE SYMMETRY NON-LOCAL - WHY DOES THIS ANSWER EXIST.

---

I haven't really got a clue what you're trying to say.

Matter / Antimatter Asymmetry is a scientific mystery at this present time.

The Dark Matter Problem is also a scientific mystery at this point in time. Adding two mysteries together does not miraculously create an answer for both of them.

There are all sorts of theories though and some of them sit together fairly comfortably; Big Bang, Residual Mass and CP Violation being three of them regarding Matter / Antimatter Asymmetry and the consequent existence of the physical universe.

ZERRINO

Registered User

Posts: 6

(4/24/04 1:11 am)

Reply

Re: ANTI MATTER

---

THIS IS A REPLY TO :

...The gravitational effects on observable matter dictate...

THEY ARE JUST THERE - THEY DON'T DICTATE

...that there is far more dark matter in the universe than there is observable matter. If antimatter were responsible for the mass anomaly associated with dark matter, which is patently impossible...

EVERYTHING IS POSSIBLE ONLY THE PROBABILITIES CHANGE

...the numbers still wouldn't add up...

THE NUMBERS WOULD BE DIFFERENT

...Matter / Antimatter Asymmetry is a scientific mystery at this present time...

A : SCIENTIFIC MYSTERY : IS A MYSTERY MADE BY SCIENCE WHICH TURNS SCIENCE INTO NON-SCIENCE AND MYSTERY INTO A STRATEGY - MAY BE TO DICTATE SOMETHING.

...The Dark Matter Problem is also a scientific mystery at this point in time. Adding two mysteries together does not miraculously...

NOT NECESSARILY

...create an answer for both of them...

...There are all sorts of theories though and some of them sit together fairly comfortably; Big Bang, Residual Mass and CP Violation being three of them regarding Matter / Antimatter Asymmetry and the consequent existence of the physical universe...

AS LONG AS YOU KNOW THAT THERE ARE THINGS YOU DON'T SEE YOU CAN'T SEE OR YOU DON'T LOOK AT - THERE IS NO MYSTERY - ONLY THINGS YOU DON'T KNOW. THAT IS WHAT SCIENCE STANDS FOR - TO DEAL WITH THIS THINGS - CALLED PROBLEMS - REGARDLESS RESTRICTIONS. OTHERWISE HUMANS WOULD STILL SIT TOGETHER FAIRLY COMFORTABLY SIDE BY SIDE WITH THEIR MADE UP MYSTERY SHOWS ON THEIR FLAT DISK EARTH WATCHING THE SUN TURNING AROUND AND AROUND.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 1084
(4/24/04 3:20 am)
Reply

Re: ANTI MATTER

---

(This message was left blank)

Edited by: Dave Toast at: 4/24/04 6:16 am

ZERRINO
Registered User
Posts: 7
(4/24/04 6:36 am)
Reply

Re: ANTI MATTER

---

THIS IS A REPLY TO THE LAST STATEMENT

: U N E D I T E D :

IF THE SINGULARITY TURNS INTO AN UNIVERSE BY BREAKING UP WITH ITS SYMMETRY - WHERE DOES THE SYMMETRY GO

TURN INTO A DIFFERENT SYMMETRY

TURN INTO A NON-SYMMETRY

TURN INTO SOMETHING ELSE

IN CASE OF THE 1ST THE UNIVERSE WILL LAST AT LEAST FOR A WHILE. IN CASE OF THE 2ND THE UNIVERSE WILL FALL APART BEFORE IT EVER EXISTED. THE CASE OF THE 3RD IS STILL SUBJECT TO CHANGES TO THE IDEA OF THE 1ST.

THE FACT THAT HUMAN VISION OF SYMMETRY IS DIFFERENT FROM SOME CONDITIONS OF SYMMETRY - DOES NOT MEAN THAT SUCH SYMMETRIES DO NOT EXIST - IT JUST MAKES IT COMPLICATED.

Edited by: ZERRINO at: 4/27/04 5:25 am

Overlord
Registered User
Posts: 2
(4/28/04 10:12 am)
Reply

ANTI MATTER

---

How does missing matter relate to philosophical wisdom exactly? Does it relate? If it is missing, then, it has always been missing. The discovery of it missing may be significant to science but human thought is always the same.

-----

It has never been missing. We just don't know what it is, where it is, or why it is.

=====

If tomorrow, it is announced that there has been discovered a universal cure for all cancers, this may be significant medically and scientifically and encouraging for those of us who wish for long life. But it has no effect on philosophy -- Hakuin, Nietzsche, Sade, Kierkegaard.

-----

And then science progresses, lifespans are extended to centuries. Attitudes change, societies change, values change, mores change, philosophy.... changes. In a few centuries any philosopher who hasn't addressed the premiere problem of overpopulation and the problems of a long life span is seen as having lived a very Hobbesian existence. Stem cell research of course has no intersection with philosophy. There are no philosophic ramifications to killing a fetus to harvest stem cells.

No reason to look out the window at the real world.

Unless your philosophy and pure thought intersect with the real world, it's all sophistry and mental masturbation.

=====

Thought is thought and physics is physics.

-----

Only in as much as a great deal of thought/philosophy has no connection to reality

=====

Pure thought is timeless and true. Physics is subjective and capricious. That which is known in science now will be considered ignorance tomorrow.

-----

Physics is ironclad, set in stone. What is "known" is merely supposition and theory designed to fit (poorly) those observed phenomenon filtered thru severely stunted human senses. The theory of physics is constantly being updated in an attempt to match what we perceive as reality. In fact more cutting edge physics borders on metaphysics. An event creates 2 particles which then travel a light year in opposite directions. Something happens to one of the particles and it affects the other particle. Why Is That?!

Pure thought/philosophy also brought us the flat earth, the earth-centric universe, the earth balanced on the back of 4 elephants, or Atlas.

=====

Philosophy is wisdom that is as applicable centuries ago as it is now.

Many people are in a hurry to mistakenly equate science or pseudoscience with philosophy. I wonder if this is because their heads are hollow.

-----

The vast majority of philosophers are parrots and spend their entire lives working on coming up with an idea, and maybe, possibly, if they plug away at it long enough, an original thought.

=====

OP

And no, the dark matter was never lost. No more than the back side of the moon was lost because you never saw it before. Perhaps we'll lose dark energy next or find we're missing some dark particles

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 1092
(4/29/04 8:46 am)
Reply

Re: ANTI MATTER

---

Quote:

---

MKF: If tomorrow, it is announced that there has been discovered a universal cure for all cancers, this may be significant medically and scientifically and encouraging for those of us who wish for long life. But it has no effect on philosophy -- Hakuin, Nietzsche, Sade, Kierkegaard.

Overlord: And then science progresses, lifespans are extended to centuries. Attitudes change, societies change, values change, mores change, philosophy....changes.

---

MKF has made it plain that she is talking about philosophy which she regards as timeless.

Quote:

---

Overlord: In a few centuries any philosopher who hasn't addressed the premiere problem of overpopulation and the problems of a long life span is seen as having lived a very Hobbesian existence.

---

What does it matter how one is seen? What does it matter if one's actions might be characterised as Hobbesian? Some might say that any philosopher worth their salt might be expected to know better than to care.

Quote:

---

Lordover: Stem cell research of course has no intersection with philosophy. There are no philosophic ramifications to killing a fetus to harvest stem cells. No reason to look out the window at the real world.

---

Ethics, yes. Much of ethics, depending how you see the subject, may well be timeless. Clearly, such an issue is not. I don't think MKF is trying to define the word 'philosophy', it looks to me like she is drawing attention to what she considers important, or true philosophy.

Quote:

---

Lordover: Unless your philosophy and pure thought intersect with the real world, it's all sophistry and mental masturbation.

---

Philosophers often vary in their definitions of the 'real' world. What is your definition and how do you justify it?

Quote:

---

MKF: Pure thought is timeless and true. Physics is subjective and capricious. That which is known in science now will be considered ignorance tomorrow.

Lordover: Physics is ironclad, set in stone. What is "known" is merely supposition and theory designed to fit (poorly) those observed phenomenon filtered thru severely stunted human senses.

---

It seems obvious to me that MKF, when she refers to physics, was clearly referring to what you call the 'known'.

Quote:

---

Lordover: The theory of physics is constantly being updated in an attempt to match what we perceive as reality. In fact more cutting edge physics borders on metaphysics. An event creates 2 particles which then travel a light year in opposite directions. Something happens to one of the particles and it affects the other particle. Why Is That?!

---

Surely that would only border on metaphysics in that it would be bad science. The scientific question would be 'How is that?'

Quote:

---

MKF: Philosophy is wisdom that is as applicable centuries ago as it is now.

Lordover: Pure thought/philosophy also brought us the flat earth, the earth-centric universe, the earth balanced on the back of 4 elephants, or Atlas.

---

4 elephants? that's ridiculous. It's obviously balanced on an infinite number of turtles.

Clearly, this thought/philosophy was not pure, and certainly not timeless.

Although the turtles thing is true.

Quote:

---

MKF: Philosophy is wisdom that is as applicable centuries ago as it is now.

Many people are in a hurry to mistakenly equate science or pseudoscience with philosophy. I wonder if this is because their heads are hollow.

Lordover: The vast majority of philosophers are parrots and spend their entire lives working on coming up with an idea, and maybe, possibly, if they plug away at it long enough, an original thought.

---

It seems you are both in complete agreement here.

ZERRINO

Registered User

Posts: 12

(5/1/04 1:48 am)

Reply

Re: ANTI MATTER

---

THIS IS A REPLY TO THE REPLY TO :

: : Something happens to one of the particles and it affects the other particle.
Why Is That?! : :

: Surely that would only border on metaphysics in that it would be bad science. The scientific question would be 'How is that?' :

why is that

THE ONE PARTICLE ALWAYS KNOWS WHAT THE OTHER PARTICLE DOES.

SO FAR THIS IS NOT EVEN : bad science : THIS IS NOT SCIENCE AT ALL. BECAUSE WHAT PRETENDS TO BE AN ANSWER TO THE : why : IS NO SUBJECT TO QUESTION ANYMORE. THE EXPLANATION IS ALREADY GIVEN PRETENDING ITSELF TO BE KIND OF A PROOF.

how is that

HOW CAN THE ONE PARTICLE ALWAYS KNOW WHAT THE OTHER PARTICLE DOES.

SO FAR THIS IS SCIENCE. NO MATTER THE CONTENT OF THE QUESTION. BECAUSE THERE IS NO FINAL ANSWER TO THE QUESTION : how :

IT IS NOT THE : what : AND NOT THE : why : OF THE SUBJECT THAT DECIDES WHETHER IT IS SUBJECT OF SCIENCE OR NOT. IT IS THE : how : OF A SUBJECT NO MATTER WHAT IT IS THAT MAKES IT A SUBJECT OF SCIENCE.

Edited by: ZERRINO at: 5/1/04 1:49 am

rushdl
Registered User
Posts: 44
(5/1/04 5:17 am)
Reply

Re: ANTI MATTER

---

my ears hurt.

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> anti matter postage

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
XXX STATIC X Registered User Posts: 75 (2/17/04 1:46 am) Reply	anti matter postage <hr/> Anti faith in society is what i see. Yet can you doubt my faiath in God? I do. who is god?
XXX STATIC X Registered User Posts: 78 (2/17/04 1:55 am) Reply	Re: anti matter postage <hr/> Do I matter or is it I contain knowledge of evil which strikes fear in jesus or the president or my self or fear of process of time in Gods design of the real
WolfsonJakk Registered User Posts: 1471 (2/17/04 2:55 am) Reply	Re: anti matter postage <hr/> Which boards have you been banned from recently? Why?
XXX STATIC X Registered User Posts: 81 (2/17/04 2:59 am) Reply	Re: anti matter postage <hr/> if i can endure God what is this home i am searching for, a fantasy? or truth... let go and flow like the rest. send a message about faith and do not be afraid or it will slow this power down.

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

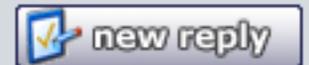

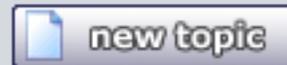

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Apology

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Jones Kelly Posts: 44 (4/26/04 11:46 am) Reply	Apology <hr/> My posts until a few days ago have been overly talkative, and very imaginative, but deluded. I apologise for misleading readers by my arrogant and premature claim to enlightenment. The flaw in my thoughts that obscured seeing my essential nature is apparently common. It is that of thinking Truth = Hidden Void. That is, to think one experience is more objectively real than any other. In my case it was the experience of a Hidden Void (a form, therefore a delusion). As Suergaz was pointing out to me! Suergaz, good on you. Your logic was right. My error arose from not fully understanding that all things lack inherent existence. Being very imaginative, i considered that it was only a lack of willpower that obstructed my constant awareness of the formless void. There is no constant self to perceive any experience (as i said before, so i have been on the right track) - only experiences. The delusion i have been spreading is in regarding one particular experience (because conceptually true) as Reality: the experience of "what can never be experienced". Every experience is contingent. Some experiences have logical conceptual content, yet can be deluded. Some experiences can be free from delusion, yet containing logical concepts. The difference between them is in whether there is impartiality and detachment.

The experience of a pure mind is another delusional experience if there is clinging to that experience as objectively real - singling it out, fixating on it.

Freedom from delusion is in having no thoughts in the midst of thoughts, no attachment to any experience as representative of anything.

The Buddha mind (accurate perception of the essential self nature) sees all experiences as the essential self nature, all having equal status, all the same in nature. The Buddha is selfless as such.

Rairun

Registered User

Posts: 247

(4/26/04 1:27 pm)

Reply

...

---

Quote:

---

Every experience is contingent. Some experiences have logical conceptual content, yet can be deluded. Some experiences can be free from delusion, yet containing logical concepts. The difference between them is in whether there is impartiality and detachment.

---

That's another mistake though. When we have a experience, we are necessarily attached to it. We are partial to it in the sense that we are choosing to experience it over other experiences. Logically valid experiences might reveal an attachment to logical validity. Logically invalid experiences might reveal a stronger attachment to things other than logical validity.

We could also say that we don't have experiences at all, which makes the concept of attachment meaningless. In that case, the subject (we) disappears, and only the object (the experiences) remains.

Edit: There's a third way to explain this. We could say that we don't have experiences, but that we ARE the experiences. When we walk, we don't really walk - we are walking people. That way of thinking also makes the concept of attachment meaningless.

Edited by: Rairun at: 4/26/04 1:43 pm

silentsal
Registered User
Posts: 100
(4/26/04 2:32 pm)
Reply

Re: ...

---

Hello Jones

I didn't think any of your posts were arrogant, that is until this one. Hah!! I find your apology quite odd, and a wee bit arrogant. You take yourself very seriously though like Rhett, so I suppose the arrogance I glimpse is merely that.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 1085
(4/26/04 3:31 pm)
Reply

Re: ...

---

Quote:

---

Rairun: That's another mistake though. When we have a experience, we are necessarily attached to it. We are partial to it in the sense that we are choosing to experience it over other experiences.

---

I don't agree that attachment is necessary, unless you're working with some specific definition of the word 'experience'. Seems to me that we've all had experiences devoid of attachment, would that we could remember them, but then that's why they were devoid of attachment - insufficient memory content and reference with which to form a discerning, discriminating 'self' filter. It follows that if the self is aquired, the aquiree is always capable of experience sans self.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 1086
(4/26/04 3:56 pm)
Reply

Re: ...

---

Quote:

---

Sal: I didn't think any of your posts were arrogant, that is until this one. Hah!! I find your apology quite odd, and a wee bit arrogant. You take yourself very seriously though like Rhett, so I suppose the arrogance I glimpse is merely that.

---

The apology may be interpreted as arrogant but the thought process and

	realisation behind it being issued are anything but. I think Kelly has realised that the enlightened mind is not part and parcel of the enlightenment experience, that it is a far more elusive thing to realise and not something realised by any amount of specific attachment surgery.
jimhaz Registered User Posts: 646 (4/26/04 11:37 pm) Reply 	Re: ... <hr/> I think the mind automatically views and stores each new experience as good, bad or indifferent. Enlightenment seems to be about training the brain to always regard experiences as indifferent. Enlightenment means changing the brains software and abandoning the good and bad sub-routines. Even memories when recalled into the logical processing areas undergo this resorting process and are refiled as 'indifferent'.
Dave Toast Registered User Posts: 1087 (4/27/04 1:03 am) Reply 	Re: ... <hr/> Enlightenment is being, simple as that. It is naturally indifferent. The enlightened mind is a naturally progressive product of being being. Though perfection may take a lifetime, it matters not. Attachment to sagacity is self-defeating, not 'self' defeating.
Jones Kelly Posts: 45 (4/27/04 12:19 pm) Reply	experience <hr/> Rairun, Quote: <hr/> We are partial to it in the sense that we are choosing to experience it over other experiences. <hr/> Who's choosing? Quote: <hr/>

We could also say that we don't have experiences at all, which makes the concept of attachment meaningless. In that case, the subject (we) disappears, and only the object (the experiences) remains.

---

Yes, experiences are experienced, without anyone having them.

Quote:

---

Edit: There's a third way to explain this. We could say that we don't have experiences, but that we ARE the experiences. When we walk, we don't really walk - we are walking people. That way of thinking also makes the concept of attachment meaningless.

---

Fixating on any experience shows attachment to the experience. Thinking it more real than any other is delusional.

So there is a fourth way to explain desirelessness: no constancy of self-awareness, just experiences moment-to-moment.

Jones Kelly
Posts: 46
(4/27/04 12:26 pm)
Reply

Re: ...

---

Silentsal,

Quote:

---

I didn't think any of your posts were arrogant, that is until this one. Hah!! I find your apology quite odd, and a wee bit arrogant. You take yourself very seriously though like Rhett, so I suppose the arrogance I glimpse is merely that.

---

Why did you find the apology odd?

Attachment to the experience of selflessness is surely arrogant. To not take the experience of selflessness seriously (ie to think it is illogical and a joke) is also arrogant.

Jones Kelly

Posts: 47

(4/27/04 12:38 pm)

Reply

Re: ...

---

Dave,

Quote:

---

I think Kelly has realised that the enlightened mind is not part and parcel of the enlightenment experience, that it is a far more elusive thing to realise and not something realised by any amount of specific attachment surgery.

---

Actually, the experience of enlightenment is quite everyday, the mind and the experience are the same.

Enlightenment is essentially attachment surgery: of habits of fixation on objects, experiences, thoughts...

Being able to experience an aggressively argumentative brother, and a manipulative weeping mother trying to offer me "spiritual donation money", without giving any weight to the experience, was essential "surgery" for me.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 1088

(4/27/04 3:02 pm)

Reply

Re: ...

---

It seems I was wrong.

Quote:

---

Actually, the experience of enlightenment is quite everyday, the mind and the experience are the same.

---

The same?

Quote:

---

Enlightenment is essentially attachment surgery

---

How so?

Note that I said specific attachment surgery, BTW.

Quote:

---

: of habits of fixation on objects, experiences, thoughts...

---

What is performing this surgery and can it be trusted?

What will be produced?

Quote:

---

Being able to experience an aggressively argumentative brother, and a manipulative weeping mother trying to offer me "spiritual donation money", without giving any weight to the experience, was essential "surgery" for me.

---

No weight to the experience and yet it was essential?

Out of the frying pan, into the fire.

silentsal
Registered User
Posts: 103
(4/27/04 4:08 pm)
Reply

Re: ...

---

Quote:

---

Why did you find the apology odd?

---

I find it odd that you would be so attached to what you wrote several days ago.

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1695
(4/27/04 10:32 pm)
Reply

Re: ...

---

I think you're just being clever for the sake of it here, Sal. Kelly's attachment to her previous words makes sense in that she is not enlightened and that she still has - thankfully - a conscience about the quality and consequences of her publicly spoken words - both for herself and, presumably, others..

Personally, I applaud her words, though I think her characterisation of them as an apology is unwarranted and even foolish. I don't believe in being apologetic. Her post was, to me, a qualification and clarification; an expression of character.

My view is contingent, however.....

Dan Rowden

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2614
(4/30/04 2:43 am)
Reply

---

---

To venture a fact in the face of metaphysical conclusions:- Nothing lacks inherent existence.

Jones Kelly

Posts: 48

(5/2/04 2:31 pm)

Reply

watching the merry-go-round

---

Dave,

It seems I was wrong.

And that was a correct statement. Fortunately the more conscious of mistakes i am, the more conscious of getting closer to truth i am.

K: Actually, the experience of enlightenment is quite everyday, the mind and the experience are the same.

DT: The same?

Ok, qualification needed: my previous statement was far from enlightened. No, not the same. An experience of the mind of enlightenment is not the same as the experience of the mind that experiences enlightenment.

In other words, any experience of a mind of enlightenment is a delusion if it carries the illusion of a self. The experience centred in the appearance of a causal self is a far cry from the experience centred in the appearance of causality in every experience.

K: Enlightenment is essentially attachment surgery

DT: How so?

Note that I said specific attachment surgery, BTW.

Again, another qualification. I reason that every desire for something creates another something, thus obscuring the boundlessness that is Reality. But not to want to wake up from the dream is foolish - therefore there is one desire left: Truth.

So, surgery would mean analysis of all desires, especially the desire to categorise.

K: of habits of fixation on objects, experiences, thoughts...

DT: What is performing this surgery and can it be trusted?

What will be produced?

God, i suppose. If it is reasoned, then truth will be produced.

K: Being able to experience an aggressively argumentative brother, and a manipulative weeping mother trying to offer me "spiritual donation money", without giving any weight to the experience, was essential "surgery" for me.

DT: No weight to the experience and yet it was essential?

Out of the frying pan, into the fire.

I benefitted from it.

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Archives

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
BJMcGilly Registered User Posts: 25 (6/2/04 10:53 pm) Reply	 Archives <hr/> I'm having difficulty accessing the archives, I receive this message when i attempt to: Request Error - Message not understood: #parentAn error has occurred executing your request.  Error  Message not understood: #parent ===== BBSSystem&gt;&gt;doesNotUnderstand:  Error  Message not understood: #parent ===== BBSSystem&gt;&gt;loadForum:  Error  Message not understood: #parent ===== BBSSystem&gt;&gt;getForumNamed: This error has already been logged. Any ideas how to remedy this?
drowden Forum Host Posts: 1707 (6/3/04 10:23 am) Reply	 Re: Archives <hr/> I'll talk to the Ezboard people and see if they can remedy it. Dan Rowden

BJMcGilly
Registered User
Posts: 31
(6/3/04 12:50 pm)
Reply

 Re: Archives

---

It's up and running, thanks.

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Are you "enlightened"?

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
GrantForEveryone Registered User Posts: 16 (12/30/03 7:05 am) Reply	Are you "enlightened"? <hr/> Please post here or send me a private message if you believe you have had any kind of experience of enlightenment that is still affecting you.
voce io Registered User Posts: 499 (12/30/03 10:22 am) Reply	Re: Are you "enlightened"? <hr/> Of course, you know I claim enlightenment. I'll post here anyway. Enlightenment is understanding truth. It doesn't affect me. You must think enlightenment is some sort of experience which you come under, kind of like getting high. Enlightenment is the understanding of nonduality using reason to understand that all states and experiences and tools such as reason are illusions.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2033 (12/30/03 10:46 am) Reply	--- <hr/> illusions?! An illusion voce! Non-duality does not necessarily equal singularity!

drowden  Forum Host  Posts: 1588  (12/30/03 10:50 am)  Reply 	Re: Are you "enlightened"? <hr/> I'm curious as to how you propose to judge the truth and or efficacy of any answers you get to this question..... Dan Rowden
voce io  Registered User  Posts: 501  (12/30/03 10:57 am)  Reply	Re: Are you "enlightened"? <hr/> illusions?! An illusion voce! Non-duality does not necessarily equal singularity! You are very right. For there to be singularity (object) there must be a viewer (subject). Subject and object are both part of the totality, and both appearances. I know illusion is a bad word to use, but I'm a bad man.
suergaz  Registered User  Posts: 2035  (12/30/03 11:00 am)  Reply	--- <hr/> (:D)
GrantForEveryone  Registered User  Posts: 17  (12/30/03 11:09 am)  Reply	Re: Are you "enlightened"? <hr/> Dan - Quote: <hr/> I'm curious as to how you propose to judge the truth and or efficacy of any answers you get to this question..... <hr/> I really have no idea. We'll see how it goes. All I know right now is I'd like to converse with anyone who feels that they fall into that category.

WolfsonJakk Registered User Posts: 1371 (12/30/03 12:14 pm) Reply	Re: Are you "enlightened"? <hr/> Dan wrote, Quote: <hr/> I'm curious as to how you propose to judge the truth and or efficacy of any answers you get to this question..... <hr/> I think you can now buy an electronic meter at Radio Shack. Batteries not included.
voce io Registered User Posts: 502 (12/30/03 12:58 pm) Reply	Re: Are you "enlightened"? <hr/> So let's converse.
GrantForEveryone Registered User Posts: 18 (12/30/03 1:26 pm) Reply	Re: Are you "enlightened"? <hr/> voce io - Quote: <hr/> So let's converse. <hr/> We have, but thank you for the offer.
voce io Registered User Posts: 505 (12/30/03 1:45 pm) Reply	Re: Are you "enlightened"? <hr/> Sure. If you end up changing your mind in 6 months, my email is grayism@usa.com

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1591
(1/2/04 11:24 am)
Reply

Re: Are you "enlightened"?

---

"Grant" wrote:

Quote:

---

Dan:I'm curious as to how you propose to judge the truth and or efficacy of any answers you get to this question.....

Grant:I really have no idea. We'll see how it goes. All I know right now is I'd like to converse with anyone who feels that they fall into that category.

---

Well, that's an honest response. What specifically about Enlightenment did you want to discuss?

Dan Rowden

GrantForEveryone
Registered User
Posts: 19
(1/4/04 3:46 am)
Reply

Re: Are you "enlightened"?

---

drowden -

Quote:

---

What specifically about Enlightenment did you want to discuss?

---

With you?

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 529
(1/4/04 4:42 am)
Reply

Re: Are you "enlightened"?

---

It's funny how picky you are, GrantForEveryone. Two offers so far, and you seem to have denied them both. What are you looking for?

GrantForEveryone
Registered User
Posts: 20
(1/4/04 7:37 am)
Reply

Hello!

---

voce io -

No, no, I'm not denying Dan at all. I'm just not sure if he's wants to talk about enlightenment with me because he believes he falls into my "category" or if he is just wondering what questions I would ask if that were the case.

But I'm glad you chimed in. I had a very dramatic experience last night, and now it seems like my concept of enlightenment may have been too narrow and I should have taken you more seriously.

I'll post about that again soon.

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1596
(1/7/04 9:51 am)
Reply

Re: Hello!

---

Grant,

Yes, with me. So, do you have any specific areas you want to examine?

Dan Rowden

GrantForEveryone
Registered User
Posts: 22
(1/11/04 10:15 am)
Reply

Re: Hello!

---

drowden -

What would you say about your experience that you think I might not have heard before, but you still think applies to enlightenment in general (not just your enlightenment).

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1606
(1/11/04 12:11 pm)
Reply

Re: Hello!

---

Hey Grant,

Well, that's quite a task you've set me since I don't really know what it is, exactly, that you've heard before. Maybe for the moment I could just direct you to some things that I've said or discussed about it (or round about it as the case may be) and you can let me know if any of it grabs you as worthy of further discussion.....

<http://www.users.bigpond.com/drowden/issue22.htm#bliss>

<http://www.users.bigpond.com/drowden/issue8.htm#Editorial>

<http://www.users.bigpond.com/drowden/issue14.htm#metamorphosis>

<http://www.users.bigpond.com/drowden/issue15.htm#editorial>

Dan Rowden

GrantForEveryone
Registered User
Posts: 23
(1/12/04 5:11 am)
Reply

Re: Hello!

---

drowden -

Very nice links. I like what you have to say.

It's interesting that you seem to drive home the idea of ego-loss above any others. That certainly makes sense. How did you achieve and maintain this egoless state?

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 1607

(1/12/04 12:30 pm)

Reply

Re: Hello!

---

The attainment of such a state is not really all that complex - it is difficult, but not really complex. All one has to do is value reason highly (and understand why that is necessary, which, ironically, requires a rather rational turn of mind to begin with) and apply it to the essential questions of the nature of existence and therefore of self, accompanied with a great love of and burning desire for Truth.

In some respects the latter is the most important as most people have sufficient intellect to do the reasoning necessary. In Buddhist parlance that love of Truth is known as Bodhicitta (the uncompromising will to Truth). Possession of that is pretty much a matter one's individual karma, but it is possible to ignite the smouldering embers of it in some people who have some karmic potential.

Without exception, people come to the path and to Bodhicitta via a flight from suffering of some kind. This is an essentially egotistical endeavour, of course, but if progress is made the ego dissipates and the path becomes more or less who and what a person is. The path to Truth becomes their nature. It is as natural to them as the spreading of its roots is to a tree.

That is a rather simplistic overview, naturally, as it doesn't address the various subtle problems the ego throws up at you on the way.

Dan Rowden

GrantForEveryone

Registered User

Posts: 24

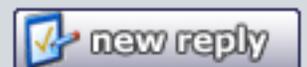

(1/13/04 6:44 am)

Reply

Re: Hello!

---

Did you gain enlightenment gradually or all-at-once?

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Are you "enlightened"?

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
drowden Forum Host Posts: 1612 (1/13/04 10:47 am) Reply 	Re: Hello! <hr/> The path to it is gradual, yes. There's no actual timeframe, of course, it might happen more quickly for some, but it certainly is a gradual process as one undermines egotistical delusions. The moment itself occurs almost imperceptibly, and might be characterised as sudden, but you know it when it happens. It's much the same as any "learning process". Over time you learn how to correctly spell a difficult word, then, all of a sudden (it's not really sudden but you know what I mean I'm sure), you know how to spell it. The time it takes to make real progress spiritually/philosophically can be correlated with two main elements: the degree of karmic baggage one is carrying and the kind of mind one possesses (i.e. the degree of rationality one has). Dan Rowden
voce io Registered User Posts: 575 (1/13/04 2:38 pm) Reply	Re: Hello! <hr/> None of that is true.

GrantForEveryone Registered User Posts: 25 (1/14/04 5:08 am) Reply	Re: Hello! <hr/> drowden - Could you give me a very brief definition of karmic baggage? Is your enlightened state permanent or does it fluctuate? If it does fluctuate, could you describe the process of fluctuation?
aapma Registered User Posts: 1 (2/17/04 12:52 am) Reply	Re: Hello! <hr/> Hi there, I'm new here and have found this forum very interesting. My view of "Karmic baggage" is very simple, on my path I was very lucky to find an amazing human being who taught me that we all have a dustbin with some rubbish that had been picked up on the way to where we are. The only question is, how much is in the bin? Where does it come from? The answer is the battle that many have to face on their path to enlightenment, you only find out the answer during your journey. Fluctuation. From my personal view, I would describe a fluctuation as my slipping back to what I used to be.
XXX STATIC X Registered User Posts: 74 (2/17/04 1:44 am) Reply	Re: Hello! <hr/> I flucuate with God where is God do you think God is in one man for God is man. Evil is pure, desire. For I have faith in one true God.
chaosrambler Registered User Posts: 13 (2/17/04 7:46 am) Reply	RE: Are you "enlightened"? <hr/> I'm not. I must think of enlightenment much more highly than those here who claim it. I think your question would have a better context if the meaning of the word enlightenment was made more clear. Talking about enlightenment to me goes well beyond reason, and into the realm of spiritual sort of beliefs and "feelings" voice io:

Is it just me or is what you said:
"Enlightenment is the understanding of nonduality using reason to understand that all states and experiences and tools such as reason are illusions."

the same thing as saying
"Enlightenment is an illusion"? Or that enlightenment is nothing?

Your points:
-understanding it using reason
-understanding reason is an illusion

So the very tool you use to understand enlightenment has no meaning/value/whatever, and so your understanding has no meaning/value/whatever and so your enlightenment has no meaning/value/whatever.

So you just said nothing.

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 695
(2/17/04 10:51 am)
Reply

Re: RE: Are you "enlightened"?

---

Well I obviously said something, as there are words on your screen. It's a paradox, and it isn't contradictory.

Canadian Zoetrope
Registered User
Posts: 29
(2/18/04 4:01 am)
Reply

Enlightenment.

---

Personally, I meditated sporadically for about 3 months, then one night, with some chemical assistance (Tetra Hydro Canibinol, Espresso, which by the way is a very non-buddhist thing to do), I meditated to the core of who I was.

Realizing the potential of an idea like non duality, I too questioned the legitimacy of rejecting all evidence. I thought about what duality was, what it's service was. I realized that duality IS essential to our survival as beings. To grow and be nourished, we need to differentiate between rocks and water, between trees and vaginas. Our physical self, that is, our body, exists on a plane of duality in order to serve as a vessel of our mind so that it may have the chance to attain enlightenment.

I thought and thought, about a discussion that was raging on this very board. A critique of A=A symbolism demonstrated to me that the human mind has the capacity to concieve and articulate ideas that transcend environmental stimuli. Meaning that there are Ontologically 2A's, and logically 1 A. I followed this train of thought until I realized, that in a universe of constant expansion and entropy, causality shows us that there must have been a singular source, and conversly a singular end.

Now I was really cooking, I used total rationality, and resoning to think of nonduality, but I still was not satisfied, I didn't believe it. I didn't FEEL it. I thought, and thought until it ocured to me, that the exception to the reasoning paradox lies in the riddle that has plagued all men since the dawn of time. Women. Women, or eros, represent that which is irrational, that which is unreasonable. I used irrationality in tandum with rationaltiy to not only think of but FEEL this one true existence.

Then all at once, my journey ended, or began in some sorts. I could now see how I was everything, and everything was me. Or more preferably 'it was so'. I could feel how everyone, and everything in existence is just the same, not waves on the ocean, but part of the ocean, just as much as the fingers are part of the hand. I felt how different objects in the universe are simply seperate manifestations of the singular reality. Just like limbs on a body, all different, yet all the same.

One might argue that as a sentient being I am different from the chair that you are currently sitting on, however, by declaring my sentience, you are declaring sentience for all beings in existence for I am the universe and so is your chair, and so are you.

thusly it was so.

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 696
(2/18/04 12:20 pm)
Reply

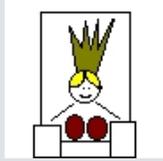

...

---

I meditated to the core of who I was

..What does that mean?

Weluvducsoha
Registered User
Posts: 1
(2/18/04 1:13 pm)
Reply

Re: ...

---

Enlightenment isn't all that hard to achieve; the human mind is quite capable of convincing itself of anything with very little effort... Experimentally, I can convince myself that I am in any state of mind/emotion/karma merely by willing it to be so; it's more difficult I find whilst I am feeling another emotion, but not an opposite one, very strongly. It's very easy to turn a positive emotion negative or visa versa, though.

Canadian Zoetrope 🖐️
Registered User
Posts: 31
(2/18/04 1:21 pm)
Reply

Core of self.

---

I meditated under the ontological desire to discover the nature of self. Upon realization, and destruction of the concept of self, I transcended duality and accepted what is.

Naturyl 🗿
Registered User
Posts: 168
(2/18/04 4:01 pm)
Reply

Re: Hello!

---

I'd actually agree with Dan's characterization. I'm not going to make any specific claim as to whether or not I am 'enlightened,' but the path Dan described is pretty much what I understand to be true. Of course, there are elements of the QRS worldview which I find troublesome and Dan does not mention in his synopsis, but what he does mention is pretty solid. In my own case, I have a fairly high degree of rationality concerning philosophical matters, but I also have a fairly high amount of "baggage," so the process is ongoing for me.

Naturyl 🗿
Registered User
Posts: 169
(2/18/04 4:04 pm)
Reply

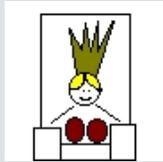

Re: Hello!

---

By the way, my understanding indicates that duality is nothing more than the way unity is manifested.

naturyl.humanists.net/diamon.html

voce io Registered User Posts: 697 (2/19/04 3:32 am) Reply	... <hr/> ...and destruction of the concept of self, I... I...
Canadian Zoetrope 🖐 Registered User Posts: 32 (2/19/04 11:22 am) Reply	Hrmm <hr/> Well, I hope I don't have to blatantly distinguish an ontological argument for the sake of necessity...
Weluvducsoha Registered User Posts: 2 (2/19/04 1:36 pm) Reply 	Re: Hrmm <hr/> The destruction of self, I must confess, is slightly more difficult a task than merely convincing oneself they are enlightened.... Obviously, the conviction that we are, we exist, we possess an ego, stems from our ability to think, want, and or desire: something Rene Descartes bothered to prove a while back. He's the one guy I really wanted to stick in a room with Buddha. Fortunately, the human mind is quite resourceful. I can't concieve of myself as utterly non-existent, but by merely saying that I do exist, but there is no I it is possible to avoid that trap. Another buddha thing, don't deny the thinking, only the thinker. So, once you arise to enlightenment, can you go back?
drowden Forum Host Posts: 1642 (2/19/04 2:30 pm) Reply 	Re: Hrmm <hr/> Enlightenment is not about the destruction of the notion of the "self" per se - that is mythology. It is about the destruction of the Ego. i.e. a false conception of the nature of the self. The "self" exists like anything else does - as an appearance whipped up by Nature to which we give a certain label. Enlightenment is simply about attuning one's consciousness to the true nature of things, which includes conceptions of self. To think of onself as utterly non-existent is one of those quaint little impossibilities with which we manage to drive ourselves batty.... Dan Rowden

suergaz Registered User Posts: 2320 (2/19/04 11:12 pm) Reply	--- <hr/> Your conception of the ego is ill-driven Dan. You have only defined it as such since I defined it as the conception of oneself in any case. Enlightenment is not about the destruction of anything.
N0X23  Registered User Posts: 80 (2/20/04 4:04 am) Reply 	Re: --- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Enlightenment is not about the destruction of anything. <hr/> Would you please explain what it is about?
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2322 (2/20/04 10:00 am) Reply	--- <hr/> It is about oneself! (:D) Sincerely!

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Are you "enlightened"?

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Canadian Zoetrope  Registered User Posts: 33 (2/25/04 5:29 am) Reply 	Self <hr/> Enlightenment is about the fish discovering the water.  I use the word 'I' as a symbol to communicate to 'you' in order that you may understand. You must however realize that you cannot understand enlightenment, you can only feel it.
voce io Registered User Posts: 734 (2/25/04 6:45 am) Reply 	Re: Self <hr/> No, Canadian is completely wrong. No one should listen to him.

Weluvducsoha
Registered User
Posts: 3
(2/25/04 10:15 am)
Reply

Re: Self

Okay, then it appears that you've just made things easier; I need not convince myself that I am without self, or being, only without ego, or misguided belief about my being. Therefore, by merely imagining that I neither resent nor am unduly attached to my being, but am content with that it is as it ought to be, then I shall be enlightened?
Still seems quite easy... I'd at least be challenged if you told me to believe I donnot exist.

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Attachment and Dettachment: Reality.

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
AryReisin Registered User Posts: 1 (5/29/04 10:52 am) Reply	 Attachment and Dettachment: Reality. <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Originally posted by komodo_island All appears, nothing is. <hr/> Alright, understandable. But how the fuck to dettach oneself from attachments? I "understand" that nothing is happening to no one, my belief is somehow the same Ramana says: The I is never affected by the experiences, like the cinema screen, never affected by what is being projected. Somehow like if the sensation of "now" or maybe "presence" (in other words what is permanent during all life-time: consciousness of this very moment (not included unconscious moments)) is something always is no matter the manifestation. Like if the camera is always on (when being conscious of course (in fact to be unconscious is to be consciously thinking of a past moment, just like forgetting, it doesn't happen)) no matter what is capturing. Then, me asking for your help, how the fuck not to identify with what is happening, as effective enough as not to feel: I suffer, I love, I feel sorrow and sadness. Maybe, wisdom has to do with acting according to what doesn't damage the I, example: smoking hurts me, it is wise to leave it without replacing it with another vice. A "little" (not little indeed) more difficult would be seeing that love and pain, or sorrow, are 2 sides from the same coin: I love my girlfriend (heaven, at least moments of ecstasy) -She left me I am in sorrow (fucking hell, terrible nightmare). Why is it so fucking difficult to stop looking for attachments when one "knows" they will end up fucking one. Is it maybe because one thing is to understand, and another thing is to having had enough? What Krishnamurtians suckers call comprehend, instead of understand.

To me it's 2 things, understand plus not wanting something harmful is usually and wrongly called comprehension. But the main thing, is not to understand, but not to want that which is in fact hurting one or going to. Example: I don't want something (without the need of understanding it hurts me), so I don't take it anymore.

Contrary to: I understand that it hurts me or it will, but I can't stop wanting it nor feel really it will hurt me (like balancing what is gained and lost, like saying I win more than what I lose or when the hard time comes I'll bear it). If you (anyone interested in debating this subject) are to reply, post, please try to do so seriously, it is very important to me, because I have a new girlfriend and the "same" problem I had with my ex I could very probably have it soon, or better said, I began to suffer the consequences of attachment. "To me it sums up in this: You can't lose what you don't have." But then a sharper thought would be: "No one can experience anything if no one is" (It reminds me of that phrase Komodo posted: 99.9 percent of what you do is for yourself, and there isn't one). Well, hope to read from you guys (those willing to "help" me and debate this seriously) soon.
Hugs, Ary.

MGregory
Posts: 554
(5/29/04 11:50 am)
Reply

 Re: Attachment and Dettachment: Reality.

---

If you happen to find something better, then the so-called "benefits" of the attachment start to look pretty lame. It's a matter of perspective.

AryReisin

Registered User

Posts: 2

(5/29/04 1:37 pm)

Reply

Re: Attachment and Dettachment: Reality.

---

Quote:

---

If you happen to find something better, then the so-called "benefits" of the attachment start to look pretty lame. It's a matter of perspective.

---

I don't happen. I don't care what the ideal or solution would be as it is not being, what I care is what is happening. I didn't find and I am trying to, anything better than attachment, how to do so? Please people post if that is going to question or do something about the core of the matter. Or show me how I contradict, whatever you think will help, but please don't tell me you think that saying what the ideal would be will help me.

It sums up to this: If it is not manageable to terminate the suffering completely, at least some relief is better than no relief (If there is the theory that this is not like this please explain, and consider, please consider, that for me it is this way, suffering 8 is better than suffering 10, not better but rather less worse, and the real goal is to end the suffering completely -in terms of permanence, because I have had little moments of relief- but at least do something about it (I know that what is possible is happening and what is impossible is not happening, and if I desire something different than what is happening, then that is actually part of this moment, but again, what is expresses itself))

Maybe no one really interested in helping, because no one identifies himself with me, or feels it's worth to help other. To those who are willing to help and/or go into this very deeply please post, to those who are not interested at all even in going into this deeply but only try to show they are better please don't post. I don't care if I am completely incorrect in everything I think, or if you probe me many contradictions, as long as it can be helpful. Thanks for reading.

Jones Kelly

Posts: 117

(5/29/04 2:48 pm)

Reply

Re: Attachment and Detachment: Reality.

---

MGregory wrote:

Quote:

---

If you happen to find something better, then the so-called "benefits" of the attachment start to look pretty lame. It's a matter of perspective.

---

What MGregory is pointing to, Ary, is that attachments and detachments have the same nature. To be suddenly free of desires, after years and years of desire-filled thinking, is a bit unrealistic. Valuing the truth is the best tool there is to free oneself from birth-and-death (samsara), that is, straight-out reasoning and honesty.

Ary wrote:

Quote:

---

But how the fuck to dettach oneself from attachments?

---

Since you've mentioned a new girlfriend, and are concerned about creating the same suffering as you experienced with an ex-girlfriend, perhaps you should ask what's so attractive about girlfriends. Do you value something more than a girlfriend? If you are attached to that valued something, whenever you don't have it, you will suffer.

In my view, the only meaningful value that removes suffering is Truth - since once understood, never leaves.

Quote:

---

I "understand" that nothing is happening to no one, my belief is somehow the same Ramana says: The I is never affected by the experiences, like the cinema screen, never affected by what is being projected. Somehow like if the sensation of "now" or maybe "presence" (in other words what is permanent during all life-time: consciousness of this very moment (not included unconscious moments)) is something always is no matter the manifestation. Like if the camera is always on (when being conscious of course (in fact to be unconscious is to be consciously thinking of a past moment, just like forgetting, it doesn't happen)) no matter what is capturing.

---

I think you can go a further step. You understand that the manifestation is actually nothing, and the consciousness of the manifestation is actually no one, yet you don't see that you're continuing a dualistic separation.

This means that you can't help but want to identify a self and separate experience, as shown with your statement:

Quote:

---

Then, me asking for your help, how the fuck not to identify with what is happening, as effective enough as not to feel: I suffer, I love, I feel sorrow and sadness.

---

Try not to separate everything, and join the "inner" and the "outer" in the core of your being. The self construct of observer and field of awareness construct are interdependent: neither actually exist, only "consciousness".

Quote:

---

Maybe, wisdom has to do with acting according to what doesn't damage the I, example: smoking hurts me, it is wise to leave it without replacing it with another vice.

---

"I" and "me" are simply constructs that have no inherent existence. Pain - or a vice - is an experience of conflicting values. To truly solve "vices", one can't simply suppress them and hope they don't re-appear. Challenging addictions always involves some kind of pain, so be patient, and focus on exploring the values you're holding.

Quote:

---

Why is it so fucking difficult to stop looking for attachments when one "knows" they will end up fucking one. Is it maybe because one thing is to understand, and another thing is to having had enough?

---

I think you've got it. When you've finally explored the cause-and-effect of the addiction, and have suffered enough, a greater value has been formed. But if that value is egotistical, based on the dualistic identity of self and experience, it starts all over again.

Quote:

---

To me it's 2 things, understand plus not wanting something harmful is usually and wrongly called comprehension. But the main thing, is not to understand, but not to want that which is in fact hurting one or going to. Example: I don't want something (without the need of understanding it hurts me), so I don't take it anymore.

---

No, without understanding why it hurts, you can't reject it. Consciously overcoming reactions-to-bad-things requires reason. It's as simple as that. Hopefully, one's reason will lead to understanding that there are no good or bad things, if one goes far enough with valuing Truth.

Quote:

---

Contrary to: I understand that it hurts me or it will, but I can't stop wanting it nor feel really it will hurt me (like balancing what is gained and lost, like saying I win more than what I lose or when the hard time comes I'll bear it).

---

The problem with this is it's short-sighted. It's essentially the formula for samsara, going round and round without ever getting out of suffering. Instead, it needs a conscious choice to value that which must eventually eliminate all suffering.

Quote:

---

"To me it sums up in this: You can't lose what you don't have." But then a sharper thought would be: "No one can experience anything if no one is" (It reminds me of that phrase Komodo posted: 99.9 percent of what you do is for yourself, and there isn't one).

---

Even with a good understanding of the lack of intrinsic existence in all things, attachments will still keep happening. To experience Reality flawlessly every moment of every day isn't an immediate consequence of understanding. If it were, the self would truly exist.

You say your goal is to end suffering completely. Read David Quinn's Wisdom of the Infinite. It's essential reading for anyone who wants to become enlightened (free from delusion). The first post in the thread called Wisdom of the Infinite has a link to this ebook. Give yourself plenty of relaxed time to slowly go through it. It's worth every minute.

I'm advising this because my own understanding is not perfect, so i would prefer you to go to someone who does know.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2318

(5/29/04 4:38 pm)

Reply

 Re: Attachment and Dettachment: Reality.

---

AryReisin wrote:

Quote:

---

But how the fuck to dettach oneself from attachments?

---

By attaching oneself to those philosophical tools which are designed to undermine all attachments in the long run - such as consciousness of emptiness, wise thoughts, love of Nature, comprehension of human psychology, strong disgust with human mediocrity, etc. If pursued wholeheartedly, these tools are very efficient in undermining all other attachments in the world, before undermining themselves.

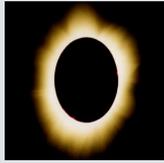

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2656

(5/30/04 1:53 am)

Reply

☐ Re: Attachment and Dettachment: Reality.

---

Ary, ---selves always have a self.

Become an iconoclast! (:D)

AryReisin

Registered User

Posts: 5

(5/30/04 5:39 am)

Reply

☐ Re: Attachment and Dettachment: Reality.

---

Jones Kelly wrote:

Quote:

---

In my view, the only meaningful value that removes suffering is Truth - since once understood, never leaves.

---

The way to Truth is being conscious of one's thoughts, believes, basically what is being believed of this very moment? Re-reading David's chapter endlessly until getting something? If we could go deeper into this I would certainly appreciate it.

Quote:

---

When you've finally explored the cause-and-effect of the addiction, and have suffered enough, a greater value has been formed. But if that value is egotistical, based on the dualistic identity of self and experience, it starts all over again.

---

Then not only if I am lucky enough as to having had enough, but if that value is egotistical the cycle will continue. Then? I have to (want to, need to, beg to) be able now to do something not depending on having had enough later.

Quote:

---

Instead, it needs a conscious choice to value that which must eventually eliminate all suffering.

---

The choice has to do with examining every choice, thought, desire? Or with what?

Quote:

---

Even with a good understanding of the lack of intrinsic existence in all things, attachments will still keep happening.

---

Does that mean that good understanding isn't good enough? That I need perfect understanding? Or it is still a matter of having had enough, combined with some minimum understanding?

DavidQuinn000 wrote:

Quote:

---

By attaching oneself to those philosophical tools which are designed to undermine all attachments in the long run - such as consciousness of emptiness, wise thoughts, love of Nature, comprehension of human psychology, strong disgust with human mediocrity, etc. If pursued wholeheartedly, these tools are very efficient in undermining all other attachments in the world, before undermining themselves.

---

I usually have this problem: if enquire deep enough, or question "everything", then the "core" of the "matter" appears: is there any need of anything at all?

I mean, why trying even to live? Why doing so? If one was told that there is a "need" to live, and one questions that, then what? Basically that's the main problem, well, not the main but a good part of it: disfunctionality. Still having to be functional. By functional I mean being concerned about eating, moving from this exact point, moving a finger, trying to fit in society.

Another problem is, how to attach oneself to something one doesn't feel anything for? Example: I can't fall in love with myself, with my own body, not in the same way I can fall in love with a girl (not even feel passion for myself). How to fall in love with an idea? I "know" that a girl's beauty is also an idea, but it involves emotion, physical feelings which are different from the enjoying of calm, or an idea. So how to attach to philosophical tools (which are supposed to utterly detach oneself from attachments)?

Jones Kelly

Posts: 120

(5/30/04 5:01 pm)

Reply

Re: Attachment and Detachment: Reality.

---

Quote:

---

Ary: The way to Truth is being conscious of one's thoughts, believes, basically what is being believed of this very moment? Re-reading David's chapter endlessly until getting something? If we could go deeper into this I would certainly appreciate it.

---

You're already aware, because stuff is happening within your consciousness. Getting at Truth is about challenging that stuff in awareness, in order to understand Reality without delusion. Truth is a philosophical value, meaning that it uses the tools of reasoning and logic to understand the nature of everything that exists.

Basically, you're looking at the "building blocks" of consciousness. To get anything out of Wisdom of the Infinite you are part of that investigation, bringing everything your consciousness is into play.

Quote:

---

Kelly: When you've finally explored the cause-and-effect of the addiction, and have suffered enough, a greater value has been formed. But if that value is egotistical, based on the dualistic identity of self and experience, it starts all over again.

Ary: Then not only if I am lucky enough as to having had enough, but if that value is egotistical the cycle will continue. Then? I have to (want to, need to, beg to) be able now to do something not depending on having had enough later.

---

If you attach yourself to values like David suggested [...consciousness of emptiness, wise thoughts, love of Nature, comprehension of human psychology, strong disgust with human mediocrity, etc...] the egotistical cycle of suffering inevitably swallows itself up.

It's like valuing perfection (becoming perfect). This creates the notion of a "self becoming perfect". This self doesn't actually exist, but is part of the value of becoming perfect. If uncompromisingly pushed to perfection, all delusions and attachments inevitably disappear. It's the funny thing about free will, it has a practical use (it's part of the whole causal process of change), but it doesn't have any inherent existence.

Quote:

---

Kelly: Instead, it needs a conscious choice to value that which must eventually eliminate all suffering.

Ary: The choice has to do with examining every choice, thought, desire? Or with what?

---

Look at it as the drive to understand the nature of everything. There's no way this is possible except through philosophical [logical] truth, since it's impossible to know the details of every specific empirical thing. If you know what is absolutely true and certain about necessarily everything, then you are conscious of the nature of suffering.

The first step is finding out what is true about absolutely everything.....

Quote:

---

Kelly: Even with a good understanding of the lack of intrinsic existence in all things, attachments will still keep happening.

Ary: Does that mean that good understanding isn't good enough? That I need perfect understanding? Or it is still a matter of having had enough, combined with some minimum understanding?

---

Being repulsed by suffering is a very important strength, because it means one is compelled to look for Truth. But it isn't quite enough. Nor is a smattering of intellectual understanding enough - it has to be an all-consuming passion for perfect understanding, the burning desire for absolute truth.

Such an attachment (for that's what it is - a fixation on Truth) if you give it everything you have and are, must inevitably resolve all attachments.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2319

(5/31/04 10:05 am)

Reply

Re: Attachment and Dettachment: Reality.

---

AryReisen wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: By attaching oneself to those philosophical tools which are designed to undermine all attachments in the long run - such as consciousness of emptiness, wise thoughts, love of Nature, comprehension of human psychology, strong disgust with human mediocrity, etc. If pursued wholeheartedly, these tools are very efficient in undermining all other attachments in the world, before undermining themselves.

AR: I usually have this problem: if enquire deep enough, or question "everything", then the "core" of the "matter" appears: is there any need of anything at all?

I mean, why trying even to live? Why doing so? If one was told that there is a "need" to live, and one questions that, then what? Basically that's the main problem, well, not the main but a good part of it: disfunctionality.

---

Your words suggest two things to me.

- You are still being hamstrung by the process of enquiry itself, rather than by the nature of truth. In other words, your disfunctionality is a result not of wisdom or the nature of Reality, but of your (as yet) unsuccessful attempt to grasp the nature of Reality.

- You are still looking for an external source of validation and purpose. This is expressed in your proclaimed need for a "reason to live", as though you are still wanting someone else to tell you what to do. You're intelligent enough to know that, ultimately, there can be no such thing as an external source of this kind, but you haven't yet shaken off your emotional need to have one nonetheless. As Nietzsche once remarked of this affliction in people, "God may be dead, but his shadow lives on".

Quote:

---

Another problem is, how to attach oneself to something one doesn't feel anything for? Example: I can't fall in love with myself, with my own body, not in the same way I can fall in love with a girl (not even feel passion for myself). How to fall in love with an idea?

---

I'm not sure that anyone can help you with that one. One either perceives the exhilarating purity, depth and power of a great philosophical truth such as cause and effect, and is bowled over by it such a degree that it makes everything else pale into utter insignificance - or one doesn't.

Quote:

---

I "know" that a girl's beauty is also an idea, but it involves emotion, physical feelings which are different from the enjoying of calm, or an idea. So how to attach to philosophical tools (which are supposed to utterly detach oneself from attachments)?

---

Falling in love with a philosophical idea is essentially no different to falling in love with a girl, except that it leads to different consequences. One becomes emotionally involved in the idea, it sweeps you off your feet, it dominates your mind, you cannot stop thinking about it, its beauty overwhelms you, you desire to become married to it, etc. But this can only happen if you actually perceive the loveable qualities of the idea in the first place, just as you cannot fall in love with a girl without first discerning her loveable qualities - or at least imagine you do.

So that would be my advice to you. Keep meditating on the truth of cause and effect until you either perceive its great reality and become dazzled by its power and beauty, or you growed bored with the whole thing and want to do something else.

AryReisin
Registered User
Posts: 11
(6/1/04 1:40 pm)
Reply

Re: Attachment and Dettachment: Reality.

---

Quote:

---

Falling in love with a philosophical idea is essentially no different to falling in love with a girl, except that it leads to different consequences.

---

Maybe it will not be impossible for me to fall in love with this: p067.ezboard.com/fgeniusn...=127.topic

2 options: or getting very close, or thinking I am getting very close. Each one has different consequences. How to know without taking a look by myself? Can't regret of something hasn't done nor thought. And if what ends up is worse than now, then it is also part of the causal events. It would be an illusion to think that something else could have happened. "What is possible is happening, what is impossible is not happening".

unknown
Registered User
Posts: 34
(6/2/04 1:37 pm)
Reply

Re: Attachment and Dettachment: Reality.

---

hey ary ,

You are here because you wanted to wake up this slave whore David quinn.

All humans are dumb. Any exceptions are made based on a belief.

All humans are reactive fools. Especially the people who run this forum.

They are slave to words. Words like "dumb whore slave fool pussy" .... make them react like kindercotton kids.

It is funny these humans monkeys try to babble about Enlightenment this and that.

How can any one know anything for sure except manifesting that belief?
How can it be?

Every one is living in their own closed realm.

There is no need to listen to any human monkey except yourself.

You can't learn anything from another human. You can only loan his belief and make your own and be a bitch to it by defending that belief.

Any human attempt to Truth and enlightenment is a futile effort.

All they are going to end up with is a belief they can be comfortable to live with. Budda did , jesus did. Every prophet manifested a belief.

You can't talk about detachment when you are attached to "concept of detachment".

It is a hypocritical statement.

Humans are hypocrite.

Until he learns that he is a hypocrite , he is going nowhere but down as a slave to a belief of what ever he manifest.

Ask questions.

Never agree or disagree.

In Bothways you will be polarized to a concept. It is no use.

How can any one say one way is better than others? How can anyone say others thought process is wrong and his is correct?

How can it is possible? except having a belief that his concept is correct?

Yes it is correct only to the person who is speaking. It is localized. Good and evil is a localized concept.

Ask questions until you ran out of questions and every energy you have. At the end you will be home when you become helpless and nothing to cling to.

Peace
unknown

AryReisin
Registered User
Posts: 18
(6/2/04 2:30 pm)
Reply

 Re: Attachment and Dettachment: Reality.

---

unknknown,
Are you ready to read this? Why are you here?
Don't come with the "I do not exist" or "You are manifesting yourself" crap.

drowden Forum Host Posts: 1717 (6/5/04 4:23 pm) Reply 	☐ Re: Attachment and Dettachment: Reality. <hr/> Hey Unknnown,  Still as insane as ever I see.  Oh, did I mention that you are not welcome? Go away, please.  Dan Rowden
WolfsonJakk Posts: 1619 (6/6/04 8:10 am) Reply	☐ Re: Attachment and Dettachment: Reality <hr/> I am Notsure, is this really unknnown?
enlightenmentor Registered User Posts: 4 (6/17/04 12:22 pm) Reply	☐ Re: Attachment and Dettachment: Reality. <hr/> "how the fuck to dettach oneself from attachments?" detachment is a natural tendency of awareness expanding (not something that needs to be done). before one gets too caught up in the wording or definitions, it might be noted that even the "masters" of "enlightenment" return (consciously) to a slightly aged body following their "transcendent" disciplines. it is all a matter of trying to find a label for each moment's experience - it is natural...and something consciousness is slowly evolving from in a few. ~enlightenmentor
unknnown Registered User Posts: 39 (6/18/04 11:14 am) Reply	☐ Re: Attachment and Dettachment: Reality. <hr/> There are no Masters.  All so called prophets are cowards.  As long as you are looking for truth , you will find something. Yes it will be a belief.  If you really deatched , you will not be here in this human slave world.  There is no reason for coming back.

Every human ever existed or going to be existed are fools.

They will be always running inside their box and talking and yapping about how outside of the box looks like... blah blah.

Anything said in words is a projection of the belief of Human who said it. It revolves around his belief/experiences (his identity).

There is no way you can detach yourself when you are attached to detachment.

That is a hypocritical Thought.

You all humans are dumb slave slutty whores to belief.

Ask question.

Never agree or disagree.

Words only fools you. Words only lies.

You can't think infinite (unknown) with limited words.

Anything defined is limited.

As long as you try to define a concept , you are only limiting it.

There is nothing to be said.

Everything NEW in human world is same repeated shit with new label.
Round and Round.

peace
unknown

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2681
(6/18/04 11:18 am)
Reply

 ---

---

Quote:

---

There is nothing to be said.

---

I know the feeling accompanying that thought.
So what now? (For you personally I mean.)

unknown
Registered User
Posts: 41
(6/18/04 11:23 am)
Reply

 Re: ---

---

I DO NOT EXIST!

Only you exist.

All these mental masturbation with words are useless.
Waste of Time.

David quinn and Drowden can masturbate and stroke each other with their theories.

Foolish Human monkeys.

Ask question.

As long as you give importance to "words" , you will be imprisoned by the illusion it creates.

Wordless Thought. Is it exist? Can it be possible with human thought process?

Human thought --- Masturbation of beliefs.

What is the thought without words? You only know.

Peace
unknown (unknown@hotmail.com - msn messenger)

Edited by: unknown at: 6/18/04 11:31 am

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2684

(6/18/04 11:44 am)

Reply

 ---

---

I'm flattered, but I don't think you've quite hit upon the truth that everything exists. Stop using words unknown! Reach us in thought alone!

Loving ones thought may or may not inspire one to words.

unknown

Registered User

Posts: 42

(6/18/04 11:54 am)

Reply

 Re: ---

---

Hi suergaz,

Keep babbling.

How can you understand things when it is beyond your perspective.

You will always comes up with answer that you can live with.

All humans do that. No exception.

There is no need to conclude.

Conclusion for fools who can not live without conclusion.

There is nothing to decide unless you are slave to answers.

There is no method or path.

Ask questions. Never agree or disagree.

Or just live with your own illusions.

peace

unknown

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2685

(6/18/04 12:05 pm)

Reply

---

Quote:

---

There is no need to conclude.

---

Sure, but there exists a love of conclusions.

Quote:

---

Conclusion for fools who can not live without conclusion.

---

Look, no-one can live without dying. And dying is a conclusion.

Quote:

---

There is nothing to decide unless you are slave to answers.

---

Not so, although you've picked out the common reason for decision-making. A question may be a decision.

Quote:

---

There is no method or path.

---

Ultimately, no.

Quote:

---

Ask questions. Never agree or disagree.

How can I help but agree?

Quote:

Or just live with your own illusions.

Do you understand humans to be evolving?

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Attachment and Dettachment: Reality.

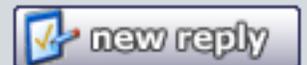

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Paul Registered User Posts: 548 (6/18/04 12:29 pm) Reply	--- <hr/> unknnown, I came to a conclusion about you. Of course I won't put it into words. It's just a thought. A very strong thought.
jimhaz Registered User Posts: 694 (6/18/04 7:55 pm) Reply 	Re: --- <hr/> So Paul, your thought was that you were unknown?  Edited by: jimhaz at: 6/18/04 7:55 pm

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

Genius Forum

Causality • Courage • Rationality • Determination • Logic • Integrity • Thinking • Ideals
Wisdom • Reason • Discipline • Truth • Masculinity • Perfection • Universe

Genius News

David Quinn's Site

The Thinking Man's Minefield

EZB Edit

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Attachment and Non-attachment

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
MGMacLeod Registered User Posts: 65 (7/16/04 11:03 am) Reply	Attachment and Non-attachment <hr/> What is non-attachment? What is it to be 'unattached'? Such questions as these seem to be important here of late. In terms of Buddhist doctrine, 'attachment' is one way of translating the Sanskrit trsna, which is etymologically related to the English thirst, and is often translated 'desire', although 'attachment' or 'clinging' are better approximations of the Sanskrit. And as we all know, trsna is the second noble truth, the origin of suffering. So, attachment means clinging to something, being 'caught up' with something. Obviously, non-attachment has been, and continues to be, interpreted in many different ways. Detachment, avoidance and resistance seem to be among the most common. 'Detachment' basically means a divorce from the world and a 'turning away' from any and all things that could potentially be attachments. Obviously, this essentially results in becoming attached to non-attachment, since one turns away because one clings to the idea of detachment. This, says David, is a necessary step on the way to full non-attachment, and that 'attachment to non-attachment' is the last attachment to be abandoned. Yet how can one detach from detachment? The very thing from which one is trying to escape is itself the 'principle' of that escape. Since the whole notion of non-attachment is meant to be a solution to suffering (dukkha in Sanskrit, literally feces), detachment is like being covered in shit and trying to remove it by rubbing more on.

Avoidance suffers basically the same fate as detachment. Ultimately, one will be in a position where one has to avoid avoidance, and therefore, more shit rubbing ensues.

Likewise for resistance--how will one resist resistance?

So then, what is one to do when faced with a situation in which s/he must detach from detachment, turn away from turning away, avoid avoidance, resist resistance? How can one not cling to 'not-clinging'? How, then, is there any difference between clinging and non-clinging, between attachment and non-attachment? The solution to attachment is non-attachment and the result of 'non-attachment' is attachment. Therefore, there is neither attachment nor non-attachment nor both nor neither. Thus, I interpret non-attachment as sunyata--the exhaustion of all views that is not itself another view. This is the essence of Nagarjuna's Sunyavada.

Now, what's the lesson to be learned from this? That the whole business of reified conceptual thought is internally incoherent and fundamentally bullshit. Such absolutist abstractions as attachment/non-attachment, desire/desirelessness, existence/non-existence, being/nothingness, self/other, self/no-self, subject/object, substance/process, agent/action etc, ect, have no substance and are, therefore, non-inferential--they don't apply to actual states of affairs in 'the world'. Interestingly, this quality of words and ideas is responsible for their apparent usefulness: being non-referential and incoherent, concepts can be bent and shaped to the needs of the situation without falsifying some transcendent ground of phenomena--in fact, all ideas and notions being empty of any 'ground' of meaning, they aptly, if paradoxically, demonstrate the groundlessness of all things.

But does this mean that concepts are the ultimate evil of the world and should be avoided like the plague? No, of course not. All it means is that concepts, like the 'things' of the 'external world', are not static and determinate. Concepts mean nothing--and are, in themselves, nothing--outside of the context of their usage, just like 'external things' have no existence or characteristics outside of their dependently originated collocation of causes and conditions. Therefore, one cannot point to some situation in the world and say, "there, attachment!"--indeed, the same applies to suffering, cessation and the path.

~Matt

Rairun Registered User Posts: 292 (7/16/04 11:55) Reply	... <hr/> Good post in my opinion.
james johnathan Registered User Posts: 33 (7/17/04 8:34) Reply	re: <hr/> Well said, Matt. I wonder how (or if) the QRS will respond...
WolfsonJakk Posts: 1707 (7/17/04 8:59) Reply	... <hr/> Why would you care? I am unattached to whether or not they respond. Get it?
DavidQuinn000 Forum Host Posts: 2347 (7/17/04 10:06) Reply 	Re: Attachment and Non-attachment <hr/> In his post, Matt MacLeod has created an artificial problem, and with it, an artificial solution. The term "attachment" specifically refers to any relationship that causes you to behave untruthfully or ignorantly for the sake of protecting that relationship. One is "attached" to the continuation of the relationship in question, even to the point of lying and adhering to falsehoods for its sake. A common example is the Christian who is attached to the Bible and indulges in all sorts of spruious thinking in order to maintain his attachment to it. This is a very real phenomenon in the world that not even Matt's silly postmodernist analysis of concepts can sweep under the carpet. The problem of being "attached to non-attachment" that Matt speaks of is also a false problem. It simply doesn't exist. This is because as soon as one becomes completely unattached to all things, one automatically ceases to be attached to non-attachment. There is no longer any use for such a strategy. It is like a medicine that we use to cure ourselves of a sickness. When we regain our health, we stop taking the medicine. Similarly, as soon as we enter into the state of pure non-attachment, we no longer have any need to remain attached to the ideal of non-attachment. It becomes superfluous.

MGMacLeod

Registered User

Posts: 66

(7/19/04 8:13 am)

Reply

Re: Attachment and Non-attachment

---

Way to miss the point, David.

Quote:

---

The term "attachment" specifically refers to any relationship that causes you to behave untruthfully or ignorantly for the sake of protecting that relationship.

---

What about your relationship to your supposed state of non-attachment that has led you to ignore the fundamental point of what I'm trying to say for the sake of protecting that relationship? Aren't these your words--"In fact, the realization of emptiness involves the realization that all states, without exception, are illusions"? What about your state of disagreement with my original post? What about the state of being in a "relationship that causes you to behave untruthfully or ignorantly for the sake of protecting that relationship"? What about your state of having your foot in your mouth? We all know how you'll find your way out: you'll make use of the ungrounded, non-referential character of words and concepts to bend both your words and mine into conformity with your supposedly fixed (and ultimately real) state of non-attachment (or maybe you'll admit that your clumsy, absolutist use of language and concepts is a nice demonstration of my point). So, you choose: you can concede it or prove it for me, but either way my point stands.

Quote:

---

This is a very real phenomenon in the world that not even Matt's silly postmodernist analysis of concepts can sweep under the carpet.

---

Sweep it under the carpet? All I'm saying is that there is no absolute, inherently existent, independently meaningful state of affairs called 'attachment' (or non-attachment); that is to say, attributing self-existence and self-nature to states and events like attachment and non-attachment leads necessarily to contradiction and absurdity, as I demonstrated. insofar as you use any reified concept to refer to some supposedly fixed and permanent state in the world, you have your head directly up your ass and are engaged in thoroughly absurd thought processes. This is merely an extension of the lack of self-nature in things: if things had self-existence and self-nature, they would never be able to change; if there was any absolute and fixed state of attachment, there would no possibility of liberation from it. And, in any case, absolute states and concepts are incoherent, as I have shown. I'd rather be a postmodernist than an absolutist; at least the former has some chance of seeing the possibility of liberation.

Quote:

---

The problem of being "attached to non-attachment" that Matt speaks of is also a false problem.

---

You didn't read to the end of my post, did you? Of course it's a false problem! That's the point: all conceptual conundrums created by the use of absolutist language are false problems--they have nothing to do with anything. If, upon reaching the end of my post, you thought that I was referring to some concrete fixed state of affairs in the world which I called 'attachment to non-attachment', then you completely missed the point. It is precisely because there is no such thing as a fixed and determinate state of attachment that one can be liberated from the illusion of it. Again, if there was any actual attachment, there would be no liberation, no enlightenment--in fact, there would be nothing at all, because if such things as self-existence and self-nature obtained in the world, there would be absolutely no change, complete stillness, perfect stasis, which would be indistinguishable from nothingness (and that, yet again, is why such absolute reified concepts as these are nonsensical).

Quote:

---

It is like a medicine that we use to cure ourselves of a sickness.

---

Yeah, that's the standard metaphor. Take a look at the instructions on the bottle, though, David.

Quote:

---

Instructions: Take as needed until you realize that both the sickness and the medicine are illusory. Active ingredients: Forcing the patient into a explicitly and intensely experienced, but ultimately illusory 'double-bind' wherein there is neither anything that can be done about the sickness nor anything that can be not done about it; to bring about the fundamental realization that the idea 'I have a sickness presently, and if I take this medicine, I will subsequently be cured of it' is itself the problem--that is, the idea that a sickness and a medicine could possibly exist is the sickness, and the medicine is the realization that there can be no medicine for a non-existent sickness. Known side-effects: Can cause some to further reify the notions of sickness and cure, which often results in non-existent addiction to the non-existent medicine for the non-existent sickness.

---

Or, to put it another way, in the words of a gentleman who supposedly knows what he's talking about:

Quote:

---

It is like climbing a long ladder and then, at the instant of reaching the very last rung, having the incredible realization that both the ladder and the place you are climbing towards are illusions.

---

**edit: formatting, spelling**

~Matt

Edited by: MGMacLeod at: 7/19/04 8:19 am

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2350

(7/20/04 12:06)

Reply

Re: Attachment and Non-attachment

---

Matt wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: The term "attachment" specifically refers to any relationship that causes you to behave untruthfully or ignorantly for the sake of protecting that relationship.

MM: What about your relationship to your supposed state of non-attachment that has led you to ignore the fundamental point of what I'm trying to say for the sake of protecting that relationship? Aren't these your words--"In fact, the realization of emptiness involves the realization that all states, without exception, are illusions"? What about your state of disagreement with my original post? What about the state of being in a "relationship that causes you to behave untruthfully or ignorantly for the sake of protecting that relationship"?

---

Realizing that all states lack inherent existence is not a cue for abandoning reason and truthful conclusions. Just as it is a truthful conclusion that all states are illusory, it is also a truthful conclusion that emotional attachments are a real phenomenon in the world. This is why I disagreed with your conclusion that concepts such as "attachment" or "non-attachment" don't refer to anything in the world.

Quote:

---

What about your state of having your foot in your mouth? We all know how you'll find your way out: you'll make use of the ungrounded, non-referential character of words and concepts to bend both your words and mine into conformity with your supposedly fixed (and ultimately real) state of non-attachment (or maybe you'll admit that your clumsy, absolutist use of language and concepts is a nice demonstration of my point). So, you choose: you can concede it or prove it for me, but either way my point stands.

---

What point? You are using concepts to make your point - therefore, according to your own reasoning, you are not making a point about anything in the world. So what are you actually saying?

I hope you're not trying to reify your own conclusion. That would be hypocritical.....

Quote:

---

DQ: This is a very real phenomenon in the world that not even Matt's silly postmodernist analysis of concepts can sweep under the carpet.

MM: Sweep it under the carpet? All I'm saying is that there is no absolute, inherently existent, independently meaningful state of affairs called 'attachment' (or non-attachment); that is to say, attributing self-existence and self-nature to states and events like attachment and non-attachment leads necessarily to contradiction and absurdity, as I demonstrated.

---

Yes, I agree that it is irrational to ascribe self-existence and self-nature to anything at all. But this doesn't mean that the phenomenon of attachment doesn't exist in the world and doesn't have a profound affect on everyone who engages in it.

There is only way to go beyond attachment and non-attachment and that is by (a) abandoning attachments to everything in the world and inside one's own self, and (b) abandoning attachment to the ideal of attachment itself (which, as I have argued, happens automatically as a consequence of the first part). Only then has one truly gone beyond the dualistic illusions of attachment and non-attachment.

Pretending that attachment and non-attachment do not exist because they have no self-nature is silly. It is like pretending that hunger doesn't exist because it has no self-nature, and that one doesn't really have to eat food because of this.

Quote:

---

I'd rather be a postmodernist than an absolutist; at least the former has some chance of seeing the possibility of liberation.

---

I'm just glad that I'm neither.

Quote:

---

DQ: The problem of being "attached to non-attachment" that Matt speaks of is also a false problem.

MM: You didn't read to the end of my post, did you? Of course it's a false problem!

---

You misunderstand. The problem that I deemed to be false was the one you depicted of the philosopher trying to abandon all attachments only to face the "dilemma" of being attached to non-attachment. Such a dilemma never actually arises.

Quote:

---

That's the point: all conceptual conundrums created by the use of absolutist language are false problems--they have nothing to do with anything.

---

What is this "absolutist language" that you keep referring to? Other than ignorant people, who uses that? What kind of language do you think Buddhas use?

Quote:

---

If, upon reaching the end of my post, you thought that I was referring to some concrete fixed state of affairs in the world which I called 'attachment to non-attachment', then you completely missed the point.

---

No, I don't think I did. I read you as referring to the philosopher's belief that a state of attachment or non-attachment exists, and I understood your point that such states do not really exist because all concepts are illusory. I disagree with this reified position of yours, for the reasons given in my response.

Quote:

---

It is precisely because there is no such thing as a fixed and determinate state of attachment that one can be liberated from the illusion of it. Again, if there was any actual attachment, there would be no liberation, no enlightenment--in fact, there would be nothing at all, because if such things as self-existence and self-nature obtained in the world, there would be absolutely no change, complete stillness, perfect stasis, which would be indistinguishable from nothingness (and that, yet again, is why such absolute reified concepts as these are nonsensical).

---

Are you saying, then, that the person who realizes the rather obvious truth that there are no fixed or determinate things is suddenly free of all attachment? Do you really think that the truth that attachment is a fluid everchanging phenomenon - in the same way that a river is a fluid, everchanging phenomenon - somehow lessens its reality and its tremendous impact upon the human mind?

Quote:

---

DQ: It is like a medicine that we use to cure ourselves of a sickness.

Matt: Yeah, that's the standard metaphor. Take a look at the instructions on the bottle, though, David.

Instructions: Take as needed until you realize that both the sickness and the medicine are illusory. Active ingredients: Forcing the patient into a explicitly and intensely experienced, but ultimately illusory 'double-bind' wherein there is neither anything that can be done about the sickness nor anything that can be not done about it; to bring about the fundamental realization that the idea 'I have a sickness presently, and if I take this medicine, I will subsequently be cured of it' is itself the problem--that is, the idea that a sickness and a medicine could possibly exist is the sickness, and the medicine is the realization that there can be no medicine for a non-existent sickness. Known side-effects: Can cause some to further reify the notions of sickness and cure, which often results in non-existent addiction to the non-existent medicine for the non-existent sickness.

---

None of this is relevant to the person who is genuinely sick. When a person is dying of cancer, for example, it is not something that he is whipping up with his reified concepts. It is not an illusion that he can just snap out of by realizing it is a fluid, everchanging phenomenon. No, he needs a real cure (even though it too, like all things, lacks self-existence) so that he can regain his health (even though it lacks inherent existence as well). Similarly, the person who is genuinely sick with attachments and ignorance needs more a substantial solution than that of simply telling him it is all an illusion.

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.32
Copyright ©1999-2005 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

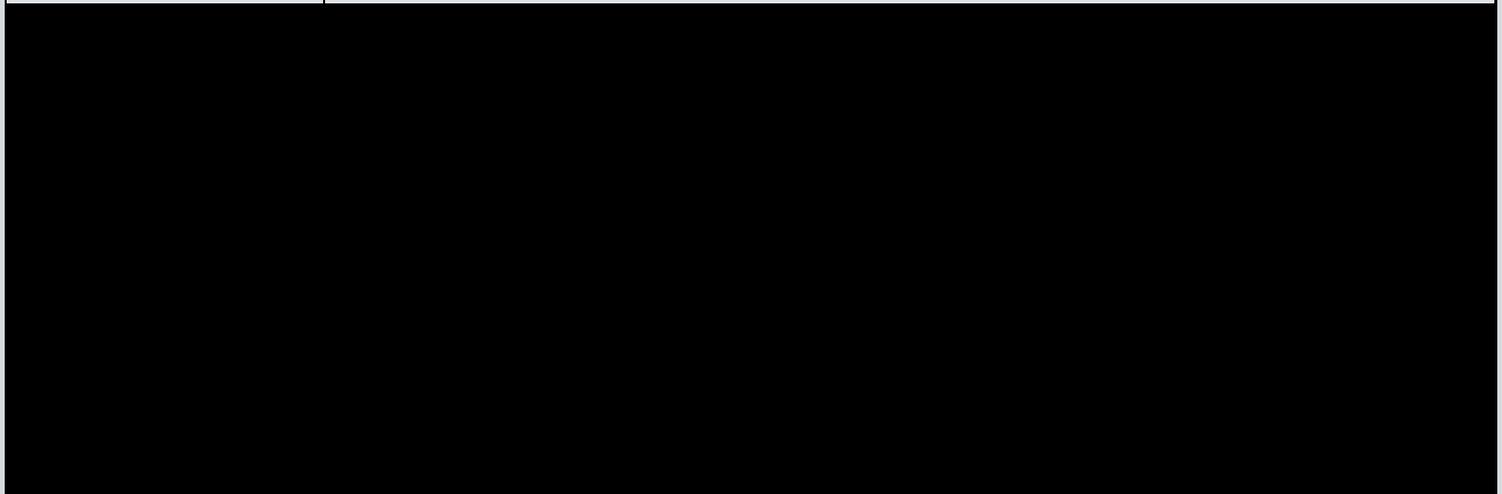

> Bad Habits

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
DEL Registered User Posts: 711 (9/30/03 6:20 pm) Reply	Bad Habits <hr/> Do you find it interesting that certain bad habits are near impossible to break through effort but as soon as your view on life changes your bad habits die effortlessly? I think a "will to value" will produce different habits in you than a "will to power". I think that in the same way you fail to fight off your old bad habits through effort, you will fail to resist the new good habits that will start to take control. Throw peer pressure into the habit battle and you have a storm. How many can survive life in the city?

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 43
(10/6/03 12:30 pm)
Reply

Re: Bad Habits

---

I agree. One will always be fighting oneself in this manner until one becomes fully masculine minded. The valuing of masculine mental traits, such as logic, reason, rationality, full consciousness, etc, is the best way to combat irrational incursions.

I have wittled away many of my non-valued habits but some still remain. For example, i still eat a bit too much, and i know it is fear based. Experiences of enlightenment take away all such fears and bad habits, so my best way of getting rid of that bad habit is to become perfect.

Thus, the best success can be achieved by developing greater understanding about the root causes of ones bad habits, rather than the habit itself. And the root cause of all bad habits is delusion, and thus, the only effective solution is enlightenment.

If friends are pushing you to engage in things that you do not value, they are of no worth at all if they do not respect your choice to disagree and withhold participation.

I never gave in to overt acts of peer pressure, and i only ever got respect for it.

All suffering is caused by unrealised ideals (ignorance). Most people project the cause of their suffering onto external things, such as the city, but how can the city really make you suffer? The experience of city is just sensory input, it is what you make of it that makes you suffer.

Rhett

Rairun
Registered User
Posts: 138
(10/6/03 2:42 pm)
Reply

...

---

If there's such a thing as fighting oneself, trying to be "masculine" minded definitely fits that definition (unless the attempt is an end in itself).

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 724
(10/6/03 5:32 pm)
Reply

Re: Bad Habits

---

Quote:

---

Rhett Hamilton:

Thus, the best success can be achieved by developing greater understanding about the root causes of ones bad habits, rather than the habit itself. And the root cause of all bad habits is delusion, and thus, the only effective solution is enlightenment.

---

EXCELLENT!

I believe this also.

One's philosophy determines ones habits.

Weak philosophy = Weak behaviour.

PURE LOGIC

If you try and clear your mind of all faith in the invisible world and try to live by pure logic you will be sick.

PURE FAITH

If you try to dispense with reality and have little regard for the visible world you will be sick.

The path is directly in the middle but it oscillates and appears to drift.
We must tune in.

Until such time we will remain weak and insignificant individuals.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1539
(10/6/03 6:53 pm)
Reply

---

---

Rhett, Thomas Knierim, like you, thinks ignorance is the source of suffering. I remain unconvinced. I can only trace it back to fear.

Edited by: suergaz at: 10/6/03 11:59 pm

voce io Registered User Posts: 331 (10/7/03 12:11 am) Reply	... <hr/> This is partly off topic, but: The path is directly in the middle but it oscillates and appears to drift. We must tune in. Until such time we will remain weak and insignificant individuals. From my experience, the middle path renders an individual featureless. If you want to be significant and strong, let whatever makes your appearance (to others) become strong and significant. Let's say you have a big nose... flaunt it. Have your life, and everyone else's lives, revolve around your big nose. Enlightenment is about weakness and insignificance. Before seeking enlightenment, you should talk to someone who knows the path, and find out if it's actually what you want. Also, determine if it's REAL! Enlightenment may be talked about, but there may not even be an enlightenment!
voce io Registered User Posts: 332 (10/7/03 12:15 am) Reply	... <hr/> Rhett, Thomas Knierim, like you, thinks ignorance is the source of suffering. I remain unconvinced. I can only trace it back to fear. Suffering doesn't have only one source. It's ignorance just as much as it is fear. I think what causes suffering mostly is the dissatisfaction of what is. Thinking things should be a certain way. "Wanting".
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1542 (10/7/03 1:42 am) Reply	--- <hr/> Of course suffering has many sources, but they all stem from fear, NOT ignorance. What is this "just as much as"?! Edited by: suergaz at: 10/7/03 1:44 am

DEL

Registered User

Posts: 725

(10/7/03 2:20 am)

Reply

Powerful Habits

---

Quote:

---

voce io:

From my experience, the middle path renders an individual featureless. If you want to be significant and strong, let whatever makes your appearance (to others) become strong and significant. Let's say you have a big nose...flaunt it. Have your life, and everyone else's lives, revolve around your big nose.

---

Great point!

Lets talk about these features of character that are so closely related to habits.

LEFT LOGIC POWER

Features/habits are consistent and outstanding reasoning abilities with a keen grasp of facts.

Has the power to create positive stability through the creation of new orders.

RIGHT FAITH POWER

Features/habits are an unpredictable and incredible charisma with a strong influential personality.

Has the power to dismantle non functional but established order to allow new creativity.

MIDDLE OSCILLATION POWER

Features/habits are a consistent ability to create order in apparent choas and the ability to predict choas in apparent order.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 726
(10/7/03 2:33 am)
Reply

Bad Habits, Ignorance and Fear

---

Quote:

---

suergaz:

Rhett, Thomas Knierim, like you, thinks ignorance is the source of suffering. I remain unconvinced. I can only trace it back to fear.

---

Thomas Knierim is correct.

If you do not know yourself how can you trust yourself?

We are nervous and fearful of being in particular situations because we are afraid we might make a mistake.

Some of our bad habits and weaknesses reveal themselves only when we are under pressure. If we are ignorant of ourselves we can only be in fear of circumstances.

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 334
(10/7/03 2:58 am)
Reply

...

---

Of course suffering has many sources, but they all stem from fear, NOT ignorance.

What is this "just as much as"?!

Fear can stem from ignorance.

LEFT LOGIC POWER

Features/habits are consistent and outstanding reasoning abilities with a keen grasp of facts.

Has the power to create positive stability through the creation of new orders.

RIGHT FAITH POWER

Features/habits are an unpredictable and incredible charisma with a strong influential personality.

Has the power to dismantle non functional but established order to allow new creativity.

MIDDLE OSCILLATION POWER

Features/habits are a consistent ability to create order in apparent chaos and the ability to predict chaos in apparent order.

This is interesting stuff, Del. So - instead of dying down in the right and left powers, the ideal middle path would be to cause each of the powers to grow and develop. That way, the persona becomes a powerful weapon, as well as a center of balance.

suergaz

Registered User
Posts: 1543
(10/7/03 3:08 am)
Reply

Re: ...

---

Nothing comes of ignorance, not even fear, let alone suffering! It is why ignoramuses say it is bliss! They mistake information for intelligence!

DEL

Registered User
Posts: 729
(10/7/03 8:03 am)
Reply

The Danger

---

Quote:

---

voce io:

This is interesting stuff, Del. So - instead of dying down in the right and left powers, the ideal middle path would be to cause each of the powers to grow and develop. That way, the persona becomes a powerful weapon, as well as a center of balance.

---

CORRECT.

This persona is the absolute weapon or medicine. The power to create or destroy.

Everybody can recognise it, it transcends language. It is international. Absolute power combined with absolute weakness.

The tension is tremendous, the oscillation frequency very high.

It is very dangerous.

I think I am beginning to see the way but the more I see the more afraid I get. I need to find out the exact nature of the danger before it's too late or my mind and body will snap from the tension or shatter from the frequency.

DEL Registered User Posts: 731 (10/7/03 8:17 am) Reply	ignorance is bliss? <hr/> Quote: <hr/> suergaz: Nothing comes of ignorance, not even fear, let alone suffering! It is why ignoramuses say it is bliss! They mistake information for intelligence! <hr/> The complete saying is this: Ignorance is bliss [bold]when[/bold] it is folly to be wise. Which comes first ignorance or fear? Perhaps this is another case of tension or oscillation.
DEL Registered User Posts: 732 (10/7/03 8:24 am) Reply	The Danger <hr/> I'm not sure but I reckon it is something to do with secrecy. If you hide the things you are supposed to make public the fire will consume you from the inside. If you speak the things that are supposed to be secret the fire will consume you from the outside.
G Shantz Registered User Posts: 400 (10/7/03 9:43 am) Reply	-- <hr/> All fear is based on ignorance, because if we weren't ignorant, we would know we have nothing to fear. If we had faith in reason, we would enter fully into non-attachment. How many of us have this faith? Currently I am attached to my daily routine, and my surroundings. Familiarity. Gregory Shantz

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 46
(10/7/03 11:30 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Ignorance of the true nature of Reality causes the delusion of an inherently existent self, and is thus the root cause of all suffering.

With no self, how could one suffer?

Rhett

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1544
(10/7/03 12:40 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Thanks for completing the whole of the proverb DEL. We can only assume that fear stems from ignorance, how can this truly be KNOWN with ignorance being what it is?! This is my point. As far as is possible to see, fear is the primary cause of suffering. You can inform a person of very many things about the nature of reality and it will not prevent them suffering from it if they have a fearful nature.

What is your stance towards suffering anyway you metaphysicians? Do you wish to alleviate it, to eliminate it? I suppose none of you are so advanced you want to advance it do you?

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1546
(10/7/03 1:03 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:
_____
With no self, how could one suffer?
_____

What's your point? With no self, how could one ...be one?

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 341

(10/7/03 1:04 pm)

Reply

Re: ---

I think fear is based more on reality rather than ignorance. We should fear pain, death or for our position in society, because it is fear that makes us want to overcome it, to progress and evolve. Fear can come from either ignorance or knowledge, it can be rational or irrational. Knowledge can certainly reduce fear but it does not always do so. We cannot know everything, even if enlightened, so to a degree we will always be ignorant. Suffering does not really stem from ignorance or fear, it comes from changes outside our immediate control. Fear can be enjoyable, otherwise why would people enjoy sport, performing, debating and so on. It is the besting of fear that is part of why these activities are enjoyable.

Take the common fear of making speeches. This is a fear that one may not perform. If we were fearless we would confidently say whatever we liked, to whomever. The end result of this fearlessness would most likely be that we would make mistakes and perhaps even be cast aside by society, however if we had a degree of fear then we would examine why we had this fear and temper our speech to the audience. We would ensure we are fully prepared. As we must live in a herd society, this fear of being ostracised is thus rational and beneficial. Where the fear of making speeches is to such a degree that it prevents us from speaking or we mumble and stammer in fright, then this is irrational as the potential downside is rarely equal to the danger perceived.

Ignorance of the true nature of Reality causes the delusion of an inherently existent self, and is thus the root cause of all suffering.

No, to me the root cause of all suffering is that we physically exist and must interact with complexity beyond our mental abilities and change beyond our control. Suffering shows us the wrong way, so that we can attempt the right way to do things.

I imagine being enlightened just helps to categorise and simplify this complexity so we fear less. It allows you to fit anything that causes suffering into the broad picture and not concentrate on irrelevant and irrational matters of detail. It gives one the ability to concentrate on real or logical elements of what we fear rather than ones imagination.

DEL Registered User Posts: 734 (10/7/03 4:53 pm) Reply	Avoidance <hr/> The objective is to avoid pain and death. The more spiritual pain (tension, spin, oscillation) you can handle the less physical pain you will have to endure. This will also dictate the kind of death you will experience.
---	--

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

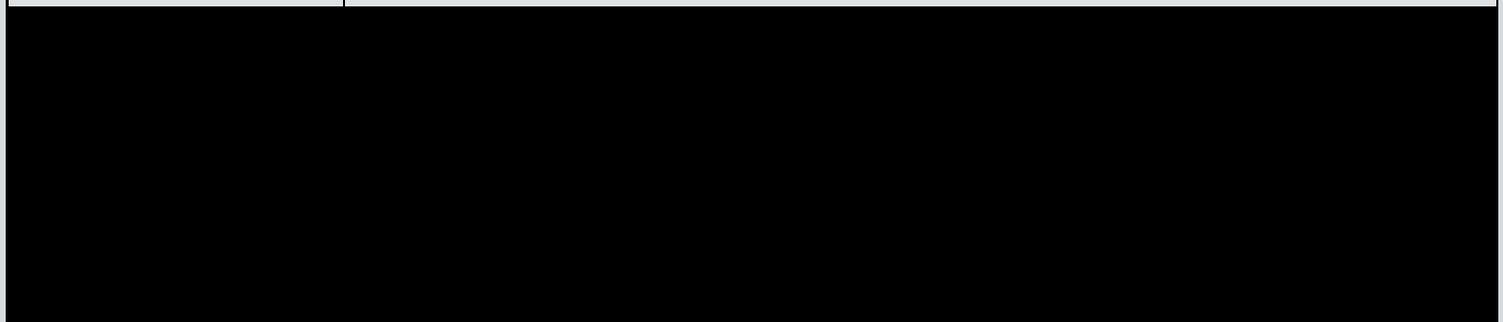

> Bad Habits

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Rairun Registered User Posts: 139 (10/7/03 10:24 pm) Reply	... People who have fear of suffering are the ones who try to end it.
WolfsonJakk Registered User Posts: 1194 (10/8/03 8:31 am) Reply	.... Is it possible to end suffering without fear? Once the question of existance is answered, lack of fear becomes commonplace.
DEL Registered User Posts: 738 (10/9/03 7:16 am) Reply	Bad Habits, Ignorance and Fear Do you have a bad habit that you cannot control? Surely the conquering of your own bad habits are the clearest indication of your progress.

DEL Registered User Posts: 745 (10/10/03 9:01 am) Reply	Enlightenment <hr/> That's right. I knew you would all go quiet. All this enlightenment theory non-sense. If you can't overcome your own bad habits it is the clearest sign that you are not enlightened. If logic doesn't give you the power over your own self what use is it?
Rairun Registered User Posts: 142 (10/10/03 10:34 am) Reply	... <hr/> I don't have habits that I consider bad. But I suppose most of you would say many of them are. I don't claim enlightenment though. Edited by: Rairun at: 10/10/03 10:38 am
Rhett Hamilton Registered User Posts: 48 (10/10/03 10:34 am) Reply	Re: --- <hr/> Suergaz: What is your stance towards suffering anyway you metaphysicians? Do you wish to alleviate it, to eliminate it? I suppose none of you are so advanced you want to advance it do you? Rhett: It has been advanced numerous times. We cannot do your work for you. You will have to be prepared to think for yourself if you want to gain wisdom. David's book is highly recommended reading. I am not going to re-write his book each time someone asks about the nature of Reality. If someone is questioning ideas within the book i am more than willing to try to help.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 49
(10/10/03 11:28 am)
Reply

Re: Enlightenment

---

DEL: That's right.
I knew you would all go quiet.

All this enlightenment theory non-sense. If you can't overcome your own bad habits it is the clearest sign that you are not enlightened.

If logic doesn't give you the power over your own self what use is it?

Rhett: Can you define what you mean by bad habit?

I would say a bad habit is when one does something repeatedly that is contrary to ones higher will or values, and that the valued behaviour is wholly within ones capabilities. It tends to be asociated with mental conflict, confusion, and poorly formed thoughts.

Higher consciousness and enlightenment gives one a lot of power over oneself. I have already mentioned my bad habit, and in doing so got rid of some of what was left of it. I expect that it will soon be totally gone. I am not aware of any others. How many do you have?

The enlightened do things by rational choice in accordance with their valuing of truth. As soon as they decide they no longer value a particular practice, they no longer do it. If they experience interruptions to their enlightenment they may consider that a bad habit (from which other bad habits may stem).

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 950
(10/10/03 11:46 am)
Reply

Re: Bad Habits, Ignorance and Fear

---

Quote:

---

All this enlightenment theory non-sense. If you can't overcome your own bad habits it is the clearest sign that you are not enlightened.

If logic doesn't give you the power over your own self what use is it?

---

My, my. Out of the mouths of babes...

Logic is of great use, DEL. But is it the tool of enlightenment? These desperate Buddhists, rejecting one form of salvation religion for another, trying to use their "will" to "conquer" themselves, remind me of Catholic postulants flagellating themselves in a frenzy of hope that by so doing they can overcome their "sinful" nature and their feelings of unworthiness.

Buddhism and Christianity are equally dismal. Sure it is you can't suffer if you feel nothing. Well, the dead feel nothing also. But what has that to do with enlightenment? Enlightenment lies within the realm of feeling!

The kingdom of heaven is WITHIN. The more connected you feel to the universal life force of the universe, the more enlightened you are and the more wisdom is available to you.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1199
(10/10/03 12:24 pm)
Reply

Re: Bad Habits, Ignorance and Fear

---

"Rhiannon moves like a cat in the dark, and wouldn't you love to love her..."

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 147
(10/10/03 2:57 pm)
Reply

Enlightened Rhett Hamilton

---

Quote:

---

The enlightened do things by rational choice in accordance with their valuing of truth. As soon as they decide they no longer value a particular practice, they no longer do it. If they experience interruptions to their enlightenment they may consider that a bad habit (from which other bad habits may stem).

---

Rhett? Rhett! Wake up, man.
Your mother is on the phone.

DEL Registered User Posts: 747 (10/10/03 5:03 pm) Reply	Re: Bad Habits, Ignorance and Fear <hr/> birdofhermes. EXCELLENT!
DEL Registered User Posts: 748 (10/10/03 5:09 pm) Reply	Re: Enlightenment <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Rhett Hamilton: The enlightened do things by rational choice in accordance with their valuing of truth. <hr/> WRONG ! Keep trying to overcome your bad habits and achieve enlightenment through reason and logic and with enough effort and momentum you hit the wall hard enough to realise you are wasteing you time.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1553 (10/10/03 11:21 pm) Reply	---- <hr/> Rhett, you and I in the cage! Your choice of topic! I am going to eat you alive.
Dave Toast Registered User Posts: 628 (10/12/03 12:05 am) Reply 	Re: ---- <hr/> Does the enlightened person still pick their nose? Or wipe their jizz on the curtains?

suergaz Registered User Posts: 1561 (10/12/03 12:16 am) Reply	Re: ---- <hr/> No, he wipes his nose, and picks his jizz off the curtains. Edited by: suergaz at: 10/12/03 12:19 am
Dave Toast Registered User Posts: 631 (10/12/03 12:30 am) Reply 	Re: ---- <hr/> We should ask David or Dan. Boys, if you've picked your nose and wiped your jizz on the curtains, do you then wipe your nose and pick the jizz of the curtains once it's dried? Have you ever wiped jizz off the curtains and then picked your nose?
Rhett Hamilton Registered User Posts: 53 (10/12/03 12:06 pm) Reply	Re: ---- <hr/> Bad habits are not inherent. One only has a bad habit if one defines oneself to have one. Someone might choose to pick their nose for the purpose of removing dried snot and not in any way consider it a bad habit. If one relies on other peoples definitions of what are bad habits, one is being herdly, and one would also consider thinking quite a bad habit... Rhett
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1571 (10/12/03 12:20 pm) Reply	--- <hr/> (:D)

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 752
(10/12/03 1:14 pm)
Reply

Bad habits

---

Quote:

---

Rhett Hamilton:

If one relies on other peoples definitions of what are bad habits, one is being herdly, and one would also consider thinking quite a bad habit...

---

Excellent!

You are on the level Rhett.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 754
(10/12/03 9:43 pm)
Reply

Logic and Religion

---

Quote:

---

birdofhermes:

Logic is of great use, DEL. But is it the tool of enlightenment? These desperate Buddhists, rejecting one form of salvation religion for another, trying to use their "will" to "conquer" themselves, remind me of Catholic postulants flagellating themselves in a frenzy of hope that by so doing they can overcome their "sinful" nature and their feelings of unworthiness.

---

When my God Majick is of sufficient strength, I'll ask Weininger if he would be so kind as to accept a ressurection invitation.

Quote:

---

Weininger

A person can perish from nothing other than a lack of religion. The genius shows this most horribly, for the man of genius is the most devoted man, and when devotion leaves him, his genius has left him. It was not without deep reason that the unscrupulousness of the mind became a problem for Nietzsche; the unscrupulousness of the mind is the clever man, and the clever man was the fate that menaced Nietzsche, and the abyss that finally dragged him down. Would he otherwise have considered it necessary to stress explicitly when he meant something seriously, and really wanted to be taken seriously? What Nietzsche lacked was mercy, but without mercy, loneliness, even Zarathustra's, is not bearable. Thus logic was not a uniquely valuable good for him, but an external constraint (for he felt too weak not to scent danger everywhere). However, he who negates logic has already been abandoned by it, he is on the road to insanity.

---

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Bad Habits

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1573 (10/12/03 10:28 pm) Reply	 Re: Logic and Religion <hr/> Weininger Quote: <hr/> A person can perish from nothing other than a lack of religion. The genius shows this most horribly, for the man of genius is the most devoted man, and when devotion leaves him, his genius has left him. It was not without deep reason that the unscrupulousness of the mind became a problem for Nietzsche; the unscrupulousness of the mind is the clever man, and the clever man was the fate that menaced Nietzsche, and the abyss that finally dragged him down. Would he otherwise have considered it necessary to stress explicitly when he meant something seriously, and really wanted to be taken seriously? What Nietzsche lacked was mercy, but without mercy, loneliness, even Zarathustra's, is not bearable. Thus logic was not a uniquely valuable good for him, but an external constraint (for he felt too weak not to scent danger everywhere). However, he who negates logic has already been abandoned by it, he is on the road to insanity.

---

Weininger must have been a christian. With mercy, loneliness is a bore, and solitude is deserted once and for all. Listen to Otto's last sentence in that quote! It's insane. He proves that most men seek only what they can bear.

I want infinity, eternity, endlessness, forever, and all that tasty stuff. Insanity is but an itch!

Edited by: suergaz at: 10/12/03 10:31 pm

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 640
(10/12/03 11:45 pm)
Reply

 Re: Logic and Religion

---

Boundlessness?

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1574
(10/12/03 11:58 pm)
Reply

 ----

---

Yes! Have I yet negated logic?

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 641
(10/13/03 12:44 am)
Reply

 Re: ----

---

Quite impossible.

Insane indeed.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1575
(10/13/03 8:25 am)
Reply

 ----

---

Impossible to desire it?

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 755
(10/13/03 6:04 pm)
Reply

 Criminal or Insane?

---

Insane - Unconscious of bad habits
Criminal - Conscious of bad habits

Quote:

---

Weininger

Genius is either the reverse of perfect insanity, or the reverse of perfect criminality.

Each genius lives in fear of one or the other. He must hold his own, at every moment of his life and most vigorously at the greatest moments, against one of these two forms of nothingness; he must set himself against it. The ego, genius, is an action (“eternally young”), a perpetual yes!

---

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 647
(10/13/03 8:17 pm)
Reply

 Re: ----

---

Quote:

---

Impossible to desire it?

---

Impossible to negate it.

Possible to desire it's refinement.

suergaz Registered User Posts: 1576 (10/13/03 9:21 pm) Reply	 --- <hr/> I meant boundlessness!
Dave Toast Registered User Posts: 648 (10/13/03 10:43 pm) Reply 	 Re: --- <hr/> I meant logic.

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Barry Long "Wisdom and where to find it/A book of truth

New Topic

Add Reply

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Kellyven Registered User Posts: 17 (2/25/04 12:27 pm) Reply	Barry Long "Wisdom and where to find it/A book of truth <hr/> An Australian spiritual teacher, first declared in 1968. This book first publ.1969, current print 1999 (Barry Long Books). Surprisingly much seems ok, and then a few things stand out as not ok: Quote: <hr/> "Understanding is the very being of you. Understanding is the thing behind your smile that goes out to the child as you watch it play. It needs no words. When you love, when you are in the state of love, it is the same. When you hold hands with the one you love you do not think, do not remember, you just sit there. The tremendous thing about the state of love is that you can never experience it and think at the same time. But you must not believe me. You must look at it for yourself in yourself. This is where wisdom begins." <hr/> The error is that the unconsciousness of the state of love is one of ego consciousness: mindlessness that reaffirms the comforting sense of self, even though it appears as selflessness. The no-mind "hsu" of the taoist could be said to be so similar, since realisation of the delusion of self leads to stopping the delusion of awareness. But it is not the same no-mind as egotistical attachment in "bhakti".

Another thing that stood out was "separation":

Quote:

---

"In consciousness, there is no movement, no world. It is when consciousness comes into mind that the movement begins. Mind formulates the plans for the body to act in the world. Mind does not act in this world; it works through its instrument of body. In a moment I will show you how separate the worlds of mind and body are in your experience. It is the separation of these two in your understanding that we are after. Later you will separate from the mind. It all takes great pain and suffering and effort. Eventually you are in the world, but not of it, eternally peaceful, eternally untouchable. This realisation is the mystic death.

---

Separation is a theme throughout the book, which to me speaks about maintaining an ego, a self. David mentioned in the 'ego' thread that the self construct continues for the sage. But Barry seems to be maintaining the self has an inherent existence.

Kelly

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

Genius Forum

Causality • Courage • Rationality • Determination • Logic • Integrity • Thinking • Ideals
Wisdom • Reason • Discipline • Truth • Masculinity • Perfection • Universe

Genius News

David Quinn's Site

The Thinking Man's Minefield

EZB Edit

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Beginnings and endings...

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
StreetLamp Registered User Posts: 82 (7/29/03 2:08 am) Reply	Beginnings and endings... <hr/> Consider the following: Where did this post begin? Is it with the first letter, with the first keystroke? Did it begin as a thought? Maybe it began with the creation of the forum, or even the universe. Did it start with one thing, or many things? How do we define beginnings? Where does it, or will it end?
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1321 (7/29/03 2:26) Reply	--- <hr/> It begins at the beginning and ends at the end. The post is, after all, 'the post' and not what led to it, or the thought/thoughts it was produced from, no matter that they are a part of it.

StreetLamp Registered User Posts: 85 (7/29/03 2:57) Reply	Re: --- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> It begins at the beginning and ends at the end. The post is, after all, 'the post' and not what led to it, or the thought/ thoughts it was produced from, no matter that they are a part of it. <hr/> Perhaps, but what defines the post? Is it a random sequence of ones and zeros, or is it an idea?
WolfsonJakk Registered User Posts: 1113 (7/29/03 3:40) Reply	Re: --- <hr/> An answer to your question can be found here.
StreetLamp Registered User Posts: 87 (7/29/03 4:05) Reply	Re: --- <hr/> Yes, causation is one theory, but it is not the only possibility. If it were, everyone would agree.
WolfsonJakk Registered User Posts: 1114 (7/29/03 4:12) Reply	Re: --- <hr/> Not everyone believed the earth was round yet in hindsight it seems so obvious.

StreetLamp Registered User Posts: 88 (7/29/03 4:37 am) Reply	Re: --- <hr/> WolfsonJakk wrote — "Not everyone believed the earth was round yet in hindsight it seems so obvious." Yes, but some still say it is not round. Some say we didn't land on the Moon. There isn't an idea on Earth that cannot be argued. That is why I believe that there is only one undeniable truth, and we have not yet discovered it. Causation seems obvious too, but it can still be argued. I'm suggesting that if we are a part of the truth, the beginning and the end, that it might be difficult to distinguish looking from the inside out. Quote: <hr/> All of these examples demonstrate the obvious truth that the boundary between the world and ourselves is non-existent. Cause and Effect <hr/> Edited by: StreetLamp at: 7/29/03 4:39 am
WolfsonJakk Registered User Posts: 1115 (7/29/03 6:29) Reply	Re: --- <hr/> Yes, I agree it can be difficult at first. The ego blocks rationality on many fronts. The sense of self does not want to do away with the pursuit of pleasure like any good drug addict, nor does it want to give up the irrationality that justifies its own existence. The ego thinks it is unique and won't hear arguments to the contrary. There will always be deniable truth. But the ability for an individual to deny or refute an idea on some basis other than rationality says nothing about the truth of the idea itself. On the other hand, once rationality is established, it speaks volumes about the individual attempting to deny it.
StreetLamp Registered User Posts: 89 (7/29/03 6:34) Reply	Re: --- <hr/> Agreed.

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 1308
(7/29/03 11:10)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Beginnings and endings exist wherever we say they do. They are merely artifacts of consciousness. It doesn't take all that much thought, however, to see they have no objective reality, that they do not constitute any kind of objectively real aspect of reality.

It's a difficult notion to consider - that one didn't really have a beginning....

Dan Rowden

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1324
(7/29/03 13:36)

Reply

---

---

Quote:

---

Beginnings and endings exist wherever we say they do.

---

Sure they do, so long as the onset of insanity has begun with the end of reason.

StreetLamp

Registered User

Posts: 91
(7/29/03 19:42)

Reply

Re: ---

---

To me, the above seems valid. Here are some further considerations, if you are interested.

Is there an ultimate theory of consciousness, and is it attainable? I have been working with this for several days here at the forum. To me, there exist the possibility that consciousness, like physical form, is as much a part of the totality as everything we can sense. Consciousness may well be the fabric of all "reality." It is not surprising that we have argument when attempting to analytically describe consciousness. As I mentioned in another discussion, as physical substance we are one with everything. This must mean that whatever makes up our conscious is also a part of everything. There is no definable beginning or end to consciousness disallowing for distinction between the physical and mental components. Consciousness itself seems too profound to be separate from everything else. Because my post continually transmits thought, it must remain a part of my ongoing consciousness until it is erased. I think this can be said of all recorded data.

Is consciousness as damaging as it is integral?

I have recently suggested that consciousness is harmful. Here is why: I have two strong intuitions at work: 1.) the boundary between the world and ourselves is non-existent. 2.) consciousness, as the only distinction, appears to be a boundary. Both of these seem logical to me, but I cannot mesh them together.

As you can see, item two falsifies item one. You might be well aware that the first is based on cause and effect, where the latter is necessary for the first to be understood. I'm not trying to be funny. I see this as a real problem. I really think that consciousness is, not only a boundary, but the problem itself.

From heretofore I will call this abstraction corrupted consciousness. Without corrupted consciousness we might be able to comprehend the whole that we are a part of. I've even gone so far as to suggest that this is what most people appear to be seeking.

As a distinction, I am suggesting that what we now possess is corrupted consciousness, and a new form of consciousness would be necessary to attain full enlightenment. As I see it, the difference between the two distinctions would be that one lacks all distractions that result from the constant input of all of our five senses. I think that our system of sensory input is what might interfere with consciousness even though it appears to feed it. Processing all of this peripheral input all of the time simply eats up too many resources for our consciousness to properly do it's job. I also believe, that in it's current form, our consciousness is inseparable from sensory faculties and is therefore corrupted.

Can this idea be supported?

There seems to be some evidence of this dilemma found in certain mental exercises. Meditative and hypnotic practices produce levels of consciousness that preclude the normal onslaught of outside distractions. Without this constant sensory bombardment, there seems to be more attainability accessible to those who have 'mastered' these techniques. Unfortunately, 'mastery' is the best they can do. It seems that, short of becoming unconscious, consciousness cannot be completely manipulated. It is therefore, still a candidate for possible impairment. I am not insisting that this is a correlative relationship. It only appears that I might be able to support what I have been asserting.

More possible supporting evidence lies with the increased ability of those afflicted with conditions such as blindness, or deafness. They possess exceptional adaptation skills, beyond 'normal' boundaries. This seems especially true of persons with multiple disorders.

Look at Hawking. With his lack of normal activity levels, his brain isn't so busy trying to define useless input. Again, this is just a maybe.

One last consideration:

Is it possible that this marriage between corruption and consciousness is by purposeful design?

StreetLamp

buschwind

Registered User

Posts: 1

(8/23/03 18:59)

Reply

Re: ends and beginnings

---

in the realm of the naked eye nothing happens that does not begin or end

and yet nowhere can we find the place the space the moment of which we can say that this is where it begins or this is where it ends

and whoever tries to find refuge in any one place
in any one moment will never be where he thinks he is something begins and already is no longer the beginning but propelling us into the heart of the thing that is happening

if we were suddenly to stop and ask ourselves where we were going

we would be lost for at each moment we were no longer where we were but have left ourselves behind in a past endlessly obliterated by a motion that carries us into the present

say your goodbyes speak your arrival set out on a journey

it is never too late it is always late absence is here present

BryanParrish
Global User
Posts: 81
(8/3/04 5:45)
Reply

Re: Beginnings and endings...

---

FUCK SHIT PISS BALLS NUTS BANANA

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Bhagavad Gita

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Hywel Registered User Posts: 49 (2/2/04 2:38 am) Reply	Bhagavad Gita <hr/> In an earlier thread, Rhett mentioned that the Bhagavad Gita could have the unfortunate effect of stopping people from seeking truth. But from my own reading of it, it seems to brim with wisdom and encouragement for the truth seeker. Aside from a few dodgy verses, which are easy enough to identify, the whole thing is truly an excellent work. Anyway, I thought I would post a few of the highlights, for discussion, and also for anyone who hasnt read it to get a flavour. Brief Intro The Bhagavad Gita is part of the Mahabharata, one of the two major epics of Indian literature. The Mahabharata is the story of a civil war, in the middle of which is a huge battle. At the start of this battle, one of the generals (Arjuna), asks his charioteer (Krishna) to take them out between the two armies, and they proceed to have a philosophical discussion. This discussion is the Bhagavad Gita. In familiar format, Arjuna takes the role of Questioner (Student etc.), and Krishna takes that of Answerer (Master etc.), and they proceed to discuss various issues, starting with the nature of action/non action. This issue is first because (this being a civil war) Arjuna knows people on both sides of the battlefield, and he doesnt want them to die. He loves both sides equally (basically the same as the "love everything equally" problem), so he cannot choose. Arjuna feels so strongly about it, he says he would rather just let himself be killed, because then at least he knows he hasn't done anything wrong. But Krishna seems happy to get lofty...

Quote:

---

On Action/Inaction

"Thy tears are for those beyond tears, and are thy words words of wisdom? The wise grieve not for those who live; and they grieve not for those who die - for life and death shall pass away." Ch2.11

"If any man thinks he slays, and if another thinks he is slain, neither knows the ways of truth. The eternal in man cannot kill: the eternal in man cannot die.

He is never born, and he never dies. He is in Eternity: he is for evermore. Never-born and eternal, beyond times gone or to come, he does not die when the body dies." Ch2.19-20

"For all things born in truth must die, and out of death in truth comes life. Face to face with what must be, cease thou from sorrow." Ch2.27

"Not by refraining from action does man attain freedom from action. Not by mere renunciation does he attain supreme perfection.

For not even for a moment can a man be without action. Helplessly are all driven to action by the forces born of Nature." Ch3.4-5

---

Quote:

---

On Righteous Action

"There is a war that opens the doors of heaven, Arjuna! Happy the warriors whose fate is to fight such war.

But to forgo this fight for righteousness is to forgo thy duty and honour: is to fall into transgression."Ch2 32-33

"In death thy glory in heaven, in victory thy glory on earth. Arise therefore, Arjuna, with thy soul ready to fight.

Prepare for war with peace in thy soul. Be in peace in pleasure and pain, in gain and in loss, in victory or in the loss of a battle. In this peace there is no sin.

This is the wisdom of Sankhya - the vision of the Eternal."
Ch2.37-39

---

Quote:

---

On Yoga, "path of the Eternal and freedom from bondage"
"No step is lost on this path, and no dangers are found. And even a little progress is freedom from fear.

The follower of this path has one thought, and this is the End of his determination. But many branched and endless are the thoughts of the man who lacks determination." Ch2.40-41

"The three Gunas of Nature are the world of the Vedas. Arise beyond the three Gunas, Arjuna! Be in Truth eternal, beyond earthly opposites. Beyond gains and possessions, possess thine own soul." Ch2.45

"When thy mind leaves behind its dark forest of delusion, thou shalt go beyond the scriptures of times past and still to come.

When thy mind, that may be wavering in the contradictions of many scriptures, shall rest unshaken in divine contemplation, then the goal of Yoga is thine." Ch2.52-53

"And do thy duty, even if it be humble, rather than another's, even if it be great. To die in one's duty is life: to life in another's is death." Ch3.35

---

Quote:

---

On Desire

"Desire has found a place in man's senses and mind and reason. Through these it blinds the soul, after having over-clouded wisdom.

Set thou, therefore, thy senses in harmony, and then slay thou sinful desire, the destroyer of vision and wisdom.

They say the power of the senses is great. But greater than the senses is the mind. Greater than the mind is Buddhi, reason, and greater than reason is He - the Spirit in man and in all.

Know Him therefore who is above reason, and let his peace give thee peace. Be a warrior and kill desire, the powerful enemy of the soul." Ch3.40-43

---

Quote:

---

Problem/Solution

"(But) He who has no faith and no wisdom, and whose soul is in doubt, is lost. For neither this world, nor the world to come, nor joy is ever for the man who doubts.

He who makes pure his works by Yoga, who watches over his soul, and who by wisdom destroys his doubts, is free from the bondage of selfish work.

Kill therefore with the sword of wisdom the doubt born of ignorance that lies in thy heart. Be one in self harmony, in Yoga, and arise, great warrior, arise." Ch4.40-42

---

I will end up posting pretty much the whole book if I carry on, so I'll leave it there. But I thought I would post a couple of the dodgy verses, as these seem to be the only ones that could perhaps give the impression that effort is not required. I found these verses to be so easily misinterpretable as to be pretty worthless, if not plain wrong.

Quote:

---

Dodgy Verses

"As the Spirit of our mortal body wanders on in childhood, and youth and old age, the Spirit wanders on to a new body: of this the sage has no doubts." Ch2.13

"As a man leaves an old garment and puts on one that is new, the Spirit leaves is mortal body and then puts on one that is new."

Ch2.11

---

These verses are clearly supporting literal reincarnation of the soul (Spirit), which I've always thought there was no real evidence for, or even reason for (though if it were true, it wouldnt really make any difference to me). But an unpleasant side effect of the belief in literal reincarnation is the idea that the seeker can just do a little bit this lifetime (usually enough for the cessation of their major sufferings), because their soul will get there eventually.

This seems (to me at least) to be the only way in which the Bhagavad Gita could let people "off the hook" of seeking truth, and there are probably only 5 or 6 verses like this in the whole thing. Overall, I really did think it was an excellent book, and I wonder how Rhett (and presumably other people) have got such a negative opinion of it. Perhaps you are judging it by its effects, which is fair enough, but people can ignore the most glaring truth if they just dont want to hear it.

Hywel

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 666
(2/2/04 3:01 am)
Reply

Re: Bhagavad Gita

---

I'd like to know what Rhett is talking about. The QRS teaching itself can have the unfortunate effect of stopping people from seeking truth, as it does at least in the case of ynthrix, Rhett, and a few other people here. Why single out a BETTER teaching as having that unfortunate effect?

cassiopeiae
Registered User
Posts: 235
(2/2/04 3:17 am)
Reply

Re: Bhagavad Gita

---

Yes, as voce said, the reason would be nice...

I was recommended this read by a Hindu friend of mine, who is also a chemist... he finds it hard to believe in any religion due to his love of science. Anyway, I found a lot of insight in this book, none of which had anything to do with NOT seeking the truth...

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 434
(2/2/04 5:36 am)
Reply

Re: Bhagavad Gita

---

All those, from some religion (conditioning) stemming books are worthless, in the end.
And we know it, don't we.

Hywel
Registered User
Posts: 50
(2/3/04 10:36 pm)
Reply

Re: Bhagavad Gita

---

Quote:

---

All those, from some religion (conditioning) stemming books are worthless, in the end.
And we know it, don't we.

---

I agree, although, the ultimately worthless Bhagavad Gita also mentions its ultimate worthlessness:-

"When thy mind leaves behind its dark forest of delusion, thou shalt go beyond the scriptures of times past and still to come." Ch2.52

Does this mean it has some worth?

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 263
(2/4/04 12:30 pm)
Reply

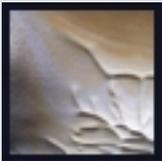

Re: Bhagavad Gita

---

In an earlier thread, Rhett mentioned that the Bhagavad Gita could have the unfortunate effect of stopping people from seeking truth.

I withdraw the statement (and ideally wouldn't have made it), considering that i've only read a few bits of it on the 'Minefield'. I actually thought it was yourself that was making that statement, and that i was only reinforcing it.

I reinforced it for a number of fairly insubstantial reasons. I live with a couple that have delved into it fairly deeply that don't seek truth, and the same applies to a yogi i know. Additionally, i remembered that Kevin had made important corrections to it as it appeared on the 'Minefield'.

Rhett

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2194
(2/4/04 12:35 pm)
Reply

Re: Bhagavad Gita

---

Rhett thinks I am pure evil! (:D)

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 567
(2/4/04 12:44 pm)
Reply

Re: Bhagavad Gita

---

Ultimately, there is no worthlessness or worth in any thing.

It is all a matter of degree in between the two.

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 436
(2/4/04 12:46 pm)
Reply

Re: Bhagavad Gita

---

Quote:

---

I am pure evil! (:D)

---

Read your last word backwards.
Then we're talking!
Hope you're fine, Mr. Zag.

(Rhett is a believer. He believes himself.
Oh my God, yes, that's what I mean :-)

suergaz Registered User Posts: 2195 (2/4/04 12:52 pm) Reply 	Re: Bhagavad Gita <hr/> Paul?! live.. er.. up ..ma ..I?!!
Paul Registered User Posts: 437 (2/4/04 4:50 pm) Reply	Re: Bhagavad Gita <hr/> 'word'. I said 'word'.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2206 (2/4/04 8:46 pm) Reply	--- <hr/> Live! But am I pure?! Mark Twain once wrote that to the pure all things are impure...well, we know what he meant anyway.
Hywel Registered User Posts: 51 (2/8/04 5:31 am) Reply	Re: Bhagavad Gita <hr/> Quote: <hr/> I withdraw the statement (and ideally wouldn't have made it), considering that i've only read a few bits of it on the 'Minefield'. I actually thought it was yourself that was making that statement, and that i was only reinforcing it. <hr/> I know, you thought I was being sarcastic. But I thought there might be some good reasons for your view, as you discounted the possibility that I was serious when you replied. Quote: <hr/> I reinforced it for a number of fairly insubstantial reasons. I live with a couple that have delved into it fairly deeply that don't seek truth, and the same applies to a yogi i know. Additionally, i remembered that Kevin had made important corrections to it as it appeared on the 'Minefield'.

---

Do you have any idea why these people have deeply studied it? I just mean, if these people aren't seekers, and the Bhagavad Gita is basically all about truth-seeking (which it certainly appears to be, at least to me), then what about it do these people find interesting enough to deeply study? Just curious.

Although I got my own copy and made my own notes, I had a look at Kevin's version, and the commentary was pretty good. Obviously, Kevin's version cuts out the unimportant stuff at the beginning (names of the generals of the armies etc.), which is fine, but I also noticed at least one verse was missing from the main body of the text. I only really noticed because it was a verse I had noted as the meaning being very unclear, and I wondered if Kevin had noticed too.

Here's the missing verse -

Quote:

---

One sees him in a vision of wonder, and another gives us words of his wonder. There is one who hears of his wonder; but he hears and knows him not. Ch2.29

---

I think it's just saying "to hear about it is not to know", but it's a bit vague.

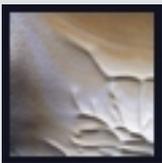

Rhett Hamilton

Registered User

Posts: 263

(2/8/04 12:48 pm)

Reply

Re: Bhagavad Gita

---

Do you have any idea why these people have deeply studied it? I just mean, if these people aren't seekers, and the Bhagavad Gita is basically all about truth-seeking (which it certainly appears to be, at least to me), then what about it do these people find interesting enough to deeply study? Just curious.

Many people follow this path:

They genuinely seek wisdom and the alleviation of their suffering.

They think and read a lot, but then find that they are suffering even more than they were in the first place.

They realise that their thinking is the cause of their increased suffering (but not that it's because their delusions are getting smashed on the rocks of reason!).

They find it all too much to bear and can't see an end to this path, so they look for something to conclude the affair.

They then come across the words of Wise Men, that have spoken about the limitations of thinking and conceptualisation.

Like most people, they are all too happy to have found such a great excuse to de-value thinking, and expediently apply it to themselves. Basically, they try to convince themselves that the act of giving-up on thinking is wisdom. However, they will never succeed, they will only achieve a partial and insecure alleviation of their suffering by doing this. They remain grossly ignorant, and are no different from anyone else.

The highest wisdom is such a trap for the ignorant.

Rhett Hamilton

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2253

(2/8/04 1:00 pm)

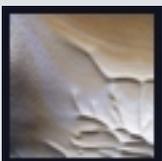

Reply

Re: Bhagavad Gita

---

The highest wisdom is no trap for the ignorant. How could they know it?

Rhett Hamilton Registered User Posts: 265 (2/10/04 11:38 am) Reply 	Re: Bhagavad Gita <hr/> Don't you think you know it? Rhett Hamilton
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2275 (2/10/04 11:45 am) Reply	--- <hr/> I will know it.
silentsal Registered User Posts: 48 (2/10/04 12:15 pm) Reply	Re: --- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Basically, they try to convince themselves that the act of giving-up on thinking is wisdom. <hr/> yet the very act of thinking is the biggest hurdle to wisdom
Rhett Hamilton Registered User Posts: 268 (2/10/04 12:54 pm) Reply 	Re: --- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Basically, they try to convince themselves that the act of giving-up on thinking is wisdom. <hr/> yet the very act of thinking is the biggest hurdle to wisdom <hr/>

How can that be? Without thoughts there is no wisdom.

Rhett Hamilton

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2279

(2/10/04 1:01 pm)

Reply

---

Rhett, you mistakenly think a hurdle to wisdom goes against wisdom. Wisdom itself is a kind of hurdle!

Rhett Hamilton

Registered User

Posts: 271

(2/11/04 10:19 am)

Reply

Re: ---

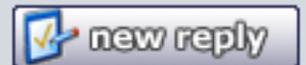

Suergaz wrote:

Quote:

Rhett, you mistakenly think a hurdle to wisdom goes against wisdom. Wisdom itself is a kind of hurdle!

Can you be more specific?

Rhett Hamilton

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

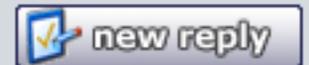

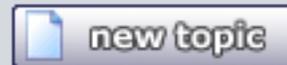

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

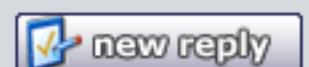

> GENIUS FORUM
> Big Bang or Bust

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
XXX STATIC X Registered User Posts: 123 (5/4/04 3:14 am) Reply	 Big Bang or Bust <hr/> If energy = mass ... does <math>1=1</math> while infinity = infinity. Or does that make <math>0=0</math> untrue because logically infinity can't equal itself if it doesn't exist unless infinity equals 1 like ... 100%. If 0 is nothing, can 1 be considered eternal. Or does the equation Einstein wrote have to do with God or something. If <math>E=mc</math> (squared), then all is relative to being relatively equal. Did the Big Bang magically make things relative. Why are things not in chaos like an explosion would be. Also, I heard that the odds of protein cells being close enough together to form life was pretty high.
ZERRINO Registered User Posts: 14 (5/4/04 4:55 am) Reply	 Re: Big Bang or Bust <hr/> THIS IS A REPLY TO : : Why are things not in chaos like an explosion would be : THINGS ARE IN THE STATE OF CHAOS - OTHERWISE THEY WOULD NOT CHANGE. BUT CHANGE NOT NECESSARILY MEANS - EXPLOSION.

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Biggier - Epistemic determinism

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Dave Toast Registered User Posts: 977 (2/24/04 11:21 am) Reply 	Biggier - Epistemic determinism <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Biggier (On TPG multiple times and likewise here):  1] if the future can be foretold then all is destined to happen  2] if that be true then human autonmy and freedom are delusions  3] if that be true then everything we do is merely the next domino in line to fall  4] if that we true no one can be judged for anything they do--- no matter how barbarous or heinous or dehumanizing. If Nostradamus "predicted" Hitler would arrive on the scene then Hitler cannot be condemned for the Holocaust because it was already fate and destined to be. <hr/> Hey Biggie, you still reading here? I'd like to have a stab at working through the above with you, and maybe others will have something to offer along the way. It would be nice, at least for me, and it would be more conducive to reaching some sort of resolution, if we could just stick to the matter at hand, and refrain from the polemics you so enjoy. I would suggest that if you really do want to find the semblance of an answer to this type of question, you would be better served by not confusing the issue and not complicating the matter with irrelevancy.

If you're up for it, do you agree that this epistemic determinism (or the problem of foreknowledge) you try to formulate above is a question to which the answer may bear heavily on the actions of some people who consider such things to be important? If you do, do you then agree that if philosophy were to come up with a logically satisfactory answer, then philosophy would be serving the purpose you would like it to, the purpose that you often insist that the philosopher helps very little in?

Once you have answered these questions, we can move onto a proper formulation of the apparent problem, and try to work through it logically.

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Biggie - Human (inter)action and meaning

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Dave Toast Registered User Posts: 976 (2/24/04 11:05 am) Reply 	Biggie - Human (inter)action and meaning <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Biggie (On TPG multiple times and likewise here): Besides, what point could possibly be more important than this one: how OUGHT we to think, feel and behave around others in an essentially absurd and meaningless world? I suspect, however, that most folks are so nonplussed by my own particular answer [that, essentially, there is no answer], they avoid being reminded of it like the plague. <hr/> Hey Biggie, you still reading here? I'd like to have a stab at working through the above with you, and maybe others will have something to offer along the way. It would be nice, at least for me, and it would be more conducive to reaching some sort of resolution, if we could just stick to the matter at hand, and refrain from the polemics you so enjoy. I would suggest that if you really do want to find the semblance of an answer to this type of question, you would be better served by not confusing the issue and not complicating the matter with irrelevancy. If you're up for it, I'd like you to first consider your question and assess

	what you really want to ask, and how you want to phrase it. As it stands, the conclusion is implicit in the premise: The world is meaningless, and therefore there can be no 'ought'. However, I think the question is flawed in that it means to relate human actions to the world, as opposed to humans. Here's how I think the question you are asking should be phrased: If meaning is informed by value, and individual human values are arbitrarily arrived at, how might we arrive at a less arbitrary, and so more meaningful (as defined by less meaningless) system according to which humans ought to act? (Note that we will not be considering free will with regard to the question of the arbitrariness of human values.) Please indicate if you concur with this phraseology. If you do, perhaps offer your initial thoughts on the matter and we can move on from there.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2378 (2/24/04 12:16 pm) Reply	--- <hr/> The world as opposed to humans Toast?! What rot. How can biggie take this absurdity seriously you snooty pedant. I say it must be polemics all the way!
Dave Toast Registered User Posts: 978 (2/24/04 12:20 pm) Reply 	Re: --- <hr/> Fuck off.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2379 (2/24/04 12:23 pm) Reply	--- <hr/> That's what Marsha once said to me! But she gave me her handkerchief when she did so. All I get from you is that jittery quivering like you want to break out the fists.

Dave Toast Registered User Posts: 980 (2/24/04 12:41 pm) Reply 	Re: --- <hr/> Don't be silly. But then why not.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2381 (2/24/04 12:49 pm) Reply	--- <hr/> Fisticuffs are a delicacy where I come from. We save them for special occasions.
Dave Toast Registered User Posts: 981 (2/24/04 12:54 pm) Reply 	Re: --- <hr/> I'm sure you'd agree that it would be quite special, at least for me, to meet you.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2382 (2/24/04 12:58 pm) Reply	---- <hr/> But I need my fists in case I decide to play the piano one day.
birdofhermes Registered User Posts: 1424 (2/24/04 2:26 pm) Reply 	Re: Biggier - Human (inter)action and meaning <hr/> Quote: <hr/> I suspect, however, that most folks are so nonplussed by my own particular answer [that, essentially, there is no answer], they avoid being reminded of it like the plague. <hr/> One clue to his dishonesty is that he poses such questions and asks why it is that the enlightenment cannot address them, yet he himself realizes there is

	no one answer, and mocks those who try. Good luck, I say.
WolfsonJakk Registered User Posts: 1482 (2/24/04 3:03 pm) Reply	Re: Biggier - Human (inter)action and meaning <hr/> I would like to see this exchange between Toast and Big. Perhaps the cage would be best so that there might not be interference from others. I think this discussion, if civil and focused on topics rather than imagined individual failings, would be beneficial to those who participate or read. Tharan
DEL Registered User Posts: 1026 (2/24/04 6:34 pm) Reply	Biggier - Human (inter)action and meaning <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Dave Toast If meaning is informed by value, and individual human values are arbitrarily arrived at, how might we arrive at a less arbitrary, and so more meaningful (as defined by less meaningless) system according to which humans ought to act? <hr/> There are 2 parallel worlds of human behaviour with contending values. <ol style="list-style-type: none"><li>1. The world of land value.</li><li>2. The world of money value.</li></ol> Where land is priority values are based around the stability and preservation of the collective values, traditions, culture, laws etc. Where money is the priority values are based around individuality, independence, freedom, movement and exchange etc. These 2 world values produce very different kinds of behaviour.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 984

(2/24/04 9:58 pm)

Reply

Re: Biggier - Human (inter)action and meaning

---

Quote:

---

Zag: But I need my fists in case I decide to play the piano one day.

---

I suppose I could just strangle you.

Quote:

---

What rot. How can biggie take this absurdity seriously you snooty pedant.

---

This from the guy who pulls Matt up for missing a T, and looks down his nose at all.

Quote:

---

The world as opposed to humans Toast?!

---

Yes, the world as opposed to humans. The world has no meaning of it's own, it can't, it has no values with which to imbue meaning. Humans have values though, and a concept of meaning. Therefore any exploration and refinement of this meaning must relate to humans, no matter how transient and arbitrary individual human values may seem. What are you missing here, do you think the world has values, or do you think humans don't?

Quote:

---

I say it must be polemics all the way!

---

Of course you do, it is your nature which you must be true to. But I'm trying to be constructive here, and I wasn't addressing you, so your destructive opinion holds no sway. Go pull tongues elsewhere, so that I don't have to take this to the cage on account of your petty games.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2390

(2/24/04 10:09 pm)

Reply

---

Toast

Quote:

---

This from the guy who pulls Matt up for missing a T, and looks down his nose at all.

---

What the fuck are you talking about fuck head? What's this 'T' shit? If I woke up and found myself looking down your nose, I'd waste myself.

Quote:

---

Yes, the world as opposed to humans. The world has no meaning of it's own, it can't, it has no values with which to imbue meaning. Humans have values though, and a concept of meaning. Therefore any exploration and refinement of this meaning must relate to humans, no matter how transient and arbitrary individual human values may seem. What are you missing here, do you think the world has values, or do you think humans don't?

---

My comment you're replying to was to show you Biggies use of the word world included the world of humans.

You have really outdone yourself here.

Edited by: suergaz at: 2/24/04 10:28 pm

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 985

(2/24/04 10:43 pm)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

What the fuck are you talking about fuck head?

---

LOL, fuck head.

---

Quote:

---

What's this 'T' shit?

---

Calm down.

Matt said 'Egoism', and then followed it with an explanation implying egotism, with a T. Ergo, quite obviously he meant egotism, but you saw fit to be pedantic about it.

---

Quote:

---

If I woke up and found myself looking down your nose, I'd waste myself.

---

If I woke up at the same time, I'd do it for you.

---

Quote:

---

My comment you're replying was to show you Biggies use of the word world included the world of humans.

---

No shit, it is pure pedantry for the sake of it. If you had read properly in the first place, you would've seen that I first make the distinction between the non-valuing world and the valuing human, before then moving directly onto this very point that human values might seem just as meaningless, but it is not for the same reasons that the world is meaningless. I did that in the name of precision, not petty pedantry. Precision is kind of important if you want to be logical. Petty pedantry is kind of important if you've got nothing better to do. Go do something better, petty overman.

suergaz Registered User Posts: 2393 (2/24/04 10:48 pm) Reply 	Re: --- <hr/> I was never pedantic. All I made him do was look up a dictionary, you decided to regurgitate one. About what you call my petty pedantry for the sake of it, it is all yours. No shit you made your fucking distinctions. I have not disagreed with them. But you're suggesting Biggie needs you feeding him this putridity through a straw.
Dave Toast Registered User Posts: 987 (2/24/04 11:10 pm) Reply 	Re: --- <hr/> Not at all, I'm simply, from the get-go, establishing and qualifying definitions more precisely. But fair enough, you seek to characterise my striving for precision on a point I put to Biggie as pedantry, I seek to characterise your pedantry on my striving for precision as pedantry. Let's reduce that down. Me - striving for precision, you - pedantic.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2396 (2/24/04 11:19 pm) Reply 	Re: --- <hr/> Toast:-- Quote: <hr/> Me - striving for precision <hr/> This is true.

MGregory Registered User Posts: 411 (2/24/04 11:25 pm) Reply	Re: --- <hr/> Pedantic precision (American Heritage Dictionary): egoism - (funny letters) n 1. The belief that self-interest is the just and proper motive force. 2. Egotism. --e'go*ist n. --e'go*is'tic or --e'go*is'ti*cal adj. --e'go*is'ti*cal*ly adv.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2397 (2/24/04 11:32 pm) Reply 	Re: --- <hr/> egoism has funny letters?! But they have to be rearranged to be 'me is go'. There's nothing at all funny about them.
DEL Registered User Posts: 1027 (2/25/04 8:27 am) Reply	Cause and effect. <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Dave Toast Fuck off. <hr/> Why did you feel the need to reply in that fashion? Do you think that was the best response? Did you consider no response?

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 991
(2/25/04 10:40 am)
Reply

Re: Cause and effect.

---

Quote:

---

Did you consider no response?

---

Of course.

---

Quote:

---

Do you think that was the best response?

---

Best?

---

Quote:

---

Why did you feel the need to reply in that fashion?

---

I felt no need. It was because Zag was clearly just throwing a fly in the ointment, playing with his own shit. Making a point of pedantry and striking a pose, in the name of fucking up a thread that didn't need his commentary, because I was dancing with him elsewhere. It was also because I was at that moment dancing with him elsewhere. It just seemed aptly aggressive to reply with fuck off, when he'd finished his pedantry by trying to demolish my intention for the tone of the thread by saying it should be polemics all the way. It may have not fucked up the thread so badly if I hadn't replied, but I'm not that bothered, and it looks like Biggie's chosen to ignore GF anyway.

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Biggie - Human (inter)action and meaning

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
DEL Registered User Posts: 1028 (2/25/04 6:33 pm) Reply	Re: Cause and effect. <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Dave Toast It may have not fucked up the thread so badly if I hadn't replied, but I'm not that bothered, and it looks like Biggie's chosen to ignore GF anyway. There is your weakness Mr. Toast. Where there is great strength and handsome intelligence the related weakness seems so small and the silliness so ugly. How the mighty have fallen and continue to stumble. Quote: <hr/> Dave Toast I was at that moment dancing with him el <hr/> Let the lesson be learnt. Only a Genius can indulge in feminine dancing and switch to a focused and serious state of mind at short notice. The average man needs time to overcome the dizziness.

Dave Toast Registered User Posts: 994 (2/25/04 9:53 pm) Reply 	Re: Cause and effect. <hr/> What on earth are you talking about? I guess I can just about make some sense of this. Please try to be more clear, less ambiguous and more focussed, it's not so hard. I can assure you that when I 'dance' (this is Zag's parlance don't forget), which is not necessarily a feminine activity as I understand it, I am just as focussed and in just as serious a state of mind as usual. One can easily be focussed and serious about one's unseriousnesses. The subject matter might be deemed less worthy of focus and seriousness, but then some might say that everything is worthy of focus and seriousness.
DEL Registered User Posts: 1031 (2/26/04 6:12 pm) Reply	Re: Cause and effect. <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Dave Toast What on earth are you talking about? <hr/> You need to get outside yourself Dave and view yourself from another perspective. Your great intelligence has made you blind in other areas. Your big "fuck off" reaction is your portal. Don't lose it.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 999
(2/27/04 12:37 pm)
Reply

Re: Cause and effect.

---

Quote:

---

You need to get outside yourself Dave and view yourself from another perspective. Your great intelligence has made you blind in other areas.

---

Why, because you can't make a point clearly?

My intelligence isn't that great, it only seems so to you.

Quote:

---

Your big "fuck off" reaction is your portal. Don't lose it.

---

Would you please make your points clearly, if they have clarity, that they may be clearly understood.

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Bosons and Fermions

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
DEL Registered User Posts: 727 (10/7/03 2:59 am) Reply	 Bosons and Fermions <hr/> Logic and Faith share the same relationship as Bosons and Fermions. What do you think?
serfur007 Registered User Posts: 2 (10/7/03 6:18 am) Reply	 Re: Bosons and Fermions <hr/> what is a boson and fermion? check my post out please?
WolfsonJakk Registered User Posts: 1190 (10/7/03 6:32 am) Reply	 Re: Bosons and Fermions <hr/> I heard they broke up.
DEL Registered User Posts: 730 (10/7/03 8:09 am) Reply	 Re: Bosons and Fermions <hr/> Bosons and Fermions http://www.superstringtheory.com/basics/index.html

serfur007
Registered User
Posts: 5
(10/7/03 11:12 am)
Reply

 Re: Bosons and Fermions

---

thanks Del.

Now do you mean the relationship between Logic and Faith as thinking logically at church? Because i have tried and it doesnt seem to work.lol. Or just in general, how it is nearly impossible to bring logical thinking into religion?

How about faith in general? It is difficult to have faith in something when you think logically about the situation and it just doesnt seem like it would work out. But to have faith in the situation you must not think logically and believe in "it", no matter how you think it will turn out, even by ignoring the logical answers which are often times extremely visible.

yes i do believe that the relationship between Bosons and Fermions is the same as that of Logic and Faith.

let me know if i am not understanding correctly.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 616
(10/7/03 11:35 am)
Reply

 Re: Bosons and Fermions

---

Logic and faith are not necessarily mutually exclusive.

serfur007
Registered User
Posts: 7
(10/7/03 12:03 pm)
Reply

 Re: Bosons and Fermions

---

great point, but both views could be argued.

DEL

Registered User
Posts: 735
(10/7/03 5:01 pm)
Reply

 Re: Bosons and Fermions

---

Quote:

---

Dave Toast
Logic and faith are not necessarily mutually exclusive.

---

---

Quote:

---

serfur007
great point, but both views could be argued.

---

EXCELLENT!

"not necessarily" and "argued"

This is the majick, the spin, the oscillation, the tension.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 618
(10/7/03 8:45 pm)
Reply

 Re: Bosons and Fermions

---

Quote:

---

DT: Logic and faith are not necessarily mutually exclusive.

Serfur: great point, but both views could be argued.

---

Welcome.

This would depend on what you mean by 'logic', and 'faith' too.

I was meaning that faith (as in faith in something unsubstantial, unsubstantiated, or unsubstantiatable - consciously) is often based on pure instinct. We are only just beginning to properly understand the anatomy of certain aspects of our instincts, but at their base, instincts have nothing but the experiential concepts of the mind to work with; and concepts are obviously based on logic (logic as in the building blocks and system of understanding).

Faith can also simply mean to believe in the efficacy of something without understanding it's whys and wherefores. Experience can illuminate the efficacy of something which is not understood and therefore faith can be logically placed in this something.

If you look into formal logic, you will find that one must place faith in the consistency and substance of logic itself.

I presume Del must mean faith as in that which those with a religious 'faith' exhibit, and logic as in discernment via definitional substantiation and correct inference. Even then, there can be certain logical constructs which go towards substantiation of a personal faith.

When it comes down to it, the relationship between logic and faith is nothing like that of the Boson and Fermion. The latter relationship is definitively mutually exclusive, the former is most often not, and by some definitions, never is.

It's no wonder that this analogy doesn't hold up though. If you choose to stick around, you'll find that Del is, at best, located somewhere near the opposite end of the spectrum to which you have described yourself residing (although he's improved over the last year). At worst, he's the local crazy person - given to wild stabbing in the dark, getting by on the broken clock syndrome. Whilst even a broken clock is correct twice a day, this time (as usual) it's way off.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 736
(10/8/03 10:21 am)
Reply

 Re: Bosons and Fermions

---

Quote:

---

Dave Toast:

When it comes down to it, the relationship between logic and faith is nothing like that of the Boson and Fermion. The latter relationship is definitively mutually exclusive, the former is most often not, and by some definitions, never is.

---

Why are you so sure Bosons and Fermions are mutually exclusive.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 737
(10/8/03 10:24 am)
Reply

 Broken Clock

---

"Broken Clock Syndrome"
Excellent Dave!

Correct twice a day.
Once for Logic.
Once for Faith.

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 134
(10/8/03 3:38 pm)
Reply

 Re: Broken Clock

---

Excellent, DEL! Just excellent!

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 619
(10/9/03 1:50 am)
Reply

 Re: Broken Clock

---

Quote:

---

Del: Why are you so sure Bosons and Fermions are mutually exclusive.

---

Knowledge.

Read up on punctuation, then read a whole lot more on particle physics.
Perhaps you can then question me properly.

Quote:

---

"Broken Clock Syndrome"
Excellent Dave!

Correct twice a day.
Once for Logic.
Once for Faith.

I should have said a broken LCD clock.

You seem to have plenty of faith in yourself these days Del. Seems you're anecdotally correct as there can't be any logic to your having such.

If you're going to be a mystic symbolic dualist, at least try looking for polar diametrics. I'll start you off, fill in the blanks.

Happy - _ _ _ _

Adequate - _ _ _ _ _ _ _ _ _ _

Undamaged - _ _ _ _ _ _ _ _

Big - _ _ _ _ _ _

Girl - _ _ _ _

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 739
(10/9/03 7:25 am)
Reply

 mutually exclusive

---

Quote:

---

Dave Toast
Knowledge.

Read up on punctuation, then read a whole lot more on particle physics. Perhaps you can then question me properly.

---

Oooops ! My apologies.

Let me repeat.

Why are you so sure Bosons and Fermions are mutually exclusive?

Can you give me a specific reference or do you have a URL link to a page that supports your statement.

Did you make that statment for effect or do you actually know what you are talking about in that field of knowledge.

DEL Registered User Posts: 744 (10/10/03 8:56 am) Reply	 mutually exclusive <hr/> HELLOOOOOOOO ! Have you run away Mr. Toast? Let me repeat. Why are you so sure Bosons and Fermions are mutually exclusive?
jimhaz Registered User Posts: 351 (10/10/03 3:02 pm) Reply 	 Re: mutually exclusive <hr/> You are definately a strange person DEL. Nothing wrong with that...in a way I think all geniuses by definition must be eccentric. I don't understand your immense need for categorisation. Do you think it is related to your memory capacity? Tell us a little about yourself. How often do you think you might be insane?
DEL Registered User Posts: 746 (10/10/03 4:56 pm) Reply	 Re: mutually exclusive <hr/> In answer to your question. This is a great paragraph. Quote: <hr/> Weininger The more types and their contrasts a man unites in his own mind the less will escape him, since observation follows comprehension, and the more he will see and understand what other men feel, think, and wish. There has never been a genius who was not a great discerner of men. The great man sees through the simpler man often at a glance, and would be able to characterise him completely. <hr/>

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 629
(10/12/03 12:12 am)
Reply

Re: mutually exclusive

---

Quote:

---

Del: HELLOOOOOOOO !

Have you run away Mr. Toast?

Let me repeat.

Why are you so sure Bosons and Fermions are mutually exclusive?

---

Ha, fuckin cretin.

Like I told you, you have plenty more reading to do on elementary

Quote:

---

---

particle physics.

I am loath to do the work for you, it's a simple matter of spin anyway.

Enough with your simple minded slaughter of science please.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1562
(10/12/03 12:27 am)
Reply

Re: mutually exclusive

---

This doesn't sound like you Dave! What's up? I am the one who should be venting my anger, if I am to not have my dole breached I have to attend a half-day training course for 3 weeks starting at 9 on how to write a resume, and how to prepare for a job interview, and how to sit there and glare at the person who shall be ready to cause me total absence of income should I miss a minute.

Edited by: suergaz at: 10/12/03 12:28 am

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 632
(10/12/03 12:34 am)
Reply

Re: mutually exclusive

---

Heh, I've done that a couple of times a long while ago.

I came up with the idea that if I was seeming to show some enthusiasm for looking into self-employment, they would get off my back and leave me to it. It worked a treat.

Ten years of running a business later, I'm not so sure.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 750
(10/12/03 3:32 am)
Reply

Re: mutually exclusive

---

No comment

Quote:

---

yanniru:

Only fermions are mutually exclusive. Like logic, fermions cannot pile up. You cannot have more or less logic. You either have logic or you do not.

Bosons like faith can pile up, can increase in number or strength. Faith can overlap like the wave functions of bosons in the same state. You can have as many bosons in one state as you like. In the limit of very large wave functions due to very light bosons and/or very cold bosons, friction disappears. So if your faith is strong and solid enough, nothing can disturb it.

But you can have only one fermion in one state; and so as in logic, it is the relational properties of neighboring fermions that matters. In atoms, since fermions cannot overlap, adding them creates bigger and bigger atomic size, like a long logical argument takes more and more paper to write it all down. But remove just one of the building blocks, and the properties of the atom change markedly. Every fermion in the atom is necessary, just as every step in a logical argument is necessary.

Not so bosons. Add or remove a few or even many bosons and the faith remains the same, just weaker or stronger.

---

Email This To a Friend

Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

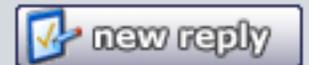

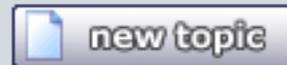

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Bosons and Fermions

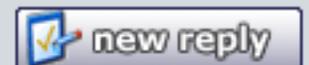

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Dave Toast Registered User Posts: 639 (10/12/03 3:48 am) Reply 	 Re: mutually exclusive <hr/> This drivel that you've spouted on behalf of another is fair enough as it speaks analogously of the relationship between bosons and bosons, and fermions and fermions. However, you referred to the relationship between bosons and fermions. This relationship is characterised by bosons having symmetric composite quantum states (integer spin) and fermions having antisymmetric composite quantum states (half-integer spin). Like I said, you've got a lot more reading and understanding to do before you can presume to question me on particle physics, especially when it's on the strength of what some bullshit symbologist might have said by way of loose analogy.

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

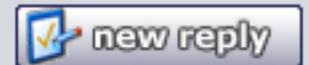

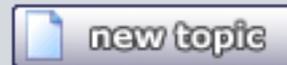

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Bourgeois or Anti-Bourgeois ?

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
DEL Registered User Posts: 682 (9/21/03 6:49 pm) Reply	Bourgeois or Anti-Bourgeois ? <hr/> Bourgeois <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1)A person belonging to the middle class.</li> <li>2)A person whose attitudes and behavior are marked by conformity to the standards and conventions of the middle class.</li> <li>3)n Marxist theory, a member of the property-owning class; a capitalist.</li> </ol> Is there anybody here who is not Bourgeois?
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1511 (9/21/03 10:39 pm) Reply	--- <hr/> I
drowden Forum Host Posts: 1493 (9/21/03 11:34 pm) Reply 	Re: --- <hr/> I am a one man elite; I have no class. I don't believe in a socially static "middle class". Dan Rowden

DEL Registered User Posts: 683 (9/22/03 8:15 am) Reply	----- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> suergaz: I <hr/> So are you communist?
DEL Registered User Posts: 684 (9/22/03 8:17 am) Reply	----- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> drowden: I am a one man elite; I have no class. <hr/> Impossible, unless you believe in God
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1515 (9/22/03 12:56 pm) Reply	--- <hr/> No I am not a communist.
birdofhermes Registered User Posts: 926 (9/22/03 1:41 pm) Reply	Re: --- <hr/> Actually, I'm upper class, but I'm a little down on my luck financially. And that's because I'm the sort of upper class person that's a little befuddled by the business of making a living. I have very refined sentiments. Far better to be a poor gentle(wo)man farmer with tattered sleeves and stacks of books spilling onto the floor than to go grasping about in the world chasing filthy lucre.

DEL Registered User Posts: 687 (9/22/03 5:15 pm) Reply	communist <hr/> Quote: <hr/> suergaz No I am not a communist. <hr/> Why aren't you a communist?
DEL Registered User Posts: 688 (9/22/03 5:20 pm) Reply	world view <hr/> Quote: <hr/> birdofhermes: Actually, I'm upper class, but I'm a little down on my luck financially. <hr/> That is because your man lost his focus on the higher. He became besotted with you and lost his "world view". It's not your fault it was his weakness.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1517 (9/22/03 7:06 pm) Reply	--- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Why aren't you a communist? <hr/> It doesn't go with my hat. Why do you think?

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 691
(9/23/03 8:33 am)
Reply

--

---

Quote:

---

suergaz:
It doesn't go with my hat. Why do you think?

---

Depends if your hat was hand made for you or mass produced.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 927
(9/23/03 1:14 pm)
Reply

Re: world view

---

Quote:

---

birdofhermes:
Actually, I'm upper class, but I'm a little down on my luck financially.

-----

DEL: That is because your man lost his focus on the higher. He became besotted with you and lost his "world view". It's not your fault it was his weakness.

---

Gosh, DEL, what should I do about it? I think he's still besotted with me.

DEL Registered User Posts: 692 (9/23/03 5:22 pm) Reply	Re: world view <hr/> Quote: <hr/> birdofhermes: Gosh, DEL, what should I do about it? I think he's still besotted with me. <hr/> Yield
Huzington Registered User Posts: 9 (11/1/03 7:15 am) Reply	Re: Bourgeois or Anti-Bourgeois ? <hr/> I am a proletarian, and I am a Marxist of sorts.

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

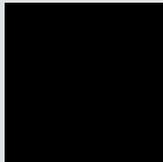

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM
> GENIUS FORUM > buddha

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
ontology Registered User Posts: 4 (3/16/04 11:50 pm) Reply	buddha <hr/> could it be said that the buddha (and only him in the history of the world) has reached the pinnacle of human development? is it possible to go further than nirvana?
XXX STATIC X Registered User Posts: 103 (3/17/04 6:29 am) Reply	Re: buddha <hr/> buddha, zen, gandhi all originated from india right?
 Philip Mistlberger Posts: 54 (3/17/04 8:36 am) Reply ezSupporter 	Re: buddha <hr/> Zen monk to hot dog vendor: "Make me one with everything". Hot dog vendor makes him a big One, then gives him the hot dog in exchange for a $20 bill. He keeps the change. Zen monk: "Hey, where is my change?" Hot dog vendor: "You have too much Samsara, and not enough Nirvana. Change must come from within."

voce io Registered User Posts: 822 (3/17/04 8:53 am) Reply 	Re: buddha <hr/> Gaaay.
Canadian Zoetrope 🖐️ Registered User Posts: 35 (3/21/04 7:17 am) Reply 	Nirvana <hr/> To go further than Nirvana would be to conceptualize nirvana, and to negate the reality that Nirvana is what is. How can one go further than no where and everywhere at the same time? Your question rests on a concept of relativity 'to go further' would be to designate a static 'place' in an infinite universe. Perhaps you might bother asking... Can a tree grow taller than it can grow?
ontology Registered User Posts: 4 (3/21/04 1:40 pm) Reply	Nirvana <hr/> i cant quite grasp the concept zoetrope put forward in the last post.....can you (or anyone else) please elaborate on the said post a little bit?
voce io Registered User Posts: 831 (3/21/04 3:05 pm) Reply 	Re: Nirvana <hr/> It means: gaaay.

Canadian Zoetrope 🖐

Registered User

Posts: 36

(3/22/04 5:33 am)

Reply

To Go further.

---

Well, one of the core beliefs of Buddhism is non duality... interbeing if you will. In other words: Buddhists strive to experience the complete awareness of the interdependence of all things. The discovery of the self as the non-self.

Here is an excerpt from a book you may find helpful:

Quote:

---

The principle of 'not-self' brings to light the gap between things themselves and the concepts we have of them. Things are dynamic and alive, while concepts are static. Look for example at a table: We have the impression that the table itself and our concept of it are identical. In reality, what we believe to be a table is only our concept. Some notions - wood, brown, hard, three feet high, old, etc. give rise to a concept of table in us. The table itself is always more than that. For example a nuclear physicist will tell us that the table is a multitude of atoms whose electrons are moving like a swarm of bees, and if we could push these atoms together the mass of matter would be smaller than one finger. This table in reality, is always in transformation, in time as well as in space it is made only of non-table elements. It depends on these elements so much that if we were to remove them from the table, there would be nothing left.

The forest, the tree, the saw, the hammer and the cabinetmaker are non-table elements, as are the parents of the cabinetmaker, the bread that they ate, the blacksmith and so on. If we know how to look deeply at the table we can see the presence of these non-table elements in it. The existence of the table demonstrates the existence of all non-table elements, in fact of the entire universe. This idea is expressed in the Avatamsaka system of Buddhism by the notion of interbeing.

---

(Hanh, Thich Nhat. Zen Keys, Doubleday Dell Publishing Group, Inc.

Ney York, New York, 1995. Pp 40-41)

Your CONCEPT of Buddha, exists independantly from what Buddha is. So asking if one can attain a higher level of awakening (Buddha=awakened) is like asking if a tree can grow taller than it can grow. In essence, you ask: 'can one be more awake than awake?'

My reply is simply playing around with the concepts that we all fall trap to, myself included. However we (you and I) differ in our awareness of these concepts.

I hope this clarifies my reply, and helps you on your way.

N0X23

Registered User

Posts: 96

(3/24/04 3:00 am)

Reply

Re: To Go further.

---

Quote:

---

Well, one of the core beliefs of Buddhism is non duality... interbeing if you will. In other words: Buddhists strive to experience the complete awareness of the interdependence of all things. The discovery of the self as the non-self.

---

The modern Buddhist is as ignorant of the Truth as the current Christian is.

Today's religions are nothing more than superstitious belief-systems that stem from the teachings of the enlightened.

Buddhism is an anchor around the neck of the deluded follower/seeker, forever keeping one tethered to their own personal ignorance.

Wisdom is programmed to self-destruct, to keep from stagnating, and religion is the by-product/waste of this cycle.

Conceptually speaking there is no proof that a non-dual view is necessarily more encompassing than that of a dual or pluralistic view.

According to the Pali interpretation of nirvana, nirvana lies outside the oneness of jhana and even the Allness of the All.

A person who sees distinctions may be detecting subtle differences that a non-dualist simply hasn't or is incapable of noticing.

Canadian Zoetrope 🖐

Registered User

Posts: 37

(3/24/04 4:32 am)

Reply

To Whit:

---

Quote:

---

The modern Buddhist is as ignorant of the Truth as the current Christian is.

---

Again we fall trap to our own concepts. You might argue truth, as opposed to what I might argue truth, however, again these are simply our own personal concepts of 'truth', and not truth itself.

To declare ignronce of the truth, while creating disorder by marginalizing specific sects of our society, is quite an allegorical state of irony.

To Whit: You would argue either the destruction or conception of 'truth' however, those would be the destruction and conception of your own concept of truth and not the destruction or conception of truth as it exists in ultimate reality.

An onotlogical argument for ultimate reality is that 'truth' is empty of identity, along with everything in existence, which makes it of the same essence as it's polar opposite, un-truth. One could then logically argue, that the truth, and the un truth, are in ultimate reality, the same phenomena, along with everything else in existence.

To be aware of ultimate reality, we must stop trying to grasp for our own conept of it, and simply accept what is. Enjoy it, and not get stuck with such negative concepts, like suffering and fear. Whose use have far outgrown the ego that spawned them. We no longer need to depend on our 'ego' for survival, because we've realized that survival is just another relative term, depending on more relative terms ultimatly relying on the devices created by ego to stay alive. Thusly the ego creates it's own reality, to which it believes it is a slave, and we experience suffering, and fear for this reason.

Duality has its importance, don't get me wrong, it's essential for our survival to distinguish between an apple and a stone. However, when we look deep we see that the apple and the stone, and us are all made of the same stuff, literally protons, neutrons, and electrons. A few years back a fellow named Einstein proved that energy and matter are separate manifestations of the same thing. You are energy/matter and vice versa. It's just a matter of time before western science proves what Buddhist Monks have known for 2000 years.

The problem with your incomprehension of what is being discussed lies in miscomprehension of the relationship between the subject of your argument (truth) and the object of your argument (Yourself). NOX23, to put it bluntly: you are using logic, to unravel logic, which is about as productive as trying to look at your eyes.

Edited by: Canadian Zoetrope 🖱 at: 3/24/04 4:41 am

NOX23 🗨

Registered User

Posts: 97

(3/25/04 2:24 am)

Reply

Re: To Whit:

---

Quote:

---

Again we fall trap to our own concepts. You might argue truth, as opposed to what I might argue truth, however, again these are simply our own personal concepts of 'truth', and not truth itself.

---

What then is 'truth' itself?

Quote:

---

To Whit: You would argue either the destruction or conception of 'truth' however, those would be the destruction and conception of your own concept of truth and not the destruction or conception of truth as it exists in ultimate reality.

---

So my concept of truth is not the same as the concept of truth that exists in ultimate reality, are you suggesting that my concept lies outside ultimate reality?

And how does the truth exist IN ultimate reality?

Quote:

---

An ontological argument for ultimate reality is that 'truth' is empty of identity, along with everything in existence, which makes it of the same essence as it's polar opposite, un-truth. One could then logically argue, that the truth, and the un truth, are in ultimate reality, the same phenomena, along with everything else in existence.

To be aware of ultimate reality, we must stop trying to grasp for our own concept of it, and simply accept what is.

---

But isn't my concept simply what it is, so I should accept it and enjoy it?

Quote:

---

Enjoy it, and not get stuck with such negative concepts, like suffering and fear. Whose use have far outgrown the ego that spawned them. We no longer need to depend on our 'ego' for survival, because we've realized that survival is just another relative term, depending on more relative terms ultimately relying on the devices created by ego to stay alive. Thusly the ego creates it's own reality, to which it believes it is a slave, and we experience suffering, and fear for this reason.

---

So realistically, if I approached a 12 yr old girl dying of leukemia and told her to enjoy her terminal illness because it is what it is and that her and her family have no use for such negative concepts like suffering and fear because we have outgrown them and it is only her ego that is suffering, this would be an appropriate response to their misery?

Quote:

---

Duality has it's importance, don't get me wrong, it's essential for our survival to distinguish between an apple and a stone. However, when we look deep we see that the apple and the stone, and us are all made of the same stuff, literally protons, neutrons, and electrons. A few years back a fellow named Einstein proved that energy and matter, are separate manifestations of the same thing. You are energy/matter and visa versa. It's just a matter of time before western science proves what Buddhist Monks have known for 2000 years.

---

Actually, 2500 years, but regardless. How will life change as we know it if science does prove this concept?

Are they actually proving the conceptual truth that exists in ultimate reality or, are they proving the Buddhist conceptual truth or, are they confirming their own false concept of the conceptual truth that exists in ultimate reality?

Quote:

---

The problem with your incomprehension of what is being discussed lies in miscomprehension of the relationship between the subject of your argument (truth) and the object of your argument (Yourself). NOX23, to put it bluntly: you are using logic, to unravel logic, which is about as productive as trying to look at your eyes.

---

But it isn't really a problem for me because all it is, is your trap of a mistaken conceptual idea of what you believe to be conceptual truth that exists in ultimate reality?

And how does one come to know the Truth that exists in ultimate reality....thru experience?

But I see me eyes several times a day, by looking in a mirror....so what gives?

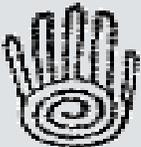

Canadian Zoetrope

Registered User

Posts: 40

(3/25/04 6:08 am)

Reply

Thusness

---

Quote:

---

What then is 'truth' itself?

---

The truth simply is. Free from all discriminatory concepts created by the ego.

Quote:

---

So my concept of truth is not the same as the concept of truth that exists in ultimate reality, are you suggesting that my concept lies outside ultimate reality?

And how does the truth exist IN ultimate reality?

---

No, your concept of truth is the truth, however the truth is not limited to simply your conception of it. Simply put, what you might think is an apple, is an apple, but to a frenchman it's a pomme. You're both right, yet different at the same time.

Quote:

---

But isn't my concept simply what it is, so I should accept it and enjoy it?

---

Of course you should, in fact you should enjoy all of existence, and non existence, enjoy awareness my friend.

Quote:

---

So realistically, if I approached a 12 yr old girl dying of leukemia and told her to enjoy her terminal illness because it is what it is and that her and her family have no use for such negative concepts like suffering and fear because we have outgrown them and it is only her ego that is suffering, this would be an appropriate response to their misery?

---

Well I doubt you telling them what to do would have much an effect on them. You could however reveal to them what has helped you through your own personal suffering. Ultimately you can only bring someone to the door, it's up to them to choose to go through it. Salvation lay within.

Quote:

---

How will life change as we know it if science does prove this concept?

---

I don't know. I'm simply focused on the world right ... now... no ... right ... now!

Quote:

---

But it isn't really a problem for me because all it is, is your trap of a mistaken conceptual idea of what you believe to be conceptual truth that exists in ultimate reality?

---

Well first of all, I don't really 'believe' in anything. There's no point in spending my time in the world of conceptual thought, it simply distracts from the beauty of the world around me. I simply felt like sharing this with you. As it has brought infinite comfort to my life.

Quote:

---

And how does one come to know the Truth that exists in ultimate reality....thru experience?

---

By letting go of the concept of 'Truth that exists in ultimate reality'. There is no concept, no reality, no ultimate reality, no web page and no bill board. In fact there is no Canadian Zoetrope.

Quote:

---

But I see me eyes several times a day, by looking in a mirror....so what gives?

---

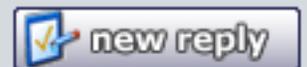

Well, you see a reflection of your eyes. It is impossible to see one's eyes. Because there are no eyes, no mirrors, and no 'looking'. These, again are concepts.

See your hand NOX23? You have 5 fingers. Each is different with their own qualities, and uses. However, no matter how different each finger may be on it's own, as part of the bigger picture, they are all part of your hand.

So to is the explanation of conceptualization, and duality. Duality is a necessity, but it's also an illusion. It simply takes some courage to stop looking at your fingers as fingers and part of your hand. It is thusly the nature of 'ultimate reality' unfolds.

voce io Registered User Posts: 833 (3/25/04 12:37 pm) Reply 	Re: Thusness <hr/> Go back to Canada, loser.
Canadian Zoetrope  Registered User Posts: 41 (3/25/04 3:54 pm) Reply 	Un Canada <hr/> Show me Un-Canada, and I will vacate it. But first, show me your face, before your parents were born.
voce io Registered User Posts: 834 (3/26/04 2:57 am) Reply 	Re: Un Canada <hr/> Show me Un-Canada, and I will vacate it. This website. Actually I was just joking, but I do think it's pretty gay to talk about the shit people talk about here. But first, show me your face, before your parents were born. It's all around you, within you, and is you.

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Captain Koolaid

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
 capecodindependant Registered User Posts: 1 (1/15/04 9:30 pm) Reply ezSupporter	Captain Koolaid <hr/> nice board,im mentally handicapped and retarded,I want tolearn of the Buddha,im no genius...sorry
birdofhermes Registered User Posts: 1273 (1/16/04 2:49 am) Reply	cap'n <hr/> Quote: <hr/> im mentally handicapped and retarded <hr/> By this do you mean that in addition to your retardation you are also dyslexic?
 capecodindependant Registered User Posts: 2 (1/16/04 3:51 am) Reply ezSupporter	Re: cap'n <hr/> no sir

voce io Registered User Posts: 612 (1/16/04 5:52 am) Reply	Re: cap'n <hr/> The Buddha was a guy that was dissatisfied with the way the world seemed to be, so he tried to understand the way it actually is. He achieved in his attempt, and taught other people about it.
Naturyl  Registered User Posts: 40 (1/16/04 11:03 am) Reply 	Re: cap'n <hr/> The Buddha was a guy who decided that life was kind of crappy, so he came up with a way to avoid a lot of the crappiness. The catch is that if you aren't careful, you end up avoiding a lot of the goodness, too. The Buddha was a smart guy who came up with something that helps a lot of people, but no one has all the answers.
Dave Toast Registered User Posts: 883 (1/16/04 11:29 am) Reply 	Re: cap'n <hr/> You know you have to bathe in it for a good while before it's truth becomes fully apparent to you. Kind of like the way that you have to practice anything long and hard before the synaptic pathways are realigned. It's not delusion though. Quite to the contrary, it is the only true non-delusion. Kind of like all those other Gods being false, whereas our God is the one true God.
Rhett Hamilton Registered User Posts: 244 (1/16/04 11:36 am) Reply	Re: cap'n <hr/> The Buddha was a smart guy who came up with something that helps a lot of people, but no one has all the answers. Upon what do you base that assertion Naturyl? Rhett

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2054
(1/16/04 11:48 am)
Reply

Re: cap'n

---

Naturyl wrote:

Quote:

---

The catch is that if you aren't careful, you end up avoiding a lot of the goodness, too.

---

Trying to avoid giving up all the "goodness" is your major stumbling block and the reason why you will never reach the level of a Buddha or Lao-Tzu.

Quote:

---

The Buddha was a smart guy who came up with something that helps a lot of people, but no one has all the answers.

---

Your justification for not seeking to abandon all the "goodness".

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 617
(1/16/04 11:52 am)
Reply

Re: cap'n

---

Trying to avoid giving up all the "goodness" is your major stumbling block and the reason why you will never reach the level of a Buddha or Lao-Tzu.

A very great point!

Naturyl

Registered User

Posts: 42

(1/16/04 12:21 pm)

Reply

Re: cap'n

---

Quote:

---

Trying to avoid giving up all the "goodness" is your major stumbling block and the reason why you will never reach the level of a Buddha or Lao-Tzu.

---

LOL. I never imagined that I would reach the level of a Buddha or a Lao-Tzu. That is for you imaginative folks who like to play make-believe and pretend to be enlightened. :)

Still, it's unsurprisingly presumptuous of you to declare flatly what level of attainment another person will or will not reach, as if you sit in judgement from on high. It's one of any number of similar insults and slights I have overlooked since joining these discussions just a few days ago. If I wanted to retaliate, I would perhaps say that your views are the reason you will never reach the level of actual sanity. The only reason I haven't said so sooner is because a few months ago at KIR, I said that you and Kevin were a couple of kooks, and Dan left as a result. But I can only restrain myself for so long. You are a kook, David, and a condescending, patronizing one at that. Do understand that give people of intelligence a lot of slack and many chances to befriend me simply because of their intellect. I do play favorites that way, but I can only remain undecided for so long. I wanted to like you, but it just isn't happening.

Finally, please don't take this as a concession to your assertion that one must give up goodness to achieve 'wisdom.' From a Buddhist standpoint, this would be arguable, but from a Taoist perspective, I can see a lot of room for disagreement.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2056

(1/16/04 12:52 pm)

Reply

Re: cap'n

---

Naturyl wrote:

Quote:

---

I wanted to like you, but it just isn't happening.

---

For the record, I quite like you, despite our differences. Best of luck for the future.

Quote:

---

Finally, please don't take this as a concession to your assertion that one must give up goodness to achieve 'wisdom.' From a Buddhist standpoint, this would be arguable, but from a Taoist perspective, I can see a lot of room for disagreement.

---

There is ultimately no such thing as a "Buddhist perspective" or a "Taoist perspective". There is only truth and falsity.

Hywel

Registered User

Posts: 45

(1/17/04 3:35 am)

Reply

Re: Buddha and Lao-Tzu

---

To Naturyl,

This discussion you are having with David has flared up very quickly. Perhaps it can be ended quickly and clearly.

Quote:

---

LOL. I never imagined that I would reach the level of a Buddha or a Lao-Tzu.

---

If you cannot imagine, merely entertain the idea, that you could reach their level, how can you?

In the above sentence you appear to state that you are not at their level...

Quote:

---

That is for you imaginative folks who like to play make-believe and pretend to be enlightened. :)

---

But in this one you are stating that you are past their level of attainment, or at least past that of the members of this board, otherwise how could you know that their enlightenment was "make-believe" and "pretend"?

You can do eeeet!

Hywel

Edited by: Hywel at: 1/17/04 3:41 am

Naturyl

Registered User

Posts: 44

(1/17/04 1:21 pm)

Reply

Re: Buddha, Lao-Tzu, and the wino down the road.

---

Well, how do you know that guy who lives in the alleyway isn't really Napoleon? He says he is, after all. Would you have to be Napoleon yourself in order to refute his claim?

As for 'reaching the level' of a Buddha or a Lao-Tzu, there is nothing to reach. People are simply constituted differently. The Buddha could not have been anything but the Buddha. I'm very skeptical of so-called 'free will.' People are what their genetics and their environment determine them to be. This holds true even for 'exceptional' persons, although in their cases, it is often more difficult to percieve the chain of causality.

If I am to be a Buddha, then I will be one. If I am to be a fast food manager, I will be one. If I am to die tommorow, I will die. There is no attainment, only destiny.

voce io Registered User Posts: 630 (1/17/04 2:29 pm) Reply	Re: Buddha, Lao-Tzu, and the wino down the road. <hr/> There is attainment if it's destined. There are consequences of predetermined actions (the illusion of free will).
Naturyl  Registered User Posts: 50 (1/17/04 3:37 pm) Reply	Re: Buddha, Lao-Tzu, and the wino down the road. <hr/> Exactly right.
DavidQuinn000 Forum Host Posts: 2065 (1/17/04 4:45 pm) Reply 	Re: Buddha, Lao-Tzu, and the wino down the road. <hr/> Naturyl wrote: Quote: <hr/> As for 'reaching the level' of a Buddha or a Lao-Tzu, there is nothing to reach. People are simply constituted differently. <hr/> This sounds like another way of justifying one's spiritual laziness. A person cannot know whether or not he is constituted for wisdom until he spends his life seeking and practicing it. Quote: <hr/> The Buddha could not have been anything but the Buddha. I'm very skeptical of so-called 'free will.' People are what their genetics and their environment determine them to be. This holds true even for 'exceptional' persons, although in their cases, it is often more difficult to percieve the chain of causality. <hr/> People are also determined by their decisons and thoughts and desires. The desire to become a Buddha could well be crucial difference between one person actually becoming a Buddha and the other stagnating in mediocrity.

Quote:

---

If I am to be a Buddha, then I will be one. If I am to be a fast food manager, I will be one. If I am to die tomorrow, I will die. There is no attainment, only destiny.

---

You will never become a Buddha with that attitude. But then, that's suits you perfectly, doesn't it?

Naturyl

Registered User

Posts: 52

(1/17/04 5:02 pm)

Reply

Re: Buddha, Lao-Tzu, and the wino down the road.

---

Yes.

I would far rather be myself than a Buddha. This is well, of course, for it turns out that 'myself' is nothing other than Buddha-nature. I don't need to "become" a Buddha. I already am one, as are we all. The only difference is that you, ignoring this in your haste to reamke the world, imagine that you will improve people by bending, molding, and cajoling them into becoming they already are. It is folly. The sleepers will not be awakened until they are rested. If you interrupt them too early, they will curse you and go back to sleep. Patience! All will attain self-realization in their own good time. Have faith in progress, David. The truth is bound to be known as the unfolding continues.

Do you really not understand this, or does it simply not suit your desires?

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2067

(1/17/04 5:30 pm)

Reply

Re: Buddha, Lao-Tzu, and the wino down the road.

---

Naturyl wrote:

Quote:

---

I would far rather be myself than a Buddha. This is well, of course, for it turns out that 'myself' is nothing other than Buddha-nature. I don't need to "become" a Buddha. I already am one, as are we all.

---

A Buddha is a person who has eliminated his delusions and is fully aware of the nature of Reality at all times. Under this definition, hardly anyone is a Buddha.

When you say "I would far rather be myself than a Buddha", are you saying that you don't want to be without delusion?

Quote:

---

The only difference is that you, ignoring this in your haste to reamke the world, imagine that you will improve people by bending, molding, and cajoling them into becoming they already are. It is folly.

---

Given my definition above, do you still agree that it is folly?

Quote:

---

The sleepers will not be awakened until they are rested. If you interrupt them too early, they will curse you and go back to sleep. Patience!

---

Not all people are deeply asleep. Some are much closer to waking up and perhaps only need a word or two from a wise man to make the all-important breakthrough. If they don't receive this word they might never wake up. They might fall back into a deep sleep again. We might lose them forever. There isn't a moment to lose!

Quote:

---

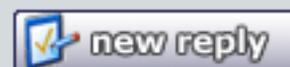

All will attain self-realization in their own good time. Have faith in progress, David. The truth is bound to be known as the unfolding continues.

---

A pipe-dream, Naturyl. There is nothing in the laws of Nature which state that people will inevitably realize the Truth one day. Most people will never become awake. They will go from birth to death fast asleep. Unless, of course, we can wake them up.

Hywel Registered User Posts: 46 (1/17/04 10:47 pm) Reply	Re: Buddha, Lao-Tzu, and the wino down the road. <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Well, how do you know that guy who lives in the alleyway isn't really Napoleon? He says he is, after all. Would you have to be Napoleon yourself in order to refute his claim? <hr/> If someone were claiming to BE Buddha or Lao-Tzu, this would be an issue, but they arent. But to use your analogy, if someone were to claim to be as great a general as Napoleon, you would have to be as great a general (or greater) than Napoleon yourself to accurately judge their claim. Hywel
voce io Registered User Posts: 636 (1/18/04 1:20 am) Reply	Re: Buddha, Lao-Tzu, and the wino down the road. <hr/> And in order to be a Buddha, you would have to be...what exactly?
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2084 (1/18/04 1:26 am) Reply	---- <hr/> a kind of superhero of the east, with a coloured cape, and many and varied superpowers to go with it.

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Causal Consciousness

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Rhett Hamilton Registered User Posts: 8 (9/13/03 12:24 pm) Reply   Edit	 Causal Consciousness <hr/> Causal Consciousness To achieve an enlightenment mind one must learn to reside in ones thoughts, to accept that one is thought. To attempt to find truth beyond them is to entertain ones illusions. Consciousness = Thinking Awareness = The nature of the relationship between our sensory input and consciousness States of Awareness = normal, intense focus/trance, dream, sleep. Ego (delusion of an inherently existent self) -&gt; Mental fear of loss or compromise of self -&gt; Physiological fear response and 'emotion' -&gt; Compromised consciousness -&gt; Compromised rationality. The more i think about thought/consciousness in an introspective manner, the more momentary and simple it seems to be, at its core that is. Consciousness is thought, and that is all it is. The nature of all thought is essentially the same, one thought after the other (until such time as we become unconscious). One may remain conscious for only the briefest of moments, a few minutes, hours, or for the whole woken period of the day in the case of a perfectly enlightened person.

To be in accordance with causality, consciousness, at any moment in time, must be a point in a single causal chain. This may not rule out consciousness being possible from different causal chains at different times, but neither does it suggest that it is.

So how do I try to explain emotions? Emotional states are periods of time when one is experiencing deluded thoughts about reality, which generate a form of fear response, which then has associated physiological ramifications. If one believes in (their) inherent existence, then most thoughts will generate a fear of loss or compromise of that (illusory) existence. Even so called positive emotions are a form of fear response, if something 'good' happens one is also exposed to the negative, or duality, of that good, so one experiences a bad even when one experiences a good. For example; If one believes that looking fashionable benefits the maintenance of their self through social acceptance and interest, then to look unfashionable would create a fear of some form of compromise of self. To look fashionable theoretically reduces ones fear because one thinks it will have favourable social ramifications, or at least not have unfavourable social ramifications (thus, society and culture magnify ego etc.). But 'fashionable' people invariably experience more fear, even when looking 'good', than the plainly dressed.

In fact, all thoughts whether they be emotional in nature or intellectual will, in the case of an egotistical person, generate an emotional/physiological response.

All (mental) fear has associated physiological ramifications. In response to fear our autonomic nervous system makes a number of changes to our physiological state. In regards to most emotions, those reactions will be minor. As our level of fear increases so does our heartrate and breathrate, and at some point we will begin to sweat, produce adrenalin, and eventually shut down non-essential processes such as digestion and immune system activity. Thus, our emotions, whether they be love or happiness or anger etc, all invoke a physiological fear response. I know a woman that is intimately aware of various internal changes that correlate with specific emotion states, but she did not question their rational validity...

These physiological changes actually diminish or eliminate entirely our consciousness. Why exactly I do not know, or care to know, or think it can be fully known. I know this experientially, and since this is largely an experiential endeavour, I offer that as the core of my rationale (my piece called 'Mental Acuity and Exertion' may be of somewhat more scientific relevance). This means that our capacity to understand these processes during our experience of them is compromised. Thus, our main means of understanding them is to reflect on our memory of them (if we have one). However, a number of factors make even this quite difficult. Most pertinent of these is because we did not form accurate memories of them, our perception and memorisation process was distorted by the diminution of our conscious processing during those moments. This is in part why even seemingly rational people are incapable of realising the deluded nature of emotion states, we have so little access to them.

Since at any one moment in time we can experience only one thought, we do not and cannot have 'multiple consciousness'. However, we can usually reflect on the thoughts that we had in a previous moment, by accessing our memory. So if, for example, we thought about our physiological state in one moment, we would then retain a memory of what state it was in during that moment, but not if we didn't think about it. Thus, if one was previously in an emotion state one will only have memories for the moments of time that one was conscious/thinking. For example: When experiencing anger we are usually focused on what is being said, and only notice our physiological response (eg. bated breath) if we think about it at the time.

People may delude themselves into believing that they have experienced 'multiple consciousness' when in fact they were just creating and maintaining two or more perspectives on a situation by rapidly switching from one to the other. Basically, they were creating two or more memory sets, each with a particular focus that is different from the other(s). A very simple (and thus somewhat unrepresentative) example would be to keep alternating your focus between what you can hear and what you can feel with your finger.

I think deep, intense thought processes have a particularly strong effect on ones breathing. I might even stop my breathing for periods of time. Altered breathing can lead to changes in our blood oxygen/carbon dioxide levels, and in many people headaches, from thinking! [Maybe part of the reason why i can think so much is because i have developed a particularly high tolerance to carbon dioxide levels? (which, incidently, may have helped me freedive better)]. The enlightened, having no such fear response, have not the slightest problem with thinking.

Our consciousness has a certain capacity to determine and manipulate our state of awareness, and it can also pre-program what states of awareness will occur in response to particular stimuli. For example: Egotistical thought is too slow and ponderous for truly dangerous situations, we

	override it, and experience a form of satori. Rhett
DEL Registered User Posts: 677 (9/13/03 12:32 pm) Reply	 Causal Consciousness <hr/> Causal Consciousness = fate
Rhett Hamilton Registered User Posts: 19 (9/22/03 2:48 pm) Reply   Edit	 Re: Causal Consciousness <hr/> DEL wrote: Causal consciousness = fate It does at the Ultimate level, but not at the conscious level. Ultimately, all that is is (necessarily) a product of its causes, and is thus predetermined, or you might say 'fated to be'. But our conscious decisions (i should in fact say our delusion of conscious decisions) are an integral part of causality. I think it is your fate to have to make decisions for the rest of your 'life'. Unlucky would be the person who is 'fated' to never make any decisions in life, for they would have to be unconscious. So if someone were to believe that their life was not in any way a product of their decisions, and tried to make none, would have to become unconscious to do so. I think of consciousness and memory as being a 'well' of causes. Sometimes we seem to react in direct response to our immediate surroundings, at other times our mind makes us react seemingly contrary to our immediate inputs. Your mind, thoughts, decisions, etc, are all part of causality. In fact, nothing (other than the totality) is outside of cause and effect. Rhett

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 611
(9/22/03 4:54 pm)
Reply

Re: Causal Consciousness

---

Rhett: I think it is your fate to have to make decisions for the rest of your 'life'.

That's a refreshing idea. To say that we are destined for choice debunks the whole rusty-n-dusty free-will-determinism debate. Right on.

Cheers, Thomas

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 689
(9/22/03 5:31 pm)
Reply

Re: Causal Consciousness

---

Quote:

---

Rhett:

I think it is your fate to have to make decisions for the rest of your 'life'.

---

That's right.

Decision = Life

If you want to live you better keep decideing.

When you tire of the oscillation you tire of life.

We are to try to decrease the amplitude and increase the frequency.

I'm not sure if internal combustion is a result of getting it right or wrong as yet.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 25
(9/25/03 10:32 am)
Reply | Edit

 Re: Causal Consciousness

---

DEL:
That's right.
Decision = Life
If you want to live you better keep decideing.
When you tire of the oscillation you tire of life.

Rhett: ....and you seek spirit and truth instead of life.

DEL: We are to try to decrease the amplitude and increase the frequency.

Rhett: An interesting analogy.

DEL: I'm not sure if internal combustion is a result of getting it right or wrong as yet.

Rhett: 'Internal combustion'(suffering) is a product of getting it wrong *and* a product of starting to get it right, so it is an unreliable measure of spiritual progress. If you dedicate yourself sufficiently (and access the right understanding) you *will* progress, and will thus be in no doubt about it.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1521
(9/26/03 12:25 am)
Reply

 -----

---

Quote:

_____
Rhett: ....and you seek spirit and truth instead of life.
_____

But this is not possible! Spirit and truth have only ever been life!

Rhett Hamilton Registered User Posts: 30 (9/26/03 10:47 am) Reply   Edit	 Re: ----- <hr/> Quote: ----- Rhett: ....and you seek spirit and truth instead of life. ----- Suergaz: But this is not possible! Spirit and truth have only ever been life! Rhett: Ultimately, life does not exist. 'Life' = The experience of delusion, ignorance, samsara Spirit = Higher consciousness Truth = Understanding of the nature of Reality
WolfsonJakk Registered User Posts: 1171 (9/26/03 10:58 am) Reply	 Re: ----- <hr/> Interesting definition of life. If I were to disagree with it, would I be delusional? Tharan
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1523 (9/26/03 12:24 pm) Reply	 ---- <hr/> You're a bit of a stiff Rhett, and I think some buddhism is stuck to your butt.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1524 (9/27/03 2:00 am) Reply	 --- <hr/> Quote: ----- Rhett: Ultimately, life does not exist. ----- Ultimately, you don't know. Quote:

---

'Life' = The experience of delusion, ignorance, samsara

---

Please.

Quote:

---

Spirit = Higher consciousness

---

Go tell it on the mountain.

Quote:

---

Truth = Understanding of the nature of Reality

---

Truth is actually equal to itself and is the nature of reality, not just the understanding of such.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 706
(9/27/03 3:46 am)
Reply

 -----

---

Quote:

---

Rhett: Ultimately, life does not exist.

---

CORRECT

Word Polarity confirms the answer.

-Ultimate+ -Absolute+ -Logic+ -End+ -Death+

WolfsonJakk Registered User Posts: 1173 (9/27/03 2:11 pm) Reply	 Re: ----- <hr/> Del, I would like to introduce you to an friend of this forum and another truth seeker such as yourself. His name here was Joshua Stone (get it? :/ ), but I believe he has since transmuted into Warrior Seer. Maybe the transformation is a kind of Pokemon thing, I'm not real sure. I think if you two could find common ground, you would be an unstoppable force in the cut-throat world of modern virtual philosophy. A kind of Yin and Yang duo (though you may need to work it out between yourselves who gets to be Yin and who gets to be Yang). Enjoy. Tharan
Rhett Hamilton Registered User Posts: 41 (10/5/03 11:47 am) Reply   Edit	 Re: Causal Consciousness <hr/> Rhett: 'Life' = The experience of delusion, ignorance, samsara Tharan: Interesting definition of life. If I were to disagree with it, would I be delusional? Rhett: I have learnt enough about you, from your previous posts, to have an idea of why you may have balked at this one... Whether you are delusional or not depends on the reason(s) why you disagree (if you in fact do), your definitions, and your understanding of Reality. What are your definitions?
WolfsonJakk Registered User Posts: 1187 (10/6/03 1:22 am) Reply	 Re: Causal Consciousness <hr/> Good answer. Tharan

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1538
(10/6/03 6:46 pm)
Reply

 ---

---

I think it's a weak answer.

It is delusional to make the following statement:

--"Ultimately, life does not exist."--

For the following two reasons:

- a) life exists
- b) life ceases to exist

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1188
(10/6/03 11:20 pm)
Reply

 ---

---

His answer is good because it has nothing to do with Life; merely subjective judgement and definition.

If I disagree with you, Zag, am I delusional?

(Hint: The correct answer is "It depends..." but you might disagree.)

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1541
(10/6/03 11:37 pm)
Reply

 ---

---

Quote:

His answer is good because it has nothing to do with Life; merely subjective judgement and definition.

---

As far as I know, subjective judgement and definition have ONLY to do with Life.

Quote:

If I disagree with you, Zag, am I delusional?

---

At least not about your disagreeing! (:D) But if I make you see further, will you promise to laugh at the gloomy definitions that so called 'rational' and 'logical' men pour forth?!

Quote:

---

(Hint: The correct answer is "It depends..." but you might disagree.)

---

Well then! By you I am incorrect! For me to be coorect in this regard I would have to hypothetically admit to eror! (as if!) I do admit to being in error when I recognise it. Let's see upon what this would depend! Or Who!

serfur007
Registered User
Posts: 3
(10/7/03 6:26 am)
Reply

 Re: Causal Consciousness

---

Rhett, i totally agree!

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1189
(10/7/03 6:30 am)
Reply

 Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

As far as I know, subjective judgement and definition have ONLY to do with Life.

---

There is a possibility you might be correct. Perhaps you should seek a commercial patent or copywrite?

Quote:

---

But if I make you see further, will you promise to laugh at the gloomy definitions that so called 'rational' and 'logical' men pour forth?!

---

I'll promise anything as long as I am not bound to it. I am an American afterall.

Quote:

---

Well then! By you I am incorrect! For me to be coorect in this regard I would have to hypothetically admit to eror! (as if!) I do admit to being in error when I recognise it.

---

Therein lies the problem, I presume.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 45
(10/7/03 11:13 am)
Reply | Edit

 Re: ---

---

Hi Suergaz,

Have you read David's book? Until you make a serious attempt to understand the nature of Reality you will struggle in this forum.

'Life' is a creation of consciousness, and thus only exists in our consciousness.

Rhett

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Causal Consciousness

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1545 (10/7/03 12:44 pm) Reply	 Re: --- <hr/> No I haven't read Davids book Rhett. I am not struggling here. But you are if you cannot come back with anything to defend your statement -- "Ultimately life does not exist" And this one's even worse! :--- "'Life' is a creation of consciousness, and thus only exists in our consciousness." This is utter rubbish. "our" consciousness? What of the consciousness of "other" life? It is also unconsciously created. "The rod up this mans butt has a rod up its butt!" Edited by: suergaz at: 10/7/03 12:51 pm

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 617
(10/7/03 7:16 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

Never had you pegged as a Simpsons watcher.

Quote:

"Ultimately, life does not exist"

Rhett, all this double meaning is most perplexing. In another thread, you defined existence as 'appearance to mind'.

Are you now saying that life does not 'appear to mind'?

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 47
(10/10/03 10:11 am)
Reply | Edit

Re: ---

-----
"Ultimately, life does not exist"
-----

DT: Rhett, all this double meaning is most perplexing. In another thread, you defined existence as 'appearance to mind'.

Are you now saying that life does not 'appear to mind'?

Rhett: No, there is no contradiction. All statements are potentially misleading, so i am glad you have questioned it.

Consciousness does experience the 'appearance to mind' of life, as i have said previously, so in that sense it does exist, as a construct within our mind.

But life does not exist in an objective sense.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1555
(10/11/03 2:36 pm)
Reply

 -----

---

Quote:

---

But life does not exist in an objective sense.

---

Not so Rhett. Life exists in an objective sense.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 623
(10/11/03 11:47 pm)
Reply

 Re: -----

---

Come on now Rhett, this is double speak.

If existence is and can only be appearance to mind, as you have previously stated, then what is this 'objective existence' of which you speak?

Life appears to mind, ergo, life exists. Moreover, it exists in the only way that we can speak of existence.

Appearance to mind is definitively subjective. If that is all you have to work with, how have you gained access to this knowledge of true objectivity?

If we're going to speculate on a objective perspective, I would have thought that if there could be a hypothetical non-alive thing, capable of recognising life, it would do so.

I AM
Registered User
Posts: 216
(10/12/03 10:50 am)
Reply

 umm...yeah.....

---

Quote:

---

Appearance to mind is definitively subjective. If that is all you have to work with, how have you gained access to this knowledge of true objectivity?[/qu

---

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 52
(10/12/03 11:54 am)
Reply | Edit

 Re: -----

---

DT: Come on now Rhett, this is double speak.

If existence is and can only be appearance to mind, as you have previously stated, then what is this 'objective existence' of which you speak?

Rhett: Objective existence = Things that exist outside the mind, that exist independent of an observer. This is the definition of existence that most people hold to be true, and thus i need to use it at times.

DT: Life appears to mind, ergo, life exists. Moreover, it exists in the only way that we can speak of existence.

Appearance to mind is definitively subjective. If that is all you have to work with, how have you gained access to this knowledge of true objectivity?

Rhett: It is impossible for things to exist outside consciousness. Knowledge of this is acquired through logical deduction.

DT: If we're going to speculate on a objective perspective, I would have thought that if there could be a hypothetical non-alive thing, capable of recognising life, it would do so.

Rhett: Consciousness creates/experiences the construct 'life'.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1570
(10/12/03 12:08 pm)
Reply

 ---

---

Rhett, certainly consciousness creates life. It is not, however, impossible for things to exist outside of consciousness. Show me how this conclusion is arrived at with logical deduction, what are you telling us for? The universe is NOT conscious.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 644

(10/13/03 9:35 am)

Reply

Re: -----

---

Quote:

Rhett: Ultimately, life does not exist.

DT: Rhett, all this double meaning is most perplexing. In another thread, you defined existence as 'appearance to mind'.

Are you now saying that life does not 'appear to mind'?

Rhett: No, there is no contradiction. All statements are potentially misleading, so i am glad you have questioned it.

Consciousness does experience the 'appearance to mind' of life, as i have said previously, so in that sense it does exist, as a construct within our mind.

But life does not exist in an objective sense.

DT: Come on now Rhett, this is double speak.

If existence is and can only be appearance to mind, as you have previously stated, then what is this 'objective existence' of which you speak?

Rhett: Objective existence = Things that exist outside the mind, that exist independent of an observer. This is the definition of existence that most people hold to be true, and thus i need to use it at times.

---

So when you say, "Ultimately, life does not exist", you don't really mean that? Seems you are actually simply saying that objective existence does not exist? You aren't actually saying anything about whether life exists or not?

If you are saying that objective existence doesn't exist, what exactly do you mean, and how do you know?

If we use your definitions above, you are strictly saying that:-

"Things which exist outside of the mind, which exist independent of an observer, as conceived by most people"; "don't appear to mind".

Now I guess that this is not what you are trying to say, as it is nonsense. I would guess that you are saying that the objective existence which most people hold to be true is fallacious. In other words, objective existence doesn't objectively exist. You say this from an intrinsically subjective point of view.

So now we've got through what I interpreted as double speak, it seems that you are trying to say that:-

Life does not objectively exist, ultimately. Existence can only be appearance to mind - constructs.

So are you telling us that this is an objective fact, or that it is merely a construct - an appearance to mind?

If you are saying that it is an objective fact, this is clearly logical fallacy based on your definitions. If you are saying that it is merely a construct, then how can you espouse it's ultimate, objective truth?

Perhaps you can see why I thought this was double speak?

Quote:

---

DT: Life appears to mind, ergo, life exists. Moreover, it exists in the only way that we can speak of existence.

Appearance to mind is definitively subjective. If that is all you have to work with, how have you gained access to this knowledge of true objectivity?

Rhett: It is impossible for things to exist outside consciousness. Knowledge of this is acquired through logical deduction.

---

According to your definitions, this logical deduction and knowledge of which you speak is only a construct, remember. It doesn't objectively exist. Moreover it is contingent upon empiricism, which in itself is but a construct which doesn't objectively exist.

These constructs only exist in the same sense that life exists, i.e. appearance to mind.

These alleged Ultimate Truths are merely... constructed contingent truths which don't objectively exist.

I'm afraid you can't have your cake and eat it.

Quote:

---

DT: If we're going to speculate on an objective perspective, I would have thought that if there could be a hypothetical non-alive thing, capable of recognising life, it would do so.

Rhett: Consciousness creates/experiences the construct 'life'.

---

Not quite. Consciousness creates the conditions in which the construct (the concept of a construct being a construct itself) 'life' can be assigned (assignation being a construct) the constructed quality of 'existence', and all the constructed implications (implications being a construct) that go with it ('going', 'with' and 'it' being constructs as well).

However I was entering into the spirit of your words and speculating on an objective existence.

That's all we can do, speculate.

Ultimately, life may or may not objectively exist.

The speculation is no more or less ultimately true by merit of its constructed consistency and soundness.

Ultimately, Solipsism could be true!

Edited by: Dave Toast at: 10/13/03 11:37 am

Rhett Hamilton

Registered User

Posts: 54

(10/16/03 9:53 am)

Reply | Edit

 objective existence

---

-----
Rhett: Ultimately, life does not exist.

DT: Rhett, all this double meaning is most perplexing. In another thread, you defined existence as 'appearance to mind'.

Are you now saying that life does not 'appear to mind'?

Rhett: No, there is no contradiction. All statements are potentially misleading, so i am glad you have questioned it.

Consciousness does experience the 'appearance to mind' of life, as i have said previously, so in that sense it does exist, as a construct within our mind.

But life does not exist in an objective sense.

DT: Come on now Rhett, this is double speak.

If existence is and can only be appearance to mind, as you have previously stated, then what is this 'objective existence' of which you speak?

Rhett: Objective existence = Things that exist outside the mind, that exist independent of an observer. This is the definition of existence that most people hold to be true, and thus i need to use it at times.

---

DT: So when you say, "Ultimately, life does not exist", you don't really mean that? Seems you are actually simply saying that objective existence does not exist? You aren't actually saying anything about whether life exists or not?

If you are saying that objective existence doesn't exist, what exactly do you mean, and how do you know?

If we use your definitions above, you are strictly saying that:-

"Things which exist outside of the mind, which exist independant of an observer, as concieved by most people"; "don't appear to mind".

Now I guess that this is not what you are trying to say, as it is nonsense. I would guess that you are saying that the objective existence which most people hold to be true is fallacious. In other words, objective existence doesn't objectively exist. You say this from an intrinsically subjective point of view.

So now we've got through what I interpreted as double speak, it seems that you are trying to say that:-

Life does not objectively exist, ultimately. Existence can only be appearance to mind - constructs.

So are you telling us that this is an objective fact, or that it is merely a construct - an appearance to mind?

If you are saying that it is an objective fact, this is clearly logical fallacy based on your definitions. If you are saying that it is merely a construct, then how can you espouse it's ultimate, objective truth?

Perhaps you can see why I thought this was double speak?

Rhett: Like i said, any statement can be misleading. People's definitions and the meanings of those are tightly woven in with the way they perceive Reality. It is a difficult game indeed to help people see through the fog, and i still have some mist of my own. I have been attempting to use the same words and definitions that David uses in his book, with the intention of enabling easy crossover. But my linguistic tendencies seem to be in conflict with David's in this case, I agree that i have created the possibility for confusion.

What David is doing is sliding the common definition of existence over to a new meaning. The statement 'existence = appearance to mind' is the finale of that (however, to reverse that to read 'appearance to mind = existence' is potentially very misleading). I suggest that people learn and use the words and definitions in David's book as a sort of baseline, and adapt to other usages (I say this because i think his book is the best guide to enlightenment). Flexibility is very important in the long run. I shall now attempt to clear the fog...

Objective existence is an impossibility. The truth of this statement can be proven with logic. If someone were somehow purely logical in the way they thought, they could become enlightened instantly upon being given the proofs. However, most of us are not, so it takes some time for us to develop our capacity for logical thought and to learn around the subject in preparation for each breakthrough in understanding.

The key to proving the impossibility of objective existence is to develop an understanding of causality in its broadest possible sense. This process is basically what David's book is all about. For me to explain all this would only be exercise for me, which is exactly what I am after. What follows is very brief, so just point out the bits you want me to expand on, and if that happens to be all of it then so be it. Here is instalment number one...

Let's first create a concept that embraces everything and is infinite, and call it 'the totality'. This is an exceptionally important definition. So what else can we deduce about it? Firstly, the totality is not and cannot be nothingness, our personal experience of consciousness confirms that at the very least it is composed of our mental experiences. So what is the nature of its composition? Since our experiences of consciousness change (we know we do not experience some kind of permanent mental stasis), we know that change is occurring in the totality.

So what is the nature of this change? Change occurs because things affect each other, and no other explanation could possibly be valid. What is the proof of this? What else could possibly be the case? Think of a rocket that is in space, it fires up a booster and moves, but only because of the mass of particles that are being pushed in the opposite direction at a very high velocity. If we look closer we see that the people are being pushed forward by their seats, and that they caused this whole forward movement in the first place by (abstractly) deciding to operate a lever, but only because they were caused to do so by a radio signal containing an abstract communication from the commander of their base-station on Earth, ad-finitum. Everything is causing everything.

So can there be anything that is not subject to cause and effect? No. To be so it would have to be totally separate, by definition, because if it interacted in any way with anything it would then be a part of cause and effect. It also cannot be outside of the totality, because we have defined the totality as being everything. It could never even be conceived of, because that would necessitate a causal connection.

So if everything is causing everything, and each of those things is composed of parts that are also in causal relation to each other, how can anything exist? The answer is that nothing can inherently or objectively exist. A human does not really exist. It may seem to be composed of parts that are in causal relation to each other, but those parts are also just causal conditions. It is easy to see that what we think is a human extends far beyond what we call the 'body'. The body is in complete flux, nothing about it stays the same, even the cells of our bones are completely renewed within the space of around five years. Since nothing about the 'body' stays the same, what could possibly define it? All definitions, all things, are just constructs, which is what consciousness is: experiences of differentiation. We define a human by the very act of differentiating one portion of the totality from the rest, we label the portion in question 'human' and the rest 'not-human'.

So is everything changing, or are some things in stasis? Whilst change and stasis are relative terms, stasis is actually impossible considering that we already know that change is occurring. If we try to conceive of a thing which is in stasis whilst other things were changing, there would have to be a boundary between them that prevented the static thing from being affected or caused. But this is impossible because the boundary would be affected by external causes and thus could not help but affect the static object.

---

DT: Life appears to mind, ergo, life exists. Moreover, it exists in the only way that we can speak of existence.

Appearance to mind is definitively subjective. If that is all you have to work with, how have you gained access to this knowledge of true objectivity?

Rhett: It is impossible for things to exist outside consciousness.
Knowledge of this is acquired through logical deduction.

---

DT: According to your definitions, this logical deduction and knowledge of which you speak is only a construct, remember. It doesn't objectively exist. Moreover it is contingent upon empiricism, which in itself is but a construct which doesn't objectively exist.

These constructs only exist in the same sense that life exists, i.e. appearance to mind.

These alleged Ultimate Truths are merely... constructed contingent truths which don't objectively exist.

I'm afraid you can't have your cake and eat it.

Rhett: I agree with your reasoning, but there is one flaw. The meaning of these truths is transcendent, they are true regardless of the empirical realm. For example:  $1+1=2$  is true regardless of anything else, it is true for all alien consciousness on all worlds in all universes because it is a construct that in no way depends on anything empirical for its meaning.

---

DT: If we're going to speculate on a objective perspective, I would have thought that if there could be a hypothetical non-alive thing, capable of recognising life, it would do so.

Rhett: Consciousness creates/experiences the construct 'life'.

---

DT: Not quite. Consciousness creates the conditions in which the construct (the concept of a construct being a construct itself) 'life' can be assigned (assignation being a construct) the constructed quality of 'existence', and all the constructed implications (implications being a construct) that go with it ('going', 'with' and 'it' being constructs as well).

However I was entering into the spirit of your words and speculating on an objective existence.

That's all we can do, speculate.

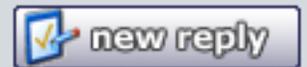

Ultimately, life may or may not objectively exist.

The speculation is no more or less ultimately true by merit of it's constructed consistency and soundness.

Ultimately, Solipsism could be true!

Rhett: Solipsism is true in a certain sense, but the experience in our mind of logical truths enables us to understand with absolute certainty a number of important things about Reality, which means they help us understand what we do actually experience.

Edited by: Rhett Hamilton at: 11/3/03 10:21 am

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

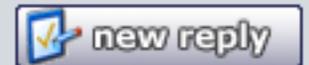

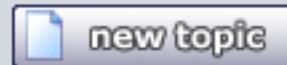

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Causality And Non-Determinism

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Thomas Knierim Registered User Posts: 813 (2/23/04 9:48 pm) Reply	Causality And Non-Determinism <hr/> DQ: I've been repeatedly told, by scientists and non-scientists alike, that quantum physics has proven that things arise without cause in the quantum realm. Franz Heymann: That is horse dung. Whoever told you that did not know his arse from his elbow. QM is fully causal, but not fully deterministic. David, You have confused the notions of causality and non-determinism even in your book. Now, you're looking for statements from physicists to back up your philosophical pet views? Did you run out of arguments? Physicists have nowadays generally agreed to shut up about possible interpretations of QM. Wouldn't this course of action be the wisest thing to do for someone who knows little about the topic? Thomas Edited by: Thomas Knierim at: 2/23/04 9:53 pm

ksolway

Registered User

Posts: 356

(2/23/04 10:27 pm)

Reply

Re: Causality And Non-Determinism

---

Quote:

---

Franz Heymann: QM is fully causal, but not fully deterministic.

---

Thomas, you are one of the many people who have been wrongly claiming that there are non-causal quantum events.

QM, as with everything else, is in fact fully causal, as Franz Heymann says.

In other words, all events are fully determined by their causes. Therefore QM is, by definition, fully deterministic.

But that doesn't mean that we can know what events will happen before they happen.

"Nondeterministic", as applied to algorithms, means, "A property of a computation which may have more than one result".

Only in that sense are quantum events currently "nondeterministic" - i.e., using this narrow mathematical definition of the word.

Philosophically speaking however, quantum events are fully deterministic (ie, caused), which is exactly what we have always said.

Edited by: ksolway at: 2/23/04 11:59 pm

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2209

(2/24/04 7:49 am)

Reply

Re: Causality And Non-Determinism

---

Thomas wrote:

Quote:

---

Franz Heymann: That is horse dung. Whoever told you that did not know his arse from his elbow. QM is fully causal, but not fully deterministic.

Thomas: You have confused the notions of causality and non-determinism even in your book. Now, you're looking for statements from physicists to back up your philosophical pet views? Did you run out of arguments?

---

I just got tired of fighting false battles with people such as yourself and Natuyl, who keep spouting antiquated misunderstandings of QM gleaned from popular science books.

I know how much you rely on authority figures, Thomas. Surely, you will be able to benefit from the realization that your authority figures in this issue have been grossly misleading you.

Quote:

---

Physicists have nowadays generally agreed to shut up about possible interpretations of QM. Wouldn't this course of action be the wisest thing to do for someone who knows little about the topic?

---

This is from someone who has been loudly proclaiming for years a particular (deluded) interpretation of QM as though it were some sort of grand truth.

Who are you trying to kid with this sort bluff? Yourself? Give it away, mate, and think more carefully about your habit of relying on authority figures all the time.

"If the blind follow the blind, both will fall into the pit" - Jesus

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 814
(2/24/04 1:20 pm)
Reply

Re: Causality And Non-Determinism

---

Kevin: Philosophically speaking however, quantum events are fully deterministic (ie, caused), which is exactly what we have always said.

Kevin, apparently you're not only "fully ignorant" of QM, but you also make the incredibly naive assumption that determinism is the same as causality. I will address the latter point in more detail. Before this you should know that QM has both deterministic and nondeterministic models.

Kevin: Thomas, you are one of the many people who have been wrongly claiming that there are non-causal quantum events. QM, as with everything else, is in fact fully causal, as Franz Heymann says.

Well, I am glad that someone like Heymann does the thinking for you now. It must be convenient to rely on someone who sounds authoritative, given that you know nothing about the topic. Now you only need to learn how to quote in appropriate context. Alternatively, you can of course familiarize yourself with QM and try to understand what it's all about. While you're at it please also try to understand the difference between determinism and causality. But I guess that is asking too much of you.

Causality is not a physical magnitude. It is an interpretative scheme. Whether you "see" causality or not depends on your conceptual approach. Let me make this easy for you. You are probably familiar with the icon of chaos theory, the butterfly effect. A few decades ago it was popular to think that a butterfly can cause a thunderstorm. According to nonlinear dynamics, the butterfly provides a small kinetic input that causes a large possibly destructive effect. Yet, this illustration is unrealistic. Kinetic inputs at the scale of a butterfly wing's flap are more likely to cancel each other out, while a storm is more likely to be caused by the confluence of a multitude of inputs and amplifying conditions. There are so many local phenomena contributing to the weather that you would have a hard time to pointing out a single one as a cause. You can point out causes only at a very large scale. For example you could say that a thunderstorm is caused by a depression. But what caused the depression? What caused that which caused the depression? The weather is a great example of something fully deterministic, yet not readily explicable in causal terms. There are simply no interpretative causal schemes at hand that "explain" the weather.

Now to quantum effects. What causes an electron quantum jump? What causes a Geiger counter to click? Can you answer these questions causally? Of course you can. An electron jumps under the influence of energy. A Geiger counter clicks because of particle decay. However, the problem is physicists cannot predict the spacetime localities of these phenomena.

What concerns nondeterminism in QM, this is basically a mathematical model that describes observations at the quantum level. The following comment from Roger Penrose hopefully sheds some light onto the ND issue:

"Regarding as describing the 'reality' of the world, we have none of this indeterminism that is supposed to be a feature inherent in quantum theory -- so long as is governed by the deterministic Schroedinger evolution. Let us call this the evolution process  $U$ . However, when we 'make a measurement', magnifying quantum effects to the classical level, we change the rules. Now we do not use  $U$ , but instead adopt the completely different procedure, which I refer to as  $R$ , of forming the squared moduli of quantum amplitudes to obtain classical probabilities! It is the procedure  $R$ , and only  $R$ , that introduces uncertainties and probabilities into quantum theory... "The descriptions of quantum theory appear to apply sensibly (usefully?) only at the so-called quantum level - of molecules, atoms, or subatomic particles, but also at larger dimensions, so long as energy differences between alternative possibilities remain very small. At the quantum level, we must treat such 'alternatives' as things that can coexist, in a kind of complex-number-weighted superposition. The complex numbers that are used as weightings are called probability amplitudes. Each different totality of complex-weighted alternatives defines a different quantum state, and any quantum system must be described by such a quantum state. Often, as is most clearly the case with the example of spin, there is nothing to say which are to be the 'actual' alternatives composing a quantum state and which are to be just 'combinations' of alternatives. In any case, so long as the system remains at the quantum level, the quantum state evolves in a completely deterministic way. This deterministic evolution is the process  $U$ , governed by the important Schroedinger Equation. "When the effects of different quantum alternatives become magnified to the classical level, so that difference between alternatives are large enough that we might directly perceive them, then such complex-weighted superpositions seem no longer to persist. Instead, the squares of the moduli of the complex amplitudes must be formed (i.e., their squared distances from the origin in the complex plane taken), and these real numbers now play a new role as actual probabilities for the alternatives in question. Only one of the alternatives survives into the actuality of physical experience, according the the process  $R$  (called reduction of the state-vector or collapse of the wavefunction; completely different from  $U$ ). It is here, and only here, that the non-determinism of quantum theory makes its entry.... "The deterministic process  $U$  seems to be the part of quantum theory of main concern to working physicists; yet philosophers are more intrigued by the non-deterministic  $R$ . Whether we regard  $R$  as simply a change in the 'knowledge' available about a system [Bohr], or whether we take it (as I do) to be something 'real', we are indeed provided with two completely  $U$  different mathematical ways in which the state-vector of a physical system is described as changing with time. For  $U$  is totally deterministic, whereas  $R$  is a probabilistic law;  $U$  maintains quantum complex superposition, but  $R$  grossly violates it;  $U$  acts in a continuous way, but  $R$  is blatantly discontinuous. According to the standard procedures of quantum mechanics there is no implication that there can be any way to 'deduce'  $R$  as a complicated instance of  $U$ . It is simply a  $U$  different procedure from  $U$ , providing the other 'half' of the interpretation of the quantum formalism. All the non-determinism of the theory comes from  $R$  and not from  $U$ . Both  $U$  and  $R$  are needed for all the marvelous agreements that quantum theory has with observational facts."

David: I just got tired of fighting false battles with people such as yourself and Natyryl, who keep spouting antiquated misunderstandings of QM gleaned from popular science books.

Look David, you know nothing about physics. There is no point for you in fighting any battle at all. I recommended you to delete the QM references from your book and that is well-meant advice. I am not a physicist, but my understanding of physics is greater than yours. I studied computer science and electrical engineering. That gives me the advantage of understanding the math involved in QM. If you get to my point of understanding, I am willing to debate this with you. Until then please apply Wittgenstein.

Thomas

Edited by: Thomas Knierim at: 2/24/04 1:37 pm

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 611
(2/24/04 1:35 pm)
Reply

Re: Causality And Non-Determinism

---

You are probably familiar with the icon of chaos theory, the butterfly effect. A few decades ago it was popular to think that a butterfly can cause a thunderstorm. According to nonlinear dynamics, the butterfly provides a small kinetic input that causes a large possibly destructive effect. Yet, this illustration is unrealistic.

This is incorrect, it is not unrealistic but only improbable in most circumstances. There are however, circumstances where it will be true.

A harsh word to someone with a knife, may result in them killing someone. The miniscule splitting of an atom can cause an atomic bomb.

It is not so much that a small kinetic input causes a large effect, but that it tips the balance on top of all other direct (and indirect) causes to make an effect occur.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 815
(2/24/04 1:44 pm)
Reply

Re: Causality And Non-Determinism

---

Jimhaz, it is not only improbable but unrealistic, because statistical smoothing occurs before large scale weather effects take form. It is quite different from the situations you described.

Thomas

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2210
(2/24/04 2:21 pm)
Reply

Re: Causality And Non-Determinism

---

Thomas wrote:

Quote:

---

Look David, you know nothing about physics. There is no point for you in fighting any battle at all. I recommended you to delete the QM references from your book and that is well-meant advice. I am not a physicist, but my understanding of physics is greater than yours.

---

But not as great, it would seem, than the people I quoted from those science forums.

There is nothing in my book that contradicts QM. It only contradicts a particular false philosophical interpretation of QM, which, I'm glad to see, is only espoused these days by a minority a quacks.

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 358
(2/24/04 2:26 pm)
Reply

Re: Causality And Non-Determinism

---

Thomas wrote:

Quote:

---

. . . the incredibly naive assumption that determinism is the same as causality.

---

Definition of determinism: in philosophy, theory that all events, including moral choices, are completely determined by previously existing causes that preclude free will and the possibility that humans could have acted otherwise.

Thomas, if you don't think determinism is entirely about causality, then you must be from another planet.

Edited by: ksolway at: 2/24/04 2:35 pm

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 816
(2/24/04 3:16 pm)
Reply

Re: Causality And Non-Determinism

---

David: There is nothing in my book that contradicts QM.

Of course not. You have neither the necessary understanding of the models nor the mathematical apparatus to contradict QM. The allusions to QM in your book are based on a simplistic (incorrect) understanding of physics.

David: It only contradicts a particular false philosophical interpretation of QM, which, I'm glad to see, is only espoused these days by a minority a quacks.

Physicists don't concern themselves much with the philosophical question of causality. Only quack philosophers do. If you understand probabilistic and nondeterministic mathematics then there is no need to grapple with inadequate concepts as you do. The traditional notion of causality doesn't apply anymore to certain prominent models in QM. You need to rethink the causality issue; that's all I am saying. It's a matter of seeing and understanding, or perhaps seeing and wondering.

Kevin: Thomas, if you don't think determinism is entirely about causality, then you must be from another planet.

Kevin, I did not say that determinism is unrelated to causality. I said that these concepts are not to be confused. They are not the same! This is a bit like the argument of circularity being the same as tautology that you brought forward on TPG recently; and it is pretty much for the same reason as David grappling with the causality issue in QM. You don't seem to understand these notions completely, which results in the rather muddle-headed statements you make.

The term 'causality' is generally weaker than 'determinism'. Causality in its most common sense means the presence of covariance of two variables X and Y representing two distinct events, where X is called a cause when it occurs before Y. By contrast, determinism does not imply covariance, because Y is fully determined by X.

Thomas

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1483
(2/24/04 5:29 pm)
Reply

Re: Causality And Non-Determinism

---

Thomas wrote,

Quote:

---

Look David, you know nothing about physics. There is no point for you in fighting any battle at all. I recommended you to delete the QM references from your book and that is well-meant advice. I am not a physicist, but my understanding of physics is greater than yours. I studied computer science and electrical engineering. That gives me the advantage of understanding the math involved in QM.

---

I have a B.S. in computer science as well, Thomas, and have most likely taken basically the same math classes as yourself. There is no antithesis to QM causality in linear algebra, calculus, or discrete mathematics.

Tharan

ksolway

Registered User

Posts: 359

(2/24/04 5:50 pm)

Reply

Re: Causality And Non-Determinism

---

Thomas wrote:

Quote:

---

The term 'causality' is generally weaker than 'determinism'. Causality in its most common sense means the presence of covariance of two variables  $X$  and  $Y$  representing two distinct events, where  $X$  is called a cause when it occurs before  $Y$ . By contrast, determinism does not imply covariance, because  $Y$  is fully determined by  $X$ .

---

Causality is simply the fact that all things have causes.

Determinism is identical with causality in the sense that "the present state of the Universe" ( $Y$ ) is fully determined, and fully caused by, "the past state of the Universe" ( $X$ ).

Causality cannot possibly be weaker than determinism.

For example, we can say that "A house is caused by the materials which it is made of". This is true. But this is not saying that a house is "only" caused by the materials it is made of. The statement is really only saying that "one cause of a house is the materials it is made of".

If you wanted to make an exhaustive statement of what causes a house, you could only say "A house is caused by that which is other than itself".

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 817
(2/24/04 6:57 pm)
Reply

Re: Causality And Non-Determinism

---

Wolf: I have a B.S. in computer science as well, Thomas, and have most likely taken basically the same math classes as yourself. There is no antithesis to QM causality in linear algebra, calculus, or discrete mathematics.

The problem with causality is that it is neither a physical magnitude nor a mathematically defined concept. So whether QM phenomena can be described causally is really arguable. Our common understanding of causality is either that of strict necessity of the consecution (causality ala Hume) which is exemplified in classical mechanics, or that of covariant occurrences of events (the colloquial meaning). IMO, the notion of causality begins to diffuse with probabilistic models, and I see little room for the classical concept in nondeterministic descriptions of nature. Take Feynman's sum-over-history approach, for example, which provides a profound and beautiful illustration of the de Broglie hypothesis and tell me how to factor in clunky causality?

Kevin: Determinism is identical with causality in the sense that "the present state of the Universe" (Y) is fully determined, and fully caused by, "the past state of the Universe" (X). Causality cannot possibly be weaker than determinism.

Kevin, are you saying that a causal system is the same as a deterministic system?

Kevin: If you wanted to make an exhaustive statement of what causes a house, you could only say "A house is caused by that which is other than itself".

Ah yes, of course. According to the rule you've just provided a house is caused (among other things) by your grandmother's cookie jar and by the Andromeda galaxy. Now, that makes sense!

Thomas

Edited by: Thomas Knierim at: 2/24/04 7:02 pm

ksolway

Registered User

Posts: 360

(2/24/04 10:47 pm)

Reply

Re: Causality And Non-Determinism

---

Thomas wrote:

Quote:

---

. . . tell me how to factor in clunky causality?

---

You factor it in if it works, and you don't factor it in if it is too difficult.

But whether you factor in causality or not doesn't undermine causality itself (ie, the fact that things have causes)

Quote:

---

Kevin: Determinism is identical with causality in the sense that "the present state of the Universe" (Y) is fully determined, and fully caused by, "the past state of the Universe" (X). Causality cannot possibly be weaker than determinism.

T: Kevin, are you saying that a causal system is the same as a deterministic system?

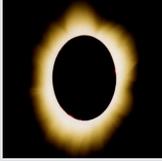

---

There is only one true system, and that is the Universe itself (the Totality). If you isolate a part of that system, then you are looking at something false.

For example, let's say you were to take a house, on its own, in isolation, as a "system", and ask "what caused the house". In this case all the important causes, like the builder of the house, are outside of the system, so the house will appear to be entirely without cause!

Of course it is sometimes useful to isolate things in order that we can deal with them, but in relation to causality we should always keep in mind that there is only ever one true system, which is the Universe (the Totality).

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2403
(2/25/04 12:39 am)
Reply

Re: Causality And Non-Determinism

---

Quote:

---

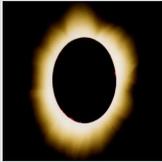

There is only one true system, and that is the Universe itself (the Totality). If you isolate a part of that system, then you are looking at something false.

---

First sentence true. Second sentence false.

Surely I don't have to explain this to you do I Kevin?

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2404
(2/25/04 12:44 am)
Reply

Re: Causality And Non-Determinism

---

Oh fuck, I am too generous. The universe is not a system. 25 of feb 2004 suergaz declares the universe not a system. It's not really anything to get upset about. But these words! They conatin too much fate!

N0X23
Registered User
Posts: 83
(2/25/04 1:33 am)
Reply

Re: Causality And Non-Determinism

---

Quote:

---

The universe is not a system. 25 of feb 2004 suergaz declares the universe not a system.

---

Okay, fair 'nuff...What is it then?

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2209

(2/25/04 7:32 am)

Reply

Re: Causality And Non-Determinism

---

Thomas Knierim wrote:

Quote:

---

David: There is nothing in my book that contradicts QM.

Thomas; Of course not. You have neither the necessary understanding of the models nor the mathematical apparatus to contradict QM.

---

Agreed. Ultimate Reality is my focus, not the furtherance of QM.

Quote:

---

The allusions to QM in your book are based on a simplistic (incorrect) understanding of physics.

---

No, they are based on logical concepts of cause and effect.

Quote:

---

David: It only contradicts a particular false philosophical interpretation of QM, which, I'm glad to see, is only espoused these days by a minority of quacks.

Thomas: Physicists don't concern themselves much with the philosophical question of causality.

---

Good to hear.

Quote:

---

Only quack philosophers do.

---

You're concerning yourself with it, Thomas.

Quote:

---

If you understand probabilistic and nondeterministic mathematics then there is no need to grapple with inadequate concepts as you do.

---

These "inadequate" concepts help stimulate the mind into enlightenment.

Quote:

---

The traditional notion of causality doesn't apply anymore to certain prominent models in QM.

---

They are models that make the irrational, unfounded assumption that QM is a complete theory and therefore have no credibility in my eyes.

Thomas Knierim

Registered User

Posts: 818

(2/25/04 12:49 pm)

Reply

Re: Causality And Non-Determinism

---

Kevin: But whether you factor in causality or not doesn't undermine causality itself (ie, the fact that things have causes).

Okay, things have causes. But what does that mean? The vocabulary is too imprecise for my taste. Would it be possible to define the words 'cause' and 'thing' in this context?

Kevin: For example, let's say you were to take a house, on its own, in isolation, as a "system", and ask "what caused the house". In this case all the important causes, like the builder of the house, are outside of the system, so the house will appear to be entirely without cause!

Obviously, not all causes of the house are outside of the system. The construction materials, for example, which should be important material causes contributing to the house, are still part of it.

Previously you stated that everything that is not the house is a cause of the house. This would make (among other things) the Andromeda galaxy one of the causes of the house. Are you still upholding that point of view?

David: You're concerning yourself with it [causality], Thomas.

Only as a reaction to your insistence. You are the determinist. You have elevated causality to a cosmic principle; therefore you are the quack causalist.

David: These "inadequate" concepts help stimulate the mind into enlightenment.

I see that differently. The use of inadequate concepts stimulates misunderstandings and illusions. Causality is one of these concepts. It is in need of analysis, since causal structures come in many shapes and varieties. To think of causality as a monolithic property of the universe means to ignore the last five hundred years of science and philosophy. It puts you squarely back into the ancient level of understanding.

Thomas

Edited by: Thomas Knierim at: 2/25/04 12:51 pm

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2415

(2/25/04 2:18 pm)

Reply

Re: Causality And Non-Determinism

---

Quote:

---

Okay, fair 'nuff...What is it then?

---

It is a thing. Don't worry, I do have an imagination, my definition of it is within everything ever after the recognition of its not being a system. A system implies organisation of some kind, which is why of course the universe is not. Not to say that it is disorganised, but I'm sure you understand. (:D)

ksolway

Registered User

Posts: 361

(2/25/04 4:35 pm)

Reply

Re: Causality And Non-Determinism

---

Quote:

---

Okay, things have causes. But what does that mean? The vocabulary is too imprecise for my taste. Would it be possible to define the words 'cause' and 'thing' in this context?

---

We have defined these things many times before. A "thing" is whatever appears to exist, and a "cause" is whatever is necessary for a particular thing to come into existence.

Quote:

---

Previously you stated that everything that is not the house is a cause of the house. This would make (among other things) the Andromeda galaxy one of the causes of the house. Are you still upholding that point of view?

---

The Andromeda galaxy is a part of the thing that is not the house, and that thing (that contains the Andromeda galaxy) is the cause of the house.

On a finer scale, we don't really know, and can never truly know what has caused the house (ie, apart from "not the house"). Let's say we presume that a human builder has built the house. Now it might be the case that all life on this planet was seeded by genetic material transported on a meteor which originated in the Andromeda galaxy. Then it would seem that the Andromeda galaxy had a part to play that might be of some interest to us.

Or the person who built it might come from the Andromeda galaxy for that matter. Or the house may have been built by robots, who look like humans, who are controlled by beings in the Andromeda galaxy.

We can't rule any of these things out.

Quote:

---

The use of inadequate concepts stimulates misunderstandings and illusions.

---

There is nothing inadequate about the concept of causality. It would only be "inadequate" if you tried to use incorrect concepts of causality, or if you tried to use them in a manner which is not appropriate - which would mean that you had the wrong concepts to begin with.

Quote:

---

To think of causality as a monolithic property of the universe means to ignore the last five hundred years of science and philosophy.

---

Science and academic philosophy have never dealt with causality at all. This is because both of those areas are empirical/physical/materialist in nature, so causality is not of any concern to them. When academic philosophy tries to deal with causality, it redefines causality in a materialist way which it can make sense of, and which avoids having to tackle causality, in the same way that science does.

(Edited for spelling)

Edited by: ksolway at: 2/25/04 11:51 pm

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 819
(2/25/04 9:54 pm)
Reply

Re: Causality And Non-Determinism

---

Kevin: We have defined these things many times before. A "thing" is whatever appears to exist, and a "cause" is whatever is necessary for a particular thing to come into existence.

Oh well, I shouldn't have asked. If a cause is defined to be necessary for a thing to come into existence then there are no uncaused things. Of course. The whole thing becomes a silly word game. I could continue to ask what you mean with "appears to exist" since this category is somehow greater than that which "really exists" (the former contains Godzilla and the latter doesn't), but I won't even bother.

Kevin: Now it might be the case that all life on this planet was seeded by genetic material transported on a meteor which originated in the Andromeda galaxy.

Extragalactic meteors? The Andromeda galaxy is 2.9 lightyears away and it used to be farther. Did you consider that?

Kevin: Or the person who built it might come from the Andromeda galaxy for that matter. Or the house may have been built by robots, who look like humans, who are controlled by beings in the Andromeda galaxy.

Yes, that sounds perfectly convincing. ;-) It is surprising how far you're willing to walk off into fantasy land to make a point.

Kevin: Science and academic philosophy have never dealt with causality at all.

(insert hearty laughter) You can fill a shelf with academic literature about causality. Here are just some titles:

"An Enquiry Concerning Human Understanding" by David Hume

"Critique Of Pure Reason" by Immanuel Kant

"Causality and Chance in Modern Physics" by David Bohm, Louis De Broglie

"The Universe in a Nutshell" by Stephen Hawking

"Causality : Models, Reasoning, and Inference" by Judea Pearl

"The Child's Conception of Physical Causality" by Jean Piaget

"Causality in Linguistic Theory" by Esa Itkonen

"Causality and Complexity" by Hannu Nurmi

"Counterfactuals" by D. Lewis

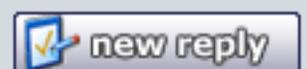

"Causation and Counterfactuals" by Collins, J., Hall, E., and Paul, L.

"Causal Asymmetries" by D. Hausman

Can we discuss causal structures or do you insist on the above milkmaid definition?

Thomas

Edited by: Thomas Knierim at: 2/25/04 10:01 pm

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Causality And Non-Determinism

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
ksolway Registered User Posts: 362 (2/25/04 10:38 pm) Reply 	Re: Causality And Non-Determinism <hr/> Thomas wrote: Quote: <hr/> Kevin: We have defined these things many times before. A "thing" is whatever appears to exist, and a "cause" is whatever is necessary for a particular thing to come into existence. T: If a cause is defined to be necessary for a thing to come into existence then there are no uncaused things. <hr/> No, my definition was "a cause is whatever is necessary for a particular thing to come into existence". This is an obvious, commonsense definition. There is no other sensible definition of the word "cause". Now, you can of course reason that there must be some necessary conditions for a thing to exist, and then you will know that there are no uncaused things. Quote:

---

Extragalactic meteors? The Andromeda galaxy is 2.9 lightyears away and it used to be farther. Did you consider that?

---

It wouldn't matter if the galaxy was a hundred thousand lightyears away. I was speaking of possibilities. If life on earth was indeed seeded from the Andromeda galaxy in this way (and there's no evidence that it was that I know of) then what would be the chances that it was? 100% chance.

Quote:

---

Yes, that sounds perfectly convincing. ;-) It is surprising how far you're willing to walk off into fantasy land to make a point.

---

What's surprising is how difficult you find it to "think outside the box". Obviously I wasn't trying to be convincing, but was explaining what is possible, and how little we know, or can ever know. If you can't understand that, I can't help you.

Quote:

---

Kevin: Science and academic philosophy have never dealt with causality at all.

T: (insert hearty laughter) You can fill a shelf with academic literature about causality. Here are just some titles:

---

I explained the reason why academic philosophy (which you listed) has failed to deal with causality, but it went over your head again.

Quote:

---

Can we discuss causal structures

---

Causal structures are a figment of your imagination.

Weluvducsoha
Registered User
Posts: 5
(2/26/04 12:53 pm)
Reply

Evil Penguins

---

QM may be deterministic, but a much more important and seemingly ignored point is that by Heisenburg's uncertainty principle, even if the universe is deterministic, we can never have enough information to determine it. Furthermore, I'm pretty sure that a lot of things in QM are still just statistical tables, prompting Einstein to declare "G-d does not play dice with the universe" He didn't like QM. Neither do most of the scientist today, but the live with it because it has an uncanny ability to return accurate results, with the unfortunate aspect of returning infinities and wormholes and the destruction of the universe occasionally.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 820
(2/26/04 12:55 pm)
Reply

Re: Causality And Non-Determinism

---

Kevin: No, my definition was "a cause is whatever is necessary for a particular thing to come into existence". This is an obvious, commonsense definition. There is no other sensible definition of the word "cause".

Of course there are other commonsense definitions of the word "cause". Dictionary.com comes up with six of them and yours is not even in there:

- 1a. The producer of an effect, result, or consequence.
- 1b. The one, such as a person, event, or condition, that is responsible for an action or result.
2. A basis for an action or response; a reason: The doctor's report gave no cause for alarm.
3. A goal or principle served with dedication and zeal: "the cause of freedom versus tyranny" (Hannah Arendt).
4. The interests of a person or group engaged in a struggle: "The cause of America is in great measure the cause of all mankind" (Thomas Paine).
5. Law. A ground for legal action. A lawsuit.
6. A subject under debate or discussion.

Kevin: Now, you can of course reason that there must be some necessary conditions for a thing to exist, and then you will know that there are no uncaused things.

This is so because the conclusion (that there are no uncaused things) follows directly from your premise (a cause is that which is necessary for a thing to exist). It is just another example of circular reasoning. Basically, you're playing word games and have somehow convinced yourself that this is philosophy.

Kevin: What's surprising is how difficult you find it to "think outside the box".

Kevin, you weren't not thinking "outside the box". You were quite simply fantasizing. There is a big difference between the two and if you insist, I will gladly itemize the epistemic characteristics of each. Most importantly, you have to use reason to form a coherent "out of the box" argument. The idea of remote influence from the Andromeda galaxy can be rationally dismissed, because it violates relativity and is therefore physically impossible. In addition, meteorites commonly originate in our solar system, and occasionally in other systems, but not in other galaxies. Probably you didn't know that. This is what distinguishes an "out of the box" theory from an ignorant fantasy.

Kevin: I explained the reason why academic philosophy (which you listed) has failed to deal with causality, but it went over your head again.

Where exactly did you explain this? I have seen nothing to that effect.

Thomas

Rairun
Registered User
Posts: 201
(2/26/04 1:03 pm)
Reply

...

---

Isn't there a gravity influence though? I forgot all my highschool physics formulas, but I remember that they implied that no matter how far two objects are, there's still a tiny gravitational attraction between them.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 822
(2/26/04 2:04 pm)
Reply

Re: ...

---

Rairun: Isn't there a gravity influence though? I forgot all my highschool physics formulas, but I remember that they implied that no matter how far two objects are, there's still a tiny gravitational attraction between them.

Gravity is inverse quadratic, hence the influence can be neglected for really large distances / small masses. But, the Andromeda galaxy is close enough. In fact, it is so close that the gravitational attraction causes the Milky Way and Andromeda to speed towards each other and they will collide some day in the future.

Thomas

Edited by: Thomas Knierim at: 2/26/04 2:08 pm

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 363
(2/26/04 2:06 pm)
Reply

Re: Causality And Non-Determinism

---

Thomas wrote:

Quote:

---

Kevin: No, my definition was "a cause is whatever is necessary for a particular thing to come into existence". This is an obvious, commonsense definition. There is no other sensible definition of the word "cause".

T: Of course there are other commonsense definitions of the word "cause". Dictionary.com comes up with six of them and yours is not even in there:

1a. The producer of an effect, result, or consequence.

---

As what I have defined as a cause is a producer of an effect, result, or consequence, it would fall within that first one.

Quote:

---

Kevin: Now, you can of course reason that there must be some necessary conditions for a thing to exist, and then you will know that there are no uncaused things.

T: This is so because the conclusion (that there are no uncaused things) follows directly from your premise (a cause is that which is necessary for a thing to exist).

---

It doesn't follow, because the definition of a cause "that which is necessary for a thing to exist", doesn't in itself imply that there is anything necessary for a thing to exist. That there is something necessary for a thing to exist requires further reasoning.

Quote:

---

Kevin: What's surprising is how difficult you find it to "think outside the box".

T: The idea of remote influence from the Andromeda galaxy can be rationally dismissed

---

That's your problem. Based on virtually no data whatsoever you are willing to dismiss outright things about which you know virtually nothing.

What if the meteor was transported here from the Andromeda galaxy on an alien vessel, and projected onto our planet to make it look like a regular meteorite?

Thomas in all his wisdom would have rejected the possibility outright, and would be 100% wrong. This would be because of your inability to "think outside the box".

Quote:

---

. . . meteorites commonly originate in our solar system, and occasionally in other systems, but not in other galaxies.

---

You have no idea what you're talking about. What you mean is that you presume no meteorites originate in other galaxies, based on nothing but probabilities/numbers. What is your knowledge of the traffic of spaceships between our galaxy and the Andromeda galaxy? Zilch. Just the same as mine. So don't pretend otherwise.

As you may have gathered by now, I'm not the slightest bit interested in "commonly" or "numbers of votes" or "probabilities". All I'm interested in is truth.

It doesn't matter whether there is any intelligent life anywhere in the Universe, I'm only illustrating the huge failing of your manner of thinking.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 823
(2/26/04 3:53 pm)
Reply

Re: Causality And Non-Determinism

---

Kevin: It doesn't follow, because the definition of a cause "that which is necessary for a thing to exist", doesn't in itself imply that there is anything necessary for a thing to exist.

The actual existence of causes is of no consequence for the argument structure. If you say that a cause is necessary for a thing then there are no things without a cause, and things only exist if causes exist. This follows directly from the definition and it doesn't matter whether things do actually exist or not. It is a glaring example of circular reason and a most telling illustration of your profound ignorance of logic. The same lack of understanding was demonstrated by you on many previous occasions. I won't take any offense in ignorance, Kevin. It is okay not to know. Nobody can blame you for that. However, your attitude goes beyond mere ignorance. It is an unwillingness to learn and to deal with the matters at hand in a rational fashion. It is a stubborn and arrogant resistance to real insight, for which there exists a stronger term than ignorance.

Kevin: What if the meteor was transported here from the Andromeda galaxy on an alien vessel, and projected onto our planet to make it look like a regular meteorite?

Okay. Are you saying that the aliens have lifespans of a couple of million years, or more likely hundreds of million years, or did they develop cryogenics or a superluminal transportation mechanism? Doesn't that sound a bit far-fetched? Are far-fetched arguments rational? Wouldn't it be more rational to assume something more evident?

There is no reason to assume that the Andromeda galaxy affects life on Earth. Your theory is possible but irrational. It is irrational, because it requires conditions for which there is no evidence at all, not even the tiniest hint of it. The probability of matter exchange between the Andromeda galaxy and Earth is so small that the theory may be rejected on the face of it.

Kevin: What you mean is that you presume no meteorites originate in other galaxies, based on nothing but probabilities/numbers.

Yes, and my presumption is -in contrast to yours- based on more than a lucky guess. For example, I can object that a meteor cannot escape the gravitational pull of its home system and galaxy. I can object that it would not survive collisions on such an incredible distance. Most importantly, I can object that a meteor would not be able to cover such a distance in the first place, at least not during the lifetime of Earth. Do you have answers to these objections?

Kevin: All I'm interested in is truth.

In this case you might want to abandon fantasies.

Thomas

Edited by: Thomas Knierim at: 2/26/04 4:00 pm

ksolway

Registered User

Posts: 364

(2/26/04 5:49 pm)

Reply

Re: Causality And Non-Determinism

---

Thomas wrote:

Quote:

---

Kevin: It doesn't follow, because the definition of a cause "that which is necessary for a thing to exist", doesn't in itself imply that there is anything necessary for a thing to exist.

Thomas: If you say that a cause is necessary for a thing then there are no things without a cause

---

You are simply misreading the definition. The definition I gave for a cause doesn't stipulate that there are any causes, or that anything is necessary for the existence of anything. It is only saying that if there is anything necessary for the existence of a particular thing, then that necessary thing would, by definition, be a cause.

Quote:

---

Kevin: What if the meteor was transported here from the Andromeda galaxy on an alien vessel, and projected onto our planet to make it look like a regular meteorite?

Okay. Are you saying that the aliens have lifespans of a couple of million years

---

It doesn't matter if they live a trillion years, or if the meteor got here through any of a billion other means. Can't you see the point I am making? It is a point of theory, not of empirical science.

Quote:

---

Doesn't that sound a bit far-fetched? Are far-fetched arguments rational?

---

That's just the point. It doesn't matter how far fetched something seems to us in our incredibly limited knowledge. That "far fetched" thing might be true, in which case it wouldn't be far fetched at all.

If you can understand this point, then you will understand why academic philosophy, and empirical science, does not deal with causality. If you fail to understand it, then you won't.

Quote:

---

Wouldn't it be more rational to assume something more evident?

---

Not for the point I am making.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 819
(2/26/04 7:23 pm)
Reply

Re: Causality And Non-Determinism

Kevin: You are simply misreading the definition. The definition I gave for a cause doesn't stipulate that there are any causes, or that anything is necessary for the existence of anything. It is only saying that if there is anything necessary for the existence of a particular thing, then that necessary thing would, by definition, be a cause.

So, you like word games, Kevin? Unfortunately there is no way out for you here. You're already checkmate. I am not misreading anything, in fact, that imputation is somewhat of an insult. You previously defined the word cause verbatim as: (1) "a cause is whatever is necessary for a particular thing to come into existence." Now, compare this to your latest statement which says: (2) "if there is anything necessary for the existence of a particular thing, then that necessary thing would, by definition, be a cause". Obviously, these two definitions differ quite dramatically. You have manipulated the second one in an attempt to evade the circularity resulting from the argument based on the first phrase.

From the first definition it follows directly that if a thing exists, then that thing must have a cause. That's what the word 'necessity' means. The second (manipulated) definition relativizes necessity by using the conditional clause "if". With this you say that necessity either exists or it doesn't. Am I to believe then that things can exist without causes then? Wasn't that what you intended to deny in the first place? You are a jester!

Kevin: That's just the point. It doesn't matter how far fetched something seems to us in our incredibly limited knowledge. That "far fetched" thing might be true, in which case it wouldn't be far fetched at all.

Yes, far-fetched theories might occasionally work out, but usually they don't. In most cases, the evident, obvious, and immediate conclusions are the best candidates for verisimilitude, or truth. In the absence of empiric corroboration or falsification of any of a number of competing theories, the theory which explains phenomena with the minimum number of unproven assumptions/axioms is the most rational theory. Or do you think otherwise?

Kevin: If you can understand this point, then you will understand why academic philosophy, and empirical science, does not deal with causality. If you fail to understand it, then you won't.

What the heck does causality have to do with aliens from the Andromeda galaxy? Why can't you just give it to me straight? Please explain why philosophy and science have nothing meaningful to say about causality, although there are tons of insightful books about the topic, which you obviously haven't read. If you can make a convincing argument, I am certainly open to hearing it.

Thomas

ksolway

Registered User

Posts: 365

(2/26/04 8:53 pm)

Reply

Re: Causality And Non-Determinism

---

Thomas wrote:

Quote:

---

1. "a 'cause' is whatever is necessary for a particular thing to come into existence."

2. "if there is anything necessary for the existence of a particular thing, then that necessary thing would, by definition, be a cause"

Obviously, these two definitions differ quite dramatically.

---

They are obviously the same. But I can see how you interpreted the first one to mean something different - although it wasn't sensible for you to do so, as in doing so you arrive at pointless statement.

Quote:

---

Kevin: That's just the point. It doesn't matter how far fetched something seems to us in our incredibly limited knowledge. That "far fetched" thing might be true, in which case it wouldn't be far fetched at all.

T: Yes, far-fetched theories might occasionally work out, but usually they don't.

---

As I keep saying, "usually" is irrelevant. If you can't see this, I can't force you to do so.

Quote:

---

In most cases, the evident, obvious, and immediate conclusions are the best candidates for verisimilitude, or truth.

---

To repeat, I am speaking of philosophic truths, not material, empirical truths. To philosophy "most cases", and "usually", etc, is irrelevant.

Quote:

---

In the absence of empiric corroboration or falsification . . .

---

Such things are irrelevant to philosophic truths.

Quote:

---

If you can make a convincing argument, I am certainly open to hearing it.

---

As you still haven't any idea what I'm talking about, I don't think it would be worth the effort. I believe your way of thinking is too materialistic/empirical. You don't have a talent for theoretical thinking.

N0X23

Registered User

Posts: 87

(2/27/04 4:36 am)

Reply

Re: Causality And Non-Determinism

---

Quote:

---

“this being so, that is; this not being so, that is not.”

paticcasamuppada

---

Causality is appropriate when applied to the process of birth, life and death, but it is inappropriate when presented as a philosophical theory of the evolution of the world and the Universe.

It is an extremely accurate and helpful tool when dealing with the cause and effect of rebirth and suffering, but it in no way successfully explains the riddle of an absolute origin of life.

Simply because man desires a TOE, doesn't necessarily mean there is one, or more to the point, a need for one.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2216

(2/27/04 9:13 am)

Reply

Re: Causality And Non-Determinism

---

NOX wrote:

Quote:

---

Causality is appropriate when applied to the process of birth, life and death, but it is inappropriate when presented as a philosophical theory of the evolution of the world and the Universe.

---

I personally can't think of anything more appropriate. It is the simplest possible explanation of all creation. Nothing can be more fundamental than it.

Quote:

---

It is an extremely accurate and helpful tool when dealing with the cause and effect of rebirth and suffering, but it in no way successfully explains the riddle of an absolute origin of life.

---

It causally evolved out of the primordial soup, didn't it? Like clouds evolving out of the atmospheric conditions in the sky .....

I suspect that you treat "life" as though it were fundamentally different to everything else in the Universe, which signals to me there is a very strong attachment present.

Quote:

---

Simply because man desires a TOE, doesn't necessarily mean there is one, or more to the point, a need for one.

---

Fortunately (or unfortunately, depending on how you look at it), the TOE exists and is knowable by the human mind.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 820
(2/27/04 1:38 pm)
Reply

Re: Causality And Non-Determinism

---

1. "a 'cause' is whatever is necessary for a particular thing to come into existence."
2. "if there is anything necessary for the existence of a particular thing, then that necessary thing would, by definition, be a cause"

Kevin: They are obviously the same.

For Pete's sake, they are not! The first sentence establishes a relationship of unidirectional necessity between the objects 'cause' and 'thing', and the second sentence is a conditional structure that embodies an implication derived from the first sentence. The fact that the deduction is logically valid does not mean that the sentences express the same meaning. They are not semantically equivalent. The contradiction (or respectively its apparent dissolution) results from this semantic ambiguity. In particular, the second statement relativizes the universality of the predicate suggested by the first sentence.

It is a crafty specimen, a nice illustration of your general work method. You are an equivocator and you like to manipulate words and play games with them. The richness and ambiguity of natural language allows you to switch meanings while maintaining rudimentary logical cohesiveness. If you can't maintain logic cohesiveness you appeal to semantics and if you can't maintain semantic cohesiveness you appeal to logic. That's also explains why you never ventured into mathematics or formal logic. To argue with mathematical precision would require you to abandon the false play; and you don't really want to do that.

I might suffer fools gladly, but I don't suffer dishonesty gladly. Your method of reasoning is based on linguistic tricks rather than rigorous enquiry. You are not a truth-seeker. Your words are geared towards the goal of establishing linguistic unassailability and that is exactly what this whole enlightenment thing is about. You are not interested in seeking truth; you are interested in producing factoids and word games to bolster your enlightenment claim.

Kevin: Such things [falsification and corroboration, TK] are irrelevant to philosophic truths.

Corroboration and falsification are not irrelevant at all to truth finding and neither is the investigation of causal structures. The scientific and mathematical methods would require you to give up sophistry and do some real thinking, the sort of thinking that might question your enlightened butt. However, it seems that this is not what you want. You want to maintain the illusion, right? Therefore, mathematics and science don't appeal to you. You can keep going like that if it floats your boat, but please don't call it "philosophic truths". That is canting and deprecatory to real philosophy.

Thomas

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 366
(2/27/04 2:53 pm)
Reply

Re: Causality And Non-Determinism

---

Quote:

---

K: 1. "a 'cause' is whatever is necessary for a particular thing to come into existence."

T: The first sentence establishes a relationship of unidirectional necessity between the objects 'cause' and 'thing'

---

Yet it does not state, in itself, that anything is necessary for a thing to come into existence - it only states that whatever is necessary, is a "cause".

Quote:

---

The richness and ambiguity of natural language allows you to switch meanings

---

It is you who is switching the meanings.

Quote:

---

Kevin: Such things are irrelevant to philosophic truths.

T: [falsification and corroboration, TK]

---

Scientific falsification and corroboration are irrelevant to philosophy.

Pure mathematics is a form of pure logic, so it would fall within the bounds of philosophy, if it dealt with philosophical subject material.

Lbartoli
Registered User
Posts: 370
(2/28/04 1:58 am)
Reply

observations

---

Just some observations:

First I must applaud Kevin Solway for trying so hard to make his point understood. His patience is truly amazing. I normally just sit back and on occasion blurt out a "why do you guys keep trying to explain these things to him?, can't you see that he will never get it?", at which point i reckon poor Thomas gets a bit teed but soon after figure's 'it's just stupid Leo so why should i let anything he blurts bother me'. But really, it does appear to me that Kevin and David still hold out hope that Thomas will some day 'get it', but what will that entail?, a huge reversal, and would that serve any useful purpose? I doubt it, because i think if Thomas could ever see himself through their eyes, through my eyes, i'm not sure he could withstand it, i dont think he would survive the experience let alone the transformation that would enitivably follow. I say this only to make the point ive made before, and that is...we are obliged to use careful judgment as to who we do and who we dont share certain things, truths, with. There is no point in destroying the tranquility of anothers life if that effort is likely to amount to destroying their tranquility and nothing more. Not that this is necessarily the case with our long-time debater friend Thomas, but it certainly seems so. Of course, there is the business of others possibly benefiting from these exchanges, but the way the responses are coming clearly their directed and intended to influence a particular individual.

Changing gears here, one thing that caught my eye is Thomas's comment about "irrational theory" whereas i would normally consider a person either rational or irrational. In this case what i think is the more appropriate word is improbable, but an improbable theory is not irrational.

well, sorry about the spelling, this place is closing so ive got to say bye bye.

Leo

N0X23

Registered User

Posts: 89

(2/28/04 4:26 pm)

Reply

Re: observations

---

Quote:

---

I personally can't think of anything more appropriate.

---

Thank you for being honest.

---

Quote:

---

It is the simplest possible explanation of all creation.

---

Yes, it is simple and only a possibility.

Quote:

---

Nothing can be more fundamental than it.

---

That you can think of, of course ;)

Quote:

---

It causally evolved out of the primordial soup, didn't it?

---

To be honest with you, I can't say, I wasn't there.

Quote:

---

I suspect that you treat "life" as though it were fundamentally different to everything else in the Universe, which signals to me there is a very strong attachment present.

---

And since Enlightenment is the freedom from attachments/delusions, am I to assume...since you claim to be enlightened and therefore free from attachments... believe that there is no fundamental difference between "Life" and the Universe?

Quote:

---

Fortunately (or unfortunately, depending on how you look at it), the TOE exists and is knowable by the human mind.

---

More accurately, what you believe to be the TOE, exists in your mind, due to the fact that you can not think of any other explanation.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2230

(2/28/04 4:54 pm)

Reply

Re: observations

---

Nox wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: Nothing can be more fundamental than [cause and effect].

NOX: That you can think of , of course ;)

---

This statement alone shows that you don't understand what cause and effect is.

Cause and effect is not understood until one sees that there is no room in the Universe for anything else.

Quote:

---

DQ: I suspect that you treat "life" as though it were fundamentally different to everything else in the Universe, which signals to me there is a very strong attachment present.

NOX: And since Enlightenment is the freedom from attachments/delusions, am I to assume...since you claim to be enlightened and therefore free from attachments... believe that there is no fundamental difference between "Life" and the Universe?

---

Naturally. The boundary between life and non-life is an illusion. We are no more "alive" than a rock is "dead".

N0X23

Registered User

Posts: 91

(2/28/04 5:33 pm)

Reply

Re: observations

---

Quote:

---

Cause and effect is not understood until one sees that there is no room in the Universe for anything else.

---

Quote:

---

There is no universe! There are only things which draw their existence from other things, ad infinitum.

---

Could you clarify your statement's please?

Quote:

---

Naturally. The boundary between life and non-life is an illusion.

---

So is there a boundary or distinction between illusion and Reality?

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2232

(2/29/04 7:56 am)

Reply

Re: observations

Nox wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: There is no universe! There are only things which draw their existence from other things, ad infinitum.

NOX: Could you clarify your statement's please?

---

Reality is composed of things drawing their existence from other things, with these other things drawing their existence from yet other things, and so on, forever. There is no fundamental platform or bottom line to Reality. There is only infinity.

This is why it is said that Reality isn't a thing and has never come into existence. Unborn and uncreated, as the Buddha used to say.

Quote:

---

DQ: The boundary between life and non-life is an illusion.

NOX: So is there a boundary or distinction between illusion and Reality?

---

That is a tricky question to answer because there are many deluded people who claim to believe that all is Reality and yet unknowingly continue make the distinction between illusion and Reality. In other words, their minds are still spellbound by the illusory distinction between illusion and Reality, but they suppress it and foolishly believe they have reached the highest that life has to offer.

For the enlightened person, there is neither illusion nor Reality. He drops those kinds of categories like useless bits of junk and instead splashes around in the freedom of the Void, which is his true nature.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 827
(3/1/04 2:07 pm)
Reply

Re: observations

Leo: I doubt it, because i think if Thomas could ever see himself through their eyes, through my eyes, i'm not sure he could withstand it, i dont think he would survive the experience let alone the transformation that would enitivably follow.

Leo, is that an attempt at hidden meanings? I can't remember that being cryptic was one of your qualities.

Thomas

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

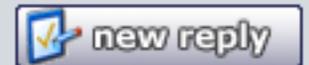

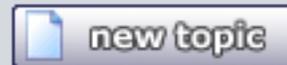

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

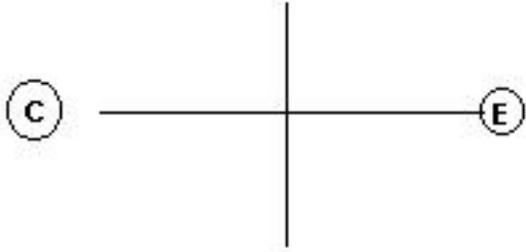

> GENIUS FORUM

> Causality And Non-Determinism

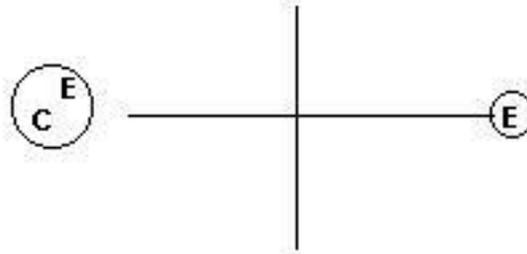

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Canadian Zoetrope  Registered User Posts: 39 (3/24/04 5:12 am) Reply 	On 'Causality' <hr/> Perhaps, you would consider reading Nagarjuna, who proved that no spontaneous generation can exist. He argues that Generation cannot be possible without an object generated. Nothing generates itself because generation as such does not exist. To prove this Nagarjuna poses the question: Before the effect (E) is produced as a function of the cause (C), does the effect (E) already exist withing th cause (C)? Here is a little graphic to demonstrate this point (Please excuse the crudness of MSPaint).  Dividing line between cause and effect. (Time if you will)  Case 1: (E) does not exist in (C)

Dividing line between cause and effect. (Time if you will)

Case 2: (E) Already exists within (C).

Now if we reply (case 1) that the effect (E) does not exist in the cause (C), Nagarjuna demonstrates to us that this case is not possible. Indeed if there is no relation between (C) and (E), if (E) does not exist in (C), it is impossible that (E) should arise from (C). A Chick cannot be born from a table.

However, if we reply that (E) already exists in cause (C), Nagarjuna demonstrates that in this case, (E) has no reason to be generated since it already exists in Cause (C). The relation between an egg and a chick is not a relation of cause and effect; it is of becoming and not generation. The concept of generation is thus rendered absurd.

Interestingly in his analysis, the nature of impermanence, non-self, and emptiness of what we believe to be the object of generation and destruction can be seen.

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

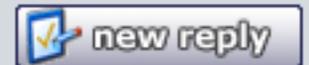

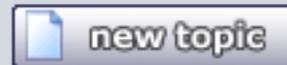

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Celibacy, Monogamy, Polygamy Other?

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Rhett Hamilton Registered User Posts: 124 (11/23/03 11:59 am) Reply   Edit	 Re: Celibacy, Monogamy, Polygamy Other? <hr/> The position of the clitoris corresponds with the position of the male pubic bone. Think about the way savages would have had sex...and you have the answer as to the evolution of the clitoris as it is today. Think of it as more of a stun gun than a pleasure centre. And don't tell me people do it differently now, they are just slightly more refined in their savagery. Rhett
Paul Registered User Posts: 299 (11/23/03 2:10 pm) Reply	 Re: Celibacy, Monogamy, Polygamy Other? <hr/> Quote: <hr/> (...) the evolution of the clitoris as it is today. Think of it as more of a stun gun than a pleasure centre. <hr/> Rhet, you are stunning.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 851
(11/24/03 7:29 am)
Reply

Re: Celibacy, Monogamy, Polygamy, Promiscuous?

---

Quote:

---

Rairun
DEL, what happens when someone is in a polygamously monogamous relationship? (this is a serious question)

---

This is not possible, it's an illusion.
They are mutually exclusive.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 852
(11/24/03 7:39 am)
Reply

Re: Celibacy, Monogamy, Polygamy, Promiscuous?

---

Quote:

---

by the way, DEL, take your sex magick and shove it up your a**. it's an evil thing to use and really screws with people's heads. i've been thru it, and anyone who uses it is evil now in my eyes.

---

Do you think it is possible for this woman not to focus on the anus?

Monogamy, Polygamy or Promiscuity, I wonder if she has the ability to be aware into which one of the 3 categories her "Yay for sex" falls.
Gentlemen, observe carefully.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 853
(11/24/03 7:54 am)
Reply

 Re: ...

---

Quote:

---

Paul
Yes, you did. His majick worked.

---

Woman is powerless to resist true Magick.
Man forms the formless woman. She has no choice but to submit to the superior power if she wants happiness.
Her resistance only makes her inevitable submission more powerfully charged.

cassiopeiae
Registered User
Posts: 202
(11/24/03 10:47 am)
Reply

 Re: ...

---

Dickhead.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 854
(11/24/03 12:39 pm)
Reply

 Re: ...

---

Quote:

---

cassiopeiae
Dickhead.

---

Thank you for the compliment.

Dickhead = PenisMind = PotentThought = VirileConcepts

Gentlemen, see how her mind opens, how her nature and inner most desires are revealed.

This is the Magick.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1045
(11/24/03 12:50 pm)
Reply

 say what?

---

Quote:

---

The position of the clitoris corresponds with the position of the male pubic bone. Think about the way savages would have had sex...and you have the answer as to the evolution of the clitoris as it is today. Think of it as more of a stun gun than a pleasure centre.

---

How would savages have had sex that is any different than today? what has it to do with the evolution of said part? Stun gun??

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1774
(11/24/03 12:56 pm)
Reply

 ----

---

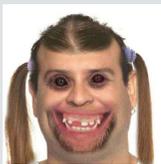

This page doesn't fail to please me! I love you all!

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 396
(11/24/03 1:08 pm)
Reply

 Re: ----

---

Do masculine minded women have bigger clits?
Do some female mammals have clits?
Did women evolve clits due to penis envy? :)

cassiopeiae
Registered User
Posts: 203
(11/24/03 1:22 pm)
Reply

Re: ----

---

Quote:

---

Do masculine minded women have bigger clits?
Do some female mammals have clits?
Did women evolve clits due to penis envy? :)

---

*chuckle*

Maybe so...the world may never know...

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1046
(11/24/03 1:26 pm)
Reply

re

---

Do masculine minded women have bigger clits?

-----

I think it's possible. In the sense that more masculine hormones probably do lead to greater development of that area. But it is difficult to speculate from the outside about masculine minded women. There is so much variety in people, even masculine-ish women have many very feminine traits. The two women I've studied most are my two daughters. I consider one more masculine than the other, yet that masculine one is also the most feminine.

-----

Do some female mammals have clits?

-----

I've searched the net about this, and about whether there is any real orgasm among any female animals, and I have not been able to find out. I don't think they do, but the possibilities lie with dolphins and the great apes.

-----

Did women evolve clits due to penis envy? :)

-----

Oh cripes. How in the hell would envy evolve a body part? There seems little evidence that penis envy was common among the primitives. Actually, evidence is that people were in awe of women's reproductive functions. I envied being male a lot in the past, and it was not centered on the penis at all. I've never wanted one except that at times it is a much more convenient organ of elimination. Take our postsurgical patients. The women have to actually get up out of bed to go pee, and the men get to use a urinal.

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 400

(11/24/03 3:51 pm)

Reply

Re: re

Thanks Birdy. Q3 was partly in jest.

From your answer though, I disagree that women could not evolve a part necessary for sexual stimulation through mental desire – over the last 30 years are not women’s breasts getting larger on average?

Of course the development of a clitoris would have happened well before we became homo-sapiens and it is more likely than whatever evolutionary glitch that gave the first pre-woman touch pleasure from sex is likely to have desired and achieved more sex, thus more children to carry on the gene change.

The first woman with a clit may also have been a hermaphrodite. Ever noticed that some clits have a definite tiny penis shape (rare I admit).

That’s probably the answer, Eve was a hermaphrodite, but got kicked out of the garden of Eden because she was different with a males sex drive she was a total slut:) (joking).

Of course the clit may have come before the penis. Perhaps the division between female and male came about because, by a quirk of nature, some asexual reproductive thing had bigger, more aromatic sexual pleasure centres which attracted others.

lol..Look what I found coincidently, after writing the above.

FEMALE HYENAS AND MALE HORMONES, A STRANGE COMBINATION

BERKELEY- Aggression pays off for female spotted hyenas -- the most masculinized females in the animal kingdom -- but only if they must survive their first experience with a strange and often fatal birthing process, report researchers at UC Berkeley.

Up to 10 percent of pregnant females may die in the process of delivering their first cubs. For those who survive, however, strong evolutionary benefits go to the females who can dominate other hyenas and the food supply, according to new studies.

Reproduction in the female spotted hyena has sparked intense scientific interest because the animal is extremely masculinized from high levels of male hormones and she gives birth through an elongated clitoris the same size as a penis. Scientists have wondered what evolutionary advantage could offset the dangers of this strange reproductive system.

Researchers at the UC Berkeley Hyena Project, has found that the aggression benefits high-ranking females which raise more than twice as many cubs to maturity as do low-ranking females, apparently because they get most of the food.

The authors calculate that the reproductive success of high-ranking females is 2.5 times greater than low-ranking females, which more than offsets the death rate of mother and cub during first birth.

"We have what appears to be a strong selection for aggressive females.

The side effect is that they get male genitals and this ridiculous birth apparatus," said lead researcher Laurence Frank.

So difficult is the birth process that 11 of 18 cubs conceived by new mothers in the Berkeley colony were stillborn. They would get lodged in the long birth canal, which is twice as long as it would be in a "normal" mammal, and suffocate to death. Subsequent births, after the clitoris had been stretched out, were much easier with no excess death.

The benefits of masculinization in these females, however, took longer to understand. Based on 17 years of observations in Kenya with a wild clan of about 70 to 80 hyenas, Frank has found that the aggression helps maintain a rigid hierarchy, wherein the high-ranking females have most of the surviving adult offspring. Cubs of low-ranking females die in youth, probably because they don't have enough food.

"Cubs of lower-ranking females are hungry all the time," he said. "We believe that these hungrier cubs take bigger chances."

Frank's colleagues, Kay Holekamp and Laura Smale, suggest that they may hang around a lion's kill, which is risky because the lion is likely to attack them on sight.

The feeding environments Frank and his associates have witnessed in Kenya are "extraordinarily competitive," he said.,

"When hyenas make a kill, everybody comes out of the woodwork. You see 30 animals arguing over a large kill. A zebra can be reduced to a dark patch on the ground in half an hour," said Frank. "The whole key to high rank is that you get to eat first. These mothers make room for their cubs, but lower-ranking animals get pushed off."

Over the 15 years, Frank estimates that the top ranking matrilineage (female-headed family) has increased its numbers by 50 percent. Middle ranked families have stayed the same and the matrilineages at the bottom are disappearing. The group as a whole has maintained a stable size.

"In 40 years from now (less than 15 generations), all the animals in that clan will be descended from one female," said Frank.

As in female hierarchies among baboons, rank among hyenas is acquired from the mother, so that cubs have the same social position from birth. However, these animals also maintain rank by constant aggression, and some of their fighting, at least, is devoted to teaching cubs their place in the hierarchy.

Lest anyone wish to draw comparisons with human aggression, Frank emphasized that there are "few parallels. "He said one major difference is that "cooperation in food sharing was critical in human evolution, whereas hyenas don't share."

Frank noted that early humans, who were scavengers, would have been in competition with hyenas for killed meat, and rather than get in close with clubs, humans probably developed "the ability to stand back and pitch a rock with power and accuracy."

The new hyena research appeared in Nature,10/18/95.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1050

(11/25/03 1:45 am)

Reply

 mind over evolution

---

++From your answer though, I disagree that women could not evolve a part necessary for sexual stimulation through mental desire – over the last 30 years are not women’s breasts getting larger on average?

** Surely that was in jest?
-----

++Of course the development of a clitoris would have happened well before we became homo-sapiens and it is more likely than whatever evolutionary glitch that gave the first pre-woman touch pleasure from sex is likely to have desired and achieved more sex, thus more children to carry on the gene change.

** It's somehow more complex than that. The estrus cycle works plenty well for most species. I'd say the evolution of greater sexual pleasure in women must correlate to the relatively less strong estrus. But don't think touch pleasure is absent from other animals. Female pigs for example, are driven wild (during estrus) by pressure put upon their backs, for obvious reasons. That's how the artificial inseminators have their way with them.
-----

++ Ever noticed that some clits have a definite tiny penis shape (rare I admit).

** I can't say that I have, perhaps I've not looked as closely as you! But you are right, the clitoris is in fact very like a tiny penis - that is anatomically correct. Yet what frustrates me is the gulf, when reading about animals or humans, the authors rarely make a bridge. You can read a text showing the analogous parts, male and female, that develop from the same tissue in embryonic life, and the parts all correspond. Yet women's genitalia are more complex than female animals so what happens to the correspondence in animal fetal development? Of course it is true, since the tissue comes from the same "pregenitalia" in the embryo, that if you have a case of what they call ambiguous genitalia that hormones are the culprit. But don't get all excited about your big penis. They now say that women's structure that relates to the clitoris and erects and so forth, is every bit as large, and larger, but is all wired up inside. The clitoris is the tip of the iceberg, so to speak.

-----
++Of course the clit may have come before the penis.

** No way. The penis IS the male. Once some organism decided to stop reproducing asexually and divide into genders, the very first thing that had to be in place was for those two genders to exchange some material across some cell membrane or other. Not a real penis exactly, would be required, but the two would have to sidle up to each other, and one membrane had to recognize some signal or key from the other so as to open it's gate, and the other would have to have some way to push a bit of DNA through the open gate.

Some, I think, exchanged bits equally, and then both went on to divide, but that doesn't really matter. In that case they would have been hermaphroditic amoebas.

-----
I forgot about hyenas when I told Dan that women have more reproductive trouble than other animals. But for all that, do the hyenas have orgasms? If a hyena has an enlarged clitoris, it stands to reason all animals have them, but I sure don't see it.

There's a new evolution book out in which the author thinks that as the hominid brain got bigger, women began to have significant suffering and death in childbirth, and were able to make the connection between sex and death. They began to have the ability to resist the call of estrus, due to fear of death. So nature had to soothe them with greater sexual pleasure. He thinks it was a major evolutionary bottleneck, which led to several other things as well.

Certainly, with hyena first labor having a 10% death rate, that would be enough to deter most women from having sex once they saw the connection.

DEL

Registered User

Posts: 855

(11/25/03 7:07 am)

Reply

Re: mind over evolution

---

Quote:

birdofhermes

There's a new evolution book out in which the author thinks that as the hominid brain got bigger, women began to have significant suffering and death in childbirth, and were able to make the connection between sex and death. They began to have the ability to resist the call of estrus, due to fear of death. So nature had to soothe them with greater sexual pleasure. He thinks it was a major evolutionary bottleneck, which led to several other things as well.

Certainly, with hyena first labor having a 10% death rate, that would be enough to deter most women from having sex once they saw the connection.

---

Quote:

---

Weininger:

Thus the parallel between sexuality and love is complete. Love is murder. The sexual impulse destroys the body and mind of the woman, and the psychical eroticism destroys her psychical existence. Ordinary sexuality regards the woman only as a means of gratifying passion or of begetting children. The higher eroticism is merciless to the woman, requiring her to be merely the vehicle of a projected personality, or the mother of psychical children. Love is not only anti-logical, as it denies the objective truth of the woman and requires only an illusory image of her, but it is anti-ethical with regard to her.

---

The Genius sometimes forces us to see what we do not want to see. He is a murderer of ignorance.

suergaz Registered User Posts: 1787 (11/25/03 12:03 pm) Reply	 --- <hr/> Weininger:---"Love is murder." A simple lie as I think I've said before about this same quote.
DEL Registered User Posts: 869 (12/5/03 8:43 am) Reply	 Love is murder. <hr/> Quote: <hr/> suergaz Weininger:---"Love is murder." A simple lie as I think I've said before about this same quote. <hr/> Well, what else do you think love is? In less than 20 words.
WolfsonJakk Registered User Posts: 1292 (12/5/03 10:13 am) Reply	 Re: Love is murder. <hr/> Love (individualized) is delusion. What Weininger really meant is "Love can murder." It certainly killed him. He starved. If he would have merely taken one more little (some say big) step and peek around the next corner, he would have found a bounty of nourishment. Tharan
Paul Registered User Posts: 341 (12/5/03 10:17 am) Reply	 DEL <hr/> 'Love is DEL.' Not the other way 'round though.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1871
(12/5/03 10:43 am)
Reply

 Re: DEL

---

Love is love Del. Get over it or into it, Wolf is wrong. There is only individualised love.

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

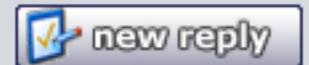

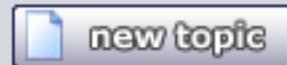

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Chaos Magic

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
DEL Registered User Posts: 899 (1/7/04 6:39 pm) Reply	Chaos Magic <hr/> I have just started reading some books on Chaos Magic. So far it looks really interesting. It appears to strike a balance between the Genius Forum hardcore materialists like and Rowden, Quinn, Faizi and Toast and the transcendentalists like Hamilton, Bird and Knierim. Anybody else heard of Chaos Magic? Any comments? If not, when I have read enough I'll be back soon to debate and test the strength. Woe to all those in the descending paradigm!
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2039 (1/7/04 11:59 pm) Reply	--- <hr/> There is magic in anything.
birdofhermes Registered User Posts: 1220 (1/8/04 2:16 am) Reply	Oh Del <hr/> I don't think Toast belongs in the hard core materialist group.

N0X23

Registered User
Posts: 62
(1/8/04 4:38 am)
Reply

Re: Oh Del

---

It is very Esoteric, Nihilistic and steeped in Occulture, I suspect this is because none of them have a clue to what they are doing. They are seeking to control their environment by any means necessary, to manifest and the golden prize is communion with your own personal Guardian Angel (a benevolent entity from Sirius).

They borrow from everything and everyone, hence the chaos connection, influence from all eight directions, but rely heavily on altered states and sex magick, ala Aleister Crowley, who in my opinion was a mad genius, but had an unyielding disdain for ignorance, he considered any one who followed any of his teachings as ignorant, worthless and bellow contempt, combined with a sadistic and wicked sense of humor and the end result is the befuddled follower of Chaos.

So if you are into ceremony, ritual, precepts and practice and more ceremony, ritual, precepts and practice...did I mention ceremony and ritual?...and accomplishing absolutely nothing, I would recommend Chaos Magick.

Robert Anton Wilson who happens to be one of the most widely recognized proponents of Chaos, commented after many years of intense and devout practice, that if he had it to do all over again he would have been a Buddhist.

DEL

Registered User
Posts: 901
(1/8/04 9:54 am)
Reply

Re: Oh Del

---

I just finished his latest book. You are correct N0X23 at the end of the book there is a lot of ritual, precepts, ceremony and practice.
I suppose that is how he will make his money and fame.
Nobody writes a book for nothing, except a few old time Alchemists.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 217
(1/8/04 10:26 am)
Reply

Re: Chaos Magic

---

It appears to strike a balance between the Genius Forum hardcore materialists like and Rowden, Quinn, Faizi and Toast and the transcendentalists like Hamilton, Bird and Knierim.

Please explain?

Neither 'QSR' or myself are materialists or transcendentalists.

It seems that i have inadvertently triggered something in your mind. I simply used the word transcend to refer to the transition from one 'state' (eg. ignorance, suffering) to another. To go beyond the common mileu.

If that makes me a woolly spiritualist (or?) in your eyes then i think you should re-appraise your capacity for proper judgement.

Rhett

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 902
(1/8/04 7:35 pm)
Reply

What are you?

---

Quote:

---

Rhett

Neither 'QSR' or myself are materialists or transcendentalists.

---

What are you then?

Let's see how well he can answer that apparently simple question.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 725
(1/8/04 8:36 pm)
Reply

Re: What are you?

---

Unfortunately the word transcendentalism is ambiguous. Here are some possible meanings:

- (a) the transcending, or going beyond, empiricism, and ascertaining a priori the fundamental principles of human knowledge (Kantian transcendentalism).
- (b) any system of philosophy emphasizing the intuitive and spiritual above the empirical and material.
- (c) the philosophical movement associated with Ralph Waldo Emerson.

Which one did you mean? Possibly (b), seeing that you contrast it with materialism?

Thomas

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1222
(1/9/04 3:16 am)
Reply

--

---

Thomas, I was certain that among your New Year's resolutions was the resolve not to waste any more time with us fools here.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 220
(1/9/04 9:09 am)
Reply

Re: What are you?

---

-----
Rhett
Neither 'QSR' or myself are materialists or transcendentalists.
-----

What are you then?

Let's see how well he can answer that apparently simple question.

To you, i am whatever you perceive me to be in any given moment.

To me, i am whatever i perceive me to be in any given moment.

To anyone else, i am whatever they perceive me to be in any given moment.

	All of those perceptions are different, revealing the fundamental transiency and lack of inherent existence of 'Rhett'. Rhett
Thomas Knierim Registered User Posts: 727 (1/9/04 12:02 pm) Reply 	Re: -- <hr/> Anna: Thomas, I was certain that among your New Year's resolutions was the resolve not to waste any more time with us fools here. What makes you think so? I guess I'll stick around and drop in occasional comments for the purpose of general enlightenment. :-)
DEL Registered User Posts: 903 (1/9/04 5:17 pm) Reply	Re: What are you? <hr/> Good point Thomas, I meant (b). As expected I knew that question would have that effect. Rhett is one of those people who think they are absolutely sure of what they are not but have no idea of what they absolutely are.
B0ndi Registered User Posts: 264 (1/9/04 10:07 pm) Reply 	Re: Chaos Magic <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Anybody else heard of Chaos Magic? <hr/> Yeah, combining it with Life Magic was the easiest way to conquer both the worlds of Arcanus and Myrror and you remained the one and true Master of Magic... ;o)

suergaz Registered User Posts: 2041 (1/9/04 10:54 pm) Reply	---writers <hr/> magic, its own, all chaos included--and thus it lies. Nothing for all who've written before me! (:D) But wait! Everything its own, go, see how madness does not take you! (:D) There are books, and thoughts don't exist in them unless as forms, and from beyond myself, the forms are finally readers.- ... Action---Past is vectored?! Future prelected! Presently, is always how things are given. What are we all given to?! Are you reading this?!
Rhett Hamilton Registered User Posts: 225 (1/10/04 12:14 pm) Reply	Re: What are you? <hr/> As expected I knew that question would have that effect. Rhett is one of those people who think they are absolutely sure of what they are not but have no idea of what they absolutely are. I know absolutely that i do not exist absolutely. I also know absolutely that i seem to exist in the moment that people experience me (as an appearance to mind). I also have quite a good notion of the more specific nature of what people would term my 'physical being', but at any moment in time that notion could need replacing as the evidence that i experience changes. For example, I could be walking along and suddenly find that i have no physical self, and be able to float around in any manner that i choose, in the same manner that i can if i imagine it. Or i could wake up in the morning and find that 'I' look like Ronald McDonald, and whilst i might be inclined to shoot myself, i'd wait at least until the next morning to see what happens... Rhett
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2049 (1/11/04 10:19 pm) Reply	----- <hr/> Rhett, you only know absolutely that you do not exist infinitely, not absolutely. Your existence is not in question!

Rhett Hamilton Registered User Posts: 233 (1/12/04 10:21 am) Reply	Re: ----- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Rhett, you only know absolutely that you do not exist infinitely, not absolutely. <hr/> Actually, i am infinite. [And i know it absolutely] Rhett
N0X23 <input type="checkbox"/> Registered User Posts: 63 (1/12/04 10:30 am) Reply 	Re: ----- <hr/> Actually, I think you're all full of shit.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2054 (1/12/04 11:27 am) Reply	--- <hr/> Factually, Rhett is infinitely more interesting when he is infinite.
N0X23 <input type="checkbox"/> Registered User Posts: 65 (1/13/04 6:43 am) Reply 	Re: --- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Actually, I think you're all full of shit. <hr/> I must apologize for that rude outburst... But hey, it was just the impersonal functioning of Totality... so what can ya do?

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 238
(1/13/04 12:29 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

-----
Actually, I think you're all full of shit.
-----

I must apologize for that rude outburst... But hey, it was just the impersonal functioning of Totality... so what can ya do?

Whilst you're fundamentally blameless - because you were fully caused to say that, from a practical perspective i might well choose to comment.

For someone to avoid doing so purely on account of your essential blamelessness would simply reveal their ignorance of the nature of existence - namely cause and effect. People can't help but be creating effects, so best to make them good ones in accordance with the Truth, or at least ones best conception of it at any moment in time.

Rhett

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM
> GENIUS FORUM
> Chaos Magic

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
N0X23 <input type="checkbox"/> Registered User Posts: 66 (1/13/04 6:20 pm) Reply 	Re: --- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Whilst you're fundamentally blameless - because you were fully caused to say that, from a practical perspective I might well choose to comment. For someone to avoid doing so purely on account of your essential blamelessness would simply reveal their ignorance of the nature of existence - namely cause and effect. People can't help but be creating effects, so best to make them good ones in accordance with the Truth, or at least ones best conception of it at any moment in time. <hr/> How can people create causes if they are acting out an effect of a previous cause, wouldn't their created cause just in effect be an effect of an effect of an effect, or is it that the difference between the cause and the effect is an appearance, so that my fully caused statement was and is, simultaneously, a cause and an effect, i.e. ocean/wave. And how does the relation of cause and effect correlate to <math>A=A</math>?

Edited by: N0X23  at: 1/13/04 6:23 pm

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 914
(1/13/04 6:58 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Rhett Hamilton
or at least ones best conception of it at any moment in time.

---

"best conception"

Sometimes life does not give you the consistency to make your 'best conception' good on a regular enough basis.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 242
(1/16/04 11:01 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Whilst you're fundamentally blameless - because you were fully caused to say that, from a practical perspective I might well choose to comment. For someone to avoid doing so purely on account of your essential blamelessness would simply reveal their ignorance of the nature of existence - namely cause and effect. People can't help but be creating effects, so best to make them good ones in accordance with the Truth, or at least ones best conception of it at any moment in time.

---

How can people create causes if they are acting out an effect of a previous cause, wouldn't their created cause just in effect be an effect of an effect of an effect, or is it that the difference between the cause and the effect is an appearance, so that my fully caused statement was and is, simultaneously, a cause and an effect, i.e. ocean/wave.

Cause and effect refers to the transition between experienced entities. If i experience a car rolling down a hill, i can say that the hill is causing the car to roll down it. But we are already involving ourself in an empirical investigation. Surely the car is also caused to roll by the driver having left the handbrake off? And by the existence of the earth? And by the absence of a meteoroid blasting the car and hill to smithereines, etc.

Essentially, everything that is not the thing is the cause of a thing.

Additionally, in the absence of a sentient experiencer of things, there are no things, and thus, there is no cause and effect.

But that's a long story to elucidate.

And how does the relation of cause and effect correlate to  $A=A$ ?

$A=A$  denotes the fact that what one experiences in each moment **is** what one experiences in each moment, which includes any item of focus, or mental image, etc.

Most humans are full of mental images that they constantly run through their mind in circumstances where they are clearly redundant, and through doing this develop or compound a lot of errors.

Through understanding the errors that one develops by doing this, one can remove them and experience reality in a more direct way.

But once again, that's a long story to tell, best to read WOTI.

Rhett

N0X23

Registered User

Posts: 70

(1/17/04 3:12 am)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Essentially, everything that is not the thing is the cause of a thing.

---

And so since I am not a thing, does this infer that I am the cause of everything?

And if there is no first cause, does this then infer that I am infinite and eternal?

Quote:

---

Additionally, in the absence of a sentient experiencer of things, there are no things, and thus, there is no cause and effect.

---

So is it the mental construct of "I am" that creates the false view of an independent experiencer, and if there are no things to experience, where does experience originate?

Or is it that since things are created by the idea of an independent self, I am in actuality experiencing myself, and that I am the cause of my own effect?

Quote:

---

But that's a long story to elucidate.

---

I've got time.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 248
(1/17/04 11:59 am)
Reply

Re: ---

Quote:

-----
Essentially, everything that is not the thing is the cause of a thing.
-----

And so since I am not a thing, does this infer that I am the cause of everything?

We could say that you exist in two ways, even though they are actually one.

1. As a finite entity, a thing. In the moment of anyone's perception of you as a finite entity - you exist as a perception of a finite entity. Whilst this is a conceptual projection, an appearance, it's necessary to consider it because it does in fact exist. So to answer your question, no, by this definition you are not the cause of everything, because you cannot be the cause of yourself at any given moment.

2. As infinite. As per this definition, you are accountable for the existence of all things, you are everywhen, everywhere, permanent, timeless, unchanging, absolute in nature, without beginning and end, and thus, cause and effect is inapplicable to you.

And if there is no first cause, does this then infer that I am infinite and eternal?

Yes, but only as per my second definition (above).

Regarding the first definition, whilst the definition itself is quite unchanging during it's existence (we still call you Nox each day), what is pertains to -your 'physical self' - is just an appearance of the moment and is constantly changing. You get older, stand up from sitting down, etc. The possibility for that appearance to be experienced could disappear in an instant, say if a meteoroid hits our planet, and will disappear one day if you die.

Quote:

Additionally, in the absence of a sentient experiencer of things, there are no things, and thus, there is no cause and effect.

---

So is it the mental construct of "I am" that creates the false view of an independent experiencer, and if there are no things to experience, where does experience originate?

Or is it that since things are created by the idea of an independent self, I am in actuality experiencing myself, and that I am the cause of my own effect?

More so the former, but whilst the mental construct "I am" is very much a part of the false view of independent existence, it is not the root cause of the false view. The very act of experiencing, for me anyway (and I suspect it's the case for everyone else as well), involves the experience of seemingly real objects - things. This, in concert with our early experience in life of other humans telling you and interacting with you as if you are discrete, leads to the notion of "I am".

Quote:

---

But that's a long story to elucidate.

---

I've got time.

Great. Ask away.

Actually, I've been thinking about working through WOTI section by section on the forum. I'll get back to everyone on that.

Rhett

N0X23

Registered User
Posts: 71
(1/20/04 4:55 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

For someone to avoid doing so purely on account of your essential blamelessness would simply reveal their ignorance of the nature of existence.

---

But isn't the reason that I am blameless due to the fact that I can not avoid, doing or not doing it?

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 249
(1/21/04 11:49 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

-----
For someone to avoid doing so purely on account of your essential blamelessness would simply reveal their ignorance of the nature of existence.
-----

But isn't the reason that I am blameless due to the fact that I can not avoid, doing or not doing it?

I say that you are essentially or inherently blameless - not only because you are fully determined to do as you do, but also because you don't inherently exist.

However, that doesn't mean that we shouldn't reproach others for their actions or in some way involve ourself in a solution, because to withhold from doing so would be an attempt to nullify oneself in relation to other people and society. It's actually fundamentally impossible to do so. One's values are constantly being spread whether one likes it or not. The more conscious and consciencious an individual is the more they will involve themselves in those.

It's only limited thinking that pays attention to the overt forms of influence and completely ignores the actual bulk of them. It's also often used as a means to shirk responsibility for one's actions, "Oh, it wasn't really that bad, it doesn't really count, she'll get over it".

Rhett

N0X23

Registered User
Posts: 74
(1/24/04 3:11 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

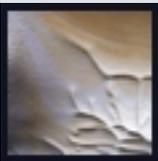

However, that doesn't mean that we shouldn't reproach others for their actions or in some way involve ourself in a solution, because to withhold from doing so would be an attempt to nullify oneself in relation to other people and society.

---

How is it possible to withhold anything, if everything is caused and volition is a delusion.

Or is it that volition "exists" in the present conscious moment? As the past being caused, interacts with and influences the present and then in turn, the present influences the past, to create a volitional and caused future?

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 256
(1/25/04 11:55 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

-----
Rhett: However, that doesn't mean that we shouldn't reproach others for their actions or in some way involve ourself in a solution, because to withhold from doing so would be an attempt to nullify oneself in relation to other people and society.

---

Nox: How is it possible to withhold anything, if everything is caused and volition is a delusion.

In an ultimate sense, it is impossible to 'withhold', because what is there that one is holding back? Can we point to it? No, we can't. There is nothing withheld.

In an experiential sense, you might have a thought that you think is pertinent to a discussion, but then decide not to mention it. In most individuals that's done for egotistical reasons, but in rare cases it's done for truthful reasons.

Or is it that volition “exists” in the present conscious moment? As the past being caused, interacts with and influences the present and then in turn, the present influences the past, to create a volitional and caused future?

Certainly, our past actions often have a great bearing(cause) on our current situation and actions (effect).

Or put another way, there is a bevy of past causes and effects, and a completely open future of your own making...in accordance with cause and effect of course.

Most people create a dual self, their 'rationality' and their 'ego', and actually create a dialogue between them. Their mind (quality reasoning) wants to do one thing, whereas the ego-mind (emotion tinged reasoning) often wants to do another. Between these options, people think they are exercising choice!! Once an individual has soaked themselves to the bone in truth they don't engage in any of this nonsense, their actions are far more intuitive and in direct relation to their value system (Truth), which is the simplest possible, and inherent in nature.

Here's yet another way to think about will, something i wrote earlier this morning:

Since we are necessarily wholly determined, we are thus, ultimately speaking, a slave to cause and effect. However, in our everyday existence (in mine at least) we do seem to have will, it's like we are *determined* to have choice. We could easily experience a form of reality where we don't have this, for example, imagine if your life was just like watching television, where you had no choice at all - but were still capable of having experiences. So our current experience of choice is just the particular way that causality is manifesting at present (for me anyway).

Here's yet another perspective. You can see the relationship between cause & effect and values if you engage in a bit of transposition. In a rough sense, wherever you see the word 'value' and 'action' you can insert 'cause & effects':

Whilst i agree that our values guide every choice that we make, most peoples values are quite a mess, they are wishy washy and indistinct, and yet at the same time they are a complex construct based on situational responses. Basically, most people are largely passive to their values, they exercise very little conscious and rational choice over their actions.

Whilst all of the above might be helpful, I intend to lead a discussion that will reveal the essence of cause & effect, will, and the nature of reality. However, i'm just a little tied up at present.

Rhett

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 258
(1/26/04 10:09 am)
Reply

Re: The Nature of Free Will

---

The Nature of Free Will

How is it that we seem to have free will, and in fact need to approach life as if we have free will, even though we are necessarily fully determined?

The crux argument is that thoughts (and all other experiences for that matter) just pop into our consciousness.

Certain analysis:

For example, let's say we come to a fork in a road. We then think about whether we want to take the left one. We then think about whether we want to take the right one. We then decide to take the left one.

Even though this seems to be a consistent reasoning process, and in actual fact is, each of those thoughts necessarily just popped into our head. Regardless of our reasoning, the final decision to take the left road just popped into our head, and we cannot be certain about it's origin any more than that. It could have just been beamed in by an alien. We can only be certain about what we directly experience,  $A=A$ .

Empirical analysis:

However, we can *reason* that each of the thoughts that we experienced on the matter went back into some kind of subconscious, which then resulted in the next thought arising in its particular form. So my initial experience of the fork in the road probably led to my reasoning about the left road, which probably led to me reasoning about the right road, and both of those reasonings probably then resulted in me deciding to take the left road. But we cannot be certain of any of this. It is mere conjecture.

Certain analysis:

And to take it one step further, there was never a moment in time or a specific location where a decision took place. The whole process was entirely through causal succession. In other words, the fixed notion in our minds of there being a definitive decision is not representative of the actual process that occurred, even though the conscious decisionmaking would seem to have been an integral part of the process.

I'll use another example to illustrate this point further. When we see a caterpillar walking up the left fork of a tree, can we not imagine that it's fully caused to do so, that the sum conditions that were present led to it walking up the left branch rather than the right branch? Can we see that there wasn't, and in fact couldn't have been, a specific moment where a 'decision' was made? The causes acting on and within the caterpillar just led to it going up the left branch, simple as that.

Similarly, can we not imagine an alien looking down on us humans and thinking the same? In actual fact, a number of us have probably already experienced something like this. Have you ever been in an ultra tall building in a city and looked down on the people walking on the pavement below, or done the same looking out of an aircraft near the landing strip? People just appear to be random creatures treading a course dependant on what the WALK signals are saying, what the traffic is doing, how many people are coming the opposite way, and various other seemingly random changes in course. They look just as determined as a cloud floating through the sky.

Does a flower not grow towards the sun - do humans not flock to the beaches on a sunny day? Does a car not start on a frosty morning - do humans not get out of bed later on a cold morning? Does a bee not sting that which aggravates it - are humans not vindictive towards those that tease them? Do sheep not flock in the meadow - do humans not congregate in cafes to engage in affirmation?

Who on earth came up with the notion that we are in control of our lives?!

And for that matter, who came up with the notion that there is a "we" and a "life" ....??

Rhett Hamilton

Edited by: Rhett Hamilton at: 1/27/04 1:16 pm

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 901
(1/26/04 11:39 am)
Reply

Re: The Nature of Free Will

---

Quote:

---

The causes acting on and within the caterpillar just led to it going up the left branch, simple as that.

---

Replace the word causes with processes.

Now imagine an overall process, consisting of a group of processes, with regard to sensing, conceptualising, differentiating awareness, contained within a multitude of other processes. Call it volition.

N0X23
Registered User
Posts: 74
(1/27/04 4:20 pm)
Reply

Re: The Nature of Free Will

---

Quote:

---

Who on earth came up with the notion that we are in control of our lives?!

---

By oneself indeed is evil done and by oneself is one defiled; by oneself is evil not done and by oneself is one purified. Purity and impurity depend entirely on oneself; no one can purify another. Dhammapada, v.165

Perhaps not in complete control, but entirely responsible for personal actions. True, that circumstances, habits, environment, genetics, condition our thought's and volition/free will is subordinated at these times, but the possibility exists when we overcome said influences and produce moral and immoral thoughts, thus exercising our free will.

Now with mundane understanding or Apparent reality we can view Volition in the conventional sense, as above.

But now to view Volition in the context of abstract truth/reality, or in the terminology that David and Kevin prefer, Ultimate reality, it can be said that there is only Volition, as there is only Perception, Experience, Suffering or A=A.

“No doer is there who does the deed,
Nor is there one who feels the fruit,
Constituent parts alone roll,
This indeed is right discernment.”
Visuddhimagga.

But this is often misinterpreted as a truth that there is NO self, which of course is an erroneous view.

The same misunderstanding occurs with the simile of the chariot

In the conventional sense when all parts of the chariot are assembled, there is in fact a chariot or a thing that we have labeled as.

But if it is disassembled and each piece is examined, we can not find a chariot, collectively or otherwise. So in the context of Ultimate reality there exists no chariot.

But this does not prove that there is no chariot, just that the particular assembly of said parts can be destroyed and no one piece can be considered the chariot.

So what then is the purpose of the simile in regards to the individual?

To remove the conceit of I am. That is all.

It is not to be taken as a literal and absolute Truth/Fact.

Nowhere does the Buddha ever state or hint that there is No self, only that which can be perceived or experienced is NOT self. So the problem with the position that Ultimate reality exists beyond ontological theory is to block ones progress through mundane comprehension.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 261
(1/29/04 12:36 pm)
Reply

Re: The Nature of Free Will

---

-----
Rhett: Who on earth came up with the notion that we are in control of our lives?!

-----
By oneself indeed is evil done and by oneself is one defiled; by oneself is evil not done and by oneself is one purified. Purity and impurity depend entirely on oneself; no one can purify another. Dhammapada, v.165

Yes, you're not the only person to point out that i took a step back with that comment. It was meant to be a trigger, but i'll revise it if i re-use the piece.

So what then is the purpose of the simile in regards to the individual?

To remove the conceit of I am. That is all.

Well, by definition, understanding of the nature of reality applies to all reality, not just the self. Enlightenment involves far far more than simply the removal of conceit.

Nowhere does the Buddha ever state or hint that there is No self, only that which can be perceived or experienced is NOT self.

It's easy to get mixed up in terminology, but any self - that appears to anyone - at any moment in time - is indeed a self, by definition, even though it's nothing more than a momentary appearance.

That is the only possible form of self, there is no other self.

So the problem with the position that Ultimate reality exists beyond ontological theory is to block ones progress through mundane comprehension.

If you're saying that there is no existence outside of experience, then i agree. But that doesn't mean that there is nothingness.

Rhett Hamilton

N0X23

Registered User

Posts: 79

(2/11/04 3:58 am)

Reply

Re: The Nature of Free Will

---

Quote:

---

Well, by definition, understanding of the nature of reality applies to all reality, not just the self. Enlightenment involves far far more than simply the removal of conceit.

---

Well if the conceit of I AM is removed, what then remains to be Enlightened, what more is involved?

Quote:

---

It's easy to get mixed up in terminology, but any self - that appears to anyone - at any moment in time - is indeed a self, by definition, even though it's nothing more than a momentary appearance.

That is the only possible form of self, there is no other self.

---

Well who then is the Observer of this momentary appearance?

Quote:

---

If you're saying that there is no existence outside of experience, then I agree. But that doesn't mean that there is nothingness.

---

So experience is the totality of existence?

But if there is some-thing-ness then there must be no-thing-ness and isn't the "Hidden Void" the complete absence of both, some-thing and no-thing, beyond experience, beyond existence?

Edited by: NOX23  at: 2/11/04 4:00 am

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 269
(2/11/04 10:09 am)
Reply

Re: The Nature of Free Will

Quote:

Well, by definition, understanding of the nature of reality applies to all reality, not just the self. Enlightenment involves far far more than simply the removal of conceit.

Well if the conceit of I AM is removed, what then remains to be Enlightened, what more is involved?

The removal of the conceit of "I am" is certainly incredibly significant, but it's just one of many ramifications of truth. One's perspective changes in a multitude of other ways, and whilst I could list some of them, it's far more important for me to convey the causes of those changes, the core truths that drive them.

For example, the truth that 'a thing is defined by what it is not' (there is 'A', and there is 'not-A'). How else do we define things other than by separating them - through our definitions - from what they are not?

And ultimately, they only 'exist' as a definition...

Quote:

---

It's easy to get mixed up in terminology, but any self - that appears to anyone - at any moment in time - is indeed a self, by definition, even though it's nothing more than a momentary appearance.

That is the only possible form of self, there is no other self.

---

Well who then is the Observer of this momentary appearance?

Just because something is experienced doesn't mean that there is an inherently existent experiencer. The experience is just experienced, and that's that. Prove to me this notion of there being an experiencer...(?)

Ultimately there is no observer. The observer and the observed (and everything else) is One.

Quote:

---

If you're saying that there is no existence outside of experience, then I agree. But that doesn't mean that there is nothingness.

---

So experience is the totality of existence?

Your experience is the totality of 'existence' for you, and is all that you can be certain 'exists'. However, you can reason that experiences may be happening elsewhere (eg. in other humans).

And to take it one step further, your experience is actually boundless, and thus infinite. Therefore, you experience the All, including any other 'experiences' that may be occurring...

But if there is some-thing-ness then there must be no-thing-ness and isn't the "Hidden Void" the complete absence of both, some-thing and no-thing, beyond experience, beyond existence?

Things only ever 'exist' as conceptual experiences (which are themselves non-existent; boundless). Thus, there ultimately isn't some-thing-ness or no-thing-ness, these terms are nothing more than designations that we momentarily experience, which are just another of an Infinity of possible appearances...

Rhett Hamilton

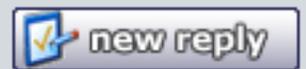

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2288
(2/11/04 10:54 am)
Reply

---

---

(This message was left blank)

Edited by: suergaz at: 2/11/04 10:57 am

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

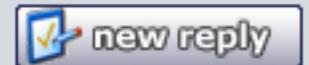

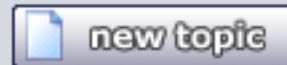

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Cognition

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Rhett Hamilton Registered User Posts: 2 (9/11/03 2:06 pm) Reply	Cognition <hr/> I think our judgements about a persons level of intelligence are often commensurate with their level of masculine mindedness when in a learning phase. This means that 'intelligence' is commensurate with logic, rationality and reason, which is commensurate with lesser degrees of delusion. I guess it makes sense, delusions tend to make the mind cycle a lot, like a computer in an infinite loop, struggling for understanding. Therefore, the less there is of this the more the mind can absorb and memorise new material. Perhaps that is a valuable way to perceive brain functioning. It is a parallel processor, and our delusions take up most of its capacity, because until such time as it is presented with wisdom of the infinite, it can *solve*nothing. With no answer forthcoming, it simply keeps churning over, thus, it has minimal capacity left for learning etc. If thoughts just 'pop' into our consciousness, if our consciousness does not actually process or develop ideas or concepts, how can we explain our capacity to learn, differentiate, become enlightened, etc? If our brain does not perform any kind of processing then it must either be a void, or all 'external' causes must interact directly with our memories in some way. If the brain actually does perform some kind of processing, then it all must be done by the subconscious. Or is our consciousness, although passive itself, actually an integral, if not primary part of our mental processing? Even if this is the case, we would still consider our subconscious to be performing the processing.

I have been told that our consciousness somehow performs processing without it actually being aware of or directing that processing, and that our subconscious can only be improved in its capacity to generate wisdom a small amount if at all (?).

Is the essence of learning about enlightenment and ultimate reality (such that one becomes enlightened) actually a process of creating memories that are less and less delusional over time, such that they will gradually change the way we perceive reality (since we must use memories to make sensory input coherent)? And that we would need to continue this until such point as we are not deluded about reality by the way we perceive it in relation to our memories?

Can we look at it somewhat more simply and say that reading and 'thinking'(regurgitating memories) about it are causes pushing us towards it, and that we will only reach it if these causes are sufficient to establish it? Is intelligence and cognition (as commonly defined) an absolute myth, or just a bit off track? This is not sufficient answer for me.

To become fully enlightened one is likely to need at least a reasonable understanding of consciousness from the perspective of causality, but knowing the inherent limitations of ones enquiry will also help one not get too caught up in trying to understand the endless causal factors...this **is** a logic game after all...

Rhett

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 672
(9/13/03 3:39 am)
Reply

Dual/Parallel Processor

---

Quote:

---

Rhett Hamilton:

Perhaps that is a valuable way to perceive brain functioning. It is a parallel processor, and our delusions take up most of its capacity, because until such time as it is presented with wisdom of the infinite, it can **solve**nothing. With no answer forthcoming, it simply keeps churning over, thus, it has minimal capacity left for learning etc.

---

Dual processor - one for logic the other for belief.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 20
(9/23/03 9:14 am)
Reply

Re: Dual/Parallel Processor

---

Quote:

-----
Rhett Hamilton:

Perhaps that is a valuable way to perceive brain functioning. It is a parallel processor, and our delusions take up most of its capacity, because until such time as it is presented with wisdom of the infinite, it can *solve*nothing. With no answer forthcoming, it simply keeps churning over, thus, it has minimal capacity left for learning etc.

-----

DEL: Dual processor - one for logic the other for belief.

I think you are mixing up two inherently different constructs about the way the mind works. *Brain* functioning is at a cruder descriptive level than *thought* functioning. Brain functioning is in regards to neurons firing, chemical changes etc, and thought functioning in regards to appearances, perception, judgement etc. I think that all perceptions and judgements are inherently logical or illogical, true or false. Perhaps that relates in some way to your comment(?).

Rhett

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 693
(9/23/03 5:33 pm)
Reply

Re: Dual/Parallel Processor

---

Quote:

---

Rhett Hamilton:

I think that all perceptions and judgements are inherently logical or illogical, true or false. Perhaps that relates in some way to your comment(?).

---

	Cause and effect follows logic does it not?  By thinking you planned it and it happened.  By believeing it happened as soon as you were able to believe it.  Belief works miracles everyday.
Rhett Hamilton  Registered User  Posts: 24  (9/24/03 11:11 am)  Reply	Re: Dual/Parallel Processor <hr/> I cannot understand your reply, it does not seem logical.
Rhett Hamilton  Registered User  Posts: 42  (10/5/03 11:58 am)  Reply	Re: Dual/Parallel Processor <hr/> Perhaps the reason why our brain is such an exceptionally good processor is because it can actually change the nature of its processing. Perhaps it can determine whether it is a single or dual or multiple processor. Perhaps we can relate mental compartmentalisation to processing, our total processing capacity is divided up in some measure proportionate to our compartments. An enlightened person would thus have only one compartment and one undivided processor, with full force of mind available for any object of attention. Rhett

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31n
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

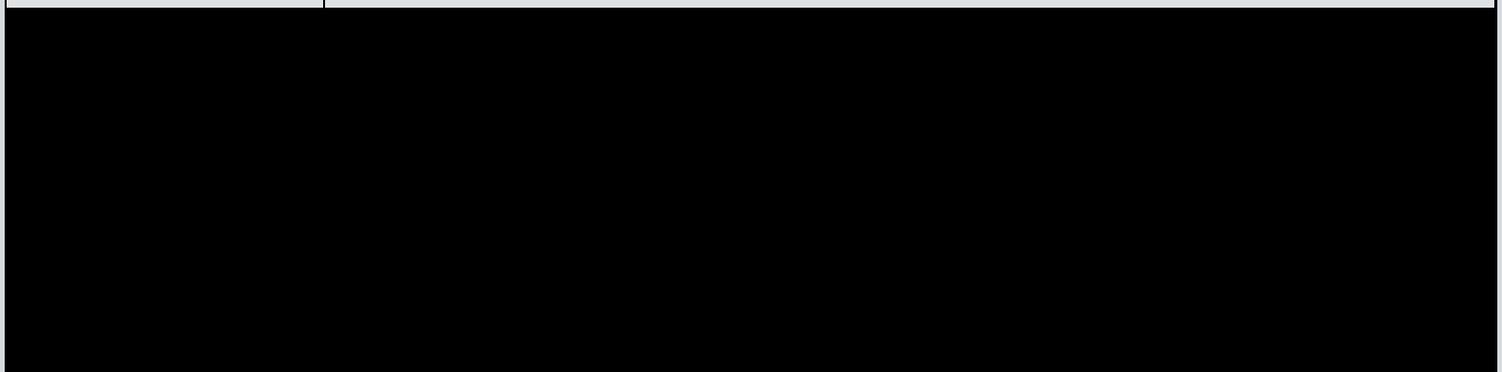

> Coitus and Language

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
DEL Registered User Posts: 616 (8/26/03 5:54 pm) Reply	 Coitus and Language <hr/> I have been wondering to myself about the parallels between coitus and language. It is interesting to note that some women cannot cum without a good spanking (Group 1). I found this difficult to understand. It seems so detached from what is actually taking place. The timing and delivery have to be correct as well. For other women rhythm and pressure is far more impotant (Group 2). As we all know man is to woman as leadership is to people. Group 1 would represent the people who are not able to listen and can only appreciate force of action. Logic appeals. Group 2 would represent the people that have the ability to listen, comprehend and asimilate. Belief appeals.

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1047

(8/27/03 10:20 am)

Reply

☐ Re: Coitus and Language

---

I see no parallels between language and coitus.

I don't believe that your post makes sense.

You seem to be wanting to put forth a formula of some kind; a theory. That could be all right but, in order to have theory or formula, you must, I think, have a base.

You have stated that you are wondering about a parallel between language and coitus but by your indication -- as far as I can tell -- you are mostly interested in coitus.

My guess, therefore, is that you have been engaging in much masturbation.

In case your mother never told you, masturbation rots your brain.

I think this is evident.

Faizi

WolfsonJakk

Registered User

Posts: 1149

(8/27/03 11:17 am)

Reply

☐ Re: Coitus and Language

---

Probably, his base is his copy of Weininger for Dummies and watching the teenage girls playing Dance Dance Revolution from the window of his video arcade office.

Tharan

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 870

(8/27/03 3:12 pm)

Reply

☐ Re: Coitus and Language

---

Quote:

---

It is interesting to note that some women cannot cum without a good spanking The timing and delivery have to be correct as well

---

. You are apparently pretty good at it. I want to know exactly what brought this question on. I mean, is this personal experience? Because if it is, I'd like to know precisely how it works. I'm trying to picture it. The only position that would work is if the woman sits astride the man, if he is actually to spank her while they are screwing.

Quote:

---

It seems so detached from what is actually taking place.

---

Why? Some women get off on submission. So it increases excitement. Like foreplay, or talking dirty, or lingerie, or whatever. Then too, women like to be in a story when they have sex. Just the In & Out Urge can be too barren.

I find it interesting that you think the spanking group is the more rational one.

Your groups are totally meaningless.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 617
(8/27/03 6:56 pm)
Reply

 Re: Coitus and Language -

---

Quote:

---

MKFaizi:
My guess, therefore, is that you have been engaging in much masturbation.
quote]

Quote:

---

WolfsonJakk:
Weininger for Dummies and watching the teenage girls playing Dance Dance Re

---

I predicted the big "masturbation" reaction. I have transcended the fear of that. No doubt the string of "he's definately mad" replies will follow shortly.

The intensity of the subject causes people to reveal and project there own personal problems in a personal attack.

When you reach a certain level you can discuss anything in a detached way.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 618
(8/27/03 7:05 pm)
Reply

Re: Coitus and Language

---

Quote:

birdofhermes:

You are apparently pretty good at it. I want to know exactly what brought this questin on. I mean, is this personal experience? Because if it is, I'd like to know precisely how it works. I'm trying to picture it. The only position that would work is if the woman sits astride the man, if he is actually to spank her while they are screwing.

---

From the missionary position the woman puts her left leg up as high as it can go. The man tilts himself and the woman over toward the left with a slight twist causing her left buttock to be exposed. This will allow the man to have his right arm free.

I have to go to work will continue later.

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 305
(8/27/03 9:49 pm)
Reply

Re: Coitus and Language

I think spanking is mostly about young girls remembering daydreams about having pseudo sexual intimacy with their fathers (or teachers, priests)? The dominant males physical or implied physical discipline has struck a cord with what many woman want sexually, which is to become part of the male strength and power and to have control over it (daughters often know how to control their dads).

Women that can only cum that way, still continue to subconsciously associated that with long lost pleasures imagined during these daydreams, most probably because they have since had actual sexual partners that were not as fulfilling as they fantasised they would be when young. Love never made the remnants of those memories fade into oblivion.

Perhaps the women who can't come, and there are many, would be able to so with a good spanking:)

Note that I am only referring to childish fantasies not acts of incest or molestation. An actual occurrence of incest would throw that dream into tatters, defile it by taking the power that sex can give away from her. Her sense of being in control of her sexual powers would be lost and she would lose confidence.

Can't make heads or tails of your groups and the relationship to language and sex though, or even why logic or belief apply to the group you chose.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 619
(8/28/03 7:15 am)
Reply

Coitus and Language

---

Quote:

---

birdofhermes:

I find it interesting that you think the spanking group is the more rational one.

---

The two paths of spiritual virility for man are:

- 1) Warrior/Hero
- 2) Ascetic

The two paths of spiritual virility for woman are:

- 1) Prostitute/Lover
- 2) Mother

It becomes quite clear how in Group 1 reason and logic take priority. I think that perhaps the groups transmute to their opposite when fully developed. I'm still investigating.

If we apply the formula to society and leadership we can see parallels. Group 1 matches military regimes. Group 2 matches democratic regimes.

Quote:

---

jimhaz:

Note: that I am only referring to childish fantasies not acts of incest or molestation. An actual occurrence of incest would throw that dream into tatters, defile it by taking the power that sex can give away from her. Her sense of being in control of her sexual powers would be lost and she would lose confidence.

---

Excellent feedback jimhaz.

MKFaizi

Registered User
Posts: 1050
(8/28/03 9:54 am)

Reply

Re: Coitus and Language

---

The parallels and correlations are very far fetched. In fact they are stretched to the point of meaninglessness.

I don't get it. My best guess is that the purpose of such conjecture is to make an excuse for discussing sex.

I fail to understand the need for the excuse.

Faizi

MKFaizi

Registered User
Posts: 1051
(8/28/03 10:03 am)

Reply

Re: Coitus and Language

---

I have not seen any "big masturbation reaction." I shudder to think about such a thing, actually.

I have not accused you of masturbating, Del, but the assumption is logical.

Now, you are talking about the woman in the missionary position raising her buttocks to be spanked.

To each his own, of course. But allowing one's butt to be spanked during intercourse seems to me to be submissive to the point of pathology.

Faizi

DEL

Registered User

Posts: 620

(8/28/03 10:58 am)

Reply

Re: Coitus and Language

---

Quote:

---

MKFaizi::

I have not accused you of masturbating, Del, but the assumption is logical.

---

OK, well whatever. I'm not bothered. You keep your mind on masturbation if it makes you feel better.

Quote:

---

MKFaizi:

I don't get it. My best guess is that the purpose of such conjecture is to make an excuse for discussing sex.

---

OK thanks, I know your mind set on this issue. And that was your best guess. You stick to it if you desire and be comfortable with yourself.

Quote:

---

MKFaizi:

To each his own, of course. But allowing one's butt to be spanked during intercourse seems to me to be submissive to the point of pathology.

---

So the situation sounds pathetic to you, and so what?

There are a lot of pathetic things going on in this world.

Some things I once thought were so pathetic now no longer seem so with a fresh understanding.

Some things I thought were normal I now see as pathetic.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 621
(8/28/03 11:21 am)
Reply

Re: Coitus and Language

---

Quote:

---

jimhaz:

An actual occurrence of incest would throw that dream into tatters, defile it by taking the power that sex can give away from her.

---

Seeing you raised the subject of incest jimhaz I would like to explore the possible parallels.

Group 1 - Warrior/Hero/King

I suppose a great King much like a good father would be able to direct and guide his people toward prosperity and yet still remain detached. That detachment perhaps is the regality. We know familiarity breeds contempt which would be the equivalent of incest. If the King loses his respect although he still retains the title of King it will not be long before the relationship between himself and his people collapses.

Group 2 - Ascetic/Priest/Prophet

Here I suggest the good father role would be to set an example of morality. Once again I think there would be a noble element of detachment rather than physical enforcement which would be the equivalent of incest.

Any comments?

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1052

(8/28/03 11:38 am)

Reply

Re: Coitus and Language

---

You seem to be a bit miffed, DEL. I am sorry if I upset you. But I do call a spade a spade, so to speak. My conclusion was not my best guess, though that was the figure of speech I used. In fact, it was not a guess at all.

You should note that I did not say that spanking during sex strikes me as "pathetic."

What I said is that I think that that much submissiveness is pathological.

In other words, I think it is sick. But the act of sex is fraught with pathology so that is nothing new.

I still do not see the meaning you are attempting to illustrate by saying that there is some correlation between sexual intercourse and language. I do not see how a woman enjoying spanking signifies rationality.

Are you saying that a woman who enjoys spanking during intercourse understands her place in the world?

If so, I disagree.

A woman who will submit herself completely to a man is mindless and, therefore, has no understanding of anything.

Mindlessness has nothing to do with rationality.

You are attempting to correlate mindlessness to rational thinking. Such a thing is an impossibility.

If you want to discuss sex, I think you should just discuss sex. Most people love that topic. But to attempt to correlate mindlessness with rationality is an absurdity.

Faizi

MKFaizi
Registered User
Posts: 1053
(8/28/03 12:29 pm)
Reply

☐ Re: Coitus and Language

---

DEL,

Quote:

---

When you reach a certain level you can discuss anything in a detached way.

---

What level have you reached, then?

Faizi

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 42
(8/28/03 3:42 pm)
Reply

☐ Coitus and MKFaizi

---

I'm a man and I can't help it. So...

MKFaizi is the real genius in this forum.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 622
(8/28/03 5:15 pm)
Reply

☐ Re: Coitus and Language

---

Quote:

---

MKFaizi:

You are attempting to correlate mindlessness to rational thinking. Such a thing is an impossibility.

---

Yes, I think rational thinking and mindlessness go together like man and woman.

The military is a good example. No mob can stand against a trained and focused group of soldiers unless the soldiers are extremely out numbered.

Quote:

---

MKFaizi:
What level have you reached, then?

---

Cockroach, remember?

Quote:

---

MKFaizi:
In other words, I think it is sick. But the act of sex is fraught with pathology so that is nothing new.

---

My "best guess" is that you would cum like there was no tomorrow if you got tied up and spanked.
Are there any experienced spankers here who could verify my gut feeling based on the character profiles of past women?

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 43
(8/28/03 5:26 pm)
Reply

 Re; Coitus and Language

---

DEL, my impression is that you look down on women.
You are the one who needs a good spanking, maybe even a whipping.
Are you naive or something?

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 623
(8/28/03 5:29 pm)
Reply

 Coitus and MKFaizi

---

[quote]Paul:
I'm a man and I can't help it. So...
MKFaizi is the real genius in this forum.[/quote]

To use the soldier and mob illustration. MKFaizi is like the personification of a huge mob.
Your weakness causes you to invert the reality. Much like a cowardly group of soldiers stationed in a well supplied fortress would see the approaching angry mob as the power of God made manifest.

Now here is Genius.

	To subdue and bring order to the angry mob without killing any of them.
Paul Registered User Posts: 44 (8/28/03 5:38 pm) Reply	 Coitus and MKFaizi <hr/> DEL, you're a nut. A sweet nut perhaps, but a nut nevertheless. Are you in the SM business? That's a weird kind of 'love', but you're forgiven.
DEL Registered User Posts: 625 (8/28/03 5:55 pm) Reply	 Coitus and MKFaizi <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Paul: DEL, you're a nut. A sweet nut perhaps, but a nut nevertheless. Are you in the SM business? That's a weird kind of 'love', but you're forgiven. <hr/> No, I'm not in the SM business. But I visited a SM festival for the first time last year. I did it test my prejudice and fears. I would never have been seen dead in such a place so I went to crack myself on that issue. On arrival my head was spinning and my body was shaking. I could not believe I was actually there. By the end of the day I discovered that the people in there were actually human and many of them very intelligent with an amazing insight into human nature. I asked every question I could think of and I had a fantastic discussion and debate with a large group of them. They called me a "vanilla person". I haven't been back since but I confronted my fears and prejudices and absorbed their essence so now I must move on to the next challenge.

Paul Registered User Posts: 45 (8/28/03 6:12 pm) Reply	 Coitus and MKFaizi <hr/> DEL, when I said that you're a nut, I was judging. That instantly made me a nut too, because of my judgement. I'm OK, you're OK. Who can tell anyway? :-)
---	---

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Coitus and Language

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
jimhaz Registered User Posts: 306 (8/28/03 6:41 pm) Reply 	 Re: spanking <hr/> I didn't know what a vanilla person was, so I looked it up on the web..lol Vanilla "It has come to my attention that there are many people that like to be spanked that are in a relationship to what we call a vanilla. This term is not meant to be derogatory, it just means a person that doesn't have or understand the BDSM kink. So in the interest of better relationships, I am going to give some pointers that may help improve the overall quality and maybe quantity of spankings in the world today. This is not a "how to guide" as the spankee can explain that, but rather a guide to understanding what is going on emotionally so that it will hopefully help you feel better about spanking. First, if you are a vanilla reading this and you only spank because your significant other (SIG) wants it, take heart! You are more than halfway there already. The first and only good reason to spank someone is because they want it. If they don't want it, or at least haven't agreed to it, then it is abuse and you are reading the wrong article. Spanking is not about pain! Rather it is about caring and trust. Someone who wants to be spanked wants to have someone that they can trust care for them. Luckily, it is you! Here is how you have been feeling up until now when you spank your SIG. You are afraid that you will hurt them and can't tell if you are hurting them or not. You concentrate on their bottom and strike it wondering and hoping that you are doing it right. Even though the view is nice, the only thing you get out of it is the fact that your SIG appreciates that you did or at least tried to do it.

Now I will tell you how a spanko feels when spanking a bottom. The view is there to enjoy. ( Had to get that out of the way!) A spanko takes in the whole person, the way they breathe, wiggle, make sounds, and everything else that can be seen, felt, or heard from that angle. In other words, we spank the whole person not just where the blows land! You will then be able to tell if they aren't feeling it or if they are REALLY feeling it. You will have to trust that your playmate has told you how hard they like it and has established some "safe words" to clue you in if you get lost. Traffic lights are a good method or numbers. Red means stop at once. Yellow means just about right. Green means harder you whimper... ER cancel that! It means try a little harder dear. Don't be afraid to ask them if they are all right if you get worried. It shows you care and how you feel is important too.

After it is over, and you have had time to hug and other things, it is a good idea for you to get an honest opinion of how you did. At this point your SIG is going to be afraid of scaring you off as even a bad spanking by a trusted and caring person is better than no spanking at all. Here you need to reassure them that you only want to learn to do it better and that they are going to have to work with you because you are a vanilla. Find out what they liked about what you did and what they didn't. Even spankos don't give perfect spankings so don't take any of it as criticism of you.

Communications is how any relationship even a spanking one gets better. Think back on what clues were there when those events happened. Was your SIG wiggling, whimpering, breathing heavy, etc.? Learning those signals will make the next spanking much better and who knows, maybe the joy of being a good spanking artist as you play your SIG like a violin will get you wanting to do it more often.

Bruises, welts and marks? They just look worse than they are! Some people bruise so easily that any worthwhile spanking is going to bruise them horribly. Can't be helped and it is nothing to be concerned about as long as you are following the above rules and your SIG may even be proud of them!

I would be remiss if I didn't include a little about head-space. Head-space, sometimes called sub-space, happens when the person getting spanked reaches a high where they become hardly aware of anything. Externally, they may seem to melt. I like to think of it as a state in which they feel totally cared for and totally at peace. If you get them into head-space, you have done a marvelous job"

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 626
(8/29/03 9:50 am)
Reply

 Re: spanking

---

Nice find jimhaz.

Quote:

---

I would be remiss if I didn't include a little about head-space. Head-space, sometimes called sub-space, happens when the person getting spanked reaches a high where they become hardly aware of anything. Externally, they may seem to melt. I like to think of it as a state in which they feel totally cared for and totally at peace. If you get them into head-space, you have done a marvelous job

---

This "head-space" is like enlightenment. The process is similar.

MKFaizi
Registered User
Posts: 1058
(8/29/03 10:06 am)
Reply

 Re: spanking

---

Del actually wrote:

Quote:

---

This "head-space" is like enlightenment. The process is similar.

---

You fucking idiot. How like you to equate sex with enlightenment.

You are utterly delusional -- melting, unaware, cared for.

That's not enlightenment. Hell, that's not even an orgasm.

Has it ever crossed your mind that enlightenment might require years of work; that it might require a bit more than reading Weininger in a cursory way?

	What an ass you are. Tell me what you know of enlightenment, cockroach. Faizi
jimhaz Registered User Posts: 308 (8/29/03 1:40 pm) Reply 	Re: spanking <hr/> Anyone who makes a post full of rage and who speaks from an emotional viewpoint of superiority, cannot possibly 'know' what enlightenment means either. Unless of course the negative effect of your bipolar problem on your consciousness/wisdom is stronger than the degree you are enlightened.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1419 (8/29/03 2:52 pm) Reply	--- <hr/> You think Marsha's enraged?!
jimhaz Registered User Posts: 311 (8/29/03 3:35 pm) Reply 	Re: --- <hr/> Does her post contribute? Well I guess compared to yours, they do, but otherwise we like Marsha because she is totally wrapped up in emotions, so it enables other emotional people to react. Do I think she is enraged? Absolutely, almost undoubtably except if she is playing the role of a teacher, but due to her bipolar problem, she is too fucking mixed up to legitimately play that role, so yes - absolutely. Personally I agree with DEL's opinion 'this headspace is enlightenment', because enlightenment as a new form of consciousness is fiction, and all DEL is doing is pointing out that enlightenment comes in many forms – and importantly – by it's very nature it is transitory. All of us who have been here for a while know that, deep down. Most people who come here are on a path to insanity or are insane. That is clear, but it is also entertaining.

DEL

Registered User

Posts: 627

(8/29/03 5:11 pm)

Reply

 spank the whole person

---

Quote:

---

A spanko takes in the whole person, the way they breathe, wiggle, make sounds, and everything else that can be seen, felt, or heard from that angle. In other words, we spank the whole person not just where the blows land!

---

This is deep.

You see it doesn't make logical sense does it?

How can you spank the whole person when your hand only impacts on a particular area?

This is also the same magick/mystery of the path to enlightenment. It takes discipline, awareness and focus.

Quote:

---

they breathe, wiggle, make sounds

---

Please don't get upset with Marsha. She is a woman desperately in need of a good, thorough spanking. She is the type who can never reach head-space/enlightenment through discussion, logic and reason.

She can't help but get enraged because I delivered the first intellectual spank right on target with the correct pressure thus spanking not just her mind but her entire being.

It's not easy to do this kind of thing consistently.

So you can see the relation.

Sometimes the King has all the people on his side by delivering a great speech or accomplishing a great project. But if he makes a slip the people's morale and spirit falls.

suergaz Registered User Posts: 1427 (8/29/03 7:01 pm) Reply	 Re: spank the whole person <hr/> But I thought Marsha was a woman in need of a good thorough dishdasha.
drowden Forum Host Posts: 1379 (8/29/03 11:21 pm) Reply 	 Re: spank the whole person <hr/> Marsha is entirely correct. Del's attempt at likening enlightenment to anything sexual is idiotic. I've seldom seen such wanton stupidit - from the lot of you. Dan Rowden
birdofhermes Registered User Posts: 875 (8/29/03 11:23 pm) Reply	 Re: spanking <hr/> I've actually wondered about the spanking phenomenon before, but I haven't seen any good insights into it here. One question I have is, assuming the spankee is female, are there an equal number of men who enjoy it? And why so many vanilla people here? :) Jimmy! You are in fine form here lately! The interesting thing about DEL is that he seems to be changing more than most of us, and that is entertaining to watch. In all his mystic musings, he has actually come up with a couple of gems, although quite probably I might be the only person here to think so. Also, he has failed as a misogynist. DEL, the head space is not enlightenment, it is a form of altered consciousness. QRS seem to think enlightenment is almost (but not entirely) a matter of having logical insight. Others think enlightenment is an altered state. But I think you need both, and one can augment the other. If a person is gifted with a profound altered state of consciousness, it is almost certain to change his opinion and way of viewing the world, but to really get mileage out of it, there needs to be some head work. Unlike QRS, I do believe that altered states can lead directly to enlightenment, but they dislike this very much, as it is freely available (except people avoid it and fear it and it's often illegal)and does not require much intellectual superiority, and is a lot of fun. Tantric sex is about attaining altered states that are not (usually) illegal.

QRS think it is far superior to realize that all is one via spatial reasoning, than to experience it directly and know it.

Luckily, I've had it both ways.

I can enter a moderate sort of "head space" through regular sex. Imagine what a spanking could do!

MKFaizi

Registered User
Posts: 1061
(8/30/03 9:58 am)

Reply

Re: spanking

---

Strong language does not connote rage or emotion. You are short-sighted if you believe that.

I have not been enraged for years.

Faizi

MKFaizi

Registered User
Posts: 1062
(8/30/03 11:16 am)

Reply

Re: spanking

---

Jimhaz:

Quote:

---

Anyone who makes a post full of rage and who speaks from an emotional viewpoint of superiority, cannot possibly 'know' what enlightenment means either.

---

It was not a post full of rage. It was a post full of truth. That's why it bothers you. You would like to be able to chalk what I said up to the raging emotions of a woman. Why not? That would be pretty easy. I am a woman biologically. I expressed my thought in strong language rather than a language of contrite and submissive, smiling chatter, like most of the monkeys here use.

Not only would it be easy for you to chalk up my truthful statements to the ranting of a woman, you can feel smugly assured of your correctness in so doing by the concurrence of your fellow hens whom you know will support you. Your clucking and whistling from high up in the roost are truly disgusting.

How like a woman you are. You kid yourself that you engage here for recreational purposes; for fun and diversion -- like a rich housewife at a game of Bridge. In your mind, anything goes. Enlightenment is as close as your hand to your dick.

As for superiority, I am superior to you. That's not emotion but reason. I am not proud that I am superior to you. It's not a matter of pride. I have done the work. You are clearly wanking. You come here only for the purpose of playing.

Quote:

---

Unless of course the negative effect of your bipolar problem on your consciousness/wisdom is stronger than the degree you are enlightened.

---

The fact that I am supposedly bipolar is not a problem. Again, this is something to which you feel you can justifiably allude in order to discount the truth I have written.

You desperately hope that the fact that I am a woman and that I am bipolar will let you off the hook.

I don't think it's that easy.

I am not enlightened but I do know well what enlightenment entails. It is not just a matter of engaging in discussion here. It certainly has nothing to do with sexual head room or ecstasy. It is, in fact, the opposite of ecstasy.

Enlightenment is the result of careful examination of self to the point of the then-natural sublimation of ego. It is the progressive transcending of self. It is the living of a life devoted to thought, even if one must devote oneself to thought while working a job and raising a family. It is dedication to truth.

This takes hard work over a number of years.

When I first started writing to Genius about six years ago, it was somewhat of a game for me. I enjoyed battles with David Quinn and Dan Rowden and Kevin Solway and others. I was very flamboyant and egotistical. I got a charge out of what I could write and the responses I could provoke. I was always ready to do battle. It was fun.

I am not here to engage in game playing or in egotistical battle now. In six years of writing, I have learned much. In six years of writing, I have had some harsh lessons and I have learned from those lessons. My life has closely paralleled the list and the forum.

I don't believe that enlightenment makes people alike. I don't believe that Dan Rowden and Kevin Solway and David Quinn are alike. Each has a slightly different interpretation of enlightenment. Enlightenment is not a brotherhood that is exclusive. It is not a brotherhood at all nor a club. It is an act of individuality; a conscious decision to separate from the herd -- not just the obvious herd but any herd. There is no such thing as an enlightened herd.

Enlightenment is hard work that takes years to begin to achieve. I also think it is a matter of genetics and what I can only call luck or fate.

It's wonderful that you and DEL and others believe that sex is enlightenment. It's wonderful that you can feel assured that you can work together to prove that. It is wonderful that you can feel assured that the fact that I am a woman means that you can discount my input here.

How wonderful you must feel knowing that you can do this.

It is ironic that you call yourself a man.

You are a shameless cunt.

Faizi

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1063

(8/30/03 11:50 am)

Reply

 Re: spanking

Jimhaz:

Quote:

Does her post contribute?

That is the very pith of irony. You have the nerve to question if my post is contributive to truth and enlightenment when you have just finished idly chortling about the enlightenment of what may be called sexual head-room brought about by spanking.

By such a question, I gather that you are implying that I am disruptive.

If speaking truth in the wake of extreme and stupefying delusion is disruptive, yes, I am disruptive.

If you want to discuss sex, discuss it. But don't pretend it has anything to do with enlightenment.

It's the pretense that disgusts me; and the smug hypocrisy.

You would have me expelled from this forum for the want of contributing when you are spending time looking up information on spanking to post here in support of DEL's declaration that sexual head room is enlightenment.

If I can be expelled on that ground, then, I am happy to be expelled.

In the words of a poet from long ago, "SUE ME, SUCKER!!"

Faizi

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 628
(8/30/03 12:23 pm)
Reply

 The duality of enlightenment

---

PERFECT !

Quote:

---

birdofhermes:

DEL, the head space is not enlightenment, it is a form of altered consciousness. QRS seem to think enlightenment is almost (but not entirely) a matter of having logical insight. Others think enlightenment is an altered state. But I think you need both, and one can augment the other. If a person is gifted with a profound altered state of consciousness, it is almost certain to change his opinion and way of viewing the world, but to really get mileage out of it, there needs to be some head work.

---

You cracked it birdofhermes!
The duality of enlightenment is the truth.
Fantastic! It makes sense.
This is why people are struggling and failing to define enlightenment.

Enlightenment is the combination of an altered state combined with clear insight.
The power of belief and faith provides the altered state and the power of reason provides the clear insight. The combination can be made manifest in Group 1 or Group 2.

MKFaizi
Registered User
Posts: 1064
(8/30/03 12:27 pm)
Reply

 Re: spanking

---

Jimhaz:

Quote:

---

enlightenment comes in many forms – and importantly – by it's very nature it is transitory. All of us who have been here for a while know that, deep down.

---

Enlightenment is not transitory. It is a permanent. Once there, you cannot go back. You are stuck with it.

What do you mean by "all of us who have been here for a while?" You speak as though you are an "owner," as though you are in a position to judge.

How long have you been here, Jimmy? Two years?

Tell us precisely what you have learned, beyond the enlightenment of sexual headroom achieved through spanking.

Who are "all of us?" I have written to Genius for six years. There is no "us."

My resolved guess is that you are referring to all those who had free rein during the period when David Quinn and Dan Rowden were not writing to the forum; even when I was not writing to the forum.

How you must miss those times devoted to the placation of ignorance.

Be patient. I am certain those times will return.

Faizi

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 49
(8/30/03 12:32 pm)
Reply

 MKFaizi vs. jimhaz

---

But, MKFaizi (I wouldn't dare to type 'Marsha', although I would love to!), jimhaz is merely the jester in your kingdom (and this forum), at least I thought he was. So when it comes to expelling... Chop his head off!

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 629
(8/30/03 1:00 pm)
Reply

 Quality not Quantity

---

Great! The feedback has opened up a fresh understanding of what it means to be enlightened.

The duality of enlightenment answers a lot of questions. Enlightenment is to be measured in intensity. Just like lightning strikes are measured in volts. The fact that somebody has been discussing enlightenment 6 years means nothing. A stubborn head might delay the penetration of truth another 10 years. Just like a good spanking could allow a person to experience an orgasm who has been frigid for years.

I thought enlightenment was like ascending stairs. I saw it as linear and logical. Then sometimes I thought enlightenment was a flash of feeling that came out of nowhere and was unpredictable and defied logic.

The truth is that by developing you powers of reason and your powers of faith you can experience higher levels of enlightenment intensity at any time or any place.

DEL Registered User Posts: 630 (8/30/03 1:19 pm) Reply	 <hr/> Quote: <hr/> MKFaizi: If you want to discuss sex, discuss it. But don't pretend it has anything to do with enlightenment. <hr/> It sounds to me that you are saying sex has nothing to do with enlightenment. If that is what you are saying then I don't know where you get your information from. The issue of celibacy has been a much muted point for centuries. I thought Mr. Quinn advocated avoiding women. I don't think he was referring to the holes in the female head.
DEL Registered User Posts: 631 (8/30/03 1:24 pm) Reply	 <hr/> Have you noticed how that effective communication allows only one to speak at a time. Words are like semen.
Paul Registered User Posts: 51 (8/30/03 1:29 pm) Reply	 <hr/> DEL, Sex has nothing to do with enlightenment. Over and out.

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Coitus and Language

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
DEL Registered User Posts: 632 (8/30/03 5:11 pm) Reply	Re: sex and enlightenment. <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Paul: Sex has nothing to do with enlightenment. Over and out. <hr/> First fatality
Paul Registered User Posts: 52 (8/30/03 5:17 pm) Reply	Re: sex and enlightenment <hr/> Sex is for fun and procreation. There's nothing more to it. Oh, and for making up after a quarrel, of course.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 559
(8/31/03 12:21 am)
Reply

Re: sex and enlightenment

---

Surely we shouldn't be encouraging him!

Not that I'd know but I can't imagine that this 'head-space' is anything like enlightenment, although the enlightened person may well reside in such a place with more regularity and ease than most. Your 'head-space' is what is more commonly referred to as 'The Zone' by practitioners of sports, disciplines, art and the like. Others might refer to it as being lost in the moment, perhaps when they are in the throes of sexual ecstasy or even, more simply, when they are playing a computer game or suspending the reality of disbelief whilst watching a movie.

It can constitute a profound state of awareness and natural flowing reaction, or it can constitute a profound state of un-awareness and spaced out natural non-reaction.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1432
(8/31/03 9:57 pm)
Reply

---

---

Well, DEL is right, sex does have to do with enlightenment. But I cannot understand wanting to spank anyone or be spanked.

MKFaizi
Registered User
Posts: 1067
(9/1/03 12:38 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

If Del is right -- sex has to do with enlightenment -- well, it is not surprising that so few people are writing here these days.

The level of intelligence here is woefully low.

Faizi

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 314

(9/1/03 4:08 pm)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Ohh well I guess I'd better have a go at replying to Marsha's responses.

It was not a post full of rage. It was a post full of truth.

Language is never perfect. At the right time strong words can make a point sink in, but they can also turn people away from the message. Note that David does not write to induce emotions, whereas your style often does. You therefore get strongly worded posts in return.

Not only would it be easy for you to chalk up my truthful statements to the ranting of a woman, you can feel smugly assured of your correctness in so doing by the concurrence of your fellow hens whom you know will support you. Your clucking and whistling from high up in the roost are truly disgusting.

It is true that I'd like to chalk what I said up to the raging emotions of a woman. It fits in with my viewpoints about women.

People do not support those who are inconsistent. No-one here is likely to support me – I make far too many statements that I cannot support with facts and am therefore often wrong. I also drink which makes me inconsistent. This can get a bit disgusting at times, but a forum is just a forum and I'll use it how I wish.

How like a woman you are. You kid yourself that you engage here for recreational purposes; for fun and diversion -- like a rich housewife at a game of Bridge. In your mind, anything goes. Enlightenment is as close as your hand to your dick.

It is better to question everything than to accept it willynilly. My reaction to this concept of enlightenment is reasonable. I'm very dubious that permanent enlightenment has been achieved by anyone, ever – and as such treat it with a degree of disdain. Those who profess to be enlightened may have just talked themselves into believing it much like those who believe in the existence of a god - and when they are clever people such as David and Dan they can get away with it. This is particularly the case for those who strongly desire enlightenment and have been attempting to obtain same over many years. I'm dubious, not totally disbelieving - the mind has a degree of power over its own matter so it is possible that some form of significant mental change does occur.

As for superiority, I am superior to you.

When I first started writing to Genius about six years ago, it was somewhat of a game for me.

Well you have superior knowledge and memory, I admit that. But so what - I'm a bloke :)

Being superior or otherwise shouldn't really be of much relevance to what people are seeking here or say to one another here, but truthfully I will admit I have a desire for competition, like everyone else, and thus it does come into play. Competition is realised through playing games.

The fact that I am supposedly bipolar is not a problem. Again, this is something to which you feel you can justifiably allude in order to discount the truth I have written. You desperately hope that the fact that I am a woman and that I am bipolar will let you off the hook.

Normally it would be poor character to refer to another illness that they cannot change, but as this is a forum dealing with the state of one's brain I don't apologise for referring to it. I see it as the background cause of your desire to be masculine and blatant.

I'd guess you were first drawn to philosophy, not so much for the gaining of wisdom, but because you wanted to get on top of your wildly fluctuating emotions. You desperately hoped that enlightenment will get you off the hook.

I agree with the paragraphs you included about the path to enlightenment, except:

I don't believe that enlightenment makes people alike. It is an act of individuality; a conscious decision to separate from the herd -- not just the obvious herd but any herd.

I do believe enlightenment makes people think alike, in fact that is it's purpose – to think factually. Although there are many facts there are usually only a few pertinent ones and the QRS agree on most things, although they express themselves a bit differently.

It's wonderful that you can feel assured that you can work together to prove that. It is wonderful that you can feel assured that the fact that I am a woman means that you can discount my input here. You would have me expelled from this forum..." In the words of a poet from long ago, "SUE ME, SUCKER!!"

Be careful Marsha. Thoughts that others want to get you in some way can lead to progressively insane behaviour. I wish you no harm, however I am willing to make statements that might harm you – there is a difference.

You are a shameless cunt.

Thanks, but no, I have shame at my actions on occasions, - particularly when I find myself being hypocritical - but only when I feel whatever I have said or done is hampering my present or future chances of happiness. Thankfully I have less shame than most people though as this is a necessary requirement to see underneath the veneer of why people think the way they do.

You have the nerve to question if my post is contributive to truth and enlightenment when you have just finished idly chortling about the enlightenment of what may be called sexual head-room brought about by spanking.

I did not feel the post of your I reponded to was contributive to the discussion at hand. DEL has been making an effort, albeit that I think there are far better questions to be posting about than spanking. You don't manage the forum, neither do I, so I'd leave it to Dan or David to decide whether to delete DEL's new threads or give him a talking to. We have all had a go a DEL before, but I have noticed an improvement from his initial posts, although I sometimes wonder what the hell he is talking about. What I like about DEL is not his posts but that he is willing to be a doer and go out and try things like the Weinerboy gathering and the SM festival – that shows a true inquisitive mind to me. He has potential.

It may be that you are too full of penis envy. It would make sense as a) you try and be as masculine as possible b) you have a go at all the young immature blokes (like me) who don't fit into the QRS mold – they are wasting a talent that you could have used much better have had if you'd been born a male.

Of course, being a hypocrit I went and had a go at Suergaz not long after getting irritated at you having a go at DEL :)

It certainly has nothing to do with sexual head room or ecstasy. It is, in fact, the opposite of ecstasy. It's wonderful that you and DEL and others believe that sex is enlightenment.

Me: all DEL is doing is pointing out that enlightenment comes in many forms – and importantly – by it's very nature it is transitory. Marsha: Enlightenment is not transitory. It is a permanent. Once there, you cannot go back. You are stuck with it.

This was one of those 'wrong' comments that I sometimes make. What I said would only be possible if there were many forms of enlightenment.

Regardless of what I said, I don't really believe that sex is enlightenment. I just feel there are similarities in the way it makes people feel – that this 'headroom' is the same form of mental activity. A sort of a thinking correctly without thinking. Concentrating deeply without having the irritation of trying to concentrate. I don't believe that the QRS way is the only way – it might be the best and most lasting way but not the only way (not that I'm suggesting sex can lead to enlightenment of the wisdom type).

What do you mean by "all of us who have been here for a while?" You speak as though you are an "owner," as though you are in a position to judge.

Yes I am an owner in the sense that I own what I have posted. Yes I am in a position to judge as we all need to make judgements – generally the more the better when they are not based on emotion. I will say though that that whole paragraph of mine was a bit stupid.

Who are "all of us?" I have written to Genius for six years. There is no "us." My resolved guess is that you are referring to all those who had free rein during the period when David Quinn and Dan Rowden were not writing to the forum; even when I was not writing to the forum.

I do think there is an Them and Us – your statement above indicates same. 'Them' is those convinced in the QRS enlightenment method and 'Us' is the rest. You are one of the few people in the 'Them' category. Being an 'Us' does not mean however that we reject entirely their teachings though – it just makes us open to doubt.

The forum is too boring when Dan and David are not posting. I stopped visiting as frequently. The rest of us don't respect each other enough to even try and compete (or teach).

Tell us precisely what you have learned, beyond the enlightenment of sexual headroom achieved through spanking.

I have learnt some things. I have changed. I'm even more remote from normal society than I was two years ago, which indicates my disrespect for the subjugation of truth has grown.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 1779
(9/1/03 5:59 pm)
Reply

re: altered states

---

BirdofHermes wrote:

Quote:

---

QRS seem to think enlightenment is almost (but not entirely) a matter of having logical insight. Others think enlightenment is an altered state. But I think you need both, and one can augment the other.

---

I can't speak for the R or the S, so I'm afraid you'll have to make do with the Q.

I agree that altered states can augment one's rationality and stimulate one's mind to deeper perceptiveness, and vice versa. Both are important. If one's reasoning isn't producing altered states in the form of changes of perspective and mystical experiences, then it is a sign that one is not throwing one's entire being into the reasoning process. One is holding back, as it were, and thus limiting the ability of reason to produce changes.

Having said that, it needs to be kept in mind that enlightenment is utterly beyond the realm of altered states, just as it is utterly beyond the realm of normal states. It is part of what makes enlightenment so marvellous, that it is entirely beyond all states of consciousness. Altered states can certainly be mind-blowing, exciting and informative, but enlightenment is something else altogether. It is absolutely indescribable (and yet comprehensible).

Quote:

---

Unlike QRS, I do believe that altered states can lead directly to enlightenment, but they dislike this very much, as it is freely available (except people avoid it and fear it and it's often illegal)and does not require much intellectual superiority, and is a lot of fun.

---

Altered states can only lead to enlightenment if the individual involved has the wisdom and rationality to make proper use of them. Otherwise, no amount of earth-shattering altered states will help them. The same principle applies to any experience in life, not just to altered states.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1435

(9/1/03 10:34 pm)

Reply

Re: re: altered states

---

Marsha:--

Quote:

---

If Del is right -- sex has to do with enlightenment -- well, it is not surprising that so few people are writing here these days.

---

You can kill the if. Sex has to do with enlightenment. I'm not sure why you wish it didn't.

Quote:

---

The level of intelligence here is woefully low.

Faizi

---

O, the woe.

David:--

Quote:

---

It is part of what makes enlightenment so marvellous, that it is entirely beyond all states of consciousness.

---

If enlightenment is not a state or states of consciousness, what is it?

Quote:

---

but enlightenment is something else altogether. It is absolutely indescribable (and yet comprehensible).

---

How can what is indescribable be comprehensible?

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 1780
(9/2/03 11:31 am)
Reply

re: altered states

---

Suegraz wrote:

Quote:

---

Sex has to do with enlightenment.

---

Only wankers engage in sex.

Quote:

---

DQ: It is part of what makes enlightenment so marvellous, that it is entirely beyond all states of consciousness.

Sue: If enlightenment is not a state or states of consciousness, what is it?

---

The perception of Reality which is experienced, by the enlightened person, in all states of consciousness.

States of consciousness are like waves in an ocean. Whereas as mystical people are easily dazzled and distracted by the appearance of each new wave, enlightened people perceive the stillness of the ocean itself.

Quote:

---

DQ: but enlightenment is something else altogether. It is absolutely indescribable (and yet comprehensible).

Sue: How can what is indescribable be comprehensible?

---

One comprehends that Reality has no form to describe.

Lbartoli
Registered User
Posts: 273
(9/2/03 11:56 am)
Reply

Re: spanking

---

MKFaizi wrote:

-----

Strong language does not connote rage or emotion. You are short-sighted if you believe that.

I have not been enraged for years.

Faizi

LB: Right, sure.....you were pissed as hell a while back on the Genius list, have you forgotten?

I had suggested your contributions were nearly worthless and that the owners ought to think about giving you the boot (btw, i just made it up so we could all see your true colors) and you went right thru the roof!

If i was near to you at the time and we were alone there is little doubt in my mind that you would have assaulted or even killed me.

And to watch you re-gurgitate QSR rhetoric concerning what is and isnt Enlightenment, and to witness Dan saying at every opportunity "Marsha is correct" is becoming difficult to stomach.

No wonder i'm hardly compelled to contribute.

Leo

ps. No offense intended, just trying to improve things.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1438

(9/2/03 11:59 am)

Reply

Re: re: altered states

---

Quote:

---

Only wankers engage in sex.

---

You're forgetting fuckers, lovemakers, budgerigars etc.

Quote:

---

Suergaz: If enlightenment is not a state or states of consciousness, what is it?

Dave: The perception of Reality which is experienced, by the enlightened person, in all states of consciousness.

---

All perception belongs to consciousness. Enlightenment is a state of being, and as such, is a state of consciousness.

Quote:

---

States of consciousness are like waves in an ocean. Whereas as mystical people are easily dazzled and distracted by the appearance of each new wave, enlightened people perceive the stillness of the ocean itself.

---

I don't think stillness is the right word, perhaps you mean singularity.

Quote:

---

Suergaz:--How can what is indescribable be comprehensible?

David:-One comprehends that Reality has no form to describe.

---

But that is only comprehending something about reality, and not reality itself.

I do not, like you, see reality as formless, but as an infinity of forms, as form itself.

Edited by: suergaz at: 9/2/03 12:09 pm

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1068

(9/2/03 1:18 pm)

Reply

Re: re: altered states

---

I am so completely sickened by what I am reading here, that I must recover before I can write. I have some time off work through Thursday so I hope that the freedom to think may facilitate my recovery.

If not, wank on.

Faizi

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 1387

(9/2/03 1:50 pm)

Reply

Sex and Sexuality

---

Whether sex has anything to do with enlightenment all depends on what one means when one says sex has something to do with enlightenment.

Understanding sex certainly does, where that means an understanding of sexuality as that has everything to do with issues of the various dimensions of mind - the passive and the active, the submissive and the dominant and idealism etc. Such things are very important matters of consideration of the truth seeker.

In that sense sex is definitely relevant to the path to enlightenment. Beyond or outside that I can't think of any relevance sex might have to enlightenment.

As far as spanking is concerned, I can well imagine women liking it and men liking to perform it as that does speak to the submissive and dominant aspects of human behaviour. One hopes that that is the kind of direction Del was taking in his attempt at analysis, but one equally suspects that hope to be somewhat forlorn.

I'm finding it difficult to tell...
Dan Rowden

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 635
(9/2/03 2:47 pm)
Reply

Sex and Sexuality

---

Quote:

---

drowden:
I'm finding it difficult to tell...

---

If you said you found it easy I would doubt your credibility. It's a tough issue and very difficult to discuss without emotion.
Sex and Character is a very good book on this subject.

Who is able to discuss rationally the relationship between sex and enlightenment?

Very few would be the answer.

If one starts talking about sex and a woman uses words like "disgusting". Be sure that she is fucked up in the head. No matter how sober, decent and intelligent she may appear.

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1393
(9/2/03 3:09 pm)
Reply

Re: Sex and Sexuality

---

That would depend on what you actually meant by a relationship between sex and enlightenment and what she thought you meant and whether you were making sufficiently clear what you indeed actually meant.

That last part is what I'm finding a bit tough. The issue itself is something I understand perfectly well.

Dan Rowden

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 636
(9/2/03 3:37 pm)
Reply

Beast or Nemesis?

---

Quote:

---

MKFaizi:

I am so completely sickened by what I am reading here, that I must recover before I can write. I have some time off work through Thursday so I hope that the freedom to think may facilitate my recovery.

If not, wank on.

---

Now brace yourselves for this reply after she has had time to think. Is she charging up for a evil rant like a dog barking or a dragon breathing fire? A beast with no knowledge of "The way" but lives only to be an obstacle.

or

Will there be light in her utterance?

We shall see.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 878
(9/2/03 3:45 pm)
Reply

Re: re: altered states

---

Quote:

---

I can't speak for the R or the S, so I'm afraid you'll have to make do with the Q.

---

sometimes it seems appropriate to say "QRS" as you guys do generally agree on the basics, but I am well aware that I am taking a lot of liberty in doing so.

Quote:

---

If one's reasoning isn't producing altered states in the form of changes of perspective and mystical experiences, then it is a sign that one is not throwing one's entire being into the reasoning process. One is holding back, as it were, and thus limiting the ability of reason to produce changes.

---

What an interesting thing you have said. Very interesting indeed. You redeem yourself.

Or at least, you would if you had not said, "Only wankers have sex."

The point I was originally trying to make is that a person can get broadsided by an altered state that produces some sort of profound perception, and that for a thinking person this will be a stimulus to the mind, something to chew on and make sense of.

Quote:

---

Altered states can only lead to enlightenment if the individual involved has the wisdom and rationality to make proper use of them.

---

I agree, although I still think people ought to be having altered states with or without wisdom as it makes them mellower and more in touch with nature and that sort of thing; less destructive.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 638
(9/2/03 5:59 pm)
Reply

Beast or Nemesis

---

Quote:

---

Lbartoli:
And to watch you re-gurgitate QSR rhetoric concerning what is and isnt Enlightenment, and to witness Dan saying at every opportunity "Marsha is correct" is becoming difficult to stomach.

---

I have the same feelings but I must challenge my prejudices or I can't progress to the next level. "Marsha is correct" is like a beast of a chain. I don't know why Dan allows the beast to roar at us.

Maybe it is his unconscious mission to care for the beast the blocks the way. It may be good for our development.

Then again maybe due to my own blindness I perceive a beast in the way when actually it is a guide.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 1781

(9/2/03 6:03 pm)

Reply

Re: re: altered states

---

Suegraz wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: Only wankers engage in sex.

Sue: You're forgetting fuckers, lovemakers, budgerigars etc.

---

All wankers. What is sex but using another person's body to masturbate with?

Quote:

---

Suergaz: If enlightenment is not a state or states of consciousness, what is it?

Dave: The perception of Reality which is experienced, by the enlightened person, in all states of consciousness.

Suergaz: All perception belongs to consciousness. Enlightenment is a state of being, and as such, is a state of consciousness.

---

Enlightenment is not a state of being. It might be a different mode of existence to that of the ordinary person, but there is no particular state of being or consciousness that the enlightened person dwells in. His inner relationship with the whole world has changed, and as such he does not depend on particular states of consciousness to sustain his enlightenment.

Quote:

---

Suergaz:--How can what is indescribable be comprehensible?

David:-One comprehends that Reality has no form to describe.

Suergaz: But that is only comprehending something about reality, and not reality itself.

---

No, it is Reality itself.

Quote:

---

I do not, like you, see reality as formless, but as an infinity of forms, as form itself.

---

From the perspective of enlightenment, formlessness and the infinity of forms are the same thing. However, you do need to understand both aspects.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 639
(9/2/03 6:04 pm)
Reply

Beast or Nemesis

---

In all the stories and myths that have survived through the centuries the lead character must always face obstacles and enemies on his quest. There are dragons and beasts of all kinds blocking "the way". I think these all illustrate a great truth.

I have difficulty recognising a beasts in contrast to perhaps what one would call a nemesis. I'm not sure if I am using the right words but this is what I mean.

People will oppose you on your journey through life and there are basically 2 types:

1) The Beast

This is the type of person who is a bit like a dragon or a guard dog. This person has no understanding of the quest but makes it her life work to make it as difficult for people to go through the doors and ascend the levels. She is totally ignorant of the real issues. If the beast is large enough it not only blocks the way but obscures it entirely. Like Medussa?

This is a low level purifier. The beast is there to help you conquer your fears. If you kill the beast it makes little difference in comparison to a high level purifier.

2) The Nemesis

This type of person is in direct opposition to you and also understands the quest. This person you must treat with respect even though you hate him. He appears to negate something within you. He is your other self. He cannot be killed like a beast. If he dies you die. If you cut off a piece of him a piece of you comes off.
He is a high level purifier.

Is it Beast in contrast to Nemesis? Or are there better words to explain the contrast?

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31n
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Coitus and Language

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
DEL Registered User Posts: 640 (9/2/03 6:14 pm) Reply	 sickness <hr/> Quote: <hr/> MKFaizi: I am so completely sickened by what I am reading here, that I must recover before I can write. <hr/> Did you know that fungi, viruses and bacteria feel sickened as well when we put medicine on them? If they recover the body remains sick. But here is the problem. We need a certain level of bacteria in the system to remain healthy. And if we do not fight diseases regularly our imune system becomes weak.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 641
(9/2/03 6:31 pm)
Reply

 coitus and language

---

Sex had plenty to do with enlightenment. It has been the most muted subject for centuries.

So it returns to the thread title coitus and language.

LISTENING

I'm not sure if one can remain unaffected by haveing sex with someone or by deliberately refusing a sexual offer. In the same way if you choose to agree or disagree with what someone says it has a permanent affect.

HEARING

This is the equivolent of the fetish realm. Spanking and all such are in this zone. This zone is very complex and esoteric.

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1394
(9/2/03 10:55 pm)
Reply

 Re: coitus and language

---

Everything that a thoughtful person does or does not do or agrees or disagrees with in any area that involves mental discrimination is significant to that person.

That's what being a thoughtful being is - genuine conscious awareness of the content of one's discriminations.

Dan Rowden

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1440
(9/2/03 10:58 pm)
Reply

 Re: Beast or Nemesis

---

Quote:

---

All wankers. What is sex but using another person's body to masturbate with?

---

The pleasuring of anothers body.

Quote:

---

Enlightenment is not a state of being. It might be a different mode of existence to that of the ordinary person, but there is no particular state of being or consciousness that the enlightened person dwells in. His inner relationship with the whole world has changed, and as such he does not depend on particular states of consciousness to sustain his enlightenment.

---

Rubbish.

Quote:

---

Suergaz:--How can what is indescribable be comprehensible?

David:-One comprehends that Reality has no form to describe.

Suergaz: But that is only comprehending something about reality, and not reality itself.

David:-No, it is Reality itself.

---

So you are saying the comprehension of reality is reality itself! That is like saying the universe is conscious of itself.

Quote:

---

From the perspective of enlightenment, formlessness and the infinity of forms are the same thing. However, you do need to understand both aspects.

---

Then you are not enlightened. Do you mean that I, personally, do not need to understand both 'aspects'?! What of formlessness could there possibly be to understand?

Edited by: suergaz at: 9/2/03 11:03 pm

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1441

(9/2/03 11:21 pm)

Reply

 Re: Beast or Nemesis

---

DEL:--

Quote:

---

Now brace yourselves for this reply after she has had time to think.

Is she chargeing up for a evil rant like a dog barking or a dragon breathing fire? A beast with no knowledge of "The way" but lives only to be an obstacle.

or

Will there be light in her utterance?

We shall see.

---

I am a beast with no knowledge of "the way" except for knowing that it does not exist.

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1072

(9/3/03 10:08 am)

Reply

 Re: Beast or Nemesis

---

This is as good a place as any to begin:

Leo:

Quote:

---

I had suggested your contributions were nearly worthless and that the owners ought to think about giving you the boot (btw, i just made it up so we could all see your true colors) and you went right thru the roof!

---

Yes, Leo, I recall that discussion well. I know that you were disappointed with the outcome of that episode.

However, I am certain that you did not just make it up so that I would show my true colors. "My true colors" have always been obviously apparent. I have never hidden anything.

Quote:

---

If i was near to you at the time and we were alone there is little doubt in my mind that you would have assaulted or even killed me.

---

That is silly. Why would I feel the need to be alone with you in order to kill you?

I am not a killer, Leo. Even if I was, would you fear me?

That is a rhetorical question actually because it is plain that you do fear me though I am not a murderer.

It is natural and normal for you to feel this way. You feel threatened by a greater intellect. What makes my threatening presence more difficult for you is the fact that I am female.

I am sorry if you have a problem with my gender but there is nothing either you or I can do about it. I make no apology for the incongruity of my mind to my gender. I certainly will not declare myself to be inferior to you -- or to anyone -- merely because you, theoretically, have a penis.

As amply illustrated here, a penis is pretty limp when it is used in lieu of a brain.

Quote:

---

And to watch you re-gurgitate QSR retoric concerning what is and isnt Enlightenment, and to witness Dan saying at every opportunity "Marsha is correct" is becoming difficult to stomach.

---

The thoughts that I posted regarding enlightenment were completely my own. If you are interested in discussing them one by one with me or in discussing with me any particular point I made, I will be happy to do so.

However, though I have made similar offers to you in the past, you have never followed through. In the six years I have known you on the list and the forum, this has been your habit. You enjoy making what you "think" is a "hit" and fluttering off. Over time, I have learned to disregard your antics as no more than the rapidly beating wings of an injured bat whose "radar" has been disabled. You have no sense of direction and, therefore, blunder into things in your blindness.

I have no inclination to attack a wounded animal. I have pity for it.

You have had some times when you made some headway in terms of substance -- and this has been noticeable -- but invariably you then resort to making blind-runs and dropping.

Dan has said that I was correct only twice recently.

Quote:

---

No wonder i'm hardly compelled to contribute.

---

Then, plainly, I am worth my weight in gold.

Sincerely,

Faizi

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1073

(9/3/03 1:36 pm)

Reply

 Re: Beast or Nemesis

---

Jimhaz:

Quote:

---

Ohh well I guess I'd better have a go at replying to Marsha's responses.

---

I retained the above quote because it is indicative of the writer's character. He "guesses he'd better." No commitment. No decisiveness. Just, "ohh well, I guess." Plainly, this writer guesses at much in life and in thought. He would rather not be bothered with thinking. He would prefer just to flow along with the flowie crowd without interruption. Thinking is a chore for him. He prefers to follow a lead.

Quote:

---

Note that David does not write to induce emotions, whereas your style often does. You therefore get strongly worded posts in return.

---

I made no mention of David Quinn. Please note that I am not David Quinn and I have no desire to be or to become David Quinn. Our writing styles and modes of expression are quite different.

As for inducing emotions, David Quinn's posts often evoke strong emotions from people, whether or not he intends that reaction or not. If you doubt that, you have only to look in the archives. The writing of Buddha and Jesus and Kierkegaard and Nietzsche and others also evoke emotions from those who read them. Weininger's and Kevin Solway's writings evoke very strong - even fiery -emotions.

You accuse me of writing with the intention to provoke emotional responses. Yet I am certain you would never accuse David Quinn or Kevin Solway or Dan Rowden or Kierkegaard or Buddha of such a thing, even when their writing does produce strong emotional responses from people.

Why is it that my writing must, by necessity, be produced for the sole purpose of evoking emotion when I am no more -- NOT AS -- evocative as the writers I just mentioned?

There is no reason for you to accuse me of writing intentionally to provoke emotion except for your own emotional response to what I write and your emotional response is based only on my gender. It is not I who is screeching and screaming and out of control here. It is you. You are the one ranting about my so called bipolar condition and my emotionalism. You are the one who is pointing out to me that I am at fault because I am not David Quinn.

Quote:

---

It is true that I'd like to chalk what I said up to the raging emotions of a woman. It fits in with my viewpoints about women.

---

Then, plainly, you lack the power of mind to discriminate. Rather than to discriminate and to judge -- to think -- you prefer to go along with the rest of the clucking hens. That is feminine behavior. The whole lot of you have lately been engaging in extremely womanly behavior. I could easily mistake this for a houseplant forum.

Anna is more masculine than you.

Quote:

---

People do not support those who are inconsistent. No-one here is likely to support me – I make far too many statements that I cannot support with facts and am therefore often wrong. I also drink which makes me inconsistent. This can get a bit disgusting at times, but a forum is just a forum and I'll use it how I wish.

---

Inconsistency -- flowiness; caprice -- is the realm of woman. Why do you rage against women while excusing your inconsistency? Does drink make you feminine? Is that your excuse?

You and your inconsistency are well supported here. You have many friends and comrades. You and Del were having a spanking good time until I interrupted.

As for the forum, of course, you will use it as you wish just as I will use it as I wish. You have the freedom to say that spanking is part of enlightenment and I have the freedom to disagree with that. I have read Dan's post and I realize that Del may have been attempting to paraphrase Weininger. This is his usual method. However, he definitely was not clear on that and he lacks the writing skill to pull off such a thing. Plus, despite his protests otherwise, I think the thread was truly becoming just an ode to the pleasures of spanking and nothing more. Had his intentions been otherwise, he could have made that plain in the beginning.

That said, it is not up to me to determine whether or not a thread about spanking is appropriate to the Genius Forum. However, I can voice my opinion.

Quote:

---

It is better to question everything than to accept it willynilly. My reaction to this concept of enlightenment is reasonable. I'm very dubious that permanent enlightenment has been achieved by anyone, ever – and as such treat it with a degree of disdain. Those who profess to be enlightened may have just talked themselves into believing it much like those who believe in the existence of a god - and when they are clever people such as David and Dan they can get away with it.

---

It is obvious that you hero-worship Dan and David to a degree. You should be careful of that.

As for enlightenment, it is a permanent achievement. Some have tried to talk themselves into believing that they are enlightened. Beliefs are flimsy.

Quote:

---

This is particularly the case for those who strongly desire enlightenment and have been attempting to obtain same over many years. I'm dubious, not totally disbelieving - the mind has a degree of power over its own matter so it is possible that some form of significant mental change does occur.

---

The mental change does occur. But this is not the result of talking yourself into believing in something. It is the result of introspection over a period of time. I don't think it is a matter of following a formula or steps, as Del said. If that was the case, it could be quickly achieved by anyone capable of following directions.

Quote:

---

Well you have superior knowledge and memory, I admit that.
But so what - I'm a bloke :)

---

If you are, indeed, a bloke, I think you should act more like one instead of acting like a hen.

Quote:

---

Normally it would be poor character to refer to another illness that they cannot change, but as this is a forum dealing with the state of one's brain I don't apologise for referring to it. I see it as the background cause of your desire to be masculine and blatant.

---

It was poor character on your part. Not only poor character but blatant ignorance. There is nothing wrong with my brain that prohibits me from thinking. I am a very good and a very capable thinker and writer. If I came here and I was writing wildly emotional and erratic rants that had nothing to do with the content of the forum, then you might be justified in referring to me as someone who has a problem with my brain. But you are no more justified in pointing out my so called bipolar disorder than you might be in pointing out someone else's homosexuality or antisocial personality or mixed personality disorder.

In fact, I think you should be cautious in citing my disorder as an encumbrance to enlightenment unless you are also willing to cite some others. It is one thing to take a cheap shot at me within the safely folding wings of your chicken circle but you could well find yourself in the jaws of a wolf whom you could least suspect. You could be embarrassed.

I do not think that bipolar disorder is a sign of genius. But I also do not think it is necessarily prohibitive. I have written many decent, thought provoking posts in my time.

As I wrote before, you would love to be able to discount me. I cannot be discounted.

Quote:

---

I'd guess you were first drawn to philosophy, not so much for the gaining of wisdom, but because you wanted to get on top of your wildly fluctuating emotions. You desperately hoped that enlightenment will get you off the hook.

---

How smug. How sure of yourself you are in your ignorance.

I don't have wildly fluctuating emotions. My "highs" are normal -- not very high. I do sometimes experience extreme low points. I am not sure that I would call them emotional lows. I don't feel sad. I don't feel depressed. I just live in a world of complete slime for a while. I don't write here when I am in that mode. I cannot describe it as a feeling of hopelessness. It's not a feeling. There is no situational cause for it -- no obvious one anyway. It's like being trapped inside something in which there is no air or something in which nothing can exist except gray slime.

I could discuss with you the reality of so called bipolar disorder. There are degrees of severity. I have seen a few people in a wildly manic state. Even they do not seem emotional but they are out of control. I am not what is called a rapid cycling bipolar. I have never had a manic episode of such severity that I was anywhere near out of control.

I was never "drawn" to philosophy. I read Nietzsche and Emile Zola when I was in my teens. I don't think I fully understood any of it. I read because I wanted to be an intellectual. I did not read anything of philosophy again until I was in my forties. Then, I read Nietzsche and Spinoza and, later, Kierkegaard. What I liked about it initially was that it was the most pure form of writing. It was straight forward and direct, unlike poetry or fiction. It penetrated to the center of the writer and, by provocation to thought, to the center of the reader and into an entire world of thought without end. The self does not exist except by creation.

I had no desperate idea that philosophy would get me off any hook. Had I thought any such thing, I would have been in for a rude awakening. Philosophy -- pure thought -- does not get you off the hook. It puts you on the hook. To loosely quote Nietzsche, "If you stare long enough into an abyss, the abyss will stare back at you."

It is for this reason that I cannot take philosophy as the playing of games or engagement in a social club. If you delve into it long enough and closely enough, it will take you down to the pith of existence. The trick is finding your way back out of the well.

Quote:

---

I do believe enlightenment makes people think alike, in fact that is it's purpose – to think factually. Although there are many facts there are usually only a few pertinent ones and the QRS agree on most things, although they express themselves a bit differently.

---

I don't believe that.

Quote:

---

Be careful Marsha. Thoughts that others want to get you in some way can lead to progressively insane behaviour. I wish you no harm, however I am willing to make statements that might harm you – there is a difference.

---

You don't harm me, stupid. Far from it.

I am not paranoid. I don't think anyone is out to get me. I do think that Genius Forum has lately resembled a cackling hen house filled with thoughtless chicks so enamored of their own chicken egos that they poke their chicken tongues in the face of truth. No serious discussion. Just clucking and chattering.

Quote:

---

I did not feel the post of your I reponded to was contributive to the discussion at hand.

---

I was not prepared to seriously entertain the possibility that sex and spanking could lead to enlightenment.

Quote:

---

DEL has been making an effort, albeit that I think there are far better questions to be posting about than spanking. You don't manage the forum, neither do I, so I'd leave it to Dan or David to decide whether to delete DEL's new threads or give him a talking to.

---

I have never pretended to manage the forum. I will point out what I consider to be ridiculous. I did not advocate deleting Del's posts. I said that he is full of crap or whatever.

Quote:

---

We have all had a go a DEL before, but I have noticed an improvement from his initial posts, although I sometimes wonder what the hell he is talking about.

---

I am not talking about having a go at DEL. I have seen no improvement. I am sure he wonders what the hell he is talking about, too.

Quote:

---

What I like about DEL is not his posts but that he is willing to be a doer and go out and try things like the Weinerboy gathering and the SM festival – that shows a true inquisitive mind to me. He has potential.

---

Oh. I do not have the power to criticize but you have the power to decide who has potential.

Potential for what?

Anyone can go to a SM festival. I have been in SM bars before. My landlord years ago was a masochist. There was a bomb threat once in the bar -- it was in the neighborhood -- and there was my landlord out on the street in his little black leather garter belt and bra.

I have written and learned much about Marquis de Sade and made an honest attempt to understand the man. He actually had little to do with what is called SM.

I don't think going to an SM festival necessarily indicates an inquisitive mind though it may.

I will reply to the rest of this tomorrow. I must sleep now.

I may have to stop writing here for a while, if I can make myself do so. I still have a need to communicate but it does get tiring to have to address posts that accuse me of penis envy year after year after year. Herd-think does get to be old.

I apologize for misspellings.

Faizi

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 643
(9/3/03 6:01 pm)
Reply

 penis envy

---

Quote:

---

MKFaizi:

I may have to stop writing here for a while, if I can make myself do so. I still have a need to communicate but it does get tiring to have to address posts that accuse me of penis envy year after year after year. Herd-think does get to be old.

---

Why after 6 years do you still feel the need to address posts that accuse you of penis envy?

Maybe deep down the accusation is true and you are fighting yourself.

On the other hand if it is not true just relax and focus on your message. After your huge volume of penis envy accusation defense text has been extracted what is left?

What is your actual core message?
Can you summarise your unique view point?

MKFaizi
Registered User
Posts: 1074
(9/4/03 12:58 am)
Reply

 Re: penis envy

---

No, DEL, deep down the accusation is not true.

I have written no huge volumes denying my penis envy. I have written much that is pertinent and true. Even in my post above, there is some good. But rather than to focus on that, you prefer to focus on penis envy. I could write perfect truth here and you would still poke your tongue at it as you poke your tongue at all truth.

Faizi

Rairun
Registered User
Posts: 124
(9/4/03 2:06 am)
Reply

 Re: penis envy

---

Actually, I've always seen the opposite of penis envy in Marsha's posts. She sounds more like a feminist to me. Not like the stereotyped image of a feminist, but a real one.

I somewhat disagree with the way she words it, saying that the feminine is inferior to the masculine, because it seems to imply that women are inherently inferior to men. But I don't think that's what she means. If by "feminine" she means the submissive state which society tries to fit women in, femininity is actually a disrespect to all females.

To say that's penis envy is completely missing the point in my opinion. I wouldn't say she has anything against her female body or even sex. She seems to be against what those things symbolically represent in our society. But then again I might be missing her point myself.

Rairun
Registered User
Posts: 125
(9/4/03 2:29 am)
Reply

 ...

---

I do think sex is part of enlightenment though, just like any experiences you might have. Enlightenment has more to do with the way the experiences are allowed to happen, depending on each individual. For one it might be the natural way, for another it might not.

DEL

Registered User

Posts: 644

(9/4/03 10:06 am)

Reply

 Re: penis envy

---

Quote:

---

MKFaizi:

I have written much that is pertinent and true. Even in my post above, there is some good.

---

That's no big deal. Anybody can write much that is pertinent and true and also much that isn't.

What are you actually on about?

Stop throwing clever bits and pieces and make your statement if you have one.

What is your unique angle?

What is your actual message?

Stop worrying about people poking their tongue out and say what you have to say.

I have the impression that you are just very good at bitching and don't really have anything significant to say yourself. I hope I'm wrong and that you will cough up what you have to say eventually.

Everybody knows I'm trying to increase my knowledge of universal symbolism. As a result I have discovered a lot of new material and great writers that has been helpful in my quest from people here on this forum. The universal picture is coming together slowly for me.

What is your picture?

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 1785
(9/4/03 10:49 am)
Reply

re: Beast or Nemesis

Suegraz wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: All wankers. What is sex but using another person's body to masturbate with?

Sue: The pleasuring of anothers body.

---

A standard wanker's method of increasing the pleasure of his own wanking. The other person's body is reduced to the status of a wanker's prop.

Quote:

---

DQ: Enlightenment is not a state of being. It might be a different mode of existence to that of the ordinary person, but there is no particular state of being or consciousness that the enlightened person dwells in. His inner relationship with the whole world has changed, and as such he does not depend on particular states of consciousness to sustain his enlightenment.

Sue: Rubbish.

---

Such passion! And for something you don't even believe in!

Quote:

---

Suergaz:--How can what is indescribable be comprehensible?

David:-One comprehends that Reality has no form to describe.

Suergaz: But that is only comprehending something about reality, and not reality itself.

David:-No, it is Reality itself.

Suegraz: So you are saying the comprehension of reality is reality itself!

---

No, they are two separate things. The formlessness of Reality is an objective fact that can be comprehended.

Quote:

---

That is like saying the universe is conscious of itself.

---

It is conscious of itself - through us.

Quote:

---

DQ: From the perspective of enlightenment, formlessness and the infinity of forms are the same thing. However, you do need to understand both aspects.

Sue: Then you are not enlightened. Do you mean that I, personally, do not need to understand both 'aspects'?!

---

If anyone wants to become enlightened they need to fully understand both aspects.

Quote:

---

What of formlessness could there possibly be to understand?

---

That it doesn't have any form - such as the form of the physical universe, or the form of a mind, or the form of a God. Or if you like, it has all these forms and countless more.

Understanding formlessness is the key to experiencing the nature of Reality.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 885
(9/4/03 2:58 pm)
Reply

Re: Beast or Nemesis

Quote:

Anna is more masculine than you.

But then, I am more masculine than most of the people here. Not that I'm insulted to be considered feminine. I've been trying to be that most of my life.

Edited by: birdofhermes at: 9/6/03 1:03 am

MKFaizi
Registered User
Posts: 1075
(9/4/03 3:33 pm)
Reply

Re: Beast or Nemesis

DEL,

You did not read my post. Had you read it, you would have no need to ask what I am "on about." You have not read much of my writing here or you would not have the need to ask the question. You - like your brethren - have had your head up your ass for so long that you don't bother to read or to think. You just wank.

Here is an excerpt from what I wrote in my post above. In your haste to put forth that I only come here for the purpose of bitching, you conveniently overlooked the essence of the message.

With slight modification for clarity out of context, this is what I wrote:

Philosophy does not get you off the hook. It puts you on the hook. To loosely quote Nietzsche, "If you stare long enough into an abyss, the abyss will stare back at you."

It is for this reason that I cannot take philosophy as the playing of games or engagement in a social club. If you delve into philosophy -- pure thought -- long enough and closely enough, it will take you down to the pith of existence.

The trick is finding your way back out of the well.

Enlightenment -- philosophical consciousness -- is not a matter of following pre-written steps. It is the path of the individual.

Faizi

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 647
(9/4/03 4:55 pm)
Reply

 My message to you all by MKFaizi

---

Quote:

---

MKFaizi:

Enlightenment -- philosophical consciousness -- is not a matter of following pre-written steps. It is the path of the individual. [/quote/]

Well, thank you.

I will put your complete message in my own words to test if I have understood you completely.

1) Enlightenment is the same as philosophical consciousness which is the same as the ability to have "pure thought".

2) Everyone will have to find their own individual way to enlightenment as there is no preset way.

Interesting.

So now I see where you are in harmony with QRS.

I think your "pure thought" sounds like perfect logic, absolute understanding or clear reason.

This is why you all come across so miserable, frustrated and biting all the time. Like you all are constantly cleaning and polishing. Applying bleach, disinfectant, sulphuric acid and all manner of cleaning agents to get this absolute purity.

Intere

---

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 648
(9/4/03 4:57 pm)
Reply

 My message to you all by MKFaizi

---

Ooops!

I mixed the quote code up.
Only the first sentence is by MKFaizi.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1445
(9/4/03 11:04 pm)
Reply

 Re: My message to you all by MKFaizi

---

Davida:--

Quote:

---

The formlessness of Reality is an objective fact that can be comprehended.

---

There is nothing of formlessness to comprehend. You must have had a bad turn.

Quote:

---

Suergaz:--That is like saying the universe is conscious of itself.

Davida:--It is conscious of itself - through us.

---

Uhuh, the magical little elves will now put you into your special space suit to take you to a beautiful home with people just like you there.

Quote:

---

Davida Quinn medicine woman: From the perspective of enlightenment, formlessness and the infinity of forms are the same thing. However, you do need to understand both aspects.

Suergaz: Then you are not enlightened. Do you mean that I, personally, do not need to understand both 'aspects'?!

David: -If anyone wants to become enlightened they need to fully understand both aspects.

Suergaz: --What of formlessness could there possibly be to understand?

David: --That it doesn't have any form - such as the form of the physical universe, or the form of a mind, or the form of a God. Or if you like, it has all these forms and countless more.

Understanding formlessness is the key to experiencing the nature of Reality.

---

There is nothing to understand about nothing at all, and, formlessness being nothing at all, makes you and your assertions that it is indeed something, (ie. that which may be understood, comprehended, observed etc.) oblivious to the truth, which sidles up to me and seems to stand on your toes whenever it's able.

Edited by: suergaz at: 9/4/03 11:07 pm

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1446
(9/4/03 11:14 pm)
Reply

 Re: My message to you all by MKFaizi

---

DQ :-

Quote:

---

A standard wanker's method of increasing the pleasure of his own wanking. The other person's body is reduced to the status of a wanker's prop.

---

I think for one not to want to take pleasure in ones own body, one must either not have a body, like a paraplegic from the neck down, or that is all one has, as in the case of a stump (person with no arms or legs)

I think you must be a stump.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 1788
(9/5/03 3:10 pm)
Reply

 re:

---

Suegraz wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: Understanding formlessness is the key to experiencing the nature of Reality.

Sue: There is nothing to understand about nothing at all, and, formlessness being nothing at all, makes you and your assertions that it is indeed something, (ie. that which may be understood, comprehended, observed etc.) oblivious to the truth, which sidles up to me and seems to stand on your toes whenever it's able.

---

Your thinking on this matter is still shallow. Formlessness is not nothing at all. It is too formless to have the form of nothing.

Keep trying.

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

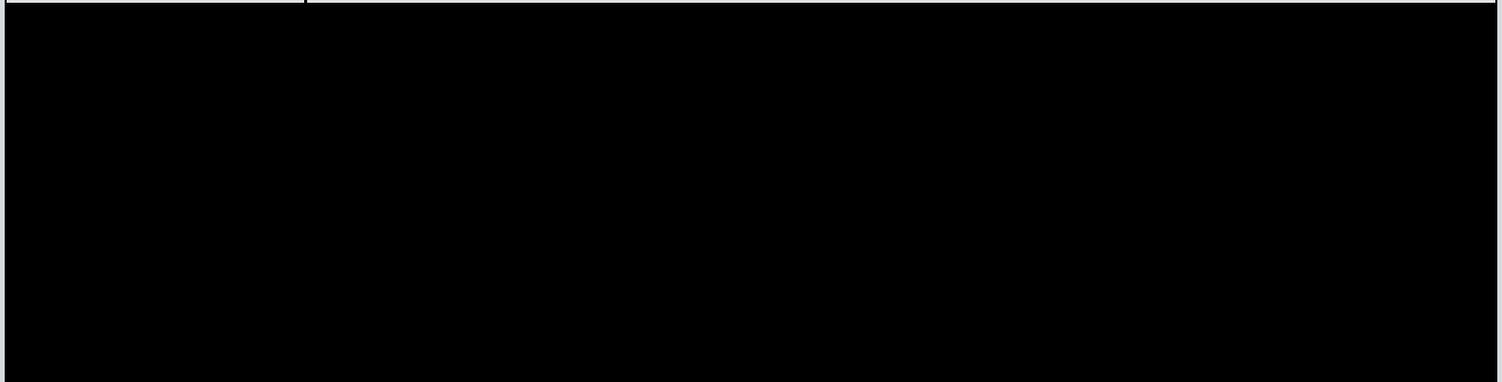

> Coitus and Language

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
DavidQuinn000 Forum Host Posts: 1789 (9/5/03 3:14 pm) Reply	 re: <hr/> Suegraz wrote: Quote: <hr/> DQ: A standard wanker's method of increasing the pleasure of his own wanking. The other person's body is reduced to the status of a wanker's prop. Sue: I think for one not to want to take pleasure in ones own body, one must either not have a body, like a paraplegic from the neck down, or that is all one has, as in the case of a stump (person with no arms or legs) <hr/> Either that, or one is body-less and infinite.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1451

(9/5/03 7:26 pm)

Reply

Re: re:

---

Quote:

---

Your thinking on this matter is still shallow. Formlessness is not nothing at all. It is too formless to have the form of nothing.

Keep trying.

---

Nothing has no form. You are the one who keeps trying.

Quote:

---

DQ: A standard wanker's method of increasing the pleasure of his own wanking. The other person's body is reduced to the status of a wanker's prop.

Sue: I think for one not to want to take pleasure in ones own body, one must either not have a body, like a paraplegic from the neck down, or that is all one has, as in the case of a stump (person with no arms or legs)

DQ: Either that, or one is body-less and infinite

---

One what?

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 651
(9/6/03 3:25 am)
Reply

☐ Nothing has no form?

---

Quote:

---

suergaz:
Nothing has no form. You are the one who keeps trying.

---

Now this statement by suergaz is a very interesting and powerful counter attack.
The reason the pure logic and absolute reason team keep trying is because they have faith and belief in the pure and absolute.

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1434
(9/7/03 10:02 am)
Reply

☐ Re: Nothing has no form?

---

One does not need faith in the absolute. This is by definition. If one needed such faith, it - whatever "it" happens to be - would be other than absolute.

Dan Rowden

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 654
(9/7/03 12:52 pm)
Reply

☐ other than absolute

---

Quote:

---

drowden:
One does not need faith in the absolute. This is by definition.
If one needed such faith, it - whatever "it" happens to be - would be other than absolute.

---

This is correct. Faith and belief go beyond.

DEL

Registered User
Posts: 656
(9/7/03 8:05 pm)
Reply

 Don't lose her

---

Quote:

---

MKFaizi:

You - like your brethren - have had your head up your ass for so long that you don't bother to read or to think. You just wank.

---

QRS should make every effort not to lose MKFaizi. She is the entertainment and spice of the forum.

She is like the dancing girl in the club. If a club loses it's dancing girls, the male attendance drops and with it the drink sales and so on.

The dancer dances in full confidence that she is desired and causes men to want to wank. If she thought for a moment she was not sexy she would not be able to dance.

If MKFaizi didn't use strong language nobody would pay her any attention. It's like, her hair style, make up and clothes.

Can you tell me if she has a unique message?

If so what is it?

Or is it just a unique style?

Like her stilletoes might be higher than birdofhermes.

I was on a late night bus on the way home from a club last week. The top floor was packed with people on the way home from a night out. I sparked off the conversation between us all as strangers. I then went quiet and listened.

With the ice now broken I listened to the some of the guys making conversation with the girls they thought were attractive. You know standard questions,

Where you from?

What do you do? etc.

Then I listened as the girls made an effort to sound interesting, intelligent and full of good conversation. I also observed as the guys pretended to find what the girls had to say really interesting.

When everything went quiet and there was silence after about 5-10 minutes as I knew it would.

I was the ice breaker so I thought it was time to drop a bomb in the water.

I declared that everybody had gone quite because the guys realised that there was no potential for sex that night with their stranger and that is why the conversation has dried up. I said that women never have anything really interesting to say but men listen as long as there is potential for sex. I said women are not able to generate and sustain good conversation.

Everybody stared at me and froze. Absolute silence. There was a slight delay then I heard groans, moans, sighs, and chuckles.

The women wanted to kill me but to do that they needed to say something to refute the truth first, they couldn't so they were in checkmate.

The men were shocked that I had the balls to say such a thing in public, they just smiled and chuckled. One of the guys, obviously horrified that his intentions were exposed, blurted out "Errr. . . I don't know what to say" to the strange girl he was just trying to chat up. She was fuming. He knew he didn't really care what university course she was on.

Lbartoli
Registered User
Posts: 279
(9/8/03 1:14 am)
Reply

 On disobedience

---

Marsha wrote:

Yes, Leo, I recall that discussion well. I know that you were disappointed with the outcome of that episode.

However, I am certain that you did not just make it up so that I would show my true colors.

LB: Well now your colors are showing again, in this case it's your habit to cling to that which feels best and reject the truth.

It was a long shot, and for a while i thought you might not fall for it, after all, how many people are likely to believe that one member seriously thinks he can have another member removed on the grounds that the latter refuses to do a web search and provide the address of a news website?

Not many, i think. But i know you like a book.

Leo

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 580
(9/8/03 1:27 am)
Reply

☐ Re: On disobedience

---

Del wrote about his night out on the tiles.

I'm sure you felt very secure in said environment of intellectual debate, a king amongst 'men'.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1154
(9/8/03 2:11 am)
Reply

☐ On disobedience

---

Yes, a king among men. The question is, why was the king wandering amongst the townsfolk in the first place. A child king?

It is good you are discovering the relevancies of human sexuality and interplay. DEL, I think you are intelligent enough to begin moving beyond now. There are other avenues of exploration with deeper implications.

Tharan

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1456
(9/8/03 2:31 am)
Reply

☐ Re: On disobedience

---

It's wasn't quite a real (truthful) bomb DEL dropped, though I would probably have burst out laughing when it hit.

Can you believe I tricked some friends with a real fake bomb?! For real!

MKFaizi
Registered User
Posts: 1079
(9/8/03 2:16 pm)
Reply

☐ Re: On disobedience

---

Leo actually wrote:

Quote:

---

that one member seriously thinks he can have another member removed on the grounds that the latter refuses to do a web search and provide the address of a news website?

---

You wrote to me once and asked me to provide you with some websites that you wanted to investigate. I did so.

You wrote another time and asked me to provide further websites for you and I did not.

You wrote another time and asked me if I would assist you in writing your biography and I said that I did not have the time to write for anyone unless there was payment.

Indeed, I do not have the time to devote to running errands for other people. I realize your feeling is that I am failing to serve the purpose of truth in failing to serve you -- I should do your bidding because you are on the path of truth and I -- by virtue of my so called femininity -- can only serve truth through servitude to man.

Servitude of woman to man is not in the interest of truth. Quite the contrary.

Masculinity is true independence. I am independent -- physically, spiritually, sexually. I don't need a man in any way, shape or form. I loathe the very idea of such need.

That is what galls you and DEL. I do not -- cannot, will not -- see either of you as my superior. I accept no one as my superior.

Faizi

Edited by: MKFaizi at: 9/8/03 2:32 pm

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1080

(9/8/03 3:10 pm)

Reply

Re: On disobedience

---

DEL actually wrote:

Quote:

---

QRS should make every effort not to lose MKFaizi. She is the entertainment and spice of the forum.

She is like the dancing girl in the club. If a club loses it's dancing girls, the male attendance drops and with it the drink sales and so on.

The dancer dances in full confidence that she is desired and causes men to want to wank. If she thought for a moment she was not sexy she would not be able to dance.

---

My dancing must not be all that hot. I don't see attendance -- male or female -- picking up much lately.

I have written some serious things lately. The fact that you did not bother to reply to it says much more about you than about me. In that way, you and Leo seem to have much in common.

My presence does not cause you to wank. You wank entirely of your own accord.

Yesterday -- while wearing my strappy high heels, of course -- I was glamorously involved in mowing my acre of lawn. All the men in my neighborhood were extremely excited by this spectacle though, curiously, none of them offered help. Next time, I will have to wear my bikini.

I ran over a nest of yellow jackets. I was stung once and figured, "No big deal. One sting is not going to stop me." I kept mowing.

Ultimately, I was stung several times on my face and my body. I simply remember looking down and there were about fifty yellow jackets covering my body. I reckon I was stung about twenty times but many of the stings were fairly superficial. I was stung severely on my chin and lower lip. My lip rapidly became so large from swelling that -- well, it was monstrous. I ran to the water hose and doused myself in the cold water to get the swarm off.

I am a nurse so the last thing I wanted to do was to have to go to a doctor. I did not.

I waited a couple of hours and went out again and finished mowing the lawn. The swelling in my lip had subsided.

I experienced poor sleep last night because my left arm was very swollen. The pain from it kept waking me up. I found this to be annoying so I finally took some ibuprofen.

I got up this morning and completed the trim work.

How glamorous.

Faizi

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 316

(9/8/03 3:40 pm)

Reply

Re: On disobedience

---

See Marsha you really are a siren !!!

Trouble is you attract WASP's (as in White Anglo Saxon Protestants) when you really want headbangers (as in people who have head sex)

Paul

Registered User

Posts: 90

(9/8/03 6:26 pm)

Reply

Re: On disobedience

---

God has a mother, now I'm convinced!

Maria was her name, it's Marsha now.

(This eunuch really fell in love. Oh, geez!)

DEL

Registered User

Posts: 657

(9/8/03 6:28 pm)

Reply

Male Regality vs Female Communism

---

Quote:

MKFaizi:

That is what galls you and DEL. I do not -- cannot, will not -- see either of you as my superior. I accept no one as my superior.

---

Your mission, though you remain unconscious of it, is to be a goad. Pushing men on to rediscover their spirituality.

You have become the personification of the ancient spiritual world. There are very few 'men' left. They are mostly underground.

Birdofhermes is the personification of the modern material world with it's pseudo-spirituality full of wuss men.

Those that defend and agree with you have lost their spirituality. Those men are your play things and you dispise them unconsciously. They have become blind and do not know what they are defending.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 658
(9/8/03 6:38 pm)
Reply

 strappy high heels

---

Quote:

---

MKFaizi:

Yesterday -- while wearing my strappy high heels, of course --
I was glamorously involved in mowing my acre of lawn.

---

Strappy high heels are sexy because in universal symbolism they represent modern man's effort to raise humanity (woman) into the spiritual realm (off the ground) through science with all its mechanisms. In the ancient world real men had real power, spiritual power.

Modern man also tries to restrict breathing to enhance orgasms.

G Shantz
Registered User
Posts: 378
(9/8/03 8:52 pm)
Reply

 --

---

DEL typed:

Quote:

---

I declared that everybody had gone quiet because the guys realised that there was no potential for sex that night with their stranger and that is why the conversation has dried up. I said that women never have anything really interesting to say but men listen as long as there is potential for sex.

---

I think the conversation itself is the sex.

Greg

suergaz Registered User Posts: 1459 (9/8/03 10:19 pm) Reply	 Re: -- <hr/> I will never mow a lawn if I can help it. It's a disgusting habit.
birdofhermes Registered User Posts: 899 (9/9/03 2:52 am) Reply	 Re: -- <hr/> I enjoy mowing lawns, splitting firewood, driving nails.
DEL Registered User Posts: 660 (9/9/03 6:35 am) Reply	 coitus and language <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Greg : I think the conversation itself is the sex. <hr/> Now that is a very interesting comment. Because I noticed 2 of the girls beside me squeezed their thighs together and almost assumed the foetal position when the bomb dropped. They immediately went for their mobile phones and tried to text or find somebody to talk to.

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

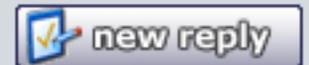

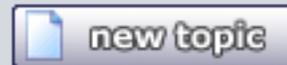

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Coitus and Language

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
MKFaizi Registered User Posts: 1082 (9/9/03 10:46 am) Reply 	 Mowing Fool or The Zen of Lawnmower Maintenance <hr/> I greatly enjoy mowing. I am a mowing fool. I would mow my entire neighborhood if I had time to do it. I often mow my neighbor's lawn when I mow mine simply because I like mowing so much. The noise of the motor is like silence to me because it cuts me off from the rest of the world. I am a thinking mower. I find it to be calming and soothing and, unlike housework, when you are done, you are done -- for a week or two. I prefer pushing to riding. Far more satisfying. When I mow, nothing can stop me. I would mow my way across America if I had the freedom to do it. Just me and my lawnmower against the world. In some ways, a lawnmower is like a woman. Better than a woman, really. More like a horse to a cowboy. Maybe, when my kids are grown, I will just set off across the great suburban sprawl that is America -- mowing my way into the heartland. Old woman with green specks scattered through her hair and on her face, crying, "Mista ameri-CAN! Mista ameri-CAN! Let me mow your lawn for a buck, Mista ameri-CAN. Ah kin doooo eet! Jus' one ameri-CAN dolla, Joe. Ah mow yo' grass. You watcha the football an' ah mow yo' grass down." Not a bad retirement for someone such as myself. I could mow the south in the wintertime and move north for the summers. I believe that mowing is the final earthly frontier. Mowing wagon trains could be organized or mowing camps on the order of old hobo camps. An entire subculture of migrant mowers, mowing into the American panhandle. It is that very sort of subculture that produces great writers such as Hemingway and Steinbeck and Keroac.

A true mower likes his machine plain. None of those new, fancy models on which the mower simply stands and guides and moves along at breakneck speeds. No, a true mower pushes his machine and becomes his machine.

There is a place for choreographed or synchronized mowing, for the more arty types.

But to me, mowing is not a thing unto itself. It is an extension of the mind.

In the words of a great sage -- great, green stuff to mow, sage -- "Mow thyself."

Mow ye that the world may mow ye.

Mow on.

Faizi

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 93
(9/9/03 11:03 am)
Reply

 To Dear Faizi

---

You know the cartoons.

Erm... Am I allowed to shave your lawn?
Mow, I mean?

MKFaizi
Registered User
Posts: 1083
(9/9/03 11:04 am)
Reply

 Re: coitus and language

---

Jimhaz wrote:

Quote:

---

Trouble is you attract WASP's (as in White Anglo Saxon Protestants) when you really want headbangers (as in people who have head sex)

---

	Less than fair attempt at humor. These were not wasps but Yellow Jackets. Definitely more oriental in flavor than your garden variety wasp. I have never attracted wasps -- certainly not protestants. I do not understand your correlation. What is the difference between a White Anglo Saxon Protestant and a headbanger? I thought they were the same. Faizi
Dave Toast Registered User Posts: 582 (9/9/03 11:25 am) Reply 	 Re: coitus and language <hr/> You should start a gang Marsha.
Paul Registered User Posts: 94 (9/9/03 11:31 am) Reply	 To Dave Toast <hr/> At first glance I read what you wrote as: "You should start a gangbang, Marsha." Some people never learn. I'm one of them.
DEL Registered User Posts: 663 (9/9/03 5:35 pm) Reply	 Mowing Fool or The Zen of Lawnmower Maintenance <hr/> This is correct. Lawnmowing is like beating off your "Jackals" with a stick. They'll be back.

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 317

(9/9/03 5:44 pm)

Reply

 Re: coitus and language

---

Less than fair attempt at humor.

Totally agree. For the main I've lost interest in trying to impress others with humour. Particularly here. This place is full of cynics. Cynics only really like their own humour. Sure I'm a cynic as well, but most of you lot are smarter than me so it aint that much fun.

These were not wasps but Yellow Jackets.

Being from Oz land I had to make sure what Yellow Jacket was. Thought it was a bee. A website said "Yellow Jackets are a genus of very aggressive social wasps". Perhaps like attracts like.

I do not understand your correlation. What is the difference between a White Anglo Saxon Protestant and a headbanger? I thought they were the same.

Yep good point - pretty much the same thing. Still I thought changing the meaning of 'headbanger' to make it mean philosophers appealed to me, so I left it in. For the most part philosophers are just people who enjoy masturbating or fucking with their minds – if sex is for wankers (as the mighty Quinn said) then the same analogy applies to how Ultimate Truth Seekers gain satisfaction.

I can't get no satisfaction.

DEL

Registered User

Posts: 664

(9/9/03 6:55 pm)

Reply

 no satisfaction

---

Quote:

_____

jimhaz:

. . . then the same analogy applies to how Ultimate Truth Seekers gain satisfaction.

I can't get no satisfaction.

_____

Excellent! Great point jimhaz.

	Because satisfaction doesn't have the infinite element in it.  Logic looks for the absolute, for satisfaction  Faith looks for the infinite, and is insatiable That's the motto for today.  I think I'm going to have a good day today.  Have a good night to all of you in the other time zone.  Thanks jimhaz
G Shantz  Registered User  Posts: 380  (9/10/03 11:19 am)  Reply 	 Re: coitus and language <hr/> 'tried to text' ? I'm unfamiliar with this expression.
satu largi  Registered User  Posts: 1  (9/10/03 11:49 am)  Reply	 Re: coitus and language <hr/> Can I just, having spotted this very interesting thread as I drifted past, make two shy and bashful observations? The first, on language, is the use, almost everywhere, except in Anglo-Saxon countries, of the word JigaJig, for coitus.. ..and the second is the remarkable match in pace, pitch and intensity of someone calling a race, and an orgasm..
WolfsonJakk  Registered User  Posts: 1158  (9/10/03 3:20 pm)  Reply	 scoring and orgasm <hr/> What of touchdowns and homeruns?
satu largi  Registered User  Posts: 2  (9/10/03 4:56 pm)  Reply	 Re: scoring and orgasm <hr/> Ah, premature ejaculations.?

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 321
(9/10/03 5:05 pm)
Reply

Re: scoring and orgasm

---

We all know sport is just symbolic of the instinctual desire to fight for a fuck - hence the terms used in sport and one of many reasons why women were not allowed to play sport with men.

gotta go and practice my googlies (cricket).

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 666
(9/10/03 6:02 pm)
Reply

Re: coitus and language

---

Quote:

G Shantz:
'tried to text' ?

I'm unfamiliar with this expression.

---

Communicating by text on a mobile telephone.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 667
(9/10/03 6:06 pm)
Reply

Re: coitus and language

---

Quote:

satu largi:
Can I just, having spotted this very interesting thread as I drifted past, make two shy and bashful observations?

The first, on language, is the use, almost everywhere, except in Anglo-Saxon countries, of the word JigaJig, for coitus..

---

Yes, I have come across this term JigaJig in the same way you mention. It should also be noted that the hand sign for good sex is the reverse wanking hand sign among non Anglo-Saxon. Anglo-Saxons tend to use a fist to symbolise a good fuck.

Dave Toast Registered User Posts: 583 (9/10/03 8:38 pm) Reply 	 Re: coitus and language <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Jimhaz: gotta go and practice my googlies (cricket). <hr/> I prefer to use the wrong'n.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1474 (9/11/03 1:34 am) Reply	 --- <hr/> Is a chinaman like a flipper?
satu largi Registered User Posts: 3 (9/11/03 7:20 am) Reply	 Re: --- <hr/> "the hand sign for good sex is the reverse wanking hand sign among non Anglo-Saxon. Anglo-Saxons tend to use a fist to symbolise a good fuck." ...and beckoning, done with the hand up in Western cultures, with the hand down, in Eastern. Australian aborigines, though, while raised in a Western culture, beckon with the hand down.
drowden Forum Host Posts: 1461 (9/11/03 11:54 am) Reply 	 Re: --- <hr/> The similarity of pitch and intensity of a race call and of an orgasm seems kind of obvious to me. It's all about crescendo and climax. No biggie, somewhat like the direction this thread has taken... Dan Rowden

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 906
(9/11/03 1:50 pm)
Reply

 Truth

Actually, I think that is mostly the women who are faking it. They make more noise.

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Coitus and Language

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
DEL Registered User Posts: 669 (9/11/03 5:31 pm) Reply	 the direction <hr/> Quote: <hr/> drowden: No biggie, somewhat like the direction this thread has taken.... <hr/> All threads on this forum will go downwards from the subject heading as they follow the 'will to power'. This is both logical and rational. Where there is no 'will to value' one cannot expect things to go upward. I always start my threads on the universal symbolism spiritual level (the sky) and watch as it descends. I catch the gems (lightning) generated by the discussion before the thread hits the bottom (the earth). The downward pull is always set off by a woman or a man who has lost his spirituality and is falling. As I said if Marsha comes to London and she still looks as good as she did in those pictures and I get hold of her she will return to the USA glowing. That's absolute.

Paul Registered User Posts: 100 (9/13/03 1:56 am) Reply	 This Direction for DEL boy <hr/> Marsha takes care of herself, that's clear. But I'll take care of you, in London or elsewhere, if you talk about MKFaizi like that again. Real Man Paul (well, sort of, anyway)
DEL Registered User Posts: 671 (9/13/03 3:28 am) Reply	 To die for <hr/> Now back to Universal Symbolism. Have any of you men ever had a woman you thought was worth fighting for?
Dave Toast Registered User Posts: 584 (9/13/03 4:08 am) Reply 	 Re: To die for <hr/> I certainly hope these fuckin idiots have sated themselves by the time I get back from my holiday. Later.
DEL Registered User Posts: 674 (9/13/03 6:08 am) Reply	 Re: To die for <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Dave Toast: I certainly hope these fuckin idiots have sated themselves by the time I get back from my holiday. <hr/> Ah! But Mr. Toast, this is missapplied and wasted hope, belief and faith. Sated logic and reasoning will not work in this context. The "fuckin idiots" judgement bounces back into your face.

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1093

(9/13/03 10:15 am)

Reply

 Re: To die for

---

DEL wrote:

Quote:

---

Have any of you men ever had a woman you thought was worth fighting for?

---

No.

I have had a lot of women. I used to become quite upset over some of their activities and "games." But, truthfully, I have never had a woman who was worth fighting for. I have grieved over a number of women in my life but I have never fought for one.

Faizi

DEL

Registered User

Posts: 675

(9/13/03 12:20 pm)

Reply

 Re: To die for

---

Quote:

---

MKFaizi:

No.

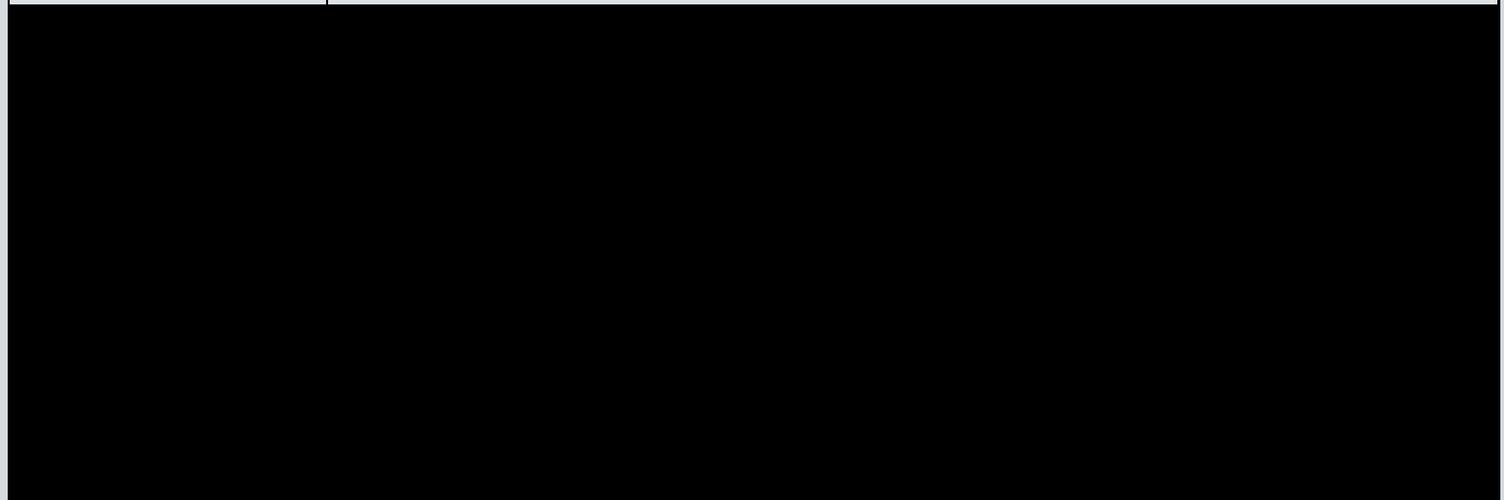

I have had a lot of women. I used to become quite upset over some of their activities and "games." But, truthfully, I have never had a woman who was worth fighting for. I have grieved over a number of women in my life but I have never fought for one.

---

This woman is truly exceptional.

I pay my respects to the husband or father responsible for her development and formation.

DEL Registered User Posts: 713 (10/1/03 5:37 pm) Reply	 Re: To die for <hr/> And for those of you who are fighting against Al Queda be warned that Bin Laden's wives are all of the same pedigree as Marsha. This kind are strong and will encourage their men fight to the death, they are bereft of spirituality. You see opposites attract. Spiritual men produce and are attracted to harsh practical, logical wives. Logical in the sense that; "if you do not kill those fucking bastards we will have no food on the table". Logical men have to run from the spiritual woman, she is their weakness. She is the kind of woman who will invite the man of great reason and logic around for dinner and allow him to talk until his logic does not even make sense to himself and then pour out another glass of wine and smile as his penis takes over the exposition.
Paul Registered User Posts: 131 (10/2/03 9:38 am) Reply	 Re: To die for <hr/> Yes, I like Marsha too, DEL.
DEL Registered User Posts: 715 (10/2/03 6:07 pm) Reply	 Re: To die for <hr/> A dog is good company for the logical man to help guard him from the spiritual woman. A cat is good company for the spiritual man to help guard him from the logical woman.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1185
(10/5/03 9:47 am)
Reply

 Bollocks, wankers...

---

David Quinn wrote,

Quote:

---

What is sex but using another person's body to masturbate with?

---

I just had to /bump this for the fuck of it. It is a great line. I may use it oneday.

Tharan

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 720
(10/5/03 12:53 pm)
Reply

 Bollocks, wankers...

---

Quote:

---

David Quinn:

What is sex but using another person's body to masturbate with?

---

I wonder if women here share his view on this.

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

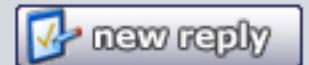

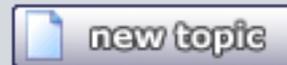

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Conceptual Cosmology (continued)

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Poorichard Registered User Posts: 18 (10/20/03 2:32 am) Reply	Conceptual Cosmology (continued) <hr/> Not everyone agrees with space and matter being the same thing on or off base level, however I for one hold to that theory of space and matter one and the same. My purpose with this post to put forth a method showing the relationship and conception without the use of math or referring to noted scientist and philosophers. This is the twist I was referring to, anyone knowing of this conception as presented here in the manner expressed, I would like to know where I can find the original conception in order to see it for myself, and the date the material was written. Here is the conceptual space/matter theory, that I posted on Genius Forum in a short form and in other Physics Forums and discussion groups. The following is also an updated continuation. "That Space and Matter exist as a unified state, where matter exist space exist and where space exist matter exist. These two properties space and matter are directly related and responsible for the existence of the other. If space were remove,matter would cease and if matter were removed space would cease. Space/Matter are the building blocks of all creation as understood today. Further: Absolute Space is non-existent, and absolute Matter is non-existent. Are Space/Matter then absolute in a unified state? I would have to say "yes",

Further: Space/Matter are infinite,otherwise Space/Matter could not be absolute as a unified existence.

Space/Matter as the building block of creation make possible all other known properties such as motion, light,energy,etc. More on this later.

cassiopeiae
Registered User
Posts: 134
(10/20/03 9:29 am)
Reply

Re: Conceptional Cosmology (continued)

---

All of this is nothing more than Hermetic Philosophy.

For starters, it is all included in The Kybalion, by Three Initiates. I have a pdf I can send you if you are interested, you can find my email address on my profile.

Still interested in the remainder of your post... :-)

Edited by: cassiopeiae at: 10/20/03 1:17 pm

Poorichard
Registered User
Posts: 19
(10/20/03 10:19 am)
Reply

Re: Conceptional Cosmology (continued)

---

Thank you for your reply, I always welcome comments for or against. I thought I read all the Hermetic philosophy over 50 years ago, do not recall reading this concept. I look forward to seeing the copy you said you will email me. After I read it I will respond to it.

Most Sincerely.
RDV

rushdl

Registered User

Posts: 25

(10/22/03 7:44 am)

Reply

Re: Conceptional Cosmology (continued)

---

Hello RDV, hows it goin?

On space/Matter/same theory.

Hmmmm. Doesn't seem to flush, seems more like an excuse theory to explain another, than a self sufficient one. Does there exist any evidence?

I propose this thought for possibility, and evidence should exist in it's support..

Matter and Space are more akin to diametrical opposites, than they are one in the same. Fire is to water as Space is to Time. What that means is they cannot exist together, in the same place at the same time, ever.

Imagine, that a steel pinball is in space. I suggest that they (Matter/Space) cannot exist in that same coordinate, together. They can and do exist "Around" each other, between molecules as well as the macro perimeter.

They cannot share the same space/time.

Any thoughts?

-Rush

cassiopeiae

Registered User

Posts: 137

(10/22/03 12:10 pm)

Reply

Re: Conceptional Cosmology (continued)

---

Quote:

---

rushdl said: Does there exist any evidence?

---

That's it exactly, these are theories...the furthest science has gotten is breaking matter down to its basic parts. These are the only assumptions we have, there is not 'hard' proof, this is what makes it a theory...

I believe this has all been said by someone at one point in time, even Einstein was on this path, but still, since this is nearly a matter of creation, it is all analitical theory. I think Richard would agree??

Mr. Toast is well rehearsed in physics, possibly he can elaborate on the facts??

Poorichard Registered User Posts: 20 (10/22/03 12:35 pm) Reply	Re: Conceptional Cosmology (continued) <hr/> I was delighted! to read the comments. True,as I said this is a conceptional theory and by your questions to my post I learn more and more,thank you. Yes Cassiopeiae I do agree and yes thank you for your comment. The whole point is,what do we know unless we examine the theory from all angles?. O.K. so now I have some questions from you that I am working on to explain further and that won't happen until this week end,meanwhile how about more questions from others? what do you think?
Poorichard Registered User Posts: 21 (10/22/03 12:45 pm) Reply	Re: Conceptional Cosmology (continued) <hr/> Almost forgot! Rush you have some good points,if I looked at Space/Matter as you did I would agree, But I do not see that situation as the same exact conception I presented. But I will tackle your question. Thanks again. RDV
rushdl <input type="checkbox"/> Registered User Posts: 26 (10/23/03 6:45 am) Reply	Re: Conceptional Cosmology (continued) <hr/> OK. So no empiracle evidence. But you said... --- even Einstein was on this path --- If that is true, then this is almost good enough for me. There must be some evidence leading this direction. I'd like to read more about his thoughts on it as well. As it seems to me that the theory was stated but no account of why it "Could" be or why some might lean that way, and why others do not. Just looking for the food to chew on. Just saying "I believe" might not be enough for me to leave it at that. let's go deeper... Can we play with this one? ---

These two properties space and matter are directly related and responsible for the existence of the other.

---

My main disagreement is that it probably isn't a "Duet" of dependencies, but maybe a trio or more.

Catch-22s

Chicken and egg?

Space and matter?

Do you know af any more "proven" earthly or molecular dependancies?

Dependancy la troi?

Plants - animals - air?

plants - animals - air - sunlight plants - animals - air - sunlight - water

Think of earth. What 2 things could not exist without each other, where one is responsible for the others existance? I have a little trouble finding anything. Maybe you could help?

I think we will find that matter may be dependant on several factors, not just a single form or function.

Poorichard
Registered User
Posts: 22
(10/23/03 1:41 pm)
Reply

Re: Conceptional Cosmology (continued)

---

Rushdl, I appreciate your thoughts.

In my Conception Cosmology Model I am constructing the "Building Blocks" of all creation, and starting with the very basic elements or states, Space and Matter always fall into the puzzle as the first pieces, but if I wanted to look at the four square multi-dimensional puzzle cube I would be hard pressed to know where to sort out the pieces. Should I begin with Space/Time? or Black Hole? or Magnetic waves? the list is endless.

Your disagreement is understandable, the model isn't finished and when it is "trio" is child's play to the complexity of properties seen and unseen.

"Which comes first in quantity," 1 or 1,000,000?"

Which comes first, "Light or Darkness?"

Which comes first, "heat or cold?"

These questions are relative.

rushdl

Registered User

Posts: 27

(10/24/03 5:40 am)

Reply

Re: Conceptional Cosmology (continued)

---

No such thing as cold, no such thing as dark. But there is a chicken, and there is an egg! I do not understand the significance of the quantity question, because (1) is obviously earlier than (2), or 1 million. How should I be looking at that question?

If we regress far enough, I'll agree with your statement. Before the big bang (If there was one) everything may have occupied the same space/time and been a true singularity as far as matter goes. But maybe there was space around that singularity too. I mean what is space?

*The subtle medium in which everything swims. Broken down sub-atomically, I think space is the epitomy of nothing. Space NOT having matter in it is the definition of pure space I would think. It is a Nothing, that is a something. Like Time for instance, just like time. See how the theory of Space AND Time supports itself through conclusion after conclusion? Supporting their "possible" entanglement theory? I see these ideas finding each other in a sense.

Poorichard

Registered User

Posts: 23

(10/25/03 12:26 pm)

Reply

Re: Conceptional Cosmology (continued)

---

Cold has to do with human sensation and dark with eye sight otherwise with no sensation or eye sight how would you know without the use of measurement instruments?

Before you can arrive at a value of 10, how would you do it without first establishing a value foundation say "one" or whatever? You say no such thing as Cold or Dark?

I don't understand that either,how would I look at that question? Anyway thank you for your comments.

This is my last communication from this website.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 969
(10/26/03 12:17 pm)
Reply

Re: Conceptional Cosmology (continued)

What an interesting thread. I can see that absolute matter is impossible, or at least impossible if it is to resemble matter as we know it. Somehow I can't quite picture why space cannot exist alone.

You suggest that they create each other, and Rushdl says no, because they are diametric opposites. Yes - and that is precisely why they are co-creators. It's exactly that they need each other but cannot occupy one another's place that makes creation possible. It's a dynamic interplay.

Time is a byproduct of the interaction of space and matter.

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31r
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

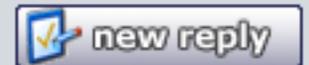

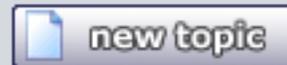

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Conceptual Space/Matter Cosmology

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Poorichard Registered User Posts: 13 (10/10/03 1:05 pm) Reply	 Conceptual Space/Matter Cosmology <hr/> After reviewing replies to my post on "Just Thinking" and from other sources I am posting herewith my concept. That space and matter are both sides of the same coin. Further: Space exist because of matter and matter exist because of space, both cease to exist when one or the other become non-existent. These two states are the building blocks for everthing else in existence,the third state next in line is ? I leave that for you to answer.
Paul Registered User Posts: 146 (10/10/03 2:40 pm) Reply	 Re: Conceptual Space/Matter Cosmology <hr/> But sweetheart, matter &amp; space is what we're dealing with. We are That. 'Waiter, another beer, please?'

jimhaz Registered User Posts: 349 (10/10/03 2:50 pm) Reply 	 Re: Conceptional Space/Matter Cosmology <hr/> Why will no one accept that energy does not exist. It is a figment of our imagination. It is just cause (energy) and effect (matter cahnged through movement).
rushdl  Registered User Posts: 15 (10/11/03 5:26 am) Reply	 Re: Conceptional Space/Matter Cosmology <hr/> I don't accept that. I thing energy thrives everywhere, and is an effect of matter in space.
Dave Toast Registered User Posts: 626 (10/11/03 11:58 pm) Reply 	 Re: Conceptional Space/Matter Cosmology <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Poorichard: That space and matter are both sides of the same coin. <hr/> A subtle difference but they are not two sides of the same coin. They are simply the same coin.
Poorichard Registered User Posts: 14 (10/12/03 9:57 am) Reply	 reply to Dave Toast <hr/> "They are simply the same coin". Very well put!
Poorichard Registered User Posts: 15 (10/12/03 10:00 am) Reply	 reply to Paul <hr/> Yea Paul,sad but true, make that two beers!

seahorse Registered User Posts: 1 (10/12/03 8:34 pm) Reply	 Re: Conceptional Space/Matter Cosmology <hr/> Poorichard: i agree. space is matter and vice versa. even if all light matter was to magically cease to be, and all that was left was an infinite black matter, it would still be valid as space. (in my opinion anyways). jimhaz: if you define energy as 'cause and effect', aren't you essentially confirming its existence?
Poorichard Registered User Posts: 16 (10/13/03 2:31 am) Reply	 reply to seahorse <hr/> You are correct! after all I'm presenting a conceptual theory on cosmology based on what is already known,but with a twist here and there in hope that it will stimulate new ideas and further investigation into all the branches of thought,in this case physics.
cassiopeiae Registered User Posts: 118 (10/13/03 7:18 am) Reply	 Re: question... <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Poorichard said: after all I'm presenting a conceptual theory on cosmology based on what is already known,but with a twist here and there <hr/> May I ask what 'conceptual theory' you are trying to present? Much of what you have said has been 'theorized' by someone or another. I really haven't seen any twist that you are referring to... Also, technically, matter is only the term used to categorize the form electrons, protons, and neutrons have attracted themselves to create. Matter is the same thing as space, as is everything else, on the base level anyway. I am just not getting where you are going.

Poorichard
Registered User
Posts: 17
(10/13/03 9:59 am)
Reply

 reply to cassiopeiae

---

Your comment is well taken and understood.
My next post will go into the "twist" further and yes you are correct about others have already theorize on my concept and the differences will be slight in some ways and larger in others.
When I post the next part let me know if I'm making any progress.

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

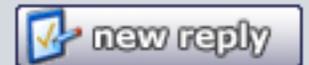

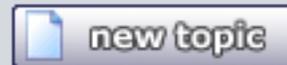

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Conceptual "Just Thinking"

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Poorichard Registered User Posts: 11 (10/6/03 1:19 am) Reply	 Conceptual "Just Thinking" <hr/> "Conceptual Space Time Cosmology". (Continuing from previous Post, a theoretical journey into conceptional space time as presented by Poorichard under the subject of "Just Thinking".) In this model there are three states or conditions. <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. Space devoid of mass.</li> <li>2. Mass devoid of space.</li> <li>3. Space and mass together.</li> </ol> In the first concept a conflict of acceptance has emerged, can absolute space exist? has absolute space been proven false? Could a spatial anomaly exist such as a dimension having no mass but something other then space? In the second concept a conflict of acceptance has emerged, Can absolute matter exist? has absolute matter been proven false? Could a spatial anomaly exist such as a dimension having no space but something other then matter? In the third concept acceptance with this model was found preferable to the first and second conceptional models. In an observance of the third model could it be because Space exist with matter? and Matter exist with space? That the existence of space is matter and matter the

	existence of space ? These two conditions cease as a state or condition when one or the other is non-existent? Notice: Time and Dimension will be covered in the next Post. Normally I am on the computer week-ends.
voce io Registered User Posts: 333 (10/7/03 12:19 am) Reply	 ... <hr/> "Space" and "Mass" are merely two concepts describing abstractions of one thing which does exist physically. There can't be space without mass, or mass without space. It's like taking water, and trying to ask "can there be wetness without fluidity, or fluidity without wetness?" (Kind of a bad example, but hey...shh)
Poorichard Registered User Posts: 12 (10/10/03 12:51 pm) Reply	 Re: ...reply <hr/> I agree. See my new post on space/matter

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

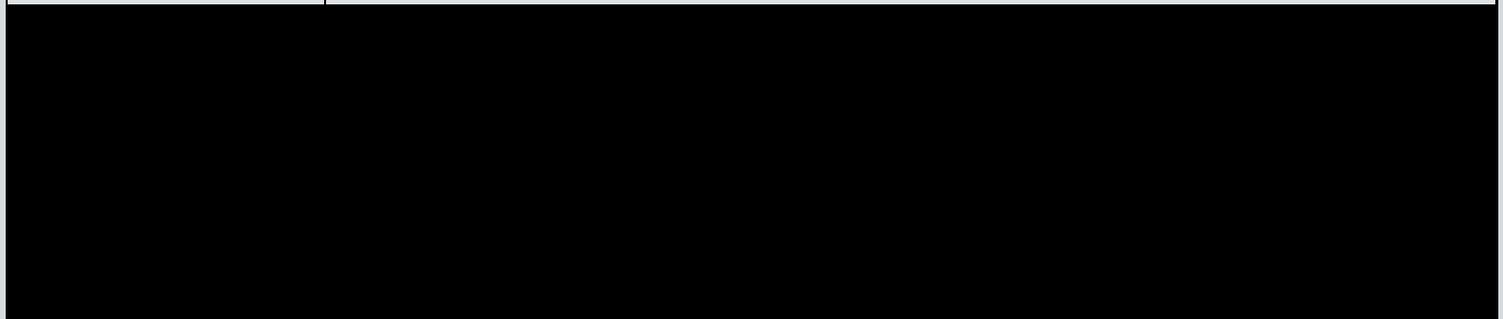

> GENIUS FORUM

> Consciousness and Measurability

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
DEL Registered User Posts: 1064 (4/10/04 11:25 am) Reply	Consciousness and Measurability <hr/> I think that consciousness and measurability are related. The belief in the possibility of measurement is directly proportionate to the level of consciousness in any given individual. Higher levels of consciousness create new forms of measurement in order to objectify their suoundings. Lower levels of consciousness seek to reduce the all forms of measurement in an effort to transcant measurement and subjectify their surroundings.
voce io Registered User Posts: 878 (4/12/04 7:57 am) Reply 	Re: Consciousness and Measurability <hr/> Either you're too smart for me, or you're too stupid for words.

DEL Registered User Posts: 1065 (4/13/04 1:07 am) Reply	Re: Consciousness and Measurability <hr/> Possibly. Well, let's look at some of the different types of measurement. Language Law Money Consciousness creates and develops exterior measurement and tools. Unconsciousness creates and develops interior measurement and tools.
voce io Registered User Posts: 879 (4/13/04 2:07 am) Reply 	Re: Consciousness and Measurability <hr/> Go into detail about what you meant by that, please. I didn't understand.
DEL Registered User Posts: 1067 (4/13/04 3:36 am) Reply	Re. . . <hr/> Those who have faith in God would probably see things differently perhaps like this: Language vs Word of God Law vs Law of God Money vs Power of God Consciousness creates and develops exterior measurement and tools - Those trying to achieve consciousness make efforts to detach themselves from God consciousness (unconsciousness) by trying to make everything measurable and regulated. Unconsciousness creates and develops interior measurement and tools - Those trying to achieve God consciousness (unconsciousness) make efforts to detach themselves from the concept of measurement and regulation. These two types of people negate each other just like the sceptic is negated by the man of faith.

silentsal Registered User Posts: 98 (4/13/04 3:52 am) Reply	Re: Re. . . <hr/> I am not sure I am understanding you either Del, what I see is that UNITY consciousness brings about issues of equality, wanting all to be equal is a result of wishful thinking and maybe a necessary step to further insight. With UNITY consciousness there still seems to be an issue of not being able to look at our own selves with complete impartiality, and as a result not truly understanding cause and effect. As far as measured and regulated are you simply referring to understanding cause and effect?
voce io Registered User Posts: 881 (4/13/04 4:14 am) Reply 	Re: Re. . . <hr/> Now neither of you are making any sense.
DEL Registered User Posts: 1070 (4/13/04 8:56 am) Reply	Re: Consciousness and Measurability <hr/> Quote: <hr/> silentsal what I see is that UNITY consciousness brings about issues of equality, wanting all to be equal is a result of wishful thinking and maybe a necessary step to further insight. <hr/> A conscious process of unity among people is very different from the unconscious belief in unity among people.

HansReinhardt Registered User Posts: 3 (4/22/04 2:37 am) Reply 	xx <hr/> I would say that intelligence and the ability to measure are related. "Consciousness" is a vague term and "levels of consciousness" only compounds the confusion. The only sense I can make of it is that it means some people have greater powers of mind than others, whether it be intuition or intelligence, etc.
DEL Registered User Posts: 1090 (4/27/04 5:53 am) Reply	Measurability <hr/> People try to measure intelligence with IQ tests. Have you heard of a measure for consciousness?
voce io Registered User Posts: 901 (4/27/04 7:20 am) Reply 	Re: Measurability <hr/> Try to come up with a system, Del. That'd be pretty interesting.
ZERRINO Registered User Posts: 8 (4/27/04 8:36 am) Reply	Re: Measurability <hr/> TO TALK ABOUT CONSCIOUSNESS AND NON-CONSCIOUSNESS IN THE SAME WAY - MEANS USING THE SAME SYSTEM OF DESCRIPTION - YOU HAVE TO MEASURE CONSCIOUSNESS AND NON-CONSCIOUSNESS USING THE SAME SYSTEM. YOU CANNOT TALK ABOUT CONSCIOUSNESS AND UNCONSCIOUSNESS IN THE SAME WAY - MEANS USING THE SAME SYSTEM OF DESCRIPTION - ANYWAY - BECAUSE UNCONSCIOUSNESS IS NOT THE SAME AS NON-CONSCIOUSNESS AND THEREFORE NOT THE OPPOSITE OF CONSCIOUSNESS. IT NEEDS A DEFINITION FIRST.

Paul Registered User Posts: 543 (4/27/04 12:23 pm) Reply	Re: Measurability <hr/> ZERRINO, WHY ALL THE SHOUTING? WHAT DID YOU SAY? OH, BECAUSE YOU THINK IT'S MORE CONVINCING. NOW I UNDERSTAND. THANK YOU!
DEL Registered User Posts: 1092 (4/27/04 4:22 pm) Reply	Re: Measurability <hr/> Apparently nobody understands the relationship between the motion of matter and the levels of consciousness. This is yet to be discovered. Quote: <hr/> ZERRINO UNCONSCIOUSNESS IS NOT THE SAME AS NON-CONSCIOUSNESS AND THEREFORE NOT THE OPPOSITE OF CONSCIOUSNESS. IT NEEDS A DEFINITION FIRST. <hr/> You can measure 2 apparently unmeasurable things by their effect on a third thing. No?
ZERRINO Registered User Posts: 9 (4/28/04 12:04 am) Reply	Re: Measurability <hr/> THIS IS A REPLY TO : : You can measure 2 apparently unmeasurable things by their effect on a third thing. No? : YES. PROBABLY. AS LONG AS THE 3RD THING IS AN EQUIVALENT MATRIX CONCERNING EACH OF THE 2 APPARENTLY UNMEASURABLE THINGS YOU ARE USING THE SAME SYSTEM.

JUST FIND OUT WHAT KIND OF SYSTEM THIS WILL BE THAT CONNECTS ITSELF - THE MEASURABLE - AND THE 2 THINGS - THE UNMEASURABLE - IN A WAY THAT MAKES YOU SEE SOMETHING TO IDENTIFY AS A MEASUREMENT.

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 901
(4/28/04 4:32 am)
Reply

Re: Measurability

---

Wow, someone's stupid.

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

Genius Forum

Causality • Courage • Rationality • Determination • Logic • Integrity • Thinking • Ideals
Wisdom • Reason • Discipline • Truth • Masculinity • Perfection • Universe

Genius News

David Quinn's Site

The Thinking Man's Minefield

EZB Edit

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Conservative woman's view

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
prozak666 Registered User Posts: 221 (8/18/03 12:18 am) Reply 	Conservative woman's view <hr/> What Other Women Want by Sigrun Christianson Loaded: 8/16/2003 I am also often asked, "What do women want?" I've talked and written on this subject, both in private and in public, more than I ever wanted to or thought I needed to. I don't assume for even one minute that I can write on behalf of all women, everywhere, but I can and will write on behalf of women like me. I've been accused of joyfully wallowing in female escapism and writing what I think men want to read, but I assure you that these are the true desires of women like me. I'm going to attempt to tell you, no holds barred, what women like me want from men: we want to be owned and possessed by intelligent, dynamic, strong, and dignified men with a mission; we want to be submissive to him and to be his pleasure, entertainment, amusement, and muse; we want to feel safe, protected, secure; we want to be useful and needed; we need to be able to respect you, and fear you. We are capable of thinking and acting independently. We are educated and fierce, but we want men who are more educated and more fierce – men who can control us. With respect to Miss Carraway's list, here's mine:

1. Ask about our concerns and opinions, and then do what you think is right. We like to have a voice, but we don't require a vote and in most cases, we don't want a vote. We want you to make the decision and allow us to be your cheerleaders. Since we already know that you value us and see us as important, feel free to compliment our breasts and backsides often. We are happy and pleased that you find us attractive and we want to know that you desire us.

2. How we feel changes by the minute, so don't bother trying to understand. By the time you think you've figured out what we're feeling, chances are we aren't feeling it anymore. We are emotional and irrational and we suspect that many of you secretly like this about us.

3. Ask for our opinions, but don't be surprised if we change our opinions from one day to the next. And then, of course, do what you will anyway. We want you to be the leader, hero, conqueror, etc. (Notice a pattern here?)

4. Surprise us with arbitrary unilateral decisions. We like it that you have the ability to make decisions for us. We want to be able to trust you and your judgment, and depend on you to be strong where we are weak.

5. Give us frequent hugs, kisses, pinches, and squeezes. We need to know that we are wanted and desired. We want to feel sexy. Deny us our erotic nature and you deny us our nature. Go ahead and lecture us on occasion, but only when it's really necessary and when you're in the right. We like that you take the time to explain your thoughts to us and tell us how we can better be the woman you want.

6. Tell us how you spent your day. We like to know what you are doing and thinking. Talk to us about your job, your politics, and your friends. Let it out and let us comfort you and rejuvenate your spirit. However, taking care of our home and family is our job – don't interfere. Leave the cleaning and decorating to us. If we ask for your opinion on a color for the wall or pattern for the sofa, indulge us. It's such a small request and it makes us happy. And no, we didn't sit around all day watching TV or talking on the phone. Women like us take our jobs seriously and take a lot of pride in giving you a nice home and in raising good children. The house is clean, the kids are clean, and there is food in the 'fridge.

7. If you really dislike something about us, tell us, and tell us how you think we can improve, but be respectful and polite about it. You owe us honesty and courtesy. We are strong, we have a good sense of ourselves and we don't take suggestions for improvement as criticism. We want to improve!

We will give you the same honesty and consideration because we know that you can handle it.

8. Annoying habits are just part of being human. You leave the toilet seat up and don't put the cap back on the toothpaste. I throw my clothes on the floor and talk while you're watching TV. Big deal. It's not the end of the world. If these are the worst things going on in our house, then we are blessed. We are not going to make everything into a battle for power and control. We have no doubt that you hold the majority of the power and we like it that way.

9. Help around the house and we'll tell you that we really appreciate all that you do for us. We know that you work hard and want to come home and relax, so when you do something extra at home, we really do appreciate it, even if we forget to tell you. We are also guilty of taking things for granted.

10. Let us now that you are proud of us. Sincere praise and compliments go a long way with us and it doesn't cost you anything so don't be cheap with them. Your praise motivates us to do more and better. Let others know that you are proud of us and brag a bit about how well we treat you. We brag to our friends & family about you.

11. Flowers and chocolate are really great and we love to tell our friends that you got them for us. Jewelry is also great. I think you know that already.

Tip: You can never, ever go wrong with stud earrings, a single-stone necklace, a tennis bracelet, or pearls. Those items are appropriate for every possible occasion.

Don't forget the card. We really like cards with a personal message.

We freak out when you forget our birthdays, anniversaries, and special holidays because we think it means that you don't care. That's just the way we are. That won't change. Use the "Hallmark Holiday" argument all you want, but it still won't change. It's not logical, rational, or reasonable to despair over you forgetting our birthdays, but we do anyway. Accept this about us.

12. We need to vent our frustrations sometimes and we want to do it with you because we feel that you are our best friend and we trust you, not because we are bitching at you. We are not bitching at you. We are not asking you fix us, just to listen -- I really can't emphasize that enough.

We know that you have stress and frustrations, too. Please tell us about them and let us take care of you. It makes us feel needed. We are innately maternal and want to baby the people we love. We need to know that we can offer you some comfort and heal some of your wounds. Let us. You don't have to be 'tough guy' with us all of the time.

13. We like new appliances. Electric can-openers, the type that mount under the cabinet freeing up counter space, are great. Heavy, cast-iron skillets, crock-pots, and glass mixing bowls are especially useful, too. Don't underestimate the importance of high-quality appliances and cookware.

Some of us are completely lost when it comes to auto mechanics and plumbing. Help us and we will help you. We're a team.

"The Ideal Man should talk to us as if we were goddesses, and treat us as if we were children. He should refuse all our serious requests, and gratify every one of our whims. He should encourage us to have caprices, and forbid us to have missions. He should always say much more than he means, and always mean much more than he says."

-Oscar Wilde

<http://www.vanguardnewsnetwork.com/vnn/showEssay.asp?essayID=1606>

ynithrix

Registered User

Posts: 197

(8/18/03 0:40)

Reply

Re: Conservative woman's view

---

It's unfortunate that people today write their ideas as though they are something new, when the same view a century ago would be seen as obvious and common sense.

Of course women are submissive: the fact that they are physically weak, emotionally unstable, illogical and inconsistent. What folly it would be for a dominant person to have these traits.

Feminism targets and depresses men, but it targets and depresses women first.

Paul Registered User Posts: 29 (8/18/03 1:10) Reply	Re: Conservative woman's view <hr/> What?! Quote: <hr/> Of course women are submissive: the fact that they are physically weak, emotionally unstable, illogical and inconsistent. What folly it would be for a dominant person to have these traits. <hr/> There's a fine one! Tell it to the mountains or to MKFaizi. No, it's more complicated. And delicate. Oh yes.
G Shantz Registered User Posts: 364 (8/18/03 2:43) Reply	-- <hr/> I thought women didn't know what they wanted. I suppose this list is subject to change.
prozak666 Registered User Posts: 224 (8/18/03 7:54) Reply 	Re: -- <hr/> Not all women are formed alike. Further, note the collaborative (not judgmental) nature of this piece.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1388 (8/18/03 14:43) Reply	--- <hr/> Man, that 'piece' is boring. I love wild women, beautiful ones, the 'pretty' ones are monotonous.

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1026

(8/19/03 10:53)

Reply

Re: ---

---

I think Prozak's post is pretty much on target. Pretty typical.

I am female by genetic predisposition. In other words, I was born that way.

However, I have been without a male fixture for about thirteen years. I mow my own grass or it does not get mowed. I take out the garbage or it does not get taken out. I work or I get no money. I get the oil changed or the car dies.

What's a tennis bracelet?

What's a gift?

I think of a gift such as flowers -- I don't like chocolate -- as payment for services rendered.

Since I am not interested in servicing, there is no such thing to me as a gift.

Faizi

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 1770

(8/19/03 11:46)

Reply

re:

---

Sigrun Christianson wrote:

Quote:

---

I'm going to attempt to tell you, no holds barred, what women like me want from men: we want to be owned and possessed by intelligent, dynamic, strong, and dignified men with a mission; .....

---

But not the mission of wisdom, alas. That is the last thing they want.

A woman and a wise man make for a very happy couple. Neither wants anything to do with the other.

prozak666

Registered User

Posts: 228

(8/19/03 13:06)

Reply

Re: re:

---

Eh, I think you're taking an overly dogmatic look at it, sir. A woman doesn't want the same kind of wisdom as a man, but a man isn't wired for the wisdom of keeping a family and certain other tasks. Why is it there are so few female child molesters, eh?

Nature is code, like everything else.

ynithrix

Registered User

Posts: 202

(8/21/03 10:05)

Reply

Re: re:

---

I blame pedophilia on feminism. Some men look for innocence in a woman and someone to protect: women are pretending they don't need this, so those men go after children who are innocent. Woman trying to be men leads to men seeking women seeking children instead, perhaps.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 1771

(8/21/03 11:15)

Reply

re:

---

Prozak wrote:

Quote:

---

Eh, I think you're taking an overly dogmatic look at it, sir. A woman doesn't want the same kind of wisdom as a man,

---

The wisdom of truth? I'm inclined to agree.

Quote:

---

but a man isn't wired for the wisdom of keeping a family and certain other tasks.

---

That isn't wisdom. It is cultural impregnation and genetic programming.

Quote:

---

Why is it there are so few female child molesters, eh?

---

Women aren't as free as men. They are less able to transcend their genetic inheritance and the mores of their society.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 534

(8/21/03 11:15 am)

Reply

Re: re:

---

Ha, the Will To Power not being a contender for this negativity, of course.

And paedophilia only being an emergent phenomenon since the advent of Feminism.

Edited by: Dave Toast at: 8/21/03 11:18 am

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 1336

(8/21/03 14:00)

Reply

Re: re:

---

Prozak wrote:

Quote:

---

Why is it there are so few female child molesters, eh?

---

That's kind of like asking why men committ almost all rapes. It's in the definition of the thing [offence].

I would say that men and women molest children differently because their sexuality takes on a rather different form. As far as I'm concerned women sexually molest children all the time. A man's sexual molestation is physical, and woman's more psychological.

As in most things, what men do is overt and obvious and seems more real than the more "covert" and subtle activity of women.

Dan Rowden

BryanParrish

Global User

Posts: 77

(8/3/04 5:41)

Reply

Re: Conservative woman's view

---

FUCK SHIT PISS BALLS NUTS BANANA

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.32
Copyright ©1999-2005 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Contradiction, and the shamelessness of philosophers.

New Topic

Add Reply

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2467 (3/1/04 2:56 pm) Reply	Contradiction, and the shamelessness of philosophers. <hr/> What do you mean AND ?! Contradiction, and above all else, self-contradiction, as it comes unconsciously, is the most shameful thing to lovers of all kinds. But this is why there is never ever sense for them to fear it. I think it is called ageing.(:D)
DEL Registered User Posts: 1034 (3/1/04 6:22 pm) Reply	Contradiction, and the shamelessness of philosophers. <hr/> What is the value of shame?
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2469 (3/1/04 10:20 pm) Reply	--- <hr/> Have you ever felt ashamed?
DEL Registered User Posts: 1036 (3/2/04 7:28 am) Reply	- <hr/> Yes, but I can't see a consistent benefit. Can you?

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2245
(3/2/04 8:05 am)
Reply

Re: -

---

It is the voice of the herd inside us.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2480
(3/2/04 1:10 pm)
Reply

----

---

Quote:

---

Yes, but I can't see a consistent benefit. Can you?

---

No, not a consistent one!

wounded bird
Posts: 3
(3/5/04 12:42 pm)
Reply

Can you elaborate on....

---

your initial statement. I am curious.

As to shame, consider the statement:

Consistent and continuous shaming can ultimately lead to destroying a human physically, mentally and spiritually.

And then consider this statement:

The benefit derived is for the one who does the shaming, who quite possibly would have a thought-less, submissive puppet around him/her willing to do his/her bidding.

I look forward to your considerations.

suergaz Registered User Posts: 2523 (3/5/04 12:53 pm) Reply	--- <hr/> All I know is that I've felt ashamed that I am not better than I am. It's quite irrational, and nothing really to consider. I've never thought it beneficial to make anyone feel ashamed where they can be shown how better to appear to themselves and others, in other words, 'making ashamed' or what you call 'shaming' is not necessary at all. I'm not sure what your second statement means. Like dr frankenstein and igor like?
WolfsonJakk Posts: 1508 (3/5/04 1:28 pm) Reply	---- <hr/> What is it in us that varies the ability to feel shame? One may try to shame another, but if it is not received, the cycle is broken; like an undeliverable email lost in the ether... ...sound of howling desert winds... Edited by: WolfsonJakk at: 3/5/04 1:29 pm
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2527 (3/5/04 1:37 pm) Reply	--- <hr/> Are you trying to shame me with your howling wolf? (:D)
WolfsonJakk Posts: 1509 (3/5/04 3:51 pm) Reply	Re: --- <hr/> I am the Red Rooster. Koo, Koo, Kachoo

wounded bird
Posts: 5
(3/6/04 3:19 pm)
Reply

Several comments....

---

First, suergaz, I was commenting on your initial statement regarding contradiction. Being a former student of philosophical logic and mathematical logic (on an elementary level...Discrete math), I was curious about what you were trying to say about contradictions.

Secondly, it is quite understandable as we all at one time or another feel ashamed that we are not better than we'd hoped we'd be, but you know, if you would look at your strengths rather than your weaknesses, use them in ways that will satisfy you and your ideals, you might surprise yourself. It is a good wake-up call to see our weaknesses from time to time, but dwelling on them only makes them more a part of you.

Lastly, I agree with you that shaming is highly unnecessary and, in my opinion, based on my statements, quite a waste including the person who benefits, for do they truly benefit? And yes, like Dr. Frankenstein and Igor. Who knows what great things might have come from Igor if given the chance to find his strengths? But then again, it was only a movie, right?

Wolfson Jakk, I believe it is self-worth, self-confidence and/or self-esteem that varies the ability to feel shame or even perhaps detachment from the one who shames. However, it seems detachment is difficult if one is prone to emotional reactions rather than logical ones.

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 92
(3/12/04 11:23 am)
Reply

Re: Several comments....

---

Our consciousness must contradict our self. Consciousness is both objective and subjective. Only an infinite being must exist. Be the mirror then look through the glass. Love the magnetism of self enlightenment. What we experience is God not the other way around. You are neither the object nor the subject, you don't exist...or do you;)

Edited by: XXX STATIC X at: 3/12/04 11:28 am

wounded bird Posts: 12 (3/13/04 8:31 am) Reply	For the first time.... <hr/> in my life, I think I finally understand. So many people have told me these things, and told them, and told them, but until now I have never understood. Your analogy worked, if I'm understanding correctly. Good Job XXX Static X and thank you.  As to whether I exist, you just dropped a bomb, let me think about it for awhile. smile
---	--

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Courage and masculinity

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
krussell2004 Registered User Posts: 7 (1/9/04 9:06 am) Reply	 Courage and masculinity <hr/> Thoroughout history all truly brave and valiant warriors were for the most part men. This would indicate that courage( true courage) is a distinctly manly trait. There is a colloquial expression often used. "Do you have the balls?" Or "You don't have the balls!" The reason for this saying is IMHO that someone very wise who understood that courage originates from the testicles started it. The common folk intuitively caught on to it because we all have intuition to the truth, but only geniuses know the truth. This proves that courage is a testosterone based derivitive that originates from the scrotum. Remove the sac and you have a whinning eunuch who is a coward and much more like a woman than like a man.
voce io Registered User Posts: 550 (1/9/04 9:08 am) Reply	 Re: Courage and masculinity <hr/> Haha, I hope you aren't being serious.

krussell2004
Registered User
Posts: 8
(1/9/04 9:17 am)
Reply

Re: Courage and masculinity

---

Have you really taken anything I said seriously so far?

I thought I went out of my way to be funny and tongue and cheek in all my earlier posts and David Quinn gets all up in arms about it. At least drowden seemed to treat it with the levity it was due.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 1998
(1/9/04 9:29 am)
Reply

Re: Courage and masculinity

---

That's a very crude and inaccurate interpretation of my views. Courage has indeed been the province of men throughout the ages but that's mainly because of their role as defenders of the tribe, family, nation, etc. Men have evolved to sacrifice themselves for the sake of protecting women and children, and also other men, and that takes courage.

Because of this long-standing evolutionary role, there probably is a link between testosterone and acts of courage. People with higher testosterone levels tend to be more headstrong and aggressive, which would make performing actions of bravery easier. But this doesn't mean that women aren't capable of courageous acts, although it probably does mean that courageous women are likely to have higher testosterone levels and more masculine characters.

I just want to let you guys know from the outset that your attempts to paint me as a red-necked misogynist who fears or hates women are way off the mark. If you want to discuss the woman issue in an intelligent, philosophical fashion, I'm be happy to oblige. But I won't be paying much attention to cretinous, smirking, shallow objections, such as the one expressed by Krussell above.

krussell2004

Registered User

Posts: 9

(1/9/04 11:01 am)

Reply

 Re: Courage and masculinity

---

Quote:

---

I just want to let you guys know from the outset that your attempts to paint me as a red-necked misoynist who fears or hates women are way off the mark.

---

Whoa! Calm down right there, man. Are you really that paranoid? There's no need for hysterics here, really. No one is trying to besmerch your character here. Relax.

Quote:

---

If you want to discuss the woman issue in an intelligent, philosophical fashion, I'm be happy to oblige.

---

That last sentence was gramatically incorrect. Do you not check your posts much before you abruptly send them off to cyber space? You are aware of the edit function are you not?

Quote:

---

But I won't be paying much attention to cretinous, smirking, shallow objections, such as the one expressed by Krussell above.

---

LOL You really are more funny than a barrell of monkeys David.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 868
(1/9/04 11:19 am)
Reply

 Re: Courage and masculinity

---

LOL

Irony alert.

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1603
(1/9/04 2:06 pm)
Reply

 Re: Courage and masculinity

---

The kind of courage that is necessary for real spiritual advancement, which I assume is more particularly what is being discussed here, is not even something I would attribute to women at all. That kind of courage requires a form of consciousness that is somewhat rare even among men, but which is only found in a very small minority of women. That is because what we're talking about is a very abstract turn of mind, one which can see truths and their consequences and which therefore can experience "fear and trembling" in their wake. Without that, courage doesn't even enter the picture.

True courage is an act of consciousness, not just a virtue we attribute to some act after the event. Acting out of emotional necessity or instinct, as both sexes often do, is not what I would characterise as actual courage.

Dan Rowden

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1393
(1/9/04 3:59 pm)
Reply

 Re: Courage and masculinity

---

I agree with Dan, but I think my (dis)affinity towards its importance lies in the fact that within 1000 - 1500 years, we will be asexual creatures (by default) of mostly our own design. I believe this, therefore the gender based description of ignorance that is common here serves a temporal, local purpose; a predetermined target meant to invoke a social shift, as soon as possible.

It is as important a thing as any other thing. Call it destiny if you want, I don't care. To reach a point from a point, one must traverse the line. Gender is ultimately irrelevant.

Tharan

drowden Forum Host Posts: 1604 (1/9/04 4:54 pm) Reply	 Courage and gender <hr/> I can't say I share your confidence in our destiny as asexual. But I think an important factor to remember is that issues relating to mind-gender are ultimately as much about that feature within each individual as it is about biological men and women. Dan Rowden
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2053 (1/12/04 12:43 am) Reply	 --- <hr/> If gender is irrelevant, then sex cannot be! (Sex is our destiny! (:D)) Don't worry, I don't mean this forums!
Dave Toast Registered User Posts: 871 (1/12/04 2:12 am) Reply 	 Re: --- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Dan: I think an important factor to remember is that issues relating to mind-gender are ultimately as much about that feature within each individual as it is about biological men and women. <hr/> Indeed. Use a different, more applicable designation FFS.
drowden Forum Host Posts: 1608 (1/12/04 12:33 pm) Reply 	 Re: --- <hr/> If I'd ever come across a better, more applicable, more evocative and provocative designation I would use it. I haven't so I don't/can't. Dan Rowden

krussell2004

Registered User

Posts: 18

(1/14/04 12:25 pm)

Reply

 Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

I just want to let you guys know from the outset that your attempts to paint me as a red-necked misoynist who fears or hates women are way off the mark.

---

The fact that you wish to turn women into men with vaginas and breasts makes a a misogynist of the most perverse and disturbed sort in my book.

---

Quote:

---

If you want to discuss the woman issue in an intelligent, philosophical fashion, I'm be happy to oblige.

---

With you that would clearly be a hopeless endeavour.

---

Quote:

---

But I won't be paying much attention to cretinous, smirking, shallow objections, such as the one expressed by Krussell above.

---

What a patronizing horse's ass you are. What's the attraction to masculine women? Don't you know that lesbians aren't the least bit interested in men? ;)

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 733
(1/14/04 1:48 pm)
Reply

 Re: Courage and masculinity

---

Dan: The kind of courage that is necessary for real spiritual advancement, which I assume is more particularly what is being discussed here, is not even something I would attribute to women at all.

You mean the courage to live on welfare and spend your time on Internet philosophy boards?

Thomas

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 734
(1/14/04 2:00 pm)
Reply

 Re: Courage and masculinity

---

Krussel: Throughout history all truly brave and valiant warriors were for the most part men. This would indicate that courage( true courage) is a distinctly manly trait. [...] This proves that courage is a testosterone based derivative that originates from the scrotum. Remove the sac and you have a whinning eunuch who is a coward and much more like a woman than like a man.

Aren't you confusing courage with aggression and self-affirmation? The male tendency towards these behaviors can be explained in purely Darwinian terms. Only the dominant male of hominid groups has unopposed access to all females of the same group and, hence, he has the best chances to reproduce, which is why aggression and self-affirmation are selected male behaviors. We have evolved that way and the same rules - albeit in strongly diminished form- are still in effect. Female courage shows primarily in making high bets and investments in the nurture of offspring. In a strictly biological way that is.

Thomas

Naturyl

Registered User

Posts: 26

(1/15/04 11:29 am)

Reply

 Re: Courage and masculinity

---

Quote:

---

You mean the courage to live on welfare and spend your time on Internet philosophy boards?

---

Since this is also what I do at the moment, I feel that I'm uniquely qualified to address this, although it wasn't directed at me.

If your point is that it is kind of incongruous and even a shade ridiculous for QRS to discourse on courage and the ever-present 'masculinity' while sitting at home living on the dole, I'd actually have to agree. To be quite honest, I collect government payments because I am lazy, lacking formal education, and too prideful to flip hamburgers. I do, however, take all the work I can 'on the side' provided it is within my chosen career field - computer support. However, as long as I were collecting the dole and sitting on my ass posting to the internet most of the time, I think I'd be hesitant to speak too authoritatively on the subjects of 'courage' and 'masculinity.' If I did, my wife (who has her own strong ideas about what a 'man' is) would quickly cut me down to size, just as you, Thomas, have done the inevitable and cut David down to size here.

It's advisable for all of us to keep an eye on our 'hypocrisy meter' before it reaches the level at which we're just asking for the wet blankets. Guys who sit around on welfare and are either too lazy, prideful, or (in QRS case, I think) preoccupied with themselves to work have to be careful about telling others who does and doesn't have "balls."

On the other hand, Thomas, it was a bit of a cheap shot. Refusal to work does not automatically revoke one's manhood, although that opinion seems quite popular. While it is inadvisable for QRS to boast and preach considering their means of support, it is also inadvisable for others to be overly judgemental toward them. It's best for all, in fact, to live and let live. As they say, 'it takes all kinds.' Diversity is good, and diversity that conforms to our expectations is not really diversity at all.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2034

(1/15/04 12:42 pm)

Reply

 Re: Courage and masculinity

Thomas wrote:

Quote:

---

You mean the courage to live on welfare and spend your time on Internet philosophy boards?

---

It actually does take a lot of courage to live that kind of life, especially as you get older. A philosophically-minded welfare recipient has very little money, no status within the community, and no supporting networks. Each day, he has to weather the looks of scorn, the barely-concealed contempt, and the chiding abuse which he regularly receives from others. And when he opens his mouth to declare that he does all this deliberately for the sake of promoting rationality and wisdom in the world - well, that takes even more courage.

It is a similar to the courage that is required by a conscientious objector in a time of war. Just the way that Natuyl quickly felt a need to justify being on the dole, to assure everyone that he really is a regular member of society deep down, that he really isn't one of them, is a testament to the courage that is required.

Rhett Hamilton

Registered User

Posts: 239

(1/15/04 12:54 pm)

Reply | Edit

 Re: Courage and masculinity

Quote:

---

You mean the courage to live on welfare and spend your time on Internet philosophy boards?

---

Since this is also what I do at the moment, I feel that I'm uniquely qualified to address this, although it wasn't directed at me.

If your point is that it is kind of incongruous and even a shade ridiculous for QRS to discourse on courage and the ever-present 'masculinity' while sitting at home living on the dole, I'd actually have to agree. To be quite honest, I collect government payments because I am lazy, lacking formal education, and too prideful to flip hamburgers. I do, however, take all the work I can 'on the side' provided it is within my chosen career field - computer support. However, as long as I were collecting the dole and sitting on my ass posting to the internet most of the time, I think I'd be hesitant to speak too authoritatively on the subjects of 'courage' and 'masculinity.' If I did, my wife (who has her own strong ideas about what a 'man' is) would quickly cut me down to size, just as you, Thomas, have done the inevitable and cut David down to size here.

I reached a point where it was utterly unfathomable for me to remain in the workforce or somehow provide for myself, despite my absolute best attempts to. Nevertheless, i still required courage, because for me to go on benefits meant that i had to speak my mind to people that then have a lot of control over me - on issues that were really really hard for me to talk about at the time, and that were highly apparent during that very process. There was just nowhere to escape, nowhere to run...benefits were by no means a comfort zone.

I don't choose not to work for money. Society chooses for me, and i don't rest easy on it's support. I still work harder than anyone i've ever come across. In fact, i never leave work.

Rhett

Naturyl

Registered User

Posts: 30

(1/15/04 1:09 pm)

Reply

 Re: Courage and masculinity

Yeah, I know. You're preaching to the choir, actually. I've been through all of that myself. I wasn't meaning to imply that going on benefits couldn't be a courageous choice in some circumstances, just that given the general perception of these things, it's usually best to be discreet in one's proclamations. When one reveals such things about their personal life, it becomes very hard to talk about certain subjects without inviting the sort of put-down that Thomas offered.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 240
(1/15/04 1:09 pm)
Reply | Edit

 Re: ---

---

What's the attraction to masculine women? Don't you know that lesbians aren't the least bit interested in men? ;)

I've actually come across quite a number of lesbians that are still interested in men (and i'm saying this from personal experience). I've even heard it said that all lesbians are bi-sexual at heart, and have heard a number of lesbians affirm that. I'm not making a big point of it, just thought i'd pitch it in.

I have also found that many are somewhat more courageous and masculine minded than their more feminine sisters, but it's really only a thin veil. Feminine mindedness is still very much the wobbly platform upon which their mind stands.

Another point, nature does seem capable of producing the odd woman with a fairly high IQ. Unfortunately, their femininity can still quite easily direct that into relatively inane pursuits. They become souped-up shoe shoppers.

Rhett

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1259
(1/15/04 1:40 pm)
Reply

 courage and masculinity

---

I'm confused. Nateryl, I thought you were American. So what does your wife do, and what are her strong opinions? In america, even women with little kids can't stay on welfare for more than two years anymore, and that's a lifetime total. None of you would be on welfare here, except perhaps Quinn with his disability. What would you guys do then?

I have tried very hard to be understanding of it, and I only mentioned it once. I do find it provocative, however, as you say Nateryl, for the same people to crow about masculinity. Let's say I have a few ideas of my own.

The way I justify it is that in another country like India, they would just take off with their begging bowls and live outside. Perfectly legit. But I have a problem with a lifestyle that is not workable for everyone. Obviously everyone can't go on welfare. Like the vegans who think that is the way to be healthy but must take vitamin B12. If we can't live without an animal source of B12, maybe we aren't vegans.

Of course, everyone can't be a beggar either, but the difference is the support is given willingly.

Actually, I'm not all that impressed with male courage, at least in the spiritual or emotional realm. I find men repeatedly scared to probe into topics that are emotionally scary for them.

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

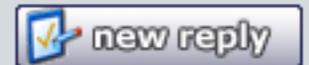

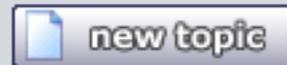

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Courage and masculinity

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Naturyl  Registered User Posts: 32 (1/15/04 2:02 pm) Reply 	 Re: courage and masculinity <hr/> Yeah. I should have been more specific. I'm not on 'welfare,' I am on disability. You can still get that here in America, surprisngly enough. :) My wife (we're not actually married, but it's a long term thing and 'wife' is a convenient four letter word) stays at home. She does not work or recieve disability. Her strong opinion is that a man who could arguably work and does not do so is not much of a man. This causes some tense moments around the house on occassion, but for the most part, I'm able to answer for myself with some effectiveness. There are of course various factors that have to be taken into consideration, such as whether or not I actually can work, whether or not it is financially worthwhile to do so for low wages, the possibility of success in other endeavors such as home-based computer repair, etc. In the 'spiritual and emotional realm,' however, I have fewer limitations. I tend to do fairly well in those areas, as well as in philosophy and communication. I take to those areas as naturally as others take to work, family, and the mortgage.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 741
(1/15/04 2:03 pm)
Reply

Re: Courage and masculinity

Naturyl: On the other hand, Thomas, it was a bit of a cheap shot. Refusal to work does not automatically revoke one's manhood, although that opinion seems quite popular.

But I didn't say anything about manhood or refusal to work. I just said that collecting welfare and reading Nietzsche doesn't strike me as a particularly 'courageous' lifestyle. Living on the dole is acceptable, though. I think of it as an escape mechanism; a rejection of society. Obviously the welfare system would collapse if a significant amount of people exploited it, but since there is a self-regulating mechanism, collapse is unlikely. If more people decide to live on the dole, there will be less money for everyone. The amount of money that an individual can spend will thus decrease. This makes being a welfare recipient very uncomfortable, hence, the amount of people on welfare will in turn decrease grow towards an equilibrium.

I do think that refusing to be a salaried slave is a good choice - if that is what you feel like as an employee. I made the same decision 12 years ago. Obviously there are different approaches to the problem of 'terrestrial survival' after you have decided not to be a salary slave. Welfare is only one of them. I don't think that lazy welfare recipients are a threat to society. Heck, I have seen so many lazy people in the corporate world and in government service getting paid large amounts of money for doing nothing. I really don't mind a few people getting little for doing nothing. You have my sympathy.

Personally I find autonomous self-sufficient participation in the economy preferable to collecting welfare. But, hey, that's really up to you.

Thomas

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2037

(1/15/04 2:07 pm)

Reply

Re: courage and masculinity

Bird wrote:

Quote:

---

The way I justify it is that in another country like India, they would just take off with their begging bowls and live outside. Perfectly legit. But I have a problem with a lifestyle that is not workable for everyone.

Obviously everyone can't go on welfare.

---

You evidently have no problems being a nurse, even though the economy would completely collapse if everyone became a nurse.

Quote:

---

Actually, I'm not all that impressed with male courage, at least in the spiritual or emotional realm. I find men repeatedly scared to probe into topics that are emotionally scary for them.

---

It's more to do with the fact that men are held to be the responsible agents in our society, far more so than women, and thus cannot afford to rock their own boat, so to speak, by examining deeper emotional issues. Their very identities as men are wrapped up in what sort of life they have built in society and what sort of things they have achieved. It is a very big thing to risk all this for the sake of exploring the sort of emotional issues that women like to explore, especially when they're not all that interested in them to begin with. But if needs be, they can apply their minds to it. They do have the necessary courage for such a task.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1263

(1/15/04 2:23 pm)

Reply

 welfare kings

---

Quote:

---

You evidently have no problems being a nurse, even though the economy would completely collapse if everyone became a nurse.

---

The two are not really comparable. The comparison was between being a wage slave, or collecting other people's wage slave taxes. I DO have a problem being a nurse, however. I think the entire medical establishment is parasitical and greedy, and of little worth. I work on a death prolongation squad. That is most of what we do. We cut off people's limbs without ever trying to save them except through antibiotics. I mean, they don't even soak an infected toe or foot with poor circulation in hot water! And 80% of the patients are so stupid that they never try to figure out anything on their own, which is why many of them are there - stupidity.

I'm considering learning to mix drinks and getting tips for my cleavage. I'm an excellent counselor of troubled people, and in the dim light of a bar, with the help of alcohol, I think the patrons might not notice that I'm in my forties.

---

Quote:

---

It's more to do with the fact that men are held to be the responsible agents in our society, far more so than women, and thus cannot afford to rock their own boat, so to speak, by examining deeper emotional issues.

---

Yeah, that probably is the source of their cowardice. But when you say they they have the courage if they want to - well if they can't find it can you really say they have it?

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2039

(1/15/04 2:38 pm)

Reply

Re: welfare kings

Bird wrote:

Quote:

---

The two are not really comparable. The comparison was between being a wage slave, or collecting other people's wage slave taxes.

---

Does this mean you are in favour of nurses working in private/corporate hospitals, while being against those nurses who work in the public health system and receive their income from people's taxes?

Quote:

---

I think the entire medical establishment is parasitical and greedy, and of little worth. I work on a death prolongation squad. That is most of what we do. We cut off people's limbs without ever trying to save them except through antibiotics. I mean, they don't even soak an infected toe or foot with poor circulation in hot water! And 80% of the patients are so stupid that they never try to figure out anything on their own, which is why many of them are there - stupidity.

---

Yes, the American health system looks diabolical. We in Australia tend to look at what you do over there in horror.

Quote:

---

But when you say they they have the courage if they want to - well if they can't find it can you really say they have it?

---

I was expressing a generalization. Obviously, there are men who don't have it.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1266

(1/15/04 2:51 pm)

Reply

 welfare kings

---

Quote:

---

Does this mean you are in favour of nurses working in private/ corporate hospitals, while being against those nurses who work in the public health system and receive their income from people's taxes?

---

No, because it really all comes from taxes. People pay a lot for insurance, and their employers pay a lot for insurance, and then the medical establishment robs the country blind because medical insurance gives a false sense of not paying. But yet the companies are paying for less and less as the costs go up, and more people are dropping out. If they're poor enough they get in on the public system. I myself do not have full medical coverage. I gave it up when they raised the price by $100 dollars per month over two years time. Now I have just accident insurance and that should be fine. I don't plan on major medical illness anytime soon.

I want universal coverage, but in this stupid fucking country it will only mean that the taxes will skyrocket because everyone will demand their share of our outrageously wasteful pie. A sensible government could control costs, and eliminating the middle men would be such a relief, but we are too insane to implement anything rational. I'm turning into a goddamn communist.

We have narcotics control rules that force us to throw away vast quantities of perfectly good narcotics. I had to throw away an entire unused 100cc bag of morphine the other day, simply because the patient had left her room for two hours. I protested and protested but the other nurses said it had to be done. We will roast in hell for letting Iraqi children languish without morphine while we dump ours down the sink.

Naturyl

Registered User

Posts: 36

(1/15/04 4:10 pm)

Reply

 Re: welfare kings? Well, I'm a leftist, whaddaya want?

I think we can all agree that the American health system leaves a great deal to be desired. I have never had much trust in doctors, whom I view as primarily money-motivated. At 16, I had an infected toe caused by an ingrown toenail. The podiatrist recommended removing the nail, and if that didn't work, removing the toe. I balked and instead used four daily epsom salt baths, which promptly cured the condition. Similar stories abound, so Bird's experiences come as no surprise. Come in at 10AM, hack off a limb before lunch, collect a couple thousand, see a few patients for five minutes each before leaving at 2:30, get in the Jag and go golfing. Modern medicine can be wonderful, but the less the commercialized health industry is involved, the better.

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

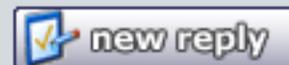

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

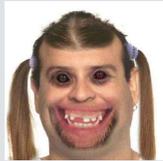

- > The Thinkers' Inn
- > Cremation or Burial ?

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
DEL Registered User Posts: 633 (8/30/03 5:40 pm) Reply	 Cremation or Burial ? <hr/> What do you want them to do with your body when you die? There is a huge significance in this.
Dave Toast Registered User Posts: 558 (8/31/03 12:05 am) Reply 	 Re: Cremation or Burial ? <hr/> Are these the only choices? I rather like the idea of plastination or medical research but who knows what wild and whacky choices will be available come the time. Maybe I could be turned into a fireworks display, maybe I'll be obliged to be put into the great meat grinder to be processed and made into much needed nutrition in a world short on supply. One thing's for sure, come that time, I won't care. Go on the Del, tell us why there is a huge significance in this.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1434 (9/1/03 12:46 am) Reply	 Re: Cremation or Burial ? <hr/> I think a more significant question was Nietzches "Do you want to die in quicksand or in fire and light?"

jimhaz Registered User Posts: 315 (9/1/03 4:13 pm) Reply 	Re: Cremation or Burial ? <hr/> I want to be Soylent Green.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1437 (9/1/03 10:55 pm) Reply	Re: Cremation or Burial ? <hr/> It's because you're nothing more than an emergency ration. I want to be glazed and served with an apple in my mouth.
MKFaizi Registered User Posts: 1069 (9/2/03 1:30 pm) Reply 	Re: Cremation or Burial ? <hr/> This is an idle discussion about nothing. Faizi
drowden Forum Host Posts: 1388 (9/2/03 1:57 pm) Reply 	Re: Cremation or Burial ? <hr/> For the sole purpose of irritating Leo: Marsha is correct.
DEL Registered User Posts: 637 (9/2/03 3:42 pm) Reply	Re: Cremation or Burial ? <hr/> Cremation is symbolical of the male desire to be spiritual and universal. To have this impure body purified by fire and release the soul Burial is symbolical of the female desire to remain carnal, return to the womb, reincarnate.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 880
(9/2/03 4:38 pm)
Reply

Re: Cremation or Burial ?

---

My mother wants us to do whatever costs as close to nothing as possible. She says a dead body is garbage, and that's where we should throw her carcass. Or, failing that, we could cremate her and flush the ashes down the toilet. She's pretty rational for a Christian.

I find cremation unnecessarily violent. I mean, it takes such a hot fire and lot of fuel to burn a body. Why not just dump it in a hole and let it do what is only right - fertilize the soil?

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1395
(9/2/03 11:11 pm)
Reply

Re: Cremation or Burial ?

---

Del wrote:

Quote:

---

Cremation is symbolical of the male desire to be spiritual and universal. To have this impure body purified by fire and release the soul.

---

I don't know about that so much. Such symbolism looks like a rather ordinary form of religious dualism to me. A higher form of symbolism would be one that says the manner of the body's disposal is irrelevant as whatever form it may take is fundamentally the same as life itself, and necessarily partakes in the infinite flow of Reality (i.e an illusion to causality as the basis of all things).

Dan Rowden

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 642
(9/3/03 8:00 am)
Reply

Re: Cremation or Burial ?

---

The way you choose to have your body disposed of is your last message to the living who are close to you.

MKFaizi

Registered User
Posts: 1070
(9/3/03 9:14 am)
Reply

 Re: Cremation or Burial ?

---

I choose cremation because it is cheap and without a lot of bullshit connected to it. My body will not be decked out with makeup and put on display. I don't want my body to be embalmed. I especially do not want my kids to have to spend perfectly good money on a funeral.

That's it in a nutshell. No metaphysics to it.

Faizi

MKFaizi

Registered User
Posts: 1071
(9/3/03 9:17 am)
Reply

 Re: Cremation or Burial ?

---

I like the idea of flushing the ashes down the toilet or just letting the funeral home do the honors. I agree with Anna's mother on this.

Faizi

drowden

Forum Host
Posts: 1402
(9/3/03 2:41 pm)
Reply

 Re: Cremation or Burial ?

---

Del wrote:

Quote:

---

The way you choose to have your body disposed of is your last message to the living who are close to you.

---

Then my first and last message is that I don't care one whit how it is disposed of.

Dan Rowden

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 645
(9/4/03 10:21 am)
Reply

 Re: Cremation or Burial ?

---

Well, I think it's sad to see such symbolic/spiritual waste. But perhaps it is not. The ways you have all chosen to dispose of your corpse indicates the value you place on your life work.

Your burial is like a conclusion of the message of your life. If you write and book and end it poorly it can affect the book. If the ending of a movie is poor we feel the whole movie was poor with only some good bits in it. If you give a speech and make a poor finish your message could be wasted.

Body language applies to your corpse as well.

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1415
(9/4/03 1:41 pm)
Reply

 Re: Cremation or Burial ?

---

Your sadness and perception of waste merely indicates your lack of understanding of my symbolism.

Dan Rowden

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 649
(9/4/03 6:20 pm)
Reply

 Re: Cremation or Burial ?

---

Quote:

---

drowden:

Your sadness and perception of waste merely indicates your lack of understanding of my symbolism.

---

I understand.

It is the animal focus in contrast to the plant focus. Weininger talks about this.

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1421
(9/5/03 1:36 am)
Reply

 Re: Cremation or Burial ?

---

No, it is the non-focus. Weininger never made it that far.

Dan Rowden

prozak666 +
Registered User
Posts: 237
(9/12/03 12:12 am)
Reply

 Re: Cremation or Burial ?

---

I would like my corpse to be ritually sodomized in front of a large church, then burned and the ashes converted into some form of child's toy.

As always, the middle path: pragmatism in recognizing the meaninglessness of afterdeath, but also recognizing that an ethical act can extend past the grave.

"Ethical" may not be the word I'm groping for here.

Actually, I change my thought - I'd like my corpse to be incinerated alongside 6 million Jews.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 707
(9/27/03 10:02 am)
Reply

 Re: Cremation or Burial ?

---

Quote:

---

prozak666 :
Actually, I change my thought - I'd like my corpse to be incinerated alongside 6 million Jews.

---

Why just Jews?
No Indians, Blacks, Scandinavians or Chinese?

Lbartoli
Registered User
Posts: 286
(9/27/03 4:24 pm)
Reply

 get corrected, Dan

---

Actually it irritates me far more when you bother to point out that I'm correct!

Leo

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - The Thinkers' Inn - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

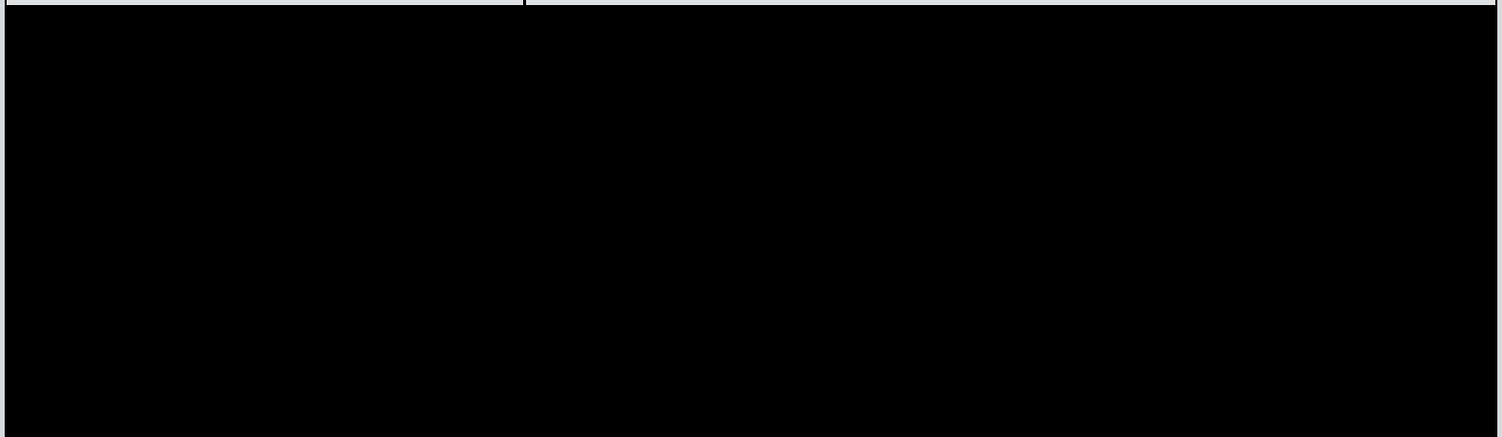

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

- > The Thinkers' Inn
- > Cremation or Burial ?

Author	Comment
DEL Registered User Posts: 722 (10/5/03 8:05 pm) Reply	 Cremation or Burial ? <hr/> Quote: <hr/> "Show me the manner in which a nation cares for its dead and I will measure with mathematical exactness the tender mercies of its people, their respect for the laws of the land, and their loyalty to high ideals." Sir William Gladstone <hr/> Plebs have no care

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 354
(10/10/03 4:16 pm)
Reply

Re: Cremation or Burial ?

---

it aint just plebs.

No one has any care..apart from caring for themselves, even those who spend their lives looking after others.

We are what we are. In a world of enlightened folk respect would not exist.

Edited by: jimhaz at: 10/10/03 4:20 pm

rushdl
Registered User
Posts: 19
(10/14/03 7:50 am)
Reply

Re: Cremation or Burial ?

---

If you haven't noticed yet, fire makes things nasty and dirty and smelly. Am I wrong? I guess this doesn't matter, but it does muck things up really well, and irreversibly. So I can't see that ritual reason as it is now.

Only water purifies. But not from the Merrimac STL.

Ya know, the Indians are screwed because they burned everything upon death, now we can't figure out shit when it comes to Anthropology. They DID however finally write everything down in Sanscrit (Very cool, "CRC" checked language)but since it is written from legend to paper, it's not scientifically reliable (I guesS so, anyway)

I believe a lot of Indian lore, BIGTIME.

Wanna talk about the sexagessimal system?

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 955
(10/14/03 8:31 am)
Reply

Re: Cremation or Burial ?

---

Quote:

---

Wanna talk about the sexagessimal system?

---

Why?

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 650
(10/14/03 9:20 am)
Reply

Re: Cremation or Burial ?

---

What is the significance of base 60?

Are you talking about longevity and the patriarchs?

Or The Annunaki, the 12th planet, and all that shite?

rushdl
Registered User
Posts: 21
(10/14/03 11:49 am)
Reply

Re: Cremation or Burial ?

---

No way brother! The calendar man! Heck, everything!
After every sixty years, Jupiter and Saturn will return to the same relative place in the zodiac

Jupiter takes twelve years years to transit the zodiac. The zodiac has twelve signs. Jupiter travels an average thirty degrees or one complete sign in one solar year.

Saturn takes an average thirty years to transit the zodiac. Each zodiacal sign has thirty degrees and Saturn travels one degree per month.

60 seconds in a minute, sixty minutes in a hour. When we measure angles, we use the sexagesimal to express units in degrees, minutes and seconds. This method of measurement was familiar to both the Indian and Mesopotamian cultures.

This is incredible:

www.glenn.freehomepage.com/writings/Barrier/

Edited by: rushdl  at: 10/14/03 11:55 am

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 959
(10/15/03 7:17 am)
Reply

Re: Cremation or Burial ?

---

It's incredible because the Annunaki figured it out, from their much better perspective, and they handed it to us, as all the early peoples state.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1600
(10/19/03 10:58 pm)
Reply

 Re: Cremation or Burial ?

---

Quote:

---

We are what we are. In a world of enlightened folk respect would not exist.

---

(:D)

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 778
(10/25/03 8:45 pm)
Reply

 written or oral?

---

Quote:

---

rushdl
Ya know, the Indians are screwed because they burned everything upon death, now we can't figure out shit when it comes to Anthropology.

---

Perhaps cremation or burial is a similar choice to written or oral tradition.

Books are great but they can never be better than a good teacher, possibly.

Miss Sakamoto
Registered User
Posts: 1
(11/12/03 11:56 pm)
Reply

 Re: Were it my choice...

---

...and ultimately, I understand that it is not my choice. However, if it were my choice, I would choose a Viking Burial.

Not very environmentally friendly or convenient, but there you have it.

I'm allowed to give myself over to romanticism once in a while.

 waking believing running
Registered User
Posts: 6
(11/22/03 6:14 am)
Reply
ezSupporter

 Re: get corrected, Dan

---

in a perfect world i'd want to be mummified just for the sake of it, and have the book of the dead/going forth by day read at my funeral.

but in reality, i think i want to be cremated, but i don't know yet where i want my ashes scattered.

 BookMark My Words
Registered User
Posts: 12
(12/6/03 1:56 pm)
Reply
ezSupporter

 Re: Cremation or Burial ?

---

My last message to my loved ones will be 'I hid Action Comics Issue # 1, the first issue of Superman, in the ::cough:: ::cough:: ::cough:: Bleeehhhhhhhhhhh.....'

Aside from that, I wish to be cremated and my ashes tossed on Jennifer Garner. Not because i think there is a chance in random that i'll be in any condition to appreciate it, but because my three sons will smile and nod their heads in the lawyer's office, 'Yep. That's dad.'

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1884
(12/6/03 10:47 pm)
Reply

 Re: Cremation or Burial ?

---

You're a lawyer? Your sons are?

You love this woman? (:D)

Edited by: suergaz at: 12/9/03 10:49 pm

 BookMark My Words
Registered User
Posts: 16
(12/7/03 4:04 am)
Reply
ezSupporter

 Re: Cremation or Burial ?

---

Quote:

_____
You're a lawyer? Your sons are?
_____

It was a reference to the TV cliché about the will being read in the office of the lawyer that is executing the will...

My Server is filtering the image you offered up in your post... Are you hosting the image, or did you steal the bandwidth for it?

Either way, if it's J. Garner, it's just the first babe i thought of. By the time i die, i imagine someone else'll be the media darling of dirty old men like i intend to be.

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1564
(12/7/03 11:54 am)
Reply

 use of images

---

Yes, it would be a good idea for people wanting to show images - I wish they wouldn't, frankly, especially of this variety - to be either hosting them or to simply provide a link to it.

Consider that a very strong suggestion.....

Dan Rowden

 Bookmark My Words

Registered User

Posts: 17

(12/7/03 12:47 pm)

Reply

ezSupporter

 Re: use of images

---

Quote:

---

Consider that a very strong suggestion.....

---

What if you pretended it was one of the terms of service for Ezboard....Oh, wait. It is.

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 1565

(12/8/03 11:13 am)

Reply

 Re: use of images

---

Well, you're quite right, which calls for more immediate action on my part. Some people - quite rightly - are very protective of their bandwidth.

Zag will just have to suck it up.

Dan Rowden

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1894

(12/9/03 1:45 am)

Reply

 ---

---

If you're worried about someones privacy, why not preserve it by removing the link to the picture Dan?

 Bookmark My Words

Registered User

Posts: 20

(12/9/03 3:11 am)

Reply

ezSupporter

 Re: ---

---

It's not a privacy issue. If they post a pic on the internet, it's available.

It's about the way computers transmit those images. IF the picture is posted here, like my avatar of 'meepmeepgoboom' then everytime someone looks at the page, their computer downloads the image from my website. I've got an upper limit of how many bauds of information I can transmit that way each day. Where I choose to post the pic is my business, and I'm paying for that bandwidth of transmission.

If you post a picture from my website somewhere I don't know about, then you are stealing bandwidth from me. In addition to anyone visiting my site and seeing the pic, and in addition to people that see it where-ever i personally post it, there are people somewhere else downloading it every time they view the page, that I didn't give permission to.

With the link, that leads people to see the site that the author wants them to see the picture at. There may be advertising there, or it may lead to other pics, other items of personal creativity, whatever.

If you download the pic, and place it in a website you own, then post it, then everyone viewing it is eating into YOUR bandwidth, which is a choice you made.

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 1567

(12/9/03 3:40 pm)

Reply

 Yep.....

---

What he said, Zag.

It's certainly not a privacy issue. If you put it out there on the web in a way that is readily searchable and accessible then it ain't private.

Dan Rowden

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - The Thinkers' Inn - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

- > The Thinkers' Inn
- > Cremation or Burial ?

Author	Comment
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1901 (12/9/03 10:47 pm) Reply	 --- <hr/> Then delete the picture! Some no-life will be in here trying to make me pay him some bandwidth or something and will begin an endless feudal procession between the suergaz clan and his litter of mutts!
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1902 (12/9/03 10:50 pm) Reply	 Re: --- <hr/> There I did it for you. I suppose you want me to thank you or something.
 BookMark My Words  Registered User Posts: 1 (12/10/03 6:26 am) Reply ezSupporter 	 Re: Sewergas <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Then delete the picture! <hr/> The pic was already deleted in favor of a link.... Quote: <hr/> Some no-life will be in here trying to make me pay him some bandwidth or something

---

I thought we just explained that while the pic was bad ("Bad sewergas, no biscuit!"), the link was not only okay, but probably encouraged by the guy running the site.

Are you having problems seeing the screen?

Quote:

---

and will begin an endless feudal procession between the suergaz clan and his litter of mutts!

---

Hanh?

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1568
(12/10/03 7:27 am)
Reply

 Re: Sewergas

---

Zag,

It's ok to post a link to an image like that. The point is that the link just takes you to that other person's site, which is what they want anyway. Have you ever noticed at those free clipart sites and suchlike that they ask you to not link to the images from their site but to copy it and use it at your own? That is all about bandwidth usage. Just use the "link" ecode tags instead of the "image" ones.

Dan Rowden

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1904
(12/10/03 11:10 am)
Reply

 ----

---

By picture I meant link bookmark, anyway, who cares?

 BookMark My Words

Registered User

Posts: 3

(12/10/03 12:05 pm)

Reply

ezSupporter

 Re: ----

---

And by 'Bandwidth' i meant, 'Shrimp and Hammer!'

Anyway, why should members of what is purported to be a law abiding society pay any attention to rules? Who cares if the board gets shut down from complaints and a reputation of general law scoffing?

But actually, with my students, i never care if they obey the rules nearly as much as i care if they understand the rules, and the possible consequences, enough to make an actual, informed decision about whether or not they want to obey them.

Sorry if i got to lecturing, but you didn't seem to understand what the problem even was. Still not clear, but i have learned that "anyway, who cares? " freely translates as 'I don't want to be bothered by this anymore.'

Fine.

Fuckit.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1907

(12/10/03 1:32 pm)

Reply

 ---

---

What do you teach?

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - The Thinkers' Inn - Genius News -

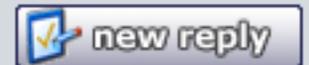

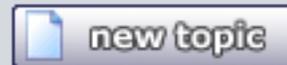

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Crisis

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Jones Kelly Posts: 49 (5/4/04 8:06 pm) Reply	 Crisis <hr/> I would like to hear whether others have experienced specific crises that caused them to develop and value "extreme" rationality at the expense of other values, and what were the effects of the experience/s. My motivation for asking this is to find out what kinds of experiences push people to hold onto reasoning as their "survival tool" of choice.
Rhett Hamilton Registered User Posts: 371 (5/5/04 12:25 pm) Reply   Edit 	 Re: Crisis <hr/> - Here's one of the major factors: The crisis is the development of an unusually high level of consciousness, that renders common delusions unbearable, and that cannot be tempered without literally annihilating that consciousness. Thus, rationality is the only ticket to freedom. - A persons parents, schooling, any influential individuals they come in contact with, etc, are also major influences on the value they place on reason. Rhett Hamilton

Jones Kelly
Posts: 50
(5/5/04 1:57 pm)
Reply

Re: Crisis

---

Assuming you are referring to your own crisis, would you say that the effects of your development of an unusually high level of consciousness were:

- rationality
- freedom
- a desire to continue at that same high level of consciousness
- a desire to continue to development even higher
- some other effect/s?

In other words, what "common" delusions of your own pushed you to value freedom rather than resting on your laurels?

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 372
(5/6/04 12:36 pm)
Reply | Edit

Re: Crisis

---

Quote:

---

Assuming you are referring to your own crisis,

---

The crisis is essentially the same for anyone that develops the capacity for reason. The beginning of reasoning in earnest automatically precipitates crisis, because it challenges and destroys the delusions that one cannot help but have developed. The very nature of experience is enough for delusion to manifest, never mind the falsehoods that are impuned upon the individual by society.

Quote:

---

would you say that the effects of the development of an unusually high level of consciousness are:

- rationality
-

Yes.

Quote:

---

- freedom

---

Yes and no. A life of reason is far freer than one of unconscious ego-impulse and fear-induced conservatism, but neither are truly free, given that we are fully determined.

Quote:

---

- a desire to continue at that same high level of consciousness

---

Most definitely, but it comes at a high price (suffering) until such time as the delusion is transcended.

Until such time as any individual understands the Truth, they are inadvertently reasoning themselves into suffering as well as out of it.

Quote:

---

- a desire to continue to development even higher

---

Naturally, but unfortunately, few people are strong enough to stand the suffering, so they set their sights lower.

Quote:

- some other effect/s?

---

- Rampant creativity.

- Such people often become 'intensity junkies' (at least, until such time as they push all the way through those delusions). If you look at the life of James Dean and Jesus you might see what i mean.

James Dean was highly conscious, and used fast cars as one way for him to hit-the-highs as well as moderate his everyday suffering. It performed that function through drawing his focus into the moment (the high), and through confronting his fears head-on he pushing back the point at which everyday fears would affect him (thus minimising the lows). No-one is going to care overly if their girlfriend dumps them if they've just had 100 near-death experiences driving a racing car. Of course, he was just putting a band-aid on the problem, rather than going to the core and solving it. Unfortunately, he died as a result of this penchance for speed. He was also rampantly creative and intense in other ways, including of course, his acting. As to whether he had the goods for becoming spiritual, who can say. It does seem that he was suspect of women and common values, suffered, and considered truth of great value.

Despite Jesus's profound realisations of Truth, i suspect that he struggled to resolve his pain, and his intensity that magnified it. This may have caused him to choose the cross.

Quote:

---

In other words, what "common" delusions of your own pushed you to value freedom rather than resting on your laurels?

---

My delusions about the nature of Reality!

The key effect of mating heightened-consciousness with the notion of a finite self (ego), heightens the ego's ancillaries - desire/fear/emotions, which, basically, are suffering.

HansReinhardt
Registered User
Posts: 2
(5/7/04 6:15 am)
Reply

Re: Crisis

---

I'm not clear on what you mean by "extreme" rationality, but I believe that the rational function is the best way of dealing with the world.

This is not to say that it is the only way and that intuition and emotion have to suffer, but what you think about the world is primary to how you feel about it or the quick judgments you make about it.

Many people lead with emotion, but the problem is that they often have a very skewed understanding of the world. Or, they pretend to know things they cannot possibly know. As a result, their solutions are inappropriate and don't work, and whatever problem they're confronting isn't solved. For example: trying to end war by dancing naked in front of the moon or something.

Jones Kelly
Posts: 52
(5/7/04 9:48 am)
Reply

Re: Crisis

---

R: The crisis is essentially the same for anyone that develops the capacity for reason. The beginning of reasoning in earnest automatically precipitates crisis, because it challenges and destroys the delusions that one cannot help but have developed.

K: I think overcoming delusions, the reward of reasoning, seems to be the thing that pushes a person to value rationality as their "tool of choice" for survival. So while reasoning is crisis, ie desire for resolution, it motivates.

R: The very nature of experience is enough for delusion to manifest, never mind the falsehoods that are impuned upon the individual by society.

K: So what is a highly conscious person, someone who has the capacity to develop ultra-rationality? I would say, they have:

- vivid imagination
- massive ego
- great doubt / insecurity / distrust
- perseverance
- integrity / conscience / individuality

This inborn capacity causes awareness of delusion, because it makes the lack of resolution obvious. Perhaps this inborn capacity is inseparable from the nature of experience (including socially impugned falsehoods). Ie the inborn capacity causes specific delusions/crises. But while reasoning itself is not a delusion, valuing it over its goal is, because reason is also inseparable from the nature of experience for such a person.

K: would you say that the effects of the development of an unusually high level of consciousness are:

- rationality

R: Yes.

Or perhaps actually part of that consciousness, intrinsic to it, neither cause nor effect?

K: - freedom

R: Yes and no. A life of reason is far freer than one of unconscious ego-impulse and fear-induced conservatism, but neither are truly free, given that we are fully determined.

Depending on how one defines freedom.. If "Rationality is the only ticket to freedom", then freedom is an effect of rationality. But i agree the freedom from delusion is different from freedom from inborn capacity/experience.

- a desire to continue at that same high level of consciousness

R: Most definitely, but it comes at a high price (suffering) until such time as the delusion is transcended.

Until such time as any individual understands the Truth, they are inadvertently reasoning themselves into suffering as well as out of it.

And this is the last crisis: the nature of rationality itself. Motivated by desire to bridge the terrible chasm between reasoning and attachment to reasoning, the bridge itself is, in a way, destroyed. Perhaps intense suffering prepares a person to accept the insecurity of Truth? To avoid this crisis is to continue in delusion.

K: - a desire to continue to development even higher

R: Naturally, but unfortunately, few people are strong enough to stand the suffering, so they set their sights lower.

Experience with suffering is not the same as strength to withstand suffering: the first manages thresholds, while the second denies thresholds.

K: - some other effect/s?

R: - Rampant creativity.

- Such people often become 'intensity junkies' (at least, until such time as they push all the way through those delusions). If you look at the life of

James Dean and Jesus you might see what i mean.

James Dean was highly conscious, and used fast cars as one way for him to hit-the-highs as well as moderate his everyday suffering. It performed that function through drawing his focus into the moment (the high), and through confronting his fears head-on he pushing back the point at which everyday fears would affect him (thus minimising the lows). No-one is going to care overly if their girlfriend dumps them if they've just had 100 near-death experiences driving a racing car. Of course, he was just putting a band-aid on the problem, rather than going to the core and solving it. Unfortunately, he died as a result of this penchance for speed. He was also rampantly creative and intense in other ways, including of course, his acting. As to whether he had the goods for becoming spiritual, who can say. It does seem that he was suspect of women and common values, suffered, and considered truth of great value.

Interesting you mentioned an actor. I don't know much about James Dean except he liked to be photographed, no doubt i will find out more - if he considered truth of great value as you seem to think.

Professional actors with a high level of consciousness are more inclined to experience alarm at the obvious parallels between "real life" and scripts. They then burrow into fame to assert power over the script - fuelling the fire. Someone trying to challenge that awareness would naturally play with power, e.g. near-death experiences, politics, charity, religion, laws, suicide, speed of all kinds. So, why not also reason? Probably because no one gave them a script, that's why (habit). Or their grip on any semblance of reality (acceptable sanity) is so desperate that to consider freedom from delusion would cost big bucks (ego-identity in fame/profession).

Freedom is going outside the script, knowing it may mean submitting to an entirely different script. Meaning the "script you know..." Most highly conscious "celebrity puppets" annihilate their consciousness of the possibility of freedom because of fearing it's just another saccharine happy ending (skepticism/cynicism) and/or because they need an audience too much (fear of individuality).

So, some suppress, and some let it all out. Some don't let go of perseverance and integrity, and some let it all drop. Yesterday i met one of the latter... the compromises a successful, middle-aged professional man must make to be "intelligent". He was deeply attached to his reality, and fell back onto "august professors/experts", "the majority of people", "philosophers down the ages", "his senses", and "i don't want to get drawn further into this, thank you". His reality was a "moral and professional stance"... meaning fear of individuality.

R: Despite Jesus's profound realisations of Truth, i suspect that he struggled to resolve his pain, and his intensity that magnified it. This may have caused him to choose the cross.

You are saying his intensity of suffering blinded him to the rational resolution? That he took a path of hero-worship (the "cop-out" of martyrdom) instead of Buddhahood? I think that like Socrates, death didn't bother him, but was an inevitable example to others of living truthfully. In any case, his integrity removed all possibility of escaping the cross, as a reaction to the intensified harrassment of the Pharisees/Saducees/whoever. Jesus couldn't help but "cast the first stone" (every time), he knew what he was responsible for.

K: In other words, what "common" delusions of your own pushed you to value freedom rather than resting on your laurels?

R: My delusions about the nature of Reality!

The key effect of mating heightened-consciousness with the notion of a finite self (ego), heightens the ego's ancillaries - desire/fear/emotions, which, basically, are suffering.

So the impulse to ultra-rationality is akin to "resting" midway through a wilderness trek with no food or water - it's necessarily suffering. It's the difference though between accepting a chance lift to the nearest town, and deciding to learn to live in the wilderness.

Jones Kelly

Posts: 53

(5/7/04 10:00 am)

Reply

 Re: Crisis

---

Hans,

I'm not clear on what you mean by "extreme" rationality, but I believe that the rational function is the best way of dealing with the world.

By extreme rationality, i was referring to the value a person gave to reason above other "survival tools" - such as intuition and emotion. This might be because using the rational function in the usual way is inadequate for dealing with the world.

This is not to say that it is the only way and that intuition and emotion have to suffer, but what you think about the world is primary to how you feel about it or the quick judgments you make about it.

Would you say that your experience of the world is therefore dependent on a reasoned understanding, rather than quick judgements or how you feel about the world (emotion?)? If so, how reasonable are your quick judgements and emotion - and therefore your world experience?

Many people lead with emotion, but the problem is that they often have a very skewed understanding of the world. Or, they pretend to know things they cannot possibly know. As a result, their solutions are inappropriate and don't work, and whatever problem they're confronting isn't solved. For example: trying to end war by dancing naked in front of the moon or something.

So, without reasoning about intuitional and emotional judgements, how reliable is the world experience? Would you say a reliable world experience is one that "suffers" the testing of all judgements?

BTW, I would be interested in what your experience is of crisis that led you to consider responding to this post.

HansReinhardt
Registered User
Posts: 3
(5/7/04 11:18 am)
Reply

Re: Crisis

---

Quote:

---

Would you say that your experience of the world is therefore dependent on a reasoned understanding, rather than quick judgements or how you feel about the world (emotion?)? If so, how reasonable are your quick judgements and emotion - and therefore your world experience?

---

If I understand you correctly, you are assuming an either/or that I don't think I implied. For example either reason or emotion, but not both. I think I implied both by saying:

Quote:

---

This is not to say that it is the only way and that intuition and emotion have to suffer

---

It is clear that emotion plays a big part in our dealings with the world. Perhaps intuition could be considered an emotional response filtered through a rational understanding.

My specific point is this: the emotions respond to the world as you understand it, if you don't have a clear understanding, your emotional responses will be skewed. For example, freaking out and bashing someone's head in because they took your picture, which you think means they're stealing your soul.

Therefore, a rational relationship with the world is a more primary relationship than an emotional one.

Quote:

---

So, without reasoning about intuitional and emotional judgements, how reliable is the world experience? Would you say a reliable world experience is one that "suffers" the testing of all judgements?

---

I'm not clear on what your question is.

Quote:

---

BTW, I would be interested in what your experience is of crisis that led you to consider responding to this post.

---

I don't know if a specific crisis led me to be a rational person. I think all of us are rational to some degree or another -- depending on how much effort is put into developing it.

Perhaps you would differ, but I don't consider my self rational in an extreme way, which I take to mean that my emotional life and relationships suffer. I have met a few people who seemed to be so logical that they didn't understand the world. Like how to have relationships and handle absurdity, etc. I've never been like that.

I can say that I've come to the conclusion that developing rational thought is valuable based on an honest assessment of myself and my surroundings. When I was younger, I lived in a world of emotionally satisfying illusions -- like many young people. One day it started getting old, and I simply admitted to myself that I was making it all up and so were the people I spent time with.

Edited by: HansReinhardt at: 5/7/04 11:20 am

Jones Kelly

Posts: 55

(5/7/04 4:17 pm)

Reply

 Re: Crisis

---

Quote:

---

It is clear that emotion plays a big part in our dealings with the world. Perhaps intuition could be considered an emotional response filtered through a rational understanding.

My specific point is this: the emotions respond to the world as you understand it, if you don't have a clear understanding, your emotional responses will be skewed.. Therefore, a rational relationship with the world is a more primary relationship than an emotional one.

---

You are saying that if one's understanding is not clear, the "response" will be skewed? So is an intuitional/emotional judgement actually rational, in order for the response to be not skewed? Or is the response always skewed until it is purely rational?

Quote:

---

K: So, without reasoning about intuitional and emotional judgements, how reliable is the world experience? Would you say a reliable world experience is one that "suffers" the testing of all judgements?

H: I'm not clear on what your question is.

---

This is a fairly fundamental question, so i'll rephrase it. How clear is an understanding of the world if it is based on faulty reasoning?

Quote:

---

..I don't consider my self rational in an extreme way, which I take to mean that my emotional life and relationships suffer. I have met a few people who seemed to be so logical that they didn't understand the world. Like how to have relationships and handle absurdity, etc. I've never been like that.

---

By absurdity, are you referring to something that can only be interpreted emotionally?

Quote:

---

I can say that I've come to the conclusion that developing rational thought is vluable based on an honest assessment of myself and my surroundings. When I was younger, I lived in a world of emotionally satisfying illusions -- like many young people. One day it started getting old, and I simply admitted to myself that I was making it all up and so were the people I spent time with.

---

So in your younger days, you did not rationally consider that your responses were skewed (emotionally distorted), but were clearly adequate, and gave you a satisfactory understanding of the world. Then you decided they were "illusions".

Was this because of emotional dissatisfaction (desiring something "new")? Or did you reason that your emotional responses had skewed your understanding, and therefore the things were illusory?

HansReinhardt

Registered User

Posts: 8

(5/8/04 1:34 am)

Reply

Re: Crisis

---

Quote:

You are saying that if one's understanding is not clear, the "response" will be skewed? So is an intuitional/emotional judgement actually rational, in order for the response to be not skewed? Or is the response always skewed until it is purely rational?

---

The emotions respond to a situation as you understand it. If your understanding is off, your emotional response will be off. The emotions themselves don't become rational.

Example: Imagine that you think pure water is a deadly poison. Now imagine that someone offers you a glass of water and you feel intense terror. Your emotional response is natural, given your beliefs, but your beliefs are not rational, so your emotional response is inappropriate to the situation.

Quote:

---

This is a fairly fundamental question, so i'll rephrase it. How clear is an understanding of the world if it is based on faulty reasoning?

---

Not very clear at all.

Quote:

---

By absurdity, are you referring to something that can only be interpreted emotionally?

---

Some people have highly imaginative worldviews, and I define absurdity as the difference between the way things are and the way some people imagine them to be.

Example: If you believe that pure water is a poison, then that is an absurd belief.

Quote:

---

So in your younger days, you did not rationally consider that your responses were skewed (emotionally distorted), but were clearly adequate, and gave you a satisfactory understanding of the world. Then you decided they were "illusions". Was this because of emotional dissatisfaction (desiring something "new")? Or did you reason that your emotional responses had skewed your understanding, and therefore the things were illusory?

---

As with all people, my ability to understand increased as I grew older and at some point I came to see that my previous mindset was incorrect. This happens to everybody, otherwise we'd all still believe the same things we believed as children.

Jones Kelly

Posts: 59

(5/8/04 2:20 pm)

Reply

 Re: Crisis

---

H: The emotions respond to a situation as you understand it. If your understanding is off, your emotional response will be off. The emotions themselves don't become rational.

Why do you think emotions arise at all? Is terror possible on being told water is a deadly poison, if the sensation of thirst has no need to it?

K: By absurdity, are you referring to something that can only be interpreted emotionally?

H: Some people have highly imaginative worldviews, and I define absurdity as the difference between the way things are and the way some people imagine them to be.

Since you agree that an unclear or absurd understanding of the world is based on faulty reasoning, and emotions are some kind of unnecessary afterthought that don't become rational, wouldn't you say that emotions actually cause one to have an unclear understanding of the world?

HansReinhardt
Registered User
Posts: 12
(5/8/04 11:59 pm)
Reply

Re: Crisis

---

Quote:

---

Why do you think emotions arise at all? Is terror possible on being told water is a deadly poison, if the sensation of thirst has no need to it?

---

Emotions seem to be a natural and intrinsic facet of being human -- like sight. I am in no position to speculate as to why this is. Sorry.

Quote:

---

Since you agree that an unclear or absurd understanding of the world is based on faulty reasoning, and emotions are some kind of unnecessary afterthought that don't become rational, wouldn't you say that emotions actually cause one to have an unclear understanding of the world?

---

Please. You're putting words in my mouth. I don't think emotions are unnecessary and never said that. I have been saying that the emotions and the rational function work together, and for the reasons I've given, why the rational function is more primary.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2616
(5/9/04 1:52 am)
Reply

 ----Young ones

---

Emotions can cause an unclear understanding of the world, but not necessarily.

We are not fully determined, at least not outside of determining.

Crisis is not indispensable to extraordinary human life, though it has historically served to imprint the memory of such life upon the ages (I mean the aged)

Jones Kelly
Posts: 62
(5/9/04 10:27 am)
Reply

 Re: Faulty reasoning

---

Quote:

---

Emotions can cause an unclear understanding of the world, but not necessarily.

---

Without correct and faultless reasoning, it is impossible to understand reality. Imperfect reasoning is caused by the suppression of awareness of how one's reasoning is imperfect. Usually this is caused by an attachment to some thing, which manifests emotionally. So while emotions themselves aren't the cause of an unclear understanding of the world, they do indicate imperfect reasoning.

Attachment to the notion that things are objectively real is the underlying delusion.

Quote:

---

We are not fully determined, at least not outside of determining.

---

Everything that is caused is fully determined in those causes. If something exists, it is caused.

Quote:

---

Crisis is not indispensable to extraordinary human life, though it has historically served to imprint the memory of such life upon the ages (I mean the aged).

---

What crisis has "historically served" you, Suergaz?

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2617

(5/10/04 1:32 am)

Reply

Quote:

---

So while emotions themselves aren't the cause of an unclear understanding of the world, they do indicate imperfect reasoning.

---

Not necessarily.

Quote:

---

Everything that is caused is fully determined in those causes. If something exists, it is caused.

---

Determination is an ongoing action. Nothing is fully determined in its causes, a things existence itself is a determination apart from its cause, which is why I wrote that nothing is fully determined, at least not outside of determining (The ongoing action of determination.) If a thing was fully determined within its cause it would be indistinguishable from its cause, or rather it would be nothing but the cause itself.

Quote:

---

What crisis has "historically served" you, Suergaz?

---

I'm too tall for crises. (:D)

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 1102

(5/10/04 9:03 am)

Reply

 Re: ---

---

Having to escape your country doesn't have to be seen as a crisis ;-P

Quote:

---

Determination is an ongoing action. Nothing is fully determined in its causes, a things existence itself is a determination apart from its cause, which is why I wrote that nothing is fully determined, at least not outside of determining (The ongoing action of determination.) If a thing was fully determined within its cause it would be indistinguishable from its cause, or rather it would be nothing but the cause itself.

---

Very nice, it's a logical impossibility.

Jones Kelly

Posts: 67

(5/10/04 1:45 pm)

Reply

 Re: Crisis

---

Quote:

---

K: Why do you think emotions arise at all? Is terror possible on being told water is a deadly poison, if the sensation of thirst has no need to it?

H: Emotions seem to be a natural and intrinsic facet of being human -- like sight. I am in no position to speculate as to why this is. Sorry.

---

My interest in pursuing this thread is to see what motivates some people to value rationality above other "survival tools". Since you regard emotion as essential to survival, but do not know why - nor have you indicated how the "rational and emotional function work together", i would question why you still hold that the "rational function is more primary". What does this actually mean?

Jones Kelly

Posts: 68

(5/10/04 2:12 pm)

Reply

 Re: crisis

---

Quote:

K: So while emotions themselves aren't the cause of an unclear understanding of the world, they do indicate imperfect reasoning.

S: Not necessarily.

---

That's true too. Some people are incapable of reasoning, and are very happy. My brother thinks some intellectually disabled people are enlightened, because they seem to be in bliss. The absence of conscious reasoning is basically zero on the scale of perfect reasoning, necessarily imperfect, and no chance of ever becoming perfect.

---

Quote:

K: Everything that is caused is fully determined in those causes. If something exists, it is caused.

S: Determination is an ongoing action.

---

Only in so far as things exist. If fear is experienced, it is fully determined in its causes.

---

Quote:

S: Nothing is fully determined in its causes, a things existence itself is a determination apart from its cause,

---

A thing's existence is dependent on its causes. So, to take the example of fear again, the experience of fear creates awareness of its existence. It then exists in awareness. The existence of the thing (fear) is caused by or determined by the experience of awareness of fear (plus all the causes for the experience and so on and so on..). The thing itself is not a cause for itself, since fear does not exist as an inherently existent thing. It is a product of causes, with no objective reality. Fear is simply a label placed on a specific experience that is always in some way different.

Quote:

---

S: If a thing was fully determined within its cause it would be indistinguishable from its cause, or rather it would be nothing but the cause itself.

---

A thing (effect) is caused by other things (cause/s). It is not pre-determined in those causes. The thing is a label applied to some cause or bunch of causes, just as a cause is a label.

Quote:

---

K: What crisis has "historically served" you, Suergaz?
S: I'm too tall for crises. (:D)

---

Well, if crisis simply means a difficulty, some major point of decision, a significant causal event, that spurred a person onto value "extreme" rationality, you therefore are either dead or you do not value "extreme" rationality. Are you also causer of all your suffering?

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2619

(5/11/04 5:56 am)

Reply

---

Quote:

---

suergaz: Nothing is fully determined in its causes, a things existence itself is a determination apart from its cause,

Kelly:--A thing's existence is dependent on its causes. So, to take the example of fear again, the experience of fear creates awareness of its existence. It then exists in awareness. The existence of the thing (fear) is caused by or determined by the experience of awareness of fear (plus all the causes for the experience and so on and so on..). The thing itself is not a cause for itself, since fear does not exist as an inherently existent thing. It is a product of causes, with no objective reality. Fear is simply a label placed on a specific experience that is always in some way different.

---

I never said nor implied a things existence is not dependent on its causes. All I have said is that its existence is not fully determined in its causes as you have stated.

Quote:

---

suergaz: -If a thing was fully determined within its cause it would be indistinguishable from its cause, or rather it would be nothing but the cause itself.

Kelly:-A thing (effect) is caused by other things (cause/s). It is not pre-determined in those causes. The thing is a label applied to some cause or bunch of causes, just as a cause is a label.

---

Certainly. But to say that a thing is fully determined in its causes as you have, is no different from saying it is predetermined...which it isn't.

Quote:

---

Kelly:- What crisis has "historically served" you, Suergaz?

suergaz:- I'm too tall for crises. (:D)

Kelly: -Well, if crisis simply means a difficulty, some major point of decision, a significant causal event, that spurred a person onto value "extreme" rationality, you therefore are either dead or you do not value "extreme" rationality. Are you also causer of all your suffering?

---

I value rationality, but I do not know it in any extreme, and so I am not sure I value such a thing as extreme rationality, can you give me an example?

HansReinhardt
Registered User
Posts: 15
(5/12/04 12:44 am)
Reply

 Re: ---

---

"Cause" is something that the mind adds to sense experience. As such, determination and ultimate causes are pointless questions -- they are simply feedback of the mind.

Jones Kelly

Posts: 72

(5/12/04 2:16 pm)

Reply

 Re: crisis and rationality

---

Quote:

---

Kelly: A thing (effect) is caused by other things (cause/s). It is not pre-determined in those causes. The thing is a label applied to some cause or bunch of causes, just as a cause is a label.

Suergaz: Certainly. But to say that a thing is fully determined in its causes as you have, is no different from saying it is predetermined...which it isn't.

---

That's right. My wits were "carried away" at some moment there.

---

Quote:

---

Suergaz: I value rationality, but I do not know it in any extreme, and so I am not sure I value such a thing as extreme rationality, can you give me an example?

---

"Extreme" rationality is just rationality up a notch, the kind necessary to understand the nature of reality. Down a notch is rationality that runs around happily with untruth (reality distorted by egotism and emotion), up a notch is the level of truth (freedom from delusion). People who say they value rationality would not depend on it to save their lives - they would turn to their instincts and emotions. Such "life and death" decisions are not so much rational as emotional, because they want to avoid dying.

An example of an extremely rational experience is the enlightened experience.

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Crisis

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Jones Kelly Posts: 73 (5/12/04 2:30 pm) Reply	 Re: --- <hr/> Hans, Quote: <hr/> "Cause" is something that the mind adds to sense experience. As such, determination and ultimate causes are pointless questions -- they are simply feedback of the mind. <hr/> Is this an example of how emotions and rationality work together, or an example of rationality being primary, or rationality without emotion? However, i agree, causality and logic are - as Dave T pointed out - intrinsically related. There is no mind, actually. But if thoughts are experienced, then causality in the form of logic is also experienced. Abstract concepts are useful pointers to determine what the nature of experience is, including the nature of thoughts.

HansReinhardt
Registered User
Posts: 19
(5/13/04 3:13 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Are you really that emotionally invested in the question of cause and effect?

Jones Kelly
Posts: 77
(5/13/04 3:12 pm)
Reply

Re: emotions

---

Hans,

To one addicted to emotions, it appears ridiculous and even foolish to challenge that addiction. To this one, emotions seem as healthy as it gets, enabling one to fit nicely into society. "Why should emotions be challenged at all?" he thinks, "this would destroy my world."

Emotionalism is a psychological disease, and addiction is not only socially acceptable, but compulsory. Only a rare few are capable of acknowledging this, because to do so, one is socially out in the cold.

Suergaz, for instance, would find it incredibly difficult to challenge his emotionalism, because it's a major part of his identity. His is not the way of an individual, but the way of the masses - even if Suergaz is on the fringes.

Emotionalism always compromises reasoning to some degree. If absolute truth has any meaning to you, then reasoning is your "survival tool of choice". It is the only cure for emotionalism - besides unconsciousness.

Causality is the bedrock of reasoning which can pull a person out of the mire. Since i'm healing, i value understanding how to use logical truths to point me towards absolute truth.

Yes, causality is simply "just another concept", but unlike empirical truths, this concept is a logical truth: the principle that all things are caused is internally true (the concept of causality is caused), and infinitely applicable to all things in all universes at all times.

Therefore it is a philosopher's key to heaven!

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 656
(5/14/04 4:00 pm)
Reply

Re: emotions

---

Crisises should not exist.

Jones Kelly
Posts: 81
(5/14/04 8:07 pm)
Reply

Re: crisis

---

Quote:

---

Jimhaz: Crisises should not exist.

---

Why so?

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 657
(5/14/04 8:23 pm)
Reply

Re: crisis

---

for a crisis to exist, then it follows that you are still stuck in the now, still stuck within the ego. Regard nothing as a crisis, regard every thing as what is.

Jones Kelly
Posts: 83
(5/14/04 9:02 pm)
Reply

Re: crisis

---

Quote:

---

for a crisis to exist, then it follows that you are still stuck in the now, still stuck within the ego. Regard nothing as a crisis, regard every thing as what is.

---

Jimhaz,

How do you define crisis?

Is it possible to be outside the present moment?

If one is "stuck within the ego" (and it seems to me that even sages still experience some ego - though barely enough to compare with the average person), then to regard every thing as what it is would be to suppress awareness of crisis - if that is what arises in awareness.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2625

(5/15/04 1:12 am)

Reply

---

Quote:

---

Emotionalism is a psychological disease, and addiction is not only socially acceptable, but compulsory. Only a rare few are capable of acknowledging this, because to do so, one is socially out in the cold.

Suergaz, for instance, would find it incredibly difficult to challenge his emotionalism, because it's a major part of his identity. His is not the way of an individual, but the way of the masses - even if Suergaz is on the fringes.

Emotionalism always compromises reasoning to some degree. If absolute truth has any meaning to you, then reasoning is your "survival tool of choice". It is the only cure for emotionalism - besides unconsciousness.

---

How romantic! Is "emotionalism" here supposed to mean a dependency on the emotions, or those of others? Such a thing could only be a device of certain 'practising' psychologists! I do not have the all too common fear and weakness in love that characterizes the masses, is this what makes you say I am on the fringes? The way of the individual is now the way of the masses, did you know that? Kelly, I am hotter and colder than you! You must bow down before me and apologize some more! (:D)

The way of the creator----now that is worth defining here---if only to discover who is the most creative amongst us.

Rairun
Registered User
Posts: 248
(5/15/04 2:22 am)
Reply

 ...

---

A psychological disease! Soon you'll be telling people to repent for it!

Jones Kelly
Posts: 86
(5/15/04 2:18 pm)
Reply

 Re: ---

---

Seems i missed Hans by a day or two.

Suergaz,

Funny you ignored the conclusion to the post. Why should emotionalism be easier to tackle than its source: avoidance of investigating causality?

Quote:

---

How romantic! Is "emotionalism" here supposed to mean a dependency on the emotions, or those of others? Such a thing could only be a device of certain 'practising' psychologists! I do not have the all too common fear and weakness in love that characterizes the masses, is this what makes you say I am on the fringes? The way of the individual is now the way of the masses, did you know that? Kelly, I am hotter and colder than you! You must bow down before me and apologize some more! (:D) The way of the creator----now that is worth defining here---if only to discover who is the most creative amongst us.

---

In this context,

Definition of emotionalism: blind belief in the importance of emotions. So perhaps you are not on the fringes, but rather nestled down into the epidermis.

Definition of individualism: deep subjectivity, not having faith in one's own existence.

	Creativity: God's own quality. Everything is subject to it, and therefore cannot create. So someone who is rampantly creative had no say in it, at all. Just as those who are not as creative also have no choice. Where does the next thought come from?
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2626 (5/16/04 12:34 am) Reply	 ---- <hr/> Creating is impossible you say? And a philosophers key to 'heaven' is causality!? Well, I suppose you did say you were healing.
Jones Kelly Posts: 94 (5/16/04 5:57 pm) Reply	 Re: causality <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Suergaz: Creating is impossible you say? And a philosophers key to 'heaven' is causality!? <hr/> Creating is not "impossible", since creativity is a description of what is in evidence everywhere. To "see" this principle at work in everything allows the philosopher to see what creativity really refers to. Creativity is not self-originating at all, even if the concept appears to have been originated by humans, since humans could not ultimately have originated themselves.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2630
(5/17/04 4:24 am)
Reply

---

And what then does creativity really refer to? To see creativity in everything means also to see it in degrees, or to see it referred to nothing. A philosopher will admit nothing as equally creative.

We did originate ourselves, albeit unconsciously to begin with, history is a marked series intimating originations of the degrees of our consciousness , creativity is self-originating, but not in the sense you meant that it couldn't be, ie. originating in the self.

Jones Kelly
Posts: 96
(5/17/04 11:23 am)
Reply

 Re: schmistory

---

Suergaz wrote:

Quote:

---

And what then does creativity really refer to? To see creativity in everything means also to see it in degrees, or to see it referred to nothing. A philosopher will admit nothing as equally creative.

---

A true philosopher would know that nothing creates. Creativity is obviously a figure of speech referring to what cannot itself be created. Since creativity cannot be a thing, it can never actually exist. To "see" it in everything is simply to infer that no things exist uncreated, there are no degrees possible. Only a little bit created?

Quote:

---

We did originate ourselves, albeit unconsciously to begin with, history is a marked series intimating originations of the degrees of our consciousness , creativity is self-originating, but not in the sense you meant that it couldn't be, ie. originating in the self.

---

Illogical. Ultimate origination is impossible, since consciousness is caused. "We" are inseparable from the rest of the universe, none of it causing itself.

Only to a minor degree do our thoughts and actions have an effect on how the universe unfolds, and these are fully caused. Never for an instant are "we" inherently existent, separately powerful, causal agents: nothing arises by our own power. Even our illusions (things of our abstract world) are caused...

I.e. "we" don't even choose what we like or dislike - so how can "we" have any say over how "we" originated?

If there are degrees of consciousness, such that at one "degree" there is no consciousness, and at the next "degree" there is consciousness, you are still dependent on causal processes stretching back infinitely. There can never be a primal cause, no beginning (nor end) to any thing.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2633

(5/18/04 1:28 am)

Reply

---

Quote:

A true philosopher would know that nothing creates. Creativity is obviously a figure of speech referring to what cannot itself be created. Since creativity cannot be a thing, it can never actually exist. To "see" it in everything is simply to infer that no things exist uncreated, there are no degrees possible. Only a little bit created?

---

Your understanding of what a 'thing' may be extends only to finitudes, which is not unreasonable, but 'knowing' that nothing creates is highly unreasonable! Degrees are possible, not only the relative ones of our perceived effect upon things, but in the entire infinite causal movement that is the universe, ie. they're actual. Degrees are inherent in movement--the universe moves damn it!

---

Quote:

Illogical. Ultimate origination is impossible, since consciousness is caused. "We" are inseparable from the rest of the universe, none of it causing itself. Only to a minor degree do our thoughts and actions have an effect on how the universe unfolds, and these are fully caused. Never for an instant are "we" inherently existent, separately powerful, causal agents: nothing arises by our own power.

---

Of course it's illogical! And of course ultimate origination is impossible, but why dismiss all origination because it is infinitely caused? Our own power can be grasped by us, and that alone, all else we are subject to in varying degrees. In as much as we are subject to our own power, causality does not rule us, only chance (that which defies our understanding of causal derivation), and through our power, welcomed.

Quote:

---

Even our illusions (things of our abstract world) are caused...

I.e. "we" don't even choose what we like or dislike - so how can "we" have any say over how "we" originated?

---

This sounds like nothing but disillusionment with your personal power of effect!

We do choose what we like or dislike, we can't help but choose! The universe is indiscriminating in binding all its conscious 'things' to discrimination!

Quote:

---

If there are degrees of consciousness, such that at one "degree" there is no consciousness, and at the next "degree" there is consciousness, you are still dependent on causal processes stretching back infinitely. There can never be a primal cause, no beginning (nor end) to any thing.

---

There is no primal cause as you say, only an infinity. The universe, understood to have no beginning or end, does not mean that "we" do not!

Edited by: suergaz at: 5/18/04 1:40 am

Jones Kelly

Posts: 98

(5/18/04 1:44 pm)

Reply

☐ Re: Existential crisis...

---

Quote:

---

Kelly: A true philosopher would know that nothing creates. Creativity is obviously a figure of speech referring to what cannot itself be created. Since creativity cannot be a thing, it can never actually exist. To "see" it in everything is simply to infer that no things exist uncreated, there are no degrees possible. Only a little bit created?

Suergaz: Your understanding of what a 'thing' may be extends only to finitudes, which is not unreasonable, but 'knowing' that nothing creates is highly unreasonable!

---

To qualify, no things are not created.

Quote:

---

Degrees are possible, not only the relative ones of our perceived effect upon things, but in the entire infinite causal movement that is the universe, ie. they're actual. Degrees are inherent in movement--the universe moves damn it!

---

Create: v. bring into existence; cause

Degree: n. a stage in an ascending or descending scale, series, or process

Therefore, at any "stage" at all, a thing never actually exists. At which degree is it fully an existent thing, and not simply a degree of the process of causation?

"Universe movement" is based on a perspective that contrasts things, e.g. space, matter, time. These abstract categories are projected onto a seamless continuum.

Quote:

---

Kelly: Illogical. Ultimate origination is impossible, since consciousness is caused. "We" are inseparable from the rest of the universe, none of it causing itself. Only to a minor degree do our thoughts and actions have an effect on how the universe unfolds, and these are fully caused. Never for an instant are "we" inherently existent, separately powerful, causal agents: nothing arises by our own power.

Suergaz: And of course ultimate origination is impossible, but why dismiss all origination because it is infinitely caused?

---

I did not dismiss all origination. I said ultimate origination is impossible. Origination can be useful tool.

Quote:

---

Suergaz: Our own power can be grasped by us, and that alone, all else we are subject to in varying degrees. In as much as we are subject to our own power, causality does not rule us, only chance (that which defies our understanding of causal derivation), and through our power, welcomed.

---

"[A]ll else we are subject to" means we are not subject to our own power, but then "we are subject to our own power" contradicts.

If you can't understand chance as part of causality, then your definition of causality needs to be broadened to include yourself. Anything else leads you up the garden path - where you seem quite contented.

Quote:

---

Kelly: Even our illusions (things of our abstract world) are caused...

I.e. "we" don't even choose what we like or dislike - so how can "we" have any say over how "we" originated?

Suergaz: This sounds like nothing but disillusionment with your personal power of effect!

---

Disillusionment: n. freedom from illusions, disenchantment.

Correct! Flying free...

Quote:

---

We do choose what we like or dislike, we can't help but choose!

---

Without any causation at all? As if an empty void takes over one's mind?

Quote:

---

The universe is indiscriminating in binding all its conscious 'things' to discrimination!

---

Ultimately there is neither discrimination nor not-discrimination.

Quote:

---

Kelly: If there are degrees of consciousness, such that at one "degree" there is no consciousness, and at the next "degree" there is consciousness, you are still dependent on causal processes stretching back infinitely. There can never be a primal cause, no beginning (nor end) to any thing.

Suergaz: There is no primal cause as you say, only an infinity. The universe, understood to have no beginning or end, does not mean that "we" do not!

---

To continue holding a falsehood like "we have a beginning yet have no primal cause" is truly mad.

And yet the infinity is also just an appearance - another construct of the moment, just like "universe" and "beginning" and "end" and "we"... None of it has any bearing on Reality.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2635

(5/19/04 12:54 am)

Reply

 --

---

Since you think I'm up the garden path, and since I think you are a disenchanted garden gnome, let us continue to misunderstand eachother for eternity.

Jones Kelly

Posts: 99

(5/19/04 3:13 pm)

Reply

 Re: Crisis

---

Suergaz, by indicating you'd like to conclude this discussion here, you are avoiding acknowledging errors in your logic. From this point, your behaviour will show what you value: reasoning correctly (the genius), or being an idiot (deliberate self-deception).

If you value reasoning correctly, your understanding of Reality will improve. If you value being an idiot, pretending this is correct reasoning, then you will be misleading yourself and others.

I prefer being beaten hard over the head thirty times than to continue in ignorance - so if you have logical proof to support your statements, please give them. I know that my understanding of Reality is incomplete, and because of that, i value when people correct me. If you don't, i will assume you lied, were ignorant/lazy, or are now afraid to communicate.

Quote:

---

Kelly: To qualify, no things are not created.

Suergaz: Degrees are possible, not only the relative ones of our perceived effect upon things, but in the entire infinite causal movement that is the universe, ie. they're actual.

Degrees are inherent in movement--the universe moves damn it!

Kelly:

Create: v. bring into existence; cause

Degree: n. a stage in an ascending or descending scale, series, or process

Therefore, at any "stage" at all, a thing never actually exists. At which degree is it fully an existent thing, and not simply a degree of the process of causation?

"Universe movement" is based on a perspective that contrasts things, e.g. space, matter, time. These abstract categories are projected onto a seamless continuum.

---

The "seamless continuum" is also an abstract category. Ultimately, every perspective is within the construction of knowing.

Therefore, anything one would like to posit as Reality cannot definitively be the Totality/Reality, because this depends on the appearance of one abstract category. However, this statement creates the Totality as "indefinitive" - another abstract category. In essence, it is impossible to grasp Reality: it is whatever it appears to be.

An appearance of objective reality is an illusion yet real, an appearance of free will is an illusion yet real, and the appearance of the emptiness of Reality is an illusion yet real.

Quote:

---

Kelly: Illogical. Ultimate origination is impossible, since consciousness is caused. "We" are inseparable from the rest of the universe, none of it causing itself. Only to a minor degree do our thoughts and actions have an effect on how the universe unfolds, and these are fully caused. Never for an instant are "we" inherently existent, separately powerful, causal agents: nothing arises by our own power.

Suergaz: And of course ultimate origination is impossible, but why dismiss all origination because it is infinitely caused?

Kelly: I did not dismiss all origination. I said ultimate origination is impossible. Origination can be useful tool.

---

Causality is by nature infinite and therefore precludes origination (by nature finite). A beginning is dependent on a thing existing, which is caused by other things, ad infinitum.

Quote:

---

Suergaz: Our own power can be grasped by us, and that alone, all else we are subject to in varying degrees. In as much as we are subject to our own power, causality does not rule us, only chance (that which defies our understanding of causal derivation), and through our power, welcomed.

Kelly: "[A]ll else we are subject to" means we are not subject to our own power, but then "we are subject to our own power" contradicts.

If you can't understand chance as part of causality, then your definition of causality needs to be broadened to include yourself. Anything else leads you up the garden path - where you seem quite contented.

---

Why should a lottery or the weather follow different laws to everything else?

Anyone who is interested in investigating causality, David Quinn's Wisdom of the Infinite is essential reading.

Quote:

---

Suergaz: We do choose what we like or dislike, we can't help but choose!

Kelly: Without any causation at all? As if an empty void takes over one's mind?

---

Is it true, Suergaz, that you think "we" (humans i suppose) are subject to chance, and not causal processes? If so, how can likes be likes and not dislikes? If purely determined by chance, then there would be no consistency from moment to moment. Suddenly a human could become translucent, fly, sprout feathers, turn inside out, shrink, etc. without warning, and have random pleasure or pain associations regardless of what the event was.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2637

(5/21/04 1:31 am)

Reply

---

Quote:

---

Is it true, Suergaz, that you think "we" (humans i suppose) are subject to chance, and not causal processes? If so, how can likes be likes and not dislikes? If purely determined by chance, then there would be no consistency from moment to moment. Suddenly a human could become translucent, fly, sprout feathers, turn inside out, shrink, etc. without warning, and have random pleasure or pain associations regardless of what the event was.

---

I have already said what chance is, ie. "...chance (that which defies our understanding of causal derivation)..." --and you really think I think it as apart from causality?!

You are being religiose, so far from "flying free" as you put it. What crisis are you healing from? It's not for me to correct you Kelly! Is there something in particular you wish to resolve with me? I'm sure you realize I've thought far----where are you headed with your conclusion that reality is an emptiness?! Fly, fly, or you'll see that a genius is also an idiot!

I think you need your wildness, your laughter and love!

Jones Kelly

Posts: 105

(5/22/04 5:11 pm)

Reply

Re: Crisis-Consciousness

---

Quote:

---

Suergaz: Our own power can be grasped by us, and that alone, all else we are subject to in varying degrees. In as much as we are subject to our own power, causality does not rule us, only chance (that which defies our understanding of causal derivation), and through our power, welcomed.

Kelly: If you can't understand chance as part of causality, then your definition of causality needs to be broadened to include yourself...Why should a lottery or the weather follow different laws to everything else?

Suergaz: We do choose what we like or dislike, we can't help but choose!

Kelly: Without any causation at all? As if an empty void takes over one's mind? Is it true, Suergaz, that you think "we" (humans i suppose) are subject to chance, and not causal processes? If so, how can likes be likes and not dislikes? If purely determined by chance, then there would be no consistency from moment to moment. Suddenly a human could become translucent, fly, sprout feathers, turn inside out, shrink, etc. without warning, and have random pleasure or pain associations regardless of what the event was.

Suergaz: I have already said what chance is, ie. "...chance (that which defies our understanding of causal derivation)..." --and you really think I think it as apart from causality?!

---

You agree, then, that chance is not apart from causality, that it is part of the realm of cause and effect. So our choices, our likes and dislikes, "our own power" as you put it, are fundamentally illusions. They are all caused things, ie. all of them are ruled by causality. To go further, since all things are caused, by other things, all the boundaries are shifting endlessly, and nothing inherently exists.

Quote:

---

Suergaz: You are being religiose, so far from "flying free" as you put it.

---

Learning to fly means practising a hell of a lot. So i am flying and learning about freedom (in the sense that my wings are moving, but i'm on the ground more often than in the air). Look at the scope of how much practice is needed:

Quote:

---

...when the P'eng rises ninety thousand li, he must have the wind under him...Only then can he mount on the back of the wind, shoulder the blue sky, and nothing can hinder or block him. Only then can he set his eyes to the south.

The cicada and the little dove laugh at this, saying, "When we make an effort and fly up, we can get as far as the elm or the sapanwood tree, but sometimes we don't make it and just fall down on the ground. Now how is anyone going to go ninety thousand li to the south!"

If you go off to the green woods nearby, you can take along food for three meals and come back with your stomach as full as ever. If you are going a hundred li, you must grind your grain the night before; and if you are going a thousand li, you must start getting the provisions together three months in advance. What do these two creatures understand? Little understanding cannot come up to great understanding; the short-lived cannot come up to the long-lived.

(Free and Easy Wandering, Chuang Tzu)

---

To be P'eng going ninety thousand li south takes a life-time. It's not a small nor easy undertaking, so any improvement is a foretaste of flying in freedom.

Quote:

---

Suergaz: What crisis are you healing from?

---

Ignorance. Shame of hitting the dust unbearably often. Absurd bandaid solutions. False idealism. Egotism. Willing self-deception. Refusal to start again from scratch. Quick fixes. Fear of being alone against the multitude. From over-complicating everything. The entire shebang - the entire perspective of how reality is and must be.

Yet this healing takes a long, long time. Maybe 30 or 40 years. I am a blind man crawling along a long log over an abyss. Demoralised, coming-going, desperately searching for clues - or Awake! - unpredictably insight drops in, and the adventure takes off again.

Quote:

---

Suergaz: It's not for me to correct you Kelly! Is there something in particular you wish to resolve with me?

---

Yes, logically clarify your stance that humans are part of causal processes (chance), yet have "our own power".

Quote:

---

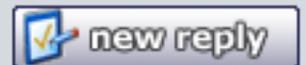

Suergaz: I'm sure you realize I've thought far----where are you headed with your conclusion that reality is an emptiness?! Fly, fly, or you'll see that a genius is also an idiot! I think you need your wildness, your laughter and love!

---

Not convincing. What about answering this question: How, since you agree that all humans are not apart from causality, do you choose an answer to this question?

Edited spelling

Edited by: Jones Kelly at: 5/22/04 5:18 pm

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM
> GENIUS FORUM
> Crisis

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2638 (5/23/04 2:33 am) Reply	 ----- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> You agree, then, that chance is not apart from causality, that it is part of the realm of cause and effect. So our choices, our likes and dislikes, "our own power" as you put it, are fundamentally illusions. They are all caused things, ie. all of them are ruled by causality. To go further, since all things are caused, by other things, all the boundaries are shifting endlessly, and nothing inherently exists <hr/> That something is caused does not make it an illusion. Everything inherently exists, else it is nothing. Something is not nothing just because you can understand it shall become so or desire it to be so. "Our own power" is our will, it does not need any ultimate origination to exist.

Jones Kelly

Posts: 106

(5/24/04 12:32 pm)

Reply

Re: -----

---

Quote:

---

Kelly: You agree, then, that chance is not apart from causality, that it is part of the realm of cause and effect. So our choices, our likes and dislikes, "our own power" as you put it, are fundamentally illusions. They are all caused things, ie. all of them are ruled by causality. To go further, since all things are caused, by other things, all the boundaries are shifting endlessly, and nothing inherently exists

Suergaz: That something is caused does not make it an illusion.

---

In the moment of a thing's existence, its causes have been selected out of the vast sea of causality. From that perspective, a thing is real, exists, has form, and an appearance of some kind. If any of its causes change, such as the selection, perspective, appearance, etc. then a new thing is created. No things have inherent existence.

---

Quote:

---

Everything inherently exists, else it is nothing.

---

"Nothing inherently exists" is false, because the state of absolute nothingness is impossible, it requires at least an observer. "Everything inherently exists" is also false, because the appearance of the totality of all things is caused. It is a momentary selection (the entirety of causes) which occurs in the vast sea of causality.

Therefore, no things have inherent existence, everything is an appearance of the moment.

---

Quote:

---

Something is not nothing just because you can understand it shall become so or desire it to be so.

---

This statement shows the nature of existence is misunderstood. The totality of all things is not caused by nothingness, but rather the appearance of the totality of all things is caused by the appearance of the state of nothingness. In plainer words, things exist because they have some kind of form and appearance. Without these, a thing has no existence.

Quote:

---

"Our own power" is our will, it does not need any ultimate origination to exist.

---

Because "will" stretches back infinitely as endless reactions, it can have no causal power of its own. It is quite simply an illusion, like all things, a momentary appearance of a bunch of causes selected out of a boundless sea of causality.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2640

(5/25/04 1:41 am)

Reply

Quote:

---

In the moment of a thing's existence, its causes have been selected out of the vast sea of causality.

---

Selected? (:D) By who?

Quote:

---

From that perspective, a thing is real, exists, has form, and an appearance of some kind. If any of its causes change, such as the selection, perspective, appearance, etc. then a new thing is created. No things have inherent existence.

---

But what you have just described is inherent existence.

Quote:

---

"Nothing inherently exists" is false, because the state of absolute nothingness is impossible, it requires at least an observer. "Everything inherently exists" is also false, because the appearance of the totality of all things is caused. It is a momentary selection (the entirety of causes) which occurs in the vast sea of causality.

Therefore, no things have inherent existence, everything is an appearance of the moment.

---

There is a sense for the statement "everything inherently exists" to be false, but the appearance of the totality of all things does not have a false appearance just because it is caused. In other words, it is false where everything is understood to be in motion. As for the statement "Nothing inherently exists", that is always false.

Quote:

---

suergaz:-Something is not nothing just because you can understand it shall become so or desire it to be so.

This statement shows the nature of existence is misunderstood. The totality of all things is not caused by nothingness, but rather the appearance of the totality of all things is caused by the appearance of the state of not-thingness. In plainer words, things exist because they have some kind of form and appearance. Without these, a thing has no existence.

---

My statement does not show that I think the totality of things is [i]caused[i] by nothingness. Your state of not-thingness is everything, which is not nothing, but more to the point, not [i]one[i] thing.

Quote:

---

Because "will" stretches back infinitely as endless reactions, it can have no causal power of its own. It is quite simply an illusion, like all things, a momentary appearance of a bunch of causes selected out of a boundless sea of causality.

---

Because things do not remain what they are, and pass, you think them illusory?!

Jones Kelly
Posts: 107
(5/25/04 4:15 pm)
Reply

 Re: Why rationality?

---

Quote:

---

Kelly: In the moment of a thing's existence, its causes have been selected out of the vast sea of causality.

Sue: Selected? (:D) By who?

---

A selection is selected. An appearance is appeared. All things are caused. A creator is a thing.

Quote:

---

Kelly: From that perspective, a thing is real, exists, has form, and an appearance of some kind. If any of its causes change, such as the selection, perspective, appearance, etc. then a new thing is created. No things have inherent existence.

Sue: But what you have just described is inherent existence.

---

Things exist only in the moment of their appearance. When Reality is understood, suddenly all things are understood to be empty. Words on a computer screen are experienced, but their causal nature shows them to be "....."

Quote:

---

Kelly: "Nothing inherently exists" is false, because the state of absolute nothingness is impossible, it requires at least an observer. "Everything inherently exists" is also false, because the appearance of the totality of all things is caused. It is a momentary selection (the entirety of causes) which occurs in the vast sea of causality. Therefore, no things have inherent existence, everything is an appearance of the moment.

Sue: There is a sense for the statement "everything inherently exists" to be false, but the appearance of the totality of all things does not have a false appearance just because it is caused. In other words, it is false where everything is understood to be in motion. As for the statement "Nothing inherently exists", that is always false.

---

My experience of emptiness is not strong enough to describe with clarity. But my intellectual understanding is good enough to see that your statement ("[the appearance of the totality of all things is a] false [appearance] where everything is understood to be in motion") is very vague. I will respond, but if i misunderstood, then ignore the following -- and rephrase your statement.

Firstly, the totality of all things, i.e. the Totality, or the Infinite, is not a thing. Movement applies to things, but since things have no inherent existence, there is no inherent motion. So if your statement meant "Where everything is understood to be in motion, the understanding of the Infinite is false", then you were correct.

Second, though the experience of emptiness is caused, is a thing, and has no inherent existence, it isn't therefore a false appearance. Its truth is undeniable. Falsehood is experienced with faulty reasoning: such as when an appearance is denied to be real, or affirmed as inherently real. So if your statement meant "The appearance of the Infinite is a false appearance because the Infinite is not a thing", then you were incorrect. The appearance of the Infinite is an experience of how the Infinite appears to be, in that moment.

It is literally impossible to describe the infinite (the totality of all things), but this does not make the experience of it false.

Quote:

---

suergaz:-Something is not nothing just because you can understand it shall become so or desire it to be so.

Kelly: This statement shows the nature of existence is misunderstood. The totality of all things is not caused by nothingness, but rather the appearance of the totality of all things is caused by the appearance of the state of not-thingness. In plainer words, things exist because they have some kind of form and appearance. Without these, a thing has no existence.

suergaz: My statement does not show that I think the totality of things is [i]caused[i] by nothingness. Your state of not-thingness is everything, which is not nothing, but more to the point, not [i]one[i] thing.

---

Not-thingness is neither nothing, one thing, anything, or everything. How can it be described at all? The hidden void creates consciousness, and it is not nothing.

Quote:

---

Kelly: Because "will" stretches back infinitely as endless reactions, it can have no causal power of its own. It is quite simply an illusion, like all things, a momentary appearance of a bunch of causes selected out of a boundless sea of causality.

Suergaz: Because things do not remain what they are, and pass, you think them illusory?!

---

A thing exists when it is experienced, and is real in that moment - and only in that moment is it possible to know that it actually isn't. If i experience "muddy sneakers" then muddy sneakers exists. A moment ago, they had no existence whatsoever. So i now know muddy sneakers are an illusion, just as in this moment, the computer screen also lacks intrinsic existence.

So, since things exist only as momentary appearances, free will - the notion of "our own power" - is certainly not power at all, but illogical.

*Edited conclusion for clarity.*

Edited by: Jones Kelly at: 5/25/04 4:22 pm

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2641

(5/26/04 12:56 am)

Reply

 ----

---

Quote:

Not-thingness is neither nothing, one thing, anything, or everything. How can it be described at all? The hidden void creates consciousness, and it is not nothing.

---

Don't ask me! You're the one who spoke of the "appearance of the state of nothingness" and that it causes the appearance of the totality of all things.

Quote:

---

A thing exists when it is experienced, and is real in that moment - and only in that moment is it possible to know that it actually isn't. If i experience "muddy sneakers" then muddy sneakers exists. A moment ago, they had no existence whatsoever. So i now know muddy sneakers are an illusion, just as in this moment, the computer screen also lacks intrinsic existence.

---

Experience of a thing is not to be equated with its existence.

Quote:

---

Firstly, the totality of all things, i.e. the Totality, or the Infinite, is not a thing.

---

We agree.

Quote:

---

Movement applies to things, but since things have no inherent existence, there is no inherent motion. So if your statement meant "Where everything is understood to be in motion, the understanding of the Infinite is false", then you were correct.

---

We couldn't disagree more. You say that nothing has inherent existence, and that this is because everything is caused, but that is precisely why everything has inherent existence. There is no end to an infinity, whenever we attempt to grasp "infinity" it is only in seeing it as "its own end"

Quote:

---

So, since things exist only as momentary appearances, free will - the notion of "our own power" - is certainly not power at all, but illogical.

---

The illogical nature of a thing, let alone everything, does not for me represent a negation.

Logic has its beauty, but it has always had to make itself up before illogic!

The notion of our powerlessness is weak.

NOX23

Registered User
Posts: 117
(5/26/04 2:34 am)
Reply

 Re: ----

---

Neither of what you two are presenting is bringing the light of skillful clarity and ease.

In fact, you are both perpetuating dis-ease in your semantical contradictions.

And none of these negative traits should be associated with an unyielding Truth.

So it would seem to reason that you are either both wrong/mistaken or, neither of you have a full enough grasp of what you are trying to convey. And if that being the case, should refrain from speaking as if from the position of authority and possessor of Truth.

Declaring the Truth is an act of compassion, arguing opinion as if it were Truth, is an act of pure vanity and does nothing but add to the ignorant barking of the human race.

Jones Kelly

Posts: 109
(5/26/04 3:44 pm)
Reply

 Re: ----

---

NOX23,

Your point has occurred to me frequently, since my understanding of the nature of Reality is still developing. Readers who lack discrimination could be misled.

However, if learners refrained from interacting with anyone at all, they would never develop. They interact in order to develop proper discrimination, by reading, discussing, observing, etc. A learner may not initially know what is true or not, but if their reasoning is sound, then they will learn to discriminate correctly. The responsibility is therefore on me to keep focussed and alert, to ensure that i don't pass on mistakes that i am aware of.

Though i am aware my understanding of Ultimate Reality is incomplete, i consciously continue this interaction with Suergaz to push myself to keep focussing on core truths. In a literal sense, i am using Suergaz as a stimulus, a cause, so that i can correct my own intellectual flaws.

Suergaz benefits from the discussion because i am benefitting: when wisdom is the profit, there is no hoarding.

I have considered staying offline, away from books, to focus on isolating the experience of the moment. The problem is, there is no isolation. Everything is the moment, and sooner or later, everything hidden and suppressed has to be faced.

Jones Kelly

Posts: 110

(5/26/04 4:32 pm)

Reply

Re: ----

---

Quote:

Kelly: Not-thingness is neither nothing, one thing, anything, or everything. How can it be described at all? The hidden void creates consciousness, and it is not nothing.

Suergaz: Don't ask me! You're the one who spoke of the "appearance of the state of nothingness" and that it causes the appearance of the totality of all things.

---

I gave the answer to the question. I seem to have this bad habit of using questions rhetorically. I think this is confusing, so i will ask a question only when seeking an answer from another.

Also, "state" doesn't really apply to not-thingness. Only a thing could have a state, or be static. The hidden void, which causes all things, could only be described (how it appears) as "causes all things" and "not nothing at all" - not a state.

Quote:

---

Kelly: A thing exists when it is experienced, and is real in that moment - and only in that moment is it possible to know that it actually isn't. If i experience "muddy sneakers" then muddy sneakers exists. A moment ago, they had no existence whatsoever. So i now know muddy sneakers are an illusion, just as in this moment, the computer screen also lacks intrinsic existence.

Suergaz: Experience of a thing is not to be equated with its existence.

---

Can "muddy sneakers" exist without being experienced?

Quote:

---

Kelly: Firstly, the totality of all things, i.e. the Totality, or the Infinite, is not a thing.

Suergaz: We agree.

Kelly: Movement applies to things, but since things have no inherent existence, there is no inherent motion. So if your statement meant "Where everything is understood to be in motion, the understanding of the Infinite is false", then you were correct.

Suergaz: We couldn't disagree more. You say that nothing has inherent existence, and that this is because everything is caused, but that is precisely why everything has inherent existence. There is no end to an infinity, whenever we attempt to grasp "infinity" it is only in seeing it as "its own end"

---

Do you think that things inherently exist because they have perfect forms that cannot be experienced? But how can a perfect form exist unless it presents some kind of appearance?

Whereas a thing exists because it has momentary form and appearance, and does not exist apart from the moment it is experienced, the Infinite or Totality of all things is not itself a thing, nor does it have any single perfect form.

Every undeluded experience is an appearance of the Infinite.

Quote:

---

Kelly: So, since things exist only as momentary appearances, free will - the notion of "our own power" - is certainly not power at all, but illogical.

Suergaz: The illogical nature of a thing, let alone everything, does not for me represent a negation. Logic has its beauty, but it has always had to make itself up before illogic! The notion of our powerlessness is weak.

---

Free will is seen as illogical because the notion is dependent on the logic of causality. Similarly, the notion of self is causally created, and is like a label stuck onto a bunch of causes - nothing at all.

Notions like power and weakness come from the deeply ingrained belief in the inherent existence of the self. To accept what logic indicates is therefore suffering. But this suffering is also causally created, and is therefore easier to bear.

It is not at all weakness to accept what is reasonable, namely, that all things lack intrinsic existence. Immense strength and courage is the weakness of the Godlike.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2643

(5/27/04 1:01 am)

Reply

 ----

---

Nox:-

Quote:

---

Declaring the Truth is an act of compassion, arguing opinion as if it were Truth, is an act of pure vanity and does nothing but add to the ignorant barking of the human race.

---

I welcome you to cut down any of my declarations or opinions if you can Nox. Declaring the truth as an act of love clears the floor of all vain 'compassionate' acts.

Kelly:--

Quote:

---

I gave the answer to the question. I seem to have this bad habit of using questions rhetorically. I think this is confusing, so i will ask a question only when seeking an answer from another.

Also, "state" doesn't really apply to not-thingness. Only a thing could have a state, or be static. The hidden void, which causes all things, could only be described (how it appears) as "causes all things" and "not nothing at all" - not a state.

---

How could a void be 'hidden'?!

Quote:

---

Can "muddy sneakers" exist without being experienced?

---

Yes, but you won't know it until you experience them.

Quote:

---

Do you think that things inherently exist because they have perfect forms that cannot be experienced?

---

No.

Quote:

---

Whereas a thing exists because it has momentary form and appearance, and does not exist apart from the moment it is experienced, the Infinite or Totality of all things is not itself a thing, nor does it have any single perfect form.
Every undeluded experience is an appearance of the Infinite.

---

Sure, but we still are not agreeing on the meaning of the word 'inherent'.

Quote:

---

Free will is seen as illogical because the notion is dependent on the logic of causality. Similarly, the notion of self is causally created, and is like a label stuck onto a bunch of causes - nothing at all.

Notions like power and weakness come from the deeply ingrained belief in the inherent existence of the self. To accept what logic indicates is therefore suffering. But this suffering is also causally created, and is therefore easier to bear.

It is not at all weakness to accept what is reasonable, namely, that all things lack intrinsic existence. Immense strength and courage is the weakness of the Godlike.

---

It is not reasonable that all things lack intrinsic existence (which you seem to equate with infinite existence, unlike me) when for one, they exist, and secondly, you cannot know all things.

This is why I have made the distinction in the past that God is not nothing, but nothing at all.

N0X23

Registered User

Posts: 118

(5/27/04 2:44 pm)

Reply

 Re: ----

---

Quote:

---

I welcome you to cut down any of my declarations or opinions if you can Nox.

---

Why do you assume that I would want to do that?

Any attempt at negating your declaration would be an act of redundancy. Regardless of what position you take on a issue, you inadvertently affirm the opposition. They are mutually dependent....Causality.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2648

(5/28/04 12:42 am)

Reply

---

Quote:

Nox:--Declaring the Truth is an act of compassion, arguing opinion as if it were Truth, is an act of pure vanity and does nothing but add to the ignorant barking of the human race.

suergaz:--I welcome you to cut down any of my declarations or opinions if you can Nox. Declaring the truth as an act of love clears the floor of all vain 'compassionate' acts.

Nox:-Why do you assume that I would want to do that? Any attempt at negating your declaration would be an act of redundancy.

Regardless of what position you take on a issue, you inadvertently affirm the opposition. They are mutually dependent....Causality.

---

I don't assume so. I said I welcome you to, because you haven't yet, and yet you've stated that my position is one of disease. Not in every instance is my affirmation of my opposition inadvertent.

Jones Kelly

Posts: 114

(5/28/04 1:14 pm)

Reply

---

Quote:

Kelly: Also, "state" doesn't really apply to not-thingness. Only a thing could have a state, or be static. The hidden void, which causes all things, could only be described (how it appears) as "causes all things" and "not nothing at all" - not a state.

Suergaz: How could a void be 'hidden'?!

---

Something is hidden because it doesn't have the quality of being apparent. This is an example of the limitations of consciousness, in that for practical purposes, it has an accurate description for what it is incapable of describing.

Quote:

---

Kelly: Can "muddy sneakers" exist without being experienced?

Suergaz: Yes, but you won't know it until you experience them.

---

It is not possible for an appearance to exist without an observer, i.e. the experience of muddy sneakers. Because all experiences are caused by what cannot be caused - ie the Hidden Void - there are essentially no muddy sneakers. Absolutely everything is like this - inherently caused, meaning not-inherently existent.

Quote:

---

Kelly: Do you think that things inherently exist because they have perfect forms that cannot be experienced?

Suergaz: No.

---

Do you think that things inherently exist because their perfect form exists only when it is experienced? If so, their existence is completely dependent on the experience being caused. Thus, there is no "perfect form: muddy sneakers" but simply an appearance of what seems to be muddy sneakers - an accurate description, for practical purposes only, of something which has the quality of being apparent.

Quote:

---

Kelly: Whereas a thing exists because it has momentary form and appearance, and does not exist apart from the moment it is experienced, the Infinite or Totality of all things is not itself a thing, nor does it have any single perfect form. Every undeluded experience is an appearance of the Infinite.

Suergaz: Sure, but we still are not agreeing on the meaning of the word 'inherent'.

---

See below.

Quote:

---

Kelly: Free will is seen as illogical because the notion is dependent on the logic of causality. Similarly, the notion of self is causally created, and is like a label stuck onto a bunch of causes - nothing at all. Notions like power and weakness come from the deeply ingrained belief in the inherent existence of the self. To accept what logic indicates is therefore suffering. But this suffering is also causally created, and is therefore easier to bear. It is not at all weakness to accept what is reasonable, namely, that all things lack intrinsic existence. Immense strength and courage is the weakness of the Godlike.

Suergaz: It is not reasonable that all things lack intrinsic existence (which you seem to equate with infinite existence, unlike me) when for one, they exist, and secondly, you cannot know all things. This is why I have made the distinction in the past that God is not nothing, but nothing at all.

---

Well, infinite existence is illogical. A thing exists, because it is limited (short of the Totality of all things), has an appearance, and is caused by all other things which do not appear - ie the Hidden Void. For a thing to have infinite, intrinsic existence, it could have no causal relationship to any other thing, could not be created, would be unchanging, indestructible - and could not present any appearance. No thing is like this. Therefore, the Infinite is not a thing, and it doesn't exist (every appearance is it).

That all things are intrinsically caused logically deprives existence of inherence. This is the difference between being stuck in the world of boundedness, and being able to experience the Totality.

It is impossible to know the specific details of everything in the Totality, but by knowing the nature of things, consciousness of the Totality is possible and the limitations of specific knowledge is transcended.

The problem with defining God as absolutely nothing is that you therefore cannot know God - since it is impossible to conceive of absolutely nothing. So since you can't conceive of it, everything you know is not God. If God is separate from all knowledge, God doesn't really have any presence in your consciousness, and logically had nothing to do with anything you know. So what's the point of this illogical label for something that isn't even absolutely nothing?

WolfsonJakk
Posts: 1590
(5/28/04 2:28 pm)
Reply

 ....

---

Quote:

---

Not in every instance is my affirmation of my opposition inadvertent.

---

classic

Jones Kelly
Posts: 115
(5/28/04 5:23 pm)
Reply

 Re: Inherent Existence

---

Is my existence as Kelly Jones inherent if it sometimes manifests as a computer program, sometimes as a dream, sometimes as a floating ghost, sometimes as a mirage, sometimes as a 3D self, sometimes as a window-view into Reality, sometimes as a 2D movie?

What is the inherent existence of Kelly Jones? A name?

What if "i" have a totally different set of memories at each moment, so that at the next moment "i" am experiencing another existence, such as Suergaz, or Tharan, or NOX23, or Dave Toast, or David Quinn, or -- ?

When could any thing have inherent existence?

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 1108
(5/29/04 12:50 am)
Reply

Re: Inherent Existence

---

When?

WolfsonJakk
Posts: 1593
(5/29/04 4:01 am)
Reply

Re: Inherent Existence

---

No "thing" exists inherently. All things are caused to exist.

Tharan

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2651
(5/29/04 7:45 am)
Reply

-----

---

Quote:

---

Suergaz: How could a void be 'hidden'?!

Kelly: Something is hidden because it doesn't have the quality of being apparent. This is an example of the limitations of consciousness, in that for practical purposes, it has an accurate description for what it is incapable of describing.

---

Bullshit.

Quote:

---

Kelly: Can "muddy sneakers" exist without being experienced?

Suergaz: Yes, but you won't know it until you experience them.

Kelly:--It is not possible for an appearance to exist without an observer, i.e. the experience of muddy sneakers. Because all experiences are caused by what cannot be caused - ie the Hidden Void - there are essentially no muddy sneakers. Absolutely everything is like this - inherently caused, meaning not-inherently existent.

---

inherently caused does not mean inherently non-existent, but inherently existent! You are backwards!

Quote:

---

Kelly: Do you think that things inherently exist because they have perfect forms that cannot be experienced?

Suergaz: No.

Kelly: Do you think that things inherently exist because their perfect form exists only when it is experienced? If so, their existence is completely dependent on the experience being caused. Thus, there is no "perfect form: muddy sneakers" but simply an appearance of what seems to be muddy sneakers - an accurate description, for practical purposes only, of something which has the quality of being apparent.

---

Clean your stinking sneakers already.

Quote:

---

The problem with defining God as absolutely nothing is that you therefore cannot know God - since it is impossible to conceive of absolutely nothing. So since you can't conceive of it, everything you know is not God. If God is separate from all knowledge, God doesn't really have any presence in your consciousness, and logically had nothing to do with anything you know. So what's the point of this illogical label for something that isn't even absolutely nothing?

---

There is no point for it. But you use it, and have it mean 'the infinite' or 'nature' ----why?

And you, Wolf, you still don't know what inherent really means?! Of course all things are caused to exist! EVERYTHING (The universe) inherently exists!

Edited by: suergaz at: 5/30/04 1:28 am

WolfsonJakk
Posts: 1594
(5/29/04 10:21 am)
Reply

 ***

---

Everthing in the universe exists as a result of the processes from which it formulates it's material existance. It must collect it's "parts" before it is whole and thus it does not exist inherently.

Tharan

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2653
(5/30/04 1:05 am)
Reply

 ---

---

The material existence of the universe is its inherent existence. The universe doesn't 'collect' its parts, it is its parts, an infinity of them, and it is 'whole' in every instance of its becoming, its motion.

The universe is illogical.

N0X23

Registered User
Posts: 122
(5/30/04 2:23 am)
Reply

 Re: ---

Quote:

The universe is illogical.

You were on the right track, right up until that “is”, then it fell apart. ;)

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM
> GENIUS FORUM
> Crisis

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
WolfsonJakk Posts: 1598 (5/30/04 2:54 am) Reply	 ... <hr/> Quote: <hr/> The material existence of the universe is its inherent existence. The universe doesn't 'collect' its parts, it is its parts, an infinity of them, and it is 'whole' in every instance of its becoming, its motion. <hr/> This is assuming the universe is actually infinite. I see no rational basis for this belief. Otherwise, I would agree that it necessarily exists in and of itself solely. Quote: <hr/> The universe is illogical. <hr/> If the universe is infinite, all logic would be suspect. Tharan

Jones Kelly

Posts: 123

(5/30/04 7:33 pm)

Reply

Re: finite discussion

---

Quote:

---

Suergaz: How could a void be 'hidden'?!

---

Kelly: Something is hidden because it doesn't have the quality of being apparent. This is an example of the limitations of consciousness, in that for practical purposes, it has an accurate description for what it is incapable of describing.

Suergaz: Bullshit.

---

It seems clear to me. Words can always describe whatever is experienced, even if communication is impossible. To say it is impossible to describe what cannot be experienced, is to describe. That's perfectly accurate, as there is no mistaking the meaning.

Quote:

---

Kelly: Can "muddy sneakers" exist without being experienced?

Suergaz: Yes, but you won't know it until you experience them.

Kelly:--It is not possible for an appearance to exist without an observer, i.e. the experience of muddy sneakers. Because all experiences are caused by what cannot be caused - ie the Hidden Void - there are essentially no muddy sneakers. Absolutely everything is like this - inherently caused, meaning not-inherently existent.

Suergaz: inherently caused does not mean inherently non-existent, but inherently existent! You are backwards!

---

It's so strange that this discussion has gone on for so long. It's such a simple logical truth. Intrinsic existence is logically impossible since existence of any thing is causally dependent. A thing's existence arises because boundaries, attributes, parts, etc. are described. A few seconds of investigation of any boundary at all (or attribute, or part, etc.) shows it can be moved around in any way, depending on one's purpose.

For instance, an infinite number of things can be created out of the same small patch of Reality - muddy sneakers - or an array of colours, a combination of squishy hardness, a shiny-and-dullness, a dirty object, the only pair of shoes i own, form-with-a-shadow, vacuous cave for an ant, cheap mass-produced item, comfortable things on feet, something slightly damp, what-is-stored-beside-the-stairs, mine (not hers), good for lots of walking on concrete, etc. None of these things inherently exist, they're simply an appearance of the moment.

Quote:

---

Kelly: Do you think that things inherently exist because they have perfect forms that cannot be experienced?

Suergaz: No.

Kelly: Do you think that things inherently exist because their perfect form exists only when it is experienced? If so, their existence is completely dependent on the experience being caused. Thus, there is no "perfect form: muddy sneakers" but simply an appearance of what seems to be muddy sneakers - an accurate description, for practical purposes only, of something which has the quality of being apparent.

Suergaz: Clean your stinking sneakers already.

---

I walk over a muddy hill practically every day, so there'd be little point in cleaning the mud off.

Quote:

---

Kelly: The problem with defining God as absolutely nothing is that you therefore cannot know God - since it is impossible to conceive of absolutely nothing. So since you can't conceive of it, everything you know is not God. If God is separate from all knowledge, God doesn't really have any presence in your consciousness, and logically had nothing to do with anything you know. So what's the point of this illogical label for something that isn't even absolutely nothing?

Suergaz: There is no point for it. But you use it, and have it mean 'the infinite' or 'nature' ----why?

---

I use labels that i picked up from David and Kevin (God, Infinite, Reality, Nature, Truth, Tao) because these words work better as labels than others. They're still obviously labels, describing certain aspects.

Quote:

---

Suergaz: And you, Wolf, you still don't know what inherent really means?! Of course all things are caused to exist! EVERYTHING (The universe) inherently exists! The material existence of the universe is its inherent existence. The universe doesn't 'collect' its parts, it is its parts, an infinity of them, and it is 'whole' in every instance of its becoming, its motion. The universe is illogical.

---

Yep, i've probably had enough now. Thanks Suergaz.

Kelly

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2657

(5/31/04 1:34 am)

Reply

 Re: finite discussion

---

wolf:-

Quote:

---

If the universe is infinite, all logic would be suspect.

---

And?!

Kelly:-

Quote:

---

I use labels that i picked up from David and Kevin (God, Infinite, Reality, Nature, Truth, Tao) because these words work better as labels than others. They're still obviously labels, describing certain aspects.

---

What fantaastical words. All set and plumped and sat together all packed in like that between brackets. Ebsolitly exolent, wonderful job we did on them there words. words these days should really be displayed. The first and last of them can be left off if they're all supposed to be eachothernull.

Jones Kelly

Posts: 134

(6/1/04 6:41 pm)

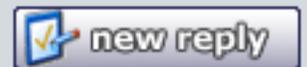

Reply

 Re: finite discussion

---

(What fantaastical words. All set and plumped and sat together all packed in like that between brackets. Ebsolitly exolent, wonderful job we did on them there words. words these days should really be displayed. The first and last of them can be left off if they're all supposed to be eachothernull.)

?

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

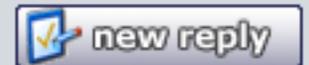

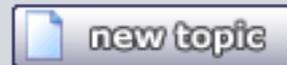

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Dark Matter

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
winston rumfoord Posts: 5 (3/2/04 9:59 am) Reply	 Dark Matter <hr/> Sorry if this has been discussed elsewhere, I'm reading some old posts but there are a lot and me no read so good. Just a theroy: Dark Matter is light. If viewed as a 'ripple' in space (is that how light is thought of?) and the electromagnetic nature of atoms is viewed as 'ripples' or disturbances in space, this tells me that light can have the same gravitational effect as 'conventional' matter. Consider a universe that contained just one atom. And that one atom 'lived' for 15 billion years. All that time it would be causing the disturbances we call light. So, you'd have an area 30 billion light years across, all filled with light. Every square inch would have this disturbance in it. Isn't it possible that this light could be the dark matter that is detected by it's gravitational effect? Most physics is out of my league so I won't be shocked if this theroy is laughed off this forum. I was just wondering.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 1003
(3/2/04 10:44 am)
Reply

☐ Re: Dark Matter

---

According to Special Relativity, photons can have no gravitational effect as they have no invariant mass (in a vacuum). They wouldn't be able to travel at the speed of light (in a vacuum) if they had any mass.

When photons are in certain material, they couple with the excitations therein and behave differently. One such behaviour is the production of polaritons which have a speed lower than the speed of light, and so an effective invariant mass. So could this be a way for light to account for Dark Matter perhaps?

Dark matter is theorised due to the imbalance between the estimated amount of matter in the universe and the gravitational effects observed, which suggest that there should be more matter than estimated.

The mass of the likes of polaritons would necessarily be included in those estimates on the amount of matter, being as they can only occur in matter and are therefore factored into the estimate on account of their mass being part of the mass of the matter under consideration.

Light cannot account for Dark matter.

Edited by: Dave Toast at: 3/2/04 11:21 am

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 830
(3/2/04 12:19 pm)
Reply

☐ Re: Dark Matter

---

Dave: Light cannot account for Dark matter.

Plus it would hardly be 'dark' if caused by light.

Thomas

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 1006
(3/2/04 12:30 pm)
Reply

☐ Re: Dark Matter

---

How terse.

And I had to go and write all that bullshit :-)

suergaz Registered User Posts: 2481 (3/2/04 1:16 pm) Reply	 ---- <hr/> Bullshit is not as dark as some matter.
birdofhermes Registered User Posts: 1438 (3/2/04 2:38 pm) Reply 	 Re: Dark Matter <hr/> I really can't understand the concept of a particle without mass. What travels?
winston rumfoord Posts: 6 (3/2/04 2:56 pm) Reply	 Light as particle <hr/> Mr. Toast, you say that light can't be dark matter. You are certain about this so I assume you've disproved the uncertainty principal. Good for you. I'll look over this forum for your unified field theory since you clearly have knowledge no one else on the planet does. To be honest, you are probably right. But it wouldn't be fun if everyone agreed so I'll go on with my 'crazy' theories. First, I know when I was shown that demonstration with the two light projectors in grade school I was supposed to understand why light is both a wave and a particle. Shamefully I didn't understand, and now look at me. Here's a thought experiment to mull: Look at the moon. Pretty small, right. Thanks to the perspective of distance it can be obscured by your thumb. Now you are swept away and held one inch from the surface. Your entire field of vision is a few inches of moon rock, nothing more. If light were a particle, then if you were viewing the moon from the earth again your field of vision would be the same as it was when you were an inch away from the surface. A particle would 'shoot' in a straight line into your eye.

A straight line. No perspective of distance. The image would never change because the particles would all 'shoot' out in the same alignment and stay 'in formation,' if you will.

No particles.

So light can only be a wave (or more accurately; a pulse or disturbance). I understand that objects of any mass moving at light speed would become objects of infinite mass, so of course light can't have mass.

But light is. It can be detected so it has properties, even if it's only the motion of a ripple through space. So again, you are probably right. But to assert that you are sure of it is wrong.

The people that lived and died believing the sun went around the earth were pretty sure about themselves too.

Edited by: winston rumfoord at: 3/2/04 2:59 pm

ynithrix
Registered User
Posts: 242
(3/2/04 3:52 pm)
Reply

 re:

---

Physics is little without geometry. Consider light as vibrations of the fifth dimension and equations merge so beautifully. String theory's going that way.

winston rumfoord
Posts: 9
(3/2/04 4:32 pm)
Reply

 No strings attached

---

I can't 'go there.' It's just way beyond my ken.

Correct me if I'm wrong here but String Theory is really just numbers on a chalk board, right? These guys don't really envision tiny 'strings' at the root of everything, right?

If they work it out on paper and it turns out to be a unified field theory great. I don't think it's gonna happen.

It seems to me physicists want to actually prove that the universe is nothing but a binary code and we are all living in a matrix. If they prove this I'd rather not know.

Any computer program that can dream up Natalie Portman is OK with me.

ynithrix
Registered User
Posts: 243
(3/2/04 5:24 pm)
Reply

re:

"Correct me if I'm wrong here but String Theory is really just numbers on a chalk board, right? These guys don't really envision tiny 'strings' at the root of everything, right?"

String theory has received such attention because it has evolved so fast. There are various types of it, unified to M-theory. i.e., their visions are all slightly different. Maybe the vibrations of 1-D strings of energy can be greater mass, or maybe whole branes (manifolds) are the cause; but I think most of the physics community agree there is some basis quantity, not a point. 1-D energy seems about as fundamental as we could understand it to get.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 833
(3/2/04 5:57 pm)
Reply

Re: Dark Matter

Anna: I really can't understand the concept of a particle without mass. What travels?

That is amusing, because physicists seem to be in the opposite predicament; they can -for the life of it- not come up with a good reason for mass. Mass and gravitation are the oddballs. Visualizability is of course a nice feature of any theory, but QM does largely without it. It is not a requirement.

Thomas

winston rumfoord
Posts: 10
(3/2/04 6:01 pm)
Reply

ynithrix...

is light (whatever it is) in it's natural state of...well, moving at the speed of light, energy?

N0X23

Registered User

Posts: 92

(3/3/04 12:49 am)

Reply

 Re: ynithrix...

---

Quote:

---

Dave: Light cannot account for Dark matter.

Plus it would hardly be 'dark' if caused by light.

---

We can not see light, only the objects illuminated by it. So unless light illuminates itself, I would imagine that it would remain very Dark.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1440

(3/3/04 2:17 am)

Reply

 Re: Dark Matter

---

Quote:

---

That is amusing, because physicists seem to be in the opposite predicament; they can -for the life of it- not come up with a good reason for mass. Mass and gravitation are the oddballs.

---

Perhaps I don't understand what mass is.

I also don't know what they mean by a zero dimensional point versus a one dimensional string at the bottom of things. How can any object, no matter that it is unimaginably tiny - not have all three dimensions? And they even say (Brian Green says) that the strings have length.

ynithrix

Registered User

Posts: 244

(3/3/04 10:23 am)

Reply

re:

---

"is light (whatever it is) in it's natural state of...well, moving at the speed of light, energy?"

It depends wholly on the statement 'whatever it is'. If a photon exists as a particle, then it is (not 'has') energy. If, as I put forth before, light is vibrations of a fifth or higher dimension, then there seems no reason to think of light as even needing such a boson to transmit it.

"I also don't know what they mean by a zero dimensional point versus a one dimensional string at the bottom of things."

A point is 0-D because it is merely a position of space, not a real object but a reference point. If it were anything but, then the thickness of a pencil would affect a graph, etc. By definition of being 1-D, a string thus has length and only length.

Thomas Knierim

Registered User

Posts: 836

(3/3/04 12:51 pm)

Reply

Re: Dark Matter

---

Nox: We can not see light, only the objects illuminated by it.

Huh? You see light, because photons hit your retina. You don't need any objects.

Anna: Perhaps I don't understand what mass is.

You're not the only one if that is of any consolation.

Anna: I also don't know what they mean by a zero dimensional point versus a one dimensional string at the bottom of things.

I think it has to do with homology, not the biological term we just discussed in another thread, but homology in mathematics, the study of regions and boundaries of spaces. For example, the boundary of a two-dimensional circular disk is a one-dimensional circle. A one-dimensional circle has no edges and therefore no boundaries, hence its boundary is zero-dimensional.

Anna: How can any object, no matter that it is unmimarginably tiny - not have all three dimensions?

That shouldn't be a problem at all for string theory, considering that it has successfully resolved the question "how can any object not have all ten (insert any other number here) dimensions?"

Anna: And they even say (Brian Green says) that the strings have length.
Are you refering to "The Elegant Universe"? Did you read it?
Thomas

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1443
(3/3/04 3:38 pm)
Reply

Re: Dark Matter

---

Quote:

---

A point is 0-D because it is merely a position of space, not a real object but a reference point. If it were anything but, then the thickness of a pencil would affect a graph, etc. By definition of being 1-D, a string thus has length and only length.

---

Well, now I'm confused. In the Elegant Universe Brian Green seems to say that the old theory, before string theory, was that matter was made up of zero-dimensional particles. Well, how can something that is only a reference point and not a real object underly the material world?

Quote:

---

You're not the only one if that is of any consolation.

---

Why, yes, thanks.

Quote:

---

For example, the boundary of a two-dimensional circular disk is a one-dimensional circle. A one-dimensional circle has no edges and therefore no boundaries, hence its boundary is zero-dimensional.

---

Um, I don't understand what you're saying here. That is, I think of a circle as two-dimensional.

Quote:

---

Anna: How can any object, no matter that it is unimmaginably tiny - not have all three dimensions?

That shouldn't be a problem at all for string theory, considering that it has successfully resolved the question "how can any object not have all ten (insert any other number here) dimensions?"

---

Well, I haven't delved into it enough yet to know why they found it necessary to resolve that. I don't discount all the dimensions being there in the string, I just count the number of dimensions that are obvious and part of our regular way of seeing things. So how can there be a one-dimensional string? Or if strings have no mass, when do they aquire it? I certainly expected that adding an entire dimension would indicate a bit of mass.

It would be more accurate to say I am reading The Elegant Universe - along with about 15 other books (this is what the internet has done to me) and I have sort of bogged down, I am deeply ashamed to admit, due to the number of things I don't understand. I've read probably close to half of it.

Edited by: birdofhermes at: 3/3/04 3:40 pm

Thomas Knierim

Registered User

Posts: 839

(3/3/04 5:35 pm)

Reply

 Re: Dark Matter

---

Anna: Um, I don't understand what you're saying here. That is, I think of a circle as two-dimensional.

Yes, that's what it looked like in highschool. There's no differentiation between a circle and a disk at that level. Another way to put it: the disk has a surface and the circle doesn't. The circle is just the edge of a disk. Both objects can of course be related to a higherdimensional space by using Cartesian coordinates.

Anna: Well, I haven't delved into it enough yet to know why they found it necessary to resolve that.

We don't observe ten or more space dimensions, do we? We see only three. The rest of them is compacted.

Anna: So how can there be a one-dimensional string? Or if strings have no mass, when do they acquire it?

Strings are no objects in the common sense. They are themselves one-dimensional, but oscillate in higher-dimensional spacetime as described by Euler-Lagrange equations. The oscillations result in fermions and bosons.

Thomas

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1440

(3/4/04 1:36 am)

Reply

Re: Dark Matter

---

Thomas: For example, the boundary of a two-dimensional circular disk is a one-dimensional circle. A one-dimensional circle has no edges and therefore no boundaries, hence its boundary is zero-dimensional.

Anna: Um, I don't understand what you're saying here. That is, I think of a circle as two-dimensional.

Yes, that's what it looked like in high school. There's no differentiation between a circle and a disk at that level. Another way to put it: the disk has a surface and the circle doesn't. The circle is just the edge of a disk.

I see the difference between a circle and a disk. But even the circle must have length in order to acquire the shape of a circle, and that is where I see two dimensions. Or - wait a minute. Perhaps I am remembering it wrong. If a cube has 3D, then a square has 2D, and a line has 1D - then is a point considered 0D? Because I thought a point was 1D. I was considering the circle to be 2D as a square - but should it be a line?

Quote:

---

Both objects can of course be related to a higher-dimensional space by using Cartesian coordinates.

---

Why of course they can,...why bother to mention it? High school indeed. I never went. Just pretend you are the teacher of a class of 6th graders when you talk to me.

Anna: How can any object, no matter that it is unimaginably tiny - not have all three dimensions?

That shouldn't be a problem at all for string theory, considering that it has successfully resolved the question "how can any object not have all ten (insert any other number here) dimensions?"

We don't observe ten or more space dimensions, do we? We see only three. The rest of them is compacted.

I know they are compacted - I thought that was what I said - but I thought you said they had resolved that they did not have all those dimensions?

Quote:

---

Strings are no objects in the common sense. They are themselves onedimensional, but oscillate in higherdimensional spacetime as described by Euler-Lagrange equations. The osciallations result in fermions and bosons.

---

Which have mass. It makes sense in a way. So the strings would be energy then?

MGregory

Posts: 476

(3/4/04 5:21 am)

Reply

Re: Dark Matter

---

Quote:

---

Thomas: Yes, that's what it looked like in highschool. There's no differentiation between a circle and a disk at that level. Another way to put it: the disk has a surface and the circle doesn't. The circle is just the edge of a disk.

Anna: I see the difference between a circle and a disk. But even the circle must have length in order to aquire the shape of a circle, and that is where I see two dimensions. Or - wait a minute. Perhaps I am remembering it wrong. If a cube has 3D, then a square has 2D, and a line has 1D - then is a point considered 0D? Because I thought a point was 1D. I was considering the circle to be 2D as a square - but should it be a line?

---

A dimension is just a mathematical conceptual construct and has no inherent reality. Deciding whether a circle has one dimension, or two, or three, or five-thousand depends entirely on what problem to want to solve. If you want to find the area, then you need to think of it as 2-D. If you want to find the circumference, then you can think of it as 1-D, since you are only interested in the distance you would travel along the edge to go around the entire circle. It would be 1-D because at any point on the circumference there are only two ways you can travel. That's how I see it, anyway.

rushdl

Registered User

Posts: 40

(3/9/04 10:33 am)

Reply

 Re: Dark Matter

---

Before you can go any farther, remember that we do not know much at all about gravity. Also one could research the french Geodetic surveys which are hidden from publication due to their non-conformity to the current books.

They sumize that the center of gravitational attraction is at about 40000 feet. But I'm sorry, this is not about gravity, but Dark Matter. I'll be back with smp'n sump'n.

A plumb bob is simply a weight suspended on the end of a cord. It acts on the principle of the attraction of gravity or mass, and the weight always points toward the center of gravity, which in the case of the spherical Earth; is its exact center. However, the plumb bob is not only used to erect buildings, but the principle is used to measure the distance of the sun or any planet.

Sometime prior to 1901, the French government, wished to determine more accurately the actual size of the Earth, so that they could revise and refine their calculations regarding the distance apart at the top of two lines perpendicular to the surface of the Earth and the bottom of those same two lines. They wanted a pair of lines long enough to give them an appreciable measurement. Obviously they could not erect two parallel poles a mile high, but they could suspend two plumb bobs down a mine shaft a mile deep; and then measure the distance between at the top and bottom. They did just that. Thinking that the distance at the bottom would be much less, as we believe that the center of gravity is at the center of the Earth; ah...but how much less would it be?

The Geodetic Surveys were carried out at the Tamarack mines, near Calumet, Michigan. The mine shafts were selected, and the plumb lines exactly 4250 feet long were suspended in each mine. At the end of each of these lines were suspended a sixty pound bob. It was reasoned that the lines were to be made out of No 24 piano wire, so as magnetic forces could not effect them. For twenty four hours the lines were allowed to hang, so that there would be no possibility of movement from putting them in place still remaining in the lines. The measurements begun. It was then discovered that the French Geodetic engineers had NOT made a mistake. Careful re-checking proved that the lines, contrary to expectations, were further apart at the bottom than at the top

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

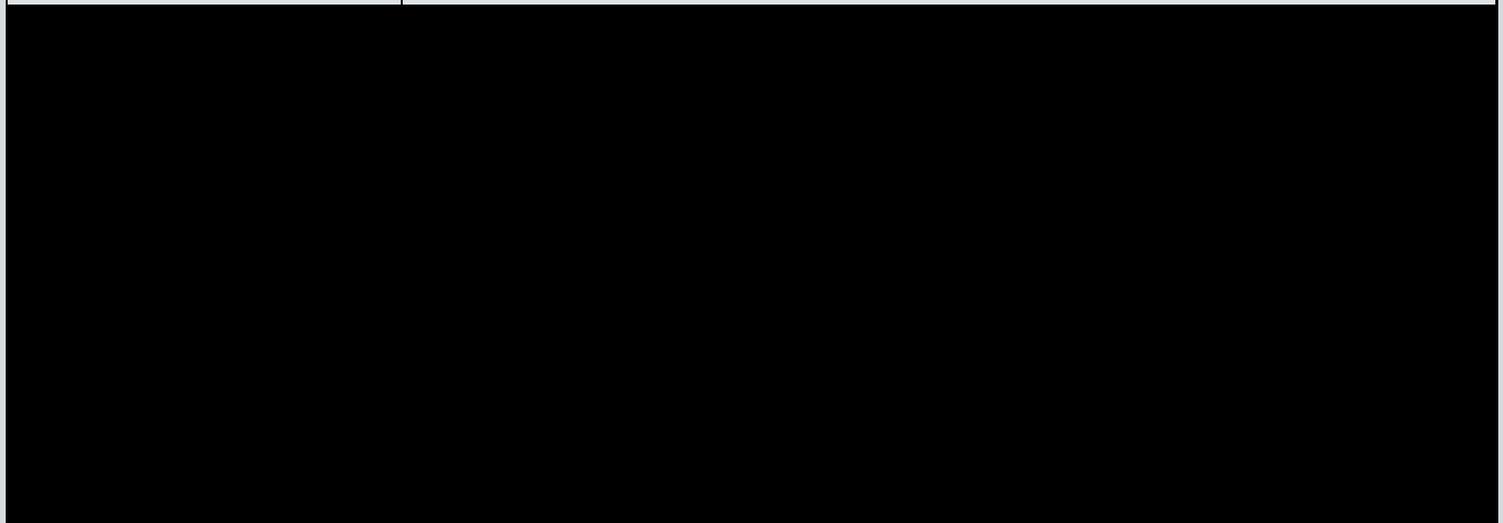

GENIUS FORUM
> GENIUS FORUM
> Dark Matter

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
XXX STATIC X Registered User Posts: 88 (3/9/04 2:31 pm) Reply	Re: Dark Matter <hr/> Maybe dark matter is what has not been created or simply put, yet to be imagined by God because the first atom is what really created or evolved the universe right? I believe God is a perfect sphere. What you should talk about is holograms. I know the basics of a hologram, one sliver contains whole picture... Does God use a laser or does he just give off impressions like with sound waves?
rushdl Registered User Posts: 41 (3/10/04 7:14 am) Reply	Re: Dark Matter <hr/> Dark matter = RAID5

ynithrix
Registered User
Posts: 248
(3/11/04 6:45 am)
Reply

 re:

---

"A dimension is just a mathematical conceptual construct and has no inherent reality."

I agree to an extent. If you want the area of a circle, you must look at 2-D because its area spans 2 dimensions.

But you must look at these objects as n-D objects, not as n-D representations of the object you started with. For example, the circumference of a circle is necessarily a line (nothing to do with a circle, other than it is connected), so it is 1-D.

"But even the circle must have length in order to acquire the shape of a circle, and that is where I see two dimensions."

Draw a circle, then imagine it has no inside, now it represents a 1-D line connected to itself. It is 2-D because your pencil has width, but it represents a 1-D line, since by imagining the circle as empty you would've removed that width.

"So the strings would be energy then?"

And only energy.

"the first atom is what really created or evolved the universe right?"

I can't comprehend a universe with a beginning.

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 105
(3/17/04 10:26 am)
Reply

 Nice.

---

I see the universe as a infinite-dimensional plane.

simulacra- idea of "matrix"

simulation- concept in "motion"

I read a computer book on the black arts of computer graphics it was pretty cool. Draw a circle on a piece of paper, then structure it with triangles. Write numbers in the triangles starting with the center. Make sure the outside shapes are equal to zero. That's how I think atoms are structured. Unless...they are perfect spheres.

rushdl
Registered User
Posts: 44
(4/20/04 5:41 am)
Reply

 Re: Nice.

---

We could be losing space every second.

To an astronaut orbiting the Earth, the Frame-Dragging effect is undetectable, but Einstein's theory says that a small bit of space is actually lost as space is spun around on itself. (Due to massive objects)

ZERRINO
Registered User
Posts: 1
(4/21/04 5:44 am)
Reply

 ANTI MATTER

---

IF THERE IS AN AMOUNT OF MATERIAL MISSING IN THE UNIVERSE - CALLED DARK MATTER

I WOULD ASK - WHAT ELSE IS MISSING

I WOULD THINK OF ALL THIS POSITIVE MATERIAL AROUND AND WOULD SAY - NEGATIVE MATERIAL

WHAT IF NOTHING IS MISSING AND ANTI MATTER ONLY IS DARK -

MKFaizi
Registered User
Posts: 1152
(4/21/04 1:32 pm)
Reply

 Re: ANTI MATTER

---

Who cares? So what if this matter or that matter is missing from the universe?

If you are a scientist and you want to study this sort of thing, more power to you. I just don't see what it has to do with philosophy -- pure thought.

Faizi

Overlord
Registered User
Posts: 4
(4/28/04 11:00 am)
Reply

 Ah, there it is!

---

We could be losing space every second.

To an astronaut orbiting the Earth, the Frame-Dragging effect is undetectable, but Einstein's theory says that a small bit of space is actually lost as space is spun around on itself. (Due to massive objects)

=====

Sit down! Stop moving around!

We're also losing time. I seem to recall that it was proven that with 2 synchronized atomic clocks, putting one of them in a plane and flying it very fast, it got out of sync with the other clock.

It's not dark matter..... we're just out of sync....

Overlord
Registered User
Posts: 5
(4/28/04 11:20 am)
Reply

 Ah, there it is!

---

We could be losing space every second.

To an astronaut orbiting the Earth, the Frame-Dragging effect is undetectable, but Einstein's theory says that a small bit of space is actually lost as space is spun around on itself. (Due to massive objects)

=====

Sit down! Stop moving around!

We're also losing time. I seem to recall that it was proven that with 2 synchronized atomic clocks, putting one of them in a plane and flying it very fast, it got out of sync with the other clock.

It's not dark matter..... we're just out of sync....

=====

Hmmm.....

Ok, so if the big bang started everything, I'm assuming that lots of stuff blew out at the speed of light (altho right close there that speed was probably a different value than it is now).... so presumably some of the first stuff out of the box is still going at a pretty good clip.

Now, I'm going on a train 500 miles an hour and I have a gun with a muzzle velocity of 500 mph too. I shoot out the back of the train and they basically cancel each other out. The bullet has 0 relative velocity and just sort of falls down on the tracks; Particles.

Now the same thing happens wave-wise with the sound of the train whistle.

So perhaps the universe is like this truly huge spherical expanding wavefront, or event horizon moving at the speed of light out into.... uh....God's workshop, making space as it goes. Could not then the photons from that expanding mass/wavefront/event horizon/neat sparkly thing just sort of pop out the ass end of it sort of dead in the water? Voila! Dark matter! It's there... but you don't see it.

The only one who can see it is who created it.....

wait for it.....

Al Gore!

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 1091
(4/29/04 8:42 am)
Reply

 Re: Ah, there it is!

---

LOL, nice.

Now that is some proper imagination.

rushdl
Registered User
Posts: 43
(4/30/04 7:48 am)
Reply

 Re: Ah, there it is!

---

SILLY BOY!

A circle IS a 2D object. A circle in 1-D is a line. Everything in 1-D is a line, or point. If you knew it was a circle, you just used 2-D imagination. Imagine if the first Dimension was more like a boolean equation: Profile is PRESENT:Profile is NOT present. I believe strings may be basically 1-D, expressed as the fifth dimension or more.

Think about the 1-D circle. You still have all the information in 1-D to create the circle in 2-D, except for the detail "This is a Circle".

ZERRINO
Registered User
Posts: 13
(5/1/04 5:43 am)
Reply

 Re: Dark Matter

---

THIS IS A REPLY TO :

: I really can't understand the concept of a particle without mass. What travels? :

IDENTITY

THAT IS THE NOT-ANTI-CHARACTER IN CASE OF THE PARTICLE
AND THE ANTI-CHARACTER IN CASE OF THE ANTIPARTICLE

 capecodindependent
Posts: 7
(5/6/04 5:15 am)
Reply
ezSupporter

 Re: Dark Matter

---

Quote:

---

A circle IS a 2D object. A circle in 1-D is a line. Everything in 1-D is a line, or point. If you knew it was a circle, you just used 2-D imagination. Imagine if the first Dimension was more like a boolean equation: Profile is PRESENT:Profile is NOT present. I believe strings may be basically 1-D, expressed as the fifth dimension or more.

---

	This is as bland and misdirected as the thread itself.What are we aiming for here-?
rushdl  Registered User Posts: 45 (5/6/04 6:13 am) Reply	 Re: Dark Matter <hr/> Just a definition of a circle. Even when looking at circumference, every point has a unique x-y coordinate.  If living in a 1D world, you can imagine the trouble one might come up against tring to recognize anything.

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Dave Sim letter

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
G Shantz Registered User Posts: 432 (2/25/04 10:51 pm) Reply	Dave Sim letter <hr/> Some good truths and insights to be found about society and women's control of same, among others. www.infernalpress.com/cerebus/ (eleven .jpg files) Edited by: G Shantz at: 2/25/04 10:54 pm
G Shantz Registered User Posts: 435 (4/2/04 1:21 pm) Reply 	Dave Sim interview <hr/> More Sim, this time an Onion interview. My favourite quote: The evidence that I see around me in society indicates that not only is thinking very much out of favor, but I'm not sure that the last couple of generations—Generation X and Generation Next, or whatever you want to call them—even know what a thought is, having been raised to be women. Hopefully I'll be able to post something other than links sometime soon. Greg Edited by: G Shantz at: 4/7/04 5:32 am

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> David and Hinduism

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
voce io Registered User Posts: 677 (2/10/04 2:01 pm) Reply 	David and Hinduism <hr/> David, you said on TPG a few days ago that you'd write about how your views on enlightenment are parallel to ancient Hindu views. Could you discuss some of that? Thanks, and if Kevin or Dan want to jump in as well, I'd really appreciate it. Thank you.
ksolway Registered User Posts: 350 (2/10/04 5:38 pm) Reply 	Re: David and Hinduism <hr/> "The Avadhuta Gita" is one of my favorite Hindu scriptures: www.theabsolute.net/minefield/wisdom.html  More later.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2183

(2/12/04 10:08 am)

Reply

Re: David and Hinduism

---

Excerpts from Ashtavakra Sutra:

Recognise that the apparent is unreal, while the unmanifest is abiding. Through this initiation into truth you will escape falling into unreality again.

Seeing this world as pure illusion, and devoid of any interest in it, how should the strong-minded person feel fear, even at the approach of death?

Who is to be compared to the great-souled person whose mind is free of desire, free of expectation and disappointment, and who has found satisfaction in self-knowledge?

How should a strong-minded person who knows that whatever is seen is by its very nature nothing, how then consider one thing to be grasped and another to be rejected?

For someone who has eliminated attachment, and who is free from dualism and from desire and from repulsion, for such a one an object that comes of itself is neither painful nor pleasurable.

Knowing yourself as truly one and indestructible, how could a wise man like you- one possessing self-knowledge- feel any pleasure in acquiring wealth?

Truly, when one does not know oneself, one takes pleasure in the objects of mistaken perception, just as greed for its seeming silver arises in one who does not know mother-of-pearl for what it is.

All this wells up like waves in the sea. Recognising, I am That, why run around like someone in need?

He who is content, with purified senses, and always enjoys solitude, has gained the fruit of knowledge and the fruit of the practice of union too.

The knower of truth is never distressed in this world, for the whole round world is full of himself alone.

None of the senses please a person who has found satisfaction within, just as grape leaves do not please the elephant that likes mango leaves.

The person who is not attached to the things he has enjoyed, and does not hanker after the things he has not enjoyed, such a person is hard to find.

--

Excerpts from Bhagavad Gita:

When a man surrenders all desires that come to the heart and by the grace of God finds the joy of God, then his soul has indeed found peace.

He whose mind is untroubled by sorrows, and for pleasures he has no longings, beyond passion, and fear and anger, he is the sage of unwavering mind.

Who everywhere is free from all ties, who neither rejoices nor sorrows if fortune is good or ill, his is a serene wisdom.

The restless violence of the senses impetuously carries away the mind of even a wise man striving towards perfection.

When a man dwells on the pleasures of sense, attraction for them arises in him.

From attraction arises desire, the lust of possession, and this leads to passion, to anger.

From passion comes confusion of mind, then loss of remembrance, the forgetting of duty. From this loss comes the ruin of reason, and the ruin of reason leads man to destruction.

It is greedy desire and wrath, born of passion, the great evil, the sum of destruction: this is the enemy of the soul.

All is clouded by desire: as fire by smoke, as a mirror by dust, as an unborn babe by its covering.

Wisdom is clouded by desire, the everpresent enemy of the wise, desire in its innumerable forms, which like a fire cannot find satisfaction.

--

Excerpts from the Gospel of Ramkrishna:

Two men went into a garden. The worldly-wise man no sooner entered the gate than he began to count the number of the mango-trees, how many mangoes each tree bore, and what might be the approximate price of the whole orchard. the other went to the owner, made his acquaintance, and quietly going under a mangoe tree began to pluck the fruit and eat it with the owners consent. Now who is the wiser of the two? Eat mangoes, it will satisfy your hunger. What is the good of counting the leaves and making vain calculations? The vain man of intellect is uselessly busy in finding out the "why and wherefore" of creation while the humble man of wisdom makes acquaintance with the creator and enjoys the supreme bliss of this world.

"I must attain perfection in this life, yea, in three days I must find God, nay, with a single utterance of his name I will draw him to me". With such a violent love the Lord is attracted soon. The lukewarm lovers take ages to go to Him, if at all.

The darkness of centuries is dispersed at once as soon as light is brought into the room. The accumulated ignorances and misdoings of innumerable births vanish before the single glance of the Almighty's gracious look. God is in all men, but all men are not in God; that is the reason why they suffer.

It is pleasant to scratch pimples and skin irritations, but the consequences are bad. So the pleasures of the world are very pleasant in the beginning, but their after consequences are very terrible to contemplate.

There is little chance a bushman will get lost if he knows which direction is North. So, if the mind of man is turned always towards God without oscillation, direction will never be lost and one can steer clear of every danger.

If you can detect and find out the universal illusion or maya, it will fly away from you, just as a thief runs away when found out.

If you wish to thread the needle, make the thread pointed, and remove all extraneous fibres. Then the thread will pass easily into the eye of the needle. So if thou wishest to concentrate thy heart on God, be meek, humble, poor of spirit, and remove all filaments of desire.

The man who, living in the midst of the temptations of the world, attains perfection, is the true hero.

When the tail of the tadpole drops off, it can live both in water and on land. When the tail of ignorance drops off, man becomes free. He can then live both in God and in the world equally well.

--

Excerpts from Avadhuta Sutra:

Know all this universe to be formless. Know all this universe to be without change. Know all this universe to be of purified body. Know all this universe to be of the nature of the Absolute.

The mind indeed is of the form of space. The mind indeed is omnifaced. The mind is the past. The mind is all. But in reality there is no mind.

You do not belong to that which is composed of the five objects of sense, such as sound; nor does that belong to you. You indeed are the supreme Reality. Why then do you suffer?

All the scriptures say that the Truth is without attributes, pure, immutable, bodiless, and existing equally everywhere. Know me to be That. There is not the least doubt about it.

Know that which has form to be false, that which is formless to be eternal. Through the instruction of this truth there is no longer rebirth into this world.

There is no substance whatever which is by nature unlimited. There is no substance whatever which is of the nature of Reality. The very Self is the supreme Truth. There is neither injury nor noninjury in It.

You are the homogeneous Reality; you are pure, bodiless, birthless, and imperishable. Why then do you have any delusion about the Self? Again, why am I myself deluded?

The whole universe shines undivided and unbroken. Oh, the maya, the great delusion - the imagination of duality and nonduality!

Always "not this, not this" to both the formless and the formed. Only the Absolute exists, transcending difference and nondifference.

You have no mother, no father, no wife, no son, no relative, no friend. You have no likes or dislikes. Why is this anguish in your mind?

He who is free from attachment and hatred, devoted to the good of all beings, fixed in knowledge and steady shall attain to the supreme state.

As the space within a pot dissolves in the universal space when the pot is broken, so a yogi, in the absence of the body, dissolves into the supreme Self, which is his true being.

I am neither of the nature of the void nor of the nature of the nonvoid. I am neither of pure nature nor of impure nature. I am neither form nor formlessness. I am the supreme Reality of the form of Its own nature.

Renounce the world in every way. Renounce renunciation in every way. Renounce the poison of renunciation and nonrenunciation. The Self is pure, immortal, natural, and immutable.

There is no difference between cause and effect. If there is only one indivisible, all-comprehensive Absolute, how can one speak of self and not-self?

If the Supreme is free of delusion and sorrow, doubt and grief, if there is only one indivisible, all-comprehensive Absolute, how can there be "I" and "mine"?

The sage is vigilant and resolute, has a profound mind, and has conquered the six bondages; he is not proud, but gives honour to others; he is strong, friendly to all, compassionate, and wise.

The sage is merciful, nonviolent, and enduring of all. He is pure-hearted and is the essence of truth; he is the same to all and beneficent to all.

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM
> GENIUS FORUM
> Death

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
 DagneyT Registered User Posts: 1 (10/31/03 2:14 pm) Reply ezSupporter	 Death <hr/> Does the reality of life ever make you wish that you could release yourself from this life and simply die? Do you now, or have you ever, feared death?
Paul Registered User Posts: 198 (10/31/03 3:11 pm) Reply	 Re: Death <hr/> For Enlightened people, death is just one of those things. I'm scared to death of death! It's killing me!
WolfsonJakk Registered User Posts: 1240 (10/31/03 3:39 pm) Reply	 Re: Death <hr/> Paraphrasing: The student asks the Master, "Master, what is the difference between Life and Death?" Master replies, "There is no difference." The student asks, "Why would a Buddha continue to live?" "Because there is no difference" says the old one." ---Somebody Tharan

*"A buddha is someone who finds freedom in good fortune and bad."
--Bodhidharma*

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 381

(10/31/03 4:48 pm)

Reply

Re: Death

---

No, the more I realise about life the easier it would be to commit suicide, but the less would I want to.

This reasoning only occurs because there is no longer any worry, at it is pointless worrying that makes youth suicide.

When one really knows that all things are cause and effect there is no longer any worry, as an explanation for misery is always available. The beauty of knowledge is that the things that once would have upset you become so very fucking bland and unimportant.

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 382

(10/31/03 5:05 pm)

Reply

Re: Death

---

but yes I have feared death, still do.

Of course death is also nothing, in a logical argument so what if you cease to exist. Regardless of what happens in life at some point you will cease and that is the end of you.

From your immediate perspective, that might mean you can kill yourself now - but it will mean nothing regardless of whether you might have been famous, enlightened or a serial killer.

There is no difference. It is a better option to realise this and make the most happiness you can from your limited time. But if you want to kill yourself go ahead, the only thing is that you cannot take anyone with you.

DEL

Registered User

Posts: 791

(10/31/03 5:20 pm)

Reply

Re: Death

---

It would be great to talk to somebody who has fought in a real war situation. Who has seen people die and also killed people himself/herself. Or somebody who has fought for their faith putting their life at risk. These people have something significant to say.

What do we know apart from what we saw in the last Hollywood movie?

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 384

(10/31/03 6:33 pm)

Reply

Re: Death

---

I've finally realised what enlightenment is. There is only one answer and that answer is that enlightenment means overcoming the physical - to be above the physical reality of our existence.

No person has ever been enlightened. No-one alive today will ever be enlightened, however we are on the right path.

The QRS are possibly on the wrong track, they believe that enlightenment can come from being a human robot that spits out logical results, pooh... that is only part of the game.

Their concept is pure fantasy as until one can overcome the physical we are subservient to it. When one is subservient to something else the existing A does not always equal the expectant A. Interference external to  $A=A$  means that the concept is not always applicable.

Their ultimate reality also does fuck all in terms of death. Using logic (science) to defeat death is far more realistic than their finite ultimate reality crap. Defeating death has always been life's goal and it will always be so. Defeating death is why the concept of religion exists.

If the ultimate reality of our existence is not to become gods, then by default no-one will ever understand ultimate reality. If you cannot defeat death you cannot possibly realise the actuality of ultimate existence.

It may well be that the QRS have failed to tell the full truth, although they may realise it - as the less emotional and more rational humans are then the quicker and the more likely we will achieve godliness.

I define a god as being one who is not subservient to the forces of nature, as one who can keep their personal consciousness happening for as long as they so choose.

The trouble with this argument is that a more powerful god can always terminate that longevity. Still I don't see a need to be concerned about that just now.

Edited by: jimhaz at: 10/31/03 6:41 pm

repent1
Registered User
Posts: 6
(10/31/03 9:08 pm)
Reply

 life

---

Jimhaz wrote:

Quote:

---

When one really knows that all things are cause and effect there is no longer any worry, as an explanation for misery is always available. The beauty of knowledge is that the things that once would have upset you become so very fucking bland and unimportant.

---

Including life... see the Suffering thread.

When you don't care enough to fear death, there is no worry. When you act without hesitation at your worst times, it makes you wonder why you got upset in the first place.

Quote:

---

but yes I have feared death, still do.

---

why? If there's no worry because everything is based on cause and effect, including death, then why?

repent1
Registered User
Posts: 7
(10/31/03 9:14 pm)
Reply

 death

---

or is it fear of causing your own death?

You can't hesitate, it may actually bring death.

voce io

Registered User

Posts: 369

(11/1/03 4:40 am)

Reply

Re: Death

---

Does the reality of life ever make you wish that you could release yourself from this life and simply die?

It has before. I've been enjoying my little life recently, though. Even the shit.

Do you now, or have you ever, feared death?

I have before. I don't know now, I try to think of death and I can't. I know that I'm afraid of the pain of getting shot, for example. What comes after that though, is unknown, and I really can't say whether it's something to be feared or not. It just seems like the end of subjective existence.

Paraphrasing:

The student asks the Master, "Master, what is the difference between Life and Death?"

Master replies, "There is no difference."

The student asks, "Why would a Buddha continue to live?"

"Because there is no difference" says the old one."

---Somebody

I disagree with that statement. That master is stupid. The difference between life and death is, in life you are living, and in death you are dead. That's a big difference. A Buddha would continue to live because it's fun.

It would be great to talk to somebody who has fought in a real war situation. Who has seen people die and also killed people himself/herself. Or somebody who has fought for their faith putting their life at risk. These people have something significant to say.

What do we know apart from what we saw in the last Hollywood movie?

Very true.

I've finally realised what enlightenment is....

That entire post is crap.

DagneyT

Registered User

Posts: 3

(11/1/03 10:17 am)

Reply

ezSupporter

Re: Death

---

Perhaps focusing on reality is, in a way, focusing on death. We live, we die, that's it. That's reality (or one tiny part of it).

But wouldn't the wise person choose to avoid the reality of death so that they might enjoy the limited time they have on the earth.

Is ignorance bliss?

I find it difficult to forget that the grim reaper is but only so many years away, and then that's it. After we are dead, and all of the people who knew us are dead, it will be as though we never existed. I suppose it would be wise to enjoy the years that we have here and just be happy--but the thought of death looms over our heads.

Be happy because we only have one life to live--but how can you be happy when life has little or no meaning beyond this world and then we die?

Is the pursuit of knowledge enough to get us through?

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 989

(11/2/03 1:07 pm)

Reply

Re: Death

---

Do you now, or have you ever, feared death?

Hell, yes, I fear it. I fear it starkly, I rebel against it, too. It's an outrage, a puzzle. It's thoroughly unacceptable. I'm fairly certain there is going to be an exception in my case...

That entire post is crap.

Ha, ha! I think it's one of his best. I agree we are trying to become gods. We may die in the attempt. I have every intention of trying to defeat death.

but how can you be happy when life has little or no meaning beyond this world and then we die?

I always assume that those who deny the above, or who deny their fear of death, are shallow and callow liars.

Is the pursuit of knowledge enough to get us through?

No.

1TheMaster Registered User Posts: 180 (11/2/03 1:51 pm) Reply	 Re: Death <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Hell, yes, I fear it. I fear it starkly, I rebel against it, too. It's an outrage, a puzzle. It's thoroughly unacceptable. I'm fairly certain there is going to be an exception in my case... <hr/> In your case, there won't be an exception. You are young and foolish, full of vitality but ultimately stupid. Death won't become you just yet, you are just a stupid little girl on an intellectual trip, with much to learn. In time you may grow and learn your place.
Paul Registered User Posts: 218 (11/2/03 2:00 pm) Reply	 To 1TheMaster <hr/> Hey, 1TheMaster, go fuck your mother. Also I'd like to ask you where you got that nice nick! 2TheMaster won't do it.
 DagneyT Registered User Posts: 7 (11/2/03 2:05 pm) Reply ezSupporter	 Re: To 1TheMaster <hr/> Paul, you rock.
Paul Registered User Posts: 219 (11/2/03 2:12 pm) Reply	 Re: To 1TheMaster <hr/> No... 'DagneyT' won't do. Tank ye anyways, Mr. 1TheMaster.

voce io Registered User Posts: 378 (11/2/03 7:26 pm) Reply	 Re: To 1TheMaster <hr/> Paul, you used to suck, but you are okay now. Ultimately Relatively okay.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1653 (11/2/03 10:20 pm) Reply	 --- <hr/> Voce io, I'm surprised you said life is suffering in the 'suffering' thread, you don't really think so do you?!
G Shantz Registered User Posts: 418 (11/2/03 11:39 pm) Reply	 -- <hr/> If all emotions are suffering, and life, as defined by most people, is emotions, then the saying 'life is suffering' makes good sense.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1655 (11/3/03 12:56 am) Reply	 --- <hr/> If? Take a look.
G Shantz Registered User Posts: 419 (11/3/03 1:24 am) Reply	 Life is suffering <hr/> I haven't decided what life is yet. It's a word people use a lot. Death is certainly synonymous with Truth, for most. Truth is the death of life (emotions).

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Death

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
voce io Registered User Posts: 380 (11/3/03 6:17 am) Reply	 Re: --- <hr/> Voce io, I'm surprised you said life is suffering in the 'suffering' thread, you don't really think so do you?! All of life is wanting, and all of wanting is a dissatisfaction with what-is. It's assuming there is an emptiness that needs to be filled. That is suffering... it isn't like being shot and crying out in pain. Suffering is wanting. Life is wanting. Yet, all of this is just a bunch of talk. Existence, which is also life, is Loving. It's pointless to even say any of this, so I'm gonna stop.
Dave Toast Registered User Posts: 696 (11/3/03 8:46 am) Reply 	 Re: --- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Wolf: Paraphrasing: The student asks the Master, "Master, what is the difference between Life and Death?" Master replies, "There is no difference." The student asks, "Why would a Buddha continue to live?" "Because there is no difference" says the old one." ---Somebody

Tharan

"A buddha is someone who finds freedom in good fortune and bad."

--Bodhidharma

---

Quote:

---

Voce: I disagree with that statement. That master is stupid. The difference between life and death is, in life you are living, and in death you are dead. That's a big difference. A Buddha would continue to live because it's fun.

---

I'm not so sure Voce. I think if you try to empathise with the master's point of view/state of consciousness, you can see exactly the logic behind why he thinks that there is no difference. More importantly though, you might understand why such a view is not only natural to him, but central to the expansion of his philosophy, thereby forming the state of mind in which such a view will prevail.

I guess this is why Wolf chose the second quote, for context.

Personally, I think that there is a subtle difference between life and death, from this point of view. It equates to the difference between harbouring regrets about something, and merely realising that you might have done something differently had you the chance to repeat it. In other words, the difference between the realisation/conviction that there is no difference, and the attachment to said realisation/conviction. This holds more justification for his reasons to going on living, or not dying, to my mind.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 697

(11/3/03 9:06 am)

Reply

Re: Death

---

Quote:

---

Del: It would be great to talk to somebody who has fought in a real war situation. Who has seen people die and also killed people himself/herself. Or somebody who has fought for their faith putting their life at risk.

These people have something significant to say.

What do we know apart from what we saw in the last Hollywood movie?

---

Some would be great to talk to, others not. It would depend on what you find interesting and significant really. I've seen violent death in action but it has no more significance than you attach to it. It's just as mundane as anything else from this point of view.

So one person might find it interesting were somebody to expand this point of view for them, others might find it interesting if the veteran was wracked with guilt and major psychological trauma from his experiences, yet others might find it interesting to peer into the mind of a cold desensitised killer. Then there are others who would find non of the above interesting and some who would find it all good.

But with regard to having to have been there/done it to know anything about it, I don't agree. Visualisation is a great skill which can be developed. Athletes use it all the time to gain psychological even real physical results via neuronal conditioning. Einstien rode on a wave of light. Hawking observed the birth of the universe. I don't think you need to have the T-shirt in order to appreciate something. Of course some of the finer points might escape you but then you will also see things you may not have done, were you there.

Lao Tzu was even more emphatic on this.

Edited by: Dave Toast at: 11/3/03 10:10 am

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 698
(11/3/03 9:11 am)
Reply

Re: Death

Quote:

DagneyT: Is ignorance bliss?

If ignorance is bliss, why aren't we inundated with happy people?

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 699
(11/3/03 9:15 am)
Reply

Re: Death

Quote:

Greg: If all emotions are suffering, and life, as defined by most people, is emotions, then the saying 'life is suffering' makes good sense.

If you see all emotions as suffering, and you see life as emotions, then the saying 'life is suffering' makes good sense to you.

komodo island
Registered User
Posts: 11
(5/22/04 12:36 pm)
Reply

Re: Death

Kali, Goddess of Fear

I am the dance of death that is behind all life

the ultimate horror

the ultimate ecstasy

I am existence

I am the dance of destruction that will end this world

the timeless void

the formless devouring mouth

I am rebirth

Let me dance you to death

Let me dance you to life

Will you walk through your fears to dance with me?

*Will you let me cut off your head and drink your blood?
then will you cut off mine?
Will you face all the horror all the pain
all the sorrow and say "yes"?
I am all that you dread
all that terrifies
I am your fear will you meet me?*

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1705
(5/23/04 11:00 am)
Reply

Re: Death

---

That poem strikes me as being complete crap. We only fear death out of ignorance. In truth there is no actual death any more than there is actual life. Such a duality is merely an artifact of consciousness and has no reality other than in that context.

Need we be taken in by such dualistic illusions? No.

Dan Rowden

MKFaizi
Registered User
Posts: 1177
(5/23/04 3:31 pm)
Reply

Re: Death

---

Romantic piece of crap.

Death is just a bad day. I reckon it kind of sucks when it happens but things could be worse.

I admit that I do have more of a problem with death than Dan. I am not romantic about it but I have not yet achieved Dan's indifference.

A seventeen year old friend died a week or so ago. I admit that I have had a hard time with that. Very hard to accept.

Aaron was a good kid. He drank and smoked and smoked dope and wrote poetry and had sex with lots of girls and played football and was a singer and worked two jobs while going to high school. He had been on his own -- without parents -- for about two years.

He stayed at my house many times. Two or three nights in a row. He was a friend of my daughter's since they were in third grade. The two of them had burping contests in elementary school.

The day that he died, Rock and I were driving on Main Street and Aaron crossed the street in front of our car. He was on the crest of a hill. Rock blew him a long kiss and he put his hand to his lips and kissed it and waved his hand slowly in a long goodbye.

He was indeed saying goodbye to us. None of us knew it at the time.

Before morning, he fell off a nineteenth century granite wall hidden by thick brush near the river. He broke his wrists and suffered a concussion but he drowned in less than a foot of water. His body was not found until nearly midnight the next day.

I went to the river and climbed down the embankment to the sanctum. The place of his death was startling. Late nineteenth century granite structure with a large arch through which a small stream of water flowed. Very clear water. Very clear light through the arch in the stone wall. Beautiful noise from the brook.

The kids made a sanctum there. A beer can and cigarettes on the black stone above the arch and flowers and left poetry below.

He was a child; a baby. He had good qualities. He was a budding thinker.

When I saw the place where he died, I understood somewhat. It was such a sheer drop that I reckon he was destined for it. He could have walked five feet either east or west and he would have been on level ground. He went dead center. No one knew that wall was there. A fourteen foot sheer drop off a granite wall into a gulley.

The brush has been cleared now and a sign has been posted that says, "DANGER -- DROP OFF."

More than six hundred people at his memorial service -- he was cremated.

He was an adorable kid and I admit that I have some problem with his death.

He was here once and Rock kicked him very hard into the wall. They used to arm wrestle and it was a close match. She played football with him and about twenty other boys on Lowe Street. She learned a lot. Aaron was a good player -- not because of size but imagination -- his Flying Squirrel hit.

Aaron was a ladies' man -- never without a girl. But never anything like that between him and Rock.

They loved each other like brother and sister. They were versions of each other.

I would miss any kid who died but I will miss Aaron especially. I don't mind the idea of dying. There are far worse things. But I mind it for Aaron. He had a lot to give. He was a most precious human being -- and that was the key - he was wonderfully human.

I would gladly have walked off that wall for him but I couldn't.

I have my own wall.

When I climbed down to that gulley shrouded by the black granite wall, I could not help but think, "He was healed of his affliction."

Faizi

komodo island
Registered User
Posts: 18
(5/24/04 7:22 pm)
Reply

 Re: Death

---

Crap is whenever u try to make sense of that which doesn't make sense (e.g. death).

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 906
(5/25/04 3:36 am)
Reply

 Re: Death

---

Crap is that poem.

N0X23

Registered User

Posts: 115

(5/25/04 11:53 am)

Reply

 Re: Death

---

I suspect that it would be rather difficult for something that has never been born, to die.

I'm pretty sure that birth is a prerequisite for death...isn't it?.

I am rather fond comparing the cycle of life and death to that of a flame. Where does the flame exist before it is created? Where does the flame go when it is extinguished? Nowhere and everywhere.

Just as the water and the inertia isn't annihilated when the supporting conditions of the wave has ended. Only the individual traits of that particular wave seem to dissipate.

This of course is pure speculation, mind you.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1503

(5/27/04 9:00 am)

Reply

 Re: Death

---

Quote:

---

In truth there is no actual death any more than there is actual life. Such a duality is merely an artifact of consciousness and has no reality other than in that context.

---

This strikes me as absurd.

Quote:

---

Death is just a bad day. I reckon it kind of sucks when it happens but things could be worse.

---

The quotable Marsha. If you were a famous person, that would make the rounds.

It certainly seems a shame when a person like that dies. I try to keep in mind that a standard long life ending in old age is not for everyone, nor should it be.

When I see people die I am never sorry to the dead. I am often very sorry for the living. Most of the old people I see die at work are so overdue for their death, which we have tortuously prevented, that I feel a sense of triumph at their final escape.

But I do avoid pediatrics. The only death that ever bothered me was when I worked in that rural hospital in West Virginia. In an 18-bed hospital, there is no such thing as a pediatric ward. One minute the family was having fun on a set of 4-wheelers, and next the little girl pushed the gas button and the mother lost control. I was washing the blood off the mother's face when the doctor told her the little girl did not make it. I cried for two weeks but I never felt sorry for the little girl. I felt extremely sorry for the parents. We observed no rules. The parents could not make themselves leave. They sat outside against the wall where people smoke, and half the staff, including the janitor talked with, cried with, and attempted to comfort them for hours.

BJMcGilly
Registered User
Posts: 18
(5/27/04 10:10 pm)
Reply

 Re: Death

---

Quote: Do you now, or have you ever, feared death?

-----

There´s a story about an old, withered man having been taken captive in a raid and forced into hard labor. As the lord approached wishing to inspect the progress of his laborers, the old man hobbled near and begged through his tears that his life might be taken and so to be spared of further suffering.

The lord replied, "You´re alive, then, as you are?"

-----

In short, to desire to release yourself from life is to be already dead.

Kierkegaard summed it up best, "It strikes me as crass materialism to claim one cannot experience death before bodily death."

To desire to release yourself from life is to be already dead.

North Sea Storms
Registered User
Posts: 2
(6/14/04 12:49 pm)
Reply

 Re: Life is suffering

---

It depends on what day you ask me.. yes, someday, I want to live forever...others, I am satisfied to know there is an end.

I think when you finally overcome your fear of death, you have reached kinda of a freedom. The knowledge that.."its alright" if you die tomorrow or 50 years from now.

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1214

(6/14/04 4:04 pm)

Reply

☐ Re: Life is suffering

---

I mourn for the dead. I mourn for the absence of a few and the sad circumstances of death.

But I do not mourn for my own so called death, whenever it may come.

There are many far worse things than death.

The idea of death is charicatured and cartooned.

I always thought that giving birth would be this great painful experience. I did not experience it that way.

I think the same about the experience of death. It is as much feared as birth or more so. I suspect that it is a part of life and, therefore, no different from life.

It is natural for the living to mourn but we mourn for our loss not for the person.

Kind of hard to explain. Inshallah, I will work on it more tomorrow.

Faizi

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2665

(6/16/04 8:54 am)

Reply

☐ ---toonification.

---

Death no different from life? Poo! I'll never wait for death! If death ever comes to me, I'll crack it on the skull and kick it in the behind.

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1223

(6/16/04 1:25 pm)

Reply

☐ Re: ---toonification.

---

Quote:

---

The quotable Marsha. If you were a famous person, that would make the rounds.

---

Thanks, I reckon. It could use some polishing.

I did used to work in pediatrics and it could be tough to watch kids die. Most of these children were very sick kids but it was still hard to see them.

Lots of tales but I will spare you the telling of them. I am sure you know how they go.

The tough part to watch is any physical suffering -- both in adults and in kids. Like you, there have been several times when I knew that the so called death was a triumph.

Well, I am bone dead tired. Once in a while, the office turns into a mini hospital ward. You go along doing the usual crap and, all of a sudden, you have to start an IV. Good to keep in practice.

Faizi

WolfsonJakk
Posts: 1642
(6/16/04 3:09 pm)
Reply

 Re: ---toonification

---

A mortuary guy was taking a body out of the hospital zipped up in a excellent velvet sleeping bag the other day when we were both on the back elevators. I swear it had a boner. Of course, I didn't point it out; I'm just couth like dat. Also, he might not have thought it was as funny as I did. One should be so lucky.

Tharan

Edited by: WolfsonJakk at: 6/16/04 4:16 pm

enlightenmentor
Registered User
Posts: 3
(6/17/04 12:15 pm)
Reply

 Re: ---crappy poem

---

We all die alone,
going with ease
or fighting all the way,
into the unknowable,
yet often surmised mystery
of death.

No one may be known completely,
even our closest confidants
never truly sharing the private thoughts
the separate moments
that makes us singularities.

We all die alone
anxious for a witness,
with proof of our existence
in the final fact...
that we are not alone
in our yearning.

(my crappy death poem)
~enlightenmentor

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2673

(6/17/04 10:58 pm)

Reply

 ---

---

Quote:

---

We all die alone,
going with ease
or fighting all the way,
into the unknowable,
yet often surmised mystery
of death.

---

Is there then really any mystery of death?

Quote:

---

No one may be known completely,
even our closest confidants
never truly sharing
the private thoughts
the separate moments
that makes us singularities.

---

But to know completely, to truly share, would mean becoming the known or shared! We love ourselves first, and do well to remember it! --Our knowing and loving doesn't want a resolution, it wants more of what it is!

Quote:

---

We all die alone
anxious for a witness,
with proof of our existence
in the final fact...
that we are not alone
in our yearning.

---

We all die alone, but is it too hard to realize we are all alone in our yearning also?!

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> DEBATE: Quran is proved to be the work of a greater power

New Topic

Add Reply

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
NadirAhmed Registered User Posts: 1 (10/16/03 11:19 am) Reply	DEBATE: Quran is proved to be the work of a greater power <hr/> Topic: "Quran and Modern Science" Nadir Ahmed ( www.ExamineTheTruth.com ) vs. Denis Giron ( www.freethoughtmecca.org )  Download the debate here: www.ExamineTheTruth.com  On Sept 9,2003, Denis Giron and Nadir Ahmed engaged in a public debate over paltalk on a topic which has been debated for over 5 years here on google. It was the final "showdown" between the 2 in which they started a few google posts back in January:  groups.google.com/groups?...26rnum%3D1  groups.google.com/groups?...com&amp;rnum=1  Alhumdulillah, "THE DEBATE IS OVER!" the Quran has been proved to

	be the work of a greater power, and a human being could not have been the source. Download the debate here: www.ExamineTheTruth.com
Paul Registered User Posts: 151 (10/16/03 4:03 pm) Reply	R: DEBATE: Quran is proved to be the work of a greater power <hr/> If that were true, only that 'greater power' could've proved it, not one or more human beings. Their different interpretations can never lead to any proof. Just like the Bible, the Quran is mostly humbug. By the way, like God, Allah doesn't exist. Case closed, on my part.
cassiopeiae Registered User Posts: 120 (10/16/03 11:50 pm) Reply	Re: R: DEBATE: Quran is proved to be the work of a greater p <hr/> Seems to be spam. I received the same thing in my dead forum...

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31r
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

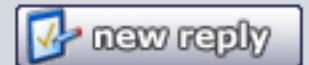

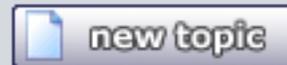

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Defining Ultimate Reality

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
           MGregory            Posts: 566            (6/4/04 8:29 pm)            Reply   	  Defining Ultimate Reality          <hr/>            I've been thinking about writing some essays about how it would be logically impossible for certain things to be Ultimate Reality, for example, "Why the physical world cannot be Ultimate Reality", or "Why the Christian god cannot be Ultimate Reality", and things like that. But first I think I would have to lay down the properties that an Ultimate Reality must necessarily possess in order to be thorough about these things. But then if anything under examination failed to have only one of these properties, it would be impossible for that thing to be Ultimate Reality, so I guess it wouldn't be much an essay for any particular thing. Nevertheless, I will attempt this task and see what happens.          <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. Ultimate Reality would have to be true in the sense that no contradiction could arise within it.</li> <li>2. Ultimate Reality would have to be infinite in the sense that no thing could exist beyond it. In other words, it must exist in such a way that no thing could possibly create it.</li> <li>3. Ultimate Reality would have to be capable of creating all things in the universe or somehow responsible for their arisal. This is basically the inverse of #2.</li> </ol>            Well, that's all I can think of right now. I'm tempted to put "UR would have to be fully knowable", but I can't think of any reason why it would have to be fully knowable. Maybe only a finite number of things could be known          about it. I think it could still be ultimate in a situation like that.

What are your thoughts (anyone)?

Bud Hominem
Registered User
Posts: 17
(6/5/04 12:49 am)
Reply

Re: Defining Ultimate Reality

---

You are going about things backwards. You are constructing an idea and then seeking to find it. Good luck. You would do better to examine your actual experiences and seek to understand them better.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 1112
(6/5/04 1:09 am)
Reply

Re: Defining Ultimate Reality

---

Ultimate Reality doesn't have to be anything, 'it' doesn't even have to be.

WolfsonJakk
Posts: 1614
(6/5/04 2:23 am)
Reply

Defining Ultimate Reality

---

Quote:

---

1. Ultimate Reality would have to be true in the sense that no contradiction could arise within it.

---

If there is "contradiction," it would be included in Ultimate Reality.

In fact, there is only reality. "Ultimate" is only necessary as a descriptor initially to signify that one is not speaking about some person's perceptions.

Quote:

---

2. Ultimate Reality would have to be infinite in the sense that no thing could exist beyond it. In other words, it must exist in such a way that no thing could possibly create it.

---

Infinity is a cute concept if you are writing a science fiction novel. Nothing exists outside of reality. In fact, the reality is that nothing inherently exists. There is only reality.

Quote:

---

3. Ultimate Reality would have to be capable of creating all things in the universe or somehow responsible for their arisal. This is basically the inverse of #2

---

Hmm, 2 and 3 are the inverse of each other yet both are true? Ok, I accept that. :)

Ultimate reality = reality = universe = totality = all that there is. Via this causal chain, it describes all that there ever has been and ever will be.

Tharan

MGregory
Posts: 567
(6/5/04 10:49 am)
Reply

 Re: Defining Ultimate Reality

---

Bud wrote:

Quote:

---

You would do better to examine your actual experiences and seek to understand them better.

---

So, do you think that experience is ultimate reality? This is what I'm getting at: there's a certain point in every individual's questioning where their doubt simply stops and they cannot question it further. The task of philosophy is and has always been to find some validity for such an endpoint, to prove that no further questioning is possible for anyone. I'm not sure what the term for this point would be, but it functions as an ultimate reality or ultimate truth for that individual, and they believe it is true for everyone else, even if they deny that such a thing exists, which people who can't face the responsibility for such a thing do, as evidenced by the appeal to an authority outside themselves, like popular opinion and gods and things. So, what I'm trying to figure out is, if there were a valid endpoint for all questioning then how would you know if you had found it? And if such a thing cannot exist, then why not and if not, how could questing for such a thing be possible to any degree at all?

Dave wrote:

Quote:

---

Ultimate Reality doesn't have to be anything, 'it' doesn't even have to be.

---

What doesn't have to be anything? What is it that you're denying? Can you define it?

Tharan wrote:

Quote:

---

If there is "contradiction," it would be included in Ultimate Reality.

---

Ah, true. I think there is a distinction to be made between the definition and the actuality. I think if I changed it to "there can only be one Ultimate Reality", then that's what I meant. In other words, it has to be a single concept that can't change over time. I'm not sure how I could defend something like that, but I'll just leave it as is. At this point, I'll just say that if a false conception of ultimate reality is held, then it can't be ultimate nor can it be reality. I think it's natural to cling to false conceptions of it, so any conceptions of it at all need to be rooted up and deeply considered. That's my usual philosophical strategy, anyway.

Quote:

---

In fact, there is only reality. "Ultimate" is only necessary as a descriptor initially to signify that one is not speaking about some person's perceptions.

---

I agree, and that's what I wanted to say, in the sense that I described above in my response to Bud.

Quote:

---

Infinity is a cute concept if you are writing a science fiction novel. Nothing exists outside of reality.

---

Well, I'm not sure what your objection is here.

Quote:

---

Hmm, 2 and 3 are the inverse of each other yet both are true? Ok, I accept that. :)

---

Sorry, did I use the wrong word there? I meant to describe the relationship as, say, the relationship between "water in a glass" and "a glass holding water". Converse, maybe? I confuse those two all the time.

Quote:

---

In fact, the reality is that nothing inherently exists. There is only reality.

---

Quote:

---

Ultimate reality = reality = universe = totality = all that there is. Via this causal chain, it describes all that there ever has been and ever will be.

---

How did you decide that ultimate reality is the same as these other things? Is it an article of faith or what? What is your criteria for deciding whether or not something is the same as ultimate reality?

WolfsonJakk

Posts: 1616

(6/5/04 11:23 am)

Reply

☐ Re: Defining Ultimate Reality

---

There are these things that fly around my window and I call them birds.
There are these things that grow in my backyard and I call them trees. There is something in which all of these things are contained and I call it reality.

I understand that Spanish speakers call birds "pajaros." They also call trees "arbols." Yes, strange, I know...they call reality "realidad." Regardless, we speak of the same things.

Tharan

WolfsonJakk

Posts: 1617

(6/5/04 11:52 am)

Reply

☐ Re: Defining Ultimate Reality

---

Quote:

---

At this point, I'll just say that if a false conception of ultimate reality is held, then it can't be ultimate nor can it be reality. I think it's natural to cling to false conceptions of it, so any conceptions of it at all need to be rooted up and deeply considered. That's my usual philosophical strategy, anyway.

---

Any conception of reality is ultimately false. It is natural to be deluded. It is also natural to be enlightened. The strategy has a few flaws, fyi.

Tharan

MGregory

Posts: 568

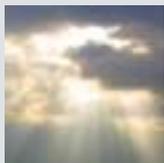

(6/5/04 12:30 pm)

Reply

☐ Re: Defining Ultimate Reality

---

What do you mean?

WolfsonJakk  Posts: 1618  (6/5/04 3:27 pm)  Reply	 Re: Defining Ultimate Reality <hr/> Only this.
drowden  Forum Host  Posts: 1716  (6/5/04 4:13 pm)  Reply 	 Re: Defining Ultimate Reality <hr/> Ultimate Reality doesn't have properties, Matt. Or, to put it another way, it doesn't mean anything to suggest that it does. Dan Rowden
Jones Kelly  Posts: 152  (6/5/04 4:20 pm)  Reply	 Re: Defining Ultimate Reality <hr/> Tharan wrote: Quote: <hr/> In fact, there is only reality. "Ultimate" is only necessary as a descriptor initially to signify that one is not speaking about some person's perceptions. <hr/> Yet Ultimate Reality can only be known through "some person's perceptions". Quote: <hr/> Nothing exists outside of reality. In fact, the reality is that nothing inherently exists. There is only reality. <hr/> Or, more accurately, nothing exists "outside" reality for the reason that existence can only apply to what is "inside" it. Whatever is considered to exist outside reality is actually still inside reality. Matt wrote: Quote:

---

So, what I'm trying to figure out is, if there were a valid endpoint for all questioning then how would you know if you had found it? And if such a thing cannot exist, then why not and if not, how could questing for such a thing be possible to any degree at all?

---

The desire for ultimate truth (perfection/egolessness) stops when there is no more attachment. The only other alternative is stopping because of egotistical desires. Although this valid endpoint is Buddhahood, and is therefore logically possible (i.e. completely attainable), who can say whether it can be experienced?

Quote:

---

I think if I changed it to "there can only be one Ultimate Reality", then that's what I meant. In other words, it has to be a single concept that can't change over time. I'm not sure how I could defend something like that, but I'll just leave it as is.

---

Logically there can be only one Ultimate Reality. But many concepts could describe it - e.g. logical truths that apply to everything. In this way, these absolute truths create a conceptual consistency of emptiness - so they aren't actually false, but rather temporary signposts - that eventually "empties" out conceptuality.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 1113
(6/6/04 10:06 am)
Reply

 Re: Defining Ultimate Reality

---

Quote:

---

DT: Ultimate Reality doesn't have to be anything, 'it' doesn't even have to be.

Matt: What doesn't have to be anything?

---

Tough one Matt. How to conceptualise the non-conceptual?

Certainly not as the non-conceptual.

Best passed over in silence I think.

Quote:

---

Matt: What is it that you're denying?

---

Your assertions that reality, naked, shorn of any bias whatsoever (for that is what you attempt to speak of), must conform to any concept whatsoever. Yes, even the concept that 'it' may not conform to any concept.

Quote:

---

Matt: Can you define it?

---

I can make you a list of what it's not, but if I spent a lifetime making it, it still wouldn't be comprehensive enough for me. And if I still tried to do it anyway, just to be pedantic, my toil would no further elucidate the point being made. Certainly not for me, and probably not for anyone who didn't get that point in the first place.

Jones Kelly

Posts: 154

(6/6/04 10:41 am)

Reply

 Re: Defining Ultimate Reality

---

Matt wrote:

Quote:

---

So, what I'm trying to figure out is, if there were a valid endpoint for all questioning then how would you know if you had found it? And if such a thing cannot exist, then why not and if not, how could questing for such a thing be possible to any degree at all?

---

I re-considered my reply from yesterday, i think i didn't quite get the gist of what you meant.

The endpoint for all questioning is indeed valid, logically it's when all questioning is unable to provide the answer sought.

In "practice", this point comes when thinking/questioning is the avoidance of applying the understanding of the nature of Reality (that all things are empty of intrinsic existence). To continue intellectual inquiry is very interesting (of course it is), but it remains ensconced in the belief that ultimate reality can be grasped conceptually. It is not "giving in" to a paradox, it is a clear understanding that the nature of understanding, or thinking, or truth, or reasoning, is actually an illusion, a facet or whim of Nature.

Another aspect of this kind of avoidance of "applying truth" is the exploration of reconstructing alternative realities in imagination, i.e. building new illusions. Ego is simply a description of the knack for bringing things into existence, and egolessness is emptiness of this knack.

Ultimately, even thoughts of Ultimate Reality, or experiences of it, are nothing more than new illusions. The true experience of UR is in knowing and experiencing that all knowledge and experience is a nothing (a construction that builds on the emptiness and aimlessness of Nature's way).

My post from yesterday skipped over explaining this point, and i would definitely not say this end-point is Buddha-hood, which is perfection:

Quote:

---

The desire for ultimate truth (perfection/egolessness) stops when there is no more attachment. The only other alternative is stopping because of egotistical desires. Although this valid endpoint is Buddhahood, and is therefore logically possible (i. e. completely attainable), who can say whether it can be experienced?

---

WolfsonJakk

Posts: 1624

(6/7/04 3:36 pm)

Reply

 Re: Defining Ultimate Reality

---

Quote:

---

Tharan: In fact, there is only reality. "Ultimate" is only necessary as a descriptor initially to signify that one is not speaking about some person's perceptions.

JK: Yet Ultimate Reality can only be known through "some person's perceptions".

---

Interesting. Describe for me please how you, Jones Kelly, perceive "ultimate reality."

*edit*

Quote:

---

Ultimately, even thoughts of Ultimate Reality, or experiences of it, are nothing more than new illusions. The true experience of UR is in knowing and experiencing that all knowledge and experience is a nothing (a construction that builds on the emptiness and aimlessness of Nature's way).

---

Ah, here we go, I think. I am assuming you were just "in the mood" to refute me or did you actually change your mind?

Edited by: WolfsonJakk at: 6/7/04 3:40 pm

MGregory

Posts: 572

(6/10/04 7:41 pm)

Reply

 Re: Defining Ultimate Reality

---

Bah! I give up, I can't think of anything to say.

Hywel

Registered User

Posts: 66

(6/11/04 2:24 pm)

Reply

 Truth/truth?

---

Quote:

---

Ultimately, even thoughts of Ultimate Reality, or experiences of it, are nothing more than new illusions. The true experience of UR is in knowing and experiencing that all knowledge and experience is a nothing (a construction that builds on the emptiness and aimlessness of Nature's way).

---

My essential problem lies with this issue of "appearances of Eternal Truth". If we take any Truth, say "All Things are Finite", we can see that this is true, and that it is always true in all possible situations. But at the same time this is merely an appearance, an illusion (although it is as real as anything is). But if all is potentially utter illusion (it could all be generated by a demon), then don't we end up with nihilism? All is appearance, nothing can be known?

What of the fact that even if everything we know of is generated by some demon, or entity that we cannot envisage, that the same truths would equally apply to it (If there are things, they are finite.)? Is this not too an appearance?

Can these Truths/truths truly be any different from any other appearance?

In Wisdom of the Infinite, the issue is dealt with thus;

Quote:

---

It might be argued that if everything is an appearance of the moment and therefore uncertain, then logical truths must also be appearances and therefore uncertain. This is not quite true, however. The mere fact that a logical truth exists as an appearance has no bearing on the validity of its content. Its existence as a concept might be nothing more than an appearance of the moment, but the truth contained within it is timeless nonetheless.

For example, consider the logical truth that all things are finite, which was explored in an earlier chapter ("Entering the Logical Realm"). If a person reasons that everything in the Universe must necessarily be finite, then in the moment that he is reaching this conclusion it is absolutely and universally true. It makes no difference that the conclusion is merely a momentary appearance in his mind. It still remains a truth which necessarily applies to all possible worlds and therefore to all possible appearances. So even though the reasoner only experiences its truth momentarily, he is nevertheless able to see in that very moment that it cannot be falsified anywhere in the Universe. He has grasped a universal truth in a momentary flash of insight.

It should also be noted that the conclusion that "everything is an appearance", as articulated in this chapter, is built upon a whole series of truths which ultimately rest on the core truth that all things are finite and caused. As such, both the conclusion and the core truth live and die together. One cannot use a logical conclusion to falsify one of its own premises, at least not without falsifying the conclusion itself. Thus, to the degree that "everything is an appearance" is correct, to that very same degree "all things are finite and caused" is also correct, and vice versa.

---

I think what is essentially being said is that the fact that the concept "all things are finite" is an appearance, does not falsify this truth. Neither does it validate this truth. Its existence "as an appearance has no bearing on the validity of its content." The fact that the truth exists as an appearance (as all things do), has literally nothing at all to do with whether its true or not.

Thus far, ive basically been dealing with this issue by saying "Well, this truth may appear to be true for all time NOW, but I'll check it again the next time I want to use it, just in case it no longer applies."

But at this point, can I be justified in saying that though the existence of the concept "all things are finite" is just an appearance, it is a true appearance?

Jack Kopf

Registered User

Posts: 2

(6/12/04 1:41 am)

Reply

Re: Truth/truth?

---

i am new to buddism and a friend recommended i check this forum out. you know alot about it and i am anxous to learn. about me. i am a recovering alcoholic and part of my program is to accept a higher power. i dont want to just say it so i am being serious about it. my friend has been teaching me about buddism and so far i like it alot. you are very tecnical but i will try to catch up. i hope you wont mind my stupid questions every now and then.

MGregory

Posts: 573

(6/12/04 2:11 am)

Reply

Re: Truth/truth?

---

Quote:

---

Hywel: My essential problem lies with this issue of "appearances of Eternal Truth". If we take any Truth, say "All Things are Finite", we can see that this is true, and that it is always true in all possible situations. But at the same time this is merely an appearance, an illusion (although it is a real as anything is). But if all is potentially utter illusion (it could all be generated by a demon), then dont we end up with nihilism? All is appearance, nothing can be known?

---

It doesn't matter if everything is an appearance. As long as you don't take an appearance for something it is not it won't be a problem. Just the fact that you perceive an appearance means that you know that appearance. To say that you can't know it because it's an appearance means you're looking for something else. But what else can be known about it? If you find something else about it, it wouldn't be the same thing, but another, completely different appearance.

Quote:

---

But at this point, can I be justified in saying that though the existence of the concept "all things are finite" is just an appearance, it is a true appearance?

---

If an appearance is true, then I would think it would be a true appearance.

MGregory

Posts: 574

(6/12/04 3:19 am)

Reply

Re: Truth/truth?

---

Quote:

---

JK: i am new to buddism and a friend recommended i check this forum out. you know alot about it and i am anxious to learn. about me. i am a recovering alcoholic and part of my program is to accept a higher power. i dont want to just say it so i am being serious about it. my friend has been teaching me about buddism and so far i like it alot. you are very tecnical but i will try to catch up. i hope you wont mind my stupid questions every now and then.

---

Hi Jack. That's interesting because this forum isn't really about the Buddhist religion, nor is it about seeking out a higher power. I think of it as a forum of pure philosophy, in the sense of the individual, standing on his own with no groups or anything to hang onto, developing his own logic and ultimately discovering the nature of existence, which I wouldn't describe as a higher power, but a higher state of consciousness, one that's "above" everything we experience. Anyway, welcome to the forum. Feel free to ask whatever you like. Just be prepared for a lot of replies, because the forum is kind of dead right now. Sometimes I get so many it's downright intimidating! :-)

Jones Kelly

Posts: 159

(6/12/04 2:40 pm)

Reply

Re: Defining Ultimate Reality

---

Quote:

---

Tharan: In fact, there is only reality. "Ultimate" is only necessary as a descriptor initially to signify that one is not speaking about some person's perceptions.

JK: Yet Ultimate Reality can only be known through "some person's perceptions".

Tharan: Interesting. Describe for me please how you, Jones

Kelly, perceive "ultimate reality."

---

Sometimes i appear to be a perceiving person, who perceives the nature of Reality. That this is an illusion doesn't change the fact that it existed. Simply, Reality caused this perception, and the understanding that it is illusory.

My statement was misleading as it inferred that a person's perceptions cause understanding of Ultimate Reality.

Quote:

---

I wrote: Ultimately, even thoughts of Ultimate Reality, or experiences of it, are nothing more than new illusions. The true experience of UR is in knowing and experiencing that all knowledge and experience is a nothing (a construction that builds on the emptiness and aimlessness of Nature's way).

Tharan: Ah, here we go, I think. I am assuming you were just "in the mood" to refute me or did you actually change your mind?

---

There is no contradiction, so i guess i was "in the mood".

What would be the point of interaction in fora if i agreed with everything?

WolfsonJakk

Posts: 1635

(6/13/04 10:59 am)

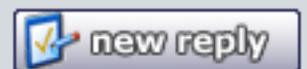

Reply

 Re: Defining Ultimate Reality

---

Understanding needs no agreement.

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

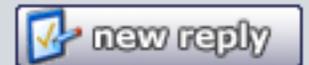

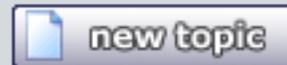

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Delusion?

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Dave Toast Registered User Posts: 922 (2/6/04 10:49 am) Reply 	Delusion? <hr/> I heard today of a study performed by some scientists from some university. It was concerned with our reactions to pain that is inflicted by either a man or a woman. Apparently they have much evidence to back up their claims, and while it all sounded substantial enough, I can't remember the details. Anyway, they have found that it takes more force from a female to illicit the same level of pain percieved when a male is inflicting it. So for example, if a male were to poke you with a stick until you reached your pain threshold, he might have to exert, for arguments sake, 100Lb/SqFt. To illicit the same reaction of your reaching your pain threshold, the female will have to exert perhaps 110Lb/SqFt. They've used various methods to explore this but they've mostly used a thumb-screw with a pressure gague as far as I could tell, and the results across the board are far more than statistically significant. Now provisionally assuming the veracity of the method and results, the explanations would surely have to be psychological, on a deeply ingrained, completely unconscious level. A level just not consciously accessed by the 'overseer'. They might be hardwired or conditioned but it doesn't really matter. What matters is that this is a measurable effect, an effect that we have been ignorant of until now. Whilst the philosopher can to an extent re-form their physical brain, perhaps even obviate hidden processes with a higher level 'virus killer', do you think they can overcome the human condition which is ingrained at such an indellible level as that exposed above?

Does the sage consider themselves free of such delusion?

ksolway

Registered User

Posts: 335

(2/6/04 12:17 pm)

Reply

Re: Delusion?

Dave Toast wrote:

Quote:

---

. . . the explanations would surely have to be psychological, on a deeply ingrained, completely unconscious level.

---

The explanations can be conscious too. They don't have to be unconscious.

Quote:

---

What matters is that this is a measurable effect, an effect that we have been ignorant of until now.

---

I wouldn't say we have been ignorant of it. It may simply be the "macho man" syndrome, or trying to impress women, or trying to make women feel safer by appearing a better protector, etc.

Quote:

---

. . . do you think they can overcome the human condition which is ingrained at such an indellible level as that exposed above?

---

If something is hardwired in them, it would be very difficult for them to overcome it.

Quote:

Does the sage consider themselves free of such delusion?

---

If a sage has delusions (misconceptions as the the nature of Reality), then he is not really a sage.

If a certain response to a certain stimuli is hardwired (like being hit on knee with a hammer, and the reflex reaction), then I wouldn't call that a delusion.

Lbartoli

Registered User

Posts: 365

(2/6/04 12:51 pm)

Reply

what ails ya?

---

We dont know whether the one receiving the punishment was man or woman, do we? Could be both were used, and both produced similar results.

Yes, men certainly feel less physically threatened by women than they do by other men. Some reasons: Men (and many women i reckon) dont believe women can be as punishing, or as strong and powerful, as men.

Most men as a matter of course also feel better when women are near to them, or interacting with them. This has the effect of cancelling some of the pain.

Men arnt as disturbed when pained by women, as it doesnt bring up so much of the get-even response. With a reduction in anger their consciousness is stronger and clearer, so they can more effectively mentally-combat the punishment. Mental-combat may include adjustment to pain.

I just dont have time to continue....

Leo

jimhaz Registered User Posts: 590 (2/6/04 1:16 pm) Reply	Re: what ails ya? <hr/> Interesting. I think Leo might be correct in saying it is to do with the relative perceived 'power' of women. There is less immediate need for the body to react to the danger, whereas pain given by a male indicates the potential for more severe danger. I wonder if after a certain threshold on the thumb screw there was no difference, I would imagine so.
WolfsonJakk Registered User Posts: 1447 (2/6/04 4:59 pm) Reply	Re: what ails ya? <hr/> If some sexy Sheila was screwing me thumbs in a vise, it would take approx. 10% more pressure to overcome my arousal impulses with pain.
DEL Registered User Posts: 971 (2/6/04 5:46 pm) Reply	Pain and tolerance <hr/> It makes sense that male tolerance of the female is much higher. You can see the male's high natural tolerance level for the female in the movies. The man is often in a dangerous situation with a female who just does not understand the dangers and who is constantly jeopardising the mission. If a man makes a mistake he is usually killed off in a relatively shorter time. It follows that the female has a naturally high tolerance for children. Tolerance moves downward. Man to Woman to Child to Toys Therefore the principles of the mind are reflected in the body. If the pain was inflicted secretly it would be a masculine action and the tolerance level would be lower. If the pain was inflicted publicly it would be a feminine action and the tolerance level would be higher. So my theory says that if you are fully aware that enough people are aware that you are about to have your finger chopped off the chances are you will hardly feel pain.

A bit like realising you cut yourself after you finished fighting.

If you are conscious that a woman disagrees with your point you might tend to brush it off as of little significance especially when you sense she is trying to be clever. When a man disagrees with you, you might feel that he fully understands and is trying to negate you. It does not matter if he is joking or serious.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 927

(2/7/04 10:38 am)

Reply

Re: Delusion?

---

Quote:

---

Kev: The explanations can be conscious too. They don't have to be unconscious.

---

I don't see why not, but on the gross level, they are surely far more likely and obviously unconscious as I see it.

How would you expand upon these conscious explanations?

Have you ever realised and thought about this specific issue before it was mentioned? (Not that one would necessarily realise all conscious thought.)

Quote:

---

Kev: I wouldn't say we have been ignorant of it. It may simply be the "macho man" syndrome, or trying to impress women, or trying to make women feel safer by appearing a better protector, etc.

---

I can see you are expanding somewhat here, but the behaviour in question applies equally to women as it does to men.

You may give yourself away a little here Kevin. Have you heard the one about the female surgeon operating on her daughter?

And please don't say that you stated conscious thought, and you are therefore consistent ;-)

Quote:

---

Kev: If something is hardwired in them, it would be very difficult for them to overcome it.

---

Indeed.

Quote:

---

Kev: If a sage has delusions (misconceptions as the the nature of Reality), then he is not really a sage.

If a certain response to a certain stimuli is hardwired (like being hit on knee with a hammer, and the reflex reaction), then I wouldn't call that a delusion.

---

Even if the reflex reaction causes a misconception as to the nature of reality?

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 929

(2/7/04 11:09 am)

Reply

Re: what ails ya?

---

Quote:

---

Leo: We dont know whether the one receiving the punishment was man or woman, do we? Could be both were used, and both produced similar results.

---

This was the case.

Quote:

---

Leo: Yes, men certainly feel less physically threatened by women than they do by other men. Some reasons: Men (and many women i reckon) dont believe women can be as punishing, or as strong and powerful, as men.

---

I'm just waiting for del to make the link with bondage and tell us how he can take more from his dominatrix than he can ever take from his gimps.

I guess this is so, but did you think that this might extend to the consistently produced results of the above study? And do you think that behaviour patterns suggesting such deeply ingrained causes of misperception are normally identifiable and overcomeable, even by the sage?

Quote:

---

Leo: Most men as a matter of course also feel better when women are near to them, or interacting with them. This has the effect of cancelling some of the pain.

---

Care to flesh that out?

Quote:

---

Leo: Men arnt as disturbed when pained by women, as it doesnt bring up so much of the get-even response. With a reduction in anger their consciousness is stronger and clearer, so they can more effectively mentally-combat the punishment. Mental-combat may include adjustment to pain.

---

I can certainly go for that, but only to a certain degree. I say only to a certain degree because I can see situations where men are more pained or disturbed by stimulus from a woman than the same stimulus from a man.

Of course in the case of the sage, this get-even response shouldn't be there, and it offers no explanation for the very same observations in women, unless you think it works that way for them too.(?)

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 930
(2/7/04 11:13 am)
Reply

Re: Delusion?

---

Quote:

---

Wolf: If some sexy Sheila was screwing me thumbs in a vise, it would take approx. 10% more pressure to overcome my arousal impulses with pain.

---

It's so obvious now you say it. It even fits with the approximate (made up) figures :-)

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 931
(2/7/04 11:25 am)
Reply

Re: Pain and tolerance

---

Quote:

---

del: If you are conscious that a woman disagrees with your point you might tend to brush it off as of little significance especially when you sense she is trying to be clever. When a man disagrees with you, you might feel that he fully understands and is trying to negate you. It does not matter if he is joking or serious.

---

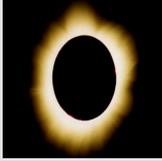

You are wrong del. This is borne put by the fact that I have never once thought myself negated by anything you've disagreed with on what I've written. My being a man, you can count on the fact that I fully understand and am negating you, seriously.

Here's how your first sentence should have read: If I am conscious that a woman disagrees with my point, I might tend to brush it off as being of little significance, especially when I precieve that she is trying to be clever.

How could we argue with your delusion, and actions thereon. But then you had to go and tar the whole world with your brush.

DEL Registered User Posts: 974 (2/7/04 1:03 pm) Reply	Re: Pain and tolerance <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Dave Toast How could we argue with your delusion, and actions thereon. <hr/> Because it is irrefutable truth. No?
Dave Toast Registered User Posts: 932 (2/7/04 1:17 pm) Reply 	Re: Pain and tolerance <hr/> You make my previous point again by not understanding what I have clearly articulated, and offering no negation thereby. However, yes it is irrefutable truth, with a lower-case t, according to your delusional definitional context.
DEL Registered User Posts: 976 (2/7/04 1:25 pm) Reply	Re: Pain and tolerance <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Dave Toast However, yes it is irrefutable truth, with a lower-case t, according to your delusional definitional context. <hr/> I don't understand what you are saying. But I feel somehow that it would be of benefit to understand fully what you are saying. Can you state you are saying even more simply?

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2246
(2/7/04 10:55 pm)
Reply

Re: Pain and tolerance

---

He's saying it's your truth, not his. And he doesn't want to fight you for it!
(:D)

I will always prefer to be negated (just try it any one of you) with laughter than seriousness, but only for the sake of fairness. My laughter is (as I've heard it called) 'killer'

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 935
(2/9/04 12:31 am)
Reply

Re: Pain and tolerance

---

It wouldn't be much of a fight, were I so inclined.

Still, it's a chance to become a punchline, sick though the joke may be.

What is your address del?

Edited by: Dave Toast at: 2/9/04 12:33 am

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2258
(2/9/04 1:18 am)
Reply

Re: Pain and tolerance

---

I have no idea what the hell you're babbling about being a punchline, but it's sickening.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 936
(2/9/04 2:17 am)
Reply

Re: Pain and tolerance

---

You have no idea what I'm saying, but the idea that you don't have is sickening?

Babble.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 979
(2/9/04 3:50 am)
Reply

Re: Pain and tolerance

---

Quote:

---

Dave Toast

It wouldn't be much of a fight, were I so inclined.

Still, it's a chance to become a punchline, sick though the joke may be.

What is your address del?

---

Come and have a drink in my small bar restaurant if you are in London in Brewer Street W1.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 937
(2/9/04 10:56 am)
Reply

Re: Pain and tolerance

---

Is that The Glasshouse or The Crown?

Incidentally, am I to presume from your words that you own this place, or are you merely the landlord?

How long have you owned/tended this bar?

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2264
(2/9/04 11:22 am)
Reply

Re: Pain and tolerance

---

DEL offered you a drink at his bar, a more appropriate question would have been if it will be on the house. What do you to make a living again Dave?

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 938
(2/9/04 11:49 am)
Reply

Re: Pain and tolerance

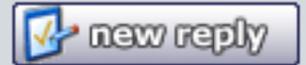

---

I've recently had to start working again to do that.

Appropriate to what?

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

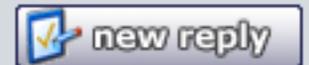

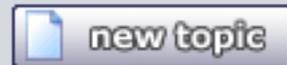

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Delusion?

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2267 (2/9/04 12:14 pm) Reply 	Re: Pain and tolerance <hr/> Working at what? More appropriate to his invitation.
Dave Toast Registered User Posts: 939 (2/10/04 8:35 am) Reply 	Re: Pain and tolerance <hr/> Working at analytical instrumentation. Am I not allowed my own agenda, to which I might be appropriate? Edited by: Dave Toast at: 2/10/04 8:37 am

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2271
(2/10/04 8:58 am)
Reply

-----

---

Quote:

---

Working at analytical instrumentation.

---

What does it involve?

Quote:

---

Am I not allowed my own agenda, to which I might be appropriate?

---

Naturally, but I am only referring to the agenda to which you are both appropriate, --your drinking at DELS den.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 940
(2/10/04 10:52 am)
Reply

Re: -----

---

What makes you think I'm appropriate to that - drink?

It involves High Performance Liquid Chromatography, Gas Chromatography and Solid Phase Extraction.

cassiopeiae
Registered User
Posts: 247
(2/10/04 10:55 am)
Reply

Re: -----

---

oooh fun :-)

I did some work for training engineers on some chromatography equipment not too long ago...

suergaz Registered User Posts: 2274 (2/10/04 11:42 am) Reply	--- <hr/> Not the drink, but the invitation to drink! So what are favourite solids and gases and liquids?
Dave Toast Registered User Posts: 941 (2/10/04 11:56 am) Reply 	Re: --- <hr/> Moroccan N2O Islay Malt
Dave Toast Registered User Posts: 948 (2/15/04 2:56 am) Reply 	Re: Delusion? <hr/> Bump for Kevin, considering what's been said elsewhere. (See page 1, post 7)

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Desire & its two approaches

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
GrantForEveryone Registered User Posts: 26 (2/26/04 7:36 am) Reply	Desire &amp; its two approaches <hr/> From what I've read and through analyzing my own experiences, I've found desire to be the barrier to enlightenment/liberation. The information I've read on dealing with desire seems to fall under two categories: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. eliminate all desire directly</li> </ol> or: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>2. use desire to overcome desire</li> </ol> The second approach seems to be a Tantric one. Does anyone have any insight on these two different approaches? Maybe info online about one or the other?
voce io Registered User Posts: 751 (2/26/04 9:19 am) Reply 	Re: Desire &amp; its two approaches <hr/> I haven't known anyone who eliminated desire. Everyone that is still alive desires. You posted this because you desired it so.

Kellyven
Registered User
Posts: 18
(2/26/04 11:24 am)
Reply

Re: Desire & its two approaches

---

I am not saying that:

1. Eliminate all desire directly
2. Use desire to overcome desire is the same as:

1. Be unconsciousness
2. Consciously stop constructing consciousness but it is very similar. It is like the will to not will.

GrantForEveryone
Registered User
Posts: 27
(2/27/04 4:11 am)
Reply

Re: Desire & its two approaches

---

voce io -

I mean desire in an attachment sort of way. Please don't get caught up in language.

Kellyven -

Interesting, I see what you're saying. Is that an idea of your's?

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 760
(2/27/04 6:16 am)
Reply

Re: Desire & its two approaches

---

Grant, I mean it in the same way you do. People make the argument saying "I eat when I'm hungry", and they claim to be unattached but they're very wrong. Making any movement is a sign of deep attachment. If a person asks themselves "why" they're eating when they're hungry, the answers that come up are "so I can survive" or "so I don't feel discomfort"...but what is the point of surviving, and what is the point of avoiding discomfort? The point of surviving may be "I like living" or "I'm afraid of dying" or "people will miss me if I stop eating and die". Why do you like living, as death is part of life, and the 'living' you're talking about is really avoidance of death (which is avoidance of life)? Why are you afraid of dying, when it's inevitable anyway? That isn't really living well, it's making your life shit, so what's the point? People are going to end up missing you the day you die, anyway..and for the most part you can't help when that day will come. Everyone has reasons for every action they take, this is an undeniable attribute of movement. What causes anyone to move is preference, and trying to achieve the better...what you want. You can't tell me that making a choice is entirely without desire. If anyone was actually without desire, they'd have no reason to move, and they wouldn't move. So what are you talking about, now?

GrantForEveryone Registered User Posts: 28 (2/27/04 9:44 am) Reply	Re: Desire &amp; its two approaches <hr/> voce io - It comes back to language. Do you love your mother? Do you love your girlfriend/wife? Is the feeling you have for them the same? Love is the word used in either case, but they don't mean the same thing. Effective communication requires you to try to understand what I intend when I say "desire", and not automatically attach all possible definitions of the word. That said, I do think the word "attachment" would better describe what I'm talking about instead of the word "desire". But I don't mean physical attachment. Please try to understand what I must intend when I use the word. So, it seems to me that attachment is the main barrier to enlightenment/liberation. I'm going to start a new thread about that. I think it's more clear that way.
voce io Registered User Posts: 762 (2/27/04 9:58 am) Reply 	Re: Desire &amp; its two approaches <hr/> I was talking all about attachment in my last post, didn't you read it? It isn't a barrier to liberation! Don't prematurely think you have all the answers.
Kellyven Registered User Posts: 23 (2/28/04 1:17 pm) Reply	Re: Desire &amp; its two approaches <hr/> If you go over to the "ego" thread, you will see how i worked through the construct of consciousness. Have you read Wisdom of the Infinite? Kelly

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

Genius Forum

Causality • Courage • Rationality • Determination • Logic • Integrity • Thinking • Ideals
Wisdom • Reason • Discipline • Truth • Masculinity • Perfection • Universe

Genius News

David Quinn's Site

The Thinking Man's Minefield

EZB Edit

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Disney World

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Paul Registered User Posts: 36 (8/19/03 3:12 am) Reply	Disney World <hr/> That's a great thing on the Internet: Interesting Articles! I found this one, on www.discover.com/sept_01/featsecret.html The literally bottom line of this all, I like the most: It's Disney World. Funtime! DISCOVER Vol. 22 No. 9 (September 2001) Quantum Shmantum If quantum theory weren't valid, no one would be walking around with cell phones or Palm Pilots. So physicist David Deutsch wonders this: Why do many smart scientists ignore the larger implications of quantum mechanics? Deutsch believes the only way to make sense of the seemingly baffling equations of quantum mechanics, including this mathematical description of the workings of a quantum computer, is to assume the existence of parallel universes.

At three o'clock on a warm summer afternoon, I arrive as scheduled at David Deutsch's home in Oxford, England. Deutsch, one of the world's leading theoretical physicists, a distinguished fellow of the British Computer Society and champion of what must certainly be the strangest scientific worldview ever created, is something of a recluse. He likes to sleep late and warned me not to come too early. Although I'm on time, my knocks on his door go unanswered. The house is dark and quiet. The doorbell doesn't seem to be working. After about 10 minutes a light goes on in an upstairs window, followed by the sound of running water. I knock harder, which at last triggers activity on the other side of the door. I hear feet pounding down stairs; the door opens, and Deutsch asks me to come in.

Piles of precariously stacked books line the route to his office, rising from the floor like stalagmites. A large poster of a brooding Albert Einstein hangs on one wall. Deutsch sits, sipping orange juice. He is slender, with birdlike attentiveness, and for someone who hardly ever leaves his home, surprisingly friendly and open. He looks much younger than 48. If his arguments, which have won over more than a few of his colleagues, turn out to be correct, our meeting is also occurring countless times in innumerable parallel universes, all in perfect accord with the uncanny laws of quantum theory.

Few physicists deny the validity of these laws, although they might not agree with Deutsch's interpretation of them. The laws insist that the fundamental constituents of reality, such as protons, electrons, and other subatomic particles, are not hard and indivisible. They behave like both waves and particles. They can appear out of nothing—a pure void—and disappear again. Physicists have even managed to teleport atoms, to move them from one place to another without passing through any intervening space. On the quantum scale, objects seem blurred and indistinct, as if created by a besotted god. A single particle occupies not just one position but exists here, there, and many places in between. "That quantum theory is outlandish, everyone agrees," says Deutsch. It seems completely in conflict with the world of big physics according to Newton and Einstein.

To grapple with the contradictions, most physicists have chosen an easy way out: They restrict the validity of quantum theory to the subatomic world. But Deutsch argues that the theory's laws must hold at every level of reality. Because everything in the world, including ourselves, is made of these particles, and because quantum theory has proved infallible in every conceivable experiment, the same weird quantum rules must apply to us. We, too, must exist in many states at once, even if we don't realize it. There must be many versions of late-rising David Deutesches, Earth, and the entire universe. All possible events, all conceivable variations on our lives, must exist, says Deutsch. We live not in a single universe, he says, but in a vast and rich "multiverse."

He knows the idea takes some getting used to, especially when one pauses to consider what it means on an everyday level. For starters, it solves once and for all the ancient question of whether we have free will. "The bottom line is that the universe is open," Deutsch says. "In the relevant sense of the word, we have free will."

We also have every possible option we've ever encountered acted out somewhere in some universe by at least one of our other selves. Unlike the traveler facing a fork in the road in Robert Frost's poem "The Road Not Taken," who is "sorry that I could not travel both / And be one traveler," we take all the roads in our lives. This has some unsettling consequences and could explain why Deutsch is reluctant to venture from his house.

Driving a car, for example, becomes extremely hazardous, because it's almost certain that somewhere in some other universe the driver will accidentally hit and kill a child. So should we never drive? Deutsch thinks it's impossible to control the fate of our other selves in the multiverse. But if we're cautious, other copies of us may decide to be cautious. "There's also the argument that because the child's death will happen in some universes, you ought to take more care when doing even slightly risky things," he says.

Coming from a physicist of lesser stature, such startling views might be dismissed. But Deutsch possesses impeccable credentials. While still in his early thirties he created the theoretical framework for an entirely new discipline called quantum computation. Spurred by those ideas, researchers around the globe are attempting to construct a fundamentally different type of computer that is powerful almost beyond imagining.

Deutsch himself is more interested in convincing physicists that quantum theory has to be taken into consideration in the everyday world than he is in seeing a quantum computer built. Physicists may argue about what the theory means, but fortunately for the rest of us they have no qualms about working with it. By some estimates, 30 percent of the United States' gross national product is said to derive from technologies based on quantum theory.

Without the insights provided by quantum mechanics, there would be no cell phones, no CD players, no portable computers. Quantum mechanics is not a branch of physics; it is physics.

And yet 101 years after it was first proposed by German scientist Max Planck, physicists who work with the theory every day don't really know quite what to make of it. They fill blackboards with quantum calculations and acknowledge that it is probably the most powerful, accurate, and predictive scientific theory ever developed. But as Deutsch wrote in an article for the British Journal for the Philosophy of Science: "Despite the unrivalled empirical success of quantum theory, the very suggestion that it may be literally true as a description of nature is still greeted with cynicism, incomprehension, and even anger."

To understand why the theory presents a conceptual challenge for physicists, consider the following experiment, based on an optical test first performed in 1801 by Thomas Young:

In the experiment, particles of light— photons— stream through a single vertical slit cut into a screen and fall onto a piece of photographic film placed some distance behind the screen. The image that develops on the film isn't surprising— simply a bright, uniform band. But if a second slit is cut into the screen, parallel to the first, the image on the film changes in an unexpected way: In place of a uniformly bright patch, the photons now form a pattern of alternating bright and dark parallel lines on the film. Dark lines appear in areas that were bright when just one slit was open. Somehow, cutting a second slit for the light to shine through prevents the photons from hitting areas on the screen they easily reached when only one slit was open.

Physicists usually explain the pattern by saying that light has a dual nature; it behaves like a wave, although it consists of individual photons. When light waves emerge from the two slits, overlapping wave crests meet at the film to create the bright lines; crests and troughs cancel out to produce the dark lines.

But there's a problem with this explanation: The same pattern of light and dark lines gradually builds up even when photons pass one at a time through the slits, as if each photon had somehow spread out like a wave and gone through both slits simultaneously. That clearly isn't the case, because the distance between the two slits can be hundreds, thousands, or in principle, any number of times greater than the size of a single photon. And if that isn't confusing enough, consider this: If detectors are placed at each slit, they register a photon traveling through only one of the slits, never through both at the same time.

Yet the photons behave as if they had traveled through both slits at once. The same baffling result holds not just for photons but also for particles of matter, such as electrons. Each seems able to exist in many different places at once — but only when no one is looking. As soon as a physicist tries to observe a particle— by placing a detector at each of the two slits, for example— the particle somehow settles down into a single position, as if it knew it was being detected.

Most physicists, when pressed, will usually say that the lesson quantum mechanics has for us is that our concepts of how a particle should behave simply don't match reality. But Deutsch believes that the implications of the theory are clear: If in every case a particle— be it a photon, an electron, or any other denizen of the quantum world— appears to occupy more than one position at a time, then it clearly does occupy many positions at once. And thus so do we, and so does everything else in the universe.

But is that an awfully big conclusion to draw from a simple pattern of light and shadow? Deutsch responds by pointing out that a similarly huge assumption— that the universe is expanding— is based on subtle light and shadow observations. Yet hardly any physicist anywhere disputes it.

Under normal circumstances we never encounter the multiple realities of quantum mechanics. We certainly aren't aware of what our other selves are doing. Only in carefully controlled conditions, as in the two-slit experiment, do we get a hint of the existence of what Deutsch calls the multiverse. That experiment offers a rare example of two overlapping realities, in which photons in one universe interfere with those in another. In our universe, we see a photon passing through one slit that seems to interact with another, invisible photon traveling through the second slit. In another universe, the photon that we see is invisible to the physicist in that world, while the one that we can't see is the photon the otherworldly physicist detects. Peculiar? Deutsch believes there is no alternative way of looking at quantum mechanics. "When it comes to a conflict about what a theory of physics says and what we are expecting, then physics has to win."

Deutsch is not the originator of the multiverse concept. That credit goes to Hugh Everett, whose 1957 Princeton doctoral thesis first presented what has come to be called the "many worlds" interpretation of quantum mechanics. In creating the many worlds view, Everett was trying to solve the problem of why we see only one of the multiple states in which a particle can exist. Some years before Everett's work, physicists had crafted an ad hoc explanation that to this day remains the standard way of coping with quantum phenomena. In the conventional view, the very act of our observation causes all the possible states of a particle to "collapse" abruptly into a single value, which specifies the position, say, or energy of the particle. To understand how this works, imagine that the particle is an e-mail message. When the message is sent, there are multiple possible outcomes: The e-mail could reach its intended destination; any number of people could get it by mistake; or the sender might receive a notice that the message could not be delivered. But when one outcome is observed, all other possibilities with regard to the e-mail delivery collapse into one reality.

To some physicists the notion of collapse is an unsightly addition to quantum mechanics, tacked on to smooth over the uncomfortable fact that the theory mandates multiple states for every particle in existence. And the collapse model creates its own problems: Because it says our observations affect the outcomes of experiments, it assigns a central role to consciousness. "It's an unpleasant thing to bring people into the basic laws of physics," says Steven Weinberg, a Nobel laureate at the University of Texas.

Everett labored to move beyond those laws, arguing that nothing like a quantum collapse ever occurs and that human consciousness does not determine the outcome of experimental results. He said the collapse only seems to happen from our limited perspective. Everett believed that all quantum states are equally real and that if we see only one result of an experiment, other versions of us must see all the remaining possibilities. Bryce DeWitt, the physicist who coined the term "many worlds" to describe this perplexing idea, remembers his first reaction to Everett's paper. "I was shocked but delighted," he says. By contrast, other physicists greeted Everett's theory with resounding indifference. "The article appeared, and that was the end of it," says DeWitt. "Just total silence."

The cool reception apparently didn't faze Everett. Although he left physics to work on classified projects for the United States government, he remained convinced until his death in 1982 that he was right about quantum mechanics. And if the many worlds theory is true, Deutsch, for one, believes that other copies of Everett might remain alive somewhere in the multiverse. In 1976, a few years before he vanished from this corner of the multiverse, Everett, at DeWitt's invitation, visited the University of Texas, where Deutsch was then a graduate student. Like DeWitt before him, Deutsch became a convert. "I don't think there are any interpretations of quantum theory other than many worlds," he says. "The others deny reality."

Deutsch argues that physicists who use quantum mechanics in a utilitarian way—and that means most physicists working in the field today—suffer from a loss of nerve. They simply can't accept the strangeness of quantum reality. This is probably the first time in history, he says, that physicists have refused to believe what their reigning theory says about the world. For Deutsch, this is like Galileo refusing to believe that Earth orbits the sun and using the heliocentric model of the solar system only as a convenient way to predict the positions of stars and planets in the sky. Like modern physicists, who speak of photons as being both wave and particle, here and there at once, Galileo could have argued that Earth is both moving and stationary at the same time and ridiculed impertinent graduate students for questioning what that could possibly mean.

"This dilemma of whether you should accept that the world really is the way a theory says it is or whether you should just think of the theory as a manner of speaking, has occurred with every fundamentally new scientific theory right back to Copernicus," says Deutsch.

"I'm not quite sure why physicists should be more ready to believe in planets in distant galaxies than to believe in Everett's other worlds," says DeWitt.

"Of course the number of parallel universes is really huge. I like to say that some physicists are comfortable with little huge numbers but not with big huge numbers."

"The primary purpose of science is to understand what the world is like," says Deutsch. "Everything else that science does—test theories, produce new technologies—is incidental to this fundamental purpose of gaining a deeper understanding of reality."

Indeed, most other physicists view the many worlds route as a road best not taken. Steven Weinberg, paraphrasing Winston Churchill's quip about democracy, says: "It's a miserable idea except for all the other ideas." So which road does Weinberg choose? "I don't know," he says. "I think I come out with the pragmatic people who say, 'Oh, the hell with it. I'm too busy.'" Christopher Fuchs, a research physicist at Lucent Technologies' Bell Labs, believes that quantum mechanics doesn't tell us so much about the world itself as it does about our interaction with the world. "It represents our interface with reality," he says. "I don't think it goes further than that." Fuchs believes that odd properties of quantum mechanics, such as the apparent ability of particles to exist in many places at once, merely reflect our ignorance of the world and are not true features of reality. "When a quantum state collapses, it's not because anything is happening physically, it's simply because this little piece of the world called a person has come across some knowledge, and he updates his knowledge," he says. "So the quantum state that's being changed is just the person's knowledge of the world, it's not something existent in the world in and of itself."

In Fuchs's view, quantum mechanics describes a reality that shrinks away from us when we probe it too closely. "There's a certain ticklishness to the world," he says. "It is this extreme sensitivity of quantum systems that keeps us from ever knowing more about them than can be captured with the formal structure of quantum mechanics."

To Deutsch, such arguments are just complex rationalizations for avoiding the most straightforward implications of quantum theory. "It's a tenable point of view to say I don't know what the world is like," he says. "The obvious question then is what is in fact happening in reality? If quantum theory is true, it puts heavy constraints on what the world can be like."

The most serious consequence of refusing to consider the many worlds view is that physicists will never advance to a new, deeper understanding of nature. Deutsch adds: "What one can hope for in the long run is that a new theory will be facilitated by understanding this present theory. Once you understand the existing theory, you have a handle on what you can change in it. Whereas if you don't understand it, if it's just a set of equations, then it's astronomically unlikely that you will happen upon a better theory."

In the meantime, Deutsch is optimistic that the refined application of quantum mechanics principles will produce a tool that could bolster his argument for the existence of parallel universes. Many physicists around the world, including a team at Oxford with whom Deutsch works, are trying to build a quantum computer that would manipulate atoms or photons and exploit the particles' abilities to exist simultaneously in more than one state. Those quantum properties would tremendously increase the speed and capacity of the computer, allowing it to complete tasks beyond the reach of existing machines. In fact, says Deutsch, a quantum computer could in theory perform a calculation requiring more steps than there are atoms in the entire universe.

To do that, the computer would have to be manipulating and storing all that information somewhere. Computation is, after all, a physical process; it uses real resources, matter and energy. But if those resources exceed the amount available in our universe, then the computer would have to be drawing on the resources of other universes. So Deutsch feels that if such a computer is built, the case for many worlds will be compelling.

It's almost seven o'clock in the evening. deutsch has been answering questions for nearly four hours and has not yet had breakfast. He invites me to his conservatory, and we clamber over book stalagmites to a glassed-in porch facing his backyard for steak and orange juice. Deutsch muses about why people have trouble accepting strange new ideas. "I must say I don't understand the whole psychology of why people like some scientific theories and not others," he says.

He pauses briefly while he lights the "barbecue in a box" on which he will grill his breakfast. While the meat sizzles, he answers one last question:

What if quantum theory is wrong?

"I'm sure that quantum theory will be proved false one day, because it seems inconceivable that we've stumbled across the final theory of physics. But I would bet my bottom dollar that the new theory will either retain the parallel universe feature of quantum physics, or it will contain something even more weird."

Shadow Play

A: Light shining through two slits creates bands on film placed beyond the screen. Scientists who first performed this experiment in the 19th century focused on the light's wavelike properties. Waves emerging from the slits overlap. When the crests meet, they form a bright stripe on the film; crests and troughs cancel one another, leaving a shadow.

B: Physicists now know that light also consists of particles called photons. If photons travel through the slits one at a time, they gradually reproduce the same pattern of stripes on the film. That could happen only if one photon passes through both slits simultaneously, or, as David Deutsch argues, if the photon we see interacts with an invisible photon, from another universe, passing through the slit.

— T.F.

Quantum Time Travel

No known laws of physics rule out time travel, but venturing to another era is rife with paradoxes. Take the example of "grandpa-cide": You hop into your time machine, travel back to visit your grandfather before he married your grandmother, and kill him. As a result, your father will never be born and neither will you, which means that you couldn't have traveled back in time to murder your grandfather. So he survives, your father will be born, and you will grow up to travel back in time to murder your grandfather. In short, if you kill your grandfather, you won't be born, no time traveler kills your grandfather, and you will be born. Or imagine this loopy scenario: You pack the complete works of Shakespeare, travel back to Elizabethan England, and sell them all to a struggling young playwright named William, who uses the mysterious gift from the future to make his fame and fortune. Who then wrote all those plays and sonnets? They seem to have sprung from nowhere.

The many worlds interpretation of quantum theory solves these paradoxes. In the first example, when you make the fateful call on your grandfather, the past you visit— and change— is not the past of the universe you à came from. In your home universe, the grandfather remains alive. The grandfather you murder belongs to the past of a parallel space and time, one in which you will never be born, but one in which you could remain should you so choose. What about the Shakespeare paradox? The plays and sonnets do not emerge from thin air. Somewhere in the multiverse at least one version of Shakespeare created them without any help from a time traveler. But a time traveler could bestow them upon a Shakespeare in another universe, and that lucky bard would become famous through no effort of his own. In the big picture, though— and the multiverse is the biggest picture possible— knowledge always has a creative source.

In the many worlds view, time travel is no more paradoxical— although it may prove a bit more difficult— than any other form of transportation. If you got particularly angry with yourself for something you once did, or might do, you could even travel to the past— or future— and murder the other you. (But you might be advised to be leery of any visits from another time-traveling you.)

Different times, David Deutsch says, are nothing less than different universes. "The universes we can affect we call the future. Those that can affect us we call the past."

— T.F.

RELATED WEB SITES:

An interactive explanation of Young's double slit experiment is available at www.colorado.edu/physics/2000/schroedinger. For additional details on how the experiment works, see zebu.uoregon.edu/~js/21st\_century\_science/lectures/lec12.html.

For more about David Deutsch and the quest for a quantum computer, see "The Best Computer in All Possible Worlds," Tim Folger, Discover, October 1995; available at www.discover.com.

© Copyright 2001 The Walt Disney Company.

bekwon

Registered User

Posts: 2

(8/19/03 8:29)

Reply

Re: Disney World

---

so?

what is your point?

timetravel, parallel universe..

how about a little here and now for your senses.

isnt enough? what more?

what is there to discover?

what would change the basic way things work, perception/reality/you-ness, what?

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1025

(8/19/03 10:16)

Reply

Re: Disney World

---

Then, Deutsch is a spoiled brat who gets to sleep until afternoon every day so that he can indulge his every impulse and whim.

Good for him. I think it's great. He does not have to work.

What sort of dole is he on? How did he learn to work the system so well?

One thing that caught my attention in reading most of this -- I could not read all of it -- was the mention of a picture of a brooding Einstein.

Why did he have only a picture of a brooding Einstein? Einstein often enjoyed being playful in front of a camera. I like the photograph of him sticking out his tongue.

You paint a picture of a lively, youthful scientific genius of forty-eight. The photograph of a brooding Einstein seems to be in contrast to this wonderful, childish sprite on the dole.

I would not trust him immediately. I would have to know much more.

What about him makes you so trusting?

Faizi

Paul Registered User Posts: 37 (8/19/03 10:26) Reply	Deutsch's Disney World <hr/> Well, Deutsch is somewhat in the league of Stephen Hawking. And the latter is not a spoiled brat. I am. And still in love with you. Hug, although you'd say that that's pathetic, M.?
jimhaz Registered User Posts: 288 (8/19/03 10:37) Reply 	Re: Disney World <hr/> Multiple universes are complete hogwash as far as I'm concerned...like everything else there are just many different ways of viewing the same thing. He just seems like a bloke who enjoys being in the forefront of a trend, who for the sake of self gratification will abandon logic. He is religious.
Paul Registered User Posts: 38 (8/19/03 10:45) Reply	To jimhaz <hr/> But being religious in the true sense -- so, without any religion -- is inevitable. Unless someone wants to be a moron. Or an alien. Yes!, women come from Venus, men from Mars! :-)
Dave Toast Registered User Posts: 531 (8/19/03 22:13) Reply 	Re: To jimhaz <hr/> At least you've actually offered some thoughts on Many Worlds Jimmy. Quote: <hr/> Jimhaz: Multiple universes are complete hogwash as far as I'm concerned...like everything else there are just many different ways of viewing the same thing. <hr/> Maybe, maybe not. Surely, if your going to make such an unequivocal statement, you should back it up with some reasoning, if not exhaustive proof.

Quote:

---

He just seems like a bloke who enjoys being in the forefront of a trend,

---

I can't see how you can make such a judgement on such scant evidence but tell me how and why you did, if you feel like it.

Quote:

---

who for the sake of self gratification will abandon logic.

---

How's he abandoned logic? and how do you figure that he's done this for self gratification? Your statement would seem to require something beyond the standard 'anything we do is for self gratification' argument.

Quote:

---

He is religious.

---

I think you're right here but not for the same reasons you've given. I also think that your saying he is wrong makes you religious in the same way I'm thinking of. Just like everyone is in various aspects of their lives, at various junctures.

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 289

(8/19/03 23:03)

Reply

Re: To jimhaz

---

I hate you very deeply Dave...lol..I only want to think of what comes naturally to me, but you try and lure me into making replies that one would have to give thought to. I very much prefer to just make statements and let people work out their own meanings from it.

I'm lazy. I just scanned the article. It didn't induce a desire in me to read it thoroughly. I categorise and generalise, I mean why not, aren't all communications essentially just the same.

Ghosts are essentially multiple universes, people are lured to the mystical, even scientists, some will be biased by their past experiences or their desire to imagine. The general concept within their theories do not strike any resonance within my brain. There is a feeling that goes along with truth that I do not sense. So I just obtained this extremely impressive empirical knowledge from a sniff from the way he said things :)

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 1347

(8/22/03 13:53)

Reply

Re: To jimhaz

---

The "multiple universe" theory makes a mockery of language in my view. A new lexicon is needed for it.

Dan Rowden

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 537

(8/22/03 21:38)

Reply

Re: Lexicons.

---

Said the pot to the kettle :-)

Agreed in one sense but on the other hand there are plenty of words with varying levels of magnitude in their implied meaning, like natural, sane, masculine & feminine, etc.

In this particular instance, the use of the word universe is justified by the scientific and popular everyday notions of universe being the Physical Cosmological, tangible, sensible, phenomenal, secular dimensions. The Spacetime continuum perhaps. The non-metaphysical.

Of course the word should really imply the universal, the whole, the totality. But then one could say that this meaning is designated by the capitalization of the word.

In actual fact, Everett called his theory the 'Many Worlds' interpretation. Three years later, the popularised term 'Multiverse' was coined by Andy Nimmo whilst preparing a lecture on Everett's theory for the British Interplanetary Society, and most likely wrestling with the same problem you have with the nomenclature. I don't know where 'multiple universes' comes from, probably dumbing down.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 860

(8/23/03 7:47)

Reply

Re: Lexicons.

---

Even if you exclude all metaphysics, the term multiverse has no meaning for me. In fact, it has even less meaning in that case, since whatever sort of conglomerate you could imagine would all contain only matter.

Many worlds is different from many universes.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 541

(8/24/03 13:09)

Reply

Re: Lexicons.

---

Well the multiverse of the Many Worlds interpretation of quantum physics distinguishes its separate physical universes (containing matter) by the notion that they are not causally related.

It should be noted that the majority of experts go for the Many Worlds interpretation over the Copenhagen interpretation these days.

The multiverse of M-Theory posits and theoretically proves an 11 dimensional space within which separate universes are born of collision between p-branes. Unlike the alternate universes of Many Worlds, these may exhibit completely different laws of physics.

As far as etymology goes, I see no problem with replacing uni with multi, or one with plural. Perhaps we can create a term ourselves. The Omniverse is a Universe comprised of a multiverse of universes.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 614
(8/24/03 19:45)
Reply

wave or particle?

---

Great stuff!

I had a close look and the light experiment images. Very interesting and inspiring.

The question of wave or particle is the same as faith or logic, belief or reason, female or male visible or invisible etc.

Quote:

---

drowden:
The "multiple universe" theory makes a mockery of language in my view. A new lexicon is needed for it.

---

Language is only useful for the visible world.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 864
(8/25/03 11:01)
Reply

Re: Lexicons.

---

Indeed, if the various universes were not causally related, I would have to agree that they are a multiverse. However, I find that unlikely in the extreme.

What is the Copenhagen interpretation? I tried to read a bit about M-theory to catch up, but it's too big and I have not yet grasped enough of what it's about.

What are p-branes, and if universes are born of their collisions, then the universes are causally related. I don't care at all about local physics laws - it still does not mean in any way that the cause of such universes is not one.

If you want to speak of an omniverse, then that is the totality.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 548

(8/25/03 12:10)

Reply

Re: Lexicons.

---

Quote:

---

Bird: Indeed, if the various universes were not causally related, I would have to agree that they are a multiverse. However, I find that unlikely in the extreme.

---

In the multiverse of Many Worlds, the separate universes are defined by their not being causally related.

The likelihood of reality conforming to Many Worlds is unrelated to whether the word multiverse is a valid designation for what it attempts to encapsulate. It is also unrelated to whether the term has meaning, being as it's meaning is necessitated by the context of it's definition.

It does indeed seem highly unlikely and counter-intuitive, and it may well prove to be complete bollocks, but then everything in the quantum world suffers from the same 'seemingly unlikely' malaise, but is manipulatable and therefore true nonetheless. As previously stated, the majority of experts now believe this interpretation of quantum mechanics to be correct.

Imagine how highly unlikely electricity would have been to cavemen.

It also seems highly unlikely that consciousness decides what reality is, selecting from the superposed possibilities, by the act of observation. This is a part of the present alternative, the Copenhagen interpretation.

---

Quote:

---

What is the Copenhagen interpretation? I tried to read a bit about M-theory to catch up, but it's too big and I have not yet grasped enough of what it's about.

What are p-branes

---

To much for me to be able to sum up for you, there's plenty out there to read about though. It won't be a difficulty for you I'm sure.

Quote:

---

and if universes are born of their collisions, then the universes are causally related.

---

I suppose you could say that they are causally related in the process behind their inception, but the result of the collisions are separate, bounded universes which are not causally related to each other.

Again, the use of the word universe is justified here as they are bounded and separate. The word universe comes from the Latin, meaning one - turned in on itself. And so multiverse means plural - turned in on themselves.

Quote:

---

If you want to speak of an omniverse, then that is the totality.

---

That would seem to follow, considering that above.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 865

(8/25/03 13:50)

Reply

Re: Lexicons.

---

In the multiverse of Many Worlds, the separate universes are defined by their not being causally related. The likelihood of reality conforming to Many Worlds is unrelated to whether the word multiverse is a valid designation for what it attempts to encapsulate.

Oh, I see. I did not realize that the term went so deep. Do you think that everyone understands it that way? That means they think there are multiple possible causes for the utterly inexplicable and astounding fact of existence? I'm happy to use the word multiverse with the understanding that each universe is causally unrelated. I don't believe in such a possibility.

It does indeed seem highly unlikely and counter-intuitive, and it may well prove to be complete bollocks, but then everything in the quantum world suffers from the same 'seemingly unlikely' malaise, but is manipulatable and therefore true nonetheless. As previously stated, the majority of experts now believe this interpretation of quantum mechanics to be correct. Imagine how highly unlikely electricity would have been to cavemen.

Actually the quantum stuff, while rather heady at first, is not even close to the magnitude of this one. Let me put it this way - I am not sure there is a God, but I am sure there is no multiverse. And if there is even the possibility that I'm wrong, well, I cannot express the magnitude and depth discouragement that would cause me.

Electricity would not have been unlikely to a caveman. They'd get over it quick enough.

It also seems highly unlikely that consciousness decides what reality is, selecting from the superposed possibilities, by the act of observation. This is a part of the present alternative, the Copenhagen interpretation.

You're saying this is outdated? I thought it was cutting edge thinking. I also thought it was part of quantum physics' possible interpretations. And how does this question of consciousness bear upon the origin of universes, and/or their simultaneous existence?

I suppose you could say that they are causally related in the process behind their inception, but the result of the collisions are separate, bounded universes which are not causally related to each other.

Oh come now! OK, I'll take it. Works for me. "causally related in the process behind their inception,"

That's what I'm getting at.

"The result of collisions are separate bounded universes"
You mean like maybe a blood cell and a stomach cell are bounded and separate?

Quote:

---

If you want to speak of an omniverse, then that is the totality.

-----
That would seem to follow, considering that above.

---

So what are we arguing about then? We are disagreeing that bounded objects with the same process behind their inceptions can be called causally unrelated. And we are defining multiverse to mean multiple separate systems that are causally unrelated, which I consider a nonentity, but I can agree to define universe in a smaller way so long as we have the term omniverse to describe the All.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 554

(8/27/03 0:14)

Reply

Re: Lexicons.

---

Quote:

---

Do you think that everyone understands it that way?

---

Dunno, doubt it. Depends on whether one's dabbling impels one on to researching and understanding the workings of the theory. I suppose that every person who knows of the word doesn't necessarily understand what it means, or what it is supposed to mean. Although they may have an idea of what they think it means which isn't too far removed from what it actually means. As far as Many Worlds goes, most would likely understand the concept in terms of parrallel universes.

Quote:

---

That means they think there are multiple possible causes for the utterly inexplicable and astounding fact of existence?

---

I'm not sure what you mean by 'they', do you mean people who understand the precise meaning of the word multiverse with regard to Many Worlds?

If this is the case, then I'm not sure that understanding the theory implies any belief. As far as the theory itself is concerned, it implies that there are multiple possible causes for the the branching off of separated parrallel universes. However this does not address the 'utterly inexplicable and astounding fact of existence' itself, and it's origin.

Quote:

---

Actually the quantum stuff, while rather heady at first, is not even close to the magnitude of this one.

---

If you mean the Many Worlds interpretation, then the two are one in the same. The quantum world is a seemingly unlikely scenario to the human which lives in the macro world and Many Worlds is a seemingly unlikely interpretation of the seemingly unlikely world of quanta.

I suppose you could say that the interpretation trumps what it is attempting to interpret and is therefore of a higher magnitude of seeming unlikelihood.

Quote:

---

Let me put it this way - I am not sure there is a God, but I am sure there is no multiverse. And if there is even the possibility that I'm wrong, well, I cannot express the magnitude and depth of discouragement that would cause me.

---

I'm afraid that there is that possibility, not that it is necessarily an actuality.

How and why would the possibility of Many Worlds and its multiverse being a possibility cause you such depth of discouragement?

Quote:

---

Electricity would not have been unlikely to a caveman. They'd get over it quick enough.

---

I'm not so sure about that. Cavemen was just a frivolous example but if I were to go back in time, say to 1000BC, and I were to attempt to explain electricity to someone of that time, do you really think they would have found it likely, or would it sound like magic to them?

It was only an illustration anyway. I was just putting across the point that there are plenty of things which, before their common understanding by the populace, would have seemed unlikely to the populace. This seeming unlikelihood has no effect on the actuality however (not that many Worlds is necessarily an actuality).

Quote:

---

DT: It also seems highly unlikely that consciousness decides what reality is, selecting from the superposed possibilities, by the act of observation. This is a part of the present alternative, the Copenhagen interpretation.

Bird: You're saying this is outdated? I thought it was cutting edge thinking. I also thought it was part of quantum physics' possible interpretations. And how does this question of consciousness bear upon the origin of universes, and/or their simultaneous existence?

---

I'm not saying Copenhagen is outdated, no. Although the majority of experts would say that it has now been superceded. I'm simply saying that this is the only present alternative interpretation of the quantum world and it is just as seemingly unlikely as Many Worlds.

I'm not sure what exactly you mean by cutting edge thinking, but as far as history goes, the Copenhagen interpretation was formulated in 1927.

Perhaps you are thinking of what the Cab'n was on about with local and non-local reality, the hidden variables of Bell's Inequality and the like in that book he was reading? Even this understanding has been around since 1964 but the book that Nemo was reading was an interpretation of what this might imply, and that book was written fairly recently as I remember. But the Copenhagen interpretation's implication of involvement of consciousness (in the form of an observer influencing results by observation) is a different thing to what I believe Nemo was saying that his book was on about, that being that consciousness exists in non-local reality, as I remember.

As to how this question of consciousness bears upon the origin of universes, and/or their simultaneous existence, Many Worlds is all about removing the role of consciousness, implicit in Copenhagen. This question of consciousness' involvement is why Einstien said "God does not play dice" and "Do you really think the moon isn't there if you aren't looking at it?", and why the famous Scrodinger's Cat and EPR paradox thought experiments were originally designed, to illustrate the absurdity of Copenhagen. It's also the larger part of why Deutsch says Copenhagen is meaningless gibberish.

Quote:

---

Oh come now! OK, I'll take it. Works for me. "causally related in the process behind their inception,"

That's what I'm getting at.

---

Well yes, they would be causally related in that sense but from their inception onwards, the separate universes of the multiverse of M-theory would not be causally related to each other. Therefore, anything within one of these universes would be unable to divine any information about anything outside of it's own universe, nor have any effect on anything outside.

Quote:

---

DT: The result of collisions are separate bounded universes.
Bird: You mean like maybe a blood cell and a stomach cell are bounded and separate?

---

Not quite no. Unless said blood cell and stomach cell were in separate, causally unrelated universes.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 868

(8/27/03 2:40)

Reply

Re: Lexicons.

---

That means they think there are multiple possible causes for the utterly inexplicable and astounding fact of existence?

-----

I'm not sure what you mean by 'they', do you mean people who understand the precise meaning of the word multiverse with regard to Many Worlds?

Yes.

Quote:

---

If this is the case, then I'm not sure that understanding the theory implies any belief. As far as the theory itself is concerned, it implies that there are multiple possible causes for the the branching off of separated parrallel universes. However this does not address the 'utterly inexplicable and astounding fact of existence' itself, and it's origin.

---

There must be a strong possibility that a theory reflects the actual state of affairs or its not worth bothering with. But since you admit that it does not address ultimate causes, I am relieved.

Actually the quantum stuff, while rather heady at first, is not even close to the magnitude of this one.

-----

If you mean the Many Worlds interpretation, then the two are one in the same.

Yeah, but I was referring to the idea of their being causally unrelated.

Quote:

---

I'm afraid that there is that possibility, not that it is necessarily an actuality.

How and why would the possibility of Many Worlds and it's multiverse being a possibility cause you such depth of discouragement?

---

I do not think there is that possibility. It would discourage me because it would mean that my deepest and most profound insights into the nature of reality are wrong, that I have no foundation whatsoever, nor the possibility of ever attaining one.

Quote:

---

I'm not sure what exactly you mean by cutting edge thinking, but as far as history goes, the Copenhagen interpretation was formulated in 1927.

---

I didn't realize that the idea that consciousness is the cause of reality went back that far. But anyway it takes a long time for new things to trickle down to the public. I remember seeing some college boys playing with something that looks like our screen savers in about 1975.

Quote:

---

Perhaps you are thinking of what the Cab'n was on about with local and non-local reality, the hidden variables of Bell's Inequality and the like in that book he was reading?

---

Yeah, basically.

Quote:

---

But the Copenhagen interpretation's implication of involvement of consciousness (in the form of an observer influencing results by observation) is a different thing to what I believe Nemo was saying that his book was on about, that being that consciousness exists in non-local reality, as I remember.

---

Hmm, I'm not sure Cab'n would disagree about the involvement of consciousness. He does think consciousness is a separate universe, but I did not notice that his book said so. I don't agree with him about the two universes, although the distinctions become rather fine.

Quote:

---

As to how this question of consciousness bears upon the origin of universes, and/or their simultaneous existence, Many Worlds is all about removing the role of consciousness, implicit in Copenhagen. It's also the larger part of why Deutsch says Copenhagen is meaningless gibberish.

---

Well, I'm glad you've shown me that there is this whole other interpretatin of quantum data. I'll read up on it as soon as I can. This is important. Would you say that QRS ascribe to the Copenhagen interpretation, or is it just Buddhism. I mean about consciousness and matter arising simultaneously, and matter having no existence without an observer. Actually, I can accept that provided the observer is some sort of universal consciousness. But I tend to think that matter is derivative of consciousness.

I think its funny Deutsch says the copenhagen interpretation is gibberish. I'm inclined to at least partly agree, yet I find his stuff really balderdash.

Quote:

---

Well yes, they would be causally related in that sense but from their inception onwards, the separate universes of the multiverse of M-theory would not be causally related to each other. Therefore, anything within one of these universes would be unable to divine any information about anything outside of it's own universe, nor have any effect on anything outside.

---

Like I said, works for me. But I doubt there is really going to be no connection. There will be some form of nonlocal connection, however hard to find.

Quote:

---

Not quite no. Unless said blood cell and stomach cell were in separate, causally unrelated universes.

---

It was a poor example. I was merely pointing out that with increasing knowledge prior certainties about separation and seeming bounded systems might evaporate. Just a bit of womanly advice, to be ever so cautious of male thinking, which goes like this: "Aha! Now I understand!"

And thanks for indulging me like this. You know that as a female I don't actually care about any of this, I am only pursuing it for the advantage it give me. (What the hell??)

BryanParrish
Global User
Posts: 84
(8/3/04 5:48)
Reply

Re: Disney World

---

FUCK SHIT PISS BALLS NUTS BANANA

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.32
Copyright ©1999-2005 ezboard, Inc.

Genius Forum

Causality • Courage • Rationality • Determination • Logic • Integrity • Thinking • Ideals
Wisdom • Reason • Discipline • Truth • Masculinity • Perfection • Universe

Genius News

David Quinn's Site

The Thinking Man's Minefield

EZB Edit

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Divorce and Doppelgangers

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
DEL Registered User Posts: 531 (7/15/03 6:58 pm) Reply	Divorce and Doppelgangers <hr/> Gentlemen, if you get divorced it is a sign of a successful marriage but with an unpleasant after effect that you would not accept. Basically, you successfully projected your image unto your wife but ran away from or forced away your doppelganger. She became your doppelganger. You killed yourself or ran away from yourself. Separation is much more interesting situation don't you think?
ynithrix Registered User Posts: 147 (7/16/03 1:11) Reply	Re: Divorce and Doppelgangers <hr/> Dispose of her and get a better one. Divorce shouldn't exist.
StreetLamp Registered User Posts: 33 (7/16/03 5:13) Reply	Re: Divorce and Doppelgangers <hr/> True doppelgänger are imaginary, I would think. When I see it as a motive, however, it makes sense.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 532
(7/16/03 10:28)
Reply

Re: Divorce and Doppelgangers

---

Quote:

---

ynithrix:
Dispose of her and get a better one.

---

Sounds great in theory but for the same reason you wouldn't want to dispose of yourself and your memories it is equally as difficult to dispose of her.

If you can look back at your life and say to yourself that you wish you had been someone else then you might have the ability to dispose of her easily.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1278
(7/16/03 15:54)
Reply

-----

---

doppelgangers-----

Read Dostoyevskys 'The Double'

I think ynithrix couldn't kill a mouse let alone a whole woman, not to mention a man!

ynithrix
Registered User
Posts: 158
(7/22/03 12:23)
Reply

Re: -----

---

"If you can look back at your life and say to yourself that you wish you had been someone else then you might have the ability to dispose of her easily."

To be honest, I can't see why.

By what I said I was simply referring to the futility of marriage. That to undergo divorce is a waste of time and that it would be a whole lot easier if the unwanted wife were simply disposed of, killed, given to someone else, put up for sale, or whatever. A farmer doesn't divorce his field.

"I think ynithrix couldn't kill a mouse let alone a whole woman, not to mention a man!"

Who knows, but you're probably right.

DEL

Registered User

Posts: 541

(7/22/03 16:41)

Reply

-----

---

Quote:

---

ynithrix:

By what I said I was simply referring to the futility of marriage. That to undergo divorce is a waste of time and that it would be a whole lot easier if the unwanted wife were simply disposed of, killed, given to someone else, put up for sale, or whatever. A farmer doesn't divorce his field.

---

You have described divorce perfectly. That is what the essence of divorce is. It is to dispose of her in the most cost effective and heartless way possible. If your marriage materialised from your "will to power" then it must end in divorce.

DIVORCE - PHYSICAL?

The self that you create through a "will to power" is horrid. When it is fully developed in your projection (wife) you will live in fear and horror of yourself. You have to get rid of yourself before you destroy yourself. You cannot face yourself.

LONG MARRIAGE - MENTAL?

This is a result of a kind of male neurasthenia. A plant like attitude to life. A man with no will whatsoever. This marriage was brought about by the will of others and maintained by the will of others. In later life when all the voices of the will and conscience are completely dead the two will remain together for they are too old to do anything else.

SEPARATION - SPIRITUAL?

The self that you create through a "will to value" is sublime. This situation and the results are more complex and difficult to explain.

These are my latest thoughts. Are they in harmony with anyone else?

ynithrix

Registered User

Posts: 160

(7/22/03 21:22)

Reply

Re: -----

---

Connection with a woman is a part of the Will To Power, since it produces offspring which adds to the power of the group. But what about marriage? This is just a selfish quest for self-happiness which ultimately fails.

"The self that you create through a "will to power" is horrid."

Horrid from a feminine perspective? Perhaps pitiless, apathetic, cold?

"When it is fully developed in your projection (wife) you will live in fear and horror of yourself."

It is not my perfection of a woman to have such a will. That is what I believe a man must have. Women are below it, they are tools by which power can be obtained, not the achievers of it. They have their own path to follow, necessary as it is. Hence my projection is that, instead.

WolfsonJakk

Registered User

Posts: 1104

(7/23/03 2:47)

Reply

Re: -----

---

DEL wrote,

Quote:

---

LONG MARRIAGE - MENTAL?

This is a result of a kind of male neurasthenia. A plant like attitude to life. A man with no will whatsoever. This marriage was brought about by the will of others and maintained by the will of others. In later life when all the voices of the will and conscience are completely dead the two will remain together for they are too old to do anything else.

---

It is interesting how we project ourselves on all scenarios, often without ever realizing we are doing it. The moderators of this forum are correct when they say that nothing has meaning except that which we give it.

Tharan

DEL

Registered User

Posts: 542

(7/23/03 6:38)

Reply

"Otto Weininger on the Internet"

---

Quote:

---

Tharan:

The moderators of this forum are correct when they say that nothing has meaning except that which we give it.

---

Have you ever wondered why when you click on "The Thinking Man's Minefield" it takes you through to the option of "Otto Weininger on the Internet" ?

What do you think of what Weininger has to say?

DEL

Registered User

Posts: 543

(7/23/03 6:53)

Reply

"Will to power" vs "Will to Value"

---

Quote:

---

ynithrix:

Connection with a woman is a part of the Will To Power, since it produces offspring which adds to the power of the group. But what about marriage? This is just a selfish quest for self-happiness which ultimately fails.

---

Interesting point. But let's think about this "power of the group" in the context of the "Will to power" you mention. If male/female relationships are not managed effectively in the WTP (will to power) group there will be internal strife, the infrastructure will collapse and the power dissipated. Correct?

If so WTP goes well with the idea of arranged marriages. No?

It is also very difficult for the WTP group to generate offspring.

ynithrix

Registered User

Posts: 162

(7/23/03 10:52)

Reply

Re: "Will to power" vs "Will to Value"

---

"If male/female relationships are not managed effectively in the WTP (will to power) group there will be internal strife, the infrastructure will collapse and the power dissipated. Correct?"

Indeed. Society at present is experiencing this problem by pretending women are equal, and so taking them away from their proper job as mothers.

"If so WTP goes well with the idea of arranged marriages. No?"

I wouldn't agree with marriage at all. Perhaps women should be prizes for special achievers, which would encourage effort on the others' parts.

"It is also very difficult for the WTP group to generate offspring."

Central to the group is how it arranges itself, not just having power but putting it to use. If it has this good order, it will arrange itself so that women are at home raising the kids, men are at work providing and achieving. In this case, it is far easier for the WTP group to generate kids, because everyone knows their place and works with greatest efficiency.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1300

(7/23/03 14:37)

Reply

---

---

Quote:

---

It is not my perfection of a woman to have such a will. That is what I believe a man must have. Women are below it, they are tools by which power can be obtained, not the achievers of it. They have their own path to follow, necessary as it is. Hence my projection is that, instead.

---

tools by which power can be obtained?! You are thinking of men! Women are playthings! I know women more intelligent than you Ynithrix.

Your shit about special achievers being awarded women as prizes makes me want to heave loads of vomit about the place.

ynithrix Registered User Posts: 165 (7/23/03 15:57) Reply	Re: --- <hr/> Ok.
Dave Toast Registered User Posts: 478 (7/23/03 21:19) Reply 	Re: --- <hr/> One also has to wonder why you hijack WTP virtually exclusively for justification of seeming misogyny.
ynithrix Registered User Posts: 166 (7/24/03 0:13) Reply	Re: --- <hr/> I have applied the WTP to this and other discussion which seem misogynous simply because these discussions have all been about women in some way. I also believe WTP is absolute justification for war.
DEL Registered User Posts: 548 (7/24/03 6:34) Reply	Re: --- <hr/> So you see any value at all in the opposite of WTP? WTV (Will to value)
ynithrix Registered User Posts: 167 (7/24/03 14:18) Reply	Re: --- <hr/> Please specific exactly what you consider valuable, in this context.
DEL Registered User Posts: 554 (7/24/03 16:10) Reply	Re: --- <hr/> LIFE

ynithrix  Registered User  Posts: 170  (7/25/03 21:18)  Reply	Re: --- <hr/> Schopenhauer's Will To Life? Or just Life? Either way I see WTP as life, not a part of it. I don't see how they are opposites.
DEL  Registered User  Posts: 560  (7/27/03 2:35)  Reply	WTP &amp; WTV <hr/> WTP appears to me to be terrestrial and sometimes reaches celestial.  WTV appears to me to be cosmic

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Genius Forum

Causality • Courage • Rationality • Determination • Logic • Integrity • Thinking • Ideals
Wisdom • Reason • Discipline • Truth • Masculinity • Perfection • Universe

Genius News

David Quinn's Site

The Thinking Man's Minefield

EZB Edit

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Divorce and Doppelgangers

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Dave Toast Registered User Posts: 480 (7/27/03 21:29) Reply 	Re: WTP &amp; WTV <hr/> WTP is a misnomer anyway. Application is the only thing that'll manifest anything of power. Similarly, science is the only way to omnipotence. But that is only one aspect of the gods.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1311 (7/27/03 22:28) Reply	----- <hr/> Here you are sciencizing when you never answered me when I asked who the gods are!

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 484

(7/29/03 0:21)

Reply

Re: -----

---

I guess you are talking about the agnosticism thing. I don't remember you asking that above. It was more along the lines of agnosticism Vs atheism Vs theism wasn't it? And obviously, I would have no definitive answer to your question.

Anyway, I wasn't making any grand proclamations above, I was merely saying that I think that science is the only way to a practical omnipotence; which is one facet normally associated with and attributed to a theistically defined God. Although you will note that I used a lower case g to refer to gods in the above post, and draw your own conclusions.

The actual point however, was that will is nothing unless allied with application.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1316

(7/29/03 1:18)

Reply

----

---

I don't care whether you spell gods with a G or a g, and I disagree that will to power is a misnomer----willing is an application, the meaning can only include the physical, the applicable. We are not speaking of 'wish to power' or of any kind of desiring divorced from action.

"Practical omnipotence"---now that's a misnomer!

DEL

Registered User

Posts: 562

(7/29/03 7:02)

Reply

Re: WTP & WTV

---

Quote:

---

Dave Toast:

WTP is a misnomer anyway.

Application is the only thing that'll manifest anything of power.

Similarly, science is the only way to omnipotence.

. . . .I was merely saying that I think that science is the only way to a practical omnipotence;. . . .

---

Quote:

---

suergaz:

"Practical omnipotence"---now that's a misnomer!

---

Why do you see WTP as a misnomer?

Quote:

---

Weininger:

Let us leave the doctrine that views science as a means to an end, and turn to the one for which science is an end-in-itself. Here, too, however, we still cannot give an unconditionally positive evaluation. Science can also be an end-in-itself in two ways: A person can want knowledge as power, and he can want it as value.

Knowledge can be wanted or kept as power. Knowledge as power is wanted by the person who does not acknowledge nature, who denies existence altogether, by the evil person. He sees the problems, sees that people suffer with them, but he wants to refute them, and in this way demonstrate his contempt for those people. He does not like questions, is not acquainted with them, at most for him the question is a means of forcing an answer, and he does not give answers, because inner clarification is not a moral need for him. Rather, the fundamental form of his answer is triumphant irony about the question.

---

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 485

(7/29/03 7:44)

Reply

Re: WTP & WTV

---

Quote:

---

Zag: willing is an application

---

Close, turn it round for a subtle distinction.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 486

(7/29/03 7:50)

Reply

Re: WTP & WTV

---

Quote:

---

Zag: "Practical omnipotence"---now that's a misnomer!

---

Nah, the omnipotence bit is a misnomer, the practical bit is a qualifying operator, ratifying the conjunction.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 488

(7/29/03 8:00)

Reply

Re: WTP & WTV

---

To elaborate on the other completely separate point:

Omnipresence = no problem.

Omniscience = the way of the mind.

Omnipotence = the way of the world.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1326

(7/29/03 13:48)

Reply

---

---

DEL, read my words, I don't see WTP as a misnomer, Dave Toast does.

Dave, that willing is an application is the subtlest distinction possible. Or can you be subtler?

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 489

(7/30/03 7:54)

Reply

Re: ---

---

That willing is an application is a gross oversimplification, disregarding the larger part of will. There's plenty of willing that has no tangible effect whatsoever, never mind one of any power or advancement.

That application is a willing doesn't say much but at least it's correct. No need for subtlety, just plain fact.

The title WTP speaks of ideals and creates an undeniable misnomer.

ATP would speak of actualization and it's nomenclature would be correct.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1329

(7/30/03 12:10)

Reply

-----

---

Quote:

---

That willing is an application is a gross oversimplification

---

Actually, it's just plain fact.

Quote:

---

There's plenty of willing that has no tangible effect whatsoever, never mind one of any power or advancement.

---

What you speak of here is not willing, but wishful thinking.

Quote:

---

The title WTP speaks of ideals and creates an undeniable misnomer.

---

What ideals does it speak of? I cannot see how it is a misnomer.

Quote:

---

ATP would speak of actualization and it's nomenclature would be correct.

---

What do you mean it would? Does it or doesn't it? And what is it anyway? Application to power?! What does that mean?

prozak997

Registered User

Posts: 18

(7/31/03 2:01)

Reply

Re: WTP & WTV

---

WTP = far simpler than Will itself as conceived by Schopenhauer and in rare moments Nietzsche

Without the Jewish overemphasis on absolutes, marriage can be seen as what it is: a sacred task of propagating self and species.

Everything else is just hype and Jewish psychology.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 830

(7/31/03 3:45)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Women are playthings! I know women more intelligent than you Ynithrix.

---

True enough, and it is man's job to provide her with enough relaxation and leisure to properly entertain him. What do you think women's intelligence is for, Zeus?

=====

I think that when women percieve they are about to be "disposed of" they should immediately kill the man's children, especially his sons. In fact, as punishment for really disagreeable behavior from a man, women should regularly kill the man's sons. And, if she has time, she should poison the man first, before he gets the chance to kill her. Also, with some solidarity among women, a man who has committed such a crime can be adequately punished. A man's dick can easily be broken during sex, for example.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 494

(7/31/03 8:39)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

DT: That willing is an application is a gross oversimplification.

Zag: Actually, it's just plain fact.

DT: There's plenty of willing that has no tangible effect whatsoever, never mind one of any power or advancement.

Zag: What you speak of here is not willing, but wishful thinking.

---

Main Entry: will

Pronunciation: 'wil

Function: noun

Etymology: Middle English, from Old English willa will, desire; akin to Old English wille

Date: before 12th century

1 : DESIRE, WISH: as a : DISPOSITION, INCLINATION <where there's a will there's a way> b : APPETITE, PASSION c : CHOICE, DETERMINATION

2 a : something desired; especially : a choice or determination of one having authority or power b (1) archaic : REQUEST, COMMAND (2) [from the phrase our will is which introduces it] : the part of a summons expressing a royal command

3 : the act, process, or experience of willing : VOLITION

4 a : mental powers manifested as wishing, choosing, desiring, or intending b : a disposition to act according to principles or ends c : the collective desire of a group <the will of the people>

5 : the power of control over one's own actions or emotions

6 : a legal declaration of a person's wishes regarding the disposal of his or her property or estate after death; especially : a written instrument legally executed by which a person makes disposition of his or her estate to take effect after death

- at will : as one wishes : as or when it pleases or suits oneself

Main Entry: apply

Pronunciation: &- 'plI

Function: verb

Inflected Form(s): ap·plied; ap·ply·ing

Etymology: Middle English applien, from Middle French aplier, from Latin applicare, from ad- + plicare to fold -- more at PLY

Date: 14th century

transitive senses

1 a : to put to use especially for some practical purpose <applies pressure to get what he wants> b : to bring into action <apply the brakes> c : to lay or spread on <apply varnish> d : to put into operation or effect <apply a law>

2 : to employ diligently or with close attention <should apply yourself to your work> intransitive senses

1 : to have relevance or a valid connection <this rule applies to freshmen only>

2 : to make an appeal or request especially in the form of a written application <apply for a job>

- ap·pli·er /-'plɪ(-&)r/ noun

Main Entry: ap·pli·ca·tion

Pronunciation: "a-pl&-'kA-sh&n

Function: noun

Etymology: Middle English applicacioun, from Latin application-, applicatio inclination, from applicare

Date: 15th century

1 : an act of applying: a (1) : an act of putting to use <application of new techniques> (2) : a use to which something is put <new applications for old remedies> (3) : a program (as a word processor or a spreadsheet) that performs one of the important tasks for which a computer is used b : an act of administering or superposing <application of paint to a house> c : assiduous attention <succeeds by application to her studies>

2 a : REQUEST, PETITION <an application for financial aid> b : a form used in making a request

3 : the practical inference to be derived from a discourse (as a moral tale)

4 : a medicated or protective layer or material <an oily application for dry skin>

5 : capacity for practical use <words of varied application>

Quote:

---

DT: The title WTP speaks of ideals and creates an undeniable misnomer.

Zag: What ideals does it speak of?

---

It speaks of the ideal that willing produces tangible results. As previously stated, the larger part of willing obviously produces no tangible results.

Quote:

---

Zag: I cannot see how it is a misnomer.

---

Main Entry: mis·no·mer

Pronunciation: "mis-'nO-m&r

Function: noun

Etymology: Middle English misnoumer, from Middle French mesnommer to misname, from mes- mis- + nommer to name, from Latin nominare -- more at NOMINATE

Date: 15th century

1 : the misnaming of a person in a legal instrument

2 a : a use of a wrong name b : a wrong name or designation

- mis·no·mered /-m&rd/ adjective

Quote:

---

DT: ATP would speak of actualization and it's nomenclature would be correct.

Zag: What do you mean it would? Does it or doesn't it? And what is it anyway? Application to power?! What does that mean?

---

It means that the misnomer that is the title WTP does not speak of the actualization that the doctrine behind the title conveys. Were it's title to be of a more correct nomenclature, it would be titled something akin to ATP.

WTP is only part of the story, exclusively living and manifesting according to the principles of one's WTP is the greater part.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1332

(7/31/03 10:09 am)

Reply

---

---

What a horrible lot of unnecessary work you went to digging up those definitions. You gave the definition of misnomer (I know what one is) but you failed to show how 'will to power' is one. Also you did not tell me what you mean by ATP. I assume I guessed correctly, in which case it is simply poor english! "Application TO power"?! Are you going to tell me that makes sense?! If you had said AOP I might have understood you.

Quote:

---

It speaks of the ideal that willing produces tangible results.
As previously stated, the larger part of willing obviously produces no tangible results

---

No it doesn't. If you are saying that willing 'can' produce tangible results (which you are), how could the fact that willing produces tangible results be an ideal?

Edited by: suergaz at: 7/31/03 10:18 am

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1333

(7/31/03 10:24 am)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Have you read the saga of the volsungs Anna?

(I'll call you birdofhermes if you'd prefer it)

Womens intelligence is for life!

Edited by: suergaz at: 7/31/03 10:35 am

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 831

(7/31/03 15:12)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Have you read the saga of the volsungs Anna?

---

No, I shall look it up. I'm sure I must be missing something important.

Quote:

---

(I'll call you birdofhermes if you'd prefer it)

---

I care not a whit what you call me. A rose is still a rose.

You know that, as a woman, I have no firm identity anyway. And that which I do have, I'd like to discard.

Quote:

---

Womens intelligence is for life!

---

True again, but do you mean that women value life?

ynithrix

Registered User

Posts: 171

(7/31/03 6:23 pm)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Women have no more intelligence than dogs or bacteria. They use this only to get what they want, never for the benefit of the race. As for the laughable proposition of a woman with power or authority, I'd like to see it. I think your husband, he to whom you belong, should be less lenient, women need a full-body beating from time to time--it stops them thinking they matter.

Edited by: ynithrix at: 7/31/03 6:24 pm

ynithrix

Registered User

Posts: 172

(7/31/03 18:56)

Reply

Re: ---

---

"True enough, and it is man's job to provide her with enough relaxation and leisure to properly entertain him."

He needs to provide no such thing. It is society's/man's responsibility to retain social order. This has failed in the present day, as women are allowed to pretend to be worthwhile. It is not a trade of leisure-entertainment, instead it is life-entertainment--the women who doesn't entertain sexually has no worth at all and can be killed. But when women are permitted to over-exaggerate their worth, they no doubt think they deserve something for their sexual gift.

"What do you think women's intelligence is for, Zeus?"

There aren't any examples of this alleged intelligence.

"I think that when women percieve they are about to be "disposed of" they should immediately kill the man's children"

I think you became angered at this point, it's quaint that you try to express it. Your reply, however, shows only that you have no conception at all of evolution or society. I remember in our previous discussion, you saying about how bad patriarchy is, because it would kill everything, whereas women don't have what it takes to kill their own children. You then contradicted this by talking about 'amazon women' and their apparent killing of male children. You have again proved yourself to be a mere liar, talking only to satisfy the current situation without any integrity or consistency.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1339

(8/1/03 0:08)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

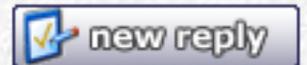

Women have no more intelligence than dogs or bacteria. They use this only to get what they want, never for the benefit of the race. As for the laughable proposition of a woman with power or authority, I'd like to see it. I think your husband, he to whom you belong, should be less lenient, women need a full-body beating from time to time--it stops them thinking they matter.

---

ynithrix, are you trying to disgust me or does this come naturally to you?

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.32
Copyright ©1999-2005 ezboard, Inc.

Genius Forum

Causality • Courage • Rationality • Determination • Logic • Integrity • Thinking • Ideals
Wisdom • Reason • Discipline • Truth • Masculinity • Perfection • Universe

Genius News

David Quinn's Site

The Thinking Man's Minefield

EZB Edit

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Divorce and Doppelgangers

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
ynithrix Registered User Posts: 173 (8/1/03 6:50) Reply	Re: --- <hr/> If your egalitarian side wants to puke, I have no problem with that. If it chokes on it's own vomit, that would be beneficial to you.
Dave Toast Registered User Posts: 498 (8/1/03 8:15) Reply 	Re: --- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Zag: What a horrible lot of unnecessary work you went to digging up those definitions. <hr/> Hey no problem, took a couple of minutes. Quote: <hr/> You gave the definition of misnomer (I know what one is) but you failed to show how 'will to power' is one. Also you did not tell me what you mean by ATP. I assume I guessed correctly, in which case it is simply poor english! "Application TO power"?! Are you going to tell me that makes sense?! If you had said AOP I might have understood you.

---

Read over what you've written here again. Pay special attention to your point about the conjunctive in the title and bear in mind that I did indeed mean it to be ATP. That's where the beef's at. If I say WOP, do you now understand?

AOP makes no sense, it puts the cart before the horse. Similarly, WTP puts the horse behind the cart.

Quote:

---

No it doesn't. If you are saying that willing 'can' produce tangible results (which you are), how could the fact that willing produces tangible results be an ideal?

---

You are applying the law of the excluded middle where it is not justified.

Perhaps I should have used the word always. Or you should have used the word sometimes.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1341

(8/1/03 10:50)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Nice try Dave.

Ynithrix, you are an ugly little shit and I would flush you if I met you.

BryanParrish

Global User

Posts: 69

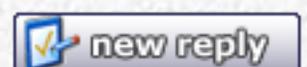

(8/3/04 5:34)

Reply

Re: Divorce and Doppelgangers

---

FUCK SHIT PISS BALLS NUTS

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.32
Copyright ©1999-2005 ezboard, Inc.

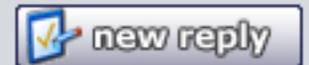

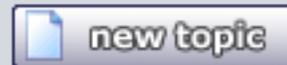

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> DQ site

Page 1 2 3 4 5

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
DavidQuinn000 Forum Host Posts: 2250 (3/3/04 1:08 pm) Reply 	DQ site <hr/> I've finally decided to compose a website which brings together all my various writings under one roof. It can be accessed here. The Larkin Debate link isn't working yet, as it is still under construction. But everything else should be working okay.
WolfsonJakk Posts: 1499 (3/3/04 1:38 pm) Reply	DQ site <hr/> Saved as a favorite.
voce io Registered User Posts: 791 (3/3/04 1:44 pm) Reply 	Re: DQ site <hr/> I like the tree.

Paul Registered User Posts: 486 (3/3/04 1:49 pm) Reply	Re: DQ site <hr/> Thank you in advance!
Rairun Registered User Posts: 207 (3/3/04 3:24 pm) Reply	... <hr/> "the renowned sage, Kevin Solway" hehehe
MGregory Posts: 470 (3/3/04 3:33 pm) Reply 	Re: DQ site <hr/> In celebration of the christening of your site, I read your Woman essay again for the first time in a long while. I think I just realized it's significance for the first time! A direct arrow to the ego! I think you should make it a part of WOTI just so it isn't overlooked. I think it is totally under-rated. Definitely worthy of the deepest of meditations. Edited by: MGregory at: 3/3/04 3:54 pm
MGregory Posts: 471 (3/3/04 4:20 pm) Reply 	Re: DQ site <hr/> Under-rated except maybe for this: Quote: <hr/> But what of men? Are they any better? Sad to say, most men lead mediocre lives and as such are no better than women. Nevertheless, it remains true that men as a whole are much nearer to the ideal than women. Whereas it will always be the case that a small proportion of men will have potential for wisdom, there is barely a single woman who can claim even this. <hr/> Always? You think?

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 841
(3/3/04 5:49 pm)
Reply

Re: DQ site

---

David: ...I am a highly logical thinker... an incisive book that rivals Chuang Tzu and Nagarjuna at their best... correspondence between the renowned sage, Kevin Solway, and myself... the greatest writings of the human race.

Wuahahahaha!

At least we can't accuse you of false modesty.

Thomas

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 1010
(3/3/04 10:21 pm)
Reply

Re: DQ site

---

Nice and neat, fussless.

What is it with the trees BTW? I ask because of a recent experience with such a form.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2505
(3/3/04 11:01 pm)
Reply

---

---

David Quinn, flower of the infinite!

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2251
(3/4/04 9:34 am)
Reply

Re: DQ site

---

Dave Toast wrote:

Quote:

---

What is it with the trees BTW? I ask because of a recent experience with such a form.

---

What happened?

I like trees. They seem to express the complexity and formlessness of the Infinite, and yet they embody the strength and defiance of a proud, solitary individual as well. So they capture both aspects of existence very nicely.

There is both the sharp finiteness and solidity to their being, as well as the fluid intricate boundlessness of Nature in their every branch, twig and cell. A tree is wild and free, and yet imprisoned and vulnerable - just like we are.

Trees also seem to highlight the reality of causality very well. One can see in the twisted, crooked, almost deformed nature of their branches, twigs and leaves, the sheer designlessness of Nature. And yet one can also perceive the order and coherency this designlessness is able to create.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2252

(3/4/04 9:44 am)

Reply

Re: DQ site

---

Matt wrote:

Quote:

---

In celebration of the christening of your site, I read your Woman essay again for the first time in a long while. I think I just realized it's significance for the first time! A direct arrow to the ego! I think you should make it a part of WOTI just so it isn't overlooked. I think it is totally under-rated. Definitely worthy of the deepest of meditations.

---

Yes, I read it recently myself and I also think it is pretty good. Although it is a bit clumsy in its expression, there's lots of youthful passion and insight. And most of it is right on the money as well. I may well include a reworked version in WOTI.

Quote:

---

Under-rated except maybe for this:

But what of men? Are they any better? Sad to say, most men lead mediocre lives and as such are no better than women. Nevertheless, it remains true that men as a whole are much nearer to the ideal than women. Whereas it will always be the case that a small proportion of men will have potential for wisdom, there is barely a single woman who can claim even this.

Always? You think?

---

I wouldn't take it too literally. It's a figure of speech. A bit like saying that in every bag of oranges there will "always" be one or two bad ones which are foul-tasting.

MGregory

Posts: 478

(3/4/04 11:12 am)

Reply

Re: DQ site

---

I think it makes you sound biased, though. Do you care about that or no? What are you trying to appeal to in a person when you say something like that?

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2254

(3/4/04 8:12 pm)

Reply

Re: DQ site

---

If I cared about not wanting to sound biased, I would never say anything about women! I would simply chant the mantra that women can do anything, and can have everything, and then retire to my little corner.

That there will "always" be a small proportion of men who have potential for wisdom is a truism based on probabilities. Given the fact that a highly-developed masculinity is an essential prerequisite for making spiritual progress, and given that a wide variety of men are produced in each generation, it stands to reason that there will "always" be a certain proportion of men with a highly developed masculinity.

The possibility that in some generations there won't be any men at all with potential doesn't undermine this truism.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 1013

(3/5/04 12:38 am)

Reply

Re: DQ site

---

Quote:

---

DQ: What happened?

---

I suppose it wasn't much, but it seemed significant at the time.

I went to my uncle's funeral a couple of weeks ago. Death has little effect on me these days, I've been pretty bomb proof in that respect since the death of my father. So I was sitting there, thinking about the good times we'd had and offering my thoughts to him, and me. I listened to the eulogies, and thought my own. Then there was a reading from the bible, 1 Corinthians 13 - the "but without love, I am nothing" one. The words caught my ear and I listened to them closely, having not heard it for years, not since before my interest in spirituality. The content put me in mind of the true spirituality that is cloaked and obscured by Christianity, and modern literal understanding; the words blew me away and I found myself in deep contemplation on life, death, religion, spirituality, enlightenment, causality, duality, etc. After the church service we went to the crematorium and I continued my contemplation whilst others chatted around me. This carried on through the service and after it was done, we all filed out to an area outside where people offered their condolences to the family and whatnot, but I was still in a world of my own, slightly divorced of the proceedings. On the other side of the road stood a fairly large gnarled old tree, leafless in winter - fractal, which I just found myself drawn to. I could hardly take my eyes off it but I wasn't looking at a tree, it was just dark form highlighted by the clear sky. It was kind of like an altered state, there but not there, form and formlessness, an intuitive glimpse. There was intellectual content, much like that which you have written on trees above, plus some science stuff, but the feeling was what struck me, it was all pervading.

When I saw the form of the trees on your site and your icon, it put me in mind of that moment and that feeling.

If I speak with the languages of men and of angels, but don't have love, I have become sounding brass, or a clanging cymbal.

If I have the gift of prophecy, and know all mysteries and all knowledge; and if I have all faith, so as to remove mountains, but don't have love, I am nothing.

If I dole out all my goods to feed the poor, and if I give my body to be burned, but don't have love, it profits me nothing.

Love is patient and is kind; love doesn't envy. Love doesn't brag, is not proud, doesn't behave itself inappropriately, doesn't seek its own way, is not provoked, takes no account of evil; doesn't rejoice in unrighteousness, but rejoices with the truth; bears all things, believes all things, hopes all things, endures all things.

Love never fails. But where there are prophecies, they will be done away with. Where there are various languages, they will cease. Where there is knowledge, it will be done away with.

For we know in part, and we prophesy in part; but when that which is complete has come, then that which is partial will be done away with.

When I was a child, I spoke as a child, I felt as a child, I thought as a child. Now that I have become a man, I have put away childish things.

For now we see in a mirror, dimly, but then face to face. Now I know in part, but then I will know fully, even as I was also fully known.

But now faith, hope, and love remain--these three. The greatest of these is love.

John
Registered User
Posts: 97
(3/5/04 2:10 am)
Reply

Re: DQ site

---

Thanks for postings those quotes Dave - good to see such in a logic venue.

John

silentsal
Registered User
Posts: 74
(3/5/04 4:52 am)
Reply

Re: DQ site

---

Dave, I like this talk of love too ps: suergaz I will miss you while you're away but do not pity me it is good.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2255
(3/5/04 7:32 am)
Reply

Re: DQ site

---

I liked Dave's funeral/tree story a lot better. The experiential insight into God's nature is a wondrous thing.

The love quotes, on the other hand, seemed foreign and intrusive. A form of rape upon a purer state of mind ....

But I assume that they were what the priest read out at the funeral. It is a standard passage that helps prop up the egotistical and mindless religion of Christianity. It soothes those don't do anything else apart from engage in selfish forms of love.

And obviously at funerals, it is used as a kind of sedative to help people endure their grief.

It makes me want to vomit.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 1015
(3/5/04 7:57 am)
Reply

Re: DQ site

---

Those words are indeed 1 Corinthians 13, and I don't think they have anything to do with egotistical selfish love. They sound more like words on spirituality to me.

Edited by: Dave Toast at: 3/5/04 8:03 am

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 1016
(3/5/04 8:02 am)
Reply

Re: DQ site

---

Agreed on the placative words for mourners thing.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2257
(3/5/04 10:05 am)
Reply

Re: DQ site

---

Dave wrote:

Quote:

---

Those words are indeed 1 Corinthians 13, and I don't think they have anything to do with egotistical selfish love. They sound more like words on spirituality to me.

---

Maybe, but egotistical people who know nothing about spiritual love and knowledge can too easily take find sustenance for their egotistical loves in these kinds of passages.

That is why Christians tend to focus on these passages almost exclusively and completely ignore the infinitely greater (and infinitely more dangerous) wisdom contained elsewhere in the Bible.

I must admit that your reaction to that particular passage at the funeral, whereby you went into an altered state, did give me pause for thought and made me wonder whether these sort of passages are worthwhile after all. If they are capable of producing sublime responses in people, then perhaps I shouldn't be condemning them?

But then two things automatically come to mind:

- These passages obviously appeal to people who are not in a very rational state of mind to begin with. In your case, you were probably quite emotional at your uncles's funeral, even though I know you deny being too upset about his death. It is likely that the Corinthians passage stealed past your temporarily quietened rational defences and interacted with your vulnerability. Skilled talk about love in those circumstances can have a very big impact. It can reawaken deep attachments and feelings that we had towards our parents when we were very young.

- Low-quality religions such as Christianity have no qualms about taking advantage of people's vulnerability in those circumstances and, incredibly, even seek to win converts in that manner. If you had been a less intellectual bloke, Dave, without solid experience of philosophical reasoning and profound spiritualities, you could have easily been converted over to Christianity through your experience of the tree. Become lost forever as a born-again Christian.

It is a very insidious practice and needs constant condemning.

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

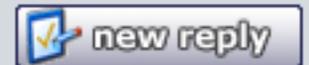

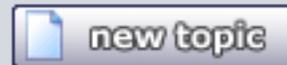

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> DQ site

Page 1 2 3 4 5

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
voce io Registered User Posts: 795 (3/5/04 10:11 am) Reply	... <hr/> Those passages serve one purpose, and if you were wise you wouldn't condemn them. What is the purpose of reason but to love? Why have wisdom if it doesn't serve the purpose of love? I don't see any point in you teaching if you don't either love yourself teaching, or you love the other person so much that you would help them out in becoming wise. These types of verses are necessary sections in the Bible, and the other dangerous verses are just as necessary. One without the other is stupid.
Dave Toast Registered User Posts: 1017 (3/5/04 10:24 am) Reply 	Re: DQ site <hr/> Quote: <hr/> DQ: These passages obviously appeal to people who are not in a very rational state of mind to begin with. In your case, you were probably quite emotional at your uncles's funeral, even though I know you deny being too upset about his death. It is likely that the Corinthians passage stealed past your temporarily quietened rational defences and interacted with your vulnerability. Skilled talk about love in those circumstances can have a very big impact. It can reawaken deep attachments and feelings that we had towards our parents when we were very young. <hr/>

I should think so, in many cases. But I can guarantee you that I felt nothing about his death, perhaps for his loved ones, slightly, but nothing more.

With regard to funerals, I've found that in many personal ways I quite enjoy the experience. They are generally good occasions for psychological study, if nothing else. They tend to concentrate the mind on higher matters too. There are only a handful of funerals that I don't ever want to have to go to, his wasn't one of them, although we were close.

The experience was exactly as I described it, although there was an associated feeling, it didn't seem to be emotional in nature.

Anyway, I like trees too.

Quote:

---

Low-quality religions such as Christianity have no qualms about taking advantage of people's vulnerability in those circumstances and, incredibly, even seek to win converts in that manner. If you had been a less intellectual bloke, Dave, without solid experience of philosophical reasoning and profound spiritualities, you could have easily been converted over to Christianity through your experience of the tree. Become lost forever as a born-again Christian.

---

Agreed, but then aren't all spiritual writings only for those who have ears. The others won't hear, no matter what. But then I suppose you need to have run into the right causes in the first place, and in the instance of those without ears, such words may well be the right causes.

Edited by: Dave Toast at: 3/5/04 10:26 am

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1447
(3/5/04 11:41 am)
Reply

Re: DQ site

---

If you read the love passage carefully, you will see that it is a very elevated form of love, and a very elevated sort of person who will be capable of it. I agree with Dave that the best passages are not heard correctly by those without ears. One that I think of in this regard is the command to "love your enemies." How many Christians even consider that they could actually do that? Or how about, "Be ye perfect as your Father in heaven is perfect"? Or, "At that day ye shall know that I am in the father, and ye in me, and I in you."

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2520
(3/5/04 11:50 am)
Reply

---

---

Nietzsche wrote of loving ones enemies, that we've learnt that well enough, but one must learn how to hate ones friends! (:D)

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 847
(3/5/04 5:57 pm)
Reply

Re: DQ site

---

If I speak with the languages of men and of angels, but don't have love, I have become sounding brass, or a clanging cymbal.

If I have the gift of prophecy, and know all mysteries and all knowledge; and if I have all faith, so as to remove mountains, but don't have love, I am nothing.

If I dole out all my goods to feed the poor, and if I give my body to be burned, but don't have love, it profits me nothing.

Love is patient and is kind; love doesn't envy. Love doesn't brag, is not proud, doesn't behave itself inappropriately, doesn't seek its own way, is not provoked, takes no account of evil; doesn't rejoice in unrighteousness, but rejoices with the truth; bears all things, believes all things, hopes all things, endures all things.

Love never fails. But where there are prophecies, they will be done away with. Where there are various languages, they will cease. Where there is knowledge, it will be done away with.

For we know in part, and we prophesy in part; but when that which is complete has come, then that which is partial will be done away with.

When I was a child, I spoke as a child, I felt as a child, I thought as a child.

Now that I have become a man, I have put away childish things.

For now we see in a mirror, dimly, but then face to face. Now I know in part, but then I will know fully, even as I was also fully known.

But now faith, hope, and love remain--these three. The greatest of these is love.

A hymn to love. Very good. I forgot that the Bible contains some good stuff. Been too long in Asia, I guess. Thanks for bringing it to our attention.

Thomas

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1449

(3/6/04 12:40 am)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Nietzsche wrote of loving ones enemies, that we've learnt that well enough,

---

We may have learned the phrase, but we most certainly have not learned to do it.

Quote:

---

but one must learn how to hate ones friends!

---

An entirely different concept. But you, you strange bird, you have rebuffed my hospitality. Now perhaps if you are trying to follow Nietzsche, I'll try to forgive you.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2260
(3/6/04 7:27 am)
Reply

Re: DQ site

---

Thomas wrote:

Quote:

---

A hymn to love. Very good. I forgot that the Bible contains some good stuff. Been too long in Asia, I guess. Thanks for bringing it to our attention.

---

It's just a pity that you re-quoted it out of hate.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2261
(3/6/04 7:40 am)
Reply

Re: DQ site

---

Dave Toast wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: These passages obviously appeal to people who are not in a very rational state of mind to begin with. In your case, you were probably quite emotional at your uncles's funeral, even though I know you deny being too upset about his death. It is likely that the Corinthians passage stealed past your temporarily quietened rational defences and interacted with your vulnerability. Skilled talk about love in those circumstances can have a very big impact. It can reawaken deep attachments and feelings that we had towards our parents when we were very young.

DT: I should think so, in many cases. But I can guarantee you that I felt nothing about his death, perhaps for his loved ones, slightly, but nothing more.

---

But you probably did feel more vulnerable, no? Attending a funeral usually causes one to reflect upon one's own mortality and loss of attachments, etc.

Quote:

---

The experience was exactly as I described it, although there was an associated feeling, it didn't seem to be emotional in nature.

---

I wasn't implying that your altered state was emotional, only that it was probably generated out of an emotional/vulnerable state of mind.

The main reason why I say this is because the Corinthians passage on love is quite meaningless when the reader's mind is not being influenced by emotional feelings of love.

Quote:

---

Anyway, I like trees too.

---

I thought you might! :)

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 1018
(3/6/04 10:54 am)
Reply

Re: DQ site

---

Quote:

---

DQ: But you probably did feel more vulnerable, no? Attending a funeral usually causes one to reflect upon one's own mortality and loss of attachments, etc.

---

Yes but I don't see that as an implicitly weakening experience, in the short-term or long. It could surely work both ways. Personally, I'd say my feeling was closer to invulnerability than normal, on reflection. And I'd say it was brought on by contemplation of the words for what they seem to me, as opposed to being hoodwinked by them and the occasion. They weren't read out by a priest BTW, they were read by his son-in-law, with a heavy Irish twang.

Perhaps though, at the time, vulnerability wasn't even an issue. It was more like such things as in/vulnerability holding no importance.

Quote:

---

I wasn't implying that your altered state was emotional, only that it was probably generated out of an emotional/vulnerable state of mind.

---

Eggs is eggs, and I am certainly not without emotion. However the suggestion implies that it was born of a heightened emotional/vulnerable state. Whilst I'm sure that certain aspects of emotion were heightened, I don't feel that this made me more vulnerable than normal. On an individual level, I guess that it would depend on the comparison between one's normal emotional state, and the emotional state at the time. Now I'm sure that you'd say any emotional state is one of vulnerability, but of course the comparison in question is not between emotional states and non-emotional states, it is that outlined above. The heightened emotions at the time seemed to tend more towards girding one's spirit, as opposed to weakening it.

Quote:

---

The main reason why I say this is because the Corinthians passage on love is quite meaningless when the reader's mind is not being influenced by emotional feelings of love.

---

Do you think, how so?

For me, that passage is about abiding in a focussed will to truth, and acting accordingly. Love, in other words.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 1019
(3/6/04 11:03 am)
Reply

Re: DQ site

---

Add that to correct intellectual appreciation of truth and it's logical ramifications and one is moving in the right direction, don't you think.

Towards God, dare I say.

For want of a word with less pre-concieved connotations.

suergaz

Registered User
Posts: 2532
(3/6/04 11:25 am)
Reply

----

We? Who Anna? And how have I rebuffed your hospitality?!

Who doesn't like trees?

Dave Toast

Registered User
Posts: 1021
(3/6/04 11:39 am)
Reply

Re: ----

Dendrophobics.

The fear of Trees is defined in our Phobia Dictionary as Dendrophobia.

Savio's Notes on this Specific Phobia:

People who suffer from Tree Phobia also tend to show symptoms of Forest Phobia. A slight feeling of anxiety when approaching trees is quite a common symptom of this phobia.

This type of phobia is generally caused infrequently & extremely rare.

Phobia Treatment & Prevention according to Savio:

Consult a Therapist if your anxiety levels increase whenever you see a Tree. Avoid forest trips, camping & outdoor picnics till you can conquer this phobia.

Risky Career Options for People with this Phobia:

- Forest Employee
- Gardener
- Animal Rights Activist
- Organic Plant Researcher

Good Career Options for People with this Phobia:

- Big City Office Jobs
- Home based Jobs
- Jobs where Trees aren't involved

Disclaimer - We are not responsible for any specific phobia, phobia treatment, cause of phobia, weird phobias, curing phobia, phobia statistics, common phobias, strange phobias, different phobias, most common phobias, phobia symptoms, overcoming unusual phobias, info on phobia displayed on this Phobia Information Page.

Phobias & Fears listed here are for information & entertainment value to our visitors. Our aim is to compile a Phobia Dictionary out of all our in-depth painstaking & fearless research. Kindly consult a Psychologist for accurate symptoms or to diagnose & treat your type of Phobia.

: -)

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1453

(3/6/04 11:55 am)

Reply

Re: ----

---

We? Who Anna?

You said "we" had learnt Nietzsche about loving one's enemies. I assume you meant society in general. Anyway, that is what I meant.

You spurned the honor of being our Beltane sacrificial god. It's not every year we get a real Zagreus to attend. And you didn't email me, to discuss it, which I took/take as a decline.

Edited by: birdofhermes at: 3/6/04 1:17 pm

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2534

(3/6/04 12:08 pm)

Reply

-----

---

I said no such thing! I said Nietzsche said we have learnt well enough how to love ones enemies! By we he meant his readers!

I see, so pagans are simply christians who have no church.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2535

(3/6/04 12:16 pm)

Reply

---

---

I take that back, he did mean 'we' altogether.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1454

(3/6/04 1:22 pm)

Reply

Re: -----

---

Quote:

---

I said Nietzsche said we have learnt well enough how to love ones enemies! By we he meant his readers!

---

His readers must be exemplary people. I can hardly believe he said that.

Quote:

---

I see, so pagans are simply christians who have no church.

---

Not at all, it is that Christians are pagans with a church! Besides, we might have communion, and you'd like that. We might serve unleavened bread, or seek manna from heaven.

... Oh, do not tell the priest our plight, Or he would call it a sin;
But we have been out in the woods all night, A-conjuring Summer in! ...

Edited by: birdofhermes at: 3/6/04 1:24 pm

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1114

(3/6/04 2:43 pm)

Reply

Re: -----

---

Quote:

---

What is the purpose of reason but to love? Why have wisdom if it doesn't serve the purpose of love?

---

What does reason have to do with love? Generally, love is a poison to reason and reason is poison to love.

When you speak of love, do you speak of romantic love? Romantic love is not necessarily sexual love. It can be love of one's child or love of a friend.

I am curious because you seem to equate love with reason and with wisdom.

Please explain what you mean by love. My understanding is that all love -- love of life, love of philosophy, love of humankind -- is romantic.

Are you a romantic?

That is not necessarily a bad thing. It leaves you plenty of room for growth. But it also can be stagnating.

In non-romantic terms, voce io, what is love?

If you require the same definition from me, I am willing to comply. However, likely, it will not be a pretty sight.

I think that you -- and anyone -- should closely examine the meaning you attach to words before you use them. Your use of reason and wisdom and love seem to be very loose and broad.

I know that it is asking a lot but it would be refreshing to see you -- or anyone -- narrow down your meanings and investigate your attachments to such meanings -- minus the usual philo-babble excuses and justifications.

That is a tough thing to ask and a tough thing to do -- because it requires honesty.

Faizi

Rairun
 Registered User
 Posts: 209
 (3/6/04 4:17 pm)
 Reply

...

---

I agree that all love is romantic, but I don't think it's necessarily in conflict with reason. That only happens when reason stops being a tool that is used to express a value and becomes a value in itself. Then you might find yourself with a conflict between two values.

Paul
 Registered User
 Posts: 492
 (3/6/04 5:30 pm)
 Reply

---

---

Yes, I agree with Marsha (if I understood her well), true love is romantic. But it also contains the lurking cynicism and bitterness part. Tricky, as we all know. So reason has its necessary place. Not more than that. (Personal view, he added superfluously and hardly smart :-)

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2537
(3/6/04 5:37 pm)
Reply

----

That's because love is the base of our reason, everyones, no matter how we skew it individually. The wisest woman I know told me it is the human condition.

Page 1 2 3 4 5

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM
> GENIUS FORUM
> DQ site

Page 1 2 3 4 5

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
FarrokhzAd Registered User Posts: 3 (3/6/04 6:01 pm) Reply	Re: ... <hr/> Faizi I'm not sure what you mean by "philo-babble" but let us see... If I love you then I have no will for you. I see you. I accept you. Love is complete and active acceptance. By loving somebody you give them an utter and complete lack of judgement. Love is an embracement of all that is. It is recognition that you are inseparable from even those aspects that you do not choose to embody. It is that, and a willingness to expose the truth. What some people call "love" is only a desire to be accepted or a wish to be needed. Love has nothing to do with desire. Some would say that love teaches but I say that any learning is incidental. Love fosters growth via acceptance. Now, even though it might not be a pretty sight. Will you comply and offer your definition of love?

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2538

(3/6/04 9:05 pm)

Reply

----

---

Quote:

---

Love has nothing to do with desire.

---

Only if you're a robot.

voce io

Registered User

Posts: 801

(3/7/04 10:46 am)

Reply

Re: ----

---

Ehh, it gets complicated. I'm on three hours of sleep and a 10 hour work day. Pardon my stupidity...

What does reason have to do with love? Generally, love is a poison to reason and reason is poison to love.

Before we can say what reason has to do with love, we have to know what reason and love are. I will assume we all know what reasoning is (this is a philosophy forum), so onto love.

Love is attachment. I don't agree with Farrok's idea that love is some sort of passive acceptance of a person - that is just one of the products of love mixed with reasoning. Love is the desire, sexually and romantically, towards a person. Sexual love is sometimes called "lust" and considered a bad thing, but it's the basis for a man's love (I say "a man's love" because I really don't know how women love men initially). When a man first sees a woman he judges her based on her appearance, if it turns him on or not. That's the raw core of love. If she eventually dumps him, he will become discouraged because it's his love for his goals which is broken. His goal is to fuck her.

If a man gets any girl he wants, there's no reason for romantic love. Romantic love is only sexual love mixed with friendship. A heterosexual man can be friends with guys and girls, but can only have romantic love with a woman. In ancient civilizations such as early Greece, men would fulfill their sexual desires with whomever they wanted, and would fulfill friendships ONLY with men (for the most part). Women were thought to be inferior to men, and couldn't be friends but only sex partners. Householders with different roles. Romantic love wasn't a possibility then. Today, things are changing and there are many women who are just as capable of doing just as many things as men are. Today, romantic love is very possible and it occurs everywhere.

The type of love Farrok was talking about was, in my opinion, some sort of enlightened love. It's dealing with relationships while knowing the truth. The truth is that people eventually leave, and that there's no reason fretting over a lost love. You accept them in the moment and embrace that moment with them, and when that moment leaves and a new one comes you have no choice but to embrace that. It's a pretty wise way of dealing with lovers, and is quite hard to do unless you're really attached to the truth.

When a person values something, it does mean they love it and that they're attached to it. David has said he values wisdom and truth, as do I...yet he's said he isn't attached to those things. I disagree with his assessment. If you value something, you do so because you hate what it conquers and because you love what it accomplishes. It's because there is that innate tendency in EVERY single person which is to love the better.

Hmm, so back to your question: What does reason have to do with love? Without love, one wouldn't be inclined to go through with the arduous task of conscious reasoning. Without reasoning, true love for an individual is very close to impossible. In loving someone else truly, you have to know the parts of yourself which you hate and the parts which you love. The majority of relationships I've seen (at my age group) are self serving relationships. It's all about getting laid, or having a significant other, or feeling secure. These people I've seen don't know what love is, yet they use it. It uses them.

Following true love, a person has no choice but to begin rationalizing. Following reasoning, a person has no choice but to love.

My understanding is that all love -- love of life, love of philosophy, love of humankind -- is romantic.

Are you a romantic?

That is not necessarily a bad thing. It leaves you plenty of room for growth. But it also can be stagnating.

I don't really know what you mean by 'romantic'.

If you require the same definition from me, I am willing to comply.

However, likely, it will not be a pretty sight.

Sure, I'd like to see this ugly love definition of yours.

I think that you -- and anyone -- should closely examine the meaning you attach to words before you use them. Your use of reason and wisdom and love seem to be very loose and broad.

I know that it is asking a lot but it would be refreshing to see you -- or anyone -- narrow down your meanings and investigate your attachments to such meanings -- minus the usual philo-babble excuses and justifications.

That is a tough thing to ask and a tough thing to do -- because it requires honesty.

I very highly agree with you, and if you don't think I've given a decent enough definition, then say so and I'll try at it again.

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1116

(3/7/04 1:51 pm)

Reply

Re: ----

---

Philo-babble is like psycho-babble. Same thing. I get tired of it, as it abounds on this forum.

"This is this and that is that" and on and on and on and on. All these fucks trying to sound wise and meaningful and being very careful to type out words that serve to impress.

Who are we trying to impress, already? Do I or anyone need to impress Thomas or Dan or David or Kevin or whoever else -- for crying out loud, Leo? What are we hoping to get out of impressing anyone here? Is there some prize for astonishment or shock?

If that was the case, I would have won it long ago and there would be no contest.

Hell, I did win it. Old news. Woo-hoo.

There is no contest. It disgusts me to see so many trying to out-do so many. Such ado about nothing. I am quite old. I don't have the time or the energy to waste on contesting.

I think that you gave an honest answer, voce io - or whoever you are.

	In my next post, I will give attention to what you wrote. Thank you. Faizi
WolfsonJakk  Posts: 1511  (3/7/04 2:45 pm)  Reply	Re: ---- <hr/> Voce io is named Scott. He honestly walks the path. College kid. He will listen. Farrok: college kid. He won't listen. He competes to impress. Welcome back, Marsha. Tharan
voce io  Registered User  Posts: 802  (3/7/04 3:35 pm)  Reply 	Re: ---- <hr/> ...I compete to impress too, stupid as it is. If I didn't, I doubt I'd have the audacity to even post anything here.
Thomas Knierim  Registered User  Posts: 853  (3/7/04 6:37 pm)  Reply 	Re: ---- <hr/> Hi Marsha, Glad to see you are back. How are then vines and shrubs doing that needed tending? Thomas

N0X23

Registered User
Posts: 95
(3/9/04 5:00 am)
Reply

Re: ----

Hello Marsha.

Quote:

---

I don't have the time or the energy to waste on contesting.

---

Do you mean this type of contesting?

Quote:

---

Philo-babble is like psycho-babble. Same thing. I get tired of it, as it abounds on this forum.

"This is this and that is that" and on and on and on and on. All these fucks trying to sound wise and meaningful and being very careful to type out words that serve to impress.

Who are we trying to impress, already? Do I or anyone need to impress Thomas or Dan or David or Kevin or whoever else -- for crying out loud, Leo? What are we hoping to get out of impressing anyone here? Is there some prize for astonishment or shock?

If that was the case, I would have won it long ago and there would be no contest.

Hell, I did win it. Old news. Woo-hoo.

There is no contest. It disgusts me to see so many trying to out-do so many. Such ado about nothing. I am quite old. I don't have the time or the energy to waste on contesting.

I think that you gave an honest answer, voce io - or whoever you are.

In my next post, I will give attention to what you wrote.

Thank you.

Faizi

---

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2549

(3/9/04 1:13 pm)

Reply

---

---

We young ones alone know there is no contest! Let's outdo each other until we die! Death to the stagnant!

(Marsha, you're a young one, so cut the bullshit about being quite old!)

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2268

(3/10/04 10:06 am)

Reply

Re: DQ site

---

The Larkin Debate link is now working on my site.

 Philip Mistlberger

Posts: 44

(3/10/04 11:56 am)

Reply

ezSupporter

Re: DQ site

---

I have just now read through that debate.

My opinion of it is that Mr. Larkin's position seemed to be more that of a "legal mind", that is, looking for ways to devalue the person, as opposed to tackling the issue of what enlightenment truly is. Essentially, it seemed to me to be a debate between a mystic (David) and a (albeit tempermental) scholar (Robert). Although very interesting, such a debate is bound to be limited because what is being debated (enlightenment) has been openly "claimed" by only one of the two parties.

This is something like two people "debating" the nature of a foreign country, when only one of them has actually travelled there. The first one speaks from direct experience, the second one from having studied certain comprehensive travel books, guides, and maps.

The scholar can make many good points; after all, much can be learned about another country without having to travel there. And in some respects one might even argue that not travelling there might be better so as to not bias or cloud or distort one's capacity for objective study. But with enlightenment, this approach really falters, precisely because enlightenment is all about *going beyond* mere objective study. It is about recognizing that Consciousness itself is not just some "thing" to be studied, but is our actual nature.

So my appraisal of the Quinn-Larkin debate is something like this -- two racers standing at a start line together. Only with enlightenment (in a certain respect) when you look down at the starting blocks, you see the word "FINISH LINE" printed at your feet. The mystic recognizes this. The scholar does not, and thinks he actually has a race to run, and territory to cover.

So I really saw two people in that debate operating on completely different wavelengths.

All the same, it was very interesting.

MGregory

Posts: 509

(3/10/04 1:29 pm)

Reply

Re: DQ site

---

It was really no contest. David has been studying it for at least fifteen years and Larkin has never studied it. He wasn't even putting forth his own ideas, but repeating those of Anna's (BirdofHermes) and a few people on the Ponderer's Guild.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 1026

(3/10/04 2:11 pm)

Reply

Re: DQ site

---

Quote:

---

My opinion of it is that Mr. Larkin's position seemed to be more that of a "legal mind", that is, looking for ways to devalue the person, as opposed to tackling the issue of what enlightenment truly is. Essentially, it seemed to me to be a debate between a mystic (David) and a (albeit tempermental) scholar (Robert).

---

Casistry versus Causistry :-)

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 865
(3/10/04 2:36 pm)
Reply

Re: DQ site

---

David: The Larkin Debate link is now working on my site.

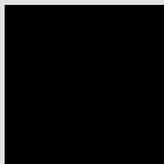

Just out of curiosity: did you ask Robert and Guildenstern for permission to re-publish this?

Philip: So I really saw two people in that debate operating on completely different wavelengths.

Nobody could deny that. However, to me it seemed more like two people with different ideas of where the finishing line lies running into arbitrary directions. There wasn't much of a race.

Thomas

 Philip Mistlberger
Posts: 45
(3/10/04 5:34 pm)
Reply
ezSupporter

Re: DQ site

---

Thomas, I've noticed that you seem to write very well and, like several others around here, seem to have a sharp intellect and to be well educated. But I'm curious about your own subjective experience with satoris, kenshos, "awakening experiences", etc. (or however you may label them).

How would you say your own direct realization of "awakening" corresponds to your intellectual grasp and/or education around such matters?

Gurdjieff used to speak about two kinds of men -- a "man of knowledge", and a "man of Being". His idea was that "men of knowledge" are relatively common, but that "men of Being" are very rare -- that is, a man whose "Being" is fully actualizing his "knowledge".

To me the essence of Enlightenment is making this shift from "knowledge" to "Being". Of course, being a "man of Being" does not mean that we lose "knowledge", or our capacity to utilize knowledge as a teaching/learning tool.

How far along do you see yourself on this spectrum from "knowledge" to "Being"?

John Registered User Posts: 101 (3/10/04 6:13 pm) Reply	Re: DQ site <hr/> (This message was left blank) Edited by: John at: 3/10/04 8:54 pm
jimhaz Registered User Posts: 618 (3/10/04 7:30 pm) Reply	Re: DQ site <hr/> Just out of curiosity: did you ask Robert and Guildenstern for permission to re-publish this? I see no reason why he should.
Thomas Knierim Registered User Posts: 863 (3/10/04 7:31 pm) Reply 	Re: DQ site <hr/> Philip: But I'm curious about your own subjective experience with satoris, kenshos, "awakening experiences", etc. (or however you may label them). The bottom line is that satoris are real although they seem to be rare. I can count only two experiences in my own life that I would classify as such. Both were basically experiences of infinite beauty. The first was directly related to the Tao. Awakening experiences there are plenty - hopefully in everybody's life- since I would count any intellectual or spiritual "eureka" experience as such, for example understanding Euler's formula, or a sudden insight into some person's feelings, or any such thing. Philip: How would you say your own direct realization of "awakening" corresponds to your intellectual grasp and/or education around such matters? These experiences are enjoyable and very motivating. They have stimulated my interest and diligence, but somehow they seem to be freak products, unmitigated and seemingly random. I cannot really tell you how they relate to the education and mind forming process, except that intensive intellectual work seems to benefit them. Philip: Gurdjieff used to speak about two kinds of men -- a "man of knowledge", and a "man of Being". His idea was that "men of knowledge" are relatively common, but that "men of Being" are very rare -- that is, a man whose "Being" is fully actualizing his "knowledge".

I don't know much about Gurdjieff, but I'd agree with him on this point. Intelligence and knowledge are quite common. So are beauty, health, wealth, and a number of other desirable characteristics. I presume that with "men of knowledge" he means people who use their intelligence in greedy ways. These are common, too. In fact, people use their blessings in greedy ways all too often. Intelligence, however, has one big advantage over the other blessings. You can debunk greed. You can use it to investigate and reinvent yourself, which is essentially what "men of being" do, I presume.

Philip: To me the essence of Enlightenment is making this shift from "knowledge" to "Being". Of course, being a "man of Being" does not mean that we lose "knowledge", or our capacity to utilize knowledge as a teaching/learning tool.

Probably true. However, please consider that studying and philosophizing is just one specific form of 'being'. I think of it as a meditation exercise. By thinking very intensively about a specific problem, the mind becomes focused. Writing philosophy is a bit like a mantra using words and ideas as its materials. In addition, it is a great way to get directly to your reader's mind.

Philip: How far along do you see yourself on this spectrum from "knowledge" to "Being"?

Pretty much in the middle. As much as I love intellectual discovery, I would not place it above my requirement for personal integrity. I spend much time with my studies, but I also spend much time with people, animals, or simply being outside. Nature is great here in Thailand. I am still running my own small software company, but I have downsized it quite a bit due to circumstances and declining interest.

Thomas

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2275
(3/11/04 7:51 am)
Reply

Re: DQ site

---

Thomas wrote:

Quote:

---

Just out of curiosity: did you ask Robert and Guildenstern for permission to re-publish this?

---

I asked the trees and they said I could.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 864
(3/11/04 12:15 pm)
Reply

Re: DQ site

---

Thomas: Just out of curiosity: did you ask Robert and Guildenstern for permission to re-publish this?

David: I asked the trees and they said I could.

That's what I thought.

Jimhaz: I see no reason why he should.

How about courtesy and respect?

Lifting something from another website and putting it on your own without asking for permission reflects poor editorial ethics in my view. The Internet is a public medium and maybe these people don't want to appear on David's website.

This brings back bad memories of the Genius Monthly Newsletter where the founders of this board collected material from the discussions and actually edited it to make the discussions convey their point of view. Luckily this practice has now ceased.

I think that at least Robert Larkins should be asked if he agrees with the publication of this debate.

Thomas

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

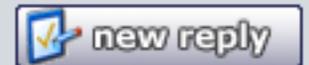

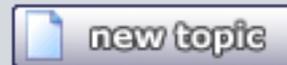

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> DQ site

Page 1 2 3 4 5

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
voce io Registered User Posts: 815 (3/12/04 12:27 am) Reply 	Re: DQ site <hr/> It was on an internet forum for all to see, so Robert shouldn't care. There was no copyright anyways.
jimhaz Registered User Posts: 619 (3/12/04 11:10 am) Reply	Re: DQ site <hr/> Debates on open forums have no issues relating to ownership – and even if they did I'd pay no notice. I'd still publish it on my personal website even if Robert Larkin did not wish it to be. There is certainly no reason to be courteous, considering Robert's style of argument. As usual, Thomas was just looking for something to nitpick about in relation to David. Did you have an older brother who picked on you when young Thomas?

WolfsonJakk

Posts: 1518

(3/12/04 11:29 am)

Reply

Re: DQ site

---

Who was a year or so ago that started ranting about "copywrite infringement" concerning something he posted on this public message board? Was it Nemo? Victor D?

Thomas Knierim

Registered User

Posts: 870

(3/12/04 12:49 pm)

Reply

Re: DQ site

---

voce: It was on an internet forum for all to see, so Robert shouldn't care. There was no copyright anyways.

That is a common misunderstanding, voce. According to the Bern convention, the author always retains copyright unless he/she explicitly agrees to give up any such rights by putting material into the public domain, or by releasing it for specific purposes as specified in an accompanying copyright notice.

When you post to a newsgroup, or to a public forum you implicitly agree to publish your material in that location, but you do not implicitly give consent to publication on any other website. Therefore, if someone wants to take your material from another website to republish it on another site, that person is required to obtain your consent and possibly that of the website owner.

Excluded from this general rule is what the copyright act refers to as 'fair use'. Under the 'fair use' clause, it is possible to publish small excerpts and quotations without permission, provided they are accompanied by proper attribution. However, the reproduction of an entire speech or discourse several pages long doesn't fall into the 'fair use' category.

jimhaz: There is certainly no reason to be courteous, considering Robert's style of argument.

Okay, given the circumstances David might not want to be courteous to Robert, but there is still reason to treat others fairly and to respect the rules of cyberspace.

Thomas

WolfsonJakk  Posts: 1519  (3/12/04 2:57 pm)  Reply	Re: DQ site <hr/> Yes, respect the rules of cyberspace or you might be an OUTLAW.
Thomas Knierim  Registered User  Posts: 873  (3/12/04 3:21 pm)  Reply 	Re: DQ site <hr/> I think it's more a matter of sportsmanship than a legal matter. Thomas
jimhaz  Registered User  Posts: 620  (3/12/04 6:43 pm)  Reply	Re: DQ site <hr/> sportmanship in relation to philosophy lol !
voce io  Registered User  Posts: 821  (3/17/04 4:55 am)  Reply 	Re: DQ site <hr/> Marsha, I'm waiting for your reply.
Naturyl   Posts: 175  (3/23/04 10:38 am)  Reply 	Re: DQ site <hr/> Actually, it is technically a legal matter. No one would bother to prosecute, of course, but the fact remains that our 'enlightened sage,' Mr. Quinn, is engaging in unethical and in fact illegal behavior by reproducing the written material of others in its entirety without first obtaining explicit consent. I doubt that Robert cares, being a that he is a man of generous disposition and not given to fussing over such relatively minor offenses, but if he were to take issue with this behavior, he would have every right to do so. Those of you who think otherwise are implicitly supporting the theft of intellectual property, which is disrespectful, unethical, and in fact illegal. Such a position is hardly appropriate for anyone, much less a bunch of 'enlightened geniuses' and their hangers-on. David ought to be ashamed of

	himself for resorting to flippant remarks about 'asking the trees' rather than correcting his oversight and respectfully requesting permission from Robert to post the material. David's is not the behavior of a sage, nor is it even the behavior of a decent person. It is instead the behavior of someone with a thinking disorder.
voce io Registered User Posts: 832 (3/23/04 11:01 am) Reply 	Re: DQ site <hr/> Stop whining, it's not like he's getting a profit from his website or anything. If you care so much take it to court.
Naturyl  Posts: 176 (3/23/04 11:19 am) Reply 	Re: DQ site <hr/> It's not whining. It is a matter of principle. I'm glad to see that you are willing to admit your support for the theft of intellectual property. As to the matter of profit, I think that Robert would actually be less concerned if that were the case. As it is, Robert's material is being used as part of a website designed to promote David's views - something that I think Robert would object to more than David making a couple of bucks. So, who else supports theft? Go on, speak up!
ksolway Posts: 372 (3/23/04 11:28 am) Reply 	Re: DQ site <hr/> If a person doesn't want to have their public conversations recounted, then they shouldn't have public conversations.

Naturyl

Posts: 177

(3/23/04 11:49 am)

Reply

Re: DQ site

---

If a person wants to reproduce someone's conversations elsewhere, they should ask permission.

Do you Buddhas need a lesson in basic decency?

WolfsonJakk

Posts: 1531

(3/23/04 12:07 pm)

Reply

Re: DQ site

---

Nat, the kind of "decency" you espouse is never satisfied.

If I put something you wrote in quotes is it plagiarism? If I credit it accurately and post it elsewhere, is it plagiarism? If you like me and I quote something of yours, is it plagiarism?

Tharan

WolfsonJakk

Posts: 1532

(3/23/04 12:11 pm)

Reply

Re: DQ site

---

Quote:

---

So, who else supports theft? Go on, speak up!

---

What are you going to do, tough guy? BAN SOMEONE FROM YOUR FORUM!?

I know you are a computer guy. Do you have any unlicensed software on your computer? What about downloaded music? Are you sufficiently theft free to cast the first stone?

Tharan

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2312

(3/23/04 1:03 pm)

Reply

Re: DQ site

---

Naturyl wrote:

Quote:

---

David ought to be ashamed of himself for resorting to flippant remarks about 'asking the trees' rather than correcting his oversight and respectfully requesting permission from Robert to post the material.

---

I wasn't being flippant. Those who know me know that I often use trees as a symbol for God. I had asked God for permission to reproduce Robert's material and He said it was okay.

Or to put it less poetically, it was impressed upon me that the higher cause of wisdom should take precedence in this case over human custom and legality.

Naturyl

Posts: 178

(3/23/04 4:58 pm)

Reply

Re: DQ site

---

Tharan,

Being silly again? No, I'm not going to ban anyone from my forum. This incident did not even occur at my forum. However, if Guildenstern were to ban David from TPG for posting Robert's writings without permission, I wouldn't blame him. There are people banned from KIR for similar behavior.

David,

Your answer was bizarre. 'God' told you it is okay to post people's writings without asking permission? Hmm, how interesting. Next will 'God' inform you that climbing to the top of a tower with a high-powered rifle is okay because it 'serves the higher cause of wisdom?' After all, there are a lot of folks we could do without, don't you think, David? Would 'God' mind if you killed them? Then again, 'god' has obviously already given you the thumbs up regarding the extermination of female infants, so I guess theft of intellectual property isn't much of a concern for you.

I realize that posting someone's work without permission is nowhere near as serious as killing people, but it's the principle of the thing. If you can ignore

	ethics and even U.S. copyright law because god told you it was okay, what will you come up with next? How about if I start posting advertisements and other such rubbish all over Genius Forum on the basis that I believe such behavior to 'serve the higher cause of wisdom?' Would you object? If so, why?
Paul Registered User Posts: 517 (3/23/04 7:34 pm) Reply	David <hr/> David Quinn took the beautiful pictures of Marsha, that were in his new site, OUT of his site. I have no idea why. Of course I saved them on my HDD. Shave your stupid long beard, Quinn.
Paul Registered User Posts: 518 (3/23/04 7:51 pm) Reply	David [2] <hr/> Oh, if someone is interested in the just 2 weeks old format of David Quinn's site, which must have been quickly changed by puter-guru Kevin Solway, then I'll send you a copy of it. Write to:  paulterbeek@home.nl http://www.spiderwebservices.nl/thegoldengirlsquotes I mean, I can be a genius too. 'I did it my way', and so on.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1486
(3/24/04 2:51 am)
Reply

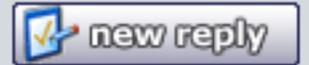

Re: David [2]

Where is this new site?

Page 1 2 3 4 5

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

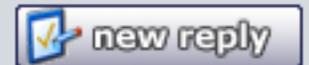

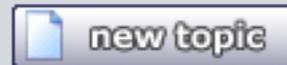

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> DQ site

Page 1 2 3 4 5

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
DavidQuinn000 Forum Host Posts: 2313 (3/24/04 8:21 am) Reply 	Re: David [2] <hr/> Paul, for reasons of his own, is making this up. He is a weird guy at the best of times. Naturyl wrote: Quote: <hr/> Your answer was bizarre. 'God' told you it is okay to post people's writings without asking permission? Hmm, how interesting. Next will 'God' inform you that climbing to the top of a tower with a high-powered rifle is okay because it 'serves the higher cause of wisdom?' <hr/> As I say, I was speaking poetically. All talk about God is poetic in nature. I always act according to my conscience. As far as I'm concerned, my conscience is the supreme judge in all matters. And so it was in accordance with my conscience, that I decided that creating the Larkin Debate site was fine and that it wasn't necessary to ask Robert about it. This was because: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>- Robert's words were uttered in public and they are still displayed on the Ponderers Guild.</li> <li>- Dealing with Robert on any level is problematical at best and, in this issue,</li> </ul> likely to be a huge waste of my time.

Paul Registered User Posts: 519 (3/24/04 9:11 am) Reply	To Anna <hr/> Of course, Mr. Quinn's site is on home.primus.com.au/davidquinn/ Only, for some reason he took the pictures of him and the ones of Marsha out. Which is his right, because it is his site. Sorry, Mr. David, I was just a bit disappointed, that's all.
drowden Forum Host Posts: 1665 (3/24/04 9:19 am) Reply 	Re: To Anna <hr/> What the hell are you talking about, Paul? The only pictures of Marsha or David that I know of on the Net are at my site, in conjunction with the Genius News pages etc etc. There's a few changes to those pages I need to make and haven't caught up with, of course, but for the record they also have nothing whatever to do with Kevin Solway. Do us all a favour Paul and go away. You contribute nothing of worth to this board - at all. I am sorry to be so candid but it has to be said. As to the issue of copyright - give me a break. If you say it publicly that's the end of it. Dan Rowden Edited by: drowden at: 3/24/04 9:20 am
Paul Registered User Posts: 520 (3/24/04 9:25 am) Reply	To Mr. Rowden <hr/> Dan, my excuses to you too. Nothing will go publicly. I'll bite the dust. I've mixed up things. Sorry!

suergaz Registered User Posts: 2580 (3/24/04 9:38 am) Reply	--- <hr/> Dan does himself such disfavour when he presumes to speak for us all.
drowden Forum Host Posts: 1666 (3/24/04 10:31 am) Reply 	Re: --- <hr/> I am speaking for myself, Zag. It is my view that Paul's departure would benefit everybody because it would benefit the board. You are free to disagree, as ever. Perhaps I should have tried to encourage Paul to make more meaningful contributions but, you see, I don't beleive him to be capable of that - or perhaps willing to. Dan Rowden
Paul Registered User Posts: 521 (3/24/04 11:16 am) Reply	Re: --- <hr/> What is genius? Paulie did attract at least a thousand different Northern American colleges and universities to his GG site, in, what is it, two years time? Just for the fun and for mystics. And he paid respect from the beginning to the absolute.net. Enough ego-babble.

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

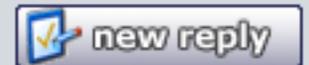

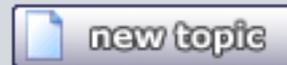

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Drive-by aphorizing...

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Naturyl  Registered User Posts: 12 (12/23/03 1:39 pm) Reply 	 Drive-by aphorizing... <hr/> An agnostic is not a timid atheist, he is an honest one. Belief is a wise man's servant and a fool's master. I'm a quantumist - certainty is against my religion. For that matter, religion is against my religion.
WolfsonJakk Registered User Posts: 1359 (12/23/03 3:24 pm) Reply	 Drive-by aphorizing... <hr/> Tharan ducks for cover then throws up some east side gang signs as Naturyl drives away. "Better luck next time, bendejo!" How have you been, Naturyl? :) Quote: <hr/> Belief is a wise man's servant and a fool's master. <hr/> Can I hire a new servant if the old one displeases me?

Quote:

---

I'm a quantumist - certainty is against my religion.

---

Are you sure about that?

Tharan

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 690
(12/23/03 3:32 pm)
Reply

 Re: Drive-by aphorizing...

---

Naturyl: I'm a quantumist - certainty is against my religion.

You don't like certainty? I am sure you will find your anti-particle here, quantumist. Have you heard of the A=A doctrine?

Enjoy.

Thomas

Naturyl
Registered User
Posts: 13
(12/24/03 11:04 am)
Reply

 Re: Drive-by aphorizing...

---

I have. I prefer a modified version of the law of identity:

Traditional law of identity:

$A = A$

(A television set equals a television set.)

Modified idea:

$A = (\text{infinity}) - A$

(A television set equals infinity minus a television set.)

Problem:

I need to show how these two statements are meaningfully different.

But I have to run at the moment, may be back tomorrow.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 211
(1/6/04 1:07 pm)
Reply | Edit

 Re: Drive-by aphorizing...

---

Traditional law of identity:  $A = A$

(A television set equals a television set.)

Modified idea:  $A = (\text{infinity}) - A$

(A television set equals infinity minus a television set.)

Problem: I need to show how these two statements are meaningfully different.

Problem: You can't add or subtract from an infinity, it doesn't make sense.

*Edit: I don't mean to give it any credos, it doesn't make any sense at all, i just wanted to make a particular point to see if you wanted to pursue it. I think you might have meant to communicate that the television is NOT infinity minus a television. Which is the same as saying that it is what it is, except that the syntax is faulty. Any 'infinite' is just a finite construct within The Infinite, so it's not actually infinite in the true sense of the word.
*

Rhett

Edited by: Rhett Hamilton at: 1/7/04 11:47 am

Biggier
Registered User
Posts: 56
(1/7/04 7:52 am)
Reply

 Re: Drive-by aphorizing...

---

Naturyl,

I like those observation. Especially the one about the agnostic. I am an agnostic myself. And I would love to have a dollar for every atheist who defended No God as ferociously as a True Believer defended God.

That is why I have never found the existence of God nearly as intriguing as why anyone would worship and adore him given the butchershop world around us. I mean, who really knows, right? But, on the other hand, it is the responsibility of those who posit and postulate God's existence to bring him/her/it up on the stage and not mine to "prove" God is just a figment of their imagination.

On the other hand, one has to be careful in how one approaches words like certainty and uncertainty. If you tell someone you are certain that uncertainty reflects reality than you are contradicting yourself, right? How can you be certain of something you claim is encompassed in an inherently uncertain world? That's like saying the meaning of life is meaningless.

In other words, the crucial factor here is human language itself. What can and cannot words tell us about reality? People often embrace language in a mystical way. As though the words they use reflect a literal representation of the relationship between "in my head" and "out in the world". And, respecting much that natural science pursues the representations are as close to literal as you can get---short of being privy to the answers to the biggest primordial questions. Like, say, why does anything exist at all? Language is just an evolutionary tool. It allows us to broaden our accomplishments considerably...but it is not a rosetta stone into ontological or teleological Truth. At least not so far.

Biggie
Biggie

Edited by: Biggie at: 1/7/04 7:55 am

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Eckhart Tolle

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
jimhaz Registered User Posts: 683 (6/13/04 1:46 pm) Reply 	 Eckhart Tolle <hr/> Article www.theage.com.au/articles/2003/09/28/1064687666674.html?oneclick=true Excerpts from: THE POWER of NOW What is the power of Now? None other than the power of your presence, your consciousness liberated from thought forms. So deal with the past on the level of the present. The more attention you give to the past, the more you energize it, and the more likely you are to make a "self" out of it. Don't misunderstand: attention is essential, but not to the past. Give attention to the present; give attention to your behavior, to your reactions, moods, thoughts, emotions, fears, and desires as they occur in the present. There's the past in you. If you can be present enough to watch all those things, not critically or analytically but nonjudgementally, then you are dealing with the past and dissolving it through the power of your presence. You find yourself by coming into the present. .....So break the old pattern of present-moment denial and present-moment resistance. Make it your practice to withdraw attention from past and future whenever they are not needed. Step out of the time dimension as much as possible in everyday life. If you find it hard to enter the Now directly, start by observing the habitual tendency of your mind to want to escape from the Now. You will observe that the future is usually imagined as either better or worse than the present. If the imagined future is better, it gives you hope or pleasurable anticipation. If it is worse, it creates anxiety. Both are illusory. ....

.....The word enlightenment conjures up the idea of some superhuman accomplishment, and the ego likes to keep it that way, but it is simply your natural state of felt oneness with Being. It is a state of connectedness with something immeasurable and indestructible, something that, almost paradoxically, is essentially you and yet is much greater than you. It is finding your true nature beyond name and form. The inability to feel this connectedness gives rise to the illusion of separation, from yourself and from the world around you. You then perceive yourself, consciously or unconsciously, as an isolated fragment. Fear arises, and conflict within and without becomes the norm. ....

What do the QRS or Rhett or Kelly think of this guy. To me his philosophies appear to be close to theirs.

I'm going to get this book.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 1115
(6/13/04 2:16 pm)
Reply

 Re: Eckhart Tolle

---

They are close to him on some fundamental things but poles apart on the whole.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 1116
(6/13/04 3:01 pm)
Reply

Re: Eckhart Tolle

---

Or maybe the other way round.

Get the book Jim.

MGregory
Posts: 580
(6/13/04 3:41 pm)
Reply

Re: Eckhart Tolle

---

I wonder if Oprah would enjoy Wisdom of the Infinite.

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1720
(6/13/04 4:21 pm)
Reply

Re: Eckhart Tolle

---

Only if she thought she could make money from it.

Dan Rowden

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 919
(6/13/04 4:22 pm)
Reply

Re: Eckhart Tolle

---

I bought that book. If you want to get the feel of the book just concentrate only on what happens in the present moment. That's all the book is about.

MGregory

Posts: 581

(6/13/04 4:40 pm)

Reply

Re: Eckhart Tolle

---

What does he mean by "what happens"? Lots of shit happens in the present moment. There's no way you could concentrate on all of it.

voce io

Registered User

Posts: 920

(6/13/04 4:49 pm)

Reply

Re: Eckhart Tolle

---

I'll tell you what "he" means.

You don't have to concentrate on everything that happens. You can concentrate on one or two things. It's simple as fuck. Too simple to give Tolle any money over it.

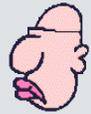

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 1119

(6/14/04 12:15 am)

Reply

Re: Eckhart Tolle

---

Oh dear.

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1210

(6/14/04 3:30 pm)

Reply

Re: Eckhart Tolle

---

Why do you have to register with anything in order to read the site? Is he a Mason or Zionist or something? Belong to a certain fraternity?

Faizi

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1211

(6/14/04 3:38 pm)

Reply

 Re: Eckhart Tolle

---

The second time, I got through.

I can see why he preaches the power of now. He has to do so because, obviously, he is an asshole. To believe in him or his teachings, one must also be an asshole. The only way to believe in an asshole is to not think. Belief is based on superficial things -- the trees; his white suit; his youth; the NOW.

I do not watch television other than the News Soap Operas. Would Oprah really like him? She is so extremely rich that I would think that she might have developed an aversion to the obvious but I do not know.

He just looks so fake.

Faizi

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1212

(6/14/04 3:43 pm)

Reply

 Re: Eckhart Tolle

---

He looks like a young Jerry Falwell. He looks like a Southern Baptist evangelist. Tammy Faye for a girlfriend.

Very distasteful. A Jerry Springer sort of dude.

Faizi

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 1121

(6/14/04 3:44 pm)

Reply

 Re: Eckhart Tolle

---

Oh dear.

MKFaizi
Registered User
Posts: 1213
(6/14/04 3:52 pm)

Reply

Re: Eckhart Tolle

---

I need to find a park bench or two in my life -- near a couple of universities. I think I could pull off this con.

I don't see any similarities between this bullcrap and enlightenment.

When did Kelly and Rhett become equated with David Quinn's and Dan Rowden's philosophical endeavors?

Why?

Faizi

silentsal
Registered User
Posts: 112
(6/14/04 4:38 pm)

Reply

Re: Eckhart Tolle

---

I'm late! I'm late for a very important date.

It can be useful this book, the simple practice of presence can be very effective.

MGregory
Posts: 582
(6/14/04 7:00 pm)

Reply

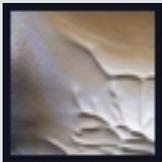

Re: Eckhart Tolle

---

Tolle doesn't sound like an entirely bad guy. I think it's important to accept the present so you can look at it objectively. His teachings just seem incomplete to me. I think you have to abandon falseness to become truly enlightened, so you have to learn to think logically. He doesn't seem to address that from what I can find on the net about him. He talks about "surrendering" a lot, but if your mind is full of lies, then there's no way to tell what you're surrendering to.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 403
(6/15/04 12:06 pm)

Reply | Edit

Re: Eckhart Tolle

---

A few months ago, whilst meandering through a bookstore, casual curiosity led me to read a few pages of a couple of his books.

But a mixture of disgust and laughter soon saw me put them down.

Edited by: Rhett Hamilton at: 6/15/04 12:11 pm

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 685

(6/15/04 1:05 pm)

Reply

Re: Eckhart Tolle

---

Ohh I see, there is only one way to enlightenment, the QRS method. All other methods are bad because they don't go far enough. It doesn't matter that the QRS way is only suited to a handful of people, and thus will be rejected by most. It doesn't matter that more people's sense of reality will be enhanced by these other methods, no, no, it is the process that is all important. Only the hardcore is good enough, only the hardcore has merit.

We all must abandon society, as per the QRS, even though that same society provides the means by which the QRS survive, and that self-provision is no longer environmentally possible without 4 billion less people.

Btw...don't listen to the guy speak on his website. He has that soft, slow speaking of one who is a guru actor. Big turn off.

MGregory

Posts: 583

(6/15/04 3:30 pm)

Reply

Re: Eckhart Tolle

---

Well, Eckhart Tolle doesn't offer his books for free and he sells pictures of himself on his website, so I gotta wonder about the guy.

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 689

(6/15/04 3:32 pm)

Reply

Re: Eckhart Tolle

---

Just had a look at one of his other books.
Brief, bite size stuff - so likely to be rubbish.

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1221

(6/15/04 4:00 pm)

Reply

 Re: Eckhart Tolle

---

It definitely does not take a genius to figure out this dude.

How now brown cow.

Faizi

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Eckhart Tolle

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Dave Toast Registered User Posts: 1122 (6/15/04 4:01 pm) Reply 	 Re: Eckhart Tolle <hr/> I'm reminded of the blind men and the elephant.
jimhaz Registered User Posts: 690 (6/15/04 4:46 pm) Reply 	 Re: Eckhart Tolle <hr/> (But) Eckhart truly practises detachment. "He's never asked how many copies of his book we've sold, nor enquired about the marketing campaign. He couldn't care less. He's only interested in being a teacher, and people resonate with that. He's the genuine article." It was this comment that prompted me to post the question.

MGregory

Posts: 584

(6/16/04 4:13 am)

Reply

Re: Eckhart Tolle

---

There are a lot of people like this - I think it just means that he's a geek.

I think the main difference between Tolle and QRS is what they meditate on. Tolle meditates on the present moment (easy) and QRS meditate on the Universe (difficult), so that might explain Tolle's popularity and QRS's unpopularity.

MGregory

Posts: 585

(6/16/04 4:21 am)

Reply

Re: Eckhart Tolle

---

Well, it does explain it.

Rhett Hamilton

Registered User

Posts: 406

(6/16/04 12:15 pm)

Reply | Edit

Re: Eckhart Tolle

---

Matt wrote:

Quote:

---

I think the main difference between Tolle and QRS is what they meditate on. Tolle meditates on the present moment (easy) and QRS meditate on the Universe (difficult), so that might explain Tolle's popularity and QRS's unpopularity.

---

Would you care to expound on this Matt?

It doesn't look good thus far.

The key is whether one is meditating on conceptions of the moment -- and the accuracy of those conceptions, . . . or whether one is not meditating on anything at all.

In the case of Eckhart, he's probably meditating on deluded conceptions.

In the case of a genuine seeker, they'll be meditating on truthful conceptions of the nature of reality.

In the case of the enlightened -- nothing at all.

Edited by: Rhett Hamilton at: 6/16/04 1:30 pm

MGregory

Posts: 586

(6/16/04 12:26 pm)

Reply

 Re: Eckhart Tolle

---

What do you want me to expound on? Doesn't look good for what? I have no idea what you're talking about.

MGregory

Posts: 587

(6/16/04 12:33 pm)

Reply

 Re: Eckhart Tolle

---

I was being sloppy. I was talking about their teachings, I didn't mean 'them' literally. I have no idea what they meditate on.

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1222

(6/16/04 1:00 pm)

Reply

 Re: Eckhart Tolle

---

In the interest of historical accuracy, I must note that it is QSR and not QRS. QSR was named after a tire factory or something of that sort in either Indiana or Ohio. I prefer to think that it was Indiana.

Faizi

MGregory

Posts: 588

(6/16/04 2:12 pm)

Reply

 Re: Eckhart Tolle

---

Quote:

---

Rhett: In the case of the enlightened -- nothing at all.

---

Well, that's what Eckhart says, so I don't know what you see the difference to be.

Quote:

---

Faizi: In the interest of historical accuracy, I must note that it is QSR and not QRS. QSR was named after a tire factory or something of that sort in either Indiana or Ohio. I prefer to think that it was Indiana.

---

Heh. Sorry, I'll try to be historical from now on, because I know how much you love Indiana. Gary is a truly beautiful city - the pinnacle of American achievement.

rainking

Registered User

Posts: 2

(6/16/04 7:49 pm)

Reply

 trolls

---

Does this particular troll live under a bridge

voce io

Registered User

Posts: 933

(6/17/04 4:42 pm)

Reply

 Re: trolls

---

McGregory made a comment I liked, and I'd like to add to it.

Tolle offers a simple solution (meditating on the present moment), and the QRS a difficult one (thinking logically)...but this is just the surface. Meditating on the present moment requires intense discrimination, and in the process of learning how to do such a thing a person is actually thinking logically. It's like a backdoor technique; he doesn't say that meditating on the now requires and develops logic, because logic is boring and useless to a certain group of people.

QRS's method seems very hard but it's actually simpler and more honest than Tolle's.

N0X23
Registered User
Posts: 146
(6/17/04 5:36 pm)
Reply

 Re: trolls

---

Meditate on the Present Moment...Nonsense.

By the time that we perceive, compare with pre-existing data/experience and then recognize, comprehend and then act. The present is long gone.

Just another snake oil salesmen.

Another nifty tidbit...I've heard that meditating on the NOW, also cures psoriasis, jock itch, wring worm and impotence. ;)

MGregory
Posts: 597
(6/17/04 7:51 pm)
Reply

 Re: trolls

---

Quote:

---

Scott: Tolle offers a simple solution (meditating on the present moment), and the QRS a difficult one (thinking logically)...but this is just the surface. Meditating on the present moment requires intense discrimination, and in the process of learning how to do such a thing a person is actually thinking logically.

---

That could be, and I was thinking about that, since most "spiritual" texts never mention logic at all. I think it's just natural to think logically when seeking something out, so it might even be superfluous to even mention it.

Quote:

---

QRS's method seems very hard but it's actually simpler and more honest than Tolle's.

---

While I agree that it's more honest, I have a hard time accepting that it's simpler. QSR's method has an ethical element to it that Tolle's doesn't seem to have from what I've read of him. In fact, it's primarily ethical, it's just that we mostly talk about the metaphysics of it on the forum, so I think that might paint a distorted picture of it. This ethical element puts it on a totally different level than just thinking or meditating, which is what Tolle seems to be advocating.

MGregory

Posts: 598

(6/17/04 7:57 pm)

Reply

Re: trolls

---

Quote:

Nox: Meditate on the Present Moment...Nonsense.

By the time that we perceive, compare with pre-existing data/ experience and then recognize, comprehend and then act. The present is long gone.

---

He doesn't actually say "the present moment", he calls it "presence". I think he's talking about the immediate, inner experience, so sense data wouldn't come into it. I wouldn't totally write it off, though. I think it could be useful as a psychological technique if you're stressed out or whatever, but I wouldn't call it a spiritual activity unless it could enlighten a person, which I have serious doubts about.

voce io

Registered User

Posts: 941

(6/18/04 5:38 am)

Reply

Re: trolls

---

N0X23: By the time that we perceive, compare with pre-existing data/ experience and then recognize, comprehend and then act. The present is long gone.

The present is never long gone. Think about it, N0X.

MGregory: I think it could be useful as a psychological technique if you're stressed out or whatever, but I wouldn't call it a spiritual activity unless it could enlighten a person, which I have serious doubts about.

Actually, it's a very disturbing psychological technique. I would NEVER recommend this to someone I was trying to make feel good. The way it's taught is flawed: that we aren't in the now, and that we have to enter into the now. It's a type of meditation that assumes we don't have something we already had.

Everyone already lives entirely in the present.

Back like a year and a half ago, when I was into this book and its teachings, I became very suicidal. I was wracking my brain trying to enlighten myself, by assuming I wasn't in the present moment, and I had to enter it. Bad idea. I was very depressed, and I would meditate for an hour everynight and ditch all of my friends.

Now I realize that it isn't that big of a deal. This life is all that I have, and I'm currently enjoying the ride (living in the present). In fact, it's funny, I enjoy and choose to be logical and ethical in my life. It's the only way that makes sense.

-Scott

MGregory

Posts: 603

(6/18/04 1:26 pm)

Reply

Re: trolls

---

That's interesting, Scott, because the same types of things happened to me when I started taking philosophy seriously soon after I started reading Poison For The Heart. I used to spend long hours cursing Solway for writing that book :-). But it's silly to blame external things for shit like that. I think it must be related to the attachment to rewards, the feeling that you're making progress. Most of the time I felt like I was making no progress whatsoever and I would sink into the most hopeless states, suicidal, etc. I think it's just a matter of patience, and not having the unrealistic expectation that you can be 'almost' enlightened. I think it's more productive to convince oneself that you know absolutely nothing unless carefully and meticulously proven otherwise. That way, you don't have that samsaric cycle of pride getting shattered all the time. It really is pointless suffering.

Matt

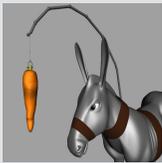

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 697

(6/18/04 8:23 pm)

Reply

Re: trolls

---

I think it's more productive to convince oneself that you know absolutely nothing unless carefully and meticulously proven otherwise.

If you understand cause and effect well enough - then you know everything that needs to be known philosophically. When something is known philosophically then that is all individuals who know that need to know.

None of us are individuals though, we are not completely self reliant, therefore we have to do what we can to forward the human race or go live in a cave. As we don't choose to live in a cave one has to know enough to be productive in some fashion.

I AM

Registered User

Posts: 227

(6/20/04 2:49 pm)

Reply

Re: Eckhart Tolle

---

everybody is ignorant, yet there are different levels of ignorance. Eckhart Tolle's book can be an effective stepping stone depending on your level of ignorance. for those ignorant enough to be affected by the book (99.9 % of society) are actually propelled to the books' level of ignorance (which is usually less than theirs). now motivated they continue to seek truth and years later they look through the book again and realize how ignorant they were. not that there is anything wrong with "The Power Of Now", but that they have changed. if they have learned anything from this experience they will see that they are on some level still ignorant and that the learning will never end. yes, even if you are a Genius Forum superstar. it may have something to do with humility. of course knowing your humble won't help.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1506

(6/20/04 3:56 pm)

Reply

Re: Eckhart Tolle

---

Quote:

---

Ohh I see, there is only one way to enlightenment, the QRS method. All other methods are bad because they don't go far enough.

---

Tolle had a profound enlightening experience that was nonconceptual. Being human, he eventually used his mind to make sense of it. He became an advaitist.

His enlightenment is superior because it is total, involving the whole being.

QRS are Buddhists. Buddhism uses the intellect as a force to change the being. It takes a lot of work. QRS have made good strides, but they are not enlightened because they have many aversions.

Compared to advaitism, buddhism lacks humor and is more conducive to retaining egotism.

It isn't so that QRS go farther. They hang back.

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 948
(6/20/04 7:35 pm)
Reply

 Re: Eckhart Tolle

---

No, it's more like the QRS take the back door, when people such as Tolle go in through the front door.

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

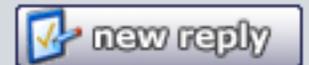

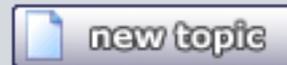

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Eckhart Tolle

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Rhett Hamilton Registered User Posts: 412 (6/22/04 12:05 pm) Reply   Edit 	 Re: Eckhart Tolle <hr/> Hakuin gives a very good account of the importance and relationship between understanding and altered consciousness. Altered consciousness is best described and attained through communicationg about, and delving into, the nature of Reality.
Jones Kelly Posts: 164 (6/23/04 2:56 pm) Reply	 Re: Eckhart Tolle <hr/> A race of sham Zennists has appeared in recent years who consider sitting with dropped eyelids and closed mouths and letting illusory thoughts spin through their minds to be the attainment of a marvelous state that surpasses human understanding. They regard it as the realm of primal buddhahood "existing prior to the timeless beginning." And if they do open their mouths and utter so much as a syllable, they immediately tell you that they have fallen out of that marvellous realm. They believe this to be the most fundamental state it is possible to attain. Satori is a mere side issue - "a twig or branch." Such people are completely mistaken from the time they take their first step along the Way. Ta-hui

WolfsonJakk
Posts: 1657
(6/23/04 3:19 pm)
Reply

 Re: Eckhart Tolle

---

Interesting. Will explore "Ta-hui."

james johnathan
Registered User
Posts: 1
(6/28/04 8:40 am)
Reply

 Re: Eckhart Tolle

---

Quote:

---

QRS are Buddhists. Buddhism uses the intellect as a force to change the being. It takes a lot of work. QRS have made good strides, but they are not enlightened because they have many aversions.

---

QRS are not Buddhists.

Buddhism is emphatically not about the intellect. Changing one's being is only done in part by the intellect, and it is a rather small part, at that. How, then, does one change one's being?

Can you bring me the silent rock from the depths of the ocean without getting your sleeves wet?

Edited by: james johnathan at: 6/28/04 8:41 am

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 430
(6/28/04 11:24 am)
Reply | Edit

 --

---

Hi James, and welcome.

Quote:

---

Can you bring me the silent rock from the depths of the ocean without getting your sleeves wet?

---

Can you tell me what this quote is appealing to?

james johnathan
Registered User
Posts: 2
(6/29/04 9:39 am)
Reply

Re: --

Hi Rhett, thanks for the kindly introduction.

Quote:

Can you tell me what this quote is appealing to?

It's a pointer. If you try to deconstruct it intellectually, you won't attain it's point. If you understand what it's pointing to, then you've attained the point of it.

Put another way, the pointer is presented in intellectual terms, but what it points to is beyond speech or words.

Edited by: james johnathan at: 6/29/04 9:39 am

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1515
(6/29/04 3:14 pm)
Reply

Re: Eckhart Tolle

Quote:

QRS are not Buddhists.

Why not?

Quote:

Buddhism is emphatically not about the intellect.

Buddhism uses an intellectual approach to the nonconceptual. Buddhist writings are highly abstract and require good intelligence.

Quote:

Changing one's being is only done in part by the intellect, and it is a rather small part, at that.

How do you think the being gets changed?

Quote:

---

How, then, does one change one's being?

---

I wish I could explain how. I only know my own path, and that I am at a loss to explain. Confidence, faith, hope, humor, patience, impatience, curiosity and common sense are needed.

Quote:

---

Can you bring me the silent rock from the depths of the ocean without getting your sleeves wet?

---

Yes.

james johnathan
Registered User
Posts: 5
(6/30/04 9:10 am)
Reply

 Re: re: Eckhart Tolle

Quote:

---

Why not?

---

A number of reasons, actually. The most salient one, I think, is that whereas QRS places unequivocal emphasis on the use of reason to penetrate our delusions, Buddhism considers reason as an expedient pointer only. From what I've read from the QRS (quite a bit, actually), enlightenment is something that is assumed to occur once the requisite logical syllogisms are embraced, which conceptually demonstrate the delusion of independence-existence. And of course, once you are affirming a conceptual truth, you are also positing it as some sort of abiding thing (existing independently). Buddhism, with its central notion of sunyata, holds that thought-constructions are only useful in so far as they lead to a total emptiness that negates even those thought-constructions themselves (Nagarjuna's 'destructive dialect'). Hence, the only truth is emptiness - and once you think about it conceptually (abiding to it, and making it a part of yourSelf) you've already lost it. Any tortured, Nietzschean-esque pursuit of "Truth", or "wisdom", is only perpetuating one's own samsara. Don't get me wrong, Nietzsche and "wisdom" aren't bad - though, neither are they good, in so far as actual liberation is concerned.

Quote:

---

Buddhism uses an intellectual approach to the nonconceptual. Buddhist writings are highly abstract and require good intelligence

---

Buddhism doesn't use an intellectual approach to the nonconceptual. What you're approaching is the emptiness of your own mind and all of its contents - how will words help you? Buddhist writings can be highly abstract and certainly do require a strong faculty of reason - but the Dharma is a medicine for a particular kind of sickness, thinking sickness. It isn't necessary. You use the Dharma (reason) to correct your delusionary beliefs, that is all. Then the real fun begins - going beyond beliefs altogether. Many are quite good at recognizing the lack of inherent-existence in things like objects and destroying their attachments to these objects; few are prepared to recognize their subtle attachments to thought, and realize true emptiness of a total negatory nature.

Quote:

---

How do you think the being gets changed?

---

I shouldn't have said "changing one's being". My mistake. Just what, exactly, do you think you need to change? It isn't that there is an ego that you need to destroy, it's that we are attached to a particular idea of "I" - we make the ego through our thinking and our attachments. Take a backward step, before your discriminating consciousness. Forward steps only take you further along the samsaric path.

Quote:

---

Yes.

---

Wonderful! Then I take it you already know why QRS aren't Buddhists, and also how to liberate yourself.

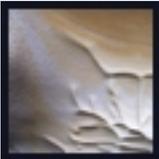

Rhett Hamilton

Registered User

Posts: 430

(6/30/04 10:07 am)

Reply | Edit

Re: re: Eckhart Tolle

James,

Here are a couple of extracts from 'Wisdom of the Infinite'. Can you please point out where you disagree with them?

"One of the major differences between the enlightened sage and the ordinary person is that the sage no longer surrounds himself with a plethora of useless abstractions and therefore no longer exists in a state of confusion. Because these unnecessary abstractions have vanished, he is able to experience God without any effort at all. He no longer has to take any mental steps in order to bring God into consciousness, for already sees God in everything that he experiences. His mind has become infinitely simple, like an uncarved block, no longer needing to engage in the intellectual complexities that are involved in piercing delusion. In a very real sense, he has gone beyond the intellect and rests effortlessly in his true nature."

"The path to enlightenment is simply one of halting deluded mental habits. Because Reality is the totality of all there is, we are already fully immersed in it. So there is no "place" in particular where we have to go, either physically or mentally, in order to experience it. All that needs to be done is to halt the habitual projection of false assumptions upon what is experienced. And as I have argued throughout these chapters, this can really only be done by intellectually understanding the formlessness of Reality and the emptiness of all things.

The better your understanding of formlessness and emptiness is, the fewer deluded mental habits you will have, and vice versa. The two always go together. It is by constantly deepening one's understanding of Reality that allows one to shed one's deluded habits of thought."

james johnathan
Registered User
Posts: 7
(6/30/04 1:03 pm)
Reply

 Re: re: Eckhart Tolle

---

I have no problems with these passages, generally. I'd like to look at one sentence in particular though, since it cuts to the heart of the issue.

Quote:

---

this can really only be done by intellectually understanding the formlessness of Reality and the emptiness of all things.

---

This only holds in so far as you recognize that whatever intellectual concepts you are using to demonstrate emptiness are also empty. Otherwise, you have a contradiction, if you are attempting to become aware of the emptiness of all things, and yet also think that abiding by things will get you there. Does reason play a part in getting a feel for this sort of total emptiness? Sure. But one's reason must be expanded in scope to realize that reason itself is empty. This is not unreasonable. There is no higher expression of reason than the self-destructing understanding that even reason is empty. At its purest, fullest end, reason destroys itself. When reason is understood to be empty, just like everything else, what you have is an intuitive awareness of emptiness. Meditation can help to bring about this sort of intuitive awareness of emptiness. At this point, one realizes the all-pervading emptiness that supercedes even our thought-constructs, and one becomes entirely empty and unobstructed.

WolfsonJakk
Posts: 1675
(6/30/04 3:02 pm)
Reply

 ...

---

Do you see how it goes full circle, Kelly? Huang Po never mentioned anything about "exceptions."

*edit*

Quote:

---

Huang Po is referring to the ability to discern what is finite and what is infinite.

---

Both empty.

Edited by: WolfsonJakk at: 6/30/04 3:07 pm

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 978
(6/30/04 6:04 pm)
Reply

Re: ...

---

Can you bring me the silent rock from the depths of the ocean without getting your sleeves wet?

Can I take off my shirt?

Jones Kelly
Posts: 186
(6/30/04 7:02 pm)
Reply

Re: ...

---

James wrote:

Quote:

---

There is no higher expression of reason than the self-destructing understanding that even reason is empty. At its purest, fullest end, reason destroys itself. When reason is understood to be empty, just like everything else, what you have is an intuitive awareness of emptiness. Meditation can help to bring about this sort of intuitive awareness of emptiness. At this point, one realizes the all-pervading emptiness that supercedes even our thought-constructs, and one becomes entirely empty and unobstructed.

---

When reason is understood to be empty, reason has been employed in that very moment. When reasoning is understood not to inherently exist, at that moment reasoning has been used, and its true nature understood.

I do not think the sage becomes an empty-minded vacuous intuition-body, but simply "nonattached thinker" (obviously is thought rather than thinks). Not seeking the answers, but simply following a logical process of investigating a construct, within an overall perspective of the emptiness of the process.

*edited last sentence*

Edited by: Jones Kelly at: 6/30/04 8:04 pm

Jones Kelly

Posts: 190

(6/30/04 8:24 pm)

Reply

Re: ...

---

Quote:

Tharan wrote:

Do you see how it goes full circle, Kelly? Huang Po never mentioned anything about "exceptions."

Tharan quoted me:

Huang Po is referring to the ability to discern what is finite and what is infinite.

Tharan wrote:

Both empty.

---

When i said Huang Po did not mean "Stop Thinking" by the words "If you can only rid yourself of conceptual thought, you will have accomplished everything", i was not making exceptions. I clearly indicated that the ability to discern what is finite and what is infinite is an essential step in the process of understanding how conceptual understanding creates things (finitude).

To accomplish everything, is to understand that everything is causally created (by conceptual thought). Thus, ridding oneself of conceptual thought reveals the infinite, that was always "there". Huang Po means, Rid yourself of deluded thinking.

Yes, both "finite" and "infinite" are empty, because of the understanding that all that is thought finite, is all along infinite.

I am wondering why you are hiding, Tharan, and not pushing onwards out of your rut. I challenge you to answer this koan:

Taishaku, Lord of the Devas, said to the seven wise sisters: "Tell me if there is anything that any of you holy ladies desire. I will see to it that you have it as long as you live."

One of the women said, "All of us have the four basic necessities of life. We have the seven rare treasures as well. There are, however, three things we would like. A tree without roots. A piece of land where there is neither light nor shade. Some corner of a mountain valley where a shout does not echo."

Taishaku replied, "Anything else, ladies, and I will gladly provide it to you. But the things you ask for... to tell the truth, I just don't have them to give you."

"If you don't have them," said the women, "how can you possibly expect to help others liberate themselves?"

Taishaku found himself at a loss for words. He decided to confer with the Buddha.

When the Buddha learned why Taishaku had come, he said, "As far as that's concerned, Taishaku, none of the Arhats in my assembly has the slightest clue either. It takes a great Bodhisattva to grasp it."

Whoever is reading this is also welcome to grasp it.

WolfsonJakk

Posts: 1678

(7/1/04 9:46 am)

Reply

 ...

---

Quote:

---

I am wondering why you are hiding, Tharan, and not pushing onwards out of your rut. I challenge you to answer this koan:

---

I am in a rut? Interesting, I thought I was only married.

Why don't we skip the crap and you just explain to me in full detail exactly what it means.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2325

(7/1/04 10:23 am)

Reply

Re: re: Eckhart Tolle

James Johnathon wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: .... this can really only be done by intellectually understanding the formlessness of Reality and the emptiness of all things.

JJ: This only holds in so far as you recognize that whatever intellectual concepts you are using to demonstrate emptiness are also empty. Otherwise, you have a contradiction, if you are attempting to become aware of the emptiness of all things, and yet also think that abiding by things will get you there. Does reason play a part in getting a feel for this sort of total emptiness? Sure. But one's reason must be expanded in scope to realize that reason itself is empty. This is not unreasonable. There is no higher expression of reason than the self-destructing understanding that even reason is empty. At its purest, fullest end, reason destroys itself.

---

This is faulty reasoning. Yes, it is obviously true that if all things are empty of inherent existence, then reasoning and intellectual concepts are also empty of inherent existence. But this fact alone doesn't "destroy" reason. An apple tree is also empty of inherent existence and yet it continues to produce fruit. James Johnathon is empty of inherent existence and yet he continues to write to discussion forums and voice what he thinks is true. The empty nature of reason doesn't undercut its ability to do what it is designed to do - namely, expose delusion and lead the mind to an apprehension of truth.

Quote:

---

When reason is understood to be empty, just like everything else, what you have is an intuitive awareness of emptiness.

---

An "intuitive understanding of emptiness" which is not arrived at by reasoning is worthless. It becomes indistinguishable from blind belief.

Quote:

---

Meditation can help to bring about this sort of intuitive awareness of emptiness.

---

Agreed, provided it is meditation on what is ultimately true, as exposed by one's reasoning.

Quote:

---

At this point, one realizes the all-pervading emptiness that supercedes even our thought-constructs, and one becomes entirely empty and unobstructed.

---

But not thoughtless and unreasoning. Demanding that one give up all thought in order to perceive emptiness is to tacitly assume that thought is not really empty after all.

WolfsonJakk

Posts: 1679

(7/1/04 12:08 pm)

Reply

 Re: re: Eckhart Tolle

---

We seem to keep harking back to this excuse of using reason because it is necessary to comprehend reality. Perhaps I agree, but at some point one goes beyond the stage of reaching. Comprehension renders the conceptual stage, as a personal state of mind, as deluded as any other. But it is not about completely switching off the mental processes.

This is point of koans. The teacher delivering a koan to a student for contemplation is not reading from a script. There is no right answer independent of he/she who contemplates.

When I speak this way, I am not speaking to beginners. I am speaking to those that should be beyond those still climbing ladders; David, Rhett, Kelly, etc. Instructions (and certain definitions) to beginners would be different.

I can't say what I am distinctly, but I can tell you in general what I am not. I am not a beginner. And when people come across very sure of themselves concerning specifics, especially regarding purposefully obtuse koans, I can't help but smile. Some climb ladders more graceful and poetically than others. Others stumble as far as they can. On the other hand, some no longer feel the need to climb ladders. The "challenge" is gone.

Tharan

Jones Kelly
Posts: 191
(7/1/04 12:20 pm)
Reply

Re: ...

Tharan wrote:

Quote:

Why don't we skip the crap and you just explain to me in full detail exactly what it means.

Because i am not interested in displaying my knowledge. I am interested in seeing you (my self) push on to perfection. So far, you continue to suppress what you are ignorant of, or are afraid to face your attachments.

If you have no fears, nor are hiding anything, nor have blockages, then you will have a simple and clear response to the koan, which will be edifying to all genuine seekers.

If you are not inspiring all to freedom from delusion, you are inspiring all to remain in hell.

I am not going to answer the koan for you.

Jones Kelly
Posts: 192
(7/1/04 12:45 pm)
Reply

Re: re: Eckhart Tolle

Tharan wrote:

Quote:

I can't say what I am distinctly, but I can tell you in general what I am not. I am not a beginner. And when people come across very sure of themselves concerning specifics, especially regarding purposefully obtuse koans, I can't help but smile. Some climb ladders more graceful and poetically than others. Others stumble as far as they can. On the other hand, some no longer feel the need to climb ladders. The "challenge" is gone.

If the "challenge" is gone, Tharan, you're either perfect, and completely free of all doubts and attachment, or stuck in beginning thinking it's an ending.

The challenge of overcoming habitual delusion, of residual bad habits, is totally out of one's reach if you avoid the training: reasoning.

I know you are not "free" because you still have doubts about the nature of conceptual thought, and because you think that koans don't have one right meaning.

Realisation (enlightenment) is created by conceptual understanding: the construction of how thoughts are causally created and are causally creating the construction - and are thus empty.

Conceptual understanding is not empty because it is meaningless, but because it is meaningful and thus creates an understanding of Reality. Reality appears to be inherently meaningful, because it is impossible within consciousness to cease valuing.

But, because conceptual understanding causally creates how Reality appears, Reality is inherently empty of meaning.

Absolute Understanding, in other words, is the ability to recognise how all constructions are causally created - that Absolute Understanding is the Relative Understanding relating to itself. Relative understanding makes of Reality absolute understanding.

The more complex and abstract your thoughts (i know you are not a beginner in that sense), the more you need to work on this conceptual level to understand Reality.

WolfsonJakk

Posts: 1680

(7/1/04 1:24 pm)

Reply

 ...

---

Quote:

---

I know you are not "free" because you still have doubts about the nature of conceptual thought, and because you think that koans don't have one right meaning.

---

I have no doubt. Koans don't have one right meaning. You are utterly incorrect.

Quote:

---

Realisation (enlightenment) is created by conceptual understanding: the construction of how thoughts are causally created and are causally creating the construction - and are thus empty.

---

I agree it is a significant realization. But that is not enlightenment.

Quote:

---

Conceptual understanding is not empty because it is meaningless, but because it is meaningful and thus creates an understanding of Reality.

---

This "meaning" you ascribe to has no basis. Meaning gives contrast and is thus in the realm of maya. Emptiness draws no such distinctions.

Quote:

---

Reality appears to be inherently meaningful, because it is impossible within consciousness to cease valuing.

---

Wrong. It is called meditation. Did you learn nothing from Hakuin?

You are applying value to your subjective existence. I agree it is difficult to not do otherwise. But awareness of this valuation, and it's true emptiness, does not mean you cannot still do it. I agree that it allows us to function socially. But it should not be mistaken for something essential.

Quote:

---

But, because conceptual understanding causally creates how Reality appears, Reality is inherently empty of meaning.

---

In fact, Reality is what creates the phenomenon of conceptual understanding which in turn reinterprets it's perception of Reality, and at this current stage of development, often tries to give itself meaning.

But Reality would be empty of meaning regardless of whether or not our particular conceptual understanding of it existed. "Meaning" is an entirely subjective descriptor.

Quote:

---

Absolute Understanding, in other words, is the ability to recognise how all constructions are causally created - that Absolute Understanding is the Relative Understanding relating to itself. Relative understanding makes of Reality absolute understanding.

---

If that is the house wish to construct then I wish you many fine summers in it.

Tharan

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Eckhart Tolle

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
WolfsonJakk Posts: 1681 (7/1/04 1:30 pm) Reply	 ... <hr/> Quote: <hr/> If you are not inspiring all to freedom from delusion, you are inspiring all to remain in hell. <hr/> Yes, hell. I desire to inspire. A great philosopher who weilded great power once said, "You are either for us, or you are against us."

james johnathan
Registered User
Posts: 8
(7/1/04 1:40 pm)
Reply

Re: re: Eckhart Tolle

---

Quote:

---

But this fact alone doesn't "destroy" reason

---

It renders it empty, as you said. So let me put it another way - realizing reason as empty destroys any sort of attachment to reason itself. Reason takes you to a particular point, whereupon a mind ripened through meditation can make the intuitive leap to what is beyond reason (not non-reason, as in irrationality, but total emptiness). Do you disagree?

Quote:

---

James: When reason is understood to be empty, just like everything else, what you have is an intuitive awareness of emptiness.

David: An "intuitive understanding of emptiness" which is not arrived at by reasoning is worthless. It becomes indistinguishable from blind belief.

---

There's nothing unreasonable about it, because it's not an intellectual understanding (conceptual postulation). It's a dynamic. It would only be unreasonable if it posited something erroneous. What I referred to as an "intuitive understanding of emptiness" is, for lack of a better descriptor, an awareness, that takes the conceptual truth of emptiness and translates it into a function of one's consciousness. Very simply, it's being empty. Now, you wouldn't call this state of the mind a "blind belief", would you? It's simply not a matter of beliefs at all.

The thing is, it's easy to intellectualize on the emptiness of thought-constructs - ie, to say to yourself, "reason is empty." It's a great deal harder to actually readjust your nervous activity to be empty, and to remain non-attached to everything, including mental content. The destination is an empty mind - flawless, crystal-clear reason is required, but meditation is also needed to set one "beside" one's thoughts. If you're not "beside" your thoughts, then you're still connected to them; thus, they still keep you chasing and grasping.

Quote:

---

James: Meditation can help to bring about this sort of intuitive awareness of emptiness.

David: Agreed, provided it is meditation on what is ultimately true, as exposed by one's reasoning.

---

Meditation isn't done "on" anything - it's being empty. You're enlightened though, so I know that you already know that. David, may I ask what your meditation practice is?

Quote:

---

James: At this point, one realizes the all-pervading emptiness that supercedes even our thought-constructs, and one becomes entirely empty and unobstructed.

David: But not thoughtless and unreasoning. Demanding that one give up all thought in order to perceive emptiness is to tacitly assume that thought is not really empty after all.

---

I agree entirely. Maintaining an empty dynamic with mental-content doesn't mean rendering oneself stupid - it simply means being entirely unaffected, unobstructed and non-attached. One is still free to utilize reason of the sharpest kind when a situation calls for it. There is no lack of precision or acuity in the thinking process. In fact, there's an increase in these things, because when the mind's myriad subtle attachments are shed, the true relationships between things can become clearer. Attachments are a distorting influence.

Jones Kelly  Posts: 196  (7/1/04 1:40 pm)  Reply	 Re: ... <hr/> In response to Tharan: No, that was a great egotist. A great philosopher who wielded great power says, "Truth is everything, and one who doesn't wish to perceive this, is a part of the growing madness." On the edge of madness, one has to throw oneself into Truth, to save one's sanity. If one stays on that edge, fighting against the madness, one loses all seeds of sanity. Edited by: Jones Kelly at: 7/1/04 1:41 pm
suergaz  Registered User  Posts: 2729  (7/1/04 5:39 pm)  Reply	 --- <hr/> "On the edge of madness" (:D) Kelly, you're just a girl! It's harder to get out once you've been in it!
WolfsonJakk  Posts: 1682  (7/1/04 11:51 pm)  Reply	 ... <hr/> Madness; another simple invention. What imaginative folks we have here.
N0X23   Registered User  Posts: 159  (7/2/04 3:22 am)  Reply 	 Re: ... <hr/> Kelly said: Quote: <hr/> Because i am not interested in displaying my knowledge. <hr/> .....(speechless).....

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2326

(7/2/04 10:11 am)

Reply

Re: re: Eckhart Tolle

---

James wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: But this fact alone doesn't "destroy" reason

JJ: It renders it empty, as you said.

---

Empty of inherent existence, yes. But not of its capacity to overturn ignorance and fully enlighten the mind.

Quote:

---

So let me put it another way - realizing reason as empty destroys any sort of attachment to reason itself. Reason takes you to a particular point, whereupon a mind ripened through meditation can make the intuitive leap to what is beyond reason (not non-reason, as in irrationality, but total emptiness). Do you disagree?

---

I do in the sense that there is no leap. The process of realizing emptiness is a fully rational one from start to finish, even though at the same time it does indeed take one beyond reason.

It is like climbing a long ladder and then, at the instant of reaching the very last rung, having the incredible realization that both the ladder and the place you are climbing towards are illusions. One doesn't have to make a "leap" because one sees that there is nothing to leap from, and indeed nothing to leap into. Again, this is a fully rational insight, albeit one that opens up the mind to the nature of Reality.

If one is trying to make a "leap" of some kind, it means that one is unconsciously short-circuiting this process and deviating away from the possibility of true realization (usually into an altered state of consciousness which is underpinned by blind belief).

Quote:

---

David: An "intuitive understanding of emptiness" which is not arrived at by reasoning is worthless. It becomes indistinguishable from blind belief.

JJ: There's nothing unreasonable about it, because it's not an intellectual understanding (conceptual postulation).

---

It is an intellectual understanding that doesn't postulate a particular concept.

By calling it "intellectual", I'm not saying that it resembles academic knowledge. In truth, it couldn't be any further removed from academic knowledge. It is, as you say, dynamic. It is a living form of knowledge that cannot be captured by concepts, or frozen into a formula. And yet it can be understood intellectually by those who are rational enough to push their reasoning all the way.

Quote:

---

What I referred to as an "intuitive understanding of emptiness" is, for lack of a better descriptor, an awareness, that takes the conceptual truth of emptiness and translates it into a function of one's consciousness. Very simply, it's being empty. Now, you wouldn't call this state of the mind a "blind belief", would you? It's simply not a matter of beliefs at all.

---

Well, I meet too many people who have a blind belief in this kind of "non-rational emptiness". In most cases, it is a false emptiness, a shallow form of nihilism which has nothing to do with Reality. Scratch the surface of their nihilism and you usually find a veritable potpurri of hidden beliefs.

What does "being empty" mean to you? Can you describe it in a couple of sentences?

Quote:

---

The thing is, it's easy to intellectualize on the emptiness of thought-constructs - ie, to say to yourself, "reason is empty." It's a great deal harder to actually readjust your nervous activity to be empty, and to remain non-attached to everything, including mental content. The destination is an empty mind - flawless, crystal-clear reason is required, but meditation is also needed to set one "beside" one's thoughts. If you're not "beside" your thoughts, then you're still connected to them; thus, they still keep you chasing and grasping.

---

If you're still having to put yourself "beside" your thoughts, it means that you are still chasing and grasping ..... for something.

Quote:

---

Meditation isn't done "on" anything - it's being empty. You're enlightened though, so I know that you already know that. David, may I ask what your meditation practice is?

---

It consists of keeping my mind focused on the nature of existence, no matter what I am doing.

Quote:

---

Maintaining an empty dynamic with mental-content doesn't mean rendering oneself stupid - it simply means being entirely unaffected, unobstructed and non-attached. One is still free to utilize reason of the sharpest kind when a situation calls for it. There is no lack of precision or acuity in the thinking process. In fact, there's an increase in these things, because when the mind's myriad subtle attachments are shed, the true relationships between things can become clearer. Attachments are a distorting influence.

---

I agree with all of this. Well put.

Just out of curiosity, what do you do for a living? Are you married?

Jones Kelly

Posts: 197

(7/2/04 1:26 pm)

Reply

 Great Doubt

---

Tharan wrote:

Quote:

---

I have no doubt. Koans don't have one right meaning. You are utterly incorrect.

---

A koan has one right meaning, but many ways of expressing that meaning.

'Today, wherever you go, Zen priests say, "Words and letter. Zen phrases. Those are the tools of slaves and servants. I don't have any use for them."

'Wrong! Dead wrong! Are those two great Zen masters slaves (Kanzan and Daito Kokushi) slaves or servants? If they are, I'm one too. While I don't care much for the high and mighty attitude that makes those priests look down on others as their inferiors, I don't despise them for it either. However, they are supposed to be descendents of Daito and Kanzan, and as such, they should be able to penetrate their utterances.

'If a person has not penetrated these sayings, then even if he has achieved attainment, even if his practice is single-minded, he should still, without further thought, just take them and begin to introspect them; he should abandon himself to the task with total concentration and relentless effort.

It's like chopping down a huge tree of immense girth. You won't accomplish it with one swing of your axe. If you keep chopping away at it, though, and do not let up, eventually, whether it wants to or not, it will suddenly topple down.'

Hakuin.

Quote:

---

I wrote:

Realisation (enlightenment) is created by conceptual understanding: the construction of how thoughts are causally created and are causally creating the construction - and are thus empty.

Tharan wrote:

I agree it is a significant realization. But that is not enlightenment.

---

In your words, it is - ?

Quote:

---

I wrote:

Conceptual understanding is not empty because it is meaningless, but because it is meaningful and thus creates an understanding of Reality.

Tharan:

This "meaning" you ascribe to has no basis. Meaning gives contrast and is thus in the realm of maya. Emptiness draws no such distinctions.

---

You speak of emptiness as if it is an agent doing: an inherently existing self that "doesn't contrast".

What you describe is flawed logic. You have created an ego (I), an independent self, which is the "empty-of-thoughts I" that meditators think is sunyata.

The sage is God as infinite self, the awareness that is causal creation. All the while the sage is the doing and thinking, without the mirage of the independent agent.

God has no aims, no particular effects to reach that have been ordained/determined. God itself knows nothing of future, but is the interactions of now within consciousness, each moment creating.

This is why Kierkegaard says of despair, "He is bringing it upon himself," not "He brought it upon himself."

Quote:

---

I wrote:

Reality appears to be inherently meaningful, because it is impossible within consciousness to cease valuing.

Tharan:

Wrong. It is called meditation. Did you learn nothing from Hakuin?

---

Since you mentioned him, consider how he rejected totally this kind of meditation:

'There is yet another type of obstructive demon you often run up against, the ones who teach their followers:

"If you want to attain mastery in the Buddha Way you must, to begin with, empty your mind of birth and death. Both samsara and nirvana exist because the mind gives rise to them. The same for the heavens and hells; not one of the exists unless the mind produces them. Hence there is one and one thing only for you to do: make your minds completely empty."

'Falling right into step, students set out to empty their minds, make them utter blanks. The trouble is, though they try everything they know, emptying this way, emptying that way, working away at it for months, even years, they find it is like trying to sweep mist away by flailing at it with a pole, or trying to stem the flow of a river by blocking it with outstretched arms. The only result is greater confusion.

'..The lesson to be learned from this is that the very attempts to banish birth and death from your mind are, in themselves, a sure sign that birth and death is in full progress.'

Tharan wrote:

Quote:

---

You are applying value to your subjective existence. I agree it is difficult to not do otherwise. But awareness of this valuation, and it's true emptiness, does not mean you cannot still do it. I agree that it allows us to function socially. But it should not be mistaken for something essential.

---

Awareness of this valuation means that functioning socially is empty and doesn't inherently exist.

In fact, with this awareness, ie kensho, all the activity that was engaged in, is engaged in still - but the understanding has radically transformed, so that there is no inherent activity nor engager.

This is awareness of emptiness.

Tharan wrote:

Quote:

---

In fact, Reality is what creates the phenomenon of conceptual understanding which in turn reinterprets it's perception of Reality, and at this current stage of development, often tries to give itself meaning.

---

Reality is not a creator of phenomena, ie. an external agent. Reality is simply a concept indicating there is no inherent anything.

Conceptual understanding is created causally, so if one such understanding is created that depicts a self that thinks, that is not created by Reality but is caused by false logic (also causally created).

Reality is a causally created concept, which refers to the emptiness of all causally created things.

Tharan wrote:

Quote:

---

But Reality would be empty of meaning regardless of whether or not our particular conceptual understanding of it existed. "Meaning" is an entirely subjective descriptor.

---

There is no Reality without consciousness to perceive it. There is no emptiness of inherent existence, without the understanding of inherent existence (which is dependent also on consciousness).

Reality does not have inherent meaningless as a thing independent of consciousness, since meaning relates only to consciousness.

Do you think consciousness can exist without thoughts (meaning)?<sup>[/i]</sup>

Edited by: Jones Kelly at: 7/2/04 1:46 pm

MGMacLeod
Registered User
Posts: 60
(7/2/04 1:31 pm)
Reply

 Re: re: Eckhart Tolle

---

David,

Quote:

---

The process of realizing emptiness is a fully rational one from start to finish, even though at the same time it does indeed take one beyond reason.

---

What, would you say, is 'reason' and what's 'beyond' it? I suppose I should have asked questions of this nature over a year ago...

Quote:

---

One doesn't have to make a "leap" because one sees that there is nothing to leap from, and indeed nothing to leap into. Again, this is a fully rational insight, albeit one that opens up the mind to the nature of Reality.

---

I thought the 'leap of faith' was one of the things you admired about Kierkegaard, no? Also, what characterizes a 'rational insight'?

Jones Kelly
Posts: 198
(7/2/04 1:38 pm)
Reply

 Reply to NOX

---

I wrote to Tharan, encouraging him to respond to the koan:

Quote:

---

Because i am not interested in displaying my knowledge.

---

I express thoughts in relation to each problem to find out what is true in each situation.

If there is desire for truth, then there is ego present, caused by creating truth and falsehood as inherently existing in specific problems.

When this desire for truth is still connected to a self, there is stronger attachment to fighting the "demons" of falsehood.

This battle is always "internal" to me as an individual (my consciousness), hence i do not wish to suppress it. I will continue to desire truth as long as i perceive falsehood, until truth is everything (i.e. no more deluded mental habits of inherent existence) and there is no desire.

Jones Kelly

Posts: 199

(7/2/04 1:45 pm)

Reply

 Re: "On the edge of madness.."

---

Reply to Suergaz:

The situation is, if one is on the edge of madness, then one was always insane before then, and is choosing to become sane.

The great rarity is the perfectly sane one, and the one on the edge is in metamorphosis.

Edited by: Jones Kelly at: 7/2/04 1:50 pm

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1518

(7/3/04 12:52 am)

Reply

 Re: re: Eckhart Tolle

---

Quote:

---

From what I've read from the QRS (quite a bit, actually), enlightenment is something that is assumed to occur once the requisite logical syllogisms are embraced, which conceptually demonstrate the delusion of independence-existence.

---

That is true, but they don't really stop at that. That is, they think that such realizations when fully understood/embraced, totally change the person's their reactions to reality, life, the world.

It seems the Buddhists emphasize negation, what you are not, and the Hindus emphasize what you are. I have not decided if those two meet.

Quote:

---

Hence, the only truth is emptiness

---

I'm pondering that the only truth might be somethingness.

Quote:

---

I shouldn't have said "changing one's being". My mistake. Just what, exactly, do you think you need to change? It isn't that there is an ego that you need to destroy, it's that we are attached to a particular idea of "I" - we make the ego through our thinking and our attachments. Take a backward step, before your discriminating consciousness. Forward steps only take you further along the samsaric path.

---

Well, giving up those attachments, not being in a deluded reality, and not having a false concept of I would change the person's being, no?

Quote:

---

Wonderful! Then I take it you already know why QRS aren't Buddhists, and also how to liberate yourself.

---

No, I still don't understand enough about Buddhism to make such assessments. I approach it holding my nose. Nor do I necessarily relate to the Buddhist idea of liberation. QRS emphasize foremost the lack of inherent self, as well as emptiness. If QRS are not enlightened, it does not mean they are not Buddhists. Or, is anyone who is not enlightened a real Buddhist? For if they were, they would understand fully, correctly, and they would be enlightened.

QRS say it is impossible to exist in a state without thought. Yet they speak as though there can be a state without emotion. I see no evidence that this is the case. I'm not sure what enlightenment is, and I don't think it has just one definition. I see superiority (smugness) and aversions in them.

I don't like the game of koan one-upmanship. I also think that the oriental mind thinks differently and westerners are at a distinct disadvantage with oriental methods. Orientals think in images more than we do, and actually, physically, see pictures differently than we do. It may be the language which trains the mind, as far as the why of it.

N0X23

Registered User

Posts: 160

(7/3/04 3:04 am)

Reply

 Re: Reply to NOX

---

Quote:

---

This battle is always "internal" to me as an individual (my consciousness), hence I do not wish to suppress it. I will continue to desire truth as long as I perceive falsehood, until truth is everything (i.e. no more deluded mental habits of inherent existence) and there is no desire.

---

You do realize that your internal battle is hopeless don't you?

What part of you has the ability to suppress anything?

What part of you has the ability to continue?

The mental habit of inherent existence is not deluded.

Every conceivable "path" produces the exact same result....reinforcement of the very thing that you desire to rid yourself of.

Good luck, your going to need it.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2327

(7/3/04 10:14 am)

Reply

Re: re: Eckhart Tolle

MGMacLeod wrote:

Quote:

---

What, would you say, is 'reason' and what's 'beyond' it? I suppose I should have asked questions of this nature over a year ago...

---

"Reason" is basically the conceptual process of trying to comprehend truth. Anyone who employs thought for the purposes of gaining a clear understanding of something is using reason.

Everything is beyond reason, in the sense that everything that is not reason exists outside of reason. For example, an apple is beyond reason since it differs from reason and exists apart from it.

At the same time, nothing is beyond reason, in the sense that reason has the ability to probe and form conclusions about anything which appears to exist. This applies just as much to Reality and enlightenment as it does to apples.

Quote:

---

DQ: One doesn't have to make a "leap" because one sees that there is nothing to leap from, and indeed nothing to leap into. Again, this is a fully rational insight, albeit one that opens up the mind to the nature of Reality.

MM: I thought the 'leap of faith' was one of the things you admired about Kierkegaard, no?

---

Kierkegaard was using the term "leap" in a different context here. For him, the "leap of faith" referred to the resolve to leave common sense and ordinary human mediocrity behind in order to devote one's life to the extremes of Truth - even though such a resolve can, from the ordinary human perspective, appear to be incomprehensible and even horrifying. In other words, the "leap of faith" is not so much a leap beyond reason, but beyond worldliness. It is a leap beyond the ordinary person's use of reason.

Quote:

---

Also, what characterizes a 'rational insight'?

---

One that logically conforms to what is already known to be absolutely true. In other words, an insight which does not rely on any form of blind belief.

Jones Kelly

Posts: 203

(7/3/04 12:56 pm)

Reply

 Re: Reply to NOX

---

NOX quoted me:

Quote:

---

This battle is always "internal" to me as an individual (my consciousness), hence I do not wish to suppress it. I will continue to desire truth as long as I perceive falsehood, until truth is everything (i.e. no more deluded mental habits of inherent existence) and there is no desire.

---

Perhaps i could explain that better. The "truth-desirer" is a momentary appearance, so an illusion. But because it is more valuable an illusion than the illusion of "delusion-desirer", it has the seeds of pushing beyond both delusions.

Quote:

---

NOX:

You do realize that your internal battle is hopeless don't you?

---

In a sense, this is true, because the internal battle can never be won by engaging in illusions (being deluded). However, the technique is only logical. One can only be free of a delusion by facing it.

This is why exploring egotism is valuable to me, not to exacerbate the illusion, but to expose it, to lose the fear of it, and understand it.

Quote:

---

NOX:

What part of you has the ability to suppress anything?

---

The thoughts that are focussing on something are simultaneously suppressing something else. This is the process of creation/destruction. Thoughts are part of a self, which is able to suppress.

Quote:

---

NOX:

What part of you has the ability to continue?

---

If continuation is possible in a timeless sense of ongoing causation, then everything (that is, awareness) is continuing to be. I am that ability, expressed as the continuation, as well as everything that continues.

Quote:

---

NOX:

The mental habit of inherent existence is not deluded.

---

If delusion is the habitual and blind belief that things do inherently exist, then delusion does exist because of the possibility of freedom from delusion.

Quote:

---

NOX:

Every conceivable "path" produces the exact same result.... reinforcement of the very thing that you desire to rid yourself of.

---

I disagree strongly. There is one path - perfect reasoning - that, when desired strongly enough, inevitably becomes perfect reason, and rids one of delusion.

That is, the egotistical desire for perfect reasoning becomes rational, and inevitably "sees through" reasoning. Reasoning is not abandoned, but its role appreciated.

james johnathan
Registered User
Posts: 9
(7/3/04 1:45 pm)
Reply

Re: re: Eckhart Tolle

---

Quote:

---

JJ: So let me put it another way - realizing reason as empty destroys any sort of attachment to reason itself. Reason takes you to a particular point, whereupon a mind ripened through meditation can make the intuitive leap to what is beyond reason (not non-reason, as in irrationality, but total emptiness). Do you disagree?

DQ: I do in the sense that there is no leap. The process of realizing emptiness is a fully rational one from start to finish, even though at the same time it does indeed take one beyond reason.

---

The crux of this issue seems to regard what is "beyond" reason, and we do both agree that there is a state that is beyond reason, and that this state is emptiness. What becomes the nature of reason, once it is fully and truly realized to be empty? And more importantly, what becomes of the relationship between consciousness and reason, when reason is understood to be empty? These are essential questions. It is in the spirit of these questions that I reply to your other points.

Quote:

---

DQ: It is like climbing a long ladder and then, at the instant of reaching the very last rung, having the incredible realization that both the ladder and the place you are climbing towards are illusions. One doesn't have to make a "leap" because one sees that there is nothing to leap from, and indeed nothing to leap into. Again, this is a fully rational insight, albeit one that opens up the mind to the nature of Reality.

---

When reason is realized to be empty (when it “empties itself”) there is no way that this can purely be a rational insight, because reason cannot simultaneously affirm and negate its own validity. It cannot be put any better than, it is simply a moment of being empty. At this moment of satori, it isn’t a case of reason giving insight into emptiness; with the mind in its original, empty nature, it is more apt to say that emptiness gives insight into reason. When consciousness is empty, everything else is emptied along with it. This is a very subtle point, and I wonder if it is possible to be grasped unless one’s mind has been conditioned through zazen. Of this, I remain undecided.

Quote:

---

DQ: If one is trying to make a "leap" of some kind, it means that one is unconsciously short-circuiting this process and deviating away from the possibility of true realization (usually into an altered state of consciousness which is underpinned by blind belief).

---

Keep in mind that when I used the word “leap”, it was purely in a metaphorical sense. For expediency’s sake, it is useful to consider the establishment of the empty dynamic as a “leap”, though more accurately, it’s simply a ceasing of ignorant mental habits – a readjustment of nervous activity. Will you please define an “altered state of consciousness”? Samadhi alters consciousness very profoundly. In regards to your comment about “short-circuiting” the process, I’m not quite sure what you mean.

Quote:

---

DQ: An "intuitive understanding of emptiness" which is not arrived at by reasoning is worthless. It becomes indistinguishable from blind belief.

JJ: There's nothing unreasonable about it, because it's not an intellectual understanding (conceptual postulation).

DQ: By calling it "intellectual", I'm not saying that it resembles academic knowledge. In truth, it couldn't be any further removed from academic knowledge. It is, as you say, dynamic. It is a living form of knowledge that cannot be captured by concepts, or frozen into a formula. And yet it can be understood intellectually by those who are rational enough to push their reasoning all the way.

---

Push their reasoning all the way to what? The end state of emptiness, wherein reason itself is understood to be completely and utterly devoid of any sort of inherent existence? Intellectualization can understand conceptually what it means to be empty, but this symbolic representation of the reality will never be the reality that is emptiness. In other words, don't mistake the map for the territory, the finger for the moon, etc. That being said and understood, I agree with your general point that the empty dynamic cannot be "frozen" into any sort of conceptual framework. The only "nature" of emptiness is complete no-nature, entailing complete non-abiding – and for humans, nothing fosters abiding like concepts. Conceptual frameworks are a good way to fixate yourself on the map, while forgetting that you're already standing in the actual territory. Not that conceptual frameworks are altogether negative, of course not. They're pointers. It's just that people all too often get attached to these pointers, and thus miss the point entirely. Hence the Dharma, and Buddhism.

Quote:

---

JJ: What I referred to as an "intuitive understanding of emptiness" is, for lack of a better descriptor, an awareness, that takes the conceptual truth of emptiness and translates it into a function of one's consciousness. Very simply, it's being empty. Now, you wouldn't call this state of the mind a "blind belief", would you? It's simply not a matter of beliefs at all.

DQ: Well, I meet too many people who have a blind belief in this kind of "non-rational emptiness". In most cases, it is a false emptiness, a shallow form of nihilism which has nothing to do with Reality. Scratch the surface of their nihilism and you usually find a veritable potpurri of hidden beliefs.

---

I understand – emptiness is so subtle, it's unfortunately very easy to miss the point. A misunderstanding of emptiness will often lead to an attachment to emptiness, of all things, which tends to engender nihilism. The point is that emptiness is not non-rational, and neither is it rational – though, it is most certainly rationally justifiable. How could it be either of these things? It's empty!

Quote:

---

DQ: What does "being empty" mean to you? Can you describe it in a couple of sentences?

---

Yes, I can describe it, but I can't transmit to you my experience of it – which, as has been established, is really the whole point.

“Being empty” means maintaining a certain dynamic (a most appropriate word) with experience, a dynamic that is characterized as being unaffected, unobstructed, and entirely open. Without the deep, unconscious attachments that ceaselessly render the Absolute this or that, existence (or more aptly, sunyata) shines with original vitality and majesty.

That was a couple of sentences, and it's for the best that I stop my waxing there. Explicit description breeds attachment to the description, and it's not my intent to have the finger confused for the moon. Put another way, explicit descriptions are good words for people who want to know the finger; koans are good words for people who want to know the moon. It is suffice to say that “being empty” means just that. Or even better, “just this”.

Quote:

---

JJ: The thing is, it's easy to intellectualize on the emptiness of thought-constructs - ie, to say to yourself, "reason is empty." It's a great deal harder to actually readjust your nervous activity to be empty, and to remain non-attached to everything, including mental content. The destination is an empty mind - flawless, crystal-clear reason is required, but meditation is also needed to set one "beside" one's thoughts. If you're not "beside" your thoughts, then you're still connected to them; thus, they still keep you chasing and grasping.

DQ: If you're still having to put yourself "beside" your thoughts, it means that you are still chasing and grasping ..... for something.

---

Again, “putting oneself beside one's thoughts” is just a metaphor. However, I will gladly be more explicit, if you like. Putting oneself “beside” one's thoughts was intended to mean being unattached to one's thoughts. I used the word "beside" because it very much seems like you are beside your thoughts (or above them, or below them, or whatever), witnessing as they float harmlessly through your psyche. It is precisely because "you" are no longer dominated by your succession of mental content that you free yourself from the "chattering monkey", and the chasing and grasping that results from this. Eventually, when the monkey is sufficiently starved from lack of attention, it becomes nearly non-existent in your mental habits. What remains is complete un-obstruction, and a fresh spontaneity emerges. Attachments are gone, and everything becomes truth. When tired, sleep. When hungry, eat. When smelling a peony, smell a peony, and be pleased. When writing a hundred page dissertation on Nagarjuna's Mula Madhyamaka Karika, write a hundred page dissertation on Nagajuna's Mula Madhyamaka Karika. Etc.

Quote:

---

JJ: Meditation isn't done "on" anything - it's being empty. You're enlightened though, so I know that you already know that. David, may I ask what your meditation practice is?

DQ: It consists of keeping my mind focused on the nature of existence, no matter what I am doing.

---

Are you skilled at utilizing proper breathing methods to heighten focus and awareness?

Quote:

---

DQ: Just out of curiosity, what do you do for a living? Are you married?"

---

Currently I'm working in a greenhouse, in order to finance the second year of my philosophy degree. It's not terrible work, though unfortunately it takes my replies a little more time to be posted, for which I apologize. I'm not married – are you? Just kidding.

Edit: typos

Edited by: james johnathan at: 7/3/04 2:39 pm

MGMacLeod

Registered User

Posts: 61

(7/3/04 2:22 pm)

Reply

Re: re: Eckhart Tolle

David,

Quote:

---

"Reason" is basically the conceptual process of trying to comprehend truth. Anyone who employs thought for the purposes of gaining a clear understanding of something is using reason.

---

and yet:

Quote:

---

It [the realization of emptiness--that is, the truth] is a living form of knowledge that cannot be captured by concepts, or frozen into a formula.

---

So reason is a conceptual process used to comprehend something that "cannot be captured in concepts". Interesting. What sort of 'clear understanding' can come about via these means? Like Nagarjuna and Candrakirti, I would say that the discursive intellect and its conceptual processes ultimately have only negative value: reason (as a conceptual process) can only negate false notions and delusions rather than posit conceptual constructions to which the world is supposed to conform. But since reason, like everything else, is beyond the dualistic structures of discursive intellect, and is empty both of self-existence and self-nature, it cannot be conclusively nailed down. If reason is bound to conceptual constructions, how will it attend to the real? If it is beyond them, how will it produce an intellectual understanding of truth?

Quote:

---

...reason has the ability to probe and form conclusions about anything which appears to exist.

---

Again, what sorts of conclusions might these be?

Quote:

---

Kierkegaard was using the term "leap" in a different context here. For him, the "leap of faith" referred to the resolve to leave common sense and ordinary human mediocrity behind in order to devote one's life to the extremes of Truth - even though such a resolve can, from the ordinary human perspective, appear to be incomprehensible and even horrifying. In other words, the "leap of faith" is not so much a leap beyond reason, but beyond worldliness. It is a leap beyond the ordinary person's use of reason.

---

I agree with that, and yet the realization that there is nowhere to leap from and nothing to leap into is, itself, a leap of this sort. That is, insofar as the 'ordinary person' believes that there are things to be done, and leaps to be made, this 'non-leap' that you describe is a leap of faith in the Kierkegaardian sense. So this leap is a leap away from leaping. Which is to say that there is no inherent difference between leaping and non-leaping. Yet, who is this non-leaper who leaps?

*Edit: formatting*

~Matt

Edited by: MGMacLeod at: 7/3/04 2:24 pm

NOX23

Registered User

Posts: 163

(7/4/04 11:10 am)

Reply

 Re: Reply to NOX

---

Kelly sez...

Quote:

---

Thoughts are part of a self, which is able to suppress.

---

Thoughts are the self. So are you assuming that the self can suppress the self with the self?

Quote:

---

I disagree strongly. There is one path - perfect reasoning - that, when desired strongly enough, inevitably becomes perfect reason, and rids one of delusion.

---

Well of course you disagree, it's an imperative, you have no choice.

Your entire belief system is constructed around your blind faith in that the path of perfect reasoning leads one to freedom from delusion.

Question: How do you know that what you perceive to be perfect reasoning is in fact perfect, unless you yourself are free from imperfection?

From another thread

Quote:

---

I focus night and day to become free...

---

That which obsesses relentlessly about freedom, is the very thing that you desire to be free from.

james johnathan
Registered User
Posts: 11
(7/5/04 3:40 am)
Reply

 Re: Reply to NOX

---

Quote:

---

James: From what I've read from the QRS (quite a bit, actually), enlightenment is something that is assumed to occur once the requisite logical syllogisms are embraced, which conceptually demonstrate the delusion of independence-existence.

Bird: That is true, but they don't really stop at that. That is, they think that such realizations when fully understood/embraced, totally change the person's their reactions to reality, life, the world.

---

Can you describe what it means to fully understand or embrace a conceptual postulate?

Understanding a conceptual postulate is one thing, but to embrace it means to become attached to it. Reality is all around you – it won't be found within the emptiness of our ever-changing system of linguistic symbols. Grasping reason (and the understands thereof) is grasping a phantom.

Quote:

---

Bird: It seems the Buddhists emphasize negation, what you are not, and the Hindus emphasize what you are. I have not decided if those two meet.

---

Why do you say Hindus emphasize what you are? As for Buddhists, it is true that they emphasis negation, but it is a negation of a deeper sort than a mere affirmation of non-existence (what you are not). Please see MGMacleod's last post.

Quote:

---

James: Hence, the only truth is emptiness

Bird: I'm pondering that the only truth might be somethingness.

---

Please, elaborate.

Quote:

---

James: I shouldn't have said "changing one's being". My mistake. Just what, exactly, do you think you need to change? It isn't that there is an ego that you need to destroy, it's that we are attached to a particular idea of "I" - we make the ego through our thinking and our attachments. Take a backward step, before your discriminating consciousness. Forward steps only take you further along the samsaric path.

Bird: Well, giving up those attachments, not being in a deluded reality, and not having a false concept of I would change the person's being, no?

---

It may be expedient to think of it in those terms, but I find that most pretensions to “change one’s being” are in err, since these can obscure the fact your Buddha-nature is already not apart from you. What is it that is assumed to exist before the change, and what is it that is assumed will exist after the change? Quests to “change one’s being” arise from existential angst, which is simply a manifestation of the ego’s deep attachment to its own existence. Realizing that there is no real quest to embark on, and that any such quest is merely samsara, is a hard realization to come to.

Quote:

---

James: Wonderful! Then I take it you already know why QRS aren't Buddhists, and also how to liberate yourself.

Bird: If QRS are not enlightened, it does not mean they are not Buddhists. Or, is anyone who is not enlightened a real Buddhist? For if they were, they would understand fully, correctly, and they would be enlightened.

---

I have little interest in assessing the enlightenment claims of others. All I can do is represent truth as best I can, and let the pieces fall as they will.

Quote:

---

Bird: QRS say it is impossible to exist in a state without thought. Yet they speak as though there can be a state without emotion. I see no evidence that this is the case. I'm not sure what enlightenment is, and I don't think it has just one definition. I see superiority (smugness)and aversions in them.

---

That says it all: a Buddhist would never say that it is impossible to exist in a state without thought. Any quasi-Buddhist hobbyist who has the least amount of experience in meditation knows that it is relatively simple to be without thought. Like anything though, it's a trainable skill. Only in this case, the skill is harder to train than, say, learning how to operate a VCR – because while training, as soon as any consideration is made to goals or effects, the goal and the effect has already been lost.

Quote:

---

Bird: I don't like the game of koan one-upmanship

---

You know what, me neither. Only, sometimes our attachment to explicit descriptions (the map) means that we fail to attain the point (traverse the terrain). This is why in Zen, koans are utilized moreso than complicated lexicons. Koans are meant to point directly to one's true nature.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2328

(7/5/04 10:11 am)

Reply

Re: re: Eckhart Tolle

---

James Johnathon wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: The process of realizing emptiness is a fully rational one from start to finish, even though at the same time it does indeed take one beyond reason.

JJ: The crux of this issue seems to regard what is “beyond” reason, and we do both agree that there is a state that is beyond reason, and that this state is emptiness.

---

You're putting words into my mouth. There is no such thing as a state of emptiness. In fact, the realization of emptiness involves the realization that all states, without exception, are illusions.

Quote:

---

What becomes the nature of reason, once it is fully and truly realized to be empty?

---

It continues to function as before, but without any unnecessary hindrances

(which, in unenlightened people, are produced by attachments and the emotions). The nature of reason doesn't change just because some geezer realizes that it lacks inherent existence.

Quote:

---

And more importantly, what becomes of the relationship between consciousness and reason, when reason is understood to be empty?

---

It turns into a perfect marriage. One is no longer pushing away reason because of the unpleasant truths it wants to reveal.

Quote:

---

DQ: It is like climbing a long ladder and then, at the instant of reaching the very last rung, having the incredible realization that both the ladder and the place you are climbing towards are illusions. One doesn't have to make a "leap" because one sees that there is nothing to leap from, and indeed nothing to leap into. Again, this is a fully rational insight, albeit one that opens up the mind to the nature of Reality.

JJ: When reason is realized to be empty (when it "empties itself") there is no way that this can purely be a rational insight, because reason cannot simultaneously affirm and negate its own validity.

---

It is not being asked to do this. In fact, the process is one of double affirmation. Firstly, it affirms the illusory nature of all things, including its own self, and then, in making this affirmation, it automatically affirms its own ability to produce rational insight into the nature of Reality.

Quote:

---

It cannot be put any better than, it is simply a moment of being empty. At this moment of satori, it isn't a case of reason giving insight into emptiness; with the mind in its original, empty nature, it is more apt to say that emptiness gives insight into reason. When consciousness is empty, everything else is emptied along with it. This is a very subtle point, and I wonder if it is possible to be grasped unless one's mind has been conditioned through zazen. Of this, I remain undecided.

---

The state that you here eulogizing is also empty. Satori itself is empty. It's best not to get too attached to these things.

Quote:

---

DQ: If one is trying to make a "leap" of some kind, it means that one is unconsciously short-circuiting this process and deviating away from the possibility of true realization (usually into an altered state of consciousness which is underpinned by blind belief).

JJ: Keep in mind that when I used the word "leap", it was purely in a metaphorical sense. For expediency's sake, it is useful to consider the establishment of the empty dynamic as a "leap", though more accurately, it's simply a ceasing of ignorant mental habits – a readjustment of nervous activity.

---

Okay. But again, if this "ceasing of ignorant of mental habits" involves the ceasing of reason, then I for one want nothing to do with it. The sage's mind, in its utmost purity, is one that reasons consciously, effortlessly and flawlessly. Your attachment to an illusory state of emptiness is causing you to downplay the power of reason and its role in enlightening the mind.

Quote:

---

Will you please define an "altered state of consciousness"? Samadhi alters consciousness very profoundly. In regards to your comment about "short-circuiting" the process, I'm not quite sure what you mean.

---

By "altered state" I'm referring to mystical or religious or existential experiences. These experiences can be very powerful and seem out of this world, and often they seem to impart a timeless, heavenly knowledge of Reality that is intuitively experienced and not fully understood.

While I consider these experiences to be important achievements, they ultimately have no connection to enlightenment, which goes beyond altered states. There comes a time when the spiritual student needs to put these samadhis and satoris aside and strive for the highest that life has to offer - which is crystal-clear consciousness and knowledge of Ultimate Reality.

"Short-circuiting the process" refers to the way in which a person's attachments (whether it be to a particular kind of altered state, or a particular belief, or a particular person, or a particular lifestyle, or whatever it may be) interferes with his spiritual desire to fully comprehend the nature of Reality. People unconsciously short-circuit the rational process out of fear that their attachments will be exposed as untenable and will be taken away from them. The average Christian is an obvious example.

Quote:

---

A misunderstanding of emptiness will often lead to an attachment to emptiness, of all things, which tends to engender nihilism.

---

I think you fall into that trap. It causes you to be irrational in your treatment of reason. You're like the Buddhist who, having realized that cars are empty of intrinsic existence, believes that an enlightened sage cannot use them as a mode of transport, on account of their being "empty".

"What happens to cars when they they are seen to be empty? What happens to the relationship between cars and consciousness, when cars are seen to be empty? These are essential questions!" No, they are irrelevant questions - just as irrelevant as your questions about reason.

Quote:

---

The point is that emptiness is not non-rational, and neither is it rational – though, it is most certainly rationally justifiable.

---

If something is rationally justifiable, then it indeed rational. That is what "rational" means.

Quote:

---

JJ: Meditation isn't done "on" anything - it's being empty. You're enlightened though, so I know that you already know that. David, may I ask what your meditation practice is?

DQ: It consists of keeping my mind focused on the nature of existence, no matter what I am doing.

JJ: Are you skilled at utilizing proper breathing methods to heighten focus and awareness?

---

Are you skilled in detaching yourself from Buddhism and going beyond it?

The best method for heightening focus and awareness is thinking intently about the nature of Reality in a burning desire to understand it.

Quote:

---

DQ: Just out of curiosity, what do you do for a living? Are you married?

JJ: Currently I'm working in a greenhouse, in order to finance the second year of my philosophy degree. It's not terrible work, though unfortunately it takes my replies a little more time to be posted, for which I apologize. I'm not married – are you? Just kidding.

---

Do you have a girlfriend?

--

To Bird, you wrote:

Quote:

---

Bird: QRS say it is impossible to exist in a state without thought.

JJ: That says it all: a Buddhist would never say that it is impossible to exist in a state without thought.

---

I don't say that it is impossible to exist in a state without thought, for each of us is able to enter into such a state every night in deep sleep. However, I do say that is impossible to exist consciously in a state without thought.

Quote:

---

Any quasi-Buddhist hobbyist who has the least amount of experience in meditation knows that it is relatively simple to be without thought.

---

They are kidding themselves if they think this. Any time that you imagine you are existing in a state without thought, you are being fooled by an illusion.

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Eckhart Tolle

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
DavidQuinn000 Forum Host Posts: 2329 (7/5/04 10:27 am) Reply 	 Re: re: Eckhart Tolle <hr/> MGMacLeod wrote: Quote: <hr/> DQ: "Reason" is basically the conceptual process of trying to comprehend truth. Anyone who employs thought for the purposes of gaining a clear understanding of something is using reason. ..... It [the realization of emptiness--that is, the truth] is a living form of knowledge that cannot be captured by concepts, or frozen into a formula. MM: So reason is a conceptual process used to comprehend something that "cannot be captured in concepts". <hr/> In the case of applying reason to the understanding of Reality itself, yes. Of course, the reasoner starts out trying to capture Reality in a perfect conceptual web. But sooner or later, he realizes that this is impossible due to the fact that Reality has no form or nature, and therefore there is essentially nothing to capture. In other words, reason reveals the nature of Reality to be uncapturable by concepts.

Quote:

---

What sort of 'clear understanding' can come about via these means? Like Nagarjuna and Candrakirti, I would say that the discursive intellect and its conceptual processes ultimately have only negative value: reason (as a conceptual process) can only negate false notions and delusions rather than posit conceptual constructions to which the world is supposed to conform.

---

That's right. Reason destroys everything that is not real, leaving the mind to apprehend what is left.

Quote:

---

But since reason, like everything else, is beyond the dualistic structures of discursive intellect, and is empty both of self-existence and self-nature, it cannot be conclusively nailed down.

---

Reason is not "beyond the dualistic structures of discursive intellect". Our intellectual minds define what reason is, and, in doing so, we create it into being.

Quote:

---

If reason is bound to conceptual constructions, how will it attend to the real? If it is beyond them, how will it produce an intellectual understanding of truth?

---

You're creating a false problem. When reason perceives the unreality of all things, it immediately perceives the real. These two perceptions are, in fact, one and the same perception.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1522

(7/6/04 2:56 am)

Reply

Re: Reply to NOX

Quote:

---

Can you describe what it means to fully understand or embrace a conceptual postulate?

Understanding a conceptual postulate is one thing, but to embrace it means to become attached to it.

---

What I mean by the above, is that when you understand certain concepts in a "full" way, they become part of your worldview, your way of perceiving reality. It is the difference between understanding that a concept must be so, and actually responding to the world that way, not seeing it any other way. I think it involves some brain reorganization.

Quote:

---

Grasping reason (and the understandings thereof) is grasping a phantom.

---

One doesn't grasp one's leg, one simply uses it. On the other hand, without that leg, you'd be a cripple.

Quote:

---

Reality is all around you – it won't be found within the emptiness of our ever-changing system of linguistic symbols.

---

Yes, I see that.

Quote:

---

Why do you say Hindus emphasize what you are?

---

As in, "Thou are that." Hindus seem to define enlightenment as identifying with the Atman, as opposed to identifying with the personality, the body, the particular lifetime. Buddhism seems to define enlightenment as a matter of insight. They are close. Yet I find Hinduism speaks to the being, and Buddhism to the mind.

Quote:

---

As for Buddhists, it is true that they emphasis negation, but it is a negation of a deeper sort than a mere affirmation of non-existence (what you are not). Please see MGMacLeod's last post.

---

OK, I reread it. Not sure where all these words are headed...seems like a lot of semantics to me.

Quote:

---

Bird: I'm pondering that the only truth might be somethingness.

-----

Please, elaborate.

---

Well, take this for example:

"with the mind in its original, empty nature, it is more apt to say that emptiness gives insight into reason." What kind of emptiness is this, that it gives insight?

Right now, in quantum physics and string theory, they are considering switching from a belief that particles are points with no mass or size, to one in which they have an incredibly small physical size. And switching from the idea that the universe was compressed to zero size at the singularity before the big bang, to one in which it was compressed merely to Planck length. I do not understand that stuff I'm reading - my amazement was that they ever considered the zero size theory in the first place. Regardless, though, of whether it turns out that physical matter is the manifestation of some nonmaterial event, such as thought, it still seems evident to me that at the bottom of reality must lie something, not nothing. The core cannot be nothing. Therefore, emptiness is not the ultimate truth.

Quote:

---

It may be expedient to think of it in those terms, but I find that most pretensions to “change one’s being” are in err, since these can obscure the fact your Buddha-nature is already not apart from you.

---

Sure, but when you are unaware of your Buddha nature you sense something is wrong. When your buddha-nature is compressed with piles of existential angst, it isn't fun.

Quote:

---

What is it that is assumed to exist before the change, and what is it that is assumed will exist after the change?

---

Perception.

Quote:

---

Quests to “change one’s being” arise from existential angst, which is simply a manifestation of the ego’s deep attachment to its own existence. Realizing that there is no real quest to embark on, and that any such quest is merely samsara, is a hard realization to come to.

---

Well, it's a paradox. Because it is only when you begin to make the profound perceptual change that you can then say that there was nowhere to go, and that nirvana is samsara. You know, it's like those little stories they tell about a guy who seeks buried treasure in a far country, only to give up and come home, and then find it under his own floor. But before he went seeking, he did not have contact with the treasure under his own floor. He did need to find that treasure - it was just that he did not understand the nature of seeking, how to seek, where to seek.

Quote:

---

That says it all: a Buddhist would never say that it is impossible to exist in a state without thought.

---

I've already read David's reply to this. I'm beginning to understand the value of meditation, and I also (think) I understand his viewpoint on why it is not necessary. I think the reason for these differences of opinion is our lack of understanding of the human brain and all its ways. There's a guy (a Buddhist) named Todd Murphy who has a website with various articles on the brain and enlightenment and spiritual experiences and epilepsy, that sort of thing. He has a very interesting piece on what he think may have happened within Buddha's brain the night he got enlightened. My understanding of meditation is that it develops greater simultaneous functioning of the two halves of the brain and allows the person to delve deeper and deeper, via brainwaves, into those parts of the mind that are normally "unconscious" in the sense of sleep. A truly successful meditator can even access the brain waves that are normally associated with deep, dreamless sleep. At the same time, however, other events in a person's life, as well as the meaningful focus upon reality, can also cause brain changes. The results can overlap, and they can be different. They can cause the altered states that David mentions. It is my supposition that profound, sudden insight gives a burst of brain activity that may leave some permanent changes of a sort that could be achieved slowly via meditation. Also, brain anatomy differs person to person and recipes don't work the same on everyone. This is very complex stuff, and up till now has been treated in the realm of mysticism. That is, mystery. But now we are looking more and more at what happens in the brain when people pray, when they meditate, when they have a mystical experience, when they have a seizure with blissful auras, etc, etc.

Quote:

---

You know what, me neither. Only, sometimes our attachment to explicit descriptions (the map) means that we fail to attain the point (traverse the terrain). This is why in Zen, koans are utilized moreso than complicated lexicons. Koans are meant to point directly to one's true nature.

---

I'm not dissing the value of koans. But there is a very intense egotism involved in the koan game that I find distasteful.

WolfsonJakk

Posts: 1686

(7/6/04 3:48 am)

Reply

 Re: Reply to NOX

---

There is no such thing as a koan "game." To play a (competitive) game with them is to not personalize them. The point is freedom through understanding and emotional detachment.

Also, meditation can be important as a tool to increase concentration. It is not a desired state in and of itself as so many modern Zennists seem to mistakenly think. Ideally, one is in a focused state regardless of what one does; sitting crosslegged, staring at a wall, going fishing, or conversing with neighbors.

Tharan

MGMacLeod

Registered User

Posts: 62

(7/6/04 4:54 am)

Reply

 Re: re: Eckhart Tolle

---

David,

Quote:

---

Matt: So reason is a conceptual process used to comprehend something that "cannot be captured in concepts".

David: In the case of applying reason to the understanding of Reality itself, yes. Of course, the reasoner starts out trying to capture Reality in a perfect conceptual web. But sooner or later, he realizes that this is impossible due to the fact that Reality has no form or nature, and therefore there is essentially nothing to capture.

---

What I'm interested in is the realization that reality has no form or nature; how can it be that reason, as a conceptual process, does not break down at this point? Or do you agree with me that it is profoundly useful for undermining delusions and attachments, but that is its only real use?

Quote:

---

In other words, reason reveals the nature of Reality to be uncapturable by concepts.

---

Agreed.

Quote:

---

That's right. Reason destroys everything that is not real, leaving the mind to apprehend what is left.

---

And what do you figure is left? What sort of apprehension takes place?

Quote:

---

Reason is not "beyond the dualistic structures of discursive intellect". Our intellectual minds define what reason is, and, in doing so, we create it into being.

---

Really? So, reason is actually a invention of the mind? The same sort of false-imagination that leads people to believe in external objects? You're not seriously claiming enlightenment through some delusional projection of your mind, are you?

Quote:

---

Matt: If reason is bound to conceptual constructions, how will it attend to the real? If it is beyond them, how will it produce an intellectual understanding of truth?

David: You're creating a false problem. When reason perceives the unreality of all things, it immediately perceives the real. These two perceptions are, in fact, one and the same perception.

---

Well said; that's a subtle point, and I agree with it.

~Matt

MGMacLeod

Registered User

Posts: 63

(7/6/04 5:28 am)

Reply

☐ Re: Reply to NOX

---

Hey Anna, how goes it?

Quote:

---

What I mean by the above, is that when you understand certain concepts in a "full" way, they become part of your worldview, your way of perceiving reality. It is the difference between understanding that a concept must be so, and actually responding to the world that way, not seeing it any other way.

---

To me, that sounds more like extremely profound delusion and attachment than a direct perception of reality.

Quote:

---

As in, "Thou are that."

---

Indeed, but what is the 'that'? In the Mahayana 'view', reality is tathata, "thatness", which is etymologically related to Tathagata, the Buddha.

Quote:

---

OK, I reread it. Not sure where all these words are headed... seems like a lot of semantics to me.

---

They're headed toward undermining the notion of self-existence and self-nature in any and all things, or at least that is the spirit in which they were written.

Quote:

---

Regardless, though, of whether it turns out that physical matter is the manifestation of some nonmaterial event, such as thought, it still seems evident to me that at the bottom of reality must lie something, not nothing. The core cannot be nothing. Therefore, emptiness is not the ultimate truth.

---

Firstly, there is no distinction between matter and thought, mainly because there is nothing that can be called 'substance'. Secondly, you seem to be interpreting 'emptiness' (sunyata, in Sanskrit) as nothingness--a cardinal error. According to Nagarjuna, sunyata is the "exhaustion of all views", which Candrakirti says means the 'ceasing to function' of position-taking as a means to understanding the true way of reality. That is, it rejects particular views of the world, but is not itself another view. The realization of sunyata demonstrates that the true way of things completely transcends the duality of nothingness and somethingness. This realization is extremely subtle, and that's why Nagarjuna said that sunyata wrongly understood is "like a snake ineptly seized".

~Matt

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 1134
(7/6/04 7:18 am)
Reply

Re: Paradox

---

Quote:

---

In other words, reason reveals the nature of Reality to be uncapturable by concepts.

---

Isn't that, in itself, a concept which captures the nature of reality though?

MGMacLeod
Registered User
Posts: 64
(7/6/04 8:16 am)
Reply

Re: Paradox

---

Greetings Mr. Toast! How have you been?

Quote:

---

DQ: In other words, reason reveals the nature of Reality to be uncapturable by concepts.

DT: Isn't that, in itself, a concept which captures the nature of reality though?

---

That's a fun game to play, but it's unnecessary. It's just a linguistic problem, and the original statement, though true, is misleading.

Reason reveals the emptiness (sunyata) of all things, including concepts, language, reality, Dave Toast or Matt MacLeod. However, sunyata, in its technical usage by the Sunyavadins (principally Nagarjuna and Candrakirti), is not a concept or a view in itself; as Nagarjuna says: sunyata "is a guiding, not a cognitive, notion, presupposing the everyday. It is itself the middle way" (From Mervyn Sprung's translation of Candrakirti's Prasannapada [Lucid Exposition of the Middle Way]). That is, emptiness is not a normal term; it presupposes the everyday, empirical-phenomenal truths of ordinary living in order to guide one to the realization that all things lack self-existence (svabhava) and self-nature (svarupa). As the 'middle way itself', sunyata avoids the dogmatic dualism of concept and non-concept. It's just another finger pointing at the moon.

~Matt

Edited by: MGMacLeod at: 7/6/04 8:17 am

james johnathan
Registered User
Posts: 12
(7/6/04 11:25 am)
Reply

 Re: re:

---

Quote:

DQ: The process of realizing emptiness is a fully rational one from start to finish, even though at the same time it does indeed take one beyond reason.

JJ: The crux of this issue seems to regard what is "beyond" reason, and we do both agree that there is a state that is beyond reason, and that this state is emptiness.

DQ: You're putting words into my mouth. There is no such thing as a state of emptiness. In fact, the realization of emptiness involves the realization that all states, without exception, are illusions.

---

The state of emptiness is a state-less state. It's a state wherein the mind no longer holds any static views, regarding either itself, or the external world. When, for expediency, it needs to take a view, it will take that view. But it does so knowing that whatever view it takes, be it of an intellectual nature of otherwise, it is ultimately not the highest truth, which is un-nameable.

Quote:

---

JJ: What becomes the nature of reason, once it is fully and truly realized to be empty?

DQ: It continues to function as before, but without any unnecessary hindrances (which, in unenlightened people, are produced by attachments and the emotions). The nature of reason doesn't change just because some geezer realizes that it lacks inherent existence.

---

I agree that it functions the same as before, but that's not to say that its function is the same as before. Reason becomes a tool of expediency only, necessary to perform the functions needed for our survival and to deconstruct any delusionary mental-content that arises. As MG Macleod said, it becomes a tool of negation only.

Quote:

---

JJ: And more importantly, what becomes of the relationship between consciousness and reason, when reason is understood to be empty?

DQ: It turns into a perfect marriage. One is no longer pushing away reason because of the unpleasant truths it wants to reveal.

---

Unpleasant truths? What is unpleasant about the awareness of emptiness in every conceivable thing? An empty mind is not affected, not obstructed, and thus totally open.

When one attains this point, one is no longer pushing away emptiness because of the unpleasant truths it wants to reveal. Thought-constructions are taken off their pedestal – reason becomes empty, just like everything else.

Quote:

---

DQ: It is like climbing a long ladder and then, at the instant of reaching the very last rung, having the incredible realization that both the ladder and the place you are climbing towards are illusions. One doesn't have to make a "leap" because one sees that there is nothing to leap from, and indeed nothing to leap into. Again, this is a fully rational insight, albeit one that opens up the mind to the nature of Reality.

JJ: When reason is realized to be empty (when it “empties itself”) there is no way that this can purely be a rational insight, because reason cannot simultaneously affirm and negate its own validity.

DQ: It is not being asked to do this. In fact, the process is one of double affirmation. Firstly, it affirms the illusory nature of all things, including its own self, and then, in making this affirmation, it automatically affirms its own ability to produce rational insight into the nature of Reality.

---

So an illusion is making valid, tenable insights into something that is non-illusory (the Absolute, or, sunyata)? I see a paradox here. The end “point” is the Absolute, emptiness. Reason must be subordinate to this. If the greatest metaphysical dissertation is seen as anything other than being more conventionally true than a child’s storybook, than the higher truth has been lost.

Quote:

---

JJ: It cannot be put any better than, it is simply a moment of being empty. At this moment of satori, it isn’t a case of reason giving insight into emptiness; with the mind in its original, empty nature, it is more apt to say that emptiness gives insight into reason. When consciousness is empty, everything else is emptied along with it. This is a very subtle point, and I wonder if it is possible to be grasped unless one’s mind has been conditioned through zazen. Of this, I remain undecided.

DQ: The state that you here eulogizing is also empty. Satori itself is empty. It's best not to get too attached to these things.

---

Satori is the name given to the temporary moments of being empty, before true and final liberation is attained. Satoris occur whenever one deeply experiences emptiness, thereby dissolving the distinction between subject and object, and seeing existence free from the distorting influences of deep-seeded attachments. So, satoris are “glimpses” of true emptiness.

Concepts can mire this empty mind-dynamic, since while one is conceptualizing, concepts are necessarily attached to. Thinking is desire. Hence why mental formulations are the second link in the twelve-fold chain of dependent origination – right in between ignorance and consciousness. Removing mental formulations automatically removes the delusions of selective consciousness.

One of the West’s most popular (and damaging) philosophers expresses the same point, albeit in an unintentional, ironic sort of way. Descartes said, “I think, therefore I am” – this was his proud demonstration that the sole, fundamental qualifier for separate self-existence is the act and process of thinking.

Quote:

---

DQ: If one is trying to make a "leap" of some kind, it means that one is unconsciously short-circuiting this process and deviating away from the possibility of true realization (usually into an altered state of consciousness which is underpinned by blind belief).

JJ: Keep in mind that when I used the word “leap”, it was purely in a metaphorical sense. For expediency’s sake, it is useful to consider the establishment of the empty dynamic as a “leap”, though more accurately, it’s simply a ceasing of ignorant mental habits – a readjustment of nervous activity.

DQ: Okay. But again, if this "ceasing of ignorant of mental habits" involves the ceasing of reason, then I for one want nothing to do with it. The sage's mind, in its utmost purity, is one that reasons consciously, effortlessly and flawlessly. Your attachment to an illusory state of emptiness is causing you to downplay the power of reason and its role in enlightening the mind.

---

I’m not downplaying the power of reason – I am a staunch advocate of reason in any context where it is clear that reason is lacking. Obviously, it is reason itself that admits to me that it cannot be trusted to liberate me from samsara, and that it must be set aside as just another illusion. Reason is only an ignorant mental habit in so far as it is assumed to be safely beyond emptiness. When it is understood that anything that is thought or spoken is powerless in touching the ultimate truth of sunyata, reason's correct function has been understood. When it is understood that reason is empty of any intrinsic ability to promote liberation, it's correct function has been understood. When the map has been mistaken for the territory, reason has been misused.

Don't worry, David – nobody is asking you or anyone else to give up reason. As I said earlier, the highest and fullest expression of reason is that self-negating realization that reason, too, is an empty illusion. When one's awareness of emptiness expands to subsume mental-content (reason), the mind-dynamic changes from one between mental-content (one's linear succession of conceptual run-about) and illusion (that which is experienced), to one between emptiness (true-nature) and illusion (which now includes reason). The difference is painfully subtle, and yet worlds apart.

Quote:

---

JJ: A misunderstanding of emptiness will often lead to an attachment to emptiness, of all things, which tends to engender nihilism.

DQ: I think you fall into that trap. It causes you to be irrational in your treatment of reason. You're like the Buddhist who, having realized that cars are empty of intrinsic existence, believes that an enlightened sage cannot use them as a mode of transport, on account of their being "empty".

---

In what way is my treatment of reason irrational? I treat reason as I would treat anything else – empty of any inherent existence. You don't like the full implications of this, it seems, because you have an attachment to reason; so much so that even when you acknowledge it's illusory nature, its non-nature, you still can't help but affirm the supreme importance of retaining thought-constructions. When the Buddha reached the shore of Nirvana, he stopped carrying his raft with him.

Quote:

---

DQ: The point is that emptiness is not non-rational, and neither is it rational – though, it is most certainly rationally justifiable.

JJ: If something is rationally justifiable, then it indeed rational.
That is what "rational" means.

---

There is a difference between being rationally justifiable, and being an explicit position of "rationality". This is quite simply because in samadhi, no views are affirmed – so what is there to be either rational or irrational? Obviously, Nirvana is rationally justifiable in that any attempts to label it "irrational" can easily be deconstructed. However, to say that it is either rational or irrational is incorrect. Nirvana is not rational, and it is not not rational. This is because it does not exist, though neither does it not not exist. It's sunyata, the Middle Path.

Quote:

---

JJ: Meditation isn't done "on" anything - it's being empty.
You're enlightened though, so I know that you already know that. David, may I ask what your meditation practice is?

DQ: It consists of keeping my mind focused on the nature of existence, no matter what I am doing.

JJ: Are you skilled at utilizing proper breathing methods to heighten focus and awareness?

DQ: Are you skilled in detaching yourself from Buddhism and going beyond it?

---

I never said I was Buddhist. The Dharma is a medicine for a particular kind of sickness – thinking sickness. It will point out the delusions in our ordinary ways of being. Yet, it is powerless in leading a person to true liberation. It's a pointer, as I've been saying. Those who follow the point leave Buddhism far behind, while those who become attached to the pointer become ensconced in the religion.

Quote:

---

DQ: The best method for heightening focus and awareness is thinking intently about the nature of Reality in a burning desire to understand it.

---

The best method for heightening focus and awareness is the act of freeing oneself from any semblance of desire and attachment, which is meditation. Reason has its place, as I will readily admit, but without actually re-wiring your brain and readjusting your nervous activity, reason will never penetrate to the core of being – it will always be limited by myriad attachments, distractions, and obstructions. It will be the superficial monkey-mind, prattling away on issues that merely reflect the ego’s emotional urges.

Quote:

---

DQ: Just out of curiosity, what do you do for a living? Are you married?

JJ: Currently I’m working in a greenhouse, in order to finance the second year of my philosophy degree. It’s not terrible work, though unfortunately it takes my replies a little more time to be posted, for which I apologize. I’m not married – are you? Just kidding.

DQ: Do you have a girlfriend?

---

All these questions regarding my relationship-status – you’re not hitting on me, are you David? No, I don’t have a girlfriend. I’ve had ‘em, and I have no interest in ‘em these days.

--

Quote:

---

Bird: QRS say it is impossible to exist in a state without thought.

JJ: That says it all: a Buddhist would never say that it is impossible to exist in a state without thought.

DQ: I don't say that it is impossible to exist in a state without thought, for each of us is able to enter into such a state every night in deep sleep. However, I do say that is impossible to exist consciously in a state without thought.

---

There is generally far more brain activity in sleep than there is in deep meditation. The mind is a constant stir in most normal sleeping situations. If you don't accept the words of Buddhists and other practitioners of meditation, would you accept the findings of scientists who have measured brain activity during meditation? Whereas normal conscious states display what are known as "alpha" brain-waves, meditation shows a switch from "alpha" waves to "theta" waves. In contrast to the aroused, flitting nature of alpha-dominated minds, theta-dominated minds are deeply relaxed, and self-consciousness becomes nil by virtue of the frontal lobe being essentially offline. The parietal lobe, likewise, approaches offline status. The parietal lobe orients one in time and space (you could say, creating the illusion of inherent self-existence). I could throw a bunch of other cool stats and facts at you (for instance, controlled tests demonstrated that Zen monks didn't flinch at the sound of gunshots, whereas master marksmen did), but I think the point has been made.

I will agree that it is impossible to exist consciously in a state without thought. The misassumption on your part is that meditation is a state of consciousness. It is a state of the cessation of consciousness.

Quote:

---

JJ: Any quasi-Buddhist hobbyist who has the least amount of experience in meditation knows that it is relatively simple to be without thought.

DQ: They are kidding themselves if they think this. Any time that you imagine you are existing in a state without thought, you are being fooled by an illusion.

---

As someone who experiences non-thought regularly, your reply sounds like a blind man telling a normal man that grass isn't green. Could you tell me why you think that a state of non-thought is an illusion? (And why over two millenia of enlightened thinkers have preached the merits of non-thought, through meditation.)

N0X23

Registered User

Posts: 166

(7/6/04 12:14 pm)

Reply

 Re: re:

---

Hello James.

I am interested in hearing you expand on these two statements, if at all possible.

Quote:

---

I never said I was Buddhist. The Dharma is a medicine for a particular kind of sickness – thinking sickness. It will point out the delusions in our ordinary ways of being. Yet, it is powerless in leading a person to true liberation. It's a pointer, as I've been saying. Those who follow the point leave Buddhism far behind, while those who become attached to the pointer become ensconced in the religion.

---

Quote:

---

As someone who experiences non-thought regularly, your reply sounds like a blind man telling a normal man that grass isn't green. Could you tell me why you think that a state of non-thought is an illusion? (And why over two millenia of enlightened thinkers have preached the merits of non-thought, through meditation.)

---

Thanks.

WolfsonJakk

Posts: 1687

(7/6/04 1:06 pm)

Reply

Re: re:

I have heard the QRS collective (resistance is futile) say on more than one occasion that they are not Buddhists.

Quote:

The Dharma is a medicine for a particular kind of sickness – thinking sickness.

Don't forget those annoying emotions! On the other hand, one might define them as a subset.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1523

(7/6/04 4:11 pm)

Reply

Re: Reply to NOX

Quote:

What I mean by the above, is that when you understand certain concepts in a "full" way, they become part of your worldview, your way of perceiving reality. It is the difference between understanding that a concept must be so, and actually responding to the world that way, not seeing it any other way.

-----
To me, that sounds more like extremely profound delusion and attachment than a direct perception of reality.

How so? I think you misunderstood. For example, there are good, logical arguments in favor of emptiness, of lack of self-nature and self-existence, which could certainly convince someone. But yet they go on reacting in the world exactly as if they and other things and beings had self-nature, showing preference toward some things and aversions to others, and so forth. The discussion was about whether enlightenment can be attributed to understanding certain concepts or ways of looking at things. And I made the point that the understanding has to go beyond the intellectual until it becomes your experience, your first reality. The old way will become a memory. And QRS have always stated that - it has to change your being. It can't just be an idea.

Quote:

---

As in, "Thou are that."

---

Indeed, but what is the 'that'? In the Mahayana 'view', reality is tathata, "thatness", which is etymologically related to Tathagata, the Buddha

---

"That" is all there is, and all there is has being. "That" is that which has self-nature, and its self-nature is to exist.

Quote:

---

They're headed toward undermining the notion of self-existence and self-nature in any and all things, or at least that is the spirit in which they were written.

---

I'm sorry, I just can't find thread of thought.

Quote:

---

The core cannot be nothing. Therefore, emptiness is not the ultimate truth.

---

Firstly, there is no distinction between matter and thought, mainly because there is nothing that can be called 'substance'

---

. I would have said that there is no distinction between matter and thought, because there is only one substance. How do you propose that there is no substance?

Quote:

---

Secondly, you seem to be interpreting 'emptiness' (sunyata, in Sanskrit) as nothingness--a cardinal error.

---

That is the way you seem to be interpreting it.

Quote:

---

According to Nagarjuna, sunyata is the "exhaustion of all views", which Candrakirti says means the 'ceasing to function' of position-taking as a means to understanding the true way of reality. That is, it rejects particular views of the world, but is not itself another view.

---

The way of affirmation and the way of negation. The two ways to know God. There is one primal fact: existence.

Quote:

---

The realization of sunyata demonstrates that the true way of things completely transcends the duality of nothingness and somethingness.

---

It is because there is no alternative to somethingness, that it can be said to be beyond the duality of somethingness and nothingness.

Edited by: birdofhermes at: 7/6/04 4:16 pm

james johnathan
Registered User
Posts: 13
(7/7/04 12:23 am)
Reply

 Re: Reply to NOX

---

Hi NOX23,

I'll expand on those two statements as best as I can. In regards to Buddhism...

To be clear about Buddhism, it is the religious system that emerged around the teachings of the Buddha, despite the Buddha's clear warnings against becoming attached to words, rituals, and ceremony, while not actually following what those words lead to:

Quote:

---

“Believe nothing just because a so-called wise person said it. Believe nothing just because a belief is generally held. Believe nothing just because it is said in ancient books. Believe nothing just because it is said to be of divine origin. Believe nothing just because someone else believes it. Believe only what you yourself test and judge to be true.”

---

Incidentally, Lao-Tzu had the same reservations when he was asked to compile his thoughts as the Tao te Ching. Both of these masters knew very well the fundamental human tendency to become attached to the symbolic abstractions and representations that make connecting to deep truth more easy, and personal. And yet, truth is so far beyond the retention of abstract symbols and the “personalizing” of Reality – how can organized religious systems touch it? Of course, the idea is that Buddhism is a pointer that is used to correct erroneous beliefs (and emotions – thank you WolfsonJakk) – a tool of expediency that is to be dropped upon the full realization of emptiness. The problem is that people fail to realize the ultimate point, or become so enmeshed by the community, rituals, and other emotionally-satisfying aspects of the religion, that they can’t go beyond the religion. Like I said, the Dharma is a medicine for a particular kind of sickness. Once that sickness is cured, you need a medicine of a different sort to cure the side-effects of the first medicine. If you come across a Buddha on the path, kill him.

As for the second statement, I’m not sure expounding is required. It’s pretty straight-forward, I think. I was asking David if he could provide some reasonable basis for his assertion that it is impossible to exist in a state without thought. I said that enlightened people have utilized meditation for thousands of years. I emerged from this “state” of non-thought no more than about an hour ago – so again, I’m curious as to how anyone can call this state an “illusion”.

In fact, I would argue the complete opposite as David – only during deep meditation, when we come as close as possible to experiencing the infinite stillness of emptiness, do we attain our true nature, and the true nature of everything else. It is precisely these periods of normal consciousness in which the monkey-mind continues its samsaric, causation-determined course, that we are experiencing the “illusion”.

james johnathan
Registered User
Posts: 14
(7/7/04 7:12 am)
Reply

re:

---

Anna,

Please tell me how this,

Quote:

---

when you understand certain concepts in a "full" way, they become part of your worldview, your way of perceiving reality. It is the difference between understanding that a concept must be so, and actually responding to the world that way, not seeing it any other way.

---

reconciles with this statement of yours below:

Quote:

---

JJ: Reality is all around you – it won't be found within the emptiness of our ever-changing system of linguistic symbols.

Bird: Yes, I see that.

---

Quote:

---

JJ: Grasping reason (and the understandings thereof) is grasping a phantom.

Bird: One doesn't grasp one's leg, one simply uses it. On the other hand, without that leg, you'd be a cripple.

---

You grasp reason any time you affirm some conceptual truth about Reality. You are implicitly assuming that that conceptual truth is anything other than that very illusion that you are trying to capture.

Quote:

---

Bird: I'm pondering that the only truth might be somethingness.

JJ: Please, elaborate.

Bird: Well, take this for example:

"with the mind in its original, empty nature, it is more apt to say that emptiness gives insight into reason." What kind of emptiness is this, that it gives insight?

---

Simple. When consciousness is empty, everything else is emptied along with it. Thus why it is said that by attaining your own true nature, you attain the true nature of everything else as well. This is because your true nature, and the true nature of everything else, are not different. So in other words, when the mind is in its original state of complete non-obstruction, one becomes aware of the emptiness of concepts. Repeating to yourself "reason is empty" - as a sort of mantra - won't help you in attaining what that conceptual truth is actually pointing to.

Quote:

---

Bird: Right now, in quantum physics and string theory, they are considering switching from a belief that particles are points with no mass or size, to one in which they have an incredibly small physical size. And switching from the idea that the universe was compressed to zero size at the singularity before the big bang, to one in which it was compressed merely to Planck length. I do not understand that stuff I'm reading - my amazement was that they ever considered the zero size theory in the first place. Regardless, though, of whether it turns out that physical matter is the manifestation of some nonmaterial event, such as thought, it still seems evident to me that at the bottom of reality must lie something, not nothing. The core cannot be nothing. Therefore, emptiness is not the ultimate truth.

---

If you want to know what Buddhists mean when they speak of emptiness, I suggest you familiarize yourself with Nagarjuna and his followers. Quantum mechanics is cool, but whereas it deals with the conventional realm of phenomena, the “philosophy” of emptiness deals with the higher truth that is beyond the conventional (scientific) realm.

Quote:

---

JJ: It may be expedient to think of it in those terms, but I find that most pretensions to “change one’s being” are in err, since these can obscure the fact your Buddha-nature is already not apart from you.

Bird: Sure, but when you are unaware of your Buddha nature you sense something is wrong. When your buddha-nature is compressed with piles of existential angst, it isn't fun.

---

Agreed. My point was that focusing too intently on some grand quest to enlightenment is merely samsara. It is, as you say, a paradox.

Quote:

---

JJ: What is it that is assumed to exist before the change, and what is it that is assumed will exist after the change?

Bird: Perception.

---

So then what are you saying needs changing, if “perception” is changing to “perception”?

Quote:

---

JJ: Quests to “change one’s being” arise from existential angst, which is simply a manifestation of the ego’s deep attachment to its own existence. Realizing that there is no real quest to embark on, and that any such quest is merely samsara, is a hard realization to come to.

Bird: Because it is only when you begin to make the profound perceptual change that you can then say that there was nowhere to go, and that nirvana is samsara.

---

Nicely put, I agree. Yet, I wonder how you came to the conclusion that nirvana is samsara, if you don't believe that emptiness is the ultimate truth. Nirvana is equivalent to samsara because of the fact that they are both empty.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2330
(7/7/04 11:05 am)
Reply

Re: re:

James wrote:

Quote:

---

As someone who experiences non-thought regularly, your reply sounds like a blind man telling a normal man that grass isn't green. Could you tell me why you think that a state of non-thought is an illusion? (And why over two millenia of enlightened thinkers have preached the merits of non-thought, through meditation.)

---

Because, alas, these so-called "enlightened thinkers" are less interested in truth and more interested in promoting meditative heavens that greatly appeal to the ego. Needless to say, the latter is far more popular and pleasurable to the emotions than the former.

The problem with entering into a state of "no-thought" is that there is no way of knowing that one has actually entered into it - not unless one uses thought. The reason why we have no conscious awareness during deep sleep is because there are no thoughts occurring during this time. Without thoughts, there is no consciousness and no experience whatsoever.

Quote:

---

I will agree that it is impossible to exist consciously in a state without thought. The misassumption on your part is that meditation is a state of consciousness. It is a state of the cessation of consciousness.

---

Are you saying, then, that the meditative state is a state of complete unconsciousness? For that is what "cessation of consciousness" means.

Quote:

---

The state of emptiness is a state-less state. It's a state wherein the mind no longer holds any static views, regarding either itself, or the external world. When, for expediency, it needs to take a view, it will take that view. But it does so knowing that whatever view it takes, be it of an intellectual nature of otherwise, it is ultimately not the highest truth, which is un-nameable.

---

So why do you have such fixed views on what constitutes "emptiness" and the meditative state?

Quote:

---

DQ: It is like climbing a long ladder and then, at the instant of reaching the very last rung, having the incredible realization that both the ladder and the place you are climbing towards are illusions. One doesn't have to make a "leap" because one sees that there is nothing to leap from, and indeed nothing to leap into. Again, this is a fully rational insight, albeit one that opens up the mind to the nature of Reality.

JJ: When reason is realized to be empty (when it "empties itself") there is no way that this can purely be a rational insight, because reason cannot simultaneously affirm and negate its own validity.

DQ: It is not being asked to do this. In fact, the process is one of double affirmation. Firstly, it affirms the illusory nature of all things, including its own self, and then, in making this affirmation, it automatically affirms its own ability to produce rational insight into the nature of Reality.

JJ: So an illusion is making valid, tenable insights into something that is non-illusory (the Absolute, or, sunyata)? I see a paradox here.

---

There is no paradox. You are artificially creating the paradox by surreptitiously using two different definitions of the word "illusion". I've already explained that the empty, illusory nature of reason refers to its appearance of inherently existing, not to its ability to expose delusion. You're consciously or unconsciously conflating these two things in order to create a paradox that your ego wants to see.

Quote:

---

The end “point” is the Absolute, emptiness. Reason must be subordinate to this.

---

"Must be" .....? Could this be a Freudian slip, I wonder? :)

Quote:

---

There is a difference between being rationally justifiable, and being an explicit position of “rationality”. This is quite simply because in samadhi, no views are affirmed – so what is there to be either rational or irrational? Obviously, Nirvana is rationally justifiable in that any attempts to label it “irrational” can easily be deconstructed. However, to say that it is either rational or irrational is incorrect. Nirvana is not rational, and it is not not rational. This is because it does not exist, though neither does it not not exist. It’s sunyata, the Middle Path.

---

Again, you're creating paradoxes and false dilemmas where none exist. The question is not whether Nirvana itself is rational or non-rational, but whether our own understanding of Nirvana is rational or irrational. I trust you see the difference.

An apple, in and of itself, is neither rational nor non-rational as well. It is just like Nirvana in that regard. And yet at the same time, we are perfectly capable of judging whether a particular understanding of apples is rational or irrational. The same applies to a particular understanding of Nirvana.

Throughout your posts, you articulate strong, fixed views on what you think Nirvana is, which implies (a) that you do believe that reason is perfectly capable of dealing with Nirvana, and (b) that a particular understanding can be either rational or irrational, and (c) that your own understanding of Nirvana is perfectly correct and rational.

Quote:

---

JJ: Meditation isn't done "on" anything - it's being empty. You're enlightened though, so I know that you already know that. David, may I ask what your meditation practice is?

DQ: It consists of keeping my mind focused on the nature of existence, no matter what I am doing.

JJ: Are you skilled at utilizing proper breathing methods to heighten focus and awareness?

DQ: Are you skilled in detaching yourself from Buddhism and going beyond it?

JJ: I never said I was Buddhist.

---

You certainly sound like a Buddhist. Or at least someone who has swallowed too many Buddhist textbooks.

Quote:

---

DQ: Just out of curiosity, what do you do for a living? Are you married?

JJ: Currently I'm working in a greenhouse, in order to finance the second year of my philosophy degree. It's not terrible work, though unfortunately it takes my replies a little more time to be posted, for which I apologize. I'm not married – are you? Just kidding.

DQ: Do you have a girlfriend?

JJ: All these questions regarding my relationship-status – you're not hitting on me, are you David?

---

Just checking out how committed you are to the philosophy of non-attachment.

Quote:

---

No, I don't have a girlfriend. I've had 'em, and I have no interest in 'em these days.

---

Do you see your parents or other members of your family? Celebrate Christmas and birthdays with them?

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2331
(7/7/04 11:23 am)
Reply

 Re: re: Eckhart Tolle

---

Matt wrote:

Quote:

---

Matt: So reason is a conceptual process used to comprehend something that "cannot be captured in concepts".

David: In the case of applying reason to the understanding of Reality itself, yes. Of course, the reasoner starts out trying to capture Reality in a perfect conceptual web. But sooner or later, he realizes that this is impossible due to the fact that Reality has no form or nature, and therefore there is essentially nothing to capture.

Matt: What I'm interested in is the realization that reality has no form or nature; how can it be that reason, as a conceptual process, does not break down at this point?

---

Why would it break down? No matter how profound or advanced one's understanding is, reason continues to operate as normal. For example, the sage can reason that if Reality has no form or nature, then it cannot have the form of a God, or of a materialistic, objective universe. Or he can reason that it cannot be captured by thought. Or that it is meaningless to try and directly "see" it. And so on.

Quote:

---

Or do you agree with me that it is profoundly useful for undermining delusions and attachments, but that is its only real use?

---

Well, more or less. Reason can also trigger altered states and ground-breaking intuitions, which are also important to enriching one's knowledge of Reality. Reason can make hidden connections and uncover deeper truths about human psychology and the nature of the ego.

Quote:

---

DQ: That's right. Reason destroys everything that is not real, leaving the mind to apprehend what is left.

Matt: And what do you figure is left? What sort of apprehension takes place?

---

How can one describe the apprehension of God? It is something that people have to discover for themselves.

Quote:

---

DQ: Reason is not "beyond the dualistic structures of discursive intellect". Our intellectual minds define what reason is, and, in doing so, we create it into being.

Matt: Really? So, reason is actually a invention of the mind? The same sort of false-imagination that leads people to believe in external objects? You're not seriously claiming enlightenment through some delusional projection of your mind, are you?

---

No, not exactly. Reason is not a mental invention in the sense that it is arbitrarily created by our whims and can be changed into something else at a moment's notice. Just as a tree cannot be arbitrarily created by our whims, neither can reason. Both the tree and reason have identities which transcend our imagination's ability to change them.

At the same time, however, both the tree and reason are created by our mind's ability to distinguish between objects and determine where they begin and end. That is to say, our minds isolate these things from the rest of the Universe and, in doing so, we literally decide what they are. In that sense, they are a mental invention, and a product of our discursive, dualistic intellects.

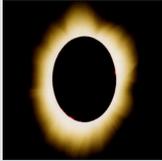

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2742

(7/7/04 12:38 pm)

Reply

Re: re: Eckhart Tolle

---

David:--

Quote:

---

Reason is not a mental invention in the sense that it is arbitrarily created by our whims and can be changed into something else at a moment's notice. Just as a tree cannot be arbitrarily created by our whims, neither can reason.

---

What?

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1526

(7/8/04 2:58 am)

Reply

Re: re:

---

JJ,

Quote:

---

Please tell me how this,

Quote:

Me:when you understand certain concepts in a "full" way, they become part of your worldview, your way of perceiving reality. It is the difference between understanding that a concept must be so, and actually responding to the world that way, not seeing it any other way.

reconciles with this statement of yours below:

Quote:

JJ: Reality is all around you – it won't be found within the emptiness of our ever-changing system of linguistic symbols.

Bird: Yes, I see that.

---

I'm completely mystified as to what about that statement seems odd to both you and MG. I meant this:

Quote:

---

Repeating to yourself “reason is empty” - as a sort of mantra - won’t help you in attaining what that conceptual truth is actually pointing to.

---

Quote:

---

You grasp reason any time you affirm some conceptual truth about Reality. You are implicitly assuming that that conceptual truth is anything other than that very illusion that you are trying to capture.

---

I don't understand the second sentence. By trying to capture the illusion, do you mean trying to understand and see through it? What I was saying is that reason can be used appropriately without grasping.

Quote:

---

If you want to know what Buddhists mean when they speak of emptiness, I suggest you familiarize yourself with Nagarjuna and his followers. Quantum mechanics is cool, but whereas it deals with the conventional realm of phenomena, the “philosophy” of emptiness deals with the higher truth that is beyond the conventional (scientific) realm.

---

I've seen a lot of people talking about emptiness and they continually bring it to the physical realm, insisting that it is empty. There is no difference between conventional phenomena and higher truth. The scientific realm is not separate from the spiritual. There is ONE realm. And besides, QM deals with exactly the thing you said:

Quote:

---

This is because your true nature, and the true nature of everything else, are not different.

---

That is the conclusion of string theory. (Albeit it is a theory in progress.) If something is an ultimate truth, I expect it to be corroborated everywhere.

I am somewhat familiar with Nagarjuna and his followers, having read many posts and quotations.

Quote:

---

So then what are you saying needs changing, if “perception” is changing to “perception”?

---

I meant that one's perception changes.

Quote:

---

Yet, I wonder how you came to the conclusion that nirvana is samsara, if you don't believe that emptiness is the ultimate truth. Nirvana is equivalent to samsara because of the fact that they are both empty.

---

I meant it in the sense that nirvana is samsara rightly experienced. Not that they are empty but that they are united. That one need not run from samsara as there is nowhere to run. That the experience of nirvana is dependent upon existing within samsara.

Why do you say emptiness is the ultimate truth?

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2332
(7/8/04 9:34 am)
Reply

Re: re: Eckhart Tolle

Suergaz wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: Reason is not a mental invention in the sense that it is arbitrarily created by our whims and can be changed into something else at a moment's notice. Just as a tree cannot be arbitrarily created by our whims, neither can reason.

S: What?

---

Reason is not a mental invention in the sense that it is arbitrarily created by our whims and can be changed into something else at a moment's notice. Just as a tree cannot be arbitrarily created by our whims, neither can reason.

james johnathan
Registered User
Posts: 15
(7/8/04 10:28 am)
Reply

re:

Quote:

---

JJ: As someone who experiences non-thought regularly, your reply sounds like a blind man telling a normal man that grass isn't green. Could you tell me why you think that a state of non-thought is an illusion? (And why over two millennia of enlightened thinkers have preached the merits of non-thought, through meditation.)

DQ: Because, alas, these so-called "enlightened thinkers" are less interested in truth and more interested in promoting meditative heavens that greatly appeal to the ego. Needless to say, the latter is far more popular and pleasurable to the emotions than the former

---

Do you not consider the Buddha, the Bodhidharma, or any of the successive Zen Patriarchs and Masters to be enlightened thinkers? I think you have a highly romanticized (and incorrect) notion of what meditation actually is. I don't know what a meditative "heaven" is, nor do I see how stilling the mind's idea of itself and communing with emptiness is an appeal to the ego. Sadly, in its currently fashionable form, meditation is espoused by many as a quick and sure way to obtain health, vitality, and moments of bliss. If these things occur, they are merely side-effects, and the moment they become attached to, meditation's true function has been lost.

Quote:

---

DQ: The problem with entering into a state of "no-thought" is that there is no way of knowing that one has actually entered into it - not unless one uses thought. The reason why we have no conscious awareness during deep sleep is because there are no thoughts occurring during this time. Without thoughts, there is no consciousness and no experience whatsoever.

---

These strike me as highly spurious claims, coming from someone with no actual experience in the matter. It's like someone who has never experienced a drug-induced altered state explaining to someone who has what that state is like, on the basis of specious appeals to logic.

You have created a false dilemma above. While the statement "one cannot think about not thinking (as in, one cannot be consciously aware of one's unconsciousness)" is a true logical syllogism, it does not refer to the real phenomenon that you are trying to conceptualize - it doesn't apply to the real brain phenomena that occurs during meditation. In other words, it's a conceptual dilemma, not an actual one. This is simply because the narrow, simplistic categories of "thinking" and "not-thinking", or more aptly, "consciousness" and "unconsciousness", are ill-equipped to deal with the complex reality that is our mind, and its functioning. You don't really think that the non-comprehensive terms "consciousness" and "unconsciousness" are satisfactory for dealing with the intricate subject of mind-states, do you? These are terms we use to simplify and categorize the conditions of the mind, so as to make referring to brain-states more manageable. By inventing these words, we can save ourselves the effort of having to refer to precise neurochemical brain-states in conventional discourse and can instead broadly ascribe our states as either "conscious" or "unconscious". This is acceptable in everyday discussion (one wouldn't say of a sleeping person, "that person is exhibiting a marked reduction in alpha-wave brain activity!") - but for our purposes, we need to be precise and refer specifically to neurochemical states.

Thus, to conclude that a thought-less state is impossible on the basis of your syllogism is a non sequitur. It is true that one cannot be conscious of one's unconsciousness, but this is not what meditation involves. Since you seemed to have ignored what I said in my last post regarding the neurochemistry behind meditation, I will try to reiterate the point. To not form concepts in one's head means precisely that. It doesn't mean that one must consciously reflect on the fact that one is not forming concepts in one's head. By maintaining a thought-less state, and practicing the proper breathing techniques associated with zazen or vipassyana meditation, deep states (approaching what you might call total "non-consciousness") become not only possible, but consistently reproducible.

Quote:

---

JJ: I will agree that it is impossible to exist consciously in a state without thought. The misassumption on your part is that meditation is a state of consciousness. It is a state of the cessation of consciousness.

DQ: Are you saying, then, that the meditative state is a state of complete unconsciousness? For that is what "cessation of consciousness" means.

---

Again, it is hard to describe mind states using the clumsy lexicon of folk psychology. I would say that it is a state of complete unconsciousness in so far as you want to consider "consciousness" as the shallow, flitting, aroused and reactive nature of our typical mind state. I simply find it more to the point to speak of it in the most precise terms possible – those of neurobiology. It's the cessation (or, near-cessation) of the alpha-wave activity in our brains. It's also a reduction in the activity of the frontal lobe, the parietal lobe, the thalamus, and the reticular formation.

Quote:

---

JJ: The state of emptiness is a state-less state. It's a state wherein the mind no longer holds any static views, regarding either itself, or the external world. When, for expediency, it needs to take a view, it will take that view. But it does so knowing that whatever view it takes, be it of an intellectual nature or otherwise, it is ultimately not the highest truth, which is un-nameable.

DQ: So why do you have such fixed views on what constitutes "emptiness" and the meditative state?

---

I'm adopting the view that is expedient to this discussion. "Expedient means" doesn't entail a lack of consistency.

Quote:

---

DQ: It is like climbing a long ladder and then, at the instant of reaching the very last rung, having the incredible realization that both the ladder and the place you are climbing towards are illusions. One doesn't have to make a "leap" because one sees that there is nothing to leap from, and indeed nothing to leap into. Again, this is a fully rational insight, albeit one that opens up the mind to the nature of Reality.

JJ: When reason is realized to be empty (when it "empties itself") there is no way that this can purely be a rational insight, because reason cannot simultaneously affirm and negate its own validity.

DQ: It is not being asked to do this. In fact, the process is one of double affirmation. Firstly, it affirms the illusory nature of all things, including its own self, and then, in making this affirmation, it automatically affirms its own ability to produce rational insight into the nature of Reality.

JJ: So an illusion is making valid, tenable insights into something that is non-illusory (the Absolute, or, sunyata)? I see a paradox here.

DQ: There is no paradox. You are artificially creating the paradox by surreptitiously using two different definitions of the word "illusion". I've already explained that the empty, illusory nature of reason refers to its appearance of inherently existing, not to its ability to expose delusion.

---

Yes, but when you've exposed reason as just another one of those delusions that you are trying to expose, what then? At this point, reason breaks down – it is part of the illusion. Thus, I defer to Nagarjuna, who said that the higher truth is unobtainable, since it involves realizing the emptiness of conventional truth.

Quote:

---

JJ: There is a difference between being rationally justifiable, and being an explicit position of “rationality”. This is quite simply because in samadhi, no views are affirmed – so what is there to be either rational or irrational? Obviously, Nirvana is rationally justifiable in that any attempts to label it “irrational” can easily be deconstructed. However, to say that it is either rational or irrational is incorrect. Nirvana is not rational, and it is not not rational. This is because it does not exist, though neither does it not not exist. It’s sunyata, the Middle Path.

DQ: Again, you're creating paradoxes and false dilemmas where none exist. The question is not whether Nirvana itself is rational or non-rational, but whether our own understanding of Nirvana is rational or irrational. I trust you see the difference. An apple, in and of itself, is neither rational nor non-rational as well. It is just like Nirvana in that regard. And yet at the same time, we are perfectly capable of judging whether a particular understanding of apples is rational or irrational. The same applies to a particular understanding of Nirvana.

---

It sounds as though you are treating Nirvana as an actual thing, hence your comparison of it to an actual thing. How would you describe Nirvana? What would you say is your “understanding” of it?

Quote:

---

JJ: Meditation isn't done "on" anything - it's being empty. You're enlightened though, so I know that you already know that. David, may I ask what your meditation practice is?

DQ: It consists of keeping my mind focused on the nature of existence, no matter what I am doing.

JJ: Are you skilled at utilizing proper breathing methods to heighten focus and awareness?

DQ: Are you skilled in detaching yourself from Buddhism and going beyond it?

JJ: I never said I was Buddhist.

DQ: You certainly sound like a Buddhist. Or at least someone who has swallowed too many Buddhist textbooks.

---

I sound like that? Hm. I would say that I need to read more Buddhist textbooks. Regrettably, my understanding of Buddhism is not what it could be.

Quote:

---

DQ: Just out of curiosity, what do you do for a living? Are you married?

JJ: Currently I'm working in a greenhouse, in order to finance the second year of my philosophy degree. It's not terrible work, though unfortunately it takes my replies a little more time to be posted, for which I apologize. I'm not married – are you? Just kidding.

DQ: Do you have a girlfriend?

JJ: All these questions regarding my relationship-status – you're not hitting on me, are you David?

DQ: Just checking out how committed you are to the philosophy of non-attachment.

---

Oh, I see. Do I pass your test, then?

Quote:

---

DQ: Do you see your parents or other members of your family? Celebrate Christmas and birthdays with them?

---

-

I hate to be brusque, but this latest reply of yours is lacking in the consideration that I'd expect of your posts. You left the majority of my last post untouched, and of what you did you say, only about half of it was of any real substance. Were you tired or something?

As for your last question, it would behoove you to dedicate more attention to the topics at hand, as opposed to trying to create a personality profile of me.

james johnathan
Registered User
Posts: 16
(7/8/04 10:36 am)
Reply

 re:

---

Quote:

---

Reason is not a mental invention in the sense that it is arbitrarily created by our whims and can be changed into something else at a moment's notice. Just as a tree cannot be arbitrarily created by our whims, neither can reason.

---

It sounds as though you consider reason as something objectively existing that we discover, rather than an ever-changing, self-referential system of symbolisms.

Edited by: james johnathan at: 7/8/04 1:01 pm

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM
> GENIUS FORUM
> Eckhart Tolle

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
WolfsonJakk Posts: 1689 (7/8/04 10:54 am) Reply	 ... <hr/> Quote: <hr/> I hate to be brusque, but this latest reply of yours is lacking in the consideration that I'd expect of your posts. You left the majority of my last post untouched, and of what you did you say, only about half of it was of any real substance. Were you tired or something? As for your last question, it would behoove you to dedicate more attention to the topics at hand, as opposed to trying to create a personality profile of me. <hr/> Wear your thick skin here, JJ (first name James or Jonathan?). Expect nothing. The profile of behaviors is relevant. DQ can seem abrasive but his intentions are usually misunderstood. Tharan

james johnathan
Registered User
Posts: 17
(7/8/04 12:59 pm)
Reply

Re: ...

---

Hi WolfsonJakk,

First name James, by the way.

Quote:

---

DQ can seem abrasive but his intentions are usually misunderstood.

---

Au contrair, I don't think I misunderstand his intentions in the slightest. By asking me personal questions that he believes have some intrinsic relevance to my philosophical and spiritual dedication, he is attempting to form a profile of me. He will then mold me - either consciously or unconsciously - to the profile he's made of me. The desire to have a profile of who you're discoursing with is obvious - and yet, induction can be a dangerously misleading tool.

Or maybe I'm mistaken, and he simply wanted to know about "A James Family Christmas" so that we could exchange tips on tree-decorating?

Quote:

---

The profile of behaviors is relevant.

---

I don't really believe in profiling.

Jones Kelly

Posts: 214

(7/8/04 2:30 pm)

Reply

Re: ...

James:

Quote:

---

I don't think I misunderstand his intentions in the slightest....I don't really believe in profiling.

---

I am assuming that profiling is creating an identity for someone, based on what they express, how they behave. I would say it's impossible to communicate without using profiles. Your profile of David probably includes the following information:

Language: English

Sex: Male

Status: Forum moderator

Values: reasoning, truthfulness, wisdom...

Knowledge: Buddhism...

It's fairly obvious, from reading your replies to David, that not only are you using a profile, but you're also using projections (creating extra details in an identity that aren't based on what someone expresses/does). It is obvious because you draw conclusions without first getting extra information.

Profiles are ultimately projections, actually, but not really avoidable.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1527

(7/8/04 4:05 pm)

Reply

Re: ...

Quote:

---

One of the women said, "All of us have the four basic necessities of life. We have the seven rare treasures as well. There are, however, three things we would like. A tree without roots. A piece of land where there is neither light nor shade. Some corner of a mountain valley where a shout does not echo."

---

The tree without roots refers to being empty of identifications with ego-personality -- total inner freedom, the land without light or shade refers to understanding nonduality, and the valley without echo refers to being awake to reality as it is, without constantly having everything reflected back at you through the lense of delusion.

Jones Kelly

Posts: 217

(7/8/04 4:22 pm)

Reply

 Re: ...

---

Quote:

Koan:

One of the women said, "All of us have the four basic necessities of life. We have the seven rare treasures as well. There are, however, three things we would like. A tree without roots. A piece of land where there is neither light nor shade. Some corner of a mountain valley where a shout does not echo."

Anna wrote:

The tree without roots refers to being empty of identifications with ego-personality -- total inner freedom, the land without light or shade refers to understanding nonduality, and the valley without echo refers to being awake to reality as it is, without constantly having everything reflected back at you through the lense of delusion.

---

All three things are expressions of the same thing.

There is no separation between inner and outer, since all things are empty. The roots do not refer to ego.

What is your understanding of nonduality?

What is the lens of delusion?

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1528

(7/8/04 4:48 pm)

Reply

Re: ...

---

Quote:

---

All three things are expressions of the same thing.

---

Yes, or aspects of the same thing.

Quote:

---

There is no separation between inner and outer, since all things are empty. The roots do not refer to ego.

---

I did not mean ego exactly. I think the tree without roots refers to the person, the land refers to their perception, and the nonechoing valley refers to the results of the first two, and refers to the mind which sees without distortion, which is like an echo. The echo is maya - it is because of our myriad assumptions that we are caught in maya.

Quote:

---

What is your understanding of nonduality?

---

That which is whole is divided. The division causes movement. Thus things can happen. I gave my understanding earlier in this thread, to MG. For me, nonduality is really an affirmation of one possibility with no other possibility. God is beyond duality because God is all there is. That which is all cannot have a name because names are comparisons to that which it is not. There is nothing which is not God and no other possibility exists. There is no "outside" to God. Therefore, it is meaningful to call such an awesome reality "God" and yet it is simultaneously meaningless to call it anything at all. It just IS. Therefore, God exists, does not exist, both exists and does not exist, neither exists nor does not exist.

(Shut up Zag.)

Quote:

---

What is the lens of delusion?

---

One explanation is what I gave above. I'd say fear is the main cause of delusion. When a person feels threatened, they try to interpret the environment and direct it. This is a form of dreaming. I can see it as being like an echo, because instead of penetrating to the core, it bounces back, like a boomerang. And the reason it bounces back is that the gaze was always about the separate self and not about pure perception of what is. What that means is all we can see is what we expect in the first place. In other words, prejudice.

Edited by: birdofhermes at: 7/8/04 4:55 pm

james johnathan
Registered User
Posts: 18
(7/9/04 1:49 am)
Reply

 Re: ...

---

Kelly:

Quote:

---

I am assuming that profiling is creating an identity for someone, based on what they express, how they behave. I would say it's impossible to communicate without using profiles

---

The problem with profiles is that they're distorting attachments. When the person whome you've profiled makes a statement, that statement will be filtered through the profile you've made for them, thus distorting the statement in some way. Better to keep an open, beginner's mind. The exact same problem occurs in racial profiling, wherein an individual is interpreted and considered through the filter of a general racial profile. Likewise, David wants to interpret and consider my points through the filter of a general profile (either "spiritually dedicated", or "not spiritually dedicated").

Creating a profile of someone based on what they express and how they behave is one thing, and while I wouldn't say it's impossible to communicate without them, it is certainly a more or less natural function of memory to do this. Just because it's natural, however, doesn't mean it's going to make you more objective in your dealings with people.

Quote:

---

It's fairly obvious, from reading your replies to David, that not only are you using a profile, but you're also using projections (creating extra details in an identity that aren't based on what someone expresses/does). It is obvious because you draw conclusions without first getting extra information.

---

Examples? I wonder what "extra details" you might be referring to.

I do have a profile of David, but I do my best to reply to his points without consideration to that profile. I try to regard his points neutrally, assessing each one objectively for its truth content, and not filtering them through the mental abstraction that is my profile of "David Quinn".

In comparison, David seems to be actively building a profile of me by asking me questions regarding my personal life, so that he can easily contrast this profile with his preconceptions and by so doing, "figure me out". Hence why I suggested that he apply more attention to my actual points, and less to painting a picture of me based on his inductions.

jimhaz

Registered User
Posts: 708
(7/9/04 9:57 am)
Reply

 Re: ...

---

It would appear to me to be a waste of time talking to you if you are disinclined to be open. You're using this profiling crap as an excuse for something.

silentsal

Registered User
Posts: 116
(7/9/04 10:16 am)
Reply

 Re: ...

---

it appears to me as if James is open, the profiling crap is crap nonetheless so who is doing the crapping.

james johnathan
Registered User
Posts: 19
(7/9/04 10:57 am)
Reply

re:

---

Quote:

---

You're using this profiling crap as an excuse for something.

---

Nope, just responding to Kelly's post.

Quote:

---

It would appear to me to be a waste of time talking to you if you are disinclined to be open.

---

You may be right about one thing; it's probably a waste of your time talking to me.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2336
(7/9/04 11:43 am)
Reply

Re: re:

---

James Johnathan wrote:

Quote:

---

I do have a profile of David, but I do my best to reply to his points without consideration to that profile. I try to regard his points neutrally, assessing each one objectively for its truth content, and not filtering them through the mental abstraction that is my profile of "David Quinn".

In comparison, David seems to be actively building a profile of me by asking me questions regarding my personal life, so that he can easily contrast this profile with his preconceptions and by so doing, "figure me out". Hence why I suggested that he apply more attention to my actual points, and less to painting a picture of me based on his inductions.

---

I'm simply challenging your spiritual attainments and wisdom. It has nothing to do with building up a "personal profile" of you. I was curious as to whether you extend your philosophy of non-attachment beyond your meditation sessions and into your wider life.

Are you seeking to become non-attached to utterly everything - including the things and people you currently love?

Quote:

---

JJ: As someone who experiences non-thought regularly, your reply sounds like a blind man telling a normal man that grass isn't green. Could you tell me why you think that a state of non-thought is an illusion? (And why over two millennia of enlightened thinkers have preached the merits of non-thought, through meditation.)

DQ: Because, alas, these so-called "enlightened thinkers" are less interested in truth and more interested in promoting meditative heavens that greatly appeal to the ego. Needless to say, the latter is far more popular and pleasurable to the emotions than the former JJ: Do you not consider the Buddha, the Bodhidharma, or any of the successive Zen Patriarchs and Masters to be enlightened thinkers?

---

I consider most of them to be frauds. The exceptions, such as Bodhidarmna, Huang Po and Hakuin, weren't interested in meditative thoughtless states of consciousness, but in something much deeper and more fascinating.

Quote:

---

I think you have a highly romanticized (and incorrect) notion of what meditation actually is. I don't know what a meditative "heaven" is, nor do I see how stilling the mind's idea of itself and communing with emptiness is an appeal to the ego.

---

The ego is attracted to anything that gives it a sense of power. By entering into powerful meditative states which seem to render everything empty, the ego can feel as though it has conquered everything in the Universe.

Quote:

---

Sadly, in its currently fashionable form, meditation is espoused by many as a quick and sure way to obtain health, vitality, and moments of bliss. If these things occur, they are merely side-effects, and the moment they become attached to, meditation's true function has been lost.

---

I'm not talking about those things, but about the "emptiness" experience you have described - which I deem to be a false emptiness.

Quote:

---

DQ: The problem with entering into a state of "no-thought" is that there is no way of knowing that one has actually entered into it - not unless one uses thought. The reason why we have no conscious awareness during deep sleep is because there are no thoughts occurring during this time. Without thoughts, there is no consciousness and no experience whatsoever.

JJ: These strike me as highly spurious claims, coming from someone with no actual experience in the matter. It's like someone who has never experienced a drug-induced altered state explaining to someone who has what that state is like, on the basis of specious appeals to logic.

---

Sorry to disappoint you, but I know exactly the kind of experience you are talking about and have experienced it many times. Keep in mind that I am not challenging the existence and reality of the "false emptiness" that you experience, but rather its connection to the ultimate wisdom of life.

Quote:

---

You have created a false dilemma above. While the statement "one cannot think about not thinking (as in, one cannot be consciously aware of one's unconsciousness)" is a true logical syllogism, it does not refer to the real phenomenon that you are trying to conceptualize - it doesn't apply to the real brain phenomena that occurs during meditation. In other words, it's a conceptual dilemma, not an actual one. This is simply because the narrow, simplistic categories of "thinking" and "not-thinking", or more aptly, "consciousness" and "unconsciousness", are ill-equipped to deal with the complex reality that is our mind, and its functioning.

---

They are no more ill-equipped to deal with mental realities than are the terms "on" and "off" ill-equipped to deal with the complex realities of light. It doesn't matter how complex a light source it is, it can always be judged to be on or off. Likewise, it doesn't matter how our complex mental states can get, we can always make the judgment as to whether we are conscious or unconscious.

Quote:

---

These are terms we use to simplify and categorize the conditions of the mind, so as to make referring to brain-states more manageable.

---

No, they are not. They are specific terms that refer to specific phenomena which are real. For example, the term "being conscious" is a specific term that refers to the specific phenomenon of being aware and having experiences. It doesn't matter how complex these experiences can become - that is irrelevant as far as the term "being conscious" is concerned.

Quote:

---

It is true that one cannot be conscious of one's unconsciousness, but this is not what meditation involves. Since you seemed to have ignored what I said in my last post regarding the neurochemistry behind meditation, I will try to reiterate the point. To not form concepts in one's head means precisely that. It doesn't mean that one must consciously reflect on the fact that one is not forming concepts in one's head. By maintaining a thought-less state, and practicing the proper breathing techniques associated with zazen or vipassana meditation, deep states (approaching what you might call total "non-consciousness") become not only possible, but consistently reproducible.

---

There is no question that if you shut down the higher functioning of the brain - i.e. the frontal lobes and cerebral cortex - then you will experience a different form of consciousness in which your fears and worries and agitated thoughts temporarily disappear. The problem is, such a state has nothing to do with the great realization of Nirvana as experienced by wise people. A wise person doesn't have to shut down his cerebral cortex in order to experience Emptiness. He can continue to experience it even while he is thinking and reasoning and talking to others.

Quote:

---

JJ: I will agree that it is impossible to exist consciously in a state without thought. The misassumption on your part is that meditation is a state of consciousness. It is a state of the cessation of consciousness.

DQ: Are you saying, then, that the meditative state is a state of complete unconsciousness? For that is what "cessation of consciousness" means.

JJ: Again, it is hard to describe mind states using the clumsy lexicon of folk psychology.

---

It is wrong to call terms such as "consciousness" folk psychology. These terms refer to specific subjective realities that we all experience. The use of scientific, empirical terminology that you favour, such as "alpha-beta brain activity", are meaningless to us personally if we don't link them to the subjective realities of consciousness, thinking, emotion, understanding, etc.

Quote:

---

I would say that it is a state of complete unconsciousness in so far as you want to consider "consciousness" as the shallow, flitting, aroused and reactive nature of our typical mind state.

---

Well, sure, if you want narrow your conception of consciousness so that it refers only to the shallowest of mind states, then yes, you can conclude, if you want to, that zazen meditation takes you "beyond consciousness". But it is a very strange definition of consciousness, James. It is also misleading because it causes people to think that you are making a far grander claim than you actually are.

In reality, meditation doesn't lead to the cessation of consciousness at all. It simply leads to a different type of consciousness, one in which the usual fears and worries and agitated thoughts have disappeared.

Quote:

---

I simply find it more to the point to speak of it in the most precise terms possible – those of neurobiology. It's the cessation (or, near-cessation) of the alpha-wave activity in our brains. It's also a reduction in the activity of the frontal lobe, the parietal lobe, the thalamus, and the reticular formation.

---

I think all this is a distraction. None of this is particularly relevant to the understanding and experience of Ultimate Reality. Again, I believe that you are immersing yourself in a false experience of emptiness, and you do this because it is pleasurable and comforting to your ego.

In Buddhism, this false emptiness is called the "eighth consciousness" and is described as a deep pit which traps many aspirants. Here is what Hakuin, in his usual colourful language, had to say on this matter:

Quote:

---

The Zen master Daie said: "At the present time, the evil one's influence is strong and the Dharma is weak. The great majority of people regard 'reverting to tranquillity and living within it' as the ultimate attainment."

He also said: "A race of sham Zennists has appeared in recent years who regard sitting with dropped eyelids and closed mouths letting illusory thoughts spin through their minds to be the attainment of a marvelous state that surpasses human understanding. They consider it to be the realm of primal Buddhahood 'existing prior to the timeless beginning.' If they do open their mouths and utter so much as a syllable, they will immediately tell you that they have slipped out of that marvelous realm. They believe this to be the most fundamental state it is possible to attain. Satori is a mere side issue -- 'a twig or branch.' Such people are completely mistaken from the time they take their first step along the Way."

These people who ally themselves with the devil are present in great numbers today as well. To them I say, "Never mind for now about what you consider 'non-essentials.' Tell me about your own fundamental matter, the one you are hiding away and treasuring so zealously. What is it like? Is it a solid piece of emptiness that you fix firmly in the ground like a post to fasten mules and horses to? Maybe it is a deep hole of sheer black silence? It is appalling, whatever it is."

It is also a good example of what is called falling into fixed views. It deceives a great many of the foolish and ignorant of the world. It's an ancient dwelling place of evil spirits, an old badger's den, a pitfall that traps people and buries them alive. Although you kept treasuring and defending it till the end of time, it would still be just a fragment from an old coin. It also goes by the name of "dark cave of the eighth Alaya consciousness." The ancients suffered through a great many hardships as they wandered in arduous pursuit of the truth. It was all for the sole purpose of getting themselves free of just such old nests as these.

Once a person is able to achieve true singlemindedness in his practice and smash apart the old nest of Alaya consciousness into which he has settled, the Great Perfect Mirror Wisdom immediately appears, the other three great Wisdoms start to function, and the all-discerning Fivefold Eye opens wide.

If, on the other hand, he allows himself to be seduced by these latter-day devils into hunkering down inside an old nest and making himself at home there, turning it into a private treasure chamber and spending all his time dusting it, polishing it, sweeping and brushing it clean, what can he hope to achieve? Absolutely nothing. Basically, it is a piece of the eighth consciousness, the same eighth consciousness which enters the womb of a donkey and enters the belly of a horse. So I urgently exhort you to do everything you can, strive with all your strength, to strike down into that dark cave and destroy it.

---

Here is the rest of Hakuin's article. I urge you to read it, James.

Quote:

---

DQ: It is like climbing a long ladder and then, at the instant of reaching the very last rung, having the incredible realization that both the ladder and the place you are climbing towards are illusions. One doesn't have to make a "leap" because one sees that there is nothing to leap from, and indeed nothing to leap into. Again, this is a fully rational insight, albeit one that opens up the mind to the nature of Reality.

JJ: When reason is realized to be empty (when it "empties itself") there is no way that this can purely be a rational insight, because reason cannot simultaneously affirm and negate its own validity.

DQ: It is not being asked to do this. In fact, the process is one of double affirmation. Firstly, it affirms the illusory nature of all things, including its own self, and then, in making this affirmation, it automatically affirms its own ability to produce rational insight into the nature of Reality.

JJ: So an illusion is making valid, tenable insights into something that is non-illusory (the Absolute, or, sunyata)? I see a paradox here.

DQ: There is no paradox. You are artificially creating the paradox by surreptitiously using two different definitions of the word "illusion". I've already explained that the empty, illusory nature of reason refers to its appearance of inherently existing, not to its ability to expose delusion.

JJ: Yes, but when you've exposed reason as just another one of those delusions that you are trying to expose, what then?

---

You continue using it, just as you continue using computers and cars which are also empty of inherent existence. Nothing changes in that respect.

Quote:

---

At this point, reason breaks down – it is part of the illusion.

---

It doesn't break down, just as cars and computers don't break down simply because one realizes that they are empty of inherent existence. Your thinking on this issue is biased and confused.

Quote:

---

JJ: There is a difference between being rationally justifiable, and being an explicit position of “rationality”. This is quite simply because in samadhi, no views are affirmed – so what is there to be either rational or irrational? Obviously, Nirvana is rationally justifiable in that any attempts to label it “irrational” can easily be deconstructed. However, to say that it is either rational or irrational is incorrect. Nirvana is not rational, and it is not not rational. This is because it does not exist, though neither does it not not exist. It's sunyata, the Middle Path.

DQ: Again, you're creating paradoxes and false dilemmas where none exist. The question is not whether Nirvana itself is rational or non-rational, but whether our own understanding of Nirvana is rational or irrational. I trust you see the difference. An apple, in and of itself, is neither rational nor non-rational as well. It is just like Nirvana in that regard. And yet at the same time, we are perfectly capable of judging whether a particular understanding of apples is rational or irrational. The same applies to a particular understanding of Nirvana.

JJ: It sounds as though you are treating Nirvana as an actual thing, hence your comparison of it to an actual thing.

---

To the degree that we can distinguish it from samarsa, it can be treated as though it were a thing.

Quote:

---

How would you describe Nirvana? What would you say is your “understanding” of it?

---

Nirvana is what the mind effortlessly experiences when it is no longer deluded. There is no point in describing it because it has no form to describe. We can say, however, that it constitutes everything that exists, that it is indestructible, beyond life and death, beginningless and endless, and without substance.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2750
(7/9/04 12:55 pm)
Reply

 ---

---

Quote:

---

David Quinn: Reason is not a mental invention in the sense that it is arbitrarily created by our whims and can be changed into something else at a moment's notice. Just as a tree cannot be arbitrarily created by our whims, neither can reason.

suergaz: What?

David Quinn: Reason is not a mental invention in the sense that it is arbitrarily created by our whims and can be changed into something else at a moment's notice. Just as a tree cannot be arbitrarily created by our whims, neither can reason.

---

It's no good repeating it to me David, it doesn't make it any more intelligible.

WolfsonJakk
Posts: 1692
(7/9/04 1:28 pm)
Reply

 ...

---

He thought your hearing might be obstructed, I think.

Jones Kelly
Posts: 221
(7/9/04 1:29 pm)
Reply

 Re: Transferring this to Koan thread

---

Anna,

I'm pasting the discussion of the koan into the "Koans to Gnaw" thread, so as not to interrupt the flow James and David's discussion.

Kelly

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1529

(7/9/04 1:36 pm)

Reply

Re: re:

David,

Quote:

---

In Buddhism, this false emptiness is called the "eighth consciousness" and is described as a deep pit which traps many aspirants.

---

Are you saying that meditation leads to a false experience of emptiness? Do you suppose that James' intellectual understanding of emptiness is correct but that he is having false experiences? What is your idea about understanding emptiness versus experiencing emptiness?

Quote:

---

They believe this to be the most fundamental state it is possible to attain. Satori is a mere side issue -- 'a twig or branch.'

---

I'm confused by this. Is he saying these foolish people don't consider satori important, or that satori isn't important?

What do you make of their talk about devils?

Quote:

---

Once a person is able to achieve true singlemindedness in his practice and smash apart the old nest of Alaya consciousness into which he has settled, the Great Perfect Mirror Wisdom immediately appears, the other three great Wisdoms start to function, and the all-discerning Fivefold Eye opens wide.

---

This whole paragraph needs explication. What do you think he means by singlemindedness, what do you think he means by practice, what is Alaya consciousness, and what are the three wisdoms and what is the fivefold eye?

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2337

(7/10/04 9:36 am)

Reply

Re: re:

Anna wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: In Buddhism, this false emptiness is called the "eighth consciousness" and is described as a deep pit which traps many aspirants.

Anna: Are you saying that meditation leads to a false experience of emptiness?

---

Any meditation which seeks to still the mind and produce a state of "no-thought" invariably leads to a false emptiness.

This issue was famously explored in the story of Hui Neng:

Quote:

---

One day the Fifth Patriarch told his monks to express their wisdom in a poem. Whoever had true realization of his original nature (Buddha Nature) would be ordained the Sixth Patriarch. The head monk, Shen Hsiu, was the most learned, and wrote the following:

The body is the wisdom-tree,
The mind is a bright mirror in a stand;
Take care to wipe it all the time,
And allow no dust to cling.

The poem was praised, but The Fifth Patriarch knew that Shen Hsiu had not yet found his original nature, on the other hand, Hui Neng couldn't even write, so someone had to write down his poem, which read:

Fundamentally no wisdom-tree exists,
Nor the stand of a mirror bright.
Since all is empty from the beginning,
Where can the dust alight

The Fifth Patriarch pretended that he wasn't impressed with this poem either, but in the middle of the night he summoned

Hui Neng. The Fifth Patriarch gave him the insignia of his office, the Patriarch's robe and bowl (source). Hui Neng was told to leave for the South and to hide his enlightenment and understanding until the proper time arrives for him to propagate the Dharma.

---

James' efforts to still the mind and enter into a state of no-thought belong to the mentality of the first poem.

Quote:

---

Do you suppose that James' intellectual understanding of emptiness is correct but that he is having false experiences?

---

His intellectual understanding is still faulty, which is leading him to have experiences of a false emptiness.

Quote:

---

What is your idea about understanding emptiness versus experiencing emptiness?

---

There is no difference between the two. The understanding of emptiness and the experience of emptiness is one and the same. You cannot have one without the other.

Quote:

---

Hakuin: They believe this to be the most fundamental state it is possible to attain. Satori is a mere side issue -- 'a twig or branch.'

Anna: I'm confused by this. Is he saying these foolish people don't consider satori important, or that satori isn't important?

---

As far as Hakuin is concerned, "satori" means the understanding and experience of emptiness. Foolish people, by definition, don't consider this important.

Quote:

---

What do you make of their talk about devils?

---

Poetic licence.

Quote:

---

Hakuin: Once a person is able to achieve true singlemindedness in his practice and smash apart the old nest of Alaya consciousness into which he has settled, the Great Perfect Mirror Wisdom immediately appears, the other three great Wisdoms start to function, and the all-discerning Fivefold Eye opens wide.

Anna: This whole paragraph needs explication. What do you think he means by singlemindedness, what do you think he means by practice, what is Alaya consciousness, and what are the three wisdoms and what is the fivefold eye?

---

He means that a person who is trapped in Alaya consciousness (the false emptiness of "no-thought") needs to singlemindedly engage in the practice of reason/insight in order to expose the delusional nature of it. Only then can he get past it and begin to unfurl his innate wisdom.

james johnathan
Registered User
Posts: 21
(7/11/04 1:25 am)
Reply

 Re: re:

---

birdofhermes,

Sorry for the lateness of this reply.

Quote:

---

JJ: You grasp reason any time you affirm some conceptual truth about Reality. You are implicitly assuming that that conceptual truth is anything other than that very illusion that you are trying to capture.

bird: I don't understand the second sentence. By trying to capture the illusion, do you mean trying to understand and see through it? What I was saying is that reason can be used appropriately without grasping.

---

Grasping comes in many subtle forms. Reason is always grasping, in so far as it is being used under the assumption that it is affirming anything more than conventional, provisional truth. Language always carries an ontological commitment with it – that is, it implicitly affirms the self-existence of things. To make any reference of "being" is to seek eternity (likewise, any reference of "non-being" is to seek nihilism). Concepts in and of themselves are assumed to have self-existence – even by intelligent people like David who like to demonstrate intellectually that nothing has self-existence. So I say again; conceptualization can generate some very convincing-sounding conventional truths, but thinking that these truths are anything other than conventional, provisional, and non-ultimate is where people go off the rails in their progression.

It's easy to see where (and why) QRS hit a ceiling in their advancement. They were progressing vertically before they got stuck on this issue of attachment to concepts. Ever thereafter, they've merely been progressing horizontally – making more explicit declarations of what ultimate truth is, creating increasingly complex systems of concepts ("Wisdom of the Infinite"), and getting more enmeshed in their own web. Albeit, they've elucidated some very true conventional thought-constructions – they just haven't gone beyond this.

Quote:

---

I've seen a lot of people talking about emptiness and they continually bring it to the physical realm, insisting that it is empty. There is no difference between conventional phenomena and higher truth. The scientific realm is not separate from the spiritual. There is ONE realm.

---

One realm, two truths. There is conventional truth, which takes "things" to be self-existent. This is the truth of the everyday – including all truths of a scientific and even philosophical nature. Then there is higher truth, which is unobtainable (conceptually), because it involves the full realization of the provisional, non-ultimate nature of conventional truth. Realizing the non-ultimate nature of conceptual truth doesn't render one silent – only non-attached.

Quote:

---

I am somewhat familiar with Nagarjuna and his followers, having read many posts and quotations.

---

Nagarjunian logic is tough stuff to fully comprehend, even by reading his full verse and added commentary. I don't see how this intricate logic could be fully understood by reading the occasional post at Genius Forum. Thus far, I know of only one person whose understanding of it is dead-on, and that's MGMacleod.

Quote:

---

I meant it in the sense that nirvana is samsara rightly experienced. Not that they are empty but that they are united. That one need not run from samsara as there is nowhere to run. That the experience of nirvana is dependent upon existing within samsara.

---

I think you're correct that "nirvana is samsara rightly experienced." But this is only true because there is no difference between nirvana and samsara – not that they are the same, but that they are both empty.

Quote:

---

Why do you say emptiness is the ultimate truth?

---

Because it's impossible for the "philosophy" of it to be contradicted.

suergaz Registered User Posts: 2776 (7/11/04 1:43 am) Reply	 --- <hr/> James johnathan, what is the philosophy of emptiness? And how can it not be contradicted?
silentsal Registered User Posts: 119 (7/11/04 2:19 am) Reply	 Re: --- <hr/> James what do you understand as the meaning of "ultimately empty of emptiness (sunyata-sunyata)"
Bumpbert Registered User Posts: 3 (7/11/04 3:12 am) Reply	 Re: --- <hr/> If you'll let me barge in, I would guess that it corresponds with the following quotes: "Emptiness is form and form emptiness." "No nirvana without samsara, no samsara without nirvana." "Those who cling to emptiness alone are incurable." "It is known in the way of the world that 'this arises in dependence with that.' Such statements are not refuted. But whatsoever arises dependently does not exist inherently, and how can that non-inherent existence itself have inherent existence? In fact, the non-inherent existence must definitely no exist inherently!" Emptiness cannot exist alone; it is dependent on the ten thousand things. Without them it is just nothingness, and we can deny that that exists.

Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Eckhart Tolle

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2780 (7/11/04 3:14 am) Reply	 ----- <hr/> What ten-thousand things?
Bumpbert Registered User Posts: 6 (7/11/04 3:16 am) Reply	 Re: ----- <hr/> The stuff I'm talking about in the "QRS are fakes" thread. This message board is one of the ten-thousand things.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2782 (7/11/04 3:19 am) Reply	 --- <hr/> Well, what's another? It isn't my sanity is it?
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2785 (7/11/04 3:34 am) Reply	 --- <hr/> can the ten thousnad things include things like dishwashers?

james johnathan
Registered User
Posts: 22
(7/11/04 6:23 am)
Reply

 Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

James johnathan, what is the philosophy of emptiness?

---

Nothing exists self-inherently. Put another way, nothing has self-nature. Existences don't exist, there is only becoming.

Quote:

---

And how can it not be contradicted?

---

Can you think of one thing that has self-existence?

james johnathan
Registered User
Posts: 23
(7/11/04 6:44 am)
Reply

 Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

James what do you understand as the meaning of

"ultimately empty of emptiness (sunyata-sunyata)"

---

Could you provide a fuller context for the question? What is it that you are asking is "ultimately empty of emptiness"? To be empty - entirely without self-nature - is to not exist, while also to not not exist. I think that the question may be ill-formed, if sunyata is taken to be a "thing", such as an ultimate reality beyond the conventional one, or some sort of eternal substratum to reality (the Hindu concept of "Brahman"). If sunyata were a "thing", it would be apt to call it empty. Since it isn't, though, to call it empty seems circular and redundant.

Perhaps you are talking about sunyata as a concept. Since sunyata is a guiding notion whose function is to break down our attachments to the fictions of our consciousness, it stands to reason that this notion itself is also empty. "Emptiness" as a concept is empty, yes. The higher truth which the concept points to, and which is beyond conventional discourse, is emptiness itself - and no explicable descriptions can apply to it, including the description of being "empty".

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1532

(7/11/04 8:10 am)

Reply

Re: re:

---

Quote:

DQ: In Buddhism, this false emptiness is called the "eighth consciousness" and is described as a deep pit which traps many aspirants.

---

I read about it a little. The article did not go beyond 8th consciousness nor was it negative. They described it as a subtle form of mind with the seed of karma. Isn't this all getting rather convoluted?

Quote:

---

Any meditation which seeks to still the mind and produce a state of "no-thought" invariably leads to a false emptiness.

---

What is false about it? Obviously it is useful to still the mind and to spend some time in a state without worry and concern. Why even compare the experience of a still mind with the concept of emptiness as an understanding of noninherency in things?

Quote:

---

This issue was famously explored in the story of Hui Neng:

---

I remember that the entire story was placed on PG.

Quote:

---

James' efforts to still the mind and enter into a state of no-thought belong to the mentality of the first poem.

---

The first one is of striving, the second is of realization. Yet you mention having a practice of continuous attention to the nature of reality as a form of meditation. Couldn't that also involve a sense of striving?

Quote:

---

His intellectual understanding is still faulty, which is leading him to have experiences of a false emptiness.

---

What fault do you see?

Quote:

---

As far as Hakuin is concerned, "satori" means the understanding and experience of emptiness. Foolish people, by definition, don't consider this important.

---

Yet Hakuin was talking about monks and seekers. Who among them wouldn't consider Satori important? And why do you not call Satori an altered state as it seems you have before?

Quote:

---

He means that a person who is trapped in the false emptiness of "no-thought" needs to singlemindedly engage in the practice of reason/insight in order to expose the delusional nature of it.

---

What is delusional about a still, meditative state?

Quote:

---

Only then can he get past it and begin to unfurl his innate wisdom.

---

Innate? You aren't being mystical are you?

Edited by: birdofhermes at: 7/11/04 8:13 am

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1533

(7/11/04 8:56 am)

Reply

Re: re:

---

Quote:

---

Reason is always grasping, in so far as it is being used under the assumption that it is affirming anything more than conventional, provisional truth.

---

I'm having a hard time understanding this division with conventional truth. It's true that on my own I had not particularly noted the noninherency of things, and been only vaguely aware of the lack of absolute boundaries. And by thinking on them, it has given me glimpses of what I would probably call Tao, which is to say the totality of all there is, and the fullness of the void. And that is far from useless. And yet, what is the point of dwelling on the fact that all things arise from multiple causes and depend upon one another for their definition? Because a little thinking will show nearly anyone that this is the case, and in the end, so what? Because in this world of ten thousand and one things (Suergaz' sanity added to the list) we have to function as though an apple has definite boundaries and is useful for certain things, such as eating, and useless for others, such as being used for a hammer. And you think that you have neither being nor soul, yet you strive mightily for the greatest understanding that you are able to achieve in this life. As if it were the most important thing in your world.

Quote:

---

Language always carries an ontological commitment with it – that is, it implicitly affirms the self-existence of things.

---

Does it? I was arguing about this stuff on another forum with a very intelligent young man until I finally felt too stupid to continue. I'm stuck on the idea that a water molecule has its properties whether we observe it or not, and that the fact that the water molecule does not exist in one sense (because if you break matter down to its constituent parts, eventually there is no difference) does not mean its properties are an illusion. Things do not exist inherently but they do exist temporarily, and that temporary existence has consistencies and semifirm boundaries without which life and its meaning and experiences could not be happening. Personally, this is my definition of suchness - the bringing together of the inherent and noninherent until you realize that this is it - reality is right here, the noninherent and the inherent are not separate, but two sides of one reality.

Quote:

---

To make any reference of "being" is to seek eternity

---

I'm not quite sure what you are leading to with the above, but I am going to insert from bumpert's post here, because it directly refutes what I said above, and relates to the argument on the other thread about whether the totality inherently exists, which I think it does:

Quote:

---

"It is known in the way of the world that 'this arises in dependence with that.' Such statements are not refuted. But whatsoever arises dependently does not exist inherently, and how can that non-inherent existence itself have inherent existence? In fact, the non-inherent existence must definitely not exist inherently!"

---

Or perhaps I misunderstand the above. In my opinion, it is existence itself that exists inherently, and this is indeed the substratum of the totality. But then, I do prefer Hinduism to Buddhism.

Quote:

---

They were progressing vertically before they got stuck on this issue of attachment to concepts. Ever thereafter, they've merely been progressing horizontally – making more explicit declarations of what ultimate truth is, creating increasingly complex systems of concepts (“Wisdom of the Infinite”), and getting more enmeshed in their own web.

---

Ha, ha, but why? I have my own explanation. I think their motive is unresolved issues with women. This has provided the impetus for the above.

Quote:

---

One realm, two truths. There is conventional truth, which takes “things” to be self-existent. This is the truth of the everyday – including all truths of a scientific and even philosophical nature.

---

Tell me how science considers things self-existent in a delusional way.

Quote:

---

Realizing the non-ultimate nature of conceptual truth doesn't render one silent – only non-attached.

---

How does it result in becoming unattached?

Quote:

---

Nagarjunian logic is tough stuff to fully comprehend, even by reading his full verse and added commentary. I don't see how this intricate logic could be fully understood by reading the occasional post at Genius Forum. Thus far, I know of only one person whose understanding of it is dead-on, and that's MGMacleod.

---

Well, I should read more. I have so far liked what he says. I'm fascinated by such a highly abstract mind. There was a long debate about Nagarjuna and other points, so it got a pretty good going-over.

Quote:

---

I think you're correct that “nirvana is samsara rightly experienced.” But this is only true because there is no difference between nirvana and samsara – not that they are the same, but that they are both empty.

---

Empty in the sense that both are subjective and fleeting experiences of non-selves?

Quote:

---

Put another way, nothing has self-nature. Existences don't exist, there is only becoming.

---

How do you account for existence?

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2339

(7/11/04 10:03 am)

Reply

 Re: re:

---

James Jonathon wrote:

Quote:

---

Grasping comes in many subtle forms. Reason is always grasping, in so far as it is being used under the assumption that it is affirming anything more than conventional, provisional truth.

---

Well, James, your own reasoning processes are certainly grasping .... at straws.

Quote:

---

Language always carries an ontological commitment with it – that is, it implicitly affirms the self-existence of things.

---

No, it doesn't always carry that commitment. A Buddha is perfectly capable of reasoning and using language without making false assumptions.

It is because you falsely equate the realization of emptiness with the shutting down of the cerebral context that you cannot imagine how language can be used wisely and non-erroneously.

Quote:

---

To make any reference of "being" is to seek eternity
(likewise, any reference of "non-being" is to seek nihilism).

---

Except, of course, when Buddhas and enlightened people make reference to them.

Quote:

---

Concepts in and of themselves are assumed to have self-existence – even by intelligent people like David who like to demonstrate intellectually that nothing has self-existence.

---

Not true. I make no assumptions of this kind.

Quote:

---

So I say again; conceptualization can generate some very convincing-sounding conventional truths, but thinking that these truths are anything other than conventional, provisional, and non-ultimate is where people go off the rails in their progression.

---

You are using concepts here to articulate what you think is true. Now tell me, is it merely a conventional, provisional truth that you are articulating? It must be so, according to your dictum. So what makes you think that your words and concepts are of any relevance for those of us who exist outside your frame of reference?

Quote:

---

It's easy to see where (and why) QRS hit a ceiling in their advancement. They were progressing vertically before they got stuck on this issue of attachment to concepts. Ever thereafter, they've merely been progressing horizontally – making more explicit declarations of what ultimate truth is, creating increasingly complex systems of concepts (“Wisdom of the Infinite”), and getting more enmeshed in their own web. Albeit, they've elucidated some very true conventional thought-constructions – they just haven't gone beyond this.

---

You're dreaming. I openly reject your foolish practice of trying to shut down the cerebral cortex and the best response you can come up with is that I am too attached to concepts!?! You really are a very foolish man.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2340
(7/11/04 10:42 am)
Reply

Re: re:

---

Anna wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: In Buddhism, this false emptiness is called the "eighth consciousness" and is described as a deep pit which traps many aspirants.

Anna: I read about it a little. The article did not go beyond 8th consciousness nor was it negative.

---

From Hakuin's article:

"If, on the other hand, he allows himself to be seduced by these latter-day devils into hunkering down inside an old nest and making himself at home there, turning it into a private treasure chamber and spending all his time dusting it, polishing it, sweeping and brushing it clean, what can he hope to achieve? Absolutely nothing. Basically, it is a piece of the eighth consciousness, the same eighth consciousness which enters the womb of a donkey and enters the belly of a horse. So I urgently exhort you to do everything you can, strive with all your strength, to strike down into that dark cave and destroy it."

I don't think you can get more negative than that.

Quote:

---

They described it as a subtle form of mind with the seed of karma.

---

All seeds of karma eventually sprout into hellish states.

Quote:

---

Isn't this all getting rather convoluted?

---

No, it is very straightforward. It is also an incredibly important point with enormous consequences. The difference between getting stuck in the eighth consciousness and breaking through into Nirvana is immense.

Quote:

---

DQ: Any meditation which seeks to still the mind and produce a state of "no-thought" invariably leads to a false emptiness.

Anna: What is false about it? Obviously it is useful to still the mind and to spend some time in a state without worry and concern.

---

I agree that it is good to have a still mind that is focused. It is impossible to make the necessary breakthroughs in one's understanding of Reality without it. It only becomes false when people start using it in foolish ways, such as trying to do away with thought altogether.

Quote:

---

Why even compare the experience of a still mind with the concept of emptiness as an understanding of noninherency in things?

---

Good question. You'll have to ask James that.

Quote:

---

DQ: James' efforts to still the mind and enter into a state of no-thought belong to the mentality of the first poem.

Anna: The first one is of striving, the second is of realization.

---

No. Each poem is an attempt to express the highest wisdom. The first one fails, while the second one succeeds. The first one fails because it comes from the mind of someone who is still spellbound by maya and thus still fighting against phantoms.

Quote:

---

Yet you mention having a practice of continuous attention to the nature of reality as a form of meditation. Couldn't that also involve a sense of striving?

---

There is nothing wrong with striving. Indeed, to the degree that one is still ignorant, one should strive with all one's might to become enlightened.

Quote:

---

DQ: His intellectual understanding is still faulty, which is leading him to have experiences of a false emptiness.

Anna: What fault do you see?

---

He is still trying to polish the non-existent dust from the non-existent mirror. That is to say, he is still being fooled into thinking that some things inherently exist and have to be removed for clear perception to arise.

Quote:

---

DQ: As far as Hakuin is concerned, "satori" means the understanding and experience of emptiness. Foolish people, by definition, don't consider this important.

Anna: Yet Hakuin was talking about monks and seekers.
Who among them wouldn't consider Satori important?

---

Most monks and seekers that I meet have very little interest in becoming enlightened. While they spend their days obeying their teachers, doing all the rituals, reading the texts, sitting in meditation, etc, the actual process of piercing through the core delusion of life and becoming enlightened is constantly avoided.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2786
(7/11/04 11:40 am)
Reply

 ----

---

Quote:

---

suergaz:--James johnathan, what is the philosophy of emptiness? And how can it not be contradicted?

jj:--Nothing exists self-inherently. Put another way, nothing has self-nature. Existences don't exist, there is only becoming. Can you think of one thing that has self-existence?

---

Self has self-nature. Being has becoming. Existences exist.

james johnathan
Registered User
Posts: 24
(7/11/04 12:04 pm)
Reply

Re: re:

---

Quote:

JJ: I do have a profile of David, but I do my best to reply to his points without consideration to that profile. I try to regard his points neutrally, assessing each one objectively for its truth content, and not filtering them through the mental abstraction that is my profile of "David Quinn".

In comparison, David seems to be actively building a profile of me by asking me questions regarding my personal life, so that he can easily contrast this profile with his preconceptions and by so doing, "figure me out". Hence why I suggested that he apply more attention to my actual points, and less to painting a picture of me based on his inductions.

DQ: I'm simply challenging your spiritual attainments and wisdom.

---

As I might readily and happily challenge yours, if I actually cared about the quality of your mind and thought that it was proper to conflate ad hominem issues with the topics of this thread.

---

Quote:

Are you seeking to become non-attached to utterly everything - including the things and people you currently love?

---

Of course.

---

Quote:

JJ: As someone who experiences non-thought regularly, your reply sounds like a blind man telling a normal man that grass isn't green. Could you tell me why you think that a state of non-thought is an illusion? (And why over two millennia of enlightened thinkers have preached the merits of non-thought, through meditation.)

DQ: Because, alas, these so-called "enlightened thinkers" are less interested in truth and more interested in promoting meditative heavens that greatly appeal to the ego. Needless to say, the latter is far more popular and pleasurable to the emotions than the former

JJ: Do you not consider the Buddha, the Bodhidharma, or any of the successive Zen Patriarchs and Masters to be enlightened thinkers?

DQ: I consider most of them to be frauds. The exceptions, such as Bodhidharma, Huang Po and Hakuin, weren't interested in meditative thoughtless states of consciousness, but in something much deeper and more fascinating.

---

Did Kevin Solway tell you these things?

Bodhidharma taught meditation to Shaolin monks, and is said to have sat in his cave outside of Shaolin, deep in meditation, for nine years, subsequent to his arrival in China from India. So dedicated was he to meditation, that he was said to have cut off his own eye-lids to prevent him from falling asleep during sessions.

Quote:

---

“... The three realms are greed, anger, and delusion. To leave the three realms means to go from greed, anger, and delusion back to morality, meditation, and wisdom. Greed, anger, and delusion have no nature of their own. They depend on mortals. And anyone capable of reflection is bound to see that the nature of greed, anger, and delusion is the buddha-nature. Beyond greed, anger, and delusion there is no other buddha-nature. The sutras say, "But as have only become buddhas while living with the three poisons and nourishing themselves on the pure Dharma." The three poisons are greed, anger, and delusion.” The Zen Teachings of Bodhidharma, translated by Red Pine, 1987.

---

How about your friend Hakuin? From http://www.geocities.com/ganesha\_gate/hakuin.html:

Quote:

---

“In his famous praise of zazen ("Hakuin Zenji zazen-wasan" frequently chanted in Zen Monasteries of Japan), he extolls the importance of "sitting in meditation" for the actualization of enlightenment, which is the goal of the way of Zen:

From the beginning, all beings are Buddha;
Like water and ice, without water no ice,
Outside us, no Buddhas.
How near the Truth, yet how far we seek!
Like one in water crying, "I thirst",
Like the son of a rich man
Wandering poor on this earth,
We endlessly circle the Six Worlds.
From dark path to dark path
We've wandered in darkness.
How can we be free from the wheel of Samsara?

The Perfection of freedom is Zazen-Samadhi,
Beyond exaltation, beyond all our praises,
The pure Mahayana.
Observing the precepts, repentance and giving,
The countless good deeds, and the Way of Right Living,
All flow from this Zen.
Even one meditation extinguishes evil;
It purifies karma, dissolving obstruction.
Then where are the dark paths to lead us astray?
The Pure Lotus Land is not far away.
Hearing this Truth, heart humble and grateful,
To praise and embrace it, to practice its wisdom,
Brings unending blessings, brings mountains of merit.

But if we turn directly, and prove our True Nature,
That true Self is no-self,
Our own Self is no-self,
We stand beyond ego and past clever words.
Then the gate to the oneness of cause-and-effect is thrown open:
Not two, and not three,

Straight ahead runs the Way.
Now our form is no-form,
So in coming and going we never leave home.
Now our thought is no-thought,
So our dancing and songs are the voice of the Dharma.
How bright and transparent the moonlight of Wisdom!
What is there outside us, what is there we lack?
Nirvana is openly shown to our eyes.
This earth where we stand is the Pure Lotus Land,
And this very body, the body of Buddha!
(-Zazen Wasan Song of Zazen by Hakuin)”

---

Note: the perfection of freedom is zazen-samadhi. That speaks for itself.
Perhaps you should have done more homework.

You consider the Buddha a fraud?

Quote:

---

JJ: I think you have a highly romanticized (and incorrect) notion of what meditation actually is. I don't know what a meditative "heaven" is, nor do I see how stilling the mind's idea of itself and communing with emptiness is an appeal to the ego.

DQ: The ego is attracted to anything that gives it a sense of power. By entering into powerful meditative states which seem to render everything empty, the ego can feel as though it has conquered everything in the Universe.

---

Meditation dissolves the subject-object duality. There is no "power" to speak of, in so far as you consider power as a dynamic of force between the ego and the external. Knowledge is power, David. This popular aphorism pretty much sums up the Western attitude towards the acquisition of knowledge. The ego is attracted to being able to intellectually deconstruct things – it gives it a sense of superiority, a sense of power. Your own attitude towards enlightenment is a perfect reflection of this grasping for knowledge-power.

Quote:

---

JJ: Sadly, in its currently fashionable form, meditation is espoused by many as a quick and sure way to obtain health, vitality, and moments of bliss. If these things occur, they are merely side-effects, and the moment they become attached to, meditation's true function has been lost.

DQ: I'm not talking about those things, but about the "emptiness" experience you have described - which I deem to be a false emptiness.

---

On what rational grounds do you deem it to be false?

Quote:

---

DQ: The problem with entering into a state of "no-thought" is that there is no way of knowing that one has actually entered into it - not unless one uses thought. The reason why we have no conscious awareness during deep sleep is because there are no thoughts occurring during this time. Without thoughts, there is no consciousness and no experience whatsoever.

JJ: These strike me as highly spurious claims, coming from someone with no actual experience in the matter. It's like someone who has never experienced a drug-induced altered state explaining to someone who has what that state is like, on the basis of specious appeals to logic.

DQ: Sorry to disappoint you, but I know exactly the kind of experience you are talking about and have experienced it many times. Keep in mind that I am not challenging the existence and reality of the "false emptiness" that you experience, but rather its connection to the ultimate wisdom of life.

---

So, you claim to have experienced this state of thought-lessness while vehemently asserting that no such state exists? You're weaving a tangled web, David. Sorry to disappoint you, but you haven't truly experienced deep meditation, which is evident from your comments. You needn't feel too bad about it though – not many people actually pursue it to its fullest. Most get frustrated early on, can't get past the incessant perusing and checking of their egos, and give up on it altogether. They then proceed to admonish the entire business, claiming that the state that they so woefully failed at reaching is simply an illusion, and that the entire history of Eastern thought is simply marked with mass delusion. They then make egregiously misinformed comments that misrepresent the principle figures of Eastern thought, revealing either a lack of understanding of Eastern thought, or a will to un-truth.

Quote:

---

JJ: You have created a false dilemma above. While the statement “one cannot think about not thinking (as in, one cannot be consciously aware of one's unconsciousness)” is a true logical syllogism, it does not refer to the real phenomenon that you are trying to conceptualize - it doesn't apply to the real brain phenomena that occurs during meditation. In other words, it's a conceptual dilemma, not an actual one. This is simply because the narrow, simplistic categories of “thinking” and “not-thinking”, or more aptly, “consciousness” and “unconsciousness”, are ill-equipped to deal with the complex reality that is our mind, and its functioning.

DQ: They are no more ill-equipped to deal with mental realities than are the terms "on" and "off" ill-equipped to deal with the complex realities of light. It doesn't matter how complex a light source it is, it can always be judged to be on or off. Likewise, it doesn't matter how our complex mental states can get, we can always make the judgment as to whether we are conscious or unconscious.

---

Your analogy between the human mind and the on/off functions of a light-switch is not apt. This is only a true analogy if you want to consider a living mind in an “on” state, and a dead mind in an “off” one. Otherwise, it is totally asinine to compare something of boolean nature to something of a dynamic nature. I don't understand why you choose to take such a limited view of the mind – my only guess is that you need to render the brain into this simplistic and fallacious “on/off” dichotomy to justify your dismissal of meditation. I've heard Cartesian dualists express the same point, by the way...

Quote:

---

JJ: These are terms we use to simplify and categorize the conditions of the mind, so as to make referring to brain-states more manageable.

DQ: No, they are not. They are specific terms that refer to specific phenomena which are real. For example, the term "being conscious" is a specific term that refers to the specific phenomenon of being aware and having experiences. It doesn't matter how complex these experiences can become - that is irrelevant as far as the term "being conscious" is concerned.

---

If you want to consider “consciousness” as the “state of being aware” – fine. What concerns me is the nature of this awareness, as you put it; a nature that is subject to all the intricate subtleties of brain chemistry and thus is dynamic, not static. Our awareness – the way in which we experience things - constantly changes in accordance with the changes in correlating brain structures/processes. Thus, awareness will differ between a tired person, a person on a lot of caffeine, a person on LSD, a person whose asleep, a person in the depths of meditation, a person who just experienced a rush of endorphines, etc.

Quote:

---

JJ: It is true that one cannot be conscious of one's unconsciousness, but this is not what meditation involves. Since you seemed to have ignored what I said in my last post regarding the neurochemistry behind meditation, I will try to reiterate the point. To not form concepts in one's head means precisely that. It doesn't mean that one must consciously reflect on the fact that one is not forming concepts in one's head. By maintaining a thought-less state, and practicing the proper breathing techniques associated with zazen or vipassyana meditation, deep states (approaching what you might call total “non-consciousness”) become not only possible, but consistently reproducible.

DQ: There is no question that if you shut down the higher functioning of the brain - i.e. the frontal lobes and cerebral cortex - then you will experience a different form of consciousness in which your fears and worries and agitated thoughts temporarily disappear. The problem is, such a state has nothing to do with the great realization of Nirvana as experienced by wise people. A wise person doesn't have to shut down his cerebral cortex in order to experience Emptiness. He can continue to experience it even while he is thinking and reasoning and talking to others.

---

Meditation doesn't entail shutting down the cerebral cortex, or doing so with the intent of rendering one witlessly free of concerns. What it entails is training the brain to think differently. It's a readjustment of nervous activity that ultimately leaves one more ripe for the deep embrace of logic, and yet it also seems to foster the "point" in and of itself by quieting the mind's idea of itself. The principle behind meditation is not that you do it twice a day and be done with it – it's that you continuously train your mind to function in a deeper fashion, so that eventually, sessions are not even necessary, as a cultivated brain-state is always with you. Meditation teaches your brain how to grow in ways more conducive to enlightenment. Dogen even goes so far as to say that meditation is enlightenment – and that a moment in meditation is a moment enlightened. There's a case to be made for this as well, since quite simply, proper meditation is simply residing in the pristine openness of Buddha-nature.

Quote:

---

JJ: I would say that it is a state of complete unconsciousness in so far as you want to consider "consciousness" as the shallow, flitting, aroused and reactive nature of our typical mind state.

DQ: In reality, meditation doesn't lead to the cessation of consciousness at all. It simply leads to a different type of consciousness, one in which the usual fears and worries and agitated thoughts have disappeared.

---

This is not even necessarily true. If a person is disposed to a fearful or worried mind-state, meditation won't cure it for them. Likewise, if a person is in a situation where these emotions would arise, no amount of meditation is going to completely prevent their arising. However, to a certain degree, it will prevent a person from becoming too attached to the existential baggage that usually accompanies such situations. There might be fear or worry – but there won't be so strong a Self reflecting on this fear and worry.

Quote:

---

DQ: It is like climbing a long ladder and then, at the instant of reaching the very last rung, having the incredible realization that both the ladder and the place you are climbing towards are illusions. One doesn't have to make a "leap" because one sees that there is nothing to leap from, and indeed nothing to leap into. Again, this is a fully rational insight, albeit one that opens up the mind to the nature of Reality.

JJ: When reason is realized to be empty (when it “empties itself”) there is no way that this can purely be a rational insight, because reason cannot simultaneously affirm and negate its own validity.

DQ: It is not being asked to do this. In fact, the process is one of double affirmation. Firstly, it affirms the illusory nature of all things, including its own self, and then, in making this affirmation, it automatically affirms its own ability to produce rational insight into the nature of Reality.

JJ: So an illusion is making valid, tenable insights into something that is non-illusory (the Absolute, or, sunyata)? I see a paradox here.

DQ: There is no paradox. You are artificially creating the paradox by surreptitiously using two different definitions of the word "illusion". I've already explained that the empty, illusory nature of reason refers to its appearance of inherently existing, not to its ability to expose delusion.

JJ: Yes, but when you've exposed reason as just another one of those delusions that you are trying to expose, what then?

DQ: You continue using it, just as you continue using computers and cars which are also empty of inherent existence. Nothing changes in that respect.

---

You continue using it as before, true, though your relationship to it changes. The object of one's pursuit is no longer to construct systematic and lofty metaphysical treatises with the intent of explicating the un-explicable, the object becomes nurturing the understanding and experience of emptiness by clarifying the fundamental point.

Quote:

---

JJ: There is a difference between being rationally justifiable, and being an explicit position of "rationality". This is quite simply because in samadhi, no views are affirmed – so what is there to be either rational or irrational? Obviously, Nirvana is rationally justifiable in that any attempts to label it "irrational" can easily be deconstructed. However, to say that it is either rational or irrational is incorrect. Nirvana is not rational, and it is not not rational. This is because it does not exist, though neither does it not not exist. It's sunyata, the Middle Path.

DQ: Again, you're creating paradoxes and false dilemmas where none exist. The question is not whether Nirvana itself is rational or non-rational, but whether our own understanding of Nirvana is rational or irrational. I trust you see the difference. An apple, in and of itself, is neither rational nor non-rational as well. It is just like Nirvana in that regard. And yet at the same time, we are perfectly capable of judging whether a particular understanding of apples is rational or irrational. The same applies to a particular understanding of Nirvana.

JJ: It sounds as though you are treating Nirvana as an actual thing, hence your comparison of it to an actual thing.

DQ: To the degree that we can distinguish it from samsara, it can be treated as though it were a thing.

---

Do you think that any distinctions between samsara and nirvana are tenable? And what is the "degree" that it can be distinguished from samsara?

silentsal
Registered User
Posts: 120
(7/11/04 1:45 pm)
Reply

Re: re:

---

Quote:

---

Could you provide a fuller context for the question? What is it that you are asking is "ultimately empty of emptiness"? To be empty - entirely without self-nature - is to not exist, while also to not not exist. I think that the question may be ill-formed, if sunyata is taken to be a "thing", such as an ultimate reality beyond the conventional one, or some sort of eternal substratum to reality (the Hindu concept of "Brahman"). If sunyata were a "thing", it would be apt to call it empty. Since it isn't, though, to call it empty seems circular and redundant.

---

Nirvana is non-dual. Emptiness is the falling away of conditioning, the falling away of conceptions about self, its a falling away of all that is "false" or unreal ... the falling away of discriminations and though great it is Sunyata is only a mundane truth - to be empty of emptiness refers to what is left ... that which not not exists

james johnathan
Registered User
Posts: 25
(7/12/04 12:42 pm)
Reply

Re: re:

---

Quote:

---

JJ: Reason is always grasping, in so far as it is being used under the assumption that it is affirming anything more than conventional, provisional truth.

Bird: I'm having a hard time understanding this division with conventional truth. It's true that on my own I had not particularly noted the noninherency of things, and been only vaguely aware of the lack of absolute boundaries. And by thinking on them, it has given me glimpses of what I would probably call Tao, which is to say the totality of all there is, and the fullness of the void. And that is far from useless. And yet, what is the point of dwelling on the fact that all things arise from multiple causes and depend upon one another for their definition?

---

Because when you take this understanding that things arise from multiple causes, and seek out its fullest implication, it eventually becomes clear that there are simply no “things” to speak of. A lack of any inherence means that there is just emptiness (or if you prefer, openness). Whatever you want to identify as a thing is merely a body of relationships, possessing no reality beyond these relationships. It even renders causality as a truth of convention only, making it non-absolute. For there to be causality, obviously there needs to be things; when things are seen as utterly devoid of any self-nature (completely empty), there ceases to be any causal agents and the notion of direct, one to one causality vanishes. Of course, this doesn't negate the reality of causality in the conventional realm of samsara (this doesn't save free-will!), but it points the way to the higher truth, which is that the true nature of “things” is neither arising nor ceasing, coming nor going, permanent nor impermanent. All becomes still, and empty (or, open).

Quote:

---

Bird: Because a little thinking will show nearly anyone that this is the case, and in the end, so what? ... As if it were the most important thing in your world.

---

Me thinks that if the reaction to sunyata is “so what”, sunyata hasn't yet been fully realized :/

It is the most important thing in my world, to be sure. I'm singularly devoted to reaching the shores of Nirvana - to becoming Infinite, to attaining no-attainment.

Quote:

---

JJ: Language always carries an ontological commitment with it – that is, it implicitly affirms the self-existence of things.

Bird: Does it? I was arguing about this stuff on another forum with a very intelligent young man until I finally felt too stupid to continue.

---

May I ask what forum you were having this discussion in?

Quote:

---

Bird: I'm stuck on the idea that a water molecule has its properties whether we observe it or not, and that the fact that the water molecule does not exist in one sense (because if you break matter down to its constituent parts, eventually there is no difference) does not mean its properties are an illusion.

---

What is a water molecule beyond its perceivable properties? Does a tree falling in woods make a sound if no one is around to hear it?

Beyond the perceivable properties of the water molecule is purely no-thing; mind makes things. Kant's realm of noumena is inchoate.

Quote:

---

Bird: Things do not exist inherently but they do exist temporarily, and that temporary existence has consistencies and semifirm boundaries without which life and its meaning and experiences could not be happening.

---

What is it, precisely, that you are assuming exists temporarily? If anything "exists", objectively speaking, it cannot exist temporarily, unless that existence is merely an illusory rendering of the mind (memory creates the appearance of things). To say that things exist in and of themselves is to say that they have self-nature – which means that they exist permanently and outside the realm of dependent-origination. Obviously, such things cannot occur – nothing that occurs is outside the realm of becoming (dependent-origination). Self-nature would render change impossible, as “self-nature” is “of itself and by itself”, and is not a thing created by a myriad of other things. Again, self-nature is impossible. So I say again, not one thing exists, and yet neither is there non-existence, since non-existence is an affirmation of a permanent nothingness, a nihilistic “emptiness of absence”. What can be said is that there is becoming (change, evolution) - a flux of shifting relationships. Nothing solid, nothing tenable, nothing to attach to. Indeed, no self to attach from.

Quote:

---

JJ: To make any reference of "being" is to seek eternity

Bird: I'm not quite sure what you are leading to with the above

---

It harkens to the point I made above – that “being” and “existence” only occurs in a provisional, conventional, non-ultimate (illusory) sense. If existence is asserted as anything other than this, it is trying to grant it self-existence, thus rendering it absolutely existing, and outside the realm of causation.

Quote:

---

JJ: They were progressing vertically before they got stuck on this issue of attachment to concepts. Ever thereafter, they’ve merely been progressing horizontally – making more explicit declarations of what ultimate truth is, creating increasingly complex systems of concepts (“Wisdom of the Infinite”), and getting more enmeshed in their own web.

DQ: Ha, ha, but why? I have my own explanation. I think their motive is unresolved issues with women. This has provided the impetus for the above.

---

I definitely think that the women issue is salient. However, I think that, when it comes down it, QRS is simply far more attracted to the idea of being “wise above all men”, than attaining actual Buddhist enlightenment. They are the height of Nietzsche-ism, not Buddhism. They think that they can fuse the Nietzschean superman, the Taoist hermit-sage, and the Buddhist, well, Buddha, into a seamless package - the “wise man”. What they end up with is a confused melange whose outward expression is deceptively similar to the Buddhist notion of non-attachment, but underneath, is really a Nietzschean-style detachment. Have you read Quinn’s early correspondence with Solway? If not, I suggest you do. It’s very edifying.

Quote:

---

JJ: One realm, two truths. There is conventional truth, which takes “things” to be self-existent. This is the truth of the everyday – including all truths of a scientific and even philosophical nature.

Bird: Tell me how science considers things self-existent in a delusional way.

---

Science is premised on the assumption that reality is comprised of things, and that by reducing phenomena as far as possible, the underlying, fundamental source of things can be localized.

Conventional truth isn’t exactly less true than higher truth – it’s simply truer in a limited, less comprehensive way.

Quote:

---

JJ: Realizing the non-ultimate nature of conceptual truth doesn’t render one silent – only non-attached.

Bird: How does it result in becoming unattached?

---

Because one is no longer imposing a fixed realm of symbolisms atop an unfixed realm of flux. Views about the nature of reality are limited to the conventional, and are not taken to be representative of the highest truth.

There is nothing to be attached to.

Quote:

---

JJ: I think you're correct that "nirvana is samsara rightly experienced." But this is only true because there is no difference between nirvana and samsara – not that they are the same, but that they are both empty.

Bird: Empty in the sense that both are subjective and fleeting experiences of nonselves?

---

Empty in the sense that they are both utterly empty of any inherent existence.

Quote:

---

JJ: Put another way, nothing has self-nature. Existences don't exist, there is only becoming.

Bird: How do you account for existence?

---

What existence? What do you mean by existence? Can you elaborate?

I'm conscious of the fact that I explained things less than ideally in this post. Sorry, I'm really tired - but I still wanted to get this posted, since this reply is long over-do. Something to work off of, at least.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2810
(7/12/04 1:14 pm)
Reply

 ----

---

There's nothing to work off of in that post.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2341

(7/13/04 11:20 am)

Reply

Re: re:

James Johnathon wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: Are you seeking to become non-attached to utterly everything - including the things and people you currently love?

JJ: Of course.

---

Even though it means you have to stop loving them?

Quote:

---

JJ: As someone who experiences non-thought regularly, your reply sounds like a blind man telling a normal man that grass isn't green. Could you tell me why you think that a state of non-thought is an illusion? (And why over two millennia of enlightened thinkers have preached the merits of non-thought, through meditation.)

DQ: Because, alas, these so-called "enlightened thinkers" are less interested in truth and more interested in promoting meditative heavens that greatly appeal to the ego. Needless to say, the latter is far more popular and pleasurable to the emotions than the former

JJ: Do you not consider the Buddha, the Bodhidharma, or any of the successive Zen Patriarchs and Masters to be enlightened thinkers?

DQ: I consider most of them to be frauds. The exceptions, such as Bodhidarmna, Huang Po and Hakuin, weren't interested in meditative thoughtless states of consciousness, but in something much deeper and more fascinating.

JJ: Bodhidharma taught meditation to Shaolin monks, and is said to have sat in his cave outside of Shaolin, deep in meditation, for nine years, subsequent to his arrival in China from India. So dedicated was he to meditation, that he was said to have cut off his own eye-lids to prevent him from falling asleep during sessions.

---

Meditation, as in trying to comprehend the nature of Reality, not shutting down one's thought-processes. Bodhidharma emphasized the need to use reason and understand Reality for oneself, which is identical to my own teaching.

See Zen Teachings of Bodhidharma

Quote:

---

How about your friend Hakuin? From www.geocities.com/ganesha...kuin.html:

“In his famous praise of zazen ("Hakuin Zenji zazen-wasan" frequently chanted in Zen Monasteries of Japan), he extolls the importance of "sitting in meditation" for the actualization of enlightenment, which is the goal of the way of Zen:

From the beginning, all beings are Buddha;
Like water and ice, without water no ice,
Outside us, no Buddhas.
How near the Truth, yet how far we seek!
Like one in water crying, "I thirst",
Like the son of a rich man
Wandering poor on this earth,
We endlessly circle the Six Worlds.
From dark path to dark path
We've wandered in darkness.
How can we be free from the wheel of Samsara?

The Perfection of freedom is Zazen-Samadhi,
Beyond exaltation, beyond all our praises,
The pure Mahayana.
Observing the precepts, repentance and giving,
The countless good deeds, and the Way of Right Living,
All flow from this Zen.
Even one meditation extinguishes evil;
It purifies karma, dissolving obstruction.
Then where are the dark paths to lead us astray?
The Pure Lotus Land is not far away.

Hearing this Truth, heart humble and grateful,
To praise and embrace it, to practice its wisdom,
Brings unending blessings, brings mountains of merit.

But if we turn directly, and prove our True Nature,
That true Self is no-self,
Our own Self is no-self,
We stand beyond ego and past clever words.
Then the gate to the oneness of cause-and-effect is thrown open:
Not two, and not three,
Straight ahead runs the Way.
Now our form is no-form,
So in coming and going we never leave home.
Now our thought is no-thought,
So our dancing and songs are the voice of the Dharma.
How bright and transparent the moonlight of Wisdom!
What is there outside us, what is there we lack?
Nirvana is openly shown to our eyes.
This earth where we stand is the Pure Lotus Land,
And this very body, the body of Buddha!
(-Zazen Wasan Song of Zazen by Hakuin)”

---

A lovely bit of reasoning from Hakuin. Thanks for posting it.

Quote:

---

Note: the perfection of freedom is zazen-samadhi. That speaks for itself. Perhaps you should have done more homework.

---

"Zazen-samadhi" simply means experiencing and understanding emptiness. It has nothing to do with trying to sit still and emptying the mind of all thoughts. Hakuin consistently spoke against such practices all of his life.

Quote:

---

You consider the Buddha a fraud?

---

I do to some degree. I think his attempt to set up the sangha (saffron-robed monastic community) was a big mistake and strong evidence of his lack of purity.

Quote:

---

JJ: I think you have a highly romanticized (and incorrect) notion of what meditation actually is. I don't know what a meditative "heaven" is, nor do I see how stilling the mind's idea of itself and communing with emptiness is an appeal to the ego.

DQ: The ego is attracted to anything that gives it a sense of power. By entering into powerful meditative states which seem to render everything empty, the ego can feel as though it has conquered everything in the Universe.

JJ: Meditation dissolves the subject-object duality.

---

You're engaging in an illusion here. How can one dissolve what doesn't exist in the first place? The mirror doesn't need to be wiped, James.

Quote:

---

Knowledge is power, David.

---

In its purest form, knowledge is power over ignorance, which is a good thing.

Quote:

---

This popular aphorism pretty much sums up the Western attitude towards the acquisition of knowledge. The ego is attracted to being able to intellectually deconstruct things – it gives it a sense of superiority, a sense of power. Your own attitude towards enlightenment is a perfect reflection of this grasping for knowledge-power.

---

You're too kind. Thank you.

Quote:

---

JJ: Sadly, in its currently fashionable form, meditation is espoused by many as a quick and sure way to obtain health, vitality, and moments of bliss. If these things occur, they are merely side-effects, and the moment they become attached to, meditation's true function has been lost.

DQ: I'm not talking about those things, but about the "emptiness" experience you have described - which I deem to be a false emptiness.

JJ: On what rational grounds do you deem it to be false?

---

I've already gone into this, using the story of Hui Neng as an illustration.

Quote:

---

DQ: The problem with entering into a state of "no-thought" is that there is no way of knowing that one has actually entered into it - not unless one uses thought. The reason why we have no conscious awareness during deep sleep is because there are no thoughts occurring during this time. Without thoughts, there is no consciousness and no experience whatsoever.

JJ: These strike me as highly spurious claims, coming from someone with no actual experience in the matter. It's like someone who has never experienced a drug-induced altered state explaining to someone who has what that state is like, on the basis of specious appeals to logic.

DQ: Sorry to disappoint you, but I know exactly the kind of experience you are talking about and have experienced it many times. Keep in mind that I am not challenging the existence and reality of the "false emptiness" that you experience, but rather its connection to the ultimate wisdom of life.

JJ: So, you claim to have experienced this state of thoughtlessness while vehemently asserting that no such state exists?

You're weaving a tangled web, David

---

No, it's all very straightforward. The altered state which contains the illusion of thoughtlessness is a real phenomenon. It is a state of consciousness which comes into existence when the meditational conditions are ripe. That it creates the illusion of thoughtlessness and fools some people into thinking that it is enlightenment is also a very real phenomenon.

Quote:

---

JJ: You have created a false dilemma above. While the statement "one cannot think about not thinking (as in, one cannot be consciously aware of one's unconsciousness)" is a true logical syllogism, it does not refer to the real phenomenon that you are trying to conceptualize - it doesn't apply to the real brain phenomena that occurs during meditation. In other words, it's a conceptual dilemma, not an actual one. This is simply because the narrow, simplistic categories of "thinking" and "not-thinking", or more aptly, "consciousness" and "unconsciousness", are ill-equipped to deal with the complex reality that is our mind, and its functioning.

DQ: They are no more ill-equipped to deal with mental realities than are the terms "on" and "off" ill-equipped to deal with the complex realities of light. It doesn't matter how complex a light source it is, it can always be judged to be on or off. Likewise, it doesn't matter how our complex mental states can get, we can always make the judgment as to whether we are conscious or unconscious.

JJ: Your analogy between the human mind and the on/off functions of a light-switch is not apt. This is only a true analogy if you want to consider a living mind in an "on" state, and a dead mind in an "off" one. Otherwise, it is totally asinine to compare something of boolean nature to something of a dynamic nature.

---

You're the one who talks about "no-thought" and the "cessation of consciousness" and the like. That is to say, you're the one who uses the extreme binary term of "off" to describe your meditational experiences. I've been trying to explain how foolish that is.

Quote:

---

JJ: It is true that one cannot be conscious of one's unconsciousness, but this is not what meditation involves. Since you seemed to have ignored what I said in my last post regarding the neurochemistry behind meditation, I will try to reiterate the point. To not form concepts in one's head means precisely that. It doesn't mean that one must consciously reflect on the fact that one is not forming concepts in one's head. By maintaining a thought-less state, and practicing the proper breathing techniques associated with zazen or vipassana meditation, deep states (approaching what you might call total "non-consciousness") become not only possible, but consistently reproducible.

DQ: There is no question that if you shut down the higher functioning of the brain - i.e. the frontal lobes and cerebral cortex - then you will experience a different form of consciousness in which your fears and worries and agitated thoughts temporarily disappear. The problem is, such a state has nothing to do with the great realization of Nirvana as experienced by wise people. A wise person doesn't have to shut down his cerebral cortex in order to experience Emptiness. He can continue to experience it even while he is thinking and reasoning and talking to others.

JJ: Meditation doesn't entail shutting down the cerebral cortex, or doing so with the intent of rendering one witlessly free of concerns. What it entails is training the brain to think differently.

---

"Think differently"? Yesterday, it was "no thinking at all". Your words are confusing. Please make up your mind.

Quote:

---

It's a readjustment of nervous activity that ultimately leaves one more ripe for the deep embrace of logic, and yet it also seems to foster the "point" in and of itself by quieting the mind's idea of itself. The principle behind meditation is not that you do it twice a day and be done with it – it's that you continuously train your mind to function in a deeper fashion, so that eventually, sessions are not even necessary, as a cultivated brain-state is always with you. Meditation teaches your brain how to grow in ways more conducive to enlightenment.

---

Only if it is a meditation which is specifically directed towards the conquering of ignorance. Most kinds of meditation do the opposite; the powerful altered states they create only serve to reinforce people's ignorance. As Bodhidharma used to say, understanding one's own nature is the key to everything: "Whoever sees his nature is a Buddha. If you don't see your nature, invoking Buddhas, reciting sutras, making offerings, and keeping precepts are all useless."

Quote:

---

Dogen even goes so far as to say that meditation is enlightenment – and that a moment in meditation is a moment enlightened.

---

Dogen was truly an idiot. I don't think I can imagine a more foolish teaching. Enlightenment is a very lofty, rare attainment involving an incredible understanding; it couldn't be further removed from the act of sitting down with one's eyes closed trying to attain a blank mind.

Quote:

---

JJ: Yes, but when you've exposed reason as just another one of those delusions that you are trying to expose, what then?

DQ: You continue using it, just as you continue using computers and cars which are also empty of inherent existence. Nothing changes in that respect.

JJ: You continue using it as before, true, though your relationship to it changes. The object of one's pursuit is no longer to construct systematic and lofty metaphysical treatises with the intent of explicating the un-explicable, the object becomes nurturing the understanding and experience of emptiness by clarifying the fundamental point.

---

True. Which is what my book "Wisdom of the Infinite" is all about.

Quote:

---

JJ: It sounds as though you are treating Nirvana as an actual thing, hence your comparison of it to an actual thing.

DQ: To the degree that we can distinguish it from samsara, it can be treated as though it were a thing.

JJ: Do you think that any distinctions between samsara and nirvana are tenable?

---

Yes, the difference between the experience of samsara (the world of ignorance) and the experience of nirvana (the world of truth) is too vast to describe.

Quote:

---

And what is the "degree" that it can be distinguished from samsara?

---

100%.

It is like the difference between a healthy person who goes to a carnival and experiences tremendous excitement and joy, and the mentally-ill person who goes to the same carnival and experiences great fear and mental torture. Even though the carnival is the same in both cases, the actual experience and perception of it is vastly different.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2342

(7/13/04 11:47 am)

Reply

Re: re:

---

James Johnathon wrote

Quote:

---

I definitely think that the women issue is salient.

---

Anyone (of either sex) who doesn't have unresolved issues with women is either a very great Buddha or living in a coma. It is a tremendously large attachment which has to be dealt with by anyone who is serious about becoming wise.

Anna has many unresolved woman issues herself that she needs to deal with. She has no right pointing the finger at others.

Quote:

---

However, I think that, when it comes down it, QRS is simply far more attracted to the idea of being "wise above all men", than attaining actual Buddhist enlightenment. They are the height of Neitzsche-ism, not Buddhism. They think that they can fuse the Neitzschean superman, the Taoist hermit-sage, and the Buddhist, well, Buddha, into a seamless package - the "wise man". What they end up with is a confused melange whose outward expression is deceptively similar to the Buddhist notion of non-attachment, but underneath, is really a Neitzschean-style detachment.

---

The Buddha was far more meglomaniac than either Kevin, Nietzsche or myself. He founded a kingdom of followers, proclaimed himself the "Great Lord Buddha who had attained the supreme unexcelled awakening" and instructed his followers to obey his rules and dictates. Even Nietzsche shied away from that kind of unbridled arrogance.

Quote:

---

Have you read Quinn's early correspondence with Solway? If not, I suggest you do. It's very edifying.

---

There is some great writing in there, mainly by Kevin - very inspired and direct. Which parts have you found the most edifying?

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1540

(7/13/04 11:48 am)

Reply

Re: re:

---

David what about these, from the Wake-Up Sermon:

Quote:

---

Not thinking about anything is Zen. Once you know this, walking, standing, sitting, or lying down, everything you do is Zen. To know that the mind is empty is to see the Buddha. The Buddhas of the ten directions" have no mind. To see no mind is to see the Buddha.

---

Quote:

---

Using the mind to look for reality is delusion. Not using the mind to look for reality is awareness. Freeing oneself from words is liberation.

---

Quote:

---

If you use your mind to study reality, you won't understand either your mind or reality. If you study reality without using your mind, you'll understand both.

---

What I have read so far is truly great. I will try to finish it all.

Edited by: birdofhermes at: 7/13/04 11:53 am

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1541
(7/13/04 12:37 pm)
Reply

Re: re:

---

HTML Comments are not allowed

Damn! I noticed a bunch of extra space at the bottom and I edited it to delete, and the whole fucking thing disappeared. I dont even remember what it was answering.

Edited by: birdofhermes at: 7/14/04 4:59 pm

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1542
(7/13/04 12:50 pm)
Reply

Re: re:

---

Quote:

---

She has no right pointing the finger at others.

---

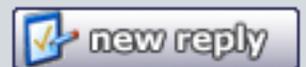

I'm sorry. I don't wish to be insulting. Although I dislike injustice, I try not to hold it against you.

What I value is how much you care about that which is important.

One must be wary of course, with men, as it is nearly impossible for them to overcome their egos and not betray truth.

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM
> GENIUS FORUM
> Eckhart Tolle

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Jones Kelly Posts: 258 (7/13/04 2:01 pm) Reply	 Re: re: <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Anna: One must be wary of course, with men, as it is nearly impossible for them to overcome their egos and not betray truth. <hr/> It is no different with women. Until truth is understood clearly, the truth is constantly and unwittingly being betrayed. You are implying either: (i) women don't have egos and are inherently loyal to truth, in which case you think truth is non-rational; or (ii) women don't need to overcome their egos to be loyal to truth, in which case you think women comprehend truth rationally and egotistically Is this what you intended by your statement?

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1543

(7/13/04 2:17 pm)

Reply

Re: re:

JJ:

Quote:

---

All becomes still, and empty (or, open).

---

Right, so I agree with all you said...and after one realizes all that, how is one to live?

Quote:

---

Me thinks that if the reaction to sunyata is “so what”, sunyata hasn’t yet been fully realized :/

---

I guess what I am trying to say is that I find it incomplete.

Quote:

---

It is the most important thing in my world, to be sure. I’m singularly devoted to reaching the shores of Nirvana - to becoming Infinite, to attaining no-attainment.

---

How is that possible, without a self?

Quote:

---

May I ask what forum you were having this discussion in?

---

p076.ezboard.com/frealism...61&stop=80

Quote:

---

What is a water molecule beyond its perceivable properties?

---

It need not be anything beyond its properties. Neither is it to be dismissed as an illusion.

Quote:

---

Does a tree falling in woods make a sound if no one is around to hear it?

---

I have always thought so. At least, the tree does the same thing, and causes the same air movements, whether any being's aural device notices it.

Quote:

---

Beyond the perceivable properties of the water molecule is purely no-thing; mind makes things.

---

What mind? Universal mind? Each and every mind? In what way do you say that beneath its qualities as water is no-thing?

Quote:

---

Kant's realm of noumena is inchoate.

---

Well, he was intuitively correct. The best proof against the existence of things in themselves is modern science...although the Buddhists did figure it out by pure reason.

Quote:

---

What is it, precisely, that you are assuming exists temporarily? If anything "exists", objectively speaking, it cannot exist temporarily, unless that existence is merely an illusory rendering of the mind (memory creates the appearance of things). To say that things exist in and of themselves is to say that they have self-nature – which means that they exist permanently and outside the realm of dependent-origination. Obviously, such things cannot occur – nothing that occurs is outside the realm of becoming (dependent-origination). Self-nature would render change impossible, as “self-nature” is “of itself and by itself”, and is not a thing created by a myriad of other things. Again, self-nature is impossible. So I say again, not one thing exists, and yet neither is there non-existence, since non-existence is an affirmation of a permanent nothingness, a nihilistic “emptiness of absence”. What can be said is that there is becoming (change, evolution) - a flux of shifting relationships. Nothing solid, nothing tenable, nothing to attach to. Indeed, no self to attach from.

---

I'm saying that the sun exists temporarily. Of course, it is only the relativistic mind that would label a 20-billion-year lifespan long, or compare it to the light of a firefly and call that short. And it is quite true that the sun does not exist inherently and that it is in a state of flux and becoming. I'm saying that to produce a planet teeming with 8 million life forms and millions of years of evolution, that this state of flux and becoming, with highly permeable boundaries, is yet able to contain properties that does certain things and not others, and does them reliably enough and for long enough, to accomplish great things, to accomplish the expression and the vehicles of life. Why assume the unconditioned is "better" than the conditioned? The Tao gives birth to the ten thousand things and the ten thousand things are the life of Tao, the beauty and expression of Tao. You are also in a state of flux, but you are not in such a state of flux as to not recognize yourself each day. There is sufficient continuity. In the flux of things there is also continuity because there is only one universal life. And that life inherently exists.

The insights of Buddhism are incredible but they must be taken full circle. You can't get enlightened until you quit running.

Quote:

---

It harkens to the point I made above – that “being” and “existence” only occurs in a provisional, conventional, non-ultimate (illusory) sense. If existence is asserted as anything other than this, it is trying to grant it self-existence, thus rendering it absolutely existing, and outside the realm of causation.

---

I think that is precisely the case.

Quote:

---

I definitely think that the women issue is salient. However, I think that, when it comes down it, QRS is simply far more attracted to the idea of being “wise above all men”, than attaining actual Buddhist enlightenment.

---

They're intertwined.

What is Nietzschean style detachment?

Quote:

---

Science is premised on the assumption that reality is comprised of things, and that by reducing phenomena as far as possible, the underlying, fundamental source of things can be localized.

---

We shall see. I have a lot of faith in science.

Quote:

---

Conventional truth isn't exactly less true than higher truth – it's simply truer in a limited, less comprehensive way.

---

And higher truth contains conventional truth within it.

Quote:

---

JJ: Realizing the non-ultimate nature of conceptual truth doesn't render one silent – only non-attached.

Bird: How does it result in becoming unattached?

---

JJ: Because one is no longer imposing a fixed realm of symbolisms atop an unfixed realm of flux. Views about the nature of reality are limited to the conventional, and are not taken to be representative of the highest truth. There is nothing to be attached to.

---

Are you meaning both unattached to concepts and also desireless?

Quote:

---

Empty in the sense that they are both utterly empty of any inherent existence.

---

They may be empty of inherent existence - but they are not nothing. They are what we have to work with.

Quote:

---

Bird: How do you account for existence?

JJ: What existence? What do you mean by existence?

---

Since emptiness does not mean nothingness, you agree that there is indeed existence. That, as I said earlier, is the primal fact. How can we deal with its magnitude? How can it have arisen unless it has inherent existence? Existence cannot have arisen from nothingness and without cause. What could be beyond cause and effect, outside time, never born and never die, unchanging, beyond movement and stillness, if not inherent existence itself?

Edited by: birdofhermes at: 7/13/04 2:30 pm

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1546

(7/13/04 2:43 pm)

Reply

 Re: re:

---

Quote:

---

(i) women don't have egos and are inherently loyal to truth, in which case you think truth is non-rational;

---

I did not follow the logic of that.

Jones Kelly

Posts: 266

(7/13/04 4:26 pm)

Reply

Re: re:

---

Quote:

---

K: (i) women don't have egos and are inherently loyal to truth, in which case you think truth is non-rational;

A: I did not follow the logic of that.

---

You seemed to imply that, women inherently understand what the truth is. This means that women are innately without delusion (ego) and that their thinking is intuitive (non-rational, because on a henid level of thinking).

Their thinking is intuitive, because of the absence of delusion (false thinking). If their thinking were rational, then there would be awareness of delusion.

To be intrinsically (ie. from birth) pure rationality, free of attachment and delusion, is actually impossible, for the simple reason that rationality is the creator and the destroyer of delusional thinking.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1549

(7/14/04 2:04 am)

Reply

Re: re:

---

There are amany assumptions in your post.

Quote:

---

You seemed to imply that, women inherently understand what the truth is.

---

I said that women have not the same sort of ego problem as men.

james johnathan
Registered User
Posts: 26
(7/14/04 10:08 am)
Reply

 re:

---

Quote:

JJ: All becomes still, and empty (or, open).

Bird: Right, so I agree with all you said...and after one realizes all that, how is one to live?

---

In perfect freedom, and with perfect understanding. With no attachments, one is like a child – free to “wander about” with endless curiosity and spontaneity.

I'd rather not wax eloquent about it, though. When you begin to cultivate an awareness of the nature of things, the question of "how to live" solves itself.

---

Quote:

JJ: It is the most important thing in my world, to be sure. I'm singularly devoted to reaching the shores of Nirvana - to becoming Infinite, to attaining no-attainment.

Bird: How is that possible, without a self?

---

Well said, I would have made the same point if I were you. Of course, attaining no-attainment means realizing that, from the start, there never was any self to begin with, nor anything to become attached to. The above is merely a phrase of convention.

---

Quote:

JJ: May I ask what forum you were having this discussion in?

Bird: p076.ezboard.com/frealism...61&stop=80

---

Heh, I thought that may have been the one you were talking about. The young man you were conversing with used to be me – I’m of the same self-organized cell system as the person that made those posts under the name Vassago. Please don’t hold me to anything I said in that forum – I’ve been reincarnated several times since then. Still, I do remember our discussion being a good one, and generally agree with most everything I said regarding our topic of the water molecule.

Quote:

---

JJ: Does a tree falling in woods make a sound if no one is around to hear it?

Bird: I have always thought so. At least, the tree does the same thing, and causes the same air movements, whether any being's aural device notices it.

---

So there remains air movements (which I don’t quite agree with, but for the sake of expediency, I’ll allow) – and what of the sound? Sound is not air movements. Sound is sound, a phenomenon that occurs when these air movements are filtered through the aural devices of an organism. The fact that these air movements continue doesn’t mean that they are being translated into sound, if there is no sentient intelligence around to make this translation.

The Zen koan is less explicit, but conveys the same point: no-thing exists without mind.

Quote:

---

JJ: What is it, precisely, that you are assuming exists temporarily? If anything “exists”, objectively speaking, it cannot exist temporarily, unless that existence is merely an illusory rendering of the mind (memory creates the appearance of things). To say that things exist in and of themselves is to say that they have self-nature – which means that they exist permanently and outside the realm of dependent-origination. Obviously, such things cannot occur – nothing that occurs is outside the realm of becoming (dependent-origination). Self-nature would render change impossible, as “self-nature” is “of itself and by itself”, and is not a thing created by a myriad of other things. Again, self-nature is impossible. So I say again, not one thing exists, and yet neither is there non-existence, since non-existence is an affirmation of a permanent nothingness, a nihilistic “emptiness of absence”. What can be said is that there is becoming (change, evolution) - a flux of shifting relationships. Nothing solid, nothing tenable, nothing to attach to. Indeed, no self to attach from.

Bird: I'm saying that the sun exists temporarily. Of course, it is only the relativistic mind that would label a 20-billion-year lifespan long, or compare it to the light of a firefly and call that short. And it is quite true that the sun does not exist inherently and that it is in a state of flux and becoming. I'm saying that to produce a planet teeming with 8 million life forms and millions of years of evolution, that this state of flux and becoming, with highly permeable boundaries, is yet able to contain properties that does certain things and not others, and does them reliably enough and for long enough, to accomplish great things, to accomplish the expression and the vehicles of life. Why assume the unconditioned is "better" than the conditioned? The Tao gives birth to the ten thousand things and the ten thousand things are the life of Tao, the beauty and expression of Tao. You are also in a state of flux, but you are not in such a state of flux as to not recognize yourself each day. There is sufficient continuity. In the flux of things there is also continuity because there is only one universal life. And that life inherently exists.

---

Clearly, there are occurrences, such as the evolution of the cosmos and life on earth. Conventional truth is that of dependent-origination; form originates from a myriad of causes and vanishes back into the causal web. Conventional truth is no less true than higher truth, as I said before –it’s just limited, and not the ultimate truth. The ultimate truth is that nothing arises, nor ceases. I think you'll have to read Nagarjuna or his followers to see the impeccable logic behind that, though.

Quote:

---

JJ: I definitely think that the women issue is salient. However, I think that, when it comes down it, QRS is simply far more attracted to the idea of being “wise above all men”, than attaining actual Buddhist enlightenment.

Bird: They're intertwined.

What is Nietzschean style detachment?

---

Nietzschean style detachment is actively pushing away everyone and everything because you harbour a deep disgust for the values and mentalities of “the herd”. Repulsion and rejection does not reconcile with Buddhist enlightenment, which stresses non-attachment; the ceasing of our delusory mental habits that try and mold Reality according to the preferences and expectations of our egos. The difference between detachment and non-attachment cannot be underestimated. Detachment is attachment to non-attachment, and a perpetuation of samsara.

Quote:

---

JJ: Science is premised on the assumption that reality is comprised of things, and that by reducing phenomena as far as possible, the underlying, fundamental source of things can be localized.

Bird: We shall see. I have a lot of faith in science

---

Science is good for constructing descriptive models. Just don't make the mistake of believing that science is anything other than a self-referential, internally consistent system of symbolisms. In that it assumes “things” to be self-existent, it doesn't refer to Reality.

Quote:

---

JJ: Conventional truth isn't exactly less true than higher truth – it's simply truer in a limited, less comprehensive way.

Bird: And higher truth contains conventional truth within it.

---

Conventional truth is a true description of the world, higher truth is a true description of the descriptions of the world.

Quote:

---

JJ: Realizing the non-ultimate nature of conceptual truth doesn't render one silent – only non-attached.

Bird: How does it result in becoming unattached?

---

JJ: Because one is no longer imposing a fixed realm of symbolisms atop an unfixed realm of flux. Views about the nature of reality are limited to the conventional, and are not taken to be representative of the highest truth. There is nothing to be attached to.

Bird: Are you meaning both unattached to concepts and also desireless?

---

Desires still arise, one is simply unattached to them. This is the unity of samsara and nirvana – form is emptiness, and emptiness is form.

Violently stamping out desires by brainwashing yourself to believe that there is no desirer and thus no desire is a QRS preoccupation. It goes back to the whole distinction between detachment and non-attachment, and Neitzcheanism versus Buddhism.

Quote:

---

Bird: How do you account for existence?

JJ: What existence? What do you mean by existence?

Bird: Since emptiness does not mean nothingness, you agree that there is indeed existence. That, as I said earlier, is the primal fact. How can we deal with its magnitude? How can it have arisen unless it has inherent existence? Existence cannot have arisen from nothingness and without cause. What could be beyond cause and effect, outside time, never born and never die, unchanging, beyond movement and stillness, if not inherent existence itself?

---

Emptiness does not mean a nihilistic “emptiness of absence”, but it most certainly means the ultimate emptiness of “things”. The distinction is a subtle one. I don’t necessarily agree that there is “indeed existence”. Stating that there is “existence” means affirming some manner of self-existence. Conventionally, yes, dependent-origination exists. The higher truth is that dependent-origination doesn’t exist. Neither arising nor ceasing, coming nor going, etc. Your last sentence is tantamount to the well-known objection to sunyata – that sunyata itself must be self-existent (the self-nature of the fundamental lack of self-nature). Clearly though, this is inchoate – the fundamental principle that there is no self-nature (sunyata) immediately refutes, in and of itself, the notion that this lack of self-nature has self-nature.

Edited by: james johnathan at: 7/14/04 10:10 am

james johnathan
Registered User
Posts: 27
(7/14/04 10:38 am)
Reply

 Re: re:

---

Quote:

---

DQ: Even Nietzsche shied away from that kind of unbridled arrogance.

---

Nietzsche was, by all accounts, miserably timid and shy – of course he didn’t extend the power and conviction of his theorizing into the way he actually engaged the world.

Quote:

---

JJ: Have you read Quinn’s early correspondence with Solway? If not, I suggest you do. It’s very edifying.

DQ: There is some great writing in there, mainly by Kevin - very inspired and direct. Which parts have you found the most edifying?

---

All of it, really. I certainly agree that the writing is inspired. And don't be so modest, you have some good bits in there as well. Take this, for example:

Quote:

---

A younger David Quinn:

“I must let go of everything - even my loftiest thoughts and memories of the infinite. This is not easy for one feels one is betraying God by not directing thought towards Him. But if I desire realization then that is my ego desiring, which merely perpetuates the illusion. Faith, then, is seeing there is nothing to strive for in any way for all is perfect. Faith is to live each moment totally without motive, or purpose, not caring for enlightenment.”

---

Of course, the acute reader will begin to notice how your path gradually becomes errant:

Quote:

---

A more embittered David Quinn:

“However, I'm sure I'm improving overall. My reaction to most worldly things is now a complete and automatic revulsion, no matter what company I'm in. Years ago I would have had to consider it first - before being revolted.”

---

If only you had kept your initial faith David – it may kept you on the path to actual attainment. The latter quote demonstrates the beginning of your “Neitzsche-ization” – the downward turn that began your confusion between non-attachment and detachment.

Oh, I also thoroughly enjoyed Kevin's introduction of Dan, the mediocre poet and amateur astronomer. That was really more comical than edifying, though.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2818

(7/14/04 12:22 pm)

Reply

 ----

---

James Johnathan, which of Nietzsches works did you enjoy the most?

Jones Kelly

Posts: 272

(7/14/04 3:17 pm)

Reply

 The nature of women

---

Anna,

Quote:

---

K: (i) women don't have egos and are inherently loyal to truth, in which case you think truth is non-rational;

A: I did not follow the logic of that.

K: You seemed to imply that, women inherently understand what the truth is. This means that women are innately without delusion (ego) and that their thinking is intuitive (non-rational, because on a henid level of thinking).

Their thinking is intuitive, because of the absence of delusion (false thinking). If their thinking were rational, then there would be awareness of delusion.

To be intrinsically (ie. from birth) pure rationality, free of attachment and delusion, is actually impossible, for the simple reason that rationality is the creator and the destroyer of delusional thinking.

A: There are amany assumptions in your post.

---

Would you care to elaborate if you disagreed with what i wrote?

Quote:

---

K: You seemed to imply that, women inherently understand what the truth is.

A: I said that women have not the same sort of ego problem as men.

---

If you did indeed say that (i can't see where), i agree. Women's ego problem is immense, for the reason that they generally deny it exists.

Edited by: Jones Kelly at: 7/14/04 3:20 pm

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1552

(7/14/04 4:41 pm)

Reply

Re: re:

---

Quote:

---

Bird: Right, so I agree with all you said...and after one realizes all that, how is one to live?

JJ: In perfect freedom, and with perfect understanding. With no attachments, one is like a child – free to “wander about” with endless curiosity and spontaneity.

I'd rather not wax eloquent about it, though. When you begin to cultivate an awareness of the nature of things, the question of "how to live" solves itself.

---

Apparently I gave you the impression that I was actually asking that question. Not knowing how to live is not among my problems. I was rather questioning you about what I perceive as the dourness of Buddhism.

Quote:

---

Of course, attaining no-attainment means realizing that, from the start, there never was any self to begin with, nor anything to become attached to. The above is merely a phrase of convention.

---

I can understand that the self is just a bunch of aggregates, yet there is something not quite true about that. How is it that the person who realizes no-self and the shores of nirvana is yet a self?

That's not the only interpretation for attaining no-attainment. The way I think of it, it is the realization that while everything is utterly transformed by a new understanding, it is yet the same and nothing has changed. Whether there is a self or not, the phrase has meaning.

Quote:

---

Please don't hold me to anything I said in that forum – I've been reincarnated several times since then.

---

I'm glad its been that kind of summer : D

Quote:

---

Sound is sound, a phenomenon that occurs when these air movements are filtered through the aural devices of an organism.

---

In that case I'll agree, although there will have to be no kind of being around. I think even other trees, or the tree itself, has some perception of its falling.

Quote:

---

The ultimate truth is that nothing arises, nor ceases. I think you'll have to read Nagarjuna or his followers to see the impeccable logic behind that, though.

---

I'm not disagreeing. Look at this: ( I added the bold to spots I thought most pertinent)This is a young guy who got interested in Buddhism as a teenager--

I will now try to describe as accurately as possible that which I discovered on that day and which became much clearer to me in the months that followed. Basically, what I discovered cannot be said to be anything. There is absolutely nothing that can distinguish it any way, so trying to describe it is useless really. It is forever indescribable.

Nonetheless, there is a conditioned existence which can be distinguished and when one puts It in relation to this conditioned existence, it is possible to give a description of what it is not. It is not possible to give a positive description of it, yet the via negativa description is not true either. It should be understood that it is not an actual description, but rather a negation in relation to conditioned existence.

I discovered that nothing that can be distinguished as being anything is really me. Everything that is conditioned, subjected to cause and effect and thus impermanent, is not who I really am. That all the thoughts, feelings and views that we harbour have nothing to do with me. Even my body is not really me. There is no 'I'. No one to feel, no one to think or act. All of this happens independently of me, yet not apart from me. The 'I' as such is nothing more than a set of ideas, thoughts and views which are being continuously sustained by dwelling on them and holding on to them as real.

Once the false 'I' is seen through, the true self manifests.

My true self is awareness or consciousness, but not as you think of it. What I discovered was that my awareness is not bound by anything at all. I call it the Unconditioned or Essence of Mind. What I mean by Essence of Mind is that when you take everything in the mind and strip away, then there is just this, the essence, left.

It is not bound by space, so it could be called infinite, yet this is not really true as it cannot really be said to have any spatial limits even if this limit is infinity. Thus my true self expands everywhere in all directions, yet it is nowhere to be found.

It is not bound by time, so it could be called eternal, yet this is not really true either, as it is utterly beyond any time limits even if this limit is eternity. My true self was never born, never ages and never dies. Yet to say that I will live for eternity is not true either, as it is utterly beyond time.

Perhaps the closest thing would be to say that there is just this utterly unchanging moment, yet this also fails to hit the mark as it could imply that it is static which it is not. It is beyond static and moving. Thus before the world was, I AM. Not before the world, I was, but before the world, I AM.

See Dharmadhatu.

It is not bound by any conditioned phenomena (which constitutes all of existence - the entire universe). Since all conditioned phenomena are in a constant state of flux, the Unconditioned could be said to be unmoving, yet this is not really true since it implies something static. Let it be understood that it merely does not participate in the flux of conditioned existence, and this absence of flux is called unmoving.

Since it is not bound by any phenomena, it is not bound by the senses either. There are no sounds in the Unconditioned, so it could be said to be silent, yet this isn't really true either. Rather, it is the absence of sound and silence. It cannot be seen, heard, smelled, felt, tasted or cognised about in any way. Rather, your true self is that which cognises, smells, tastes, feels, hears and sees. Yet this is not entirely true either as this could imply that there is a self experiencing this, and thus bound by the senses. Rather, there is just this awareness of the senses.It is not dual in any way. Thus it could be said to be non-dual, yet this isn't really true either. Rather, it is neither dual nor non-dual. In actuality, the only thing that creates dualistic notions such as good/bad, here/there and subject/object is your thoughts. Thoughts is that which separates. Thus whenever you are bound by thoughts, you are separated from that which is, and true freedom cannot be found. Thus thoughts will never be able to capture your true self. True freedom means that everything merely is as it is. There is no trying to add or take anything, indulgence or rejection, or perhaps more accurately: There is no 'should'. Only when you are capable of giving up all ideas of anything that 'should' be in any way, including the tendency to think 'should', only then can you truly be free. Even the thought that 'should' should not be there means you are bound. True non-'shouldness' means taking in both 'should' and the absence of 'should' and let everything, even your 'shoulds', be as it is. As long as you are bound by any mental state whatsoever, your true Unconditioned awareness cannot manifest. If your true self can be said to be any mental state, it is the state of no state at all.

Since it is not bound by time or movement in any way, it is always present. Even though you may not realise it, and you are constantly pulled around by your thoughts and views, your true self remains utterly unmoving. Nothing can affect it. Therefore, once you discover your true self, nothing changes at all. If anything changes it is merely that you are now aware of the fact that things are as they are, and that it has always been so. There is nothing to be realised.

Since it is this true ground of reality and there is nothing further beyond this, it could be said to be 'ultimate'. But since it is always present in all things (and always has been), it would mean that everything is ultimate. Since there is nothing for which the ultimate can stand in contradistinction against, what is the point of labeling it such?

Some people may perceive all of this as something deeply mysterious beyond the scope of their own capacities. It is not. It is simple and plain living, and nothing mysterious about it. Do not imagine that this unconditioned awareness is somehow apart from the world and daily life. On the contrary, it could be said that one is even more closer to life than ever before, because there is no separation between you and the world. When caught up in dualism, one creates the illusion of someone being aware (subject) and something to be aware of (object). Yet there is just this awareness, there is nothing to be aware of. Conditioned phenomena are not apart from awareness in any way, yet they not really awareness either.

Perhaps the best way to describe this is to use the analogy of a mirror, the unconditioned awareness being the mirror and conditioned phenomena beings images reflected in the mirror. The mirror doesn't change because reflections arise. It does not dwell upon the reflections, yet the reflections exists nowhere apart from the mirror. The are the mirror, yet the mirror isn't the reflections.

This is as exact as I can possibly describe this discovery, yet it still misses the mark. The only way to truly know is to experience it for yourself. I hope you do someday.

Quote:

---

Repulsion and rejection does not reconcile with Buddhist enlightenment,

---

Yes, I have referenced their aversions a few times as indicators of nonenlightenment, plus being no fun. They don't like dogs! And they agree about it. I bet they're cat people.

Quote:

---

Just don't make the mistake of believing that science is anything other than a self-referential, internally consistent system of symbolisms.

---

Almost everything that humans are engaged in is like that.

Quote:

---

In that it assumes "things" to be self-existent, it doesn't refer to Reality.

---

I don't see this. I think science is hot on the trail of lack of inherent existence, of aggregates of properties comprising an element or molecule, for example.

Quote:

---

Emptiness does not mean a nihilistic “emptiness of absence”, but it most certainly means the ultimate emptiness of “things”. The distinction is a subtle one.

---

No, I have never implied emptiness means nothingness.

Quote:

---

I don't necessarily agree that there is “indeed existence”.

---

Really?

Quote:

---

Stating that there is “existence” means affirming some manner of self-existence.

---

Yes, and how can you possibly disagree with that?

Quote:

---

Conventionally, yes, dependent-origination exists. The higher truth is that dependent-origination doesn't exist. Neither arising nor ceasing, coming nor going, etc.

---

Well and good, but the whole thing exists.

Quote:

---

Your last sentence is tantamount to the well-known objection to sunyata – that sunyata itself must be self-existent (the self-nature of the fundamental lack of self-nature).

---

I'm not sure that's what I'm saying. It seems a little crazy. How can the lack of something have existence in any way? It is merely an apophatic description. It is Tao which exists inherently, not sunyata.

Quote:

---

Clearly though, this is inchoate – the fundamental principle that there is no self-nature (sunyata) immediately refutes, in and of itself, the notion that this lack of self-nature has self-nature.

---

Again, I agree that a lack of self-nature cannot have self-nature. But, it seems a glaring omission to fail to notice that existence is real. Your sunyata does not get to the root of things.

james johnathan
Registered User
Posts: 28
(7/15/04 10:38 am)
Reply

 re:

---

Quote:

---

DQ: Are you seeking to become non-attached to utterly everything - including the things and people you currently love?

JJ: Of course.

DQ: Even though it means you have to stop loving them?

---

Alas, for you and your relations David. Non-attachment doesn't mean this at all. The nature of love changes, true, yet it isn't a change that destroys love. When one is non-attached, one is able to love with a purity that is not tainted by the self-interest of the ego. You accept people fully and wholeheartedly as they are, as Nature continues to render them with each passing moment, for the ego has abandoned its habit of trying to change things.

The fact that you consider an ego-less state as one devoid of love is an important revelation – one that people would be well to note. And if there is any doubt remaining in Anna's mind regarding whether or not QRS are Buddhists, I will remind her that Buddhism places no small importance on compassion and "lovingkindness". It's a notion not even limited to those crazy Theravadins!

Quote:

---

JJ: As someone who experiences non-thought regularly, your reply sounds like a blind man telling a normal man that grass isn't green. Could you tell me why you think that a state of non-thought is an illusion? (And why over two millennia of enlightened thinkers have preached the merits of non-thought, through meditation.)

DQ: Because, alas, these so-called "enlightened thinkers" are less interested in truth and more interested in promoting meditative heavens that greatly appeal to the ego. Needless to say, the latter is far more popular and pleasurable to the emotions than the former

JJ: Do you not consider the Buddha, the Bodhidharma, or any of the successive Zen Patriarchs and Masters to be enlightened thinkers?

DQ: I consider most of them to be frauds. The exceptions, such as Bodhidharma, Huang Po and Hakuin, weren't interested in meditative thoughtless states of consciousness, but in something much deeper and more fascinating.

JJ: Bodhidharma taught meditation to Shaolin monks, and is said to have sat in his cave outside of Shaolin, deep in meditation, for nine years, subsequent to his arrival in China from India. So dedicated was he to meditation, that he was said to have cut off his own eye-lids to prevent him from falling asleep during sessions.

DQ: Meditation, as in trying to comprehend the nature of Reality, not shutting down one's thought-processes. Bodhidharma emphasized the need to use reason and understand Reality for oneself, which is identical to my own teaching.

---

No, that's your definition of meditation. The real definition of meditation, in the context of Eastern thought, is the act of stilling the conscious, perusing mind. Meditation is "rational contemplation" only in a Western context. I've read the Zen Teachings of Bodhidharma, and there is nothing that justifies this subterfuge of yours. Bodhidharma is the most well-known example of dedication to what now must be called "Eastern" meditation, and not without good reason.

Quote:

---

JJ: Note: the perfection of freedom is zazen-samadhi. That speaks for itself. Perhaps you should have done more homework.

DQ: "Zazen-samadhi" simply means experiencing and understanding emptiness. It has nothing to do with trying to sit still and emptying the mind of all thoughts. Hakuin consistently spoke against such practices all of his life.

---

Do you really think that you are convincing anyone with this? It's a self-revelation, that you must resort to these tactics to justify your belief. Again, make up new definitions for terms that have been around long before yourself if you want, but don't expect any rational person to take you seriously.

Quote:

---

JJ: I think you have a highly romanticized (and incorrect) notion of what meditation actually is. I don't know what a meditative "heaven" is, nor do I see how stilling the mind's idea of itself and communing with emptiness is an appeal to the ego.

DQ: The ego is attracted to anything that gives it a sense of power. By entering into powerful meditative states which seem to render everything empty, the ego can feel as though it has conquered everything in the Universe.

JJ: Meditation dissolves the subject-object duality.

DQ: You're engaging in an illusion here. How can one dissolve what doesn't exist in the first place? The mirror doesn't need to be wiped, James.

---

What it dissolves is the illusion of the ego. It erodes the mind's idea of itself.

Quote:

---

JJ: This popular aphorism pretty much sums up the Western attitude towards the acquisition of knowledge. The ego is attracted to being able to intellectually deconstruct things – it gives it a sense of superiority, a sense of power. Your own attitude towards enlightenment is a perfect reflection of this grasping for knowledge-power.

DQ: You're too kind. Thank you.

---

I'm glad that your ego was pleased to hear it.

Quote:

---

JJ: Sadly, in its currently fashionable form, meditation is espoused by many as a quick and sure way to obtain health, vitality, and moments of bliss. If these things occur, they are merely side-effects, and the moment they become attached to, meditation's true function has been lost.

DQ: I'm not talking about those things, but about the "emptiness" experience you have described - which I deem to be a false emptiness.

JJ: On what rational grounds do you deem it to be false?

DQ: I've already gone into this, using the story of Hui Neng as an illustration.

---

Your comparison of me to Shen Hsiu is another non-sequitor. Meditation is an important component in realizing one's true nature – the emptiness of the mind and the mirror. By the way, if you're going to cut and paste Buddhist stories from tripod sites, you should reference that site. And if you are going to rip off tripod sites, the least you can do is provide the full context of the story. I see that, in your cutting and pasting, you forgot to include this:

Quote:

---

Hui Ming then further asked, "Apart from those esoteric sayings and esoteric ideas handed down by the Fifth Patriarch from generation to generation, are there any other esoteric teachings?" Hui Neng replied, "What I can tell you is not esoteric. If you turn your light inwardly you will find what is esoteric within you."

Hui Neng's statement was used as a Koan from then on - "what did your original face look like before you were born?" Koans represent truths that can't be understood by logic. Hui Neng's Koan cuts through concepts and speculations about one's nature. It is shocking to discover that there is no concept which can fit such a question. The shock shakes one's assumptions, and that begins the waking up process.

---

It doesn't get more explicit than this. Although I'm sure you'll continue your campaign of deception, at least the general viewership can draw the proper conclusions.

Quote:

---

DQ: The problem with entering into a state of "no-thought" is that there is no way of knowing that one has actually entered into it - not unless one uses thought. The reason why we have no conscious awareness during deep sleep is because there are no thoughts occurring during this time. Without thoughts, there is no consciousness and no experience whatsoever.

JJ: These strike me as highly spurious claims, coming from someone with no actual experience in the matter. It's like someone who has never experienced a drug-induced altered state explaining to someone who has what that state is like, on the basis of specious appeals to logic.

DQ: Sorry to disappoint you, but I know exactly the kind of experience you are talking about and have experienced it many times. Keep in mind that I am not challenging the existence and reality of the "false emptiness" that you experience, but rather its connection to the ultimate wisdom of life.

JJ: So, you claim to have experienced this state of thoughtlessness while vehemently asserting that no such state exists? You're weaving a tangled web, David

DQ: No, it's all very straightforward. The altered state which contains the illusion of thoughtlessness is a real phenomenon. It is a state of consciousness which comes into existence when the meditational conditions are ripe. That it creates the illusion of thoughtlessness and fools some people into thinking that it is enlightenment is also a very real phenomenon.

---

"The illusion of thoughtlessness" – interesting notion. If you want to call the lack of thoughts "illusory", go for it. I think it's inchoate. What I find illusory is your grasping at concepts, thinking that you're pointing at anything other than your own ego.

You have much to learn about meditation. For anyone interested, these are links that a spiritual collaborator of mine, involved in the field of neuroscience, provided for me upon request:

<http://www.crystalinks.com/medbrain.html>

<http://www.purifymind.com/BuddhismBrain.htm>

<http://home.uchicago.edu/~jniimi/buddcogsci/paper.html>

<http://www.ellerman.org/BuddhismandtheBrain.htm>

http://quickstart.clari.net/qs\_se/webnews/wed/be/qlifestyle-us-meditation.R9cn\_DSG.html

http://www.myhealthsense.com/F030422\_Meditation.html

<http://www.geocities.com/neovedanta/a28.html>

http://www.cognitivetherapy.com/goleman\_nyt\_2003-02-04.html

<http://home.swipnet.se/tmdoctors/braindev.htm>

http://ejmas.com/pt/ptart\_shin\_0400.htm

<http://www.realization.org/page/doc0/doc0030.htm> <http://www.loper.org/~george/trends/2003/Sep/940.html>

<http://www.leaderu.com/truth/2truth06.html>

<http://www.apa.org/monitor/dec03/tibetan.html>

This represents only a small amount of the wealth of information that is now coming to light regarding the ability of meditation to alter consciousness in ways more conducive to enlightenment. Pretty soon it will be an established fact beyond refute. Even now, those who refute it do so only because they have a particular axe to grind – but it's an axe that flies in the face of reason and empirical science.

Quote:

---

JJ: You have created a false dilemma above. While the statement “one cannot think about not thinking (as in, one cannot be consciously aware of one’s unconsciousness)” is a true logical syllogism, it does not refer to the real phenomenon that you are trying to conceptualize - it doesn't apply to the real brain phenomena that occurs during meditation. In other words, it's a conceptual dilemma, not an actual one. This is simply because the narrow, simplistic categories of “thinking” and “not-thinking”, or more aptly, “consciousness” and “unconsciousness”, are ill-equipped to deal with the complex reality that is our mind, and its functioning.

DQ: They are no more ill-equipped to deal with mental realities than are the terms "on" and "off" ill-equipped to deal with the complex realities of light. It doesn't matter how complex a light source it is, it can always be judged to be on or off. Likewise, it doesn't matter how our complex mental states can get, we can always make the judgment as to whether we are conscious or unconscious.

JJ: Your analogy between the human mind and the on/off functions of a light-switch is not apt. This is only a true analogy if you want to consider a living mind in an “on” state, and a dead mind in an “off” one. Otherwise, it is totally asinine to compare something of boolean nature to something of a dynamic nature.

DQ: You're the one who talks about "no-thought" and the "cessation of consciousness" and the like. That is to say, you're the one who uses the extreme binary term of "off" to describe your meditational experiences. I've been trying to explain how foolish that is.

---

The mind, being dynamic, is able to shift in drastically different ways from the "normal" standard of consciousness. I only said that meditation is the "cessation of consciousness" in so far as consciousness is considered to be the aroused and reactive nature of the perusing mind – the "monkey mind". It doesn't turn off the mind, as you are implying that it must do, if thought is to be absent. It shifts the mind's state so that there is no motive for thought to arise, only the experience of utter stillness and openness.

Quote:

---

JJ: It is true that one cannot be conscious of one's unconsciousness, but this is not what meditation involves. Since you seemed to have ignored what I said in my last post regarding the neurochemistry behind meditation, I will try to reiterate the point. To not form concepts in one's head means precisely that. It doesn't mean that one must consciously reflect on the fact that one is not forming concepts in one's head. By maintaining a thought-less state, and practicing the proper breathing techniques associated with zazen or vipassana meditation, deep states (approaching what you might call total "non-consciousness") become not only possible, but consistently reproducible.

DQ: There is no question that if you shut down the higher functioning of the brain - i.e. the frontal lobes and cerebral cortex - then you will experience a different form of consciousness in which your fears and worries and agitated thoughts temporarily disappear. The problem is, such a state has nothing to do with the great realization of Nirvana as experienced by wise people. A wise person doesn't have to shut down his cerebral cortex in order to experience Emptiness. He can continue to experience it even while he is thinking and reasoning and talking to others.

JJ: Meditation doesn't entail shutting down the cerebral cortex, or doing so with the intent of rendering one witlessly free of concerns. What it entails is training the brain to think differently.

DQ: "Think differently"? Yesterday, it was "no thinking at all". Your words are confusing. Please make up your mind.

---

Deep meditation (absolute samadhi) is not thinking at all. When leaving this deep state, thinking returns, but it is no longer the "monkey mind" (for lack of a better word). It is deep, clear, and without attachment (positive samadhi).

Quote:

---

JJ: It's a readjustment of nervous activity that ultimately leaves one more ripe for the deep embrace of logic, and yet it also seems to foster the "point" in and of itself by quieting the mind's idea of itself. The principle behind meditation is not that you do it twice a day and be done with it – it's that you continuously train your mind to function in a deeper fashion, so that eventually, sessions are not even necessary, as a cultivated brain-state is always with you. Meditation teaches your brain how to grow in ways more conducive to enlightenment.

DQ: Only if it is a meditation which is specifically directed towards the conquering of ignorance. Most kinds of meditation do the opposite; the powerful altered states they create only serve to reinforce people's ignorance. As Bodhidharma used to say, understanding one's own nature is the key to everything: "Whoever sees his nature is a Buddha. If you don't see your nature, invoking Buddhas, reciting sutras, making offerings, and keeping precepts are all useless."

---

Keeping precepts, reciting sutras, and invoking Buddhas is exactly the nature of your spirituality. Yours involves more abstract concepts to be sure, but it's fundamentally the same – it involves the rational intellect and the strivings of the ego. Understanding your true nature is achieved through meditation and the rational understanding that concepts are useless, in so far as attaining higher wisdom is concerned.

Quote:

---

JJ: Yes, but when you've exposed reason as just another one of those delusions that you are trying to expose, what then?

DQ: You continue using it, just as you continue using computers and cars which are also empty of inherent existence. Nothing changes in that respect.

JJ: You continue using it as before, true, though your relationship to it changes. The object of one's pursuit is no longer to construct systematic and lofty metaphysical treatises with the intent of explicating the un-explicable, the object becomes nurturing the understanding and experience of emptiness by clarifying the fundamental point.

DQ: True. Which is what my book "Wisdom of the Infinite" is all about.

---

"Wisdom of the Infinite" is a systematic construction of metaphysics. It encourages people to go around thinking about causality. "I don't exist because of causality! I don't exist because of causality!" – that's the mantra of the QRS, your own invocation of the Buddha. Stop invoking, David. Shine the mind's light inward.

Quote:

---

JJ: And what is the "degree" that it can be distinguished from samsara?

DQ: 100%.

---

You are still stuck in samsara, grasping at illusions.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2344

(7/15/04 10:51 am)

Reply

Re: re:

---

James Johnathon wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: Even Nietzsche shied away from that kind of unbridled arrogance.

JJ: Nietzsche was, by all accounts, miserably timid and shy –

---

Some accounts describe him as soft-spoken and courteous.

Quote:

---

of course he didn't extend the power and conviction of his theorizing into the way he actually engaged the world.

---

Your distaste towards Nietzsche is quite evident. A more objective observer would have noted that Nietzsche essentially lived an ascetic life devoted to truth - which is what he preached in his books.

Quote:

---

A more embittered David Quinn:

“However, I'm sure I'm improving overall. My reaction to most worldly things is now a complete and automatic revulsion, no matter what company I'm in. Years ago I would have had to consider it first - before being revolted.”

If only you had kept your initial faith David – it may kept you on the path to actual attainment.

---

Actually, it was Kevin who wrote that. He was giving expression to his all-consuming love for truth. My own outlook, alas, wasn't as pure at that stage.

Quote:

---

The latter quote demonstrates the beginning of your “Nietzsche-ization” – the downward turn that began your confusion between non-attachment and detachment.

---

Okay, let's examine this more closely. How do you define non-attachment? What is the difference between non-attachment and attachment? Is it possible to be unattached to heroin while injecting it on a daily basis?

Quote:

---

JJ: I definitely think that the women issue is salient. However, I think that, when it comes down it, QRS is simply far more attracted to the idea of being “wise above all men”, than attaining actual Buddhist enlightenment.

Bird: They're intertwined. What is Nietzschean style detachment?

JJ: Nietzschean style detachment is actively pushing away everyone and everything because you harbour a deep disgust for the values and mentalities of “the herd”.

---

You're only looking at half the story. A deep disgust for false values and ideas is the flipside of a deep love for true ones. You cannot have one without the other.

Moreover, it is impossible to break out of the torpor of conventional mainstream mindset without experiencing an utter revulsion of it.

Quote:

---

Repulsion and rejection does not reconcile with Buddhist enlightenment, which stresses non-attachment;

---

It might not reconcile with the modern Buddhist outlook, which is a false Buddhism, but it does tally with the original Buddhist scriptures. For example, from one of the greatest Buddhist texts, The Dhammapada:

----

- Do not follow a life of evil; do not live heedlessly; do not have false views; do not value worldly things. In this way one can get rid of suffering.
- What fools say is pleasure, the nobles say is pain. What fools say is pain, the nobles know as pleasure. See here is a thing difficult to understand, here the ignorant are confounded.
- Those, who are ashamed to do shameful things, are rare. Such men can be compared to a thoroughbred horse who does not get whipped.
- So, when a fool does wrong deeds, he does not realize (their evil nature); by his own deeds the stupid man is tormented, like one burnt by fire.
- Do not disregard evil, saying, "It will not come nigh unto me", by the falling of drops even a water-jar is filled, likewise the fool, gathering little by little, fills himself with evil.
- Just as a merchant, with a small escort and great wealth, avoids a perilous route, just as one desiring to live avoids poison, even so should one shun evil things.
- Verily, an evil deed committed does not immediately bear fruit, just as milk curdles not at once; smouldering, it follows the fool like fire covered with ashes.
- Where the world finds no delight, there the passionless will delight, for they look not for pleasures.
- So long as the sensual desire of man towards women, even the smallest, is not destroyed, so long is his mind in bondage, as the calf that drinks milk is to its mother.
- To be thoughtless is easy, it is easy to live without shame and be selfish. But it is hard to be selfless, pure and intelligent.
- Riches destroy the foolish, if they look not for the other shore; the fool by his thirst for riches destroys himself, as if he were destroying others in battle.
- He who has compassion on his friends and confidential companions loses his own advantage, having a fettered mind; seeing danger in friendship let one wander alone like a rhinoceros. There is support and amusement in the midst of company, and for children there is great affection; Although wishing people well, one must wander alone like a rhinoceros. Having torn the ties, having broken the net as a fish in the water, being like a fire not returning to the burnt place, let one wander alone like a rhinoceros. They cultivate the society of others and serve them for the sake of personal advantage; friends without a motive are difficult to come by. Therefore, let one wander alone like a rhinoceros.

- Surely, the path that leads to wordly gain in one, and the path that leads to Nibbana is another; understanding this, the Bhikkhu, the disciple of the Buddha, should not rejoice in worldly favours, but cultivate detachment.

- Come, behold this world which is like unto an ornamented royal chariot, wherein fools flounder, but for the wise there is no attachment.

- One who has conquered all defilements, cannot be defeated. Such a one is The Buddha, who has attained unlimited power.

- One, who has no Craving with its snare and poisons, cannot be disturbed. Such a one is The Buddha, who has attained unlimited power.

- To cease from all evil, to cultivate good, to purify one's mind: This is the advice of all Buddhas.

- Sitting alone, lying down alone, walking alone and alone subduing himself, let a man be happy at the end of desires.

- As long as the evil deed done does not bear fruit, the fool thinks it is like honey; but when it ripens, then the fool suffers grief. An evil deed, does not ripen suddenly, but smouldering, like fire covered by ashes, it follows the fool.

- Even an evil-doer sees happiness so long as his evil deed does not ripen; but when his evil deed ripens, then does the evil-doer see evil. Even a good man sees evil days so long as his good deed does not ripen; but when his good deed ripens, then does the good man see good things.

- If you see a man who shows you what is to be avoided, who administers reproofs, and is intelligent, you have found a precious treasure. You will become better. Let him admonish, let him teach, let him forbid what is improper! - he will be beloved of the good, by the bad he will be hated.

----

And so on.

Quote:

---

The difference between detachment and non-attachment cannot be underestimated. Detachment is attachment to non-attachment, and a perpetuation of samsara.

---

True. But it is also the last attachment to be abandoned, after every other attachment has gone. One cannot become truly unattached without first becoming attached to non-attachment. It is a vital step on the way, and I haven't yet met anyone who has reached it.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2345
(7/15/04 10:55 am)
Reply

Re: re:

---

Anna wrote:

Quote:

---

David what about these, from the Wake-Up Sermon:

Not thinking about anything is Zen. Once you know this, walking, standing, sitting, or lying down, everything you do is Zen. To know that the mind is empty is to see the Buddha. The Buddhas of the ten directions" have no mind. To see no mind is to see the Buddha.

---

This is a very profound teaching that very few people understand. Its surface meaning is not the true meaning. A vacuous person with no thoughts is not an enlightened person.

Quote:

---

Using the mind to look for reality is delusion. Not using the mind to look for reality is awareness.

---

It's not as simple as that. The average Joe on the street does not use his mind to look for reality and yet he is not "aware".

Quote:

---

Freeing oneself from words is liberation.

---

Freeing oneself from all things - words, concepts, beliefs, people, emotions, even the illusion of life and death - is the greatest of liberations.

Quote:

---

If you use your mind to study reality, you won't understand either your mind or reality. If you study reality without using your mind, you'll understand both.

---

Well, if you think you can study reality without using your mind, then go for it. Don't let me hold you back. Good luck.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2346

(7/15/04 11:01 am)

Reply

 Re: re:

---

Anna wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: The difference between getting stuck in the eighth consciousness and breaking through into Nirvana is immense.

Anna: Being stuck in practice and meditative states, is that what you mean? Somehow, I find this passage pertinent:

When you're deluded, this shore exists. When you wake up, it doesn't exist. Mortals stay on this shore. But those who discover the greatest of all vehicles stay on neither this shore nor the other shore. They're able to leave both shores. Those who see the other shore as different from this shore don't understand Zen.

---

The enlightened person who has transcended all shores can still talk about "different shores" for the sake of helping deluded people - and yet, amazingly enough, he continues to understand Zen without any trouble at all. You need to stop taking these kinds of passages so literally. The Buddha himself spoke about samasara and nirvana for the whole of his teaching life and it didn't affect his enlightenment.

Quote:

---

DQ: There is nothing wrong with striving. Indeed, to the degree that one is still ignorant, one should strive with all one's might to become enlightened.

Anna: I agree and yet there is a lot of useless striving, and I think that there must be an obliquity to the striving. I suppose that the problem with striving is that the process of striving in a way prevents and pushes away that which you want. The desire for liberation or enlightenment assumes that whatever you want is not happening now, in this moment, but is elsewhere, and in the future. This right there creates a chasm.

---

Fundamentally, my work, "Wisdom of the Infinite", deals with nothing else but this one point.

Quote:

---

DQ: He is still trying to polish the non-existent dust from the non-existent mirror. That is to say, he is still being fooled into thinking that some things inherently exist and have to be removed for clear perception to arise.

Anna: OK, but while you disagree with his approach, do you not also think that delusion and attachment have to be removed in order for clear perception to arise?

---

Yes, that is the case by definition. But it does not involve mirror-polishing.

Quote:

---

DQ: Most monks and seekers that I meet have very little interest in becoming enlightened. While they spend their days obeying their teachers, doing all the rituals, reading the texts, sitting in meditation, etc, the actual process of piercing through the core delusion of life and becoming enlightened is constantly avoided.

Anna: I'm not sure I can buy that. These are people who have given up even sex to pursue enlightenment. (Although, they may also often be people who want to retreat from the pressures of regular life.) Why would they avoid enlightenment?

---

Usually it is because their motivations for becoming a monk are not pure. In my experience, monks are not so much interested in pure, unadulterated truth, but rather in tangential things like leading a peaceful, ordered life, submission to an authority figure, assuaging guilt, indulging in anti-social tendencies, treatment for mental illness, fear of other people, the desire to recreate drug-induced highs, etc. Only very occasionally does a monk avoid truth because he fears its implications. But such a hightened form of consciousness is very rare in monastic circles.

james johnathan
Registered User
Posts: 29
(7/15/04 1:15 pm)
Reply

 re:

---

Quote:

---

Your distaste towards Nietzsche is quite evident. A more objective observer would have noted that Nietzsche essentially lived an asectic life devoted to truth - which is what he preached in his books.

---

I have no distaste for Nietzsche. For better or for worse, I am one of those miserably blessed creatures, like yourself, who was never of the herd and never will be of the herd. Even though it hasn't really been expressed thus far, don't be mistaken, I am disgusted with most of the values that are endorsed and perpetuated through culture. I realized at a very tender age (much tenderer than your own, according to your letters) that I would never find peace by following the socially-prescribed routes to happiness. However, I also realize that my current attitudes towards society merely represent the path that my samsara has taken me - that it is "I" who is repulsed by the Holy Trinity of popular culture, celebrity, and fashion, that it is "I" who considers consumerism a plague, that it is "I" who yearns for deeper meaning and understanding. Etc. Thus, I realize that it is merely my ego that has distanced itself from the herd, and that full liberation entails letting go of these revulsions, and neither accepting nor admonishing the values that I find so errant.

Quote:

---

Actually, it was Kevin who wrote that. He was giving expression to his all-consuming love for truth.

---

I stand corrected, my mistake. Question: why doesn't his "love for truth" resemble your earlier (true) understanding that everything is perfect as it is? Do you really not see that revulsion, rejection, and disgust are merely expressions of the ego? I find it hard to believe that you don't see that...

Quote:

---

JJ: The latter quote demonstrates the beginning of your "Neitzsche-ization" – the downward turn that began your confusion between non-attachment and detachment.

DQ: Okay, let's examine this more closely. How do you define non-attachment? What is the difference between non-attachment and attachment? Is it possible to be unattached to heroin while injecting it on a daily basis

---

I don't think we disagree on the definition of non-attachment. I think I realize its truth at a deeper level. You are disgusted with popular values and thus remove yourself from any engagement with them. This I call detachment. Non-attachment means being non-obstructed and unaffected in any and every context, even ones that would have been repulsive to your ego.

Example: You don't work. If you were forced to (say the Japanese invaded and forced you into a job), would you be able to work and remain non-attached? Or is your non-attachment only a constructed philosophical justification to live your life exactly as your ego desires - without responsibility, and with freedom of your person? You definitely have freedom of your person, but do you have freedom of your mind?

Quote:

---

JJ: I definitely think that the women issue is salient. However, I think that, when it comes down it, QRS is simply far more attracted to the idea of being “wise above all men”, than attaining actual Buddhist enlightenment.

Bird: They're intertwined. What is Nietzschean style detachment?

JJ: Nietzschean style detachment is actively pushing away everyone and everything because you harbour a deep disgust for the values and mentalities of “the herd”.

DQ: You're only looking at half the story. A deep disgust for false values and ideas is the flipside of a deep love for true ones. You cannot have one without the other.

---

Gee, David... I thought that you felt quite vehemently that love is a fallacious effect of the ego? Why the double-standard? In any event, the "truest" of all values is the realization that the wise man makes no views, affirms no positions. When pushed on this issue, you agree. You shift back and forth between a Nietzschean perspective (the repulsion and love of values) and a quasi-Buddhist perspective (the ceasing of judgements between love/hate) as it fits the circumstance.

Also, I won't get into the fact that Nietzsche rolls in his grave every time you affirm what "true" values are. Nietzsche had no values. He was solely a destroyer of values, a deconstructor of systems (sort of like Nagarjuna). He would be disgusted by the way that you've built a system around your own notion of "true" values. In fact, he would probably even seek to destroy these values.

Quote:

---

Moreover, it is impossible to break out of the torpor of conventional mainstream mindset without experiencing an utter revulsion of it.

---

To some extent, I agree. It's necessary to distance yourself from core cultural values in as far as it's needed to allow for the striving for things that popular culture has no awareness of - namely, liberation from suffering. Once a person has reached this point though, continuing to destroy values (to built a system around it, as you do) is only perpetuating one's samsara.

You're attached (obsessed, even) with distancing yourself from the herd, with affirming your own "true" values. This is not non-attachment - it's not exactly even true Nietzscheanism.

Quote:

---

JJ: Repulsion and rejection does not reconcile with Buddhist enlightenment, which stresses non-attachment;

DQ: It might not reconcile with the modern Buddhist outlook, which is a false Buddhism, but it does tally with the original Buddhist scriptures. For example, from one of the greatest Buddhist texts, The Dhammapada:

---

Very good quotes, to be sure. They are necessary in leading one far enough away from norm so as to be able to devote oneself whole-heartedly to the pursuit of liberation. There use has then been accomplished, and dwelling on them ceases. Value discriminations cease with it.

james johnathan
Registered User
Posts: 30
(7/15/04 1:19 pm)
Reply

 re:

---

Quote:

---

DQ: Most monks and seekers that I meet have very little interest in becoming enlightened. While they spend their days obeying their teachers, doing all the rituals, reading the texts, sitting in meditation, etc, the actual process of piercing through the core delusion of life and becoming enlightened is constantly avoided.

Anna: I'm not sure I can buy that. These are people who have given up even sex to pursue enlightenment. (Although, they may also often be people who want to retreat from the pressures of regular life.) Why would they avoid enlightenment?

DQ: Usually it is because their motivations for becoming a monk are not pure. In my experience, monks are not so much interested in pure, unadulterated truth, but rather in tangential things like leading a peaceful, ordered life, submission to an authority figure, assuaging guilt, indulging in anti-social tendencies, treatment for mental illness, fear of other people, the desire to recreate drug-induced highs, etc. Only very occasionally does a monk avoid truth because he fears its implications. But such a heightened form of consciousness is very rare in monastic circles.

---

So what do you suggest? Not everyone is born a philosopher, or has the potential to be one. Nature is not fair like that. I agree that the intentions for ordination typically reflect a true lack of understand, but at least they're trying. They're trying in the only way they know how, by following the words of others with hope and faith. Maybe, a few of them even attain enlightenment.

So I ask again, how will humanity enlighten itself? What is your vision?

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1553

(7/15/04 4:25 pm)

Reply

Re: re:

---

David,

Quote:

---

Alas, for you and your relations David. Non-attachment doesn't mean this at all. The nature of love changes, true, yet it isn't a change that destroys love. When one is non-attached, one is able to love with a purity that is not tainted by the self-interest of the ego. You accept people fully and whole-heartedly as they are, as Nature continues to render them with each passing moment, for the ego has abandoned its habit of trying to change things.

---

I agree with this. When I see people denigrate "love" on this forum they are almost always talkig about various exploitive relationships, which are usually based on a trade of giving and getting. A person who is fully realized in the natural state is capable of pure love precisely because they have no fear, and no lack. I think it is this fundamental fear we have (which is basically fear of death) that is the preventive of real love. Real love is an outpouring without expectation. Real love is unconditional. Real love is impersonal and nondiscriminative. when the fear is removed, loving all things is the natural state. Failure to love all things is either fear/delusion, or mental illness, because the Tao is One and all things are self. Lack of love for the world is self-hatred.

Quote:

---

Its surface meaning is not the true meaning. A vacuous person with no thoughts is not an enlightened person.

---

I agree, but I don't think zen meditation makes a vacuous person. The time spent without thought is short, and the quality of thought is likely greatly improved by it.

Quote:

---

Not using the mind to look for reality is awareness.

It's not as simple as that. The average Joe on the street does not use his mind to look for reality and yet he is not "aware".

---

Yes, it would be silly to take that statement at face value.

Quote:

---

If you use your mind to study reality, you won't understand either your mind or reality. If you study reality without using your mind, you'll understand both.

Well, if you think you can study reality without using your mind, then go for it. Don't let me hold you back. Good luck.

---

It was Bodhidharma who said that, not me. But I have printed up that whole set of 4 speeches and I'm going to read it on a road trip tomorrow.

Quote:

---

You need to stop taking these kinds of passages so literally. The Buddha himself spoke about samasara and nirvana for the whole of his teaching life and it didn't affect his enlightenment.

---

I'm frankly surprised that you think I do. Perhaps I don't communicate well. I quoted the passage as a sign of agreement.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2826

(7/15/04 8:48 pm)

Reply

---

Quinn and Johnathan on Nietzsche:--

Quinn:

Quote:

---

Nietzsche essentially lived an ascetic life devoted to truth - which is what he preached in his books.

---

He never 'preached' the 'ascetic' life.

Quote:

---

Johnathan: He was solely a destroyer of values.

---

Solely?

You two are like old hens!

james johnathan
Registered User
Posts: 31
(7/15/04 9:51 pm)
Reply

 re:

---

Nice post, Anna.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2828
(7/16/04 11:52 am)
Reply

 ----

---

Quote:

---

Real love is an outpouring without expectation.

---

Wait a second...without expectation?! I disagree!

Quote:

---

Real love is unconditional.

---

I know what you're trying to say, but technically this is not so! (:D)

Quote:

---

Real love is impersonal and nondiscriminative.

---

That's just going too far!

Quote:

---

when the fear is removed, loving all things is the natural state. Failure to love all things is either fear/delusion, or mental illness, because the Tao is One and all things are self.

---

I agree with your sentiment, but I expect so much of expression...am I too discriminative?

Quote:

---

Lack of love for the world is self-hatred.

---

Sometimes.

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

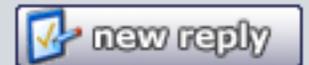

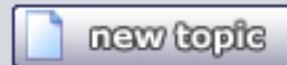

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

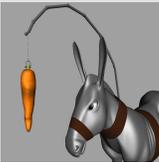

> GENIUS FORUM

> Eckhart Tolle

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
james johnathan Registered User Posts: 32 (7/16/04 12:33 pm) Reply	 re: <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Johnathan: He was solely a destroyer of values. gaz: Solely? <hr/> Do you disagree? What is the "essence" of Nietzsche's philosophy, in your opinion?
jimhaz Registered User Posts: 721 (7/16/04 1:05 pm) Reply 	 Re: re: <hr/> I agree with this. When I see people denigrate "love" on this forum they are almost always talkig about various exploitive relationships, which are usually based on a trade of giving and getting. So the ratio of people who exercise love in this fashion as opposed to “real love” would be something like 1,000,000 to 1. A person who is fully realized in the natural state is capable of pure love precisely because they have no fear, and no lack.

Everyone is fully realised in the natural state.

To have no fear and no lack they must first be comfortable without ordinary love of any kind.

I think it is this fundamental fear we have (which is basically fear of death) that is the preventive of real love.

I think it is this fundamental fear we have (which is basically fear of death) that is the cause of ordinary love.

Real love is an outpouring without expectation. Real love is unconditional. Real love is impersonal and nondiscriminative. when the fear is removed, loving all things is the natural state.

If one tried to exercise real love unconditionally and without expectation how long would it last? External forces would sponge up their very existence in no time.

Real love is actually total and absolute discrimination – that is what makes it real. Real love may mean that you are forced to kill someone for the greater good. Real love may mean that you hardly help anyone at all – for to help them means that they do not find the means to live better using their own initiative.

Failure to love all things is either fear/delusion, or mental illness, because the Tao is One and all things are self.

Fear/delusion is not failure to love all things but failure to recognise and accept all things.

Lack of love for the world is self-hatred.

No. A lack of attempting to gain greater reality truths is self-hatred. Didn't you kind of indicate that you cannot have a 'real' love for the world without minimising the self as much as possible – that's what you mean by unconditional and un-expectant isn't it?

Edited: If anyone chooses to respond to this create a new thread.

Edited by: jimhaz at: 7/16/04 3:04 pm

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2829
(7/16/04 2:44 pm)
Reply

 ---

---

Quote:

---

Johnathan: He was solely a destroyer of values.

suergaz: Solely?

Johnathan: Do you disagree? What is the "essence" of Nietzsche's philosophy, in your opinion?

---

Yes I disagree. His love was the essence of his philosophy. It's the essence of anyones. Nietzsche never completed his revaluation of values, and you think this makes him solely a destroyer of values?

Edited by: suergaz at: 7/17/04 2:00 pm

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 722
(7/16/04 2:59 pm)
Reply

 Re: ---

---

It's the essence of anyones.

You are using love as a conceptual term for endorphins, adrenalin.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1556
(7/17/04 10:32 am)
Reply

 Re: re:

---

Zag,

Quote:

---

Real love is an outpouring without expectation.

-----
Wait a second...without expectation?! I disagree!

---

Without the love being dependent upon reciprocal actions of the beloved.

Quote:

---

Real love is unconditional.

I know what you're trying to say, but technically this is not so! (:D)

---

Technically? Are you the love technician? Explain.

Quote:

---

Real love is impersonal and nondiscriminative.

That's just going too far!

---

There's no way to go too far.

Quote:

---

When the fear is removed, loving all things is the natural state. Failure to love all things is either fear/delusion, or mental illness, because the Tao is One and all things are self.

I agree with your sentiment, but I expect so much of expression...am I too discriminative?

---

I have only a vague idea of what you're thinking. I am not negating selves/non-selves, or their expressions.

Jim,

Quote:

---

I agree with this. When I see people denigrate "love" on this forum they are almost always talkig about various exploitive relationships, which are usually based on a trade of giving and getting.

So the ratio of people who exercise love in this fashion as opposed to “real love” would be something like 1,000,000 to 1.

---

Not that bad in my opinion. Consider heeding the warnings by me and JJ about indulging in too much revulsion of the world and the common man. My understanding of love is more all-encompassing than yours, no doubt. I see it as a core reality, a prime mover, a pure force of life and consciousness. The lower forms of love are not utterly devoid of pure love, but they are just that -- impure, which means tainted. Tainted by fear and need. Both of which are wrapped up in the default perceptions that stem from our physical need for survival. We're caught in a trap. We are supposed to become enlightened and realize that we are that which is never born and cannot die, but we are also invested in a physical process of evolution, whose first precept is "survive!"

Quote:

---

To have no fear and no lack they must first be comfortable without ordinary love of any kind.

---

That is probably right but denial and denigration of ordinary love isn't the answer. The answer is not contraction but expansion. "Ordinary" love need not be discarded, but purified.

Quote:

---

I think it is this fundamental fear we have (which is basically fear of death) that is the cause of ordinary love.

---

Nice point. And yet there is a kind of love that children have for their parents, and I consider the love that small children to have for their parents to be very true and genuine. Perhaps it is similar to the religious ideal of devotional surrender. The small child needs its parents totally, and yet by my theory that should make it the worst and lowest love, and it simply isn't. Perhaps because they are not egotistically developed, they are innocent and completely open and humble about their condition and status. It is a gratitude-love and an adoration-love.

Quote:

---

No. A lack of attempting to gain greater reality truths is self-hatred.

---

I think that is going too far. Lack of searching for truth is a kind of undeveloped state and its process is slowed by fear.

Quote:

---

Didn't you kind of indicate that you cannot have a 'real' love for the world without minimising the self as much as possible – that's what you mean by unconditional and un-expectant isn't it?

---

Yes, it is. I just think that a lot of religion focuses on the negative, on guilt. They take people who are already starving and tell them to fast. One minimises the self by expanding into a greater concept of self (Totality) and realizing that you are that more than you are the temporary body-personality you're currently hanging out inside of. You can't tell a person trying to navigate a rushing creek to jump from one rock until there is another in reach. Forget about minimising the self - increase the self! Before I get clobbered, I certainly don't mean to reinforce the ego but to dilute it.

Quote:

---

If one tried to exercise real love unconditionally and without expectation how long would it last? External forces would sponge up their very existence in no time.

Real love is actually total and absolute discrimination – that is what makes it real. Real love may mean that you are forced to kill someone for the greater good. Real love may mean that you hardly help anyone at all – for to help them means that they do not find the means to live better using their own initiative.

---

I'm not quite sure about the meaning of the first paragraph. but as to the rest - of course. By 'without discrimination' I definitely did not mean some jelly-like mass of mindless emotion. I meant without exception. I meant that all things and all beings are loved and accepted as they are at the moment. As to actions and expression of love, that should be as you say, totally discriminative, which is to say completely appropriate to the individual needs of the loved. Love is a universal, yet every love is unique.

Edited by: birdofhermes at: 7/17/04 10:33 am

Rairun

Registered User

Posts: 293

(7/17/04 12:32 pm)

Reply

 ...

---

Anna, love can't be non-discriminative. If you loved all things as they are, equally, you would become stuck and would have no idea of what to do. You would have no preferences regarding anything. You wouldn't know what to eat, because you'd love both the tasty and the poisonous food (and also life and death equally); you wouldn't know what to do when you approached people either, because when you love all expressions of their being (I don't mean just accept, but love), you also lose the concept that their 'well being' is better than their 'suffering'.

Love can indeed transcend ordinary concepts of pleasure/pain in our psychology. You can stop seeing them as things that must necessarily be cultivated/banished -- but that's just because you created a higher yardstick, not because you stopped discriminating altogether.

What I'm going to talk about here now is more of a psychological comment -- an attempt to create useful divisions to understand our feelings/thoughts -- than a metaphysical one that tries to pin down the being as it is. I'm also going to talk mostly about myself, because that's only what I know, so bear with me.

I have stopped considering suffering as suffering. When I do feel what I used to call emotional distress, I don't perceive it as distress at all. If someone asks how I feel, I might even say that I feel bad, but I add that I don't mind feeling bad. That's just who I am at that moment, and I don't feel the need to fight it. When that feeling is exhausted, I naturally find my way out of it without having to struggle. Well, technically, sometimes there is struggle, but struggle is not bad like it used to be back then.

There seems to be this line that discerns my true motivations from the thoughts that just present other logical courses of action. At the most basic level, it's just this gut feeling I get that something is to be done or not, after all logical possibilities have been analyzed.

If you tell me to choose between three ice-creams -- strawberry, chocolate and vanilla -- I'll look into my memories and see that I never liked strawberry ice-cream when I ate it, so I eliminate it right away. The problem is that in the past I seem to have liked chocolate more half of the time, and vanilla more the other half. How do I make this decision?

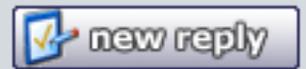

I could actually try to analyze how my tongue feels in order to know what kind of food would feel better. Still, the desire for the tongue to feel better is arbitrary... and only a gut feeling tells me that I want to feel better instead of feeling bad. As you investigate the situation, the details eventually become so subtle that you can't discern them anymore. At that point, the only reasonable thing to do is to trust the gut feeling, the one basic motivation you could find. You can't find further grounding for your preference. You like it because you like it.

I find that process only works correctly if you are completely honest with yourself about the motivations and reasons you can discern. I'm saying this because I know some of you will probably jump in and say that I only choose this or that because I'm attached, blah, blah, blah. You would be right that I can be considered attached by your standards, and I never deny that. But I can say that I am conscious of my motivations, and that I never try to cover them up. It all comes down to the discussion I was having with Rhett on the "Coupling" thread, where I stand by the fact that reason does not come up with motivations by itself. There's always an arbitrary spark in the beginning.

Ok, so what does this have to do with the subject with which I started? My point is that I dropped the dichotomy pleasure/pain, but that I didn't stop discriminating things altogether. Now I consider good being true to my own motivations (which can be anything at all, really) and bad falsifying myself and doing something I don't want (I use this as a force of expression -- ultimately, all behavior, even the one I call "falsifying", is true). So, in a sense, I love everything, because I wouldn't reject anything if they became what I wanted. But it's false to say that I actually love all things at any given moment, or that one day I will come to love them.

Edited by: Rairun at: 7/17/04 2:47 pm

Rairun Registered User Posts: 294 (7/17/04 12:53 pm) Reply	 Re: Eckhart Tolle <hr/> Just to add to my previous post: If I am to maintain my yardstick and consider that it's good for people to be true to their motivations, whatever they are, love towards all people becomes impossible -- unless you assume that everyone's true motivations are in harmony, which is pretty unrealistic in my opinion. If you were actually motivated to love everyone (in other words, to wish them well, by my definition of good), you'd find it impossible to put it in practice. Edited by: Rairun at: 7/17/04 12:55 pm
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2831 (7/17/04 1:06 pm) Reply	 --- <hr/> Jim, no I'm not. Anna, Love is personal, conditional, discriminative, it's human.

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

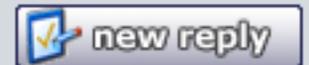

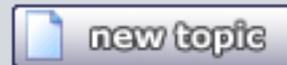

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> ego

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Kellyven Registered User Posts: 8 (2/20/04 3:48 pm) Reply	ego <hr/> I would appreciate the thinking of others to clarify my understanding of the delusion of ego. Does the ego construct continue in the sage's awareness? I do not mean the gross ego constructed by appearances to mind, that seem to constitute an inherently existing self. (But perhaps i do) I mean the ego construct, caused by awareness of emptiness. That is, a label for the independent "soul" that sees through all appearances to mind. Weininger quoting Schelling (p100, GUC) speaks of the ideal ego (as opposed to the actual ego), the absolute and non-derivative morality of the genius. Kevin (Poison for the Heart; Self) writes of the separate self, that is watchful of appearances to mind, and also exhorts David (Letters between Enemies, 6/3/1988) to "keep an eye on your mind". He also writes there "First the kingdom of God, then thinking". (This latter seems to describe the awareness-ego of emptiness which comes first, followed by the ideal ego of separateness and differentiation). Is the ideal ego (though a construct) the "delusion" of God - Nature - Tao: ie infinite self, though separate? I apologise for the clumsiness of my words. Kelly

voce io

Registered User

Posts: 705

(2/20/04 5:57 pm)

Reply

Re: ego

---

Does the ego construct continue in the sage's awareness?

What "ego construct"?

I do not mean the gross ego constructed by appearances to mind, that seem to constitute an inherently existing self. (But perhaps i do)

There are "gross egos", and "subtle egos"? There are "inherently existing selves"?

I mean the ego construct, caused by awareness of emptiness.

Isn't an ego construct non-existent by the definition of emptiness?

That is, a label for the independent "soul" that sees through all appearances to mind.

Mind is an appearance as well. Souls and independency, labels, seeing, through.....anything is an appearance. So what is your clarification of the question, now?

Weininger quoting Schelling (p100, GUC) speaks of the ideal ego (as opposed to the actual ego), the absolute and non-derivative morality of the genius. Kevin (Poison for the Heart; Self) writes of the separate self, that is watchful of appearances to mind, and also exhorts David (Letters between Enemies, 6/3/1988) to "keep an eye on your mind". He also writes there "First the kingdom of God, then thinking". (This latter seems to describe the awareness-ego of emptiness which comes first, followed by the ideal ego of separateness and differentiation).

That all sounds very good.

Is the ideal ego (though a construct) the "delusion" of God - Nature - Tao: ie infinite self, though separate?

Why do you want an "ideal ego"? If you make some change in yourself, are you actually better, more natural, or are you synthetic? Self created self? Are there delusions of "God-Nature-Tao"; when they're delusionless? The ideal ego is "bmphwioekd".

I apologise for the clumsiness of my words.

	Words will always be clumsy.
Kellyven Registered User Posts: 9 (2/20/04 8:19 pm) Reply	ego <hr/> voce io, Until recently i have experienced primarily through an egotistical perception. Being aware of this, i am trying to avoid re-creating more delusions to understand what is happening. Why did you ask your first question? You are right in questioning that the construct exists at all; this is the point. If an inherently existing self _seems_ to exist, the delusion is grossly obvious. If it doesn't seem to exist, the delusion is uncertain. Compared to the ego construct, "ideal ego" is perhaps of this uncertain nature - the morality of the genius that is non-derivative, and absolute, so that its being a delusion is not certain. Yes, it is a part of the "construction" . A sage has no delusions; why persist in the delusion of an "ideal ego"? Therefore, i think that what Weininger means by Ego is understanding the "God" that is himself, being part of the infinite. If Weininger was no sage, then why does Kevin also speak of this separate self? I do not "want" an ideal ego. I am questioning what Weininger means by the actual vs ideal ego, because of what Kevin suggests in "Self" (Poison of the Heart). Kelly
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2333 (2/20/04 10:37 pm) Reply	--- <hr/> Only geniuses claim genius. The ego is not in question.

Kellyven
Registered User
Posts: 10
(2/21/04 10:28 am)
Reply

ego

---

Quote:

---

Only geniuses claim genius.

---

Suergaz,

Weininger states a genius will not claim to be a genius, knowing that their genius is not perfect or absolute. If you do not agree with this, then you are not a genius and cannot know what a genius will do.

However, if Weininger is wrong, and an absolute genius can exist, and can be claimed, the genius can then be likened to a sage, who is only recognised by another sage. So you must be claiming to be a genius. Is that true?

When you state, "the ego is not in question", do you mean that the ego is not a delusion?

Kelly

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2343
(2/21/04 11:37 am)
Reply

---

---

Quote:

---

Suergaz,
Weininger states a genius will not claim to be a genius, knowing that their genius is not perfect or absolute.

---

He was a christian. Geniuses know that genius is not absolute, but perfection is relative, and upon this fact the claim is made. The claim can do harm, or produce a kind of light, geniuses like to gamble, but no more than they like to rule.

Quote:

---

If you do not agree with this, then you are not a genius and cannot know what a genius will do.

---

But you admit that Weininger could be wrong.

I am a genius.

Quote:

---

When you state, "the ego is not in question", do you mean that the ego is not a delusion?

---

No, but that is inferred in what I meant.

voce io

Registered User

Posts: 707

(2/21/04 12:15 pm)

Reply

Re: ego

---

Until recently i have experienced primarily through an egotistical perception. Being aware of this, i am trying to avoid re-creating more delusions to understand what is happening.

"You" have experienced primarily through an egotistical perception. That doesn't make sense to me. "You" are trying to avoid re-creating...more "delusions"? Understand what is happening?

Why did you ask your first question?

There isn't any ego construct.

You are right in questioning that the construct exists at all; this is the point. If an inherently existing self seems to exist, the delusion is grossly obvious. If it doesn't seem to exist, the delusion is uncertain.

If "you" don't seem, or if you do seem...what are "you" 'seeming' to? What?

Compared to the ego construct, "ideal ego" is perhaps of this uncertain nature - the morality of the genius that is non-derivative, and absolute, so that its being a delusion is not certain.

I don't really know how to decipher your statement. All I can say is that all of this trying to rid yourself of egoity is more of an illusion than ego itself.

Yes, it is a part of the "construction". A sage has no delusions; why persist in the delusion of an "ideal ego"? Therefore, i think that what Weininger means by Ego is understanding the "God" that is himself, being part of the infinite.

A sage is a delusion. Constructions are illusions, they are you trying to be smart and think that you're transcending yourself somehow. You can't transcend yourself. There is no infinite, and there isn't any "God". Weininger is dead.

If Weininger was no sage, then why does Kevin also speak of this separate self?

All of this is meaningless.

I do not "want" an ideal ego. I am questioning what Weininger means by the actual vs ideal ego, because of what Kevin suggests in "Self" (Poison of the Heart).

Why wouldn't you want an ideal ego? I haven't read Kevin's "Self", or what Weininger said. Why do you care about that stuff?

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2345
(2/21/04 1:33 pm)
Reply

---

---

Voce io, there is infinite! This is why there is no god.

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 709
(2/21/04 2:32 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

How is there "infinite"?

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2201

(2/21/04 3:12 pm)

Reply

Re: ego

Kellyven,

Quote:

---

Does the ego construct continue in the sage's awareness?

---

The self construct continues, but not the ego construct.

In other words, the concept of self is still used as a convenient tool, but unlike egotists, the sage no longer treats it as a thing of inherent importance.

Quote:

---

I do not mean the gross ego constructed by appearances to mind, that seem to constitute an inherently existing self. (But perhaps I do)

I mean the ego construct, caused by awareness of emptiness. That is, a label for the independent "soul" that sees through all appearances to mind.

---

The "independent soul" or observer is also a causally created entity that has no inherent reality. Since it is essential to the existence of consciousness, it still continues to exist in enlightenment. But again, the sage no longer treats it as a thing of inherent importance.

Quote:

---

Weininger quoting Schelling (p100, GUC) speaks of the ideal ego (as opposed to the actual ego), the absolute and non-derivative morality of the genius. Kevin (Poison for the Heart; Self) writes of the separate self, that is watchful of appearances to mind, and also exhorts David (Letters between Enemies, 6/3/1988) to "keep an eye on your mind". He also writes there "First the kingdom of God, then thinking". (This latter seems to describe the awareness-ego of emptiness which comes first, followed by the ideal ego of separateness and differentiation).

---

While these are all useful concepts, they ultimately don't contain, or point to, any inherent realities.

When Kevin wrote "First the Kingdom of God, then thinking", he was saying that one should put all of one's efforts into comprehending emptiness and the ultimate non-existence of all things, before doing anything else. It is impossible to put everything in perspective until this is achieved.

Weininger didn't really do this, even though he was very much on the right track. His dictum was, "First thinking, then, perhaps, later the Kingdom of God". It is part of the reason why he became unbalanced and killed himself prematurely.

Quote:

---

Is the ideal ego (though a construct) the "delusion" of God - Nature - Tao: ie infinite self, though separate?

---

I think that Weininger's "ideal ego" referred to sagehood - that is, to the life and identity of a person who is without delusion. As such, he wasn't referring to Tao/Nature itself.

Even though the sage incorporates the whole of Nature into his being, his existence as a sage is still nothing more than a little eddy within Nature.

Kellyven
Registered User
Posts: 11
(2/21/04 3:38 pm)
Reply

ego

---

Suergaz,

David's post has helped cleared up some of my questions but i have not fully absorbed it yet. Thus my questions below may be ridiculous, so i apologise in advance for my ignorance.

I will respond to your post as i would like you to clarify:

Are you saying genius is not absolute *because* perfection is relative? I think this is incorrect: perfection is only relative in terms of its opposite: imperfection. If perfection were relative, something else could be more perfect.

From how i understand it, an absolute genius, ie a perfect genius, is said to not exist because perfection is not possible unless one is as a Buddha (the perfectly enlightened). It is not the case that a genius is not absolute because their perfection (absoluteness of genius) is relative, but because "universal comprehension, full consciousness, and perfect timelessness are an ideal condition."

Therefore, it is like saying, to be an absolute genius is to directly know Reality - not to understand its nature, but to perceive all appearances to mind and equate this appearance to mind as formlessness. It is illogical. To me, this is why the ideal ego does not seem to posit a delusion, rather it is that genius that sees the delusions in perception but is not drawn into believing a reality (the ego) exists inherently.

If Weininger is wrong, and you can claim to be a genius, then you state something is more perfect than you are. Are you something that is relative to that other? Or did i misunderstand you?

If what you meant was to infer that the ego is not a delusion, why then say, no, I do not mean that the ego is not a delusion. The inference contradicts your intention. Or did i misunderstand you again?

Voce io,

If the ego is a delusion, it has been constructed, simply by that fact. Do you mean, you have no knowledge of ego, you have no knowledge of the ego construct, or you are certain that no one has any knowledge of it, or you do not know what i meant by "ego construct", or it doesn't exist inherently?

I expect you will say the last option is true, but i would like to know what your words meant.

If a delusion exists, it can't be known of until the undeluded state exists. Therefore, until that conception arises, things only "seem".

Onto ego itself - does this mean you know the ego exists, that is, that the ego is not an appearance to mind? If so, if you know_it, you contradict yourself. Do you agree?

I do not try to "rid myself of egoity" - since i am not certain of the entirety of what it is. I try to understand if what i think is the "intelligible ego" is that perceiver of thoughts - that David has just indicated is always there as self, but has no inherent importance.

You posit that a sage is a delusion/illusion, because it is a construct. Yet you say the ego construct does not exist. Therefore, the ego (construct) that is an illusion, just as the ego is an illusion, means that there is no concept for you to be using to convey your meanings to me.

This is the grand difficulty our discussion has - neither of us have understanding of what "ego" means to the other. Thus our dialogue is not very good.

For instance, when you say the ego construct does not exist, do you mean, what is represented by the label does not exist, or that the label does not exist, or that the concept does not exist?

If there are no concepts, how do you know what is "yourself", what is "infinite", or even "dead"? I would say Weininger is alive to mean that the symbol is currently being used. If constructs do not exist, how do you manage to communicate?

If "all of this is meaningless", why do you ask why i wouldn't want an ideal ego? Your words are not transparent to me.

Why are you in this forum if you are not open to explore all the ideas expressed within it?

Kelly

Kellyven
Registered User
Posts: 12
(2/21/04 3:55 pm)
Reply

ego

---

David,

Is the self construct the appearance to mind of awareness, and the ego construct is the appearance to mind of a wilful awareness?

You indicate the self construct is a convenient tool, yet unimportant in itself. In the same way, you indicate that the independent soul/observer is similarly unimportant. Thus they must be different things - but isn't awareness the same as the observer?

I cannot comprehend emptiness and the ultimate non-existence in things until i analyse it logically, comparing emptiness to formlessness and the Hidden Void. I struggle to accept that i must "STOP! building" if i have not built enough of an understanding to start with. Without the tools, how do i lay them down? Everything is put into perspective only after there are _things_...

Kevin writes that the "monsters of the soul" can be dug up with this clarity of mind and perception - but until i can logically understand how this can be done, can i do it. Perhaps this is one of those leaps of faith.

Kelly

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2203
(2/21/04 4:42 pm)
Reply

Re: ego

Kelly,

Quote:

---

Is the self construct the appearance to mind of awareness, and the ego construct is the appearance to mind of a wilful awareness?

---

It depends on what your purpose is. Keep in mind that there is really no self at all, apart from what we happen to mentally construct for a particular purpose. For example, the enlightened sage might use the concept of "self" to refer to his physical body and brain, and say things like, "I am going into town", or "I am going to bed".

Or if he is philosophizing with someone, he might use the concept of "self" to refer to his mind, or to his subjective awareness, or to his wisdom, or to the Infinite, his true nature. It just depends.

Quote:

---

You indicate the self construct is a convenient tool, yet unimportant in itself. In the same way, you indicate that the independent soul/observer is similarly unimportant. Thus they must be different things - but isn't awareness the same as the observer?

---

Not always. People sometimes speak of the "field of awareness" which the observer observes. The self-construct, in turn, usually refers to an appearance which occurs within the field of awareness.

Quote:

---

I cannot comprehend emptiness and the ultimate non-existence in things until i analyse it logically, comparing emptiness to formlessness and the Hidden Void. I struggle to accept that i must "STOP! building" if i have not built enough of an understanding to start with. Without the tools, how do i lay them down?

---

That is the sixty-four thousand dollar question! One cannot stop the building without comprehending emptiness, and conversely, one cannot comprehend emptiness without stopping the building. The two occur at the very same moment.

As a general piece of advice, I would recommend that you pour all of your energy into intellectually comprehending emptiness. The more you are able to understand emptiness, the more clearly you will see what has to be done to put the builder to rest and achieve that great boundless understanding which sages enjoy.

Quote:

---

Everything is put into perspective only after there are _things_...

---

Indeed, things really do exist after all ....

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2347
(2/21/04 6:46 pm)
Reply

---

---

Kelly:--

Quote:

---

Suergaz,

David's post has helped cleared up some of my questions but i have not fully absorbed it yet. Thus my questions below may be ridiculous, so i apologise in advance for my ignorance.

I will respond to your post as i would like you to clarify:

Are you saying genius is not absolute *because* perfection is relative? I think this is incorrect: perfection is only relative in terms of its opposite: imperfection. If perfection were relative, something else could be more perfect.

---

No I am not saying it is because of the fact that perfection is relative. Perfection is relative, as you say, in terms of its opposite, which prove that there are degrees of perfection ie. that perfection is becoming. There is one thing more perfect than perfection: more.

Quote:

---

If Weininger is wrong, and you can claim to be a genius, then you state something is more perfect than you are. Are you something that is relative to that other? Or did i misunderstand you?

---

I can only be relative to whatever this something is you are talking about! I'm relative to you, to everyone!

Quote:

---

If what you _meant_ was to infer that the ego is not a delusion, why then say, no, I do not mean that the ego is not a delusion. The inference contradicts your intention. Or did i misunderstand you again?

---

I didn't say that! The inference doesn't contradict my intention, it is simply a part of it. The ego is not in question, and thus it is inferred that it is no delusion! We can go into this further if you like.

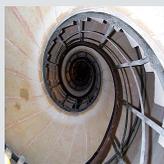

voce io

Registered User

Posts: 711

(2/21/04 6:54 pm)

Reply

Re: ego

---

Do you mean, you have no knowledge of ego

Were you born with "ego", or did other people give you that?

you have no knowledge of the ego construct

The "ego construct"? Is this any different from "ego"?

or you are certain that no one has any knowledge of it

I'm quite sure it's a load of shit, catapulted into your ear. Somehow, the shit seeped down and right now it's pouring out of your eyes, mouth, nostrils, and fingertips. It's stinky.

I'm sure that everyone's partial knowledge of how things seem is seeming and partial.

Ego doesn't exist.

or you do not know what i meant by "ego construct", or it doesn't exist inherently?

I think I know what you're typing about. "Ego construct" doesn't exist inherently, because it's a construct as well, built of the "ego".

I expect you will say the last option is true, but i would like to know what your words meant.

Why do you want to know what my words mean?

If a delusion exists, it can't be known of until the undeluded state exists. Therefore, until that conception arises, things only "seem".

An undeluded state is just as good as an ego. Without an ego, things "seem" too. Everything "seems".

Onto ego itself - does this mean you know the ego exists, that is, that the ego is not an appearance to mind? If so, if you know_it, you contradict yourself. Do you agree?

What is ego? Where is it? What's it's nature?

I do not try to "rid myself of egoity" - since i am not certain of the entirety of what it is.

Hey cool, you just kinda answered one of my previous questions. I think "ego" could be defined as 'selfhood'.

I try to understand if what i think is the "intelligible ego" is that perceiver of thoughts - that David has just indicated is always there as self, but has no inherent importance.

"You", an idea in your mind, tries to understand about some "intelligible ego", that is a perceiver of thoughts? Sounds messy.

You posit that a sage is a delusion/illusion, because it is a construct. Yet you say the ego construct does not exist. Therefore, the ego (construct) that is an illusion, just as the ego is an illusion, means that there is no concept for you to be using to convey your meanings to me.

It doesn't mean that. You created the construct of "ego-construct".

This is the grand difficulty our discussion has - neither of us have understanding of what "ego" means to the other. Thus our dialogue is not very good.

I can guarantee that 'ego' is non existent in any case.

For instance, when you say the ego construct does not exist, do you mean, what is represented by the label does not exist, or that the label does not exist, or that the concept does not exist?

I can hardly understand any of these questions. Ask yourself what you're really talking about.

If there are no concepts, how do you know what is "yourself", what is "infinite", or even "dead"?

I don't know. Do you really know what "yourself" is referring to? Look "yourself" up in the dictionary, and you'll get probably 25 words to go along with it. Look those up. Continue doing this. Do you have any idea about what "infinite" means? What "dead" means?

I would say Weininger is alive to mean that the symbol is currently being used. If constructs do not exist, how do you manage to communicate?

If constructs do exist they must have been constructed, which means that they must be destructed in the future. Of course constructs exist. Their meanings are mostly illusory, though.

If "all of this is meaningless", why do you ask why i wouldn't want an ideal ego?

Why are you asking why I'm asking why you wouldn't want an ideal ego?
...?

Your words are not transparent to me.

What?

Why are you in this forum if you are not open to explore all the ideas expressed within it?

I've explored and returned home.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2350
(2/21/04 7:15 pm)
Reply

---

---

Voce Io

There is infinite because here is no end either.

Over there is where an answer for this you can find yourself.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2353
(2/21/04 10:55 pm)
Reply

--

---

is

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 715
(2/22/04 4:21 am)
Reply

Re: --

---

It makes you look stupid when you write cryptically.

suergaz Registered User Posts: 2356 (2/22/04 9:52 am) Reply	---- <hr/> Well I think it makes me look like yoda, but less green.
voce io Registered User Posts: 716 (2/22/04 11:11 am) Reply 	Re: ---- <hr/> True.
Kellyven Registered User Posts: 13 (2/24/04 3:14 pm) Reply	Re: ego <hr/> Quote: <hr/> People sometimes speak of the "field of awareness" which the observer observes. The self-construct, in turn, usually refers to an appearance which occurs within the field of awareness. <hr/> David, I would like to extend the observer-self construct into the WOTI section on "Other people's consciousness": You concluded there that other people's consciousness probably exists (in the same way that your own, or my own, probably exists), and accepted this uncertainty. Because you can never have the consciousness of other people to verify its existence, the closest proof of their consciousness seems not to depend mostly on those "physical manifestations" (i hear them speak, i see them with a "thoughtful look" on their face, etc.), but on the "field of awareness" construct... So why choose to accept the construct that they are probably conscious, rather than that they're not? I assume this is because of the same delusion that leads me to think "i am conscious": something i can never be sure of, because i can never know if the field of awareness exists in Reality. So, if i were to live "according to Nature", what impact would this have if i treated other people as if they also were truly aware? Probably, their appearance of enlightenment would be more coherent an event.

I do not inherently exist, but continue to operate according to the "whim of Nature". Thus, since "i know" i have no choice over the matter, i suppose this is the proof of your conclusion?

I think there must be some other motivation, but cannot bring the "henid" thought out more fully.

Kelly

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM
> GENIUS FORUM
> ego

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Kellyven Registered User Posts: 14 (2/24/04 3:23 pm) Reply	Re: ego <hr/> Quote: <hr/> There is one thing more perfect than perfection: more. <hr/> Suergaz, "more" is comparative, but "perfection" is superlative. So i agree the genius can be in a process of becoming perfect; this means again that until a genius is perfect, he is not an absolute genius. However, if an absolute perfect genius is less perfect than a "more" perfect genius, as you seem to suggest, this merely suggests that the absolute perfect genius is simply a less than more perfect genius. I can accept your claim to be a genius, but i cannot accept that you are an absolute genius, according to this logic rather than my experience. Of course, i don't _know_ either way. What do you think the ego is, if it is not a delusion? Kelly

Kellyven
Registered User
Posts: 15
(2/24/04 3:31 pm)
Reply

Re: ego

---

Quote:

---

I'm quite sure it's a load of shit, catapulted into your ear. Somehow, the shit seeped down and right now it's pouring out of your eyes, mouth, nostrils, and fingertips. It's stinky.

---

Voce,

If your words catapult into my ears creating a stinky mass, and i accept them to be truthful, i would be deluded. So if you can clearly explain your concepts, i may have a better chance of not misunderstanding you.

So would you go back to defining what your concept of ego is, please?

Quote:

---

I try to understand if what i think is the "intelligible ego" is that perceiver of thoughts - that David has just indicated is always there as self, but has no inherent importance.

---

Quote:

---

"You", an idea in your mind, tries to understand about some "intelligible ego", that is a perceiver of thoughts? Sounds messy.

---

Yes, it is messy, because i am still learning: a (very) green stinky mass could also be a just-picked bunch of young parsley.

The perceiver of thoughts (observer) perceives an appearance of itself, of other appearances of self (you, ego, etc.). It seems to be how it happens for me at the moment, soon it will be pared away.

Quote:

---

I've explored and returned home.

---

Does this mean you have finished exploring? Or that you have no home?

Kelly

voce io

Registered User

Posts: 732

(2/24/04 3:38 pm)

Reply

Re: ego

---

Kelly, your own words should teach you. Analyze your sentences to see if they make sense. I may be too confusing, making you think there is something you don't have and need to or something like that.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2391

(2/24/04 10:21 pm)

Reply

Re: ego

---

I've said it here so many times so many ways now, to say it to you as bluntly as possible, the ego is me.

Rhett Hamilton

Registered User

Posts: 288

(2/25/04 12:15 pm)

Reply

Re: ego

---

For those that have not noticed it already, and are interested in learning more about Kelly's thoughts, [s]he has posted an interesting article in the thread: "Woman, A Exposition for the Advanced Mind".

I just thought i'd mention it because the thread has remained unchanged for so long.

Rhett Hamilton

Kellyven
Registered User
Posts: 19
(2/26/04 11:39 am)
Reply

Re: consciousness

---

Emptiness:

When there is thinking without an appearance, that is no-mind thinking that is not aware of itself (or thinking that is not self-aware).

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2212
(2/26/04 12:26 pm)
Reply

Re: ego

---

Kelly wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: People sometimes speak of the "field of awareness" which the observer observes. The self-construct, in turn, usually refers to an appearance which occurs within the field of awareness.

K: David, I would like to extend the observer-self construct into the WOTI section on "Other people's consciousness":

You concluded there that other people's consciousness probably exists (in the same way that your own, or my own, probably exists), and accepted this uncertainty.

---

I definitely know that my own consciousness exists, since I experience it directly. But I can't be certain that other people are conscious. This is because I cannot rule out the possibility that other people's behaviour is being generated by unconscious processes. They could be part of a computer simulation program, for example, which is unfolding within my field of consciousness.

Quote:

---

Because you can never have the consciousness of other people to verify its existence, the closest proof of their consciousness seems not to depend mostly on those "physical manifestations" (i hear them speak, i see them with a "thoughtful look" on their face, etc.), but on the "field of awareness" construct... So why choose to accept the construct that they are probably conscious, rather than that they're not?

---

It just seems more natural to treat people as though they are conscious. I can see that they physically resemble me, and I already know that I am conscious, so it seems natural to conclude that they are conscious too.

Quote:

---

I assume this is because of the same delusion that leads me to think "i am conscious": something i can never be sure of, because i can never know if the field of awareness exists in Reality.

---

Since Reality is the totality of all there is, there is no question that your field of awareness exists in Reality. It is a direct manifestation of Reality, as all things are.

Quote:

---

So, if i were to live "according to Nature", what impact would this have if i treated other people as if they also were truly aware?

---

You would have problems in that your expectations of people behaving in an enlightened fashion would constantly be thwarted by their actual behaviour.

Quote:

---

I do not inherently exist, but continue to operate according to the "whim of Nature". Thus, since "i know" i have no choice over the matter, i suppose this is the proof of your conclusion?

---

When I observe other people behaving in unenlightened ways, I have no choice but to conclude that they are unenlightened.

Kellyven
Registered User
Posts: 20
(2/26/04 2:21 pm)
Reply

consciousness

---

I definitely know that my own consciousness exists, because i experience it directly.

You experience it directly from your construct of awareness. So when you say "i know i exist" are you actually saying "i know my consciousness is a delusion"?

If Descartes' "i think therefore i am" was really "i think i am therefore i am" then thinking the self is a delusion.

The ego delusion is attachment to the delusion of awareness - so stopping building must mean stopping attachment to delusion, rather than stopping thinking; "i think" is the delusion, thinking is not.

Is this making sense?

Kelly

Rairun
Registered User
Posts: 203
(2/26/04 2:41 pm)
Reply

...

---

That's why I disagree with QRS's position that emotions have to disappear in enlightenment. If I will to say "I saw a pink elephant flying today", is my speech (not its content, but the speech itself) false? I guess you can say it is, but then everything else is also false, including rational thoughts. I think will is a much more important thing to consider than the idea of concepts being true or false.

I wouldn't say "I think therefore I am". "I am thought therefore I am" is better.

Edited by: Rairun at: 2/26/04 2:42 pm

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2213

(2/26/04 7:41 pm)

Reply

Re: consciousness

---

Kelly wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: I definitely know that my own consciousness exists, because i experience it directly.

K: You experience it directly from your construct of awareness. So when you say "i know i exist" are you actually saying "i know my consciousness is a delusion"?

---

Let's get back to basics:

Consciousness is a necessary condition for any kind of experience, and so I can make the judgment that I am conscious purely from the fact that I'm having experiences. This is beyond dispute, because any attempt on my part to dispute it will always fall into the category of "an experience" and thus will always automatically affirm the reality that I am conscious.

This is different, however, from saying that "I know I exist". The existence of consciousness doesn't necessarily imply there is an "I". For it could easily be the case that my consciousness is the product of an I-less machine of some sort. I could be a machine that deludedly imagines that it is an "I".

Quote:

---

If Descartes' "i think therefore i am" was really "i think i am therefore i am" then thinking the self is a delusion.

---

Only if you imagine that this self inherently exists.

The self is like the lines of longitude and latitude - a useful abstraction as long as you don't fall into the delusion that it really exists in Nature.

Quote:

---

The ego delusion is attachment to the delusion of awareness - so stopping building must mean stopping attachment to delusion, rather than stopping thinking; "i think" is the delusion, thinking is not.

---

Or even more accurately, "thinking falsely" is the delusion. The person who correctly thinks that his "self" is nothing more than a useful concept - a sort of tool of convenience that pretends that the bundle of parts collectively known as "David Quinn", or "Kellyven", is a unified, indivisible whole for the sake of practical purposes - is not being deluded.

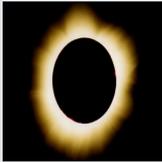

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2425

(2/27/04 12:45 am)

Reply

Re: consciousness

---

Again, your misunderstanding of the word 'inherently'

Kellyven and David Quinn are a unified indivisible whole for the sake of practical purposes? You mean like making babies?! (:D)

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2214

(2/27/04 8:31 am)

Reply

Re: consciousness

---

Suergaz wrote:

Quote:

---

Again, your misunderstanding of the word 'inherently'

---

In what way?

Quote:

---

Kellyven and David Quinn are a unified indivisible whole for the sake of practical purposes? You mean like making babies?! (:D)

---

I reckon the sooner you get married, the better. This constant obsession with weddings and marriage is eating into your brain, rendering it almost useless for any other task.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2427

(2/27/04 9:27 am)

Reply

---

---

I've explained this to you before, but here again:--When something inherently exists, it exists in itself as opposed to existing by itself alone. The self inherently exists. The famed 'thing in itself' isn't.

If you didn't mean the making of babies by practical purposes, your sentence makes no sense.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2217

(2/27/04 9:50 am)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Suergaz wrote:

Quote:

---

When something inherently exists, it exists in itself as opposed to existing by itself alone.

---

"Exists in itself". You mean, there are two of them, one existing inside the other?

Quote:

---

If you didn't mean the making of babies by practical purposes, your sentence makes no sense.

---

It's a mystery.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2431

(2/27/04 10:02 am)

Reply

----

---

Quote:

---

"Exists in itself". You mean, there are two of them, one existing inside the other?

---

No, you may look at it as meaning it exists for itself. But not alone.

Quote:

---

It's a mystery.

---

No, since mysteries make sense in the solving of them regardless of whether or not they can genuinely be solved. If you had said you and Kelly were unified and indivisible for practical purposes it would have made sense, but a whole?! Just you two?! What about the rest of us?! We want to be there at your ceremony!

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2219

(2/27/04 10:21 am)

Reply

Re: ----

---

Suergaz wrote:

Quote:

---

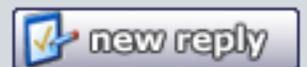

DQ: "Exists in itself". You mean, there are two of them, one existing inside the other?

S: No, you may look at it as meaning it exists for itself. But not alone.

---

You mean there are two of them, one of them existing "for" the other?

suergaz Registered User Posts: 2433 (2/27/04 10:24 am) Reply	--- <hr/> The number is irrelevant.
DavidQuinn000 Forum Host Posts: 2220 (2/27/04 1:47 pm) Reply 	Re: --- <hr/> It seems to be relevent to you because you keep using words like "for" or "in". These words would make no sense if there was only one of each thing.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2438 (2/27/04 1:53 pm) Reply	--- <hr/> It doesn't seem that way to anyone who understands the meaning of the word inherent. We were initially speaking of the selfs inherent existence (which you believe to be lacking).
DavidQuinn000 Forum Host Posts: 2221 (2/27/04 1:55 pm) Reply 	Re: --- <hr/> Okay, we are back where we started. How do you define inherent existence (this time, without invoking the idea of multiple objects)?

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> ego

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2440 (2/27/04 2:11 pm) Reply	--- <hr/> Firstly, I never involved what you call the idea of multiple objects in explaining the meaning of inherent existence. Secondly, I can't help but define inherent existence by existing. Your understanding of inherent existence is that of a thing existing by itself which is why you think, like others here, that nothing inherently exists.
DavidQuinn000 Forum Host Posts: 2222 (2/27/04 2:24 pm) Reply 	Re: --- <hr/> Suergaz wrote: Quote: <hr/> Firstly, I never involved what you call the idea of multiple objects in explaining the meaning of inherent existence. <hr/> It was the only way I could make sense of your phrase "existing in itself" Quote: <hr/> Secondly, I can't help but define inherent existence by existing. <hr/>

Do you mean that you have to exist first before you can define inherent existence?

Or do you mean that simply by existing you automatically define what inherent existence is?

Or do you mean that you have no choice but to define the phrase "inherent existence by existing"? If so, what is it?

Quote:

---

Your understanding of inherent existence is that of a thing existing by itself which is why you think, like others here, that nothing inherently exists.

---

I mean that a thing necessarily gains its existence from what is not it, just as a shadow necessarily gains its existence from the sun, and objects blocking the sun, and so on. The source of the shadows's existence comes not from its own self, but from somewhere else - namely, its causes.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2442

(2/27/04 3:08 pm)

Reply

---

---

Quote:

---

Do you mean that you have to exist first before you can define inherent existence?

Or do you mean that simply by existing you automatically define what inherent existence is?

Or do you mean that you have no choice but to define the phrase "inherent existence by existing"? If so, what is it?

---

The first two, not the last.

Quote:

---

I mean that a thing necessarily gains its existence from what is not it, just as a shadow necessarily gains its existence from the sun, and objects blocking the sun, and so on. The source of the shadows's existence comes not from its own self, but from somewhere else - namely, its causes.

---

This is precisely why you misunderstand the meaning of the word 'inherent'. Where do you think the universe gets its existence from if not itself? Surely not another 'uni-verse'?!

Everything that is is not in itself, nor for itself, nor for what it is not, or from what it is not!

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2223
(2/28/04 7:43 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Suergaz wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: Do you mean that you have to exist first before you can define inherent existence?

Or do you mean that simply by existing you automatically define what inherent existence is?

Or do you mean that you have no choice but to define the phrase "inherent existence by existing"? If so, what is it?

S: The first two, not the last.

---

What if you found out that your entire existence was nothing more than a mirage or a chimera created by a virtual reality machine - would you still regard yourself as inherently existing?

Quote:

---

DQ: I mean that a thing necessarily gains its existence from what is not it, just as a shadow necessarily gains its existence from the sun, and objects blocking the sun, and so on. The source of the shadows's existence comes not from its own self, but from somewhere else - namely, its causes.

S: This is precisely why you misunderstand the meaning of the word 'inherent'. Where do you think the universe gets its existence from if not itself? Surely not another 'uni-verse'?!

---

There is no universe! There are only things which draw their existence from other things, ad infinitum.

Quote:

---

Everything that is is not in itself, nor for itself, nor for what it is not, or from what it is not!

---

So you don't think you've come from your parents, or from Nature ....?

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 468
(2/28/04 7:46 am)
Reply

Quinn

---

David, you're the ego par excellence.
Thank you, but it was known to us already.
Well, at least to me.

Kellyven
Registered User
Posts: 22
(2/28/04 12:33 pm)
Reply

Re: consciousness

---

I understand now.
Enlightenment is awareness without delusion. "First the Kingdom of God, then thinking" means "emptiness and the non-existence inherent in everything FIRST" because otherwise, every thought will be considered to pertain to inherently existing things.
It does not mean, "stop thinking and stop reasoning": it means, "stop delusional thinking, and reason your way there".
So, the Infinite is boundless because true awareness perceives boundlessly: it makes no forms where forms do not exist.
If self is formed in the field of awareness, it is necessarily a construct. If consciousness...ditto. To say 'i am conscious' carries a delusion but it is also a basic ground for perception: only through consciousness does anything appear to be.

Causality as a universal principle applies to consciousness in this way: 'what' caused consciousness to arise cannot be captured as a construct in the mind. Causality nevertheless still applies. What exists outside consciousness cannot be perceived; if conceived of, it is necessarily within consciousness.

The causes for emptiness can be constructed as fullness: ie, 'of things'. But this does not mean emptiness is nothing, but rather, 'not of things'. To understand emptiness is to perceive it is 'not of things' - that emptiness can be perceived by human awareness only as a constructless construct - an 'a-construct'.

The dichotomy of male and female in relation to enlightenment is a simple construct of 'consciousness capable of perceiving "not of things"'. It is a causal construct referring to what gives rise to this capability; ultimately there is no male or female, but only emptiness. If a person perceives that fullness of things/constructs is a projection caused by belief in an inherently existing self, they have usually challenged their belief in their own self (body, representations, identity, ego). Such a person is outside a social norm, and is creating their own 'social norm' by re-constructing those projections in a subtractive and reductive manner.

Abstracting their perceptions in a rational, deductive and synthetic manner, they arrive at constructions of consciousness. Since the majority of women are constructing consciousness socially, not subtracting individually, they are less likely to be caused to approach consciousness so radically.

Even the most radical, subversive and socially abnormal women are constructing/creating consciousness - even if by deconstructing. Their motive is usually social and connective, because they are more or less gullible in the belief that there is right and wrong. Even women such as Anna Goldman accepted that there was a right and wrong: she did not create her own right and wrong, but by challenging wrong (social structures) that existed as accepted constructs, she remodelled the concept into a right (anarchy).

Emptiness necessitates a collapse of such constructs, and essentially a collapse of self.

Kelly

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2227
(2/28/04 12:50 pm)
Reply

Re: consciousness

---

Or more accurately, realizing emptiness means realizing there has never been a self in the first place. There is nothing to collapse.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2447
(2/28/04 1:46 pm)
Reply

---

---

David:

Quote:

---

What if you found out that your entire existence was nothing more than a mirage or a chimera created by a virtual reality machine - would you still regard yourself as inherently existing?

---

What if David, what if.

David:

Quote:

---

I mean that a thing necessarily gains its existence from what is not it, just as a shadow necessarily gains its existence from the sun, and objects blocking the sun, and so on. The source of the shadows's existence comes not from its own self, but from somewhere else - namely, its causes.

suergaz: This is precisely why you misunderstand the meaning of the word 'inherent'. Where do you think the universe gets its existence from if not itself? Surely not another 'uni-verse'?!

David: There is no universe! There are only things which draw their existence from other things, ad infinitum.

---

And you think this infinity of things is not also one thing?

Quote:

---

suergaz:--Everything that is is not in itself, nor for itself, nor for what it is not, or from what it is not!

David:--So you don't think you've come from your parents, or from Nature ....?

---

I said everything that is! I am not everything that is, only a part of it!

Quote:

---

David:--realizing emptiness means realizing there has never been a self in the first place. There is nothing to collapse

---

Your seeing yourself 'realising' emptiness proves the fullness of the collapse of your reason. Of what accord would a 'first place' of the self be to oneself?

Kellyven
Registered User
Posts: 26
(2/28/04 2:22 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

realising emptiness means realising there has never been a self in the first place.

---

Suergaz,
"seeing yourself realising emptiness" creates the construct of self. In other words, seeing a self creates fullness, realising emptiness sees no self.

The "oneself" you use constructs a self. As David says, there is no self in the first place.

Kelly

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2452
(2/28/04 2:25 pm)
Reply

----

---

What first place?! What is it exactly that does this constructing you're talking about?!

I wish there was someone who could outreason me sometimes!

Is everybody dying or something? (:D)

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2228
(2/28/04 4:01 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Suergaz wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: What if you found out that your entire existence was nothing more than a mirage or a chimera created by a virtual reality machine - would you still regard yourself as inherently existing?

S: What if David, what if.

---

Yes, what if. So how would you regard your existence in such a scenario?

Quote:

---

David: I mean that a thing necessarily gains its existence from what is not it, just as a shadow necessarily gains its existence from the sun, and objects blocking the sun, and so on. The source of the shadows's existence comes not from its own self, but from somewhere else - namely, its causes.

suergaz: This is precisely why you misunderstand the meaning of the word 'inherent'. Where do you think the universe gets its existence from if not itself? Surely not another 'uni-verse'?!

David: There is no universe! There are only things which draw their existence from other things, ad infinitum.

Suergaz: And you think this infinity of things is not also one thing?

---

No, it is neither one thing, nor a multiplicity of things.

Quote:

---

suergaz:--Everything that is is not in itself, nor for itself, nor for what it is not, or from what it is not!

David:--So you don't think you've come from your parents, or from Nature ....?

Suergaz: I said everything that is! I am not everything that is, only a part of it!

---

And your existence comes from the rest of Nature/everything, no? Just like a shadow?

Quote:

---

David:--realizing emptiness means realizing there has never been a self in the first place. There is nothing to collapse

Suergaz: Your seeing yourself 'realising' emptiness proves the fullness of the collapse of your reason. Of what accord would a 'first place' of the self be to oneself?

Kelly: The "oneself" you use constructs a self. As David says, there is no self in the first place.

Suergaz: What first place?!! What is it exactly that does this constructing you're talking about?!

---

The Infinite. Nature. The Tao.

You are Nature's little plaything, a flimsy piece of froth that could disappear at a moment's notice, never to be seen again.

N0X23

Registered User

Posts: 88

(2/28/04 4:08 pm)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Or more accurately, realizing emptiness means realizing there has never been a self in the first place. There is nothing to collapse.

---

David, is this belief the pinnacle of your claim to Enlightenment?

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2229

(2/28/04 4:43 pm)

Reply

Re: ---

---

A totally misguided question. My enlightenment is an endless, inexhaustible well of knowledge and insight. There is no pinnacle.

The answer I gave Kelly was a particular response to a particular set of ideas outlined in her post.

N0X23

Registered User

Posts: 90

(2/28/04 4:54 pm)

Reply

Re: ---

---

A totally misguided question. My enlightenment is an endless, inexhaustible well of knowledge and insight.

I'm sorry...Who's Enlightenment?

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2231

(2/29/04 7:32 am)

Reply

Re: ---

---

The body/brain organism known as "David Quinn", just as the body/brain organism known as "Buddha" was enlightened - i.e. free of delusion about the nature of existence.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2453

(2/29/04 12:54 pm)

Reply

---

---

Quote:

---

No, it is neither one thing, nor a multiplicity of things.

---

You are saying it is nothing? Then how can you be free of delusion about the nature of existence since by your reason you believe there is no existence and thus no nature?

An infinity of things is still a multiplicity of things, and a multiplicity of things is a thing.

Why is the organism called suergaz, which you've called a flimsy piece of froth, a much better, ie. more human, and more interesting organism than David Quinn?

Edited by: suergaz at: 2/29/04 1:08 pm

Kellyven
Registered User
Posts: 27
(2/29/04 2:06 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

You are saying it is nothing?

---

The Infinite is not nothing. "Nothing" is actually a thing. Rather, the Infinite is not any thing in particular; if it were a thing it would be finite.

The nature of existence is to exist. To be deluded about the nature of existence would be to say things don't exist, but David is not saying that. He is saying that things don't inherently exist. This is emptiness.

David Quinn is ultimately also a "flimsy piece of froth", just as i am, just as you are. "Human" is a form that doesn't exist inherently, so to be "more human" doesn't really make any sense. So you are more egotistical than David Quinn, because you think you inherently exist.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2457
(2/29/04 2:14 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

The Infinite is not nothing.

---

We agree.

Quote:

---

"Nothing" is actually a thing.

---

We disagree. Nothing is no thing.

Quote:

---

Rather, the Infinite is not any thing in particular; if it were a thing it would be finite.

---

Only by a finite definition of a thing.

Quote:

---

The nature of existence is to exist. To be deluded about the nature of existence would be to say things don't exist, but David is not saying that. He is saying that things don't inherently exist. This is emptiness.

David Quinn is ultimately also a "flimsy piece of froth", just as i am, just as you are. "Human" is a form that doesn't exist inherently, so to be "more human" doesn't really make any sense. So you are more egotistical than David Quinn, because you think you inherently exist.

---

You haven't yet understood the meaning of the word 'inherent' either. I think you can though!

The nature of existence is existence, not 'to exist'.

A human that more closely resembles him/herself than another can be said to be more human.

Edited by: suergaz at: 2/29/04 2:33 pm

Kellyven
Registered User
Posts: 28
(2/29/04 2:37 pm)
Reply

Re: ego

---

Have you read WOTI, particularly the last chapter on emptiness?

Building with constructs and divisions can be useful in identifying where we have falsely created them. So, if "Nothing" is a concept you have in the mind, it is a construct, and is therefore a thing. Actually, this is the only place the construct exists. "Nothing", apart from its construction in the mind, has no other existence. Therefore "Nothing" does not inherently exist (apart from its appearance in the mind - which is real nevertheless).

Similarly, even the Infinite does not inherently exist, apart from its appearance in the mind.

By saying something "inherently exists", it must have absolute and uncausal existence, that is, it would have no relationship to anything else. Since this cannot apply to anything, therefore nothing has inherent existence.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2458
(2/29/04 2:52 pm)
Reply

Re: ego

---

Quote:

---

Have you read WOTI, particularly the last chapter on emptiness?

---

I have not read 'wisdom of the infinite' by David Quinn.

Quote:

---

So, if "Nothing" is a concept you have in the mind, it is a construct, and is therefore a thing.

---

This sentence does not make sense. Nothing is not a concept.

Quote:

---

Actually, this is the only place the construct exists. "Nothing", apart from its construction in the mind, has no other existence. Therefore "Nothing" does not inherently exist (apart from its appearance in the mind - which is real nevertheless).

---

I know this way of speaking of "nothing" Kelly. I've done it myself, and it really only removes oneself from everything.

Quote:

---

Similarly, even the Infinite does not inherently exist, apart from its appearance in the mind.

---

This is distinctly Rhettian! It is related to that strange and childish view of the universe as a conscious entity!

Quote:

---

By saying something "inherently exists", it must have absolute and uncausal existence, that is, it would have no relationship to anything else. Since this cannot apply to anything, therefore nothing has inherent existence.

---

(:D) Not at all! To say something inherently exists, it need only exist! Nothing has no relationship to anything else! I know it must be a bit uncomfortable to you that I am a year younger than you but have thought a bit further! (:D)

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM
> GENIUS FORUM
> ego

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Kellyven Posts: 29 (2/29/04 4:14 pm) Reply	Re: ego <hr/> Suergaz, What do you have to lose by reading David's Wisdom of the Infinite? You will certainly not lose your mind. Kelly
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2461 (2/29/04 4:20 pm) Reply 	Re: ego <hr/> David Quinn:-- Quote: <hr/> What if you found out that your entire existence was nothing more than a mirage or a chimera created by a virtual reality machine - would you still regard yourself as inherently existing? <hr/> I refer you to a childrens book:--- Quote: <hr/>

Here she checked herself in some alarm, at hearing something that sounded to her like the puffing of a large steam-engine in the wood near them, though she feared it was more likely to be a wild beast. "Are there any lions or tigers about here?" she asked timidly.

"It's only the Red King snoring," said Tweedledee.

"Come and look at him!" the brothers cried, and they each took one of Alice's hands, and led her up to where the King was sleeping.

"Isn't he a lovely sight?" said Tweedledum.

Alice couldn't say honestly that he was. He had a tall red night-cap on, with a tassel, and he was lying crumpled up into a sort of untidy heap, and snoring loud--"fit to snore his head off!" as Tweedledum remarked.

"I'm afraid he'll catch cold with lying on the damp grass," said Alice, who was a very thoughtful little girl.

"He's dreaming now," said Tweedledee: "and what do you think he's dreaming about?"

Alice said, "Nobody can guess that."

"Why, about you!" Tweedledee exclaimed, clapping his hands triumphantly. "And if he left off dreaming about you, where do you suppose you'd be?"

"Where I am now, of course," said Alice.

"Not you!" Tweedledee retorted contemptuously. "You'd be nowhere. Why, you're only a sort of thing in his dream!"

"If that there King was to wake," added Tweedledum, "you'd go out--bang!--just like a candle!"

"I shouldn't!" Alice exclaimed indignantly. "Besides, if I'm only a sort of thing in his dream, what are you, I should like to know?"

"Ditto," said Tweedledum.

"Ditto, ditto!" cried Tweedledee.

He shouted this so loud that Alice couldn't help saying, "Hush! You'll be waking him, I'm afraid, if you make so much noise."

"Well, it's no use your talking about waking him," said Tweedledum, "when you're only one of the things in his dream. You know very well you're not real."

"I am real!" said Alice, and began to cry.

"You won't make yourself a bit realer by crying," Tweedledee remarked: "there's nothing to cry about."

"If I wasn't real," Alice said--half-laughing through her tears, it all seemed so ridiculous-- "I shouldn't be able to cry."

"I hope you don't suppose those are real tears?" Tweedledum interrupted in a tone of great contempt.

"I know they're talking nonsense," Alice thought to herself: "and it's foolish to cry about it." So she brushed away her tears, and went on as cheerfully as she could, "At any rate I'd better be getting out of the wood, for really it's coming on very dark. Do you think it's going to rain?"

Tweedledum spread a large umbrella over himself and his brother, and looked up into it. "No, I don't think it is," he said: "at least--not under here. Nohow."

"But it may rain outside?"

"It may--if it chooses," said Tweedledee: "we've no objection. Contrariwise."

"Selfish things!" thought Alice, and she was just going to say "Good-night" and leave them, when Tweedledum sprang out from under the umbrella, and seized her by the wrist.

"Do you see that?" he said in a voice choking with passion, and his eyes grew large and yellow all in a moment, as he pointed with a trembling finger at a small white thing lying under the tree.

"It's only a rattle," Alice said, after a careful examination of the little white thing. "Not a rattle-snake, you know," she added hastily, thinking that he was frightened: "only an old rattle-- quite old and broken."

"I knew it was!" cried Tweedledum, beginning to stamp about wildly and tear his hair. "It's spoilt, of course!" Here he looked at Tweedledee, who immediately sat down on the ground, and tried to hide himself under the umbrella.

Alice laid her hand upon his arm, and said in a soothing tone, "You needn't be so angry about an old rattle."

"But it isn't old!" Tweedledum cried, in a greater fury than ever. "It's new, I tell you--I bought it yesterday--my nice NEW RATTLE!" and his voice rose to a perfect scream.

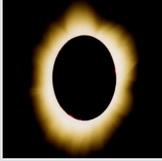

All this time Tweedledee was trying his best to fold up the umbrella, with himself in it: which was such an extraordinary thing to do, that it quite took off Alice's attention from the angry brother. But he couldn't quite succeed, and it ended in his rolling over, bundled up in the umbrella, with only his head out: and there he lay, opening and shutting his mouth and his large eyes--"looking more like a fish than anything else," Alice thought.

"Of course you agree to have a battle?" Tweedledum said in a calmer tone.

"I suppose so," the other sulkily replied, as he crawled out of the umbrella: "only she must help us to dress up, you know."

---

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2462
(2/29/04 4:56 pm)
Reply

Re: ego

---

Quote:

---

Suergaz,

What do you have to lose by reading David's Wisdom of the Infinite? You will certainly not lose your mind.

Kelly

---

My patience. Isn't it enough that I let him play in my forum?

silentsal
Registered User
Posts: 70
(2/29/04 5:55 pm)
Reply

Re: ego

---

I don't think no-thing is a concept, I do think that thought creates fullness, and this is why no-thing is not a concept.

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 767
(2/29/04 6:54 pm)
Reply

Re: ego

---

Jesus!

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2463
(2/29/04 11:17 pm)
Reply

-----

---

Edited by: suergaz at: 2/29/04 11:26 pm

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 1032
(3/1/04 6:55 am)
Reply

Ego+

---

A man without ego is completely controlled by his passions and thus completely controlled by the feminine. The ego is needed as a neutral point for the contrasts of the emotions.
The Genius has a developed ego.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 315
(3/1/04 8:52 am)
Reply

Re: ego

---

Quote:

---

I don't think no-thing is a concept, I do think that thought creates fullness, and this is why no-thing is not a concept.

---

"No-thing" is definitely a concept, otherwise you couldn't communicate it to us through the use of language.

Where else do you experience "no-thing", other than as a thought?

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2236
(3/1/04 9:42 am)
Reply

Re: ego

---

Suergaz wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: [Reality] is neither one thing, nor a multiplicity of things.

S: You are saying it is nothing?

---

No.

Quote:

---

Then how can you be free of delusion about the nature of existence since by your reason you believe there is no existence and thus no nature?

---

Gosh, I dunno. It's a mystery.

Quote:

---

Why is the organism called suergaz, which you've called a flimsy piece of froth, a much better, ie. more human, and more interesting organism than David Quinn?

---

Why is the body/brain organism known as Suergaz such a preening git all the time?

Quote:

---

DQ: What if you found out that your entire existence was nothing more than a mirage or a chimera created by a virtual reality machine - would you still regard yourself as inherently existing?

S: I refer you to a childrens book:---

---

Pah! Kid's stuff. And it doesn't even deal with the topic.

I ask you again: What if you found out that your entire existence was nothing more than a mirage or a chimera created by a virtual reality machine - would you still regard yourself as inherently existing?

Quote:

---

Kelly: Actually, this is the only place the construct exists. "Nothing", apart from its construction in the mind, has no other existence. Therefore "Nothing" does not inherently exist (apart from its appearance in the mind - which is real nevertheless).

S: I know this way of speaking of "nothing" Kelly. I've done it myself, and it really only removes oneself from everything.

---

Given your shallow understanding of these matters, I am not surprised by this.

Kellyven
Posts: 30
(3/1/04 12:19 pm)
Reply

Re: ego

---

Quote:

---

(:D) Not at all! To say something inherently exists, it need only exist! Nothing has no relationship to anything else!

---

Create patience, go have a look at WOTI. As i found it easier to read a printed copy, i have a word document version that you may find useful (compressed editing to save printing costs).

Regarding "the non-inherent existence in everything", this is my reasoning, using the Latin "inhaerere" as a basis for understanding the phrase:

Something has an inherent characteristic when the character is existing in it (ie the predicate exists by nature of the subject existing). Something is inherent by nature of its being in something else, therefore its existence is inherent by nature of its existing in something else (also existing).

To say that my body inherently exists means that my body has a reality because of the reality of not-body.

(1) This sentence is internally logical, but it is not Truthful, because it is based on a false construct. "My body" is an arbitrary idea, and has no Reality, because it is based on the appearance of "my body". If differently perceived, "my body" will present a different appearance (e.g. x-ray, nitrogenic analysis, foreshortening, etc.). Which appearance is correct?

(2) This sentence depends on "not-body" having an inherent Reality - meaning not-body must exist in something else (also existing). If this something else is not-not-body, it must logically be "body".

Therefore, the argument of inherent existence is circular and unreliable. Existence is arbitrated on appearances, which are finite and fleeting: sure this is existence, but it is not inherent existence.

No thing has inherent existence, that is, all things are inherently non-existence. This is not to say that "nothing" has inherent existence, for nothing is also a thing, it is defined as the absence of things. For it to be truly empty of things (including a definition) it would be "emptiness" - or even better, the Hidden Void (cannot be known to be thing or not-thing).

A second proof (if necessary):

For non-existence of everything to be inherent, its non-existence must exist in something - that is, in existence existing. Since by the above proof (that is, existence's existence is only inherent in non-existence) the argument is circular and unreliable, it is impossible to posit inherent existence. BUT, it is possible to posit inherent non-existence:

Since existence is what can be conceived of intellectually, but can never itself exist part from mental conceptions, therefore everything (all conceptions) has its existence only as mental conceptions. Thus, everything (all conceptions) is "inherently" existing in the mind of constructions, or the Construction (meaning all possible appearances to all minds in all times for all worlds - ie the Totality of what can be conceived of intellectually), which is "inherently" existing in Ultimate Reality.

But since Ultimate Reality does not inherently exist (that is to say, exist as something in something else, unless as a construct in the field of awareness), therefore no constructs or conceptions can be said to inherently exist, because ultimately, the idea of inherent existence is illogical. In conclusion, it is only possible to conceive of inherent non-existence: that no things (concepts or constructs) have inherent existence.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2465
(3/1/04 12:30 pm)
Reply

----

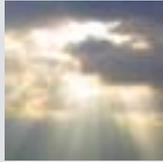

There's not a chance that I'll be reading Davids book unless I become a vegetable and it is read to me.

Kelly, you exist in the universe, your existence is inherent.

Kellyven
Posts: 31
(3/1/04 12:37 pm)
Reply

Re: ----

And the universe (Ultimate Reality) exists in?

Paul Registered User Posts: 476 (3/1/04 12:56 pm) Reply	Re: ---- <hr/> Still not in you, Kellyven.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2466 (3/1/04 1:42 pm) Reply	---- <hr/> The universe exists. We, and everything we perceive in it, has inherent existence. We do not know what the universe exists in other than itself since we are not the universe (Like poor Rhett seems to think). In other words, we do not know nothing. We cannot know nothing. Naturally we can deduce nothing, but this means nothing. The prejudices of metaphysicians are always beneath me. Essentially there is no antithesis of value.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2471 (3/1/04 10:42 pm) Reply	---- <hr/> (This left blank was message) Edited by: suergaz at: 3/1/04 10:46 pm
MGregory Posts: 453 (3/2/04 3:01 am) Reply 	Re: ego <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Kelly: Something is inherent by nature of its being in something else, therefore its existence is inherent by nature of its existing in something else (also existing). <hr/> Actually, something would inherently exist if it could exist without being in something else, that is, in and of itself.

silentsal

Registered User
Posts: 71
(3/2/04 5:52 am)
Reply

Re: ego

---

Quote:

---

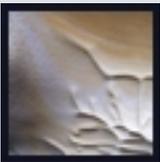

"No-thing" is definitely a concept, otherwise you couldn't communicate it to us through the use of language.

---

it may not merely be a concept, the collapse of self is a collapse of concept of self, nature still exists consciousness does not collapse, that we are unable to collapse the concept of nothing because we can only approach it as a concept does not mean that it is necessarily limited by our limitations. That we accept this unchanging truth of nature that neither lives nor dies with me as unknowable may be our only wisdom

Rhett Hamilton

Registered User
Posts: 326
(3/2/04 11:00 am)
Reply

Re: ego

---

Quote:

---

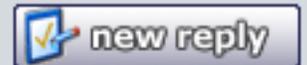

it may not merely be a concept, the collapse of self is a collapse of concept of self, nature still exists consciousness does not collapse, that we are unable to collapse the concept of nothing because we can only approach it as a concept does not mean that it is necessarily limited by our limitations. That we accept this unchanging truth of nature that neither lives nor dies with me as unknowable may be our only wisdom

---

Since nature is inherently individuated, inherent existence is fundamentally impossible. "Things" and "no-things" simply cannot be inherently existent.

Thus, "nothing" is just a notion or category that we occasionally experience, it has no truth beyond that.

suergaz Registered User Posts: 2474 (3/2/04 11:47 am) Reply	--- <hr/> 'individed' Rhett? Look at you all speaking about nothing like it was something! Matt, you're wrong.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2476 (3/2/04 12:44 pm) Reply	--- <hr/> And right.

Email This To a Friend

Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

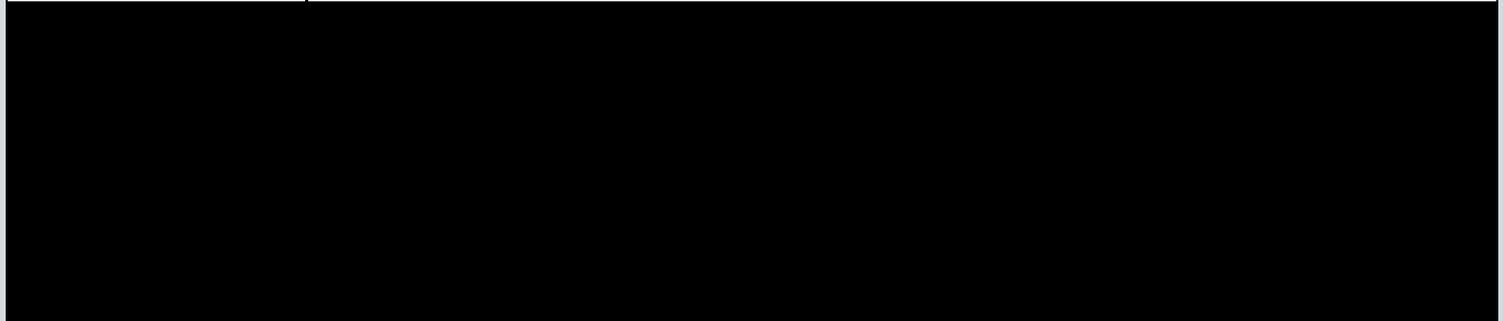

> ego

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Kellyven Posts: 35 (3/2/04 3:23 pm) Reply	ego <hr/> Suergaz,  You seem to be saying, "I am not the universe, therefore i inherently exist". True?  With consciousness, appearances to mind occur. By appearances, a dualistic mind arises, creating a self, and creating a universe. Even if a universe were you, you would still think you inherently exist -- 'inside' yourself.  "If only you will avoid concepts of existence and non-existence in regard to absolutely everything, you will then perceive the Dharma."
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2492 (3/2/04 9:07 pm) Reply	--- <hr/> If you were still a christian you'd be trying to save me.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 835
(3/2/04 11:13 pm)
Reply

Re: ego

Kellyven:

Create patience, go have a look at WOTI. As i found it easier to read a printed copy, i have a word document version that you may find useful (compressed editing to save printing costs).

Regarding "the non-inherent existence in everything", this is my reasoning, using the Latin "inhaerere" as a basis for understanding the phrase:

Something has an inherent characteristic when the character is existing in it (ie the predicate exists by nature of the subject existing). Something is inherent by nature of its being in something else, therefore its existence is inherent by nature of its existing in something else (also existing).

To say that my body inherently exists means that my body has a reality because of the reality of not-body.

(1) This sentence is internally logical, but it is not Truthful, because it is based on a false construct. "My body" is an arbitrary idea, and has no Reality, because it is based on the appearance of "my body". If differently perceived, "my body" will present a different appearance (e.g. x-ray, nitrogenic analysis, foreshortening, etc.). Which appearance is correct?

(2) This sentence depends on "not-body" having an inherent Reality - meaning not-body must exist in something else (also existing). If this something else is not-not-body, it must logically be "body".

Therefore, the argument of inherent existence is circular and unreliable. Existence is arbitrated on appearances, which are finite and fleeting: sure this is existence, but it is not inherent existence.

No thing has inherent existence, that is, all things are inherently non-existence. This is not to say that "nothing" has inherent existence, for nothing is also a thing, it is defined as the absence of things. For it to be truly empty of things (including a definition) it would be "emptiness" - or even better, the Hidden Void (cannot be known to be thing or not-thing).

A second proof (if necessary):

For non-existence of everything to be inherent, its non-existence must exist in something - that is, in existence existing. Since by the above proof (that is, existence's existence is only inherent in non-existence) the argument is circular and unreliable, it is impossible to posit inherent existence. BUT, it is possible to posit inherent non-existence:

Since existence is what can be conceived of intellectually, but can never itself exist part from mental conceptions, therefore everything (all conceptions) has its existence only as mental conceptions. Thus, everything (all conceptions) is "inherently" existing in the mind of constructions, or the Construction (meaning all possible appearances to all minds in all times for all worlds - ie the Totality of what can be conceived of intellectually), which is "inherently" existing in Ultimate Reality.

But since Ultimate Reality does not inherently exist (that is to say, exist as something in something else, unless as a construct in the field of awareness), therefore no constructs or conceptions can be said to inherently exist, because ultimately, the idea of inherent existence is illogical. In conclusion, it is only possible to conceive of inherent non-existence: that no things (concepts or constructs) have inherent existence.

Wow.

I have rarely seen so much incoherent drivel.

If that should be the consequence of reading WOTI (charming name by the way), then throw the book away and run!

Thomas

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2249

(3/3/04 10:37 am)

Reply

Re: ego

---

Oh, don't be like that, Thomas. I reckon you should, in the interests of helping Kelley, give a detailed blow-by blow account of where she is going wrong. Simply dismissing her post wholesale won't benefit her very much. You're a compassionate man, I'm sure .....

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 837
(3/3/04 1:17 pm)
Reply

Re: ego

---

Well, I should perhaps apologize for using the attribute 'incoherent drivell'. I am aware that this sort of criticism is quite pointless and counterproductive. It was a spontaneous reaction to perceived incoherencies, of which there are too many to list. Here are just a few: The definition of 'inherent existence' is not to the point, the 'reality of not-body' is a non-sequitur, the explanations in (1) and (2) thoroughly confuses the noumenon-phenomenon distinction, and the concepts of nothing, void, and emptiness are all muddled up.

Then again, language is a multi-purpose tool. Its function is not only to communicate truths. In this case, it simply signals Kellyven's internal confused flow of ideas, presumably the result of reading WOTI.

Thomas

Kellyven
Posts: 39
(3/3/04 2:24 pm)
Reply

Re: ego

---

Quote:

---

The definition of 'inherent existence' is not to the point, the 'reality of not-body' is a non-sequitur, the explanations in (1) and (2) thoroughly confuses the noumenon-phenomenon distinction, and the concepts of nothing, void, and emptiness are all muddled up.

---

Thomas,

Clearly and truthfully defining "inherent existence" is the point. How would you define it?

The "non-sequitur" was indicated as proof that the argument for the inherent existence of everything was illogical (according to the definition i used), being "circular".

Please indicate what the noumenon-phenomenon distinction is. Perhaps the noumenon is the agent of the "synthesis of intuition" (awareness) and the phenomenon the intuitions or synthetic representations (constructs)? (Kant's Selbstsetzungslehre)

What is your conception of emptiness, void and nothing?

Thomas Knierim

Registered User

Posts: 838

(3/3/04 3:54 pm)

Reply

Re: ego

---

(1) inherent existence

The ontological concept of uncaused, uncompounded, permanent, absolute being. The opposite of sunyata. Non-phenomenal being; essence.

(2) noumenon-phenomenon distinction

It's an important ontological concept. The noumenon-phenomenon distinction goes back to Kant and his critique of the British empiricists. Kant also calls noumenon a thing-in-itself, and a phenomenon a thing. The distinction also appears in ancient Western and Eastern philosophy, although the terms noumenon and phenomenon are not usually used in the ancient context. Aristotle, for example, speaks of act and potency. The distinction is crucial for analyzing language and meaning.

(2a) phenomenon

That which is apprehended by the senses and the mind. We readily identify phenomena and give names to them.

(2b) noumenon

According to Kant, the noumenon is the unknowable rational object that results in phenomena when it comes into contact with mind. Itself is independent of mind. Later philosophers have challenged the unintelligibility of noumena.

(3) emptiness/sunyata

The Indian concept of emptiness (sunyata) is slightly different from the standard dictionary meaning of emptiness. It means 'pregnant void', whereas the word 'pregnant' refers to potentiality of being, not essence of being. It specifically denies ontological essence and inherent existence. For example, the number zero is the sum of any positive/negative number pair (1,-1), (2,-2), etc. of equal cardinality. Thus it can be seen as the fulcrum of all numbers. According to this point of view, all numbers potentially 'reside in zero'. Analogously, phenomenal existence is an expression of potentiality and is fundamentally empty.

(4) void

The concept of the void is the Greek counterpiece to sunyata, and it constitutes pretty much its antithesis. It has been extensively discussed by the Prescratics; in fact the concept of the void sort of baffled them. The Greek meaning of "void" is closer to the common meaning of the English word emptiness, i.e. lack of substance, absence, hollowness, containing nothing. The Greeks were essentially geometers and they had no conception of zero, because the 'void' cannot be measured.

(5) nothingness

The word nothingness is more ambiguous, since no relation to historically defined ideas exists as in the case of 'void' and 'sunyata'. So, it can mean nonexistence, emptiness, or it can have any intermediate meaning between the concepts outlined earlier.

Thomas

MGregory

Posts: 473

(3/3/04 5:13 pm)

Reply

Re: ego

---

Quote:

---

(3) emptiness/sunyata

The Indian concept of emptiness (sunyata) is slightly different from the standard dictionary meaning of emptiness. It means 'pregnant void', whereas the word 'pregnant' refers to potentiality of being, not essence of being. It specifically denies ontological essence and inherent existence. For example, the number zero is the sum of any positive/negative number pair (1,-1), (2,-2), etc. of equal cardinality. Thus it can be seen as the fulcrum of all numbers. According to this point of view, all numbers potentially 'reside in zero'. Analogously, phenomenal existence is an expression of potentiality and is fundamentally empty.

---

You seem to be implying that the number zero has some sort of absolute reality, when in fact it is just an arbitrary number that you have chosen. In truth, any number is the sum of any pair of numbers that happen to be the sum of that number. Your choice of equal numbers in the pairs that are summed is arbitrary.

Thomas Knierim Registered User Posts: 840 (3/3/04 5:40 pm) Reply 	Re: ego <hr/> I think you are overlooking the fact that only zero provides symmetry. Hence 'fulcrum', hence not arbitrary. Thomas
MGregory Posts: 474 (3/3/04 7:30 pm) Reply	Re: ego <hr/> So what is the fulcrum of, say, an apple?
Kellyven Posts: 42 (3/4/04 6:53 pm) Reply	Re: ego <hr/> Thomas, Ok, you define inherent existence as absolute, uncaused, permanent. No dependence on something else already existing. Let's take the sun as an example. Does it inherently exist? It exists as a concept, as appearances to an observer. But which is the perfect appearance? Is it all possible appearances together perceived by one almighty observer? Is it the massive burning object in the universe, that we call "sun"? But how do we know that it is really this massive burning object, that it is really "in the universe"? The boundaries are arbitrary; because we perceive constants does not mean those constants are inherently existing. What does "existence" mean? Existence, reality, essence, being - what are these? They refer to something conceptual - an absolute quality, a thing. Existence is necessarily bound up with the object-subject relationship, a "thing condition" that is imposed by. Existence is arbitrated by consciousness. For some thing to inherently exist means that there is an absolute, uncaused concept that has no ontological dependence on anything else; that is it has stringent definitive boundaries. But ultimately, the undeniable relationship to a causer of the definition breaks down the notion of definitive boundaries, since the thing will necessarily be _defined by_.

Thus "inherent existence" means existing in consciousness - and is therefore not absolute and uncaused. So all things that can be conceived of are by nature lacking in inherent existence.

Thus noumena have inherent existence, but only because they cannot be conceived of.

Take as a more challenging example, consciousness. Is consciousness inherently existing? That is, what is the absolute, uncaused consciousness? What are its boundaries? At this stage, consciousness is defining consciousness - the causer of the definition is the definition itself.

Because a thing can only have inherent existence if it is not dependent for its reality on an observer, to say consciousness has inherent existence is to make consciousness independent of itself. Consciousness _is_ therefore inherently existing, (i) because consciousness is dependent only on itself for its existence (for all we know), and (ii) because it cannot be conceived of.

And yet, although consciousness cannot derive its causes, nor for the same reason define itself as absolute, it may be that consciousness is not inherently existing, but rather dependent on an unknown "observer" for its inherent existence. Who can know?

At any rate, no thing that can appear to mind has inherent existence.

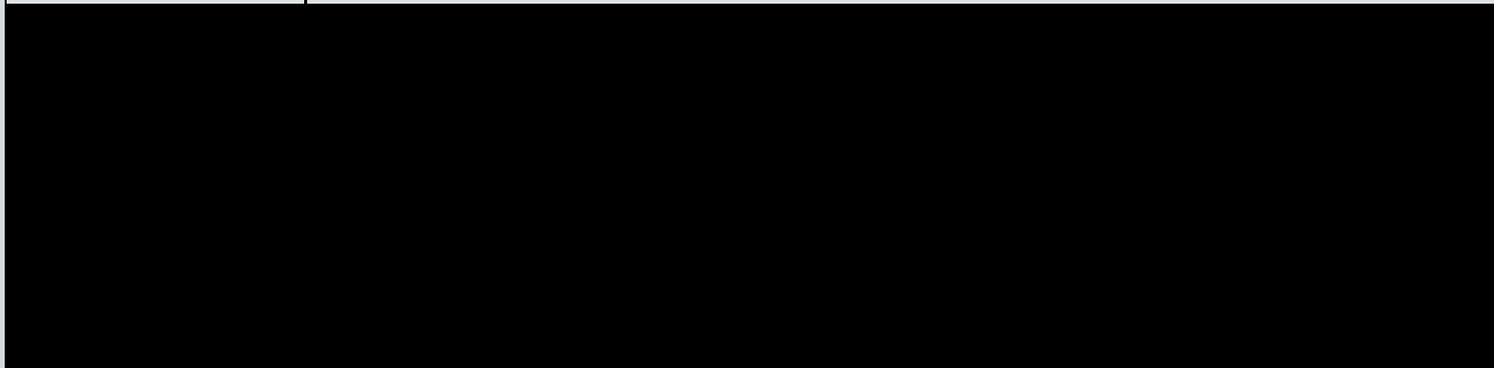

A noumenon, ding-an-sich, can never be known in itself, e.g. the perfect form of the sun, or the perfect form of consciousness; only their experiential forms can be apprehended as phenomena (appearances). I haven't read Prolegomena but expect i will eventually. I think i covered the distinction above, since all phenomena are perceived as appearances, and noumenal constructs conceived and perceived as appearances.

Since all things (phenomena) have inherent non-existence, and it cannot be known if noumena inherently exist, the Ultimate Reality is emptiness or formlessness (no single appearance).

I don't know much about the usage of "sunyata", but an emptiness with potential for fullness (such as zero) would seem to present a form, e.g. "chora". I think Socrates discussed this in Timaeus.

Similarly, the emptiness you describe as "absence", "containing nothing", "lacking substance" is not formless. Nor is "nothing" formless. These are not emptiness, since they present appearances/forms that can be grasped conceptually.

suergaz Registered User Posts: 2518 (3/5/04 12:05 am) Reply	--- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> These are not emptiness, since they present appearances/forms that can be grasped conceptually. <hr/> For instance?
Kellyven Posts: 46 (3/5/04 1:15 pm) Reply	ego <hr/> From your posts on "Emptiness" in the forum archives, Thomas, you have already concluded the non-inherent existence in everything, including self and the universe. Could you indicate then what you found incoherent in my reasoning for non-inherent existence? Suergaz, The concepts of absence, lacking in essence, etc. are negatives - thus they are concepts of forms.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 2525 (3/5/04 1:19 pm) Reply	--- <hr/> forms such as..?!

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 846
(3/5/04 5:29 pm)
Reply

Re: ego

---

Kelly: From your posts on "Emptiness" in the forum archives, Thomas, you have already concluded the non-inherent existence in everything, including self and the universe.

Kelly, the denial of inherent existence (of either particulars or universals) does itself not imply anything. Nothing follows from it, except perhaps that the appearance or Gestalt (that which we can identify) caused by phenomena cannot be used to construct ideals ala Plato. We are dealing with ontology here mainly for historical reasons, since it used to play an important role in ancient metaphysics, but ultimately the entire field of metaphysics is not considered a worthy field of study anymore. It has always been chiefly a playground for pointless speculations, dubitable proofs, and word games. Contemporary philosophy, in particular the analytic philosophy of the 20th century, has made this exceedingly obvious. It is only QRS who state otherwise and continue engaging word games while completely ignoring the last century of philosophical achievements.

Kelly: Could you indicate then what you found incoherent in my reasoning for non-inherent existence?

Are you kidding? We have just been through that. Your last post was more coherent than the previous one, but it did introduce some new fallacies. In particular I fail to see any logical support for your conclusion "Thus inherent existence means existing in consciousness - and is therefore not absolute and uncaused. So all things that can be conceived of are by nature lacking in inherent existence." You argue ex nihilo. What concerns the rejection of inherent existence, this theme has been played many times here. It's an ancient studies classic and it has been expressed IMV most beautifully in the Prajana Paramita. What more is there to say?

Thomas

Edited by: Thomas Knierim at: 3/5/04 5:36 pm

Owen1234

Registered User

Posts: 24

(3/5/04 10:12 pm)

Reply

Re: ego

---

Kelly:

What does "existence" mean?

imo, there are two senses of existence.

1. Logical existence, eg. sets, points, numbers, etc... things for which we have at least one confirmed 'logical' truth, directly about it.

eg.  $1+1=2 \rightarrow E!(2)$ .  $Necessary(1+1=2) \rightarrow Necessary(Exists\ 2)$ . Therefore,  $Necessary(Exists\ 2)$ .

2. Factual existence, eg. self, individual physical objects, the sun, the universe, etc... things for which we have at least one confirmed 'factual' truth, directly about it.

eg. The sun is red, implies, the sun exists.

In general, that which exists is that for which we have a confirmed truth.

$E!x$  defined  $EF(Fx)$ .

ie.  $x$  exists, means, there is a property that  $x$  has.

If we can affirm that  $x$  has some property, then,  $x$  exists!

$(x\ thinks)\ therefore\ (x\ exists)$ , is tautologous for all  $x$ .

Owen

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1450

(3/6/04 12:50 am)

Reply

Re: ego

---

Thomas, how can the study of the nature of being become obsolete? What do you think are the main achievements of 20th century philosophy?

Owen, I think there is a difference between existing, and inherently existing. Although even here I am not sure, since the arguments of me and others on the point of things being only "an appearance" has never been resolved that I could see.

Owen1234

Registered User

Posts: 25

(3/6/04 2:55 am)

Reply

Re: ego

---

birdofhermes:

Owen, I think there is a difference between existing, and inherently existing. Although even here I am not sure, since the arguments of me and others on the point of things being only "an appearance" has never been resolved that I could see.

I agree with you, in that there is a difference between existence and necessary existence.

My post was addressing Kelly's question, "What does "existence" mean?"

Inherent-existence, I interpret as necessary existence.

In the case of logical objects (truth, sets, numbers, etc.), existence and necessary-existence are not different.

Because logical truth and necessary truth are the same there.

In the case of empirical objects, physical necessity is granted to a factual truth when it is confirmed that the facts are the case. It is contradictory to say (x exists) is logically necessary, if x names a physical object.

Physical necessity is not a common notion within symbolic logic.

How would you define empirical necessity?

Owen

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1452

(3/6/04 8:29 am)

Reply

Re: ego

---

Owen, you're adorable. I never understand anything you say. You hover about, until the chance arrives to toss in some mathematical notation sentences. I'd really like to have you at a party. What are you like with a few beers inside?

Quote:

---

In the case of empirical objects, physical necessity is granted to a factual truth when it is confirmed that the facts are the case. It is contradictory to say (x exists) is logically necessary, if x names a physical object.

---

I don't get that first sentence. It appears that overall you are saying that physical objects are not logically necessary, in the way a concept such as  $1 + 1 = 2$  is logically existent and necessary. On the other hand, you seem to also be saying that once a particular physical object has been examined and confirmed, then it indeed exists. However, you say, that existing object is not logically necessary.

Quote:

---

Physical necessity is not a common notion within symbolic logic.

How would you define empirical necessity?

---

The entire train of thought about things being noninherent is one that has not yielded to me a great deal of profound reward. As for its profundity philosophically, I suppose it should point to the lack of a personal soul. However, I believe we don't know enough about this. Empirical necessity could only refer to something which cannot "not" exist, i.e., MUST exist. That would be God, Life, or whatever you want to call it. I tend to think that at the root of all we see is such a something. The question we care about is, how does that relate to us?

My intuition tells me that it can be a cheap little insight about how all the many manifestations are really just an empty kaleidoscopic whim of nature. I say they are and yet they aren't. By little insight, I mean one should not stop there. All these manifestations are the arena of life, love, consciousness and evolution. The one and the many play off each other. The eternal and the mortal require each other. Evolution, personal development, and the magnificence of the human being, are too amazing for me to think that something of a lasting nature is not being formed. I think our souls are being formed as we live life. A lifetime is very limited in scope and cannot accomplish much.

It is very hard to distinguish soul from ego.

I think there is something purposeful going on in regard to our individuality and consciousness, and Consciousness.

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1652
(3/6/04 1:11 pm)
Reply

Re: ego

To argue for more than one "sense" of existence is absurd. A thing either is or isn't. It may have different properties (i.e. be empirical or abstract) but that's about it.

If something presents an appearance to mind, it exists.

Dan Rowden

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

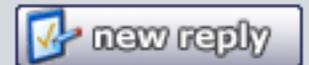

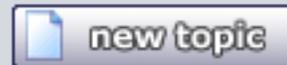

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> ego

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Owen1234 Registered User Posts: 26 (3/6/04 8:33 pm) Reply	Re: ego <hr/> Owen, you're adorable. I never understand anything you say. You hover about, until the chance arrives to toss in some mathematical notation sentences. I'd really like to have you at a party. What are you like with a few beers inside? Hahaha.. Perhaps, a few beers at a party would simplify and clarify our misunderstandings. Owen: In the case of empirical objects, physical necessity is granted to a factual truth when it is confimed that the facts are the case. It is contradictory to say (x exists) is logically necessary, if x names a physical object. biroflames: I don't get that first sentence. It appears that overall you are saying that physical objects are not logically neccessary, in the way a concept such as <math>1+1=2</math> is logically existent and necessary. On the other hand, you seem to also be saying that once a particular physical object has been examined and confirmed, then it indeed exists. However, you say, that existing object is not logically necessary. (birdofhermes exists) is true, but, Necessarily(birdofhermes exists) is false. All statements that are factually true are not necessarily true. The factual truth that (birdofhermes posts here) implies that (birdofhermes exists).

It is necessarily true that (birdofhermes exists), is a contradiction.

A logically necessary truth is deduced by the logical system in use.

$1+1=2$  is a logically necessary truth. It is proven within logic.
( $1+1=2$ ) implies (2 exists), and, necessary( $1+1=2$ ) implies necessary(2 exists).

Is that more understandable?

I hope that I am still 'adorable', even without the beers.

Owen: Physical necessity is not a common notion within symbolic logic.
How would you define empirical necessity?

birdofhermes: Empirical necessity could only refer to something which cannot "not" exist, i.e., MUST exist.

Yes, but the MUST is a physical need and not a logical need.

Owen: In the case of empirical objects, physical necessity is granted to a factual truth when and where it is confirmed that the facts are the case.

biroflames: I don't get that first sentence.

Perhaps this will help explain...

If 'My car is blue' has been physically verified, at some particular time and place, then 'My car' cannot "not" exist!

But, Necessarily(My car is blue), is false. Necessarily(My car exists) is false.
They are empirically necessary and they are not logically necessary.

Owen

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 849
(3/6/04 9:06 pm)
Reply

Re: ego

---

Thomas, how can the study of the nature of being become obsolete? What do you think are the main achievements of 20th century philosophy?

Maybe I didn't express myself clearly enough. Not the study of nature is obsolete, but the study of metaphysics, ontology in particular. In my view, the main achievements of 20th century philosophy were made in the fields of linguistic and logic, in particular by Russell, Whitehead, Gödel, Wittgenstein and others. The workings of language were finally understood and systematized. This is a huge step forward. The "other" big movement was existentialism, but I don't really know much about it. There were some also-runs; objectivism, logical positivism, but I guess the really important stuff took place at the beginning of the century.

Thomas

Owen1234
Registered User
Posts: 27
(3/6/04 9:28 pm)
Reply

Re: ego

---

Thomas: Not the study of nature is obsolete, but the study of metaphysics, ontology in particular. In my view, the main achievements of 20th century philosophy were made in the fields of linguistic and logic, in particular by Russell, Whitehead, Gödel, Wittgenstein and others.

I agree that the metaphysical nonsense of Gods, souls, the trinity, etc., ie. sprirtual things in general has been avoided by these authors.

"What we cannot speak about we 'must' pass over in silence." Wittgenstein, Trctatus 7.

Owen

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2541
(3/7/04 12:56 am)
Reply

--

---

My kind speak diferently! We 'must' pass over from laughter at those who feel need to establish logic in language of all things!

'The fields'

Man are we in the mountains!

suergaz Registered User Posts: 2542 (3/7/04 12:58 am) Reply	--- <hr/> What is my kind?!!! I know I have one, it just isn't...around right now! We abandon maths too as metaphysics, in music!
Owen1234 Registered User Posts: 28 (3/7/04 3:14 am) Reply	Re: --- <hr/> suergaz: My kind speak diferently! We 'must' pass over from laughter at those who feel need to establish logic in language of all things! Where else, other than language, can logic be?
birdofhermes Registered User Posts: 1455 (3/7/04 4:26 am) Reply	ego <hr/> Quote: <hr/> I hope that I am still 'adorable', even without the beers. <hr/> Yes, you are still adorable, but you have pronounced yourself a fool, with this: Quote: <hr/> I agree that the metaphysical nonsense of Gods, souls, ... spritual things in general <hr/> But don't worry, you are in good company. However, this: Quote: <hr/> birdofhermes: Empirical necessity could only refer to something which cannot "not" exist, i.e., MUST exist. Yes, but the MUST is a physical need and not a logical need. appears illogical. How could there be something that must of necessity exist, pysicaly, and yet it is not logically necessary for it to exist? If it MUST exist, logic cannot be apart from that.

---

Owen1234
Registered User
Posts: 29
(3/7/04 6:02 am)
Reply

Re: ego

---

birdofhermes,

Owen: I hope that I am still 'adorable', even without the beers.

Yes, you are still adorable, but you have pronounced yourself a fool, with this:

Owen: I agree that the metaphysical nonsense of Gods, souls, ... sprirtual things in general

Now we have a problem. It is not 'adorable' to call me a fool. Please present some sort of reasoning that allows you to insult me!!

birdofhermes,

But don't worry, you are in good company. However, this:

Are you also calling everyone else here a fool?

birdofhermes: Empirical necessity could only refer to something which cannot "not" exist, i.e., MUST exist.

Owen: Yes, but the MUST is a physical need and not a logical need.

birdofhermes: appears illogical. How could there be something that must of necessity exist, pysicaly, and yet it is not logically necessary for it to exist? If it MUST exist, logic cannot be apart from that.

In spite of your bad manners, I will continue.

Physical necessity is different from logical necessity.

You equivocate these terms.

As I have said before, logical necessity occurs when the concerned proposition is shown deducible.

Transient occurrences are not deducible.

Propositions which are functions of time and place, are not logically necessary.

Certainty applied to empirical occurrences, is decided by the correspondence of name and named.

Owen

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2543

(3/7/04 11:10 am)

Reply

----

Owen---

Quote:

Where else, other than language, can logic be?

That was my point.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1456

(3/7/04 12:45 pm)

Reply

Re: ego

Quote:

Now we have a problem. It is not 'adorable' to call me a fool. Please present some sort of reasoning that allows you to insult me!!

First, I never claimed to be adorable, that is you. Second, I find people who self-righteously assert that, for a recent example, modern biology has disproved metaphysics, to be foolish. However, I did not mean to speak in a harsh way. It was meant lightheartedly.

Quote:

---

Are you also calling everyone else here a fool?

---

Not everyone!

Quote:

---

Physical necessity is different from logical necessity.

---

We may not be talking of the same thing. You asked my opinion of empirical necessity, in relation to the idea of inherent existence. My supposition is that underlying the reality we see, is something that does inherently exist, and that it must therefore have the attribute of necessary existence. And if that be the case, then it would also be logically necessary for it to exist. So I am not talking about a transient occurrence.

Quote:

---

Certainty applied to empirical occurrences, is decided by the correspondence of name and named.

---

Something like  $A=A$ ?

Kellyven
Posts: 48
(3/7/04 1:30 pm)
Reply

Re: ego

---

Quote:

---

Kelly, the denial of inherent existence (of either particulars or universals) does itself not imply anything. Nothing follows from it, except perhaps that the appearance or Gestalt (that which we can identify) caused by phenomena cannot be used to construct ideals a la Plato.

---

Thomas,

Appearances are not caused by phenomena. Phenomena are constructed from appearances. Phenomena have no inherent existence. But an appearance (construct) that recognises all appearances lack Reality is itself True. The apparent paradox is resolved by understanding that all constructs lack Reality, even those that contain Truth.

This is because consciousness that puts boundaries has difficulties comprehending boundlessness.

Going back to sunyata: i think my understanding of emptiness is not perfect yet. Certainly emptiness is not conceptualised with one appearance, in one form, but as 'not of forms' (even as 'the one formlessness'). As such it could very well be a pregnant void, that of the formless realms.

If you could actually understand what 'shunyata' refers to, you would not call it a word game. It is actually so funny as to only be laughter, yet it is not mere play and 'academic pedantry'.

I am not dealing with a worthless field of study; no one who treats this as a mere game, a divertimento, makes any progress. If you could comprehend that there is a Reality, beyond consciousness (for what else could Nirvana be, if it is the direct experience of Reality?) - you would know it the only worthwhile study.

It may seem to you that i argue out of nothing - following a classic pattern - but that is because you are attached to the existence of yourself as you are. Therefore words have no real meaning to you.

I cannot help you.

Kellyven
Posts: 49
(3/7/04 1:45 pm)
Reply

Re: ego

---

Owen,

If you duplicate 1, you get 2. Where did 1 come from? What is the difference between something and nothing?

The difference between something and nothing means that a discriminator has occurred: not that something and nothing exist. How does the discriminator arise?

Where does awareness come from? Awareness creating a self creates existence and non-existence.

There is no 'what' but the word 'what' (or thing, etc.). When there is no what, no boundaries, then there are no things.

Thus there is "no change, no movement, no time, no purpose".

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 850
(3/7/04 6:22 pm)
Reply

Re: ego

---

Anna: First, I never claimed to be adorable, that is you. Second, I find people who self-righteously assert that, for a recent example, modern biology has disproved metaphysics, to be foolish.

That brings us back to the biology debate. I don't think that evolution theory has disproved metaphysics, or rather metaphysical explanations of our being here, but it has made metaphysical speculations about these matters obsolete. You can still assume intelligent design while being logically consistent, even consistent with evolution theory, but what does it add to the theory? Intelligent design is unnecessary for evolution to take place, hence redundancy, hence Occam's razor. What place do you see for metaphysics today? In particular, what place in biology?

Thomas

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 851
(3/7/04 6:29 pm)
Reply

Re: ego

---

Kelly: Appearances are not caused by phenomena. Phenomena are constructed from appearances.

You see, this is how the use of language leads to endless confusion. There is actually no difference between appearances and phenomena; the two words are synonymous. The misunderstanding here results from my using the word 'appearances' as meaning 'qualia' or 'percepts'. The separation between qualia and phenomena is wholly artificial. Are you familiar with the epistemology of Aquinas? He addressed this point in great detail.

Kelly: If you could actually understand what 'shunyata' refers to, you would not call it a word game.

Well, it depends. Ultimately shunyata is itself empty, which means it is basically a word game, but one cannot understand this prior to understanding emptiness itself. So the shunyata concept has indeed some value. Science offers alternative methods to arrive at the same insight (that of emptiness), but I can't think of anything that speaks against the classical shunyata approach.

Kelly: I am not dealing with a worthless field of study; no one who treats this as a mere game, a divertimento, makes any progress.

This is what you believe, but how do you know? It seems that you have just begun to explore this territory. At this time you cannot be certain about its worth. If Ultimate Reality seems promising, then by all means, dive into it. I could tell you that it is a grand illusion, but it won't matter to you. Anyway, the study of illusions is worthwhile in itself, provided that it leads to the uncovering of the same.

Kelly: ...but that is because you are attached to the existence of yourself as you are. Therefore words have no real meaning to you.

My existence and attachments have no relation to what ontology is all about. The field exerts a certain fascination which I don't deny, but its relevance is mainly historical.

Your objections contain many non-sequiturs, again in your last sentence. I can't help noticing a lack of logical composition. Of course, a greater degree of coherence would allow you to cut through word games much faster, and it would be greatest value in dealing with metaphysics.

Thomas

Owen1234

Registered User

Posts: 30

(3/8/04 7:02 am)

Reply

Re: ego

---

Owen: Physical necessity is different from logical necessity.

birdofhermes:

We may not be talking of the same thing. You asked my opinion of empirical necessity, in relation to the idea of inherent existence. My supposition is that underlying the reality we see, is something that does inherently exist, and that it must therefore have the attribute of necessary existence. And if that be the case, then it would also be logically necessary for it to exist.

So I am not talking about a transient occurrence.

It is clearly not the case that physical objects necessarily exist.

The 'necessity' that we mean here is logical necessity.

Owen: Certainty applied to empirical occurrences, is decided by the correspondence of name and named.

birdofhermes: Something like  $A=A$ ?

No,  $A=A$  is not decided by any amount of correspondence.

There is no occurrence, no situation, that shows that  $A=A$  is true.

$A=A$  is not a factual truth, it is a logical truth, a tautology.

$A=A$  is logically true, in virtue of the definition of identity....even if A represents a physical object.

$A=A$  means: Any statement about A is true, if and only if, that same statement about A is true.

The symbolic representation is much clearer to me.

$A=A$  means:  $F(A)$  iff  $F(A)$ , for all predicates F.

This expression is tautologous.

That which is empirically necessary, is not tautologous.

There is no logical necessity for any physical object(s) to exist!

We assume that the objects of our immediate perception do exist with physical necessity, because it is convenient to do so.

Owen

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1458

(3/8/04 1:31 pm)

Reply

Re: ego

---

Quote:

---

That brings us back to the biology debate.

---

I have not forgotten the evolution debate. It is simply that lately a number of irregular things have come up, and I need a bit of space to concentrate upon that question. It will come back to haunt you!

Quote:

---

I don't think that evolution theory has disproved metaphysics, or rather metaphysical explanations of our being here, but it has made metaphysical speculations about these matters obsolete.

---

Come again? (What?) How is that sentence coherent? Actually, I am not sure how this relates to biology.

Quote:

---

You can still assume intelligent design while being logically consistent, even consistent with evolution theory, but what does it add to the theory?

---

I have no theory of ID or what-have-you, but I'll tell you what it would add - it would answer at least the "how did life begin" question.

Quote:

---

Intelligent design is unnecessary for evolution to take place, hence redundancy, hence Occam's razor.

---

Oh Thomas!! I'm glad you're raring at the bit. If ID were unnecessary to evolution, then the debate would have been won, the origin of life explained, the birth of new species explained, the several other problems with evolution theory would have been explained. Occam's razor indeed! Evolution theory is quite cumbersome.

Quote:

---

What place do you see for metaphysics today? In particular, what place in biology?

---

In biology, the question that concerns me is what life is. Also, the question would be, how does metaphysical reality intersperse with what we call physical reality. I don't see any difference, any clear demarcation. I see metaphysics and ontology as more or less the same. Obviously, such questions are of the first importance, at least to me.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1459

(3/8/04 1:44 pm)

Reply

Re: ego

---

Quote:

---

It is clearly not the case that physical objects necessarily exist.

---

We are not talking of the same thing, and you seem not to have really read what I wrote. I suspect that is because you had no intention of discussing anything more basic than physical objects. When I speak of something that must exist, I am speaking of something like a first cause.

How do you think matter got here?

---

Quote:

---

No,  $A=A$  is not decided by any amount of correspondence.

---

Well, I thought that was perhaps your definition. My own understanding of  $A=A$  is that the thing is equal to itself, not its name.

---

Quote:

---

There is no occurrence, no situation, that shows that  $A=A$  is true.

---

You are very cryptic. I still want to take you out drinking.

---

Quote:

---

$A=A$  means: Any statement about  $A$  is true, if and only if, that same statement about  $A$  is true.

---

Again, I leave out the predicates. I'm not talking of statements about A, just that it is what it is. But then, perhaps the predicates are necessary, so as to describe the electrons, protons and neutrons. And how can a thing not be itself?

Quote:

---

There is no logical necessity for any physical object(s) to exist!

---

Perhaps not, but I never was discussing this or that physical object.

MGregory

Posts: 493

(3/8/04 2:20 pm)

Reply

Re: ego

Quote:

---

Thomas: That brings us back to the biology debate. I don't think that evolution theory has disproved metaphysics, or rather metaphysical explanations of our being here, but it has made metaphysical speculations about these matters obsolete. You can still assume intelligent design while being logically consistent, even consistent with evolution theory, but what does it add to the theory? Intelligent design is unnecessary for evolution to take place, hence redundancy, hence Occam's razor. What place do you see for metaphysics today? In particular, what place in biology?

---

Thomas, please! You are inadvertently making an attempt to sabotage my great revival of metaphysics! I must insist that you refrain from referring to intelligent design as metaphysics. That is empty-headed mysticism.

Anna, they have already started making advances towards creating reproducing single-celled organisms in the laboratory, so the question of the origin of life isn't that big of a deal. They merely have to figure out how it could occur in nature, which shouldn't be too far off.

http://www.usatoday.com/news/science/2003-11-13-new-life-usat\_x.htm

Owen1234

Registered User

Posts: 31

(3/8/04 5:44 pm)

Reply

Re: ego

---

Owen: It is clearly not the case that physical objects necessarily exist.

birdofhermes:

We are not talking of the same thing, and you seem not to have really read what I wrote. I suspect that is because you had no intention of discussing anything more basic than physical objects. When I speak of something that must exist, I am speaking of something like a first cause.

How do you think matter got here?

imo,

The belief that every effect has a cause, is not verifiable, it only has 'presumed' truth.

That there is a first cause, is not knowable...it does not compute.

We assume that matter exists, in order to get on with the concerns of understanding.

There is no need to assume that the universe had a beginning at all. We can simply assume that it always was.

Within our intuitive understanding of the world, we have many beliefs, which cannot be confirmed.

Owen: No,  $A=A$  is not decided by any amount of correspondence.

birdofhermes: Well, I thought that was perhaps your definition. My own understanding of  $A=A$  is that the thing is equal to itself, not its name.

A thing cannot be equal to its name.

$A=A$  has meaning only if A refers to some existent object.

$A=A$  means that the object named by A is self-identical.

"A" = "A" means that the name A is self-identical.

Owen: There is no occurrence, no situation, that shows that  $A=A$  is true.

birdofhermes: You are very cryptic. I still want to take you out drinking.

I am not trying to be cryptic, and I would enjoy a few beers with you at any time.

Quote:

-----
A=A means: Any statement about A is true, if and only if, that same statement about A is true.
-----

birdofhermes: Again, I leave out the predicates. I'm not talking of statements about A, just that it is what it is. But then, perhaps the predicates are necessary, so as to describe the electrons, protons and neutrons. And how can a thing not be itself?

The reference to predications is indeed required for an understanding of identity, independent of physics.

That it is what it is, only has sense when there is something existent that we are referring to.

birdofhermes: And how can a thing not be itself?

If a thing can be shown to not exist, then it is not self-identical either.

Vulcan = Vulcan, is false.

(where Vulcan is the presumed planet hypothesized by Newtonian physics to explain the unusual orbit of Mercury)

(The present king of France)=(the present king of France), is false.
(because there is 'no' king of France at the present time).

You are correct in that there are no objects, concrete or abstract, that do not exist. But, there are things (described objects) that do not exist.

Examples of abstract described objects which do not exist:

that which is not equal to itself, the whole number between 2 and 3, the class of those classes that are not members of themselves, the barber who shaves all and only those that do not shave themselves, etc. etc.

In general those objects derived from contradictory predications do not exist.

Owen

Edited by: Owen1234 at: 3/8/04 5:58 pm

Owen1234
Registered User
Posts: 32
(3/8/04 6:17 pm)
Reply

Re: ego

Kelly:

If you duplicate 1, you get 2. Where did 1 come from? What is the difference between something and nothing?

1 is defined in logic as the class of unit classes.

The difference between something and nothing is existence!

Nothing exist, is contradictory.

Something exists is tautologous.

Nothing exists means: It is not the case that something exists.

There is no object that is equal to 'nothing'.

'Nothing' is not an object at all, it does not refer.

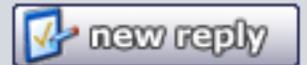

Kelly: The difference between something and nothing means that a discriminator has occurred: not that something and nothing exist. How does the discriminator arise?

What is a discriminator?

Owen

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM
> GENIUS FORUM
> ego

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Thomas Knierim Registered User Posts: 857 (3/8/04 6:22 pm) Reply 	Re: ego <hr/> MGregory: Thomas, please! You are inadvertently making an attempt to sabotage my great revival of metaphysics! I must insist that you refrain from referring to intelligent design as metaphysics. That is empty-headed mysticism. As a 21st century denizen that is easy for you to say. For a long time, however, intelligent design was considered a credible theory, even in post Darwin times and even today (see "Icons of Evolution" thread). Thomas
Kellyven Posts: 52 (3/9/04 11:23 am) Reply	Re: ego <hr/> Thomas, Thanks for posting the definition of emptiness as shunyata, ie zero, fulcrum. It makes a lot more sense now. Quote: <hr/> Kelly: I am not dealing with a worthless field of study; no one who treats this as a mere game, a divertimento, makes any progress. <hr/>

Quote:

---

This is what you believe, but how do you know? It seems that you have just begun to explore this territory. At this time you cannot be certain about its worth. If Ultimate Reality seems promising, then by all means, dive into it. I could tell you that it is a grand illusion, but it won't matter to you. Anyway, the study of illusions is worthwhile in itself, provided that it leads to the uncovering of the same.

---

Yes, i have just begun exploring this territory. It is amazing how fast one progresses, when one focusses. It hinges on the "principle of Nature" - causality. I entirely lack certainty of the worth of Truth, simply because i have only just begun and have not had direct experience of Ultimate Truth. Using words to explain it to you seems fruitless.

As long as the dualistic mind continues, delusion continues, because going into affirmation or denial continues in construction.

Any position of for/against, thing/not thing, illusion/reality creates duality - even if there is no self/object dichotomy.

David speaks about "Nature's perfection". This is your shunyata (zero): middle path, non-action, constancy.

To be in Nature means recognising the infinite of the pregnant void is the condition of the 'unborn mind'; to recognise one is already perfect is no longer to need to create constructs/make problems.

This does not mean not-thinking. It simply means that all thoughts can be seen as behaving according to this principle of causality, and the more one strives to make any thoughts a stable ground (to rely on a construct of zero), the further one gets from realising Ultimate Reality.

Quote:

---

Kelly: ...but that is because you are attached to the existence of yourself as you are. Therefore words have no real meaning to you.

---

Quote:

---

Your objections contain many non-sequiturs, again in your last sentence. I can't help noticing a lack of logical composition.

---

My apologies, Thomas. My realisations in the last few days have exhausted me (putting in great effort to realise no effort was needed!), and i am responding fairly automatically. Words can be extremely powerful tools, but nothing i fashion for you would suit what you're used to.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2265

(3/9/04 10:45 pm)

Reply

Re: ego

---

Thomas wrote:

Quote:

---

Bird: Thomas, how can the study of the nature of being become obsolete? What do you think are the main achievements of 20th century philosophy?

Thomas: Maybe I didn't express myself clearly enough. Not the study of nature is obsolete, but the study of metaphysics, ontology in particular. In my view, the main achievements of 20th century philosophy were made in the fields of linguistic and logic, in particular by Russell, Whitehead, Gödel, Wittgenstein and others.

---

In your view ....? I don't think so. You are simply regurgitating the standard view expressed in encyclopedias.

Quote:

---

The workings of language were finally understood and systematized. This is a huge step forward. The "other" big movement was existentialism, but I don't really know much about it.

---

I'm not surprised. Existentialism takes one outside the academic realm to a degree and has a closer connection to Reality. It is dangerous. It lacks the safety and order and "second-handedness" of standard academic thought. It is consistent with your character that you have avoided it.

Quote:

---

There were some also-runs; objectivism, logical positivism, but I guess the really important stuff took place at the beginning of the century.

---

What a fairy-tale you are living in. In truth, "really important stuff" happens every time a person engages in genuine thought - which can happen at any moment and at any place.

Far more important stuff has happened on this forum in the last six months than the entire 20th century of academic thought put together.

Quote:

---

Kelly, the denial of inherent existence (of either particulars or universals) does itself not imply anything. Nothing follows from it, except perhaps that the appearance or Gestalt (that which we can identify) caused by phenomena cannot be used to construct ideals ala Plato.

---

Your fear of Reality is blinding you. The "denial" of inherent existence has enormous implications which can never be underestimated. Everything of spiritual and philosophical importance stems from it.

Quote:

---

We are dealing with ontology here mainly for historical reasons, since it used to play an important role in ancient metaphysics, but ultimately the entire field of metaphysics is not considered a worthy field of study anymore. It has always been chiefly a playground for pointless speculations, dubitable proofs, and word games. Contemporary philosophy, in particular the analytic philosophy of the 20th century, has made this exceedingly obvious.

---

Again, your fear of Reality is making you very ignorant. You are blind to the fact that 20th century analytical movement has had no impact at all upon the metaphysical thinking of Buddhas. You are simply regurgitating the foolish opinions of other intellectuals who fear Reality as much as you do.

Quote:

---

It is only QRS who state otherwise and continue engaging word games while completely ignoring the last century of philosophical achievements.

---

As far as wisdom has been concerned, there have been no philosophical achievements last century of any note.

Plenty of shallow distractions, yes.

Quote:

---

Ultimately shunyata is itself empty, which means it is basically a word game, but one cannot understand this prior to understanding emptiness itself. So the shunyata concept has indeed some value.

---

This is complete rubbish. The only way one could conceive of shunyata as being just a word game is by not having any comprehension or awareness of the Great Reality to which the label "shunyata" points.

Quote:

---

Science offers alternative methods to arrive at the same insight (that of emptiness), but I can't think of anything that speaks against the classical shunyata approach.

---

Science does not offer alternative methods of arriving at the same insight into emptiness. This is a complete misunderstanding based on a very shallow understanding of shunyata. The "classic shunyata approach" (that of comprehending emptiness metaphysically/logically) is the only possible approach.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1458
(3/10/04 12:18 am)
Reply

Re: ego

---

Quote:

---

The "denial" of inherent existence has enormous implications which can never be underestimated. Everything of spiritual and philosophical importance stems from it.

---

What are they?

silentsal
Registered User
Posts: 78
(3/10/04 4:31 am)
Reply

Re: ego

---

all must be laid down, to let go of everything one must realize there is nothing to grasp anyhow my head hurts from thinking too much, for I am a craftsman at heart yet t'is my own shit I feed upon until I lose the taste for it; lest I bury myself in it's stinking pile through my own ignorance

Edited by: silentsal at: 3/10/04 4:38 am

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1459

(3/11/04 12:00 pm)

Reply

Re: ego

---

Quote:

---

There is no need to assume that the universe had a beginning at all. We can simply assume that it always was.

---

OK

Quote:

---

A=A means that the object named by A is self-identical. There is no occurrence, no situation, that shows that A=A is true.

---

Are you saying things cannot be proved to be self-identical?

Thomas Knierim

Registered User

Posts: 868

(3/11/04 2:19 pm)

Reply

Re: ego

---

David: You are simply regurgitating the standard view expressed in encyclopedias.

Encyclopedias are usually not that judgmental, David. They would not cite a single branch of philosophy or a few philosophers as being the 'most important' of the 20th century, as I did. The named philosophers are simply my personal preference. What are your 20th century favorites?

David: It is dangerous. It lacks the safety and order and "second-handedness" of standard academic thought. It is consistent with your character that you have avoided it.

It seems you want to imply that I am in the habit of avoiding challenges. Well, I had my challenges, believe me. I emigrated to Asia, started three companies, went bankrupt, became succesful, went bankrupt again, became succesful again. I travel a lot, explored mountains, rivers, jungles, I saw poverty, civil war, hurricanes, and floods, went through injury and sickness.

What is the most dangerous thing that you ever did? Reading Nietzsche on the dole?

David: The "denial" of inherent existence has enormous implications which can never be underestimated. Everything of spiritual and philosophical importance stems from it.

I meant that logically nothing follows from it, not existentially. It is existentially important, because it dispels illusion.

David: You are blind to the fact that 20th century analytical movement has had no impact at all upon the metaphysical thinking of Buddhas.

Then I presume you that you either don't know what the analytical movement is about or that you haven't read or understood the finer tones of the sutras. Otherwise, it would be apparent to you that the sutras have an intuitive (analytical) understanding of how the nature of clinging and grasping is connected to the nature of language.

David: This is complete rubbish. The only way one could conceive of shunyata as being just a word game is by not having any comprehension or awareness of the Great Reality to which the label "shunyata" points.

This comment only shows how attached you are to the 'sunyata' concept. Concepts and ideas are themselves also empty. It seems that you somehow want to exclude your pet concepts, determinism, causality, identity, sunyata from emptiness, and pretend that they possess reality, or as you say: ultimate reality. That is a mistake. These ideas are just as empty and compounded as anything else.

David: Science does not offer alternative methods of arriving at the same insight into emptiness.

It does if you understand science deeply enough (which you don't).

Thomas

Owen1234

Registered User

Posts: 33

(3/11/04 8:05 pm)

Reply

Re: ego

---

Owen: There is no need to assume that the universe had a beginning at all. We can simply assume that it always was.

OK

Owen:  $A=A$  means that the object named by  $A$  is self-identical. There is no occurrence, no situation, that shows that  $A=A$  is true.

birdofhermes: Are you saying things cannot be proved to be self-identical?

Of course not, but, self identities cannot have empirical proofs. There is no scientific method that could prove  $A=A$ .

$A=A$  is either logically true or it is logically false.
 $A=A$  is not factually true nor factually false, at all.

In classical logic:

If  $x$  has all of the properties that  $y$  has, then,  $x=y$ .

If  $x=y$ , then,  $x$  has all the properties that  $y$  has.

$x=y$ , if and only if,  $x$  has all of the properties that  $y$  has.

Two different objects cannot be equal. (for concrete or for abstract objects)

All existent objects are unique. No two of which ..are identical.

It is important to only permit existent values of  $A$  in  $A=A$ .
(an ontological commitment of our variables is essential for understanding).

If  $A$  does not exist, then  $A=A$  is false.

$x=x \leftrightarrow x$  exists, for all  $x$ 's, ..is a theorem of classical logic.

Owen

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1459

(3/13/04 6:52 am)

Reply

Re: ego

---

Quote:

---

birdofhermes: Are you saying things cannot be proved to be self-identical?

Owen: Of course not, but, self identities cannot have empirical proofs. There is no scientific method that could prove  $A=A$ .

Owen:  $A=A$  is either logically true or it is logically false.  $A=A$  is not factually true nor factually false, at all.

---

Alright, we know that things are self-identical via logic. However, if that is logically so, then it must also be factually so, regardless of whether a scientific method can prove it.

The question I have, perhaps for QRS, is if things are always in flux, how can anything be identical to itself as nothing stands still long enough?

Or, how can  $A=A$  be the bedrock of all logic in a world in which nothing inherently exists?

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2281

(3/13/04 8:42 am)

Reply

Re: ego

---

Bird wrote:

Quote:

---

The question I have, perhaps for QRS, is if things are always in flux, how can anything be identical to itself as nothing stands still long enough?

---

That things are always in a state of flux, and not unchanging and static, is entirely consistent with the principle of  $A=A$ .

To wit:

Consider an object in one moment (O1) that changes into a different object in the next moment (O2). Here we have a situation in which O1 doesn't equal O2. And why? Because  $O1 \neq O1$  and  $O2 \neq O2$ .

Quote:

---

Or, how can  $A=A$  be the bedrock of all logic in a world in which nothing inherently exists?

---

If it is true that nothing inherently exists, then we can conclude that it is impossible for anything to possess inherent existence, or that nothing exists in an ultimate sense, or that any perception that things inherently exist is an illusion. In other words,  $A=A$  (and logic) still works perfectly fine.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2282
(3/13/04 9:28 am)
Reply

Re: ego

---

Thomas wrote:

Quote:

---

David: You are simply regurgitating the standard view expressed in encyclopedias.

Thomas: Encyclopedias are usually not that judgmental, David. They would not cite a single branch of philosophy or a few philosophers as being the 'most important' of the 20th century, as I did.

---

But they do. For example, they state that Russell and Wittgenstein are very important 20th century philosophers and make little or no mention of far greater thinkers such as UG Krishnamurti and Celia Green. So they are very judgmental and biased.

Your "concise", edited version of these encyclopedias which comprises your website only serves to make you seem even more judgmental and biased than them.

Quote:

---

The named philosophers are simply my personal preference.
What are your 20th century favorites?

---

David Quinn, Kevin Solway, Otto Weininger.

Quote:

---

David: It is dangerous. It lacks the safety and order and "second-handedness" of standard academic thought. It is consistent with your character that you have avoided it.

Thomas: It seems you want to imply that I am in the habit of avoiding challenges. Well, I had my challenges, believe me. I emigrated to Asia, started three companies, went bankrupt, became successful, went bankrupt again, became successful again. I travel a lot, explored mountains, rivers, jungles, I saw poverty, civil war, hurricanes, and floods, went through injury and sickness.

---

And all of it safely experienced behind the confines of the giant egotistical fortress built out of conventional, mainstream thought. Truly, you do not know what spiritual and psychological danger is.

Quote:

---

What is the most dangerous thing that you ever did? Reading Nietzsche on the dole?

---

Living truthfully.

Quote:

---

David: The "denial" of inherent existence has enormous implications which can never be underestimated. Everything of spiritual and philosophical importance stems from it.

Thomas: I meant that logically nothing follows from it, not existentially. It is existentially important, because it dispels illusion.

---

There are plenty of things which logically follow from it. For example:

- that Russell and Wittgenstein were both thoroughly deluded about the nature of Reality and their work carries very little significance because of it.
- that modern society is comprised of lies because its values are based on the perception that things inherently exist.
- that love between people is necessarily false in nature because it is based on the perception that people inherently exist.
- that emotionalism is a deluded and harmful activity because all emotions are based on the perception that things inherently exist.

And so on.

Quote:

---

David: This is complete rubbish. The only way one could conceive of shunyata as being just a word game is by not having any comprehension or awareness of the Great Reality to which the label "shunyata" points.

Thomas: This comment only shows how attached you are to the 'sunyata' concept. Concepts and ideas are themselves also empty. It seems that you somehow want to exclude your pet concepts, determinism, causality, identity, sunyata from emptiness, and pretend that they possess reality, or as you say: ultimate reality. That is a mistake. These ideas are just as empty and compounded as anything else.

---

The concept of a "tree" is empty in nature and yet it can still point our minds to the reality of trees.

Likewise, although the concept of sunyata is empty in nature, it is still able to point our minds to the Great Reality which comprises our entire existence.

Quote:

---

David: Science does not offer alternative methods of arriving at the same insight into emptiness.

Thomas: It does if you understand science deeply enough (which you don't).

---

Alas, the noises of fleas have just as much chance of doing it.

Owen1234

Registered User

Posts: 38

(3/13/04 9:00 pm)

Reply

Re: ego

---

birdofhermes: Are you saying things cannot be proved to be self-identical?

Owen: Of course not, but, self identities cannot have empirical proofs. There is no scientific method that could prove  $A=A$ .

Owen:  $A=A$  is either logically true or it is logically false.  $A=A$  is not factually true nor factually false.

Birdofhermes: Alright, we know that things are self-identical via logic.

birdofhermes: However, if that is logically so, then it must also be factually so, regardless of whether a scientific method can prove it.

Not so. Why do you assume this?

It is logically true that  $1+1=2$ , but it is not factually true at all!

Again, what situation in the world proves that  $1+1=2$ ?

birdofhermes: The question I have, perhaps for QRS, is if things are always in flux, how can anything be identical to itself as nothing stands still long enough?

"Or, how can  $A=A$  be the bedrock of all logic in a world in which nothing inherently exists?"

It cannot!

Is it logically absurd to assume that something exists is false. Every object of our ontology exists, is an implied axiom of reasoning in classical logic.

The so-called logic of QSR is not classical logic, at all.

Owen

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1460

(3/15/04 1:46 pm)

Reply

Re: ego

---

Quote:

The question I have, perhaps for QRS, is if things are always in flux, how can anything be identical to itself as nothing stands still long enough?

If things are always in a state of flux, and not unchanging and static, is entirely consistent with the principle of  $A=A$ .

To wit:

Consider an object in one moment ( $O1$ ) that changes into a different object in the next moment ( $O2$ ). Here we have a situation in which  $O1$  doesn't equal  $O2$ . And why? Because  $O1=O1$  and  $O2=O2$ .

---

But what about the problem that at no time does the object actually have such properties that it can be called  $O1$ , and at no time can you pinpoint the transition to  $O2$ ? Objects equaling themselves, and noninherent existence, seem a bit contradictory.

---

Quote:

Or, how can  $A=A$  be the bedrock of all logic in a world in which nothing inherently exists?

If it is true that nothing inherently exists, then we can conclude that it is impossible for anything to possess inherent existence, or that nothing exists in an ultimate sense, or that any perception that things inherently exist is an illusion. In other words,  $A=A$  (and logic) still works perfectly fine.

---

I don't see how  $A=A$  relates to the first sentence. I do see that  $A=A$  should be the bedrock of logic.

+++++

Quote:

---

Birdofhermes: Alright, we know that things are self-identical via logic.

However, if that is logically so, then it must also be factually so, regardless of whether a scientific method can prove it.

Not so. Why do you assume this?

---

Because the logic does not refer to an idea, such as the number two, but to actual objects. If it is logically so that every object is equal to itself, then it is empirically true.

Quote:

---

It is logically true that  $1+1=2$ , but it is not factually true at all! Again, what situation in the world proves that  $1+1=2$ ?

---

I don't see the problem with proving this. So what are you getting at?

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 876
(3/15/04 2:10 pm)
Reply

Re: ego

---

David,

You are an inexhaustible fount of nonsense, a river of non-sequiturs, a forest of muddled opinions, and an ocean of confusion.

David: There are plenty of things which logically follow from it [non-inherent existence, TK]. For example:

- that Russell and Wittgenstein were both thoroughly deluded about the nature of Reality and their work carries very little significance because of it.

I cannot see how that follows from non-inherent existence, much less do I think that you are familiar with the work of these authors. To speak in terms you are familiar with: Wittgenstein's grasp of language is equal to that of a Buddha. He certainly realized its emptiness.

David: - that modern society is comprised of lies because its values are based on the perception that things inherently exist.

This is not a characteristic peculiar to modern society. There have always been people at different levels of realization.

David: - that love between people is necessarily false in nature because it is based on the perception that people inherently exist.

Love does not require that belief/perception. Perhaps we should discuss love in greater detail, since you seem to confuse it with attachment.

David: - that emotionalism is a deluded and harmful activity because all emotions are based on the perception that things inherently exist.

Piffle. Emotions are a natural (biological) capability of human mind. As mental formations they are not very different from other mental faculties.

Thomas

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1466

(3/16/04 2:10 pm)

Reply

Re: ego

---

Have I conquered both Quinn and Owen in one swell foop?

Paul

Registered User

Posts: 508

(3/16/04 2:17 pm)

Reply

Re: ego

---

You conquer everyone, Evil Lady! White Widow!
Maybe that's your problem?

Well, my problem is that I'm in love with you.

Oh.

Leave it at that.

Hugs for you,
Huggies for me!

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1467
(3/16/04 3:37 pm)
Reply

Re: ego

---

Quote:

---

Maybe that's your problem?

---

I have no problems. No distress, no angst, no interpersonal difficulties. And yet I care all the time about spiritual questions, think about them all the time. And in earlier years, when I did have angst and interpersonal difficulties, I also thought about it all the time. My desire for truth has had nothing whatever to do with my outward state. It had no particular beginning. Yet according to the theory here, some sort of unhappiness is necessary. But that is a highly suspect beginning to the spiritual life in my opinion, because it will not lead to an honest end.

Well, if a black widow is a spider, what does that make me?
In love with me? Lucky for you I am kind.

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 509
(3/16/04 4:03 pm)
Reply

Anna

---

*blushing*

Yes, you are kind.

Owen1234
Registered User
Posts: 45
(3/18/04 10:26 pm)
Reply

Re: Anna

---

birdohermes:

Owen: It is logically true that  $1+1=2$ , but it is not factually true at all!
Again, what situation in the world proves that  $1+1=2$ ?

birdohermes: I don't see the problem with proving this.

Really! It took about 700 pages of formal logic to prove it by Russell and Whitehead See: Principia Mathematica, Volume I and II, (1910).

By what method do you prove that  $1+1=2$  ?

birdofhermes: So what are you getting at?

The point that I have been stressing is that there are (at least) two different concepts of truth.

Factual truth is different from logical truth!

It is false to say, p is logically true therefore it is also factually true. (which you have claimed to be true)

There are no tautologous facts and there are no factual tautologies.

Owen

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1473

(3/19/04 3:00 am)

Reply

Re: Anna

---

Quote:

---

Really! It took about 700 pages of formal logic to prove it by Russell and Whitehead See: Principia Mathematica, Volume I and II, (1910).

By what method do you prove that  $1+1=2$  ?

---

Ha - but he did prove it, right? I can't even imagine what convolutions that consisted of. Wherein lies the problem? Must we find a way through our solipsism to confirm the meanings of the numbers one and two? Should we spend a couple of hundred pages on the concept "and"? Is it a problem of boundaries - how can we discuss trees when there is no point at which the tree definitely stops being a tree?

Quote:

---

Factual truth is different from logical truth!

---

They can be. But must they be?

Quote:

---

There are no tautologous facts and there are no factual tautologies.

---

Why is  $1+1=2$  a tautology?

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> ego

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Owen1234 Registered User Posts: 46 (3/19/04 4:06 am) Reply	Re: Anna <hr/> Owen: Really! It took about 700 pages of formal logic to prove it by Russell and Whitehead See: Principia Mathematica, Volume I and II, (1910). By what method do you prove that <math>1+1=2</math> ? Anna: Ha - but he did prove it, right? I can't even imagine what convolutions that consisted of. Yes, within the axiomatic (logical) system that they provided. Anna: Wherein lies the problem? Must we find a way through our solipsism to confirm the meanings of the numbers one and two? Should we spend a couple of hundred pages on the concept "and"? Is it a problem of boundaries - how can we discuss trees when there is no point at which the tree definitely stops being a tree? ?? Owen: Factual truth is different from logical truth! Anna: They can be. But must they be? Yes, of course. Owen: There are no tautologous facts and there are no factual tautologies.

Anna: Why is  $1+1=2$  a tautology?

Because, its truth is shown by the methods of logic, not by any scientific or empirical method of reasoning

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1476

(3/19/04 4:27 am)

Reply

Re: Anna

---

??

Didn't you know? Boundaries aren't real. They are like clouds drifting in the sky. One thing morphs into another. It is our faulty conceptualizing that arbitrarily divides up the objects.

Quote:

---

Anna: They can be. But must they be?

Yes, of course.

---

This is precisely what I don't get. If it is logically so that an object equals itself, why would that not be true of the apple you hold in your hand, (never mind that the apple doesn't exist at all since it is an arbitrary conception). (But don't take a bite on a rock instead, as it will break your arbitrary teeth.)

You have here a pristine, mathematically virginal mind here with which to fuck, as I am completely in ignorance of this whole math-logic world.

Quote:

---

Anna: Why is  $1+1=2$  a tautology?

Because, its truth is shown by the methods of logic, not by any scientific or empirical method of reasoning.

---

Wait a minute. What do you mean "empirical reasoning"? One reasons and then checks empirically. You mean scientific method? So if I chop off one of your legs, and then the other leg, will you not find a big difference in the condition of having two legs, one leg and no legs?

Owen1234
Registered User
Posts: 48
(3/19/04 5:00 am)
Reply

Re: Anna

---

birdofhermes: This is precisely what I don't get. If it is logically so that an object equals itself, why would that not be true of the apple you hold in your hand, (never mind that the apple doesn't exist at all since it is an arbitrary conception). (But don't take a bite on a rock instead, as it will break your arbitrary teeth.)

You have here a pristine, mathematically virginal mind here with which to fuck, as I am completely in ignorance of this whole math-logic world.

-----

Your silliness and your profanity is out of place , for me.

I don't want to talk like you do!

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1477
(3/19/04 8:40 am)
Reply

Re: Anna

---

Sorry, I was in an altered state. Also, I was annoyed at the crap that David said and shouldn't have taken it out on you.

Kellyven
Posts: 55
(3/19/04 10:29 am)
Reply

Re: ego

---

Quote:

---

This is what you believe, but how do you know? It seems that you have just begun to explore this territory. At this time you cannot be certain about its worth. If Ultimate Reality seems promising, then by all means, dive into it. I could tell you that it is a grand illusion, but it won't matter to you. Anyway, the study of illusions is worthwhile in itself, provided that it leads to the uncovering of the same.

---

Thomas,

I have been away for a week; i have a slightly different response now to your question above.

Until Ultimate Reality becomes 'phenomena' for you, you will never know it is 'real', but for it to become phenomena (known), it is thereby of objective not ultimate reality. Thus it is impossible to know anything; as long as one keeps 'believing' in appearances, one remains deluded.

The only way to say 'i know' is of emptiness - the counterfoil of thinglessness - since it can not be a single appearance, and can never be phenomenal. Merely the concept of boundlessness, conceptlessness, emptiness, formlessness can be logically acceptable.

But the paradox is, as soon as one says, 'i know', one does not know. This is called faith in reason.

Kelly

Sapius
Registered User
Posts: 276
(3/19/04 12:04 pm)
Reply

Re: ego

---

Bird:

Quote:

---

I do see that  $A=A$  should be the bedrock of logic.

---

I would say that  $A=A$  is the bedrock of consciousness rather than logic. What we call 'Logic' is a result of the thinking process which gives rise to concepts, rights and wrongs, etc.

Even before logically conceptualizing a formal concept of  $A=A$ , a new born baby grabs at things other than its-self, because it experiences that which is not its-self. The baby already experiences the difference between 'A' and 'not A' even before it can actually "think" about an "I". It is much later in life that we place  $A=A$  on a lofty platform.

I hope it is clear, my English is not so good.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 892
(3/19/04 1:03 pm)
Reply

Re: ego

---

Kelly: Until Ultimate Reality becomes 'phenomena' for you, you will never know it is 'real', but for it to become phenomena (known), it is thereby of objective not ultimate reality. Thus it is impossible to know anything; as long as one keeps 'believing' in appearances, one remains deluded.

Okay, you have to be precise with what you mean with 'appearances'. If you take appearances to be sense impressions, then these impressions are the product of the confluence of physical properties and the properties of your sense apparatus and nervous system; they are not the objects themselves. Hence, the Kantian distinction between phenomena and things-in-themselves (noumena). Using this distinction we may say that phenomena are knowable while the noumena are not. Kant came to exactly that conclusion. Given that noumena/mind confluence can result in an arbitrary number of phenomena, depending on physical and mental conditioning, noumena are phenomenally inexhaustible. Hence, taking a particular appearance of objects for the objects themselves is indeed a form of delusion.

Kelly: The only way to say 'i know' is of emptiness - the counterfoil of thinglessness - since it can not be a single appearance, and can never be phenomenal. Merely the concept of boundlessness, conceptlessness, emptiness, formlessness can be logically acceptable.

The mind has the capability to transcribe certain sense impressions into abstract information. That is the property of symbolic thought. For example, if you observe that an object has the same thickness in one dimension, the mind infers the abstract idea of parallelity of boundaries. Although the idea of parallelity is derived from perception, it can be analytically expanded on its own, without referring to the object itself, or respectively without reliance on further sense data. By this method, a large body of knowledge can be formed purely symbolically and independently of sense perceptions. We may call this the noetic body of knowledge about an object. The mind attaches it to specific phenomena identified by memorized key percepts.

The noetic body and the key percepts together form a unified physical or symbolic configuration of patterns that can be readily indentified. This configuration is called a Gestalt. Now the illusion arises that a Gestalt inherently exists, simply because the mind automatically (subconsciously) connects key percepts with a memorized noetic complex.

The realization of emptiness consists largely of seeing through this mechanism. It might seem like an intellectual realization and as such it isn't all that difficult. However, Gestalt identification and inference of inherent existence is largely subconscious. It occurs automatically. Hence, the realization of emptiness is much more than an intellectual realization. It involves changing one's habits of perception.

Thomas

Edited by: Thomas Knierim at: 3/19/04 1:11 pm

Kellyven
Posts: 58
(3/19/04 3:13 pm)
Reply

Re: appearances

---

Thomas,

Kelly: Thus it is impossible to know anything; as long as one keeps 'believing' in appearances, one remains deluded.

Quote:

---

Thomas wrote: Okay, you have to be precise with what you mean with 'appearances'.

---

Since the mind can ever only focus on one thing at a time, appearances are any thing that the mind focusses on. I explained this in my post yesterday to Sue on consciousness and unconsciousness (see Nature of Women thread). Would you say some appearances are not delusional forms?

Quote:

---

The mind has the capability to transcribe certain sense impressions into abstract information. That is the property of symbolic thought.

---

I would say that all thought is symbolic: you can ignore piles of sense data and never observe any of it, but as soon as the data appears, it is a construction. Imagine a comatose person who is conscious: they have no sense data, no mental activities, yet they are mentally aware. What of? How can that be - since there are no appearances, how can they be conscious?

Where are the symbols or internal referents for such a person?

Quote:

---

For example, if you observe that an object has the same thickness in one dimension, the mind infers the abstract idea of parallelity of boundaries. Although the idea of parallelity is derived from perception, it can be analytically expanded on its own, without referring to the object itself, or respectively without reliance on further sense data. By this method, a large body of knowledge can be formed purely symbolically and independently of sense perceptions. We may call this the noetic body of knowledge about an object. The mind attaches it to specific phenomena identified by memorized key percepts.

---

In the objectless awareness, what can be known?

Owen1234

Registered User

Posts: 49

(3/19/04 8:42 pm)

Reply

Re: appearances

---

Anna: Sorry, I was in an altered state. Also, I was annoyed at the crap that David said and shouldn't have taken it out on you.

I do understand the effects of "I don't care juice", I have been there many times myself.

I too, am annoyed at the ridiculous crap that the QSR group believe and claim.

Their 'intriguing name', 'the genius forum', is the only reason for this board's popularity, ...certainly not their irrational views about logic nor their views against women.

Conversations with those that do not share their (QSR) views is still interesting enough to reply to their posts.

Kellyven

Posts: 63

(3/20/04 11:17 am)

Reply

knowing

In the objectless awareness, what can be known?

I have changed my mind again, this time i say that the Truth can become a certain knowledge when the Barrier of awareness is broken through: all appearances and awareness merge so that there is no constructing going on, but simple, direct and undistorted reflection of what is.

So Truth is something that can be known: relative truths cannot, but only believed.

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

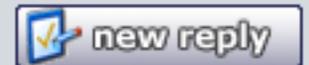

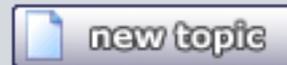

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Emotion - a false and deadly notion

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Rhett Hamilton Registered User Posts: 115 (11/19/03 10:28 am) Reply   Edit	 Emotion - a false and deadly notion <hr/> This is an extract from 'Genius News' of a discussion that took place on the 'Genius List' back around mid 2002. It was my first foray on the list. Dan comments are the one's to watch, my views are now radically different to what they were then. Rhett: I hope that a genius can achieve plenty of happiness whilst honing their awareness of reality... Dan Rowden: The genius has no need of happiness. He is beyond happiness and unhappiness. Unhappiness arises precisely because of our egotistical desire for happiness. Greg Shantz: Yes but before you become a genius couldn't feelings of happiness accompany learning about the infinite even though they will eventually have to go? Dan Rowden: Sure, that will inevitably occur at times, but Rhett's implication was that it is a good and desirable thing. It isn't. It indicates the continued presence of ego and therefore delusion. But you're right to say that the seeker will feel emotionally empowered, sometimes happy, as a result of certain insights. But, those feelings are a danger to him and he must not rest in them. Greg Shantz: He must not rest in them, he must continue on the path to overcoming them entirely. But while he is learning about reality without having a full knowledge of it he will still experience emotions. When he has a new insight or works out a problem that has been nagging him he may experience happiness and contentment. An enlightened person is beyond dualities like happiness or unhappiness. But enlightenment is not an emotion; enlightenment is freedom from the unpredictable winds of emotions. Enlightenment is when you see the world clearly without delusion. Emotions are clouded thoughts, enlightenment is a clear mind.

Rhett: When i remove myself from social interaction my emotions fade away and i am neither happy or unhappy. When i engage in social interaction the experience of emotions increases. I seem to be attempting to maximise happiness and minimise unhappiness in a social context through the application of accumulated (and accumulating) wisdom at the core of issues. When i surround myself with seekers they give me space within their world. I avoid being worshipped overtly by them but i do appreciate their thanks for what i share with them. But i have not as yet found people with comparable insight as myself. Thus, there is a hole somewhere in me...

I am searching for a better understanding of the path that will...see me...if i could finish this question i think i would immediately know the answer. Perhaps i'm just trying to work out my best compromise between isolation - integration with society(?).

Leo Bartoli: Dan is referring to a perfect genius so his advice has little practical relevance to all of us here. For all we know, and as i say we may know this intuitively or instinctively, periods of happiness may have a healing effect on the body or the brain helping to eventually bring one closer to perfection of consciousness, just as play may help a young mind develop properly. Of course, to use this as an excuse to indulge without restraint may be counter productive.

Dan Rowden: In strict terms, yes, my point refers to the perfect state of affairs, but to say it has no practical relevance to the imperfect is wrong. One does not require perfection to significantly and meaningfully transcend the egotism of the happiness/unhappiness duality - and therefore samsara and suffering.

Development in this area occurs with any diminution of the force of the ego.

The advice is entirely relevant to the imperfect. Anyway, we're striving the goal of enlightenment and perfection, aren't we? Are you saying it is of no practical help to the seeker to comprehend the nature of that which he is striving for?

Leo Bartoli: No, i was simply saying, or believe i was saying, that the genius is not beyond the need for happiness unless he is perfect. Does that help?

Rhett: Happiness is an emotion and is therefore a real state. Can humans be emotionless? Should humans strive for emotionlessness?

I spent a number of years trying to be emotionless. Why did i try to do this? Perhaps the greatest factor was that it was a self protecting response; I feel that geniuses are more sensitive to people and thus suffer from negative emotions/interactions more than others. Being constantly misunderstood is extremely alienating and dispiriting. I did not fully succeed in being emotionless. Complete isolation may have brought that, but, whilst i am not afraid of isolation, i do not particularly value it. Thus, i chose to accept that i will experience emotions. Simple logic suggests that if i am going to experience emotions then i'll try to maximise the desirable ones and minimise the undesirable ones.

Subhash: Happiness should not be an emotion. It should be a state beyond that.(The Genius would know better !)

Genius is not one who is sensitive to the world as we conceive a sensitive individual to be. He is able see and experience things in the light of eternity. Hence he is not disturbed by the 'leela'(worldly play) and is able to live in 'ananda' undisturbed by the sensual world.

Rhett: I'm quite uninterested in any construct that suggests that all thinking leads to sadness. It seems that many people engaging in this forum believe this. If you're unhappy, how smart is that? Surely a genius can facilitate their life such that they are happy? Why not? I'm amazed that this topic is so contentious. Is it perhaps a common pitfall that has grown into a culture within philosophical circles? I've read widely whilst unconsciously avoiding most of the eastern 'enlightenment' books and western books on philosophy. The common ruts within the debates on this forum have me celebrating my intellectual path. Of course i may simply be ignorant.

When i use the word happiness i mean exactly that. I am not talking about a false or superficial happiness.

Dan Rowden: Thinking necessarily leads to sadness (suffering) because thinking necessarily means a critical examination of one's self-reality and of one's attachments. Whatever the outcome of that examination, it will produce, if authentic, anxiety, which is a form of suffering.

Irena: What makes you think the state of happiness has anything to do with desire or any other form of volitional pressure. Can't it be possible that happiness is the optimal condition for a normal human, aiding digestion for example? and what not?

Why must happiness be characterized additionally as a desire when it is already quite sufficiently described under its accepted definitional term as happiness?

Is the need for food always a desire for food? Isn't it sometimes a pressing need? Ditto for other conditions. Would you say a desire for anger is a typical way to describe what is a very similar condition, emotionally to happiness, in that it is a somewhat elevated state? No, generally we accept anger is a result of certain factors, including biological. So why would happiness be any different? Why do you infer happiness is a weakness?

Dan Rowden: Well, let's get our concepts in order here: happiness is not a desire. Happiness is an emotional state; it is the sublimation of the will to power in the emotional realm. The desire for happiness is a desire. The need for food is a basic biological need. The desire for happiness is an expression of our psychology; specifically, it is a desire of the ego for power.

And it is not weakness but rather delusion. The desire for happiness indicates the egotistical sensation of a lacking that is not based in valid notions of reality.

Irena: I guess you see happiness as a kind of mindless bliss. I see it as a joyful contentment. And I just looked up happy in the dictionary and it says "to be content with one's lot". I would guess to be content with one's lot would mean not to desire anything more or less.

Dan Rowden: Well, yes, I guess I do see it as mindless, because that's basically what it is! Most people don't have the foggiest understanding of their own psychology, so how could their state of happiness really be other than mindless? Happiness, however, is one of those slightly nebulous terms that can refer to a variety of mind states - joy; gladness; contentment etc, so it can be hard to pin down the psychology of happiness per se. What one might say about its nature depends on the way one is defining it. But all these states share certain common properties, so let's see what we can do with it.....

Any desire represents the will to overcome some negative state - that means one is powerless (lacking) in the face of circumstance. The sublimation of any desire is to gain and possess power over the lack of a desired state; it is to gain power over circumstance.

Irena: If the desire for it is desire for power, then I would guess you define happiness as power.

Dan Rowden: It's a form of power, yes. As I said previously, it is power over circumstance and the absence of something. If you conquer your fear of flying you experience happiness at your having conquered this fear. That happiness is an expression of your power over fear. How many unhappy people have you met whose unhappiness expressed their power over something? Happiness is absolutely a feeling of power.

Irena: Well, that's one way to describe being contented - in a position of power.

Dan Rowden: That's right - power over that which made us discontent.

Irena: You are describing a kind of ego gratification which is not happiness but egotism.

Dan Rowden: The desire for happiness is egotism. That feeling of power one experiences, which again is happiness, is egotism. That which stems from ego is necessarily egotism.

Irena: Fine, you are probably right. But assume i know a little about two kinds of ego behaviour. One being egotism the other egoism.

Dan Rowden: Well, I regard that distinction as part of the gibberish of academic psychology. It might have its place somewhere in that great malaise, but not, I would argue, in this discussion.

Ego, Happiness and Samsara:

"Happiness is the transition from one form of suffering to another. Suffering is the transition from one form of happiness to another. Samsara is made of these transitions."

Desire is expressed in the individual because the ego - the concept held in mind of an inherently existent, separate self - has a continual and necessarily unending need to ground itself in reality, to substantiate its existence, to give itself permanence and therefore security (generated by the perception of separation). The ephemeral nature of things, however, constantly steps in to destroy that security and hence desire constantly arises. This is the basis of the forming of attachments. Attachments give a foundation and support to the idea of our existence; they ground us, our egotistical selves, in "reality" and therefore provide security, a concrete sense of being. "Happiness" is that state in which this desire for substance and security is sublimated, in whatever context that might occur.

Unhappiness (suffering) is that state where ego feels insubstantial or disconnected from reality in some way (lacking in something it perceives itself as requiring). The desire for happiness may be characterised as the ego's will to security in being.

But happiness only lasts as long as the conditions upon which it is based continue to exist. Therefore happiness is not only, itself, ephemeral, it is dependent upon those continued conditions. Herein lies the beginning of a need for control of one's environment, physically and psychologically.

Happiness is a state of such control and therefore, as I said before, a sense and type of power. I don't there's too much need for me to elaborate on the personal and social consequences of that need for control.

The reason the desire for happiness is delusional is that the entire above state of affairs is delusional in that the "ego" conception of self is false (i.e. there is no separate, inherently existent self) and all psychological phenomena that arise with this falsity as their basis, are also necessarily false.

I mean, we can get bogged in terminology and semantic pedantry if we want to, and some of us probably do want to so as to avoid the crux of the issue, but rather than worry about whether we should characterise something as a "need" rather than a "want" and so forth, we should look to the essentials of the issue. We could quite easily characterise the desire for happiness as an essential need of the ego, because, frankly, it is - which is to say it is as natural to the ego as the spreading of roots is to a tree - but the point is the ego itself is not hard-wired into mind whereas certain biological needs like breathing are hard-wired into our biological natures.

We might be stuck with the need to breathe and take water, but we're not stuck with the delusion of the ego or any of the psychological phenomena that emanate from it, the desire for happiness being one of the more prominent ones and also being one of the most significant sources of suffering.

Alex Meyer: But the lack of psychological understanding in "most people" [you spoke of], has nothing to do with the question of happiness being necessarily mindless. Would you disagree that it is possible to feel happiness, and at the same time be aware, and conscious about the psychological implications of that feeling?

I often find that I can recognize a feeling, and because I recognize it, it is easier to control it and sometimes ignore it. I do no longer need to succumb to the feeling. I am not perfect though, and do not always immediately recognize the feeling, but that is irrelevant to the issue of the possibility, that the state of happiness doesn't need to be mindless.

Dan Rowden: Actually, it has everything to do with people being mindless. A psychological phenomenon that is occurring, and is valued, that is happening in an absence of any understanding of its nature, is necessarily mindless. One cannot truly understand the basis of happiness and experience it, for to really understanding happiness is to understand the basis of ego and of Reality itself. If one is experiencing happiness, understanding is necessary absent in the moment that happiness is being experienced.

One can understand happiness and have a memory of the "feeling" but that is not to be in a "happy" state. One cannot be happy and mindful at the same time. Understanding is dependent on the absence of ego; happiness is dependent on its presence. You can't have both, not in any pure sense.

Alex Meyer: Also, mindless happiness will kill any motivation to seek truth. So perhaps happiness should be sold with a warning-label on the package... As David Quinn pointed out in the forum, though, if the will to truth/wisdom is strong enough, mindless happiness will eventually become tiring, and not so mindless after all.

Dan Rowden: Happiness - and the desire for it - is transcended. Till that time, one is still engaging in mindlessness to some degree - namely, the degree to which one experiences happiness.

Edited by: Rhett Hamilton at: 11/20/03 10:24 am

Rhett Hamilton

Registered User

Posts: 122

(11/22/03 10:59 am)

Reply | Edit

 Re: Emotion - a false and deadly notion

---

No responses thus far, perhaps i have hit the jackpot here, perhaps i have hit on the dearest attachment of all?

Let's see if we can get a serious debate going...let's see if people are willing to back up their attachments...

Here is another extract from the 'Genius News'...

EXPUNGING THE EMOTIONS

Why234: It is quite absurd to expunge emotion completely considering that we are mere mortals, innately gifted with emotions.

David Quinn: Yes, emotions have certainly been given to us by evolution and they have been useful for our survival in the past. It helps to be emotional when you want to wipe out the competition. But I contend that not only are the emotions no longer useful, but that they can be eliminated via a process of philosophical development. In fact, I contend that we are morally obligated towards future generations to eliminate them.

Leyla: Yes, we are. But then, nobody would be having sex and there would be no future generations. Is that the ultimate goal for others from the sages perspective?

David Quinn: If their primary goal is the survival of wisdom (and it is highly likely that it would be), then the survival of abstract consciousness would automatically become an important goal, which means they would have a vested interest in seeing the human race continue.

Leyla: Friends, Romans, countrymen; lend me your fears: I say again, albeit somewhat differently, that there are positive emotional states and uses of emotion--especially toward the goal of enlightenment--just as there are negative ones.

David Quinn: I agree that, in the beginning stages at least, emotion can be an important driving force towards enlightenment. A beginner certainly cannot get anywhere if he isn't consumed by a passion for Truth. But as I've mentioned elsewhere, there comes a point in a thinker's development where he begins to pierce the very illusions which trigger the emotions - namely, the illusions of self-existence.

If you remove all the flammable material from a certain area, then fire can no longer arise in that area. Similarly, if you remove the illusions of self-existence from your mind, then emotion can no longer arise - which is a very liberating experience. It's a bit like the murkiness of an overcast morning breaking up and clearing to reveal a glorious sunny afternoon.

Leyla: Is there no emotion involved with the experience of this revelation? Perhaps...elation? Serenity? Exhilaration?

David Quinn: In the earlier stages of the path, there is. When a person gains genuine insight into the Reality for the first time there is exhilaration, astonishment and fantastic joy. And sometimes, when the insight is not quite perfect and the ego's concern for its own security has been aroused, there can be the reverse - namely, great anxiety and fear. But all of these emotions begin to fade away over time as the individual gradually discards the conceptual framework which embeds the ego.

Logothing: Please explain what the illusions of self-existence are.. I am intrigued.

David Quinn: The belief that one's self ultimately or independently exists, that it possesses inherent significance and value, that it possesses free will, that it is anything other than an intangible conceptual construct of the moment.

This creates other kinds of illusions such as the belief that one came into existence at some point in the past and will one day disappear again, that there is life and death, that there are things in the world to overcome and things to be feared, that fortresses have to be created in order to protect the self, and so on - which in turn gives rise to the deluded emotions of anger, pride, guilt, happiness, etc.

JoshuaStone: I am inspired to view it as quite curious the way you flippantly use the term "perfect." In order for you to use that term the way you do it would seem that you are privy to what actually is "perfect." So tell us all, just exactly what in this three-dimensional world is "perfect?"

David Quinn: The word "perfect" can be used in different ways. For example, we can say that all things are "perfect" in that they are direct manifestations of Reality. Even flaws in objects are direct manifestations of Reality and therefore perfect.

In a psychological sense, a person reaches "perfection" when he no longer experiences delusion. That is to say, all imperfections of thought have vanished from his mind. Such a person is able to dwell in enlightenment effortlessly, permanently and without interruption.

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 291
(11/22/03 2:41 pm)
Reply

 ---

---

Rhett, my dear, what is your view on Artificial Intelligence?

Hywel
Registered User
Posts: 33
(11/23/03 4:57 am)
Reply

 Re: --- Happiness and Emotions

---

Happiness
Happiness is lack of desire. This can be through contentment with the current situation, and therefore temporary, or through understanding of the nature of happiness, and therefore permanent (while the understanding remains).

Joy isnt really included in this, its just a momentary ego boost in any case, and doesnt last.

Quote:

---

No responses thus far, perhaps i have hit the jackpot here, perhaps i have hit on the dearest attachment of all?

---

Its the only attachment, and generates all others.

"EXPUNGING THE EMOTIONS" is a good extract, but one part caught my attention, mostly because its an area im confused about myself.

Quote:

---

David Quinn: If their primary goal is the survival of wisdom (and it is highly likely that it would be), then the survival of abstract consciousness would automatically become an important goal, which means they would have a vested interest in seeing the human race continue.

---

David doesn't seem sure that in a world of people without emotion, their primary goal would be the survival of wisdom. As Paul points out, they might well choose to replace the human race with something altogether more rational. But more than that, why does wisdom dictate that wisdom must survive?

The universe continues as before, with or without it. If it survives, it could hardly be prevented. While it's certainly appealing to think of all the people you can help in their own search for wisdom, all the information they need is all around them, and they have to do all the work themselves.

I would certainly help anyone who wished to become wise in any way I could, but as for encouraging wisdom in those who have no interest in it, that seems a step too far.

Perhaps this is because the wisdom I have gained, did not seem motivated by the valuing of wisdom, but rather by the fact that I had/have nothing else to do with my life.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 128
(11/24/03 11:06 am)
Reply | Edit

 Re: --- Happiness and Emotions

---

Hi Hywel,

Happiness is lack of desire. This can be through contentment with the current situation, and therefore temporary, or through understanding of the nature of happiness, and therefore permanent (while the understanding remains).

Whoa there. I agree that the state of happiness is free of desire, but it is also largely free of thought, so desire can hardly be present. Egotistical happiness is inherently impermanent, its nature is to cycle. Once one understands the nature of happiness, that being power over one's desires - which derive from that which threatens to compromise one's non-existent self, one will no longer partake in it.

Joy isnt really included in this, its just a momentary ego boost in any case, and doesnt last.

Joy, happiness, same thing really, same psychotic process.

-----
No responses thus far, perhaps i have hit the jackpot here, perhaps i have hit on the dearest attachment of all?
-----

Its the only attachment, and generates all others.

If you are talking about emotion then i disagree. Even though ego and emotion are so tightly intertwined, they are not the same. The ego, ie. 'life', is usually the most valued attachment, but not always, examples are hard to find but kamikaze pilots might be one (suicide bombers don't count because they usually think they are going to a better life). I think most people would still prefer to live even if they knew they were never going to experience emotion, but they would find it an excruciating choice. After having experienced emotionlessness for a period of time they might well be very thankful, depending of course on the way in which their emotions were prevented from occurring. I have wanted to escape emotion for most of my life. One either has a will to consciousness and emotionlessness, or the will to unconsciousness and emotion, they are mutually incompatible.

"EXPUNGING THE EMOTIONS" is a good extract, but one part caught my attention, mostly because its an area im confused about myself.

-----
David Quinn: If their primary goal is the survival of wisdom (and it is highly likely that it would be), then the survival of abstract consciousness would automatically become an important goal, which means they would have a vested interest in seeing the human race continue.
-----

David doesnt seem sure that in a world of people without emotion, their primary goal would be the survival of wisdom. As Paul points out, they might well choose to replace the human race with something altogether more rational. But more than that, why does wisdom dictate that wisdom must survive?

It's extremely unlikely that someone would become wise without valuing wisdom, and if they value wisdom they would naturally value its survival. Wisdom encompasses quality reasoning processes, and all good reasons point to an understanding of truth being of more value than other things.

To place another value higher than truth is illogical, because you cannot be sure that you know the truth of that value, you could well be valuing a chimera and/or acting quite contrary to what you think you are. I can tell you that this is actually the case with everyone that doesn't value truth foremost, which is basically everyone on this planet. They are radically misguided.

The universe continues as before, with or without it. If it survives, it could hardly be prevented. While it's certainly appealing to think of all the people you can help in their own search for wisdom, all the information they need is all around them, and they have to do all the work themselves.

But do they find that good information and have a concept of its worth without being helped? Very rarely.

I would certainly help anyone who wished to become wise in any way I could, but as for encouraging wisdom in those who have no interest in it, that seems a step too far.

Whilst encouraging non-seekers certainly has a high probability of being problematic, so does doing nothing about the ignorance in this world.

Perhaps this is because the wisdom I have gained, did not seem motivated by the valuing of wisdom, but rather by the fact that I had/have nothing else to do with my life.

I suggest you take an active interest in formulating a conscious value system ASAP. You are basically suggesting that you have a passive, feminine minded approach to your value system and decisionmaking, almost as if "I am pursuing wisdom because it's what's in front of me". You have plenty of other things you could do with your life, so there must be at least a bit of valuing of wisdom in there somewhere.

Rhett

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 130
(11/24/03 11:51 am)
Reply | Edit

Re: ---

---

Rhett, my dear, what is your view on Artificial Intelligence?

A proper understanding of the nature of cause and effect gives one a wholly different perspective on Artificial Intelligence. Man has been creating AI since the dawn of man, because man is AI. There is no fundamental difference between 'living' things and 'non-living' things, just an endless sea of mechanistic (causal) processes.

Rhett

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1775
(11/24/03 1:00 pm)
Reply

----

---

Not true rhett, humans are not artificial intelligences. To say there is only artificial intelligence is a most unintelligent thing to say. If you mean to say that all intelligence is created, then I agree, but your words do not show this to be so.

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 398
(11/24/03 1:25 pm)
Reply

Re: ----

---

Well it could be said that our intelligence is artificial because it is dependent on other humans. Our intelligence would not be what it is if we were isolated from birth.

Media and governments might also be making our intelligence artificial to a degree.

Nah, that is a weak argument, but I'll post it anyway.

birdofhermes Registered User Posts: 1047 (11/24/03 1:31 pm) Reply	 AI <hr/> He means to say that intelligence is artificial because he thinks life is artificial. In other words, he does not actually believe that there is any sort of ineffable something called life. In other words, despite the massive complexity of life forms (but all is relative, and it is just an appearance of complexity to our mindset)and the fact of reproduction and growth, we are just big computers, machines. Chemical and electrical processes. Isn't that what you also believe Suergaz? That is the atheist position. What in the world can such as you mean by saying intelligence is created?
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1780 (11/24/03 1:42 pm) Reply	 Re: AI <hr/> Birdy, how do you know the atheist position when you are not one?! I had thought you would refer to it as an imposition! Rhett is no atheist, he has concrete shoes and we must work to remove them. Life will never have the trappings of a machine. Oscillation has a lot (shall we say an infinity?) to answer for! (forgive such slightness of expresion, in some places its called poetry)
birdofhermes Registered User Posts: 1048 (11/24/03 2:00 pm) Reply	 atheism <hr/> Birdy, how do you know the atheist position when you are not one?! \\\\\\ Because I have thought about it. Rhett is right, blanket statements without logical (or otherwise) thought processes to back them up are a waste of time. Tell me how I am wrong, that's what I'm saying. The one question I asked, you didn't answer. I said, isn't that your take on things? ===== I had thought you would refer to it as an imposition! No, not an imposition. Dogma is an imposition. Of course, when the atheists had control ("communist" countries) they were ruder than anything. \\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\ Rhett is no atheist, he has concrete shoes and we must work to remove them. what the fuck??

=====
Life will never have the trappings of a machine.

Why the hell not?
=====

Oscillation has a lot (shall we say an infinity?) to answer for! (forgive such slightness of expresion, in some places its called poetry)

Well, who knows what you mean by oscillations, although I tend to agree. Our poetry may be involving very divergent images. Good poetry, in my opinion, is understandable. I do not forgive it.

I honestly don't think you've thought about the atheist position. Either things are alive or they are not. If there is only matter, and that matter started out simple, so to speak, and by random chance collected into proteins, blah, blah, blah, and then the cell wall starts to let some things in and others out, and all the little pumps and gates run on chemical reactions and electrical charges - well isn't it a machine? There is no reason in such a scenario to have any significance to calling something alive.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1782
(11/24/03 6:31 pm)
Reply

 ---

---

Life is no machine and the universe is not one either.

Machines require inventors.

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 305
(11/24/03 6:39 pm)
Reply

 Re: ---

---

Bingo.
You're a genius, and I love you.
That doesn't matter, the latter
I mean, but... Soit.

birdofhermes Registered User Posts: 1049 (11/25/03 1:03 am) Reply	 atheism <hr/> There is no talking to you, Suergaz, if refuse to engage in conversation. You answered none of my points. Can it be you have no inkling about them, or have attention deficit disorder? What is the essence of life?
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1784 (11/25/03 1:43 am) Reply	 --- <hr/> Your point you want answered-- "what the fuck??" I mean that Rhett has been sunk by mob rule and can be helped by you even though you are an agnost like he is. Your point Why the hell not? was already answered.
birdofhermes Registered User Posts: 1051 (11/25/03 2:03 am) Reply	 atheism <hr/> ++I mean that Rhett has been sunk by mob rule and can be helped by you even though you are an agnost like he is.  I doubt I can help him. One has to want help, you know. Besides, you forget, I have only henids to offer. <hr/> Why do you call him an agnost? <hr/> ++Your point Why the hell not? was already answered. No - the question I want answered is, what is Life? You didn't really answer the why the hell not point. You just said machines require inventors. Yes, it's a fair point, and I acknowledge other minor differences between what we call life forms and what we call machines or computers. But have a little imagination! At bottom, are they different? The difference, of course, is that men have conceived of a purpose and design for a particular machine and then put it together. As an atheist, you are assuming that all we life forms got ourselves together. No doubt, the

	ability to renew by reproducing ourselves is a major improvement over rocks. Rocks have their own ways, however.
WolfsonJakk Registered User Posts: 1284 (11/25/03 2:30 am) Reply	 -- <hr/> Rocks are fluid. It is our limited perception of them that sees them as static objects. Could the same be said about our impressions of life? Tharan
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1785 (11/25/03 2:35 am) Reply	 --- <hr/> Consciousness is the difference bird. We did get ourselves together. I call Rhett an agnost because he doesn't believe or not believe in god. Like Quinn for instance.
birdofhermes Registered User Posts: 1052 (11/25/03 6:30 am) Reply	 atheism <hr/> ++Rocks are fluid. It is our limited perception of them that sees them as static objects. Could the same be said about our impressions of life? It could, but how so? I mean, what do you have in mind? <hr/> ++ Consciousness is the difference bird. We did get ourselves together. Worthless conjecture. What do you know about consciousness, its origins, its nature. Does consciousness arise from within the brain only? If you say yes, you are an atheist. If you say we got ourselves together, you must believe that consciousness is no more than chemical reactions in the brain matter. And if you say yes to both of these, then life does not really exist. <hr/> ++I call Rhett an agnost because he doesn't believe or not believe in god. Like Quinn for instance.  I agree about Quinn, which is why there is hope for him, but I don't know why you say it about Rhett.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 781

(11/25/03 10:00 am)

Reply

Re: ---

Surely the differences between organic life and machines are pretty self-evident when nouns are used as they were meant to be used i.e. descriptively. The similarities are also apparent but that doesn't make these two things one in the same. Because the similarities between men and women outweigh the differences by a long shot, should we scrap the distinction, a distinction which is self-apparent in spades. A grain of sand is extremely similar to a mountain in many ways, but they are rightly distinguished and designated as being two different things. Machines are machines, life is life.

In the first abstract above, where life is likened to a machine, it could be said that life is like a whole lot of things and the same could be said of machines. For instance, the sun is like an engine, but we call it the sun. The solar system is like clockwork, but we call it the solar system. The earth is like life and a machine, but we call it the earth, or a planet. Fractal geometry is often like organic life in a lot of ways, as are crystals, but they have their own names. Electrons are very much like thoughts in certain aspects, sometimes they seem to have a life of their own, but they're called electrons. Life is like a wheel, wheels are like machines, machines are like galaxies, galaxies are like life, life is like a whirlpool, whirlpools are like machines, machines are like evolutionary processes, evolutionary processes are like the universe, the universe is like life and life is like infinity.

On a strictly empirical basis, abstracted, the stuff that machines, life, the universe and everything are made up of is little more than nothing, yet we see such vast distinctions. It's a question of perspective, just like dimensions.

In the second abstract above, where life (and everything else) is likened to AI in its artificiality, it's just another perspective denying the perspective of life, viewing it from a different angle, another dimension even. All very well and good but the trouble is that in this dimension, life cannot actually be like a machine, nor AI like life, because there is nothing; no life, no machines, no artificiality, no bona fide, no likenesses, no differences, no thing, no nothing. It is therefore completely out of context, the context being demarcation, and therefore contextual abstract nonsense.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 782

(11/25/03 10:11 am)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

Bird: In other words, despite the massive complexity of life forms and the fact of reproduction and growth, we are just big computers, machines. Chemical and electrical processes.

That is the atheist position.

---

What is so un-god-like about this Bird?

---

Quote:

I honestly don't think you've thought about the atheist position. Either things are alive or they are not. If there is only matter, and that matter started out simple, so to speak, and by random chance collected into proteins, blah, blah, blah, and then the cell wall starts to let some things in and others out, and all the little pumps and gates run on chemical reactions and electrical charges - well isn't it a machine? There is no reason in such a scenario to have any significance to calling something alive.

---

I don't see how that makes it a machine and I don't see why this means that the label 'alive' has no significance.

But could you please expand on why you think that alive/not alive relates to atheism?

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Emotion - a false and deadly notion

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1786 (11/25/03 11:32 am) Reply	 ---- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> bird:--Worthless conjecture. What do you know about consciousness, its origins, its nature. Does consciousness arise from within the brain only? If you say yes, you are an atheist. If you say we got ourselves together, you must believe that consciousness is no more than chemical reactions in the brain matter. And if you say yes to both of these, then life does not really exist. <hr/> Not a conjecture bird! But bird do tell me where consciousness arises from?! All I know is its existence! Consciousness is not just chemical reactions, but nature loving itself! It's called life! Rhett thinks emotion doesn't sum it up well, and well he might? You're so propped up about your position!

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1053

(11/25/03 12:44 pm)

Reply

☐ life, love

---

++You're so propped up about your position!

**I'm so propped up?! Why you positively strut yours!

---

++But bird do tell me where consciousness arises from?! All I know is its existence!

**If you don't know, (and of course you don't) then who are you to say there is no God?

---

++Consciousness is not just chemical reactions, but nature loving itself!

**Very nice, I think so too. At least, I think nature loves itself, but rather, its divided self. I'm not sure where consciousness fits in, tho.

-----
++It's called life!

** How very interesting - I was thinking something quite similar the other day. That Love and Life are a kind of duality, that is, they are the core characteristics of God, one a male and one a female aspect. Of course love loves life. What else is there to love?

---

++Rhett thinks emotion doesn't sum it up well, and well he might?

** Why might he well? See, it is my understanding that love is the ultimate animator in the universe. So without emotion, if you want to call it that and perhaps we shouldn't, there is no life or universe.

---

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1054
(11/25/03 12:55 pm)
Reply

 life

---

++Surely the differences between organic life and machines are pretty self-evident when nouns are used as they were meant to be used i.e. descriptively.

* : ) Quite funny. I meant by calling them the same that there is no life in atheist-conceived life forms.

If the only kind of mind there is comes from chemical reactions within the brain which arose entirely by accident from lifeless chemicals, then humans are just computers.

---

++Electron are very much like thoughts in certain aspects, sometimes they seem to have a life of their own, but they're called electrons.

** Well, on a different note, I have thought of life as a continuum such that there is rather more or less independence and consciousness on the part of lesser life forms, such as individual cells in the body, or electrons. And we too, are just cells in some bigger organ. (A diseased one, alas!)

---

++In the second abstract above, where life (and everything else) is likened to AI in it's artificiality, it's just another perspective denying the perspective of life, viewing it from a different angle, another dimension even. All very well and good but the trouble is that in this dimension, life cannot actually be like a machine, nor AI like life, because there is nothing; no life, no machines, no artificiality, no bona fide, no likenesses, no differences, no thing, no nothing. It is therefore completely out of context, the context being demarcation, and therefore contextual abstract nonsense.

** I didn't quite get that. What do you mean "in this dimension"

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1055
(11/25/03 1:10 pm)
Reply

 more life

---

Quote:

---

Bird: In other words, despite the massive complexity of life forms and the fact of reproduction and growth, we are just big computers, machines. Chemical and electrical processes.

Either things are alive or they are not. If there is only matter, and that matter started out simple, so to speak, and by random chance collected into proteins, blah, blah, blah, and then the cell wall starts to let some things in and others out, and all the little pumps and gates run on chemical reactions and electrical charges - well isn't it a machine?

---

++What is so un-god-like about this Bird?

++I don't see how that makes it a machine and I don't see why this means that the label 'alive' has no significance.

++But could you please expand on why you think that alive/not alive relates to atheism?

---

I'm not sure how to better explain, and of course, in my last post I partially did.

Un-Godlike - not the chemical processes themselves (there is nothing in the universe that is ungodlike) but the lack of any origin than dead matter by random chance.

The label alive has no significance if all an "alive" thing is is some minerals and atoms and molecules that once were dead and when put together right begin to move and reproduce. Separate out every molecule and atom of your body and brain and fling it through the sky. Was it ever alive? If you put a car engine together and fuel it, it will run. I'm saying, that according to atheists, if you put some dead chemicals and molecules together, they will get up and run. Including the brain, your thoughts, your humor, your seeking - only the temporary combination of chemicals makes it go. Separate the chemicals and it no longer goes, just as before they were gathered together.

Is there a thing called life which animates, or is it just putting chemicals together?

It is obvious that an atheist must believe the latter.

People have said god is a mystery, but life is also a mystery.

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 404
(11/25/03 8:34 pm)
Reply

Re: more life

---

People have said god is a mystery, but life is also a mystery.

Thats probably a quotable quote, nice work.

Life is different to machines only in so far as that it seeks an independent existence. Life means that it seeks to use the environment, above and beyond of what the environment will naturally provide by it's own circumstance at it own choosing. The fact that life wasn't self forming is irrelevant. What is relevant though is that it is self-replicating.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1285
(11/26/03 3:37 am)
Reply

Re: more life

---

Self-replication, software-wise, is theoretically doable already. Someone would have to actually undertake the construction of the mechanical support mechanisms to carry out the "birthing process" of new machines.

If implemented (and it eventually will be), it even further blurs the line between life and not-life. It would be interesting to see the evolution of the process through thousands of iterations.

And if it turns out badly for humans, we always have Gov'ner Shwarzenegger to protect us.

Tharan

Hywel
Registered User
Posts: 34
(11/26/03 4:23 am)
Reply

Re: ----Happiness and Emotions

---

To Rhett,

Quote:

---

Whoa there. I agree that the state of happiness is free of desire, but it is also largely free of thought, so desire can hardly be present. Egotistical happiness is inherently impermanent, it's nature is to cycle. Once one understands the nature of happiness, that being power over one's desires - which derive from that which threatens to compromise one's non-existent self, one will no longer partake in it.

---

This is what i was saying, although perhaps "power over one's desires" is a better way to put it. Im not sure that "no longer partake" is strictly accurate though, because events will continue to take place, its just that there being no self, there is no vested interest in any particular outcome.

Quote:

---

If you are talking about emotion then i disagree. Even though ego and emotion are so tightly intertwined, they are not the same. The ego, ie. 'life', is usually the most valued attachment, but not always, examples are hard to find but kamikaze pilots might be one (suicide bombers don't count because they usually think they are going to a better life). I think most people would still prefer to live even if they knew they were never going to experience emotion, but they would find it an excruciating choice. After having experienced emotionlessness for a period of time they might well be very thankful, depending of course on the way in which their emotions were prevented from occurring. I have wanted to escape emotion for most of my life. One either has a will to consciousness and emotionlessness, or the will to unconsciousness and emotion, they are mutually incompatible.

---

Actually i was talking about attachment to happiness.

Quote:

---

It's extremely unlikely that someone would become wise without valuing wisdom, and if they value wisdom they would naturally value it's survival. Wisdom encompasses quality reasoning processes, and all good reason points to an understanding of truth being of more value that other things.

---

What you are saying is "Its extremely unlikely that someone would get a fast car without liking fast cars, and if they like fast cars they would naturally value the manufacture of fast cars." This has nothing to do with whether wisdom/fast cars should or should not be valued.

Actually, good reason says that things have no inherent value, simply the value we assign.

Or as David Quinn put it - "Ultimately, things are neither valueless nor have value. In other words, a thing only lacks value (or has value) when it is determined by us."

Quote:

---

To place another value higher than truth is illogical, because you cannot be sure that you know the truth of that value, you could well be valuing a chimera and/or acting quite contrary to what you think you are. I can tell you that this is actually the case with everyone that doesn't value truth foremost, which is basically everyone on this planet. They are radically misguided.

---

You cannot value truth, only consciousness of it. But to value say "ice cream" higher than "consciousness of truth", does not mean that you are unaware of the nature of that value. Which is, that you assign it.

Quote:

---

But do they find that good information and have a concept of its worth without being helped? Very rarely.

---

I found lots of sources of good information quite easily, although this may not be the case for everyone. Concept of worth(value) is something that people assign, it is not inherent.

Quote:

---

Whilst encouraging non-seekers certainly has a high probability of being problematic, so does doing nothing about the ignorance in this world.

---

Problematic/Perfect, same thing. But you are talking about trying to make other people share your values. That's fine but who are you to decide for other people what their values should be? They did not decide yours for you. At least seekers are actively looking for values.

Quote:

---

I suggest you take an active interest in formulating a conscious value system ASAP. You are basically suggesting that you have a passive, feminine minded approach to your value system and decisionmaking, almost as if "I am pursuing wisdom because it's what's in front of me". You have plenty of other things you could do with your life, so there must be at least a bit of valuing of wisdom in there somewhere.

---

Thanks for this, genuinely. I have been trying to formulate a value system for some time. But I have a hard time assigning value to that which shows the nature of values. Frankly, I'm looking for a good reason to do so, but perhaps ego still prevents that.

Indeed I am pursuing it because it is what's in front of me, but there doesn't seem to be much else around. Believe it or not, I count this a strength. What can defeat the man with nothing else to do? If he fails to reach his goal, he had nothing else to do and will feel no defeat! How can the man with nothing else to do be distracted, how can he be stopped?

There are an endless number of things I could do with my life, but I would need to assign value to them, and to do that arbitrarily seems defeatist. I do value wisdom, but to value it to the exclusion of all others, knowing that I choose to assign its value, there has to be a good reason, otherwise I'm just doing it as something to do.

Hywel

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1791
(11/26/03 1:10 pm)
Reply

 ---

---

Bird really was conceived by aliens, She has no understanding of the position called 'atheism' whatsoever!

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 134
(11/27/03 12:29 pm)
Reply | Edit

 Re: ----Happiness and Emotions

---

To Hywel,

-----
Rhett: Whoa there. I agree that the state of happiness is free of desire, but it is also largely free of thought, so desire can hardly be present. Egotistical happiness is inherently impermanent, it's nature is to cycle. Once one understands the nature of happiness, that being power over one's desires - which derive from that which threatens to compromise one's non-existent self, one will no longer partake in it.

-----
Hywel: This is what i was saying, although perhaps "power over one's desires" is a better way to put it.

Rhett: No. The desire for happiness is a desire for "power over one's desires", but happiness itself is the state of having power over one's desires, which is inherently transitory.

Hywel: Im not sure that "no longer partake" is strictly accurate though, because events will continue to take place, its just that there being no self, there is no vested interest in any particular outcome.

Rhett: No. Events will still take place - but the experience of emotion need not, and will not in the person that understands the nature of ego.

-----
Rhett: If you are talking about emotion then i disagree. Even though ego and emotion are so tightly intertwined, they are not the same. The ego, ie. 'life', is usually the most valued attachment, but not always, examples are hard to find but kamikaze pilots might be one (suicide bombers don't count because they usually think they are going to a better life). I think most people would still prefer to live even if they knew they were never going to experience emotion, but they would find it an excruciating choice. After having experienced emotionlessness for a period of time they might well be very thankful, depending of course on the way in which their emotions were prevented from occurring. I have wanted to escape emotion for most of my life. One either has a will to consciousness and emotionlessness, or the will to unconsciousness and emotion, they are mutually incompatible.

---

Hywel: Actually i was talking about attachment to happiness.

Rhett: To some extent you can insert 'happiness' wherever i have written emotion, but you will need to take into account that people would not consider it so bad because they would still have love...

---

It's extremely unlikely that someone would become wise without valuing wisdom, and if they value wisdom they would naturally value it's survival. Wisdom encompasses quality reasoning processes, and all good reason points to an understanding of truth being of more value than other things.

---

Hywel: What you are saying is "It's extremely unlikely that someone would get a fast car without liking fast cars, and if they like fast cars they would naturally value the manufacture of fast cars." This has nothing to do with whether wisdom/fast cars should or should not be valued.

Rhett: Sure, but my comment still conveys a valid point.

Hywel: Actually, good reason says that things have no inherent value, simply the value we assign.

Rhett: Sure, but as soon as one values reason one is on the path to the valuing of Wisdom.

Hywel: Or as David Quinn put it - "Ultimately, things are neither valueless nor have value. In other words, a thing only lacks value (or has value) when it is determined by us."

Rhett: Sure, but any conscious individual will necessarily display values, they cannot be avoided, they are as inherent to consciousness as is reason. Thus, since one must have them, one must choose which to have. Thorough reasoning will lead to the valuing of Truth foremost.

Logic, reason and valuing are inherent to consciousness. The better the quality of that consciousness, the greater will be the striving for logic over illogic, reason over whim, valuing of truth over other values.

---

Rhett: To place another value higher than truth is illogical, because you cannot be sure that you know the truth of that value, you could well be valuing a chimera and/or acting quite contrary to what you think you are. I can tell you that this is actually the case with everyone that doesn't value truth foremost, which is basically everyone on this planet. They are radically misguided.

---

Hywel: You cannot value truth, only consciousness of it. But to value say "ice cream" higher than "consciousness of truth", does not mean that you are unaware of the nature of that value. Which is, that you assign it.

Rhett: Of course, what good would truth be without consciousness of it? Valuing the truth is a simple down-to-earth act of consciousness.

For most people the valuing of ice cream would be reliant on many other articles of 'knowledge'. It would only be valued in the presence of a self to eat it, a reality in which to eat it, for the reason that the self will have a desirable experience eating it, etc. People would hold it to be certain that ice-cream is the cause of the experience that they desire, but in actual fact they can never be sure that they are related. Thus, they are deluded about the nature of their value.

---

Rhett: But do they find that good information and have a concept of its worth without being helped? Very rarely.

---

Hywel: I found lots of sources of good information quite easily, although this may not be the case for everyone. Concept of worth(value) is something that people assign, it is not inherent.

Rhett: I didn't come across any clear information on Absolute Truths till just over a year ago on this very website. Up until that point eastern philosophy was too obscure for my rational mind to give it much time at all,

i thought it was hogwash. Its truths are so faint to western eyes it takes exceptionally rare circumstances for an individual such as Kevin to analyse it and see the truth in it. There is plenty of worldly wisdom out there, but the fundamentals of enlightenment, and a viable path to it, are largely the province of this website.

---

Rhett: Whilst encouraging non-seekers certainly has a high probability of being problematic, so does doing nothing about the ignorance in this world.

---

Hywel: Problematic/Perfect, same thing. But you are talking about trying to make other people share your values. Thats fine but who are you to decide for other people what their values should be? They did not decide yours for you. At least seekers are actively looking for values.

Rhett: You could do with developing your understanding of karma. Karma relates to the causal nature of values (and behaviours). Values are transferred between people in unnumerable ways, those values which are verbalised are just an aspect of the greater act of karma. No matter what i do my values, both those that are displayed intrinsic to my behaviour and those that i verbally communicate, will have an effect on other people and vice-versa. The fact that I consciously direct my values is just a natural product of my valuing of being conscious about everthing i do. I am not trying to coerce people into adopting my values, just lead their mind towards the only justifiable value (Truth).

---

Rhett: I suggest you take an active interest in formulating a conscious value system ASAP. You are basically suggesting that you have a passive, feminine minded approach to your value system and decisionmaking, almost as if "I am pursuing wisdom because it's what's in front of me". You have plenty of other things you could do with your life, so there must be at least a bit of valuing of wisdom in there somewhere.

---

Hywel: Thanks for this, genuinely. I have been trying to formulate a value system for some time.

Rhett: Which indicates that you already have one value; values.

Hywel: But i have a hard time assigning value to that which shows the nature of values. Frankly, im looking for a good reason to do so, but perhaps ego still prevents that.

Rhett: Think about the opposite of truth; falsity. You have to value either one of them, there is no in-between. If you develop your understanding of Ultimate Truth you will soon realise just how difficult it is to attribute meaning to the false existence that most people lead, and you will naturally find Truth a more appealing value.

Hywel: Indeed I am pursuing it because it is whats in front of me, but there doesnt seem to be much else around. Believe it or not, i count this a strength.

What can defeat the man with nothing else to do? If he fails to reach his goal, he had nothing else to do and will feel no defeat! How can the man with nothing else to do be distracted, how can he be stopped?

Rhett: I think you are trying to escape the ego based fear of not being successful in your attempt to value Truth. If you are already ferociously pursuing Truth - then all you would be doing is acknowledging what you are already doing, so there is nothing to fear.

Hywel: There are an endless number of things i could do with my life, but i would need to assign value to them, and to do that arbitrarily seems defeatist.

Rhett: See, you already value reason. All you need do is acknowledge it and develop your understanding of it's nature.

Hywel: I do value wisdom, but to value it to the exclusion of all others, knowing that I choose to assign its value, there has to be a good reason, otherwise im just doing it as something to do.

Rhett: A valuing of Truth/Wisdom is not at the total exclusion of all other values, it will necessarily have sub-values, for example; the maintenance of your body, logic, reason, thinking, the elimination of ego, etc.

Rhett Hamilton

Registered User

Posts: 136

(11/27/03 1:04 pm)

Reply | Edit

Re: atheism

---

*++I call Rhett an agnost because he doesn't believe or not believe in god.
Like Quinn for instance.*

\* I agree about Quinn, which is why there is hope for him, but I don't know why you say it about Rhett.*

You're too late...

David: No, the actual content of Ultimate truth is devastating - at least for those who have a conscience.

Rhett: Certainly it is dangerous to the ego as well as the conscience. What conscience issues are of interest to you at the moment?

David: To my mind, conscience is simply the valuing of truth. So the conscience issues that concern me at the moment are the same ones that have always concerned me - namely, behavioural consistency with what is ultimately true.

How should I best spend my time? Is my mind as enlightened as it can be? How much sustenance should I give to my ego? What can I be doing to promote wisdom more effectively? Should I talk to women or ignore them? Should I continue to see my son? Should I trim my beard?

As I mentioned above, it is only uncovered when one comprehends the fact that all things lack inherent existence and pushes the logical implications of this all the way. This is devastating because it brings your entire being into the equation. The realization that one's existence isn't ultimately real is not only earth-shattering and profound, but it is also pregnant with lethal implications. The more these implications are taken on board, the more drastically one's life changes.

Rhett: This sounds very Zen.
What are the 'lethal' implications?

David: The erosion of the basis of what humans normally call "life". When a person realizes with enlightened insight that nothing really exists, he finds that he can no longer partake in the roller-coaster ride of gain and loss, success and failure, victory and defeat, love and hate, etc - that is, in the things that form the backbone of ordinary human life. From the conventional point of view, he enters a kind of living death.

Rhett: What have been the drastic changes in your life?

David: The changes are too numerous to mention, but they can be summed up in one sentence: I've been fatally wounded by God.

Rhett Hamilton

Registered User

Posts: 137

(11/27/03 1:13 pm)

Reply | Edit

 Re: more life

---

People have said god is a mystery, but life is also a mystery.

There are no mysteries to the wise man, thus he knows why people like mysteries.

Rhett

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1798

(11/27/03 11:32 pm)

Reply

 ---

---

Quote:

---

There are no mysteries to the wise man, thus he knows why people like mysteries.

Rhett

---

He also loves why, for people desire to be wise!

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1546
(11/27/03 11:44 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

People do not desire wisdom - they desire power.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1800
(11/27/03 11:53 pm)
Reply

-----

---

...do you not see enough wisdom in power to be convinced of this truth Dan?!

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1801
(11/27/03 11:55 pm)
Reply

---

---

Not to mention the power in wisdom!

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1547
(11/28/03 12:17 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Power over what?

Zag?

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1548
(11/28/03 12:24 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

What do you want power over, Zag?

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1802
(11/28/03 1:01 am)
Reply

 ---

---

Why over? Not that power does not end for us, but could you not see? Can you not? Has this word been the doom of too many for your taste?

Hywel
Registered User
Posts: 37
(11/29/03 1:04 am)
Reply

 Re - Happiness and Emotions

To Rhett,

Quote:

-----
Rhett: Whoa there. I agree that the state of happiness is free of desire, but it is also largely free of thought, so desire can hardly be present.
Egotistical happiness is inherently impermanent, it's nature is to cycle.

Once one understands the nature of happiness, that being power over one's desires - which derive from that which threatens to compromise one's non-existent self, one will no longer partake in it.

-----
Hywel: This is what i was saying, although perhaps "power over one's desires" is a better way to put it.

Rhett: No. The desire for happiness is a desire for "power over one's desires", but happiness itself is the state of having power over one's desires, which is inherently transitory.

-----
But isnt understanding the nature of desire a form of "power over desire", even if there is no emotional feeling of happiness?

Quote:

Hywel: Im not sure that "no longer partake" is strictly accurate though, because events will continue to take place, its just that there being no self, there is no vested interest in any particular outcome.

Rhett: No. Events will still take place - but the experience of emotion need not, and will not in the person that understands the nature of ego.

---

So you say that understanding the nature of ego gives "power over emotion", but not that understanding of desire gives "power over desire"?

Quote:

---

-----

It's extremely unlikely that someone would become wise without valuing wisdom, and if they value wisdom they would naturally value it's survival.

Wisdom encompasses quality reasoning processes, and all good reason points to an understanding of truth being of more value that other things.

-----

Hywel: What you are saying is "Its extremely unlikely that someone would get a fast car without liking fast cars, and if they like fast cars they would naturally value the manufacture of fast cars." This has nothing to do with whether wisdom/fast cars should or should not be valued.

Rhett: Sure, but my comment still conveys a valid point.

---

That whatever you value you will likely continue to value? To learn about something you need to value it? I confess I'm not sure what your point is.

Quote:

---

Hywel: Actually, good reason says that things have no inherent value, simply the value we assign.

Rhett: Sure, but as soon as one values reason one is on the path to the valuing of Wisdom.

---

You dont have to value reason in order use reason, or in order to reason correctly. As evidenced by the large numbers of people who take reason completely for granted, but manage to cross the road safely on a regular basis.

Quote:

---

Hywel: Or as David Quinn put it - "Ultimately, things are neither valueless nor have value. In other words, a thing only lacks value (or has value) when it is determined by us."

Rhett: Sure, but any conscious individual will necessarily display values, they cannot be avoided, they are as inherent to consciousness as is reason. Thus, since one must have them, one must choose which to have. Thorough reasoning will lead to the valuing of Truth foremost.

---

Indeed, one must choose which to have. Can you take me through the reasoning that leads to the valuing of consciousness of Truth foremost? You cannot value Truth (see below).

Quote:

---

-----

Rhett: To place another value higher than truth is illogical, because you cannot be sure that you know the truth of that value, you could well be valuing a chimera and/or acting quite contrary to what you think you are. I can tell you that this is actually the case with everyone that doesn't value truth foremost, which is basically everyone on this planet. They are radically misguided.

-----

Hywel: You cannot value truth, only consciousness of it. But to value say "ice cream" higher than "consciousness of truth", does not mean that you are unaware of the nature of that value. Which is, that you assign it.

Rhett: Of course, what good would truth be without consciousness of it? Valuing the truth is a simple down-to-earth act of consciousness.

---

Truth remains entirely unaffected by consciousness of it, or lack thereof. You cannot value "the truth", you can only value "knowing what the truth is".

Quote:

---

For most people the valuing of ice cream would be reliant on many other articles of 'knowledge'. It would only be valued in the presence of a self to eat it, a reality in which to eat it, for the reason that the self will have a desirable experience eating it, etc. People would hold it to be certain that ice-cream is the cause of the experience that they desire, but in actual fact they can never be sure that they are related. Thus, they are deluded about the nature of their value.

---

Potentially deluded. As you said yourself "One must choose which (values) to have." Ice-cream is a potential value, although admittedly an unlikely one.

Quote:

---

-----
Rhett: But do they find that good information and have a concept of its worth without being helped? Very rarely.
-----

Hywel: I found lots of sources of good information quite easily, although this may not be the case for everyone. Concept of worth (value) is something that people assign, it is not inherent.

Rhett: I didn't come across any clear information on Absolute Truths till just over a year ago on this very website. Up until that point eastern philosophy was too obscure for my rational mind to give it much time at all, i thought it was hogwash. Its truths are so faint to western eyes it takes exceptionally rare circumstances for an individual such as Kevin to analyse it and see the truth in it.

---

I found enough to get me started from many sources. But I got my first specific information (and frankly, help) from those very eastern philosophies you thought were all hogwash. I admit don't have much taste for the epic poem style of the sutras, but when I came across zen koans and stories, initially through the books of D.T.Suzuki, I hit a wall.

At first, I was confused, they were clearly madmen talking rubbish, but I think I was intrigued by why someone would collect the sayings of madmen, and pass them down for hundreds of years. Clearly this has also happened with a lot of other religions, but usually they weren't quite such obvious madmen!

The fact that you don't really know what they are saying makes it pretty hard to attack their viewpoint, so in order to do that, you have to find out what their viewpoint is. I think that's pretty much how it worked for me.

With hindsight, the truths expressed in many of these koans seem very clear to me, and many of them seem to have been deliberately written so they are either gibberish, or make complete sense, highlighting the truth of it, really.

I also found them useful because they are easy to remember (I generally have a bad memory), and you can test them in the light of current understanding any time you please, very useful when you don't know any sages. I even went so far as to "write my own" in order to remember things I thought were important.

As such, I found reading David and Kevin's respective books more a consolidation of what I already knew than a revelation from start to finish, although they clearly also speak from an understanding I do not currently possess.

Quote:

---

There is plenty of worldly wisdom out there, but the fundamentals of enlightenment, and a viable path to it, are largely the province of this website.

---

I personally think there is plenty of wisdom out there, there's plenty of rubbish too, but this is the case with all information. The path you take does not begin or end with this website. I have found www.advaita.org to be a useful source of information, among many others online, although clearly it may not be to your rational tastes.

Quote:

---

-----
Rhett: Whilst encouraging non-seekers certainly has a high probability of being problematic, so does doing nothing about the ignorance in this world.
-----

Hywel: Problematic/Perfect, same thing. But you are talking about trying to make other people share your values. Thats fine but who are you to decide for other people what their values should be? They did not decide yours for you. At least seekers are actively looking for values.

Rhett: You could do with developing your understanding of karma. Karma relates to the causal nature of values (and behaviours). Values are transferred between people in unnumerable ways, those values which are verbalised are just an aspect of the greater act of karma. No matter what i do my values, both those that are displayed intrinsic to my behaviour and those that i verbally communicate, will have an effect on other people and vice-versa. The fact that I consciously direct my values is just a natural product of my valuing of being conscious about everthing i do. I am not trying to coerce people into adopting my values, just lead their mind towards the only justifiable value (Truth).

---

This was a rather stupid thing for me to say, clearly everything effects everything else, and obviously a thing "affected" or "unaffected" is "perfect" in either case. I suppose my only issue is why consciousness of truth is the only justifiable value.

Quote:

---

-----
Rhett: I suggest you take an active interest in formulating a conscious value system ASAP. You are basically suggesting that you have a passive, feminine minded approach to your value system and decisionmaking, almost as if "I am pursuing wisdom because it's what's in front of me". You have plenty of other things you could do with your life, so there must be at least a bit of valuing of wisdom in there somewhere.
-----

Hywel: Thanks for this, genuinely. I have been trying to formulate a value system for some time.

Rhett: Which indicates that you already have one value; values.

---

Indeed, which leads to the question "Should I value values?" If i do not wish to be aimless and random in my effects, then i had better value values, and decide which values to have too.

Quote:

---

Hywel: But i have a hard time assigning value to that which shows the nature of values. Frankly, im looking for a good reason to do so, but perhaps ego still prevents that.

Rhett: Think about the opposite of truth; falsity. You have to value either one of them, there is no in-between.

---

You would have to "know the truth" in order to be able to value "knowing falsity", otherwise it would not be "knowing falsity" you were valuing.

Quote:

---

If you develop your understanding of Ultimate Truth you will soon realise just how difficult it is to attribute meaning to the false existence that most people lead, and you will naturally find Truth a more appealing value.

---

Most peoples existence is not false until they realise that it is, in this sense their existence is entirely authentic and true. It is only a false existence if you realise that what you believe is false, and ignore it, or also find out what is true, and ignore it. I lead a false existence. However, most people do not percieve their existence as false, and therefore it is not false, its true,  $A=A$ .

Quote:

---

Hywel: Indeed I am pursuing it because it is whats in front of me, but there doesnt seem to be much else around. Believe it or not, i count this a strength.

What can defeat the man with nothing else to do? If he fails to reach his goal, he had nothing else to do and will feel no defeat! How can the man with nothing else to do be distracted, how can he be stopped?

Rhett: I think you are trying to escape the ego based fear of not being successful in your attempt to value Truth. If you are already ferociously pursuing Truth - then all you would be doing is acknowledging what you are already doing, so there is nothing to fear.

---

This could well be the case, indeed i tell myself whatever is necessary to keep going. Otherwise i would be quite overawed by the task in hand. But you dont get to the top of a mountain just by wanting to be there, although this is also required. You also need to put one foot in front of the other, to be unstoppable, glacial. Just wanting to be at the top of the mountain doesnt provide enough energy for this alone.

I do fear failure, but this is what i tell myself so that it doesnt become paralysing. And acknowledging that i am already doing something doesnt allay fears over whether i should be doing it or not.

Quote:

---

Hywel: There are an endless number of things i could do with my life, but i would need to assign value to them, and to do that arbitrarily seems defeatist.

Rhett: See, you already value reason. All you need do is acknowledge it and develop your understanding of it's nature.

---

I do acknowledge it and am attempting to do so.

Quote:

---

Hywel: I do value wisdom, but to value it to the exclusion of all others, knowing that I choose to assign its value, there has to be a good reason, otherwise im just doing it as something to do.

Rhett: A valuing of Truth/Wisdom is not at the total exclusion of all other values, it will necessarily have sub-values, for example;

the maintenance of your body, logic, reason, thinking, the elimination of ego,
etc.

---

Perhaps "subjugation" would have been a better word, in that everything is valued in relation to whether it promotes or is necessary for wisdom, or not.

Hywel

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1057

(11/29/03 12:07 pm)

Reply

 hee-haw

---

Quote:

---

Anna: People have said god is a mystery, but life is also a mystery.

Rhett: There are no mysteries to the wise man, thus he knows why people like mysteries.

Suergaz: Bird really was conceived by aliens, She has no understanding of the position called 'atheism' whatsoever!

---

Oh, you two asses!

Explain, Rhett, the mystery of life.

And what, Suergaz, is the position of the atheist that I don't understand?

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

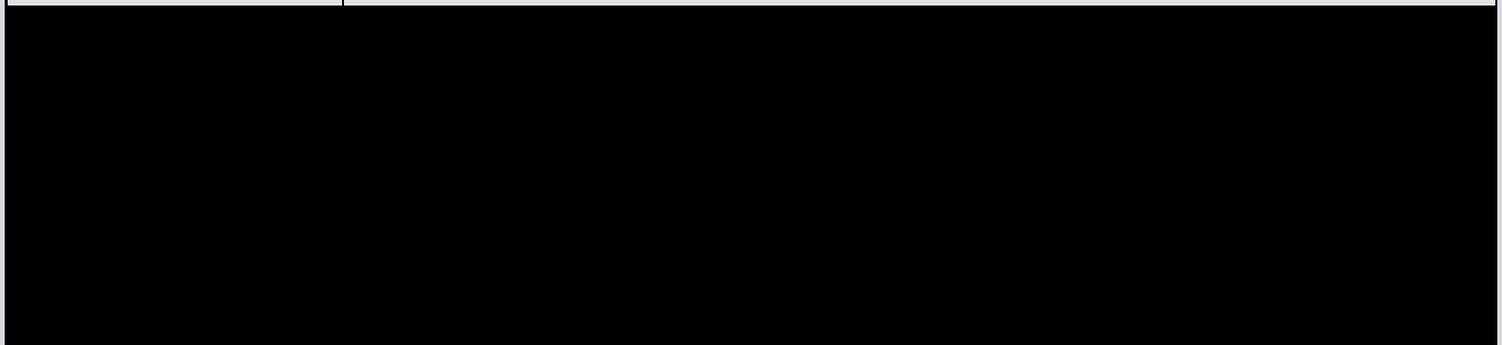

> Emotion - a false and deadly notion

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Paul Registered User Posts: 310 (11/29/03 3:11 pm) Reply	 Re: hee-haw <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Rhett: There are no mysteries to the wise man, thus he knows why people like mysteries. birdofhermes: Explain, Rhett, the mystery of life. <hr/> He can't, because he's a wise man, he just said so.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1815 (11/29/03 3:43 pm) Reply	 ---- <hr/> The atheist position consists of nothing other than not believing in God. It's as simple as that Anna! I bet your two daughters are atheists!

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1059
(11/30/03 12:50 pm)
Reply

☐ hee-haw

---

birdofhermes: Explain, Rhett, the mystery of life.

He can't, because he's a wise man, he just said so.

^^

Actually, after reading his recent other thread, I believe I understand now. Life was caused, you see. and it is delusional thinking to peer any deeper.

||||||||||||||||||||

The atheist position consists of nothing other than not believing in God.

It's as simple as that Anna! ^^^

In other words, as I suspected but was too kind to say, it is you who have not thought about the meaning of atheism.

And I'm annoyed that neither you nor Toast, (who asked) has actually given any real thought to what I said.

^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^

I bet your two daughters are atheists!

**There are no atheists.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 145
(11/30/03 1:09 pm)
Reply | Edit

☐ Re: Re - Happiness and Emotions

---

To Hywel,

-----
Rhett: Whoa there. I agree that the state of happiness is free of desire, but it is also largely free of thought, so desire can hardly be present. Egotistical happiness is inherently impermanent, it's nature is to cycle. Once one understands the nature of happiness, that being power over one's desires - which derive from that which threatens to compromise one's non-existent self, one will no longer partake in it.

Hywel: This is what i was saying, although perhaps "power over one's desires" is a better way to put it.

Rhett: No. The desire for happiness is a desire for "power over one's desires", but happiness itself is the state of having power over one's desires, which is inherently transitory.

-----
Hywel: But isnt understanding the nature of desire a form of "power over desire", even if there is no emotional feeling of happiness?

Rhett: It's important to consider that complete understanding of a topic doesn't come overnight. When i used the word 'understanding' i meant it in the sense of complete and utter comprehension, the complete absence of doubt. Even once one has a solid intellectual concept of the nature of desire there still remains a period of time for it to become integrated with one's innermost thoughts and everyday existence.

Going back to your question, you could say that through one's initial understanding of the nature of desire one can direct one's will against one's desires (during the transition phase from egotism to enlightenment). But this in fact will ideally manifest as further development of one's understanding. So in effect, understanding (ideally) leads to the willpower to further understanding.

It is important to ensure that one's will is directed towards the elimination of desire at its source (ignorance), rather than the suppression of it. Suppression actually blocks further growth. Most people are already suppressors, because suppression develops in concert with the ego and desire. However, whilst i am not advocating suppression, nor am i advocating the immediate cessation of one's existing suppression. Most people would become a mess in no time at all if they did this! One's existing suppression needs to be cut back in concert with one's development of their capability to deal with one's desires (through understanding).

I can give a personal example to this, but it is beyond desire, it is more related to mindfulness, to direct perception of reality (versus the experience of false imagery). Yesterday i walked along a few beaches on a summery day with plenty of topless women around tanning (exposing) themselves. I deliberately looked at them as a test to see how i dealt with it. You could say there was the potential for four scenarios as i walked along:

1. No sexual imagery arises (ideal).
2. I alleviate any sexual imagery that arises through breaking through its falsity (second best).
3. I simply go with any sexual imagery that arises, let my imagination run free (this is okay if i then try to reflect on it and break through it).
4. Suppress any sexual imagery that arises (may occur automatically, accept it and work on my understanding).

I realise that this topic is highly loaded and thus that few will see it for what it is, all i can suggest is to keep in mind that i could be referring to any kind of false thought. For example; When someone's favourite football team is playing against another team - they often experience an element of fear that 'their' team will lose. This is because they have attached their ego to it, they are trying to give it a grounding in reality, and are thus desiring to share in the emotion of the win or loss. This is despite the fact that they and the team do not even inherently exist! What a remarkably misguided way to spend one's life.

---

Hywel: Im not sure that "no longer partake" is strictly accurate though, because events will continue to take place, its just that there being no self, there is no vested interest in any particular outcome.

Rhett: No. Events will still take place - but the experience of emotion need not, and will not in the person that understands the nature of ego.

---

Hywel: So you say that understanding the nature of ego gives "power over emotion", but not that understanding of desire gives "power over desire"?

Rhett: Understanding the nature of ego gives one power over emotion in the same sense as i mentioned above.

---

Rhett: It's extremely unlikely that someone would become wise without valuing wisdom, and if they value wisdom they would naturally value it's survival. Wisdom encompasses quality reasoning processes, and all good reason points to an understanding of truth being of more value that other things.

Hywel: What you are saying is "Its extremely unlikely that someone would get a fast car without liking fast cars, and if they like fast cars they would naturally value the manufacture of fast cars." This has nothing to do with whether wisdom/fast cars should or should not be valued.

Rhett: Sure, but my comment still conveys a valid point.

---

Hywel: That whatever you value you will likely continue to value? To learn about something you need to value it? I confess I'm not sure what your point is.

Rhett: Yes. Whatever you value for good reason you are likely to continue to value, and becoming enlightened is all about consciousness - so you really need to consciously value the truth. The path is too difficult for it to not be consciously valued and re-affirmed, and to be used as a corrective tool if one's efforts stray.

---

Hywel: Actually, good reason says that things have no inherent value, simply the value we assign.

Rhett: Sure, but as soon as one values reason one is on the path to the valuing of Wisdom.

---

Hywel: You dont have to value reason in order use reason, or in order to reason correctly. As evidenced by the large numbers of people who take reason completely for granted, but manage to cross the road safely on a regular basis.

Rhett: Sure, but why not admit a conscious valuing of that which you intrinsically value? It's just part of the process of understanding the nature of your processes. If you take a conscious interest in it you are more likely to learn about its nature, at least until you are sure you understand it well enough to relegate it to automatic status again.

---

Hywel: Or as David Quinn put it - "Ultimately, things are neither valueless nor have value. In other words, a thing only lacks value (or has value) when it is determined by us."

Rhett: Sure, but any conscious individual will necessarily display values, they cannot be avoided, they are as inherent to consciousness as is reason. Thus, since one must have them, one must choose which to have. Thorough reasoning will lead to the valuing of Truth foremost.

---

Hywel: Indeed, one must choose which to have. Can you take me through the reasoning that leads to the valuing of consciousness of Truth foremost? You cannot value Truth (see below).

Rhett: See below.

---

Rhett: To place another value higher than truth is illogical, because you cannot be sure that you know the truth of that value, you could well be valuing a chimera and/or acting quite contrary to what you think you are. I can tell you that this is actually the case with everyone that doesn't value truth foremost, which is basically everyone on this planet. They are radically misguided.

Hywel: You cannot value truth, only consciousness of it. But to value say "ice cream" higher than "consciousness of truth", does not mean that you are unaware of the nature of that value. Which is, that you assign it.

Rhett: Of course, what good would truth be without consciousness of it? Valuing the truth is a simple down-to-earth act of consciousness.

---

Hywel: Truth remains entirely unaffected by consciousness of it, or lack thereof. You cannot value "the truth", you can only value "knowing what the truth is".

Rhett: I have actually already given you the essence of the reasoning process that leads to a valuing of truth. I suggest you have a deeper think about it.

You seem to be trying to explore the nature of Truth at the same time as the conscious valuing of it, but to do so is only confusing. Anyone that is conscious is necessarily dealing in concepts, so to state a valuing of truth is wholly acceptable and appropriate. During the state of enlightenment one will experience Truth, but you aren't there yet so don't worry about it.

---

Rhett: For most people the valuing of ice cream would be reliant on many other articles of 'knowledge'. It would only be valued in the presence of a self to eat it, a reality in which to eat it, for the reason that the self will have a desirable experience eating it, etc. People would hold it to be certain that ice-cream is the cause of the experience that they desire, but in actual fact they can never be sure that they are related. Thus, they are deluded about the nature of their value.

---

Hywel: Potentially deluded. As you said yourself "One must choose which (values) to have." Ice-cream is a potential value, although admittedly an unlikely one.

Rhett: Only if they were enlightened would they not be deluded about the nature of their valuing of ice-cream.

---

Rhett: But do they find that good information and have a concept of its worth without being helped? Very rarely.

Hywel: I found lots of sources of good information quite easily, although this may not be the case for everyone. Concept of worth(value) is something that people assign, it is not inherent.

Rhett: I didn't come across any clear information on Absolute Truths till just over a year ago on this very website. Up until that point eastern philosophy was too obscure for my rational mind to give it much time at all, i thought it was hogwash. Its truths are so faint to western eyes it takes exceptionally rare circumstances for an individual such as Kevin to analyse it and see the truth in it.

---

Hywel: I found enough to get me started from many sources. But I got my first specific information (and frankly, help) from those very eastern philosophies you thought were all hogwash. I admit dont have much taste for the epic poem style of the sutras, but when i came across zen koans and stories, initially through the books of D.T.Suzuki, i hit a wall.

At first, i was confused, they were clearly madmen talking rubbish, but i think i was intregued by why someone would collect the sayings of madmen, and pass them down for hundreds of years. Clearly this has also happened with a lot of other religions, but usually they werent quite such obvious madmen!

The fact that you dont really know what they are saying makes it pretty hard to attack their viewpoint, so in order to do that, you have to find out what their viewpoint is. I think thats pretty much how it worked for me.

Rhett: Yes, there is only one form of criticism: informed. If you aren't informed about something you aren't criticising it, just your imagining of what it is. For me it was a matter of finding science more explorable, so i apportioned my time accordingly. But i approached science in my own way, and managed to reason a fair way towards the falsity of inherent existence.

Hywel: With hindsight, the truths expressed in many of these koans seem very clear to me, and many of them seem to have been deliberately written so they are either gibberish, or make complete sense, highlighting the truth of it, really.

I also found them useful because they are easy to remember (i generally have a bad memory), and you can test them in the light of current understanding any time you please, very useful when you dont know any sages. I even went so far as to "write my own" in order to remember things i thought were important.

As such, i found reading David and Kevin's respective books more a consolidation of what i already knew than a revelation from start to finish, although they clearly also speak from an understanding i do not currently possess.

Rhett: I also came into contact with zen. I didn't have enough understanding at the time to get much from koans, but the various sayings were quite helpful. I remember the one about the sage that walked up to a clifftop, and seeing a number of cubs surrounding a dead lioness, jumped off the cliff to feed them. It was obviously about the 'value' of existence and the death of ego.

However, these can never substitute for proper understanding, they were meant to be the 'nail-in-the-coffin' of an aready well developed understanding of the nature of reality. The thing is, with the level of understanding that is now possible with the information on this website, i fail to see a significant value in these. Sure, they could be used in addition to this information, but once the understanding is there one can by-and-large answer all koans. This point was illustrated in the thread 'Oneness'.

I don't mean to argue against the validity of these koans, or their value to you, i am just questioning their usefulness in the current mileu.

---

Rhett: There is plenty of worldly wisdom out there, but the fundamentals of enlightenment, and a viable path to it, are largely the province of this website.

---

Hywel: I personally think there is plenty of wisdom out there, theres plenty of rubbish too, but this is the case with all information. The path you take does not begin or end with this website. I have found www.advaita.org to be a useful source of information, among many others online, although clearly it may not be to your rational tastes.

Rhett: Any information that does not have a rational basis, or that might or does have a rational basis without elucidate the nature of it's basis, is dangerous. There is just too much hogwash out there. Anyone that is not enlightened cannot reliably provide information to people that will facilitate their enlightenment. There are so many people talking about enlightenment that have just grabbed onto the words of enlightened people and are re-iterating them, and are thus spoiling their essence.

I know someone that is a good example of this. He has faith that everything both exists and doesn't exist, and through meditation tries to encompass this into his everyday life. But at bottom he is still highly deluded, he has no idea of the nature of existence/non-existence, and thus still has an ego. Since he spent many years meditating on such unconventional concepts that he didn't understand he burnt out his spirit. He now pursues astrology and all sorts of faith based frippery in an attempt to squash his consciousness (though he probably did this before as well). He is starting to think that i do understand what i claim to know, but his ego is so attached to the niche he has created for it i regard him as unlikely to change course.

---

Rhett: Whilst encouraging non-seekers certainly has a high probability of being problematic, so does doing nothing about the ignorance in this world.

Hywel: Problematic/Perfect, same thing. But you are talking about trying to make other people share your values. Thats fine but who are you to decide for other people what their values should be? They did not decide yours for you. At least seekers are actively looking for values.

Rhett: You could do with developing your understanding of karma. Karma relates to the causal nature of values (and behaviours). Values are transferred between people in unnumerable ways, those values which are verbalised are just an aspect of the greater act of karma. No matter what i do my values, both those that are displayed intrinsic to my behaviour and those that i verbally communicate, will have an effect on other people and vice-versa. The fact that I consciously direct my values is just a natural product of my valuing of being conscious about everthing i do. I am not trying to coerce people into adopting my values, just lead their mind towards the only justifiable value (Truth).

---

Hywel: This was a rather stupid thing for me to say, clearly everything effects everything else, and obviously a thing "affected" or "unaffected" is "perfect" in either case. I suppose my only issue is why consciousness of truth is the only justifiable value.

Rhett: Okay, try to justify another value to me.

---

Rhett: I suggest you take an active interest in formulating a conscious value system ASAP. You are basically suggesting that you have a passive, feminine minded approach to your value system and decisionmaking, almost as if "I am pursuing wisdom because it's what's in front of me". You have plenty of other things you could do with your life, so there must be at least a bit of valuing of wisdom in there somewhere.

Hywel: Thanks for this, genuinely. I have been trying to formulate a value system for some time.

Rhett: Which indicates that you already have one value; values.

---

Hywel: Indeed, which leads to the question "Should I value values?" If i do not wish to be aimless and random in my effects, then i had better value values, and decide which values to have too.

Rhett: It's all but impossible to escape values without escaping consciousness. If you try to be aimless and random, you are in effect valuing aimlessness and randomness.

---

Hywel: But i have a hard time assigning value to that which shows the nature of values. Frankly, im looking for a good reason to do so, but perhaps ego still prevents that.

Rhett: Think about the opposite of truth; falsity. You have to value either one of them, there is no in-between.

---

Hywel: You would have to "know the truth" in order to be able to value "knowing falsity", otherwise it would not be "knowing falsity" you were valuing.

Rhett: Yes. You could state a valuing of falsity without knowledge of the truth, but you could not be sure that those 'false' things that you were valuing were in fact false.

---

Rhett: If you develop your understanding of Ultimate Truth you will soon realise just how difficult it is to attribute meaning to the false existence that most people lead, and you will naturally find Truth a more appealing value.

---

Hywel: Most peoples existence is not false until they realise that it is, in this sense their existence is entirely authentic and true. It is only a false existence if you realise that what you believe is false, and ignore it, or also find out what is true, and ignore it. I lead a false existence. However, most people do not percieve their existence as false, and therefore it is not false, its true,  $A=A$ .

Rhett: I agree with the essence of what you are saying, but i would say that people attempt to convince themselves that their existence is meaningful beyond their own ascribing of it, and that they inevitably fail to do so. They can never be successful whilst they are deluded about the nature of reality. Even if they realise that meaning is purely ascribed, they still need something for their ego to hold on to, so they struggle to find meaning, or struggle with a sense of meaninglessness.

---

Hywel: Indeed I am pursuing it because it is what's in front of me, but there doesn't seem to be much else around. Believe it or not, I count this a strength.

What can defeat the man with nothing else to do? If he fails to reach his goal, he had nothing else to do and will feel no defeat! How can the man with nothing else to do be distracted, how can he be stopped?

Rhett: I think you are trying to escape the ego-based fear of not being successful in your attempt to value Truth. If you are already ferociously pursuing Truth - then all you would be doing is acknowledging what you are already doing, so there is nothing to fear.

---

Hywel: This could well be the case, indeed I tell myself whatever is necessary to keep going. Otherwise I would be quite overawed by the task in hand. But you don't get to the top of a mountain just by wanting to be there, although this is also required. You also need to put one foot in front of the other, to be unstoppable, glacial. Just wanting to be at the top of the mountain doesn't provide enough energy for this alone.

I do fear failure, but this is what I tell myself so that it doesn't become paralyzing. And acknowledging that I am already doing something doesn't allay fears over whether I should be doing it or not.

Rhett: It is interesting to look at one's core drives or motivations. They can certainly be hard to face up to! I was pushed to learn rather savagely by an incredible degree of suffering. Whilst my conscience was king, I could not unseat my ego, I was a super-superego, one of Nietzsche's 'supermen'. Thus, my valuing of my liberation from suffering has run a close race with my valuing of truth, but thankfully they are quite compatible. So whilst the ideal is a pure and unadulterated core valuing of truth, one's liberation is an important and inevitable aspect of that.

---

Hywel: There are an endless number of things i could do with my life, but i would need to assign value to them, and to do that arbitrarily seems defeatist.

Rhett: See, you already value reason. All you need do is acknowledge it and develop your understanding of it's nature.

---

Hywel: I do acknowledge it and am attempting to do so.

Rhett: Here is another personal tale...It gets pretty interesting once you get to the point where you are reasoning that the legs that appear to your mind (in the instance that that is all you can see) are most probably connected to a body which is most probably the vehicle for your consciousness...

---

Hywel: I do value wisdom, but to value it to the exclusion of all others, knowing that I choose to assign its value, there has to be a good reason, otherwise im just doing it as something to do.

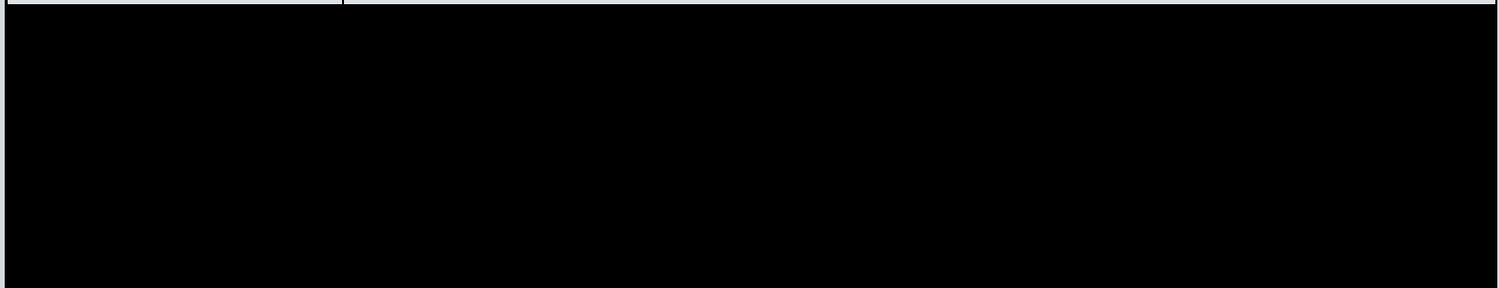

Rhett: A valuing of Truth/Wisdom is not at the total exclusion of all other values, it will necessarily have sub-values, for example; the maintenance of your body, logic, reason, thinking, the elimination of ego, etc.

---

Hywel: Perhaps "subjugation" would have been a better word, in that everything is valued in relation to whether it promotes or is necessary for wisdom, or not.

Rhett: I agree with your use of the word, but even though it could be said that Truth exerts power over one's other values (sub-values), i see it as a natural and harmonious distinction, there is no power-play or infighting amongst one's values.

Rhett Hamilton Registered User Posts: 146 (11/30/03 1:19 pm) Reply   Edit	 Re: hee-haw <hr/> Anna: People have said god is a mystery, but life is also a mystery. Rhett: There are no mysteries to the wise man, thus he knows why people like mysteries. Anna: Explain, Rhett, the mystery of life. Rhett: 'Life' is a conceptual construct of consciousness. It has no meaning or existence (or anything you care to think of) beyond that.
Paul Registered User Posts: 312 (11/30/03 1:35 pm) Reply	 Re: hee-haw <hr/> You're serious, aren't ya, Rhett? LOL
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1819 (11/30/03 2:47 pm) Reply	 ---- <hr/> Anna, if there are no atheists, there are no theists or agnostics either. Rhett, be true to life! Life is not only a construct of consciousness!
voce io Registered User Posts: 414 (11/30/03 3:58 pm) Reply	 ... <hr/> Rhett: 'Life' is a conceptual construct of consciousness. Ha! No.
G Shantz Registered User Posts: 424 (11/30/03 10:43 pm) Reply	 life <hr/> What is it, then? Give us your definition and I'll see how I like it.

birdofhermes Registered User Posts: 1061 (12/1/03 12:20 am) Reply	 hee-haw <hr/> Anna, if there are no atheists, there are no theists or agnostics either. ^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^ And how does that follow?
voce io Registered User Posts: 415 (12/1/03 10:45 am) Reply	 Re: life <hr/> Why are you looking for a definition? There isn't one. Even saying it's a "conceptual construct" is a conceptual construct itself. You can't define life. All philosophy is illusion.
Rhett Hamilton Registered User Posts: 149 (12/1/03 11:20 am) Reply   Edit	 Re: life <hr/> Why are you looking for a definition? There isn't one. Even saying it's a "conceptual construct" is a conceptual construct itself. You can't define life. All philosophy is illusion. If what you say was true then all thought would be illusion, but since i know i am thinking now i know you are wrong. If we didn't give words word-based definitions communication would be exceptionally simplistic. We would just have labels, ie. Sun = Sun, Cloud = Cloud, etc. So if you saw someone trying to dry some clothes in the shade you might say "sun" to indicate to them they need to consider the sun in relation to what they are doing. However, since we could not possibly think without concepts, and concepts rely on definitions, our thought processes would be nothing like what i indicated in the above example. We would be bereft of abstract reasoning. We would be intellectually equivalent to a monkey that has been taught sign language. If we were any more conscious than this we would invent definitions. Thus, all communication would become highly contextual and ambiguous. If someone was shivering you could say "clothes", and to make it really complex you could say "clothes sun". Sentence joining words like 'to', 'and', etc would be meaningless without a definition. In other words, our language would be reduced to that which we directly experience in the form of purely sensorial inputs to consciousness (visual images, sounds, sensations, tastes, smells).

	Rhett
voce io Registered User Posts: 417 (12/1/03 5:56 pm) Reply	Re: life <hr/> If what you say was true then all thought would be illusion, but since i know i am thinking now i know you are wrong. Anything I say is not true. Anything you say is also not true. You can't know what you are thinking now, and you can't know that I am wrong. The rest of your reply to my reply to your original statement is wasted space. Everyone knows how concepts and definitions work. They are illusions. My intent in first replying was to show you how stupid it is when you say "life is a conceptual construct", because that statement itself is a conceptual construct. Everything we think about is a conceptual construct, but what enables the mind to create conceptual constructs is the lives of our bodies, and what enables that is the life of the universe. Once again, this isn't true.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1831 (12/2/03 10:53 am) Reply	--- <hr/> Anna, atheism is the final and highest position of the three in question. It wants itself and an end for itself, it actually incorporates the other two positions while agnosticism attempts to do so, and theism does not at all. It follows that if atheism is not at all, the others cannot be.
jimhaz Registered User Posts: 412 (12/2/03 10:56 pm) Reply 	Re: --- <hr/> Comment: I' m not sure of what prompted this post, so I'll just post it on this thread. I just re read the initial post and see that I'm not saying anything that has already been said before. What I'm reading here must be having a large affect on the way I think about things, that is when I choose to think OR perhaps am I being competitively herdish and unknowingly trying to fit into the wings of the leaders of the forum. Darn good question if I say so myself. Speaking in terms of practicalities, when if you look at the act of joining with another for concentrated attention, be it your god or another person, you naturally have to make comprises that are logical only in the broader scope of the relationship. As you never find out what your extremes are - and with your more experienced mindset rather than a young adult one - then you can never really know yourself. Of course that is not to say that that the average single person is any better off, as they are still subservient to societies accepted patterns of emotional response, and thus many become worriers and succumb to looping emotional responses, leading to negative behaviour and habits.

In a way enlightenment achieved through accurate reasoning is the supreme mastery of the consciousness. Consciousness has accelerated evolution so swiftly after evolution itself began from inanimate materials. Life is just the universes decentralised control of it's immediate environment. It is the object the universe inadvertently creates to observe itself. We should be content, we have no choice but to be as we are. The universe moves so we move. What we are though is a thing that wants more control over its destiny, it wants to see more of the universe.

We would not have evolved to the state where we are here today if we did not develop emotions. Our present causes make them remain appropriate, as the breeding grounds for non-emotional humans, other than as a rarity, clearly do not exist. Still, in gradually removing at least one's reactionary emotions, then a new level of perception can be realised.

We all enjoy knowledge, music, entertainment, art, humour and emotions that our brains has not seen before, that are original to us, and all these give one a sense of heightened perception. Some also enjoy a different form of perception from achieving total concentration, most often realised through drugs, sport and sex. In experiencing any of these human activities we generally attempt to apply logic and reason to the manner in which we partake, except that few apply logic to their emotions. They only apply logic as it is relevant to other emotions, so the level of reasoning that can be applied is quite restricted.

It is difficult to improve something if you don't have full understanding of it's constituent parts. Most complex things need to be taken apart and examined. In any decision making situation, if you don't separate emotion from reasoning, then you leave yourself open to making illogical decisions. It also means you will have a life of deja vu, continually repeating something you have already experienced until something makes you spin out of the orbit of that emotional loop.

After first looking dispassionately at something then one should be more competent in applying the appropriate emotional response to one's brain and relaying that to others. We all try and to do that, but we tend get lost in the complexity. Therefore one needs a grounding, a place from which logical decisions can flow. Of course under every layer is another, so until one understands ultimate reality one can never really be assured of their decisions and will therefore always have an underlying sense of incompleteness.

It might be said that the ego is the sum of ones emotions, and that removing ones emotions is a deadening of the soul (I've said it myself), but perhaps what one does in removing the overt human emotions is find a purer emotion that we all experience from time to time. I'm not enlightened so I don't recognise what that is, but I do know it is something to do with personal satisfaction. I think we can tell from the confidence of anyone who claims to be enlightened that the ego remains.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1068

(12/3/03 5:36 am)

Reply

 atheism

---

Quote:

---

Anna, atheism is the final and highest position of the three in question. It wants itself and an end for itself, it actually incorporates the other two positions while agnosticism attempts to do so, and theism does not at all. It follows that if atheism is not at all, the others cannot be.

---

In what way does it incorporate the other two?

I believe there are many people who have lived and died without ever imagining a concept like atheism. What about that?

suergaz Registered User Posts: 1843 (12/3/03 10:54 am) Reply	 ---- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> I believe there are many people who have lived and died without ever imagining a concept like atheism. What about that? <hr/> What about it? The unsung casualties of consciousness!
birdofhermes Registered User Posts: 1070 (12/3/03 10:56 am) Reply	 The Trinity <hr/> Sheesh, Suergaz, how does atheism incorporate agnosticism and deism?
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1846 (12/3/03 11:11 am) Reply	 ---- <hr/> By being the only genuine corporal position of the three.
birdofhermes Registered User Posts: 1072 (12/3/03 11:20 am) Reply	 atheism <hr/> If you were even as close as California, I'd drive out there to personally grab your shirt collar and smack your skull against a hard surface a few times...hell, I'd go to Alaska to do it. But you are safe in Australia. Although I may come even there in a couple of years.

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Emotion - a false and deadly notion

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1847 (12/3/03 11:23 am) Reply	 ---- <hr/> You great brute! You may kiss my extremities instead.
birdofhermes Registered User Posts: 1073 (12/3/03 2:13 pm) Reply	 which extremities <hr/> If you ever talked like a human being, I just might, depending on which extremities you have in mind.
voce io Registered User Posts: 418 (12/3/03 2:24 pm) Reply	 Re: which extremities <hr/> His dick.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1851 (12/3/03 3:40 pm) Reply	 ---- <hr/> I mean the extremities of my expression that make me seem inhuman to you.

birdofhermes Registered User Posts: 1074 (12/4/03 1:20 am) Reply	 kissmy- <hr/> No inhuman, but subhuman.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1864 (12/4/03 11:08 am) Reply	 Re: kissmy- <hr/> Like a caveman you mean?!
Rhett Hamilton Registered User Posts: 153 (12/4/03 1:21 pm) Reply   Edit	 Re: life <hr/> To voce, Quote: "If what you say was true then all thought would be illusion, but since i know i am thinking now i know you are wrong". Anything I say is not true. Including this? How can you be sure? You still hold onto this after interacting with this forum for how long? Anything you say is also not true. By your admission anything you say is not true, which means that it is false. Thus, the opposite must be true, ie. you are in fact stating that everything i say is true. Wow, even i don't claim that yet! You can't know what you are thinking now, When is now? Since you have, by your own admission, made a false statement, then you are saying that i can know what i am thinking now. I agree (and i thought that now). and you can't know that I am wrong. No, but i can know if what appears to my mind to be written on this forum by an identity 'voce io' is right or wrong. The rest of your reply to my reply to your original statement is wasted space. I don't share your opinion on this, although, once again, since everything you say is opposite, i agree. For the rest of this post i will assume that you are trying to speak some kind of truth...

Everyone knows how concepts and definitions work.

Are you sure about this?

They are illusions.

They appear to my mind, and that is enough for me.

My intent in first replying was to show you how stupid it is when you say "life is a conceptual construct", because that statement itself is a conceptual construct.

If that were true it would mean that every statement is stupid. All notions are constructs of consciousness.

Everything we think about is a conceptual construct, but what enables the mind to create conceptual constructs is the lives of our bodies, and what enables that is the life of the universe. Once again, this isn't true.

So why do you state it as if it has meaning? Can you prove to me that everything you say isn't true? You can't because your proof would also not be true. As such, in what light would you like us to consider your posts to this forum?

Rhett

voce io

Registered User

Posts: 419

(12/4/03 2:30 pm)

Reply

 Re: life

---

Including this? How can you be sure? You still hold onto this after interacting with this forum for how long?

Yes. Nothing transient is absolute, and my ideas and writings are definitely not sentient. I've been at this forum for too long, and I don't hold onto it.

By your admission anything you say is not true, which means that it is false. Thus, the opposite must be true, ie. you are in fact stating that everything i say is true. Wow, even i don't claim that yet!

Cheap logic. That's definitely not what I am saying, and you should know that. I'm saying anything we say is not true, because it's subject to everything.

When is now?

What do you mean by "when"?

Since you have, by your own admission, made a false statement, then you are saying that i can know what i am thinking now. I agree (and i thought that now).

and you can't know that I am wrong.

I should have just skipped this, but I wanted to make a point of how dumb it is by italicizing it.

No, but i can know if what appears to my mind to be written on this forum by an identity 'voce io' is right or wrong.

Your mind isn't a good indicator of truth, or right versus wrong. No mind really is. Maybe an enlightened mind, but I don't know if I really believe in enlightenment. It's an interesting idea.

I don't share your opinion on this, although, once again, since everything you say is opposite, i agree. For the rest of this post i will assume that you are trying to speak some kind of truth...

Three times and you're out! I'll play softball with you, though, Rhett. It's good that you're starting to take things seriously; I hope you don't bring it up again, it was getting boring.

Are you sure about this?

Certainty isn't really real.

They appear to my mind, and that is enough for me.

Good for you.

If that were true it would mean that every statement is stupid. All notions are constructs of consciousness.

Yes.

So why do you state it as if it has meaning?

It has as much meaning as anyone else's statements. There is illusive-truth (the kind minds make up), and Truth. When I say truth, I'm usually meaning Truth.

Can you prove to me that everything you say isn't true?

You can't because your proof would also not be true. As such, in what light would you like us to consider your posts to this forum?

Way to answer your own question, it's very professional. I'd like you to consider my posts as brick walls. You run into them, you change, you keep moving.

I realize that's a bit pretentious. I'm not a fucking genius. I'm not enlightened. I'm not even a philosopher. But, I know I am a lot more acute in my reasoning than most of the people here. I'm precise. The truth of this universe (the one which created me, which creates the reflected universe (which is where concepts reign as reality) ) is. I'm always talking about the truth of the actual universe. How we are in it and our connection to it. It might not make sense, but it's as close to truth about truth as you can get.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 156
(12/5/03 12:04 pm)
Reply | Edit

 Re: life

---

Voce wrote:

I'd like you to consider my posts as brick walls. You run into them, you change, you keep moving.

Yes, your posts are like brick walls, but only because you are reluctant to learn and have an inflated view of your level of wisdom.

I realize that's a bit pretentious. I'm not a fucking genius. I'm not enlightened. I'm not even a philosopher. But, I know I am a lot more acute in my reasoning than most of the people here.

The latter is not at all evident from your posts.

I'm precise.

No, your posts are obscure and vague, and you are stuck on a false notion of the nature of truth and precision.

The truth of this universe (the one which created me, which creates the reflected universe (which is where concepts reign as reality) ) is. I'm always talking about the truth of the actual universe. How we are in it and our connection to it. It might not make sense, but it's as close to truth about truth as you can get.

	No. You have just written a heap of untruths. What proof do you have that you inherently exist and that there is a 'universe' outside of your mind? Rhett
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1874 (12/5/03 12:11 pm) Reply	 Re: life <hr/> Rhett, existence is existence. This is what is inherent. Voce io exists, and there is no proof for a universe 'outside' of anyones mind.
voce io Registered User Posts: 420 (12/5/03 5:30 pm) Reply	 ... <hr/> Yes, your posts are like brick walls, but only because you are reluctant to learn and have an inflated view of your level of wisdom. There are no levels of wisdom. The latter is not at all evident from your posts. If there is no world outside of your mind, and I am just a little nagging fly buzzing in an eardrum of your mind, why do you (...the God of the mind) talk to me? This proves to me that you bullshit a lot of what you preach. No, your posts are obscure and vague, and you are stuck on a false notion of the nature of truth and precision. They seem obscure and vague, and it seems like I am stuck on a false notion of the nature of "truth" and "precision". No. You have just written a heap of untruths. What proof do you have that you inherently exist and that there is a 'universe' outside of your mind? Exactly my point, I can't prove a damn thing. Existence is the only inherent truth..as suergaz said. I DID write a heap of untruths, this is untrue as well. I could also prove you wrong when you asked what proof I have: the fact that your mind exists.

ChrisSaik Registered User Posts: 77 (12/6/03 12:14 am) Reply	 Re: Emotion - a false and deadly notion <hr/> As long as one exists, emotions will exist. That's the plain and simple. Emotions should be recognized for what they are.
1TheMaster Registered User Posts: 186 (12/6/03 9:01 am) Reply	 Re: Emotion - a false and deadly notion <hr/> Emotion = Irrational thoughts. Emotions can be eliminated like so many weeds that grow unruly. They need not be lived with.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1880 (12/6/03 9:41 am) Reply	 ---- <hr/> Listen, weed, if I am to live with you here, take back your equation that isn't.
Rhett Hamilton Registered User Posts: 160 (12/6/03 11:23 am) Reply   Edit	 Re: Emotion - a false and deadly notion <hr/> Chris wrote: As long as one exists, emotions will exist. That's the plain and simple. Emotions should be recognized for what they are. What do you think they are? If you are interested in but unfamiliar with my thoughts, i wrote a somewhat lengthy piece on emotions about halfway through the thread 'Pre-requisites for enlightenment'. Based on my memory of some posts of yours i saw a while ago on the 'Genius Forum', I am lead to ask you if you claim enlightenment? Rhett

Email This To a Friend

Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Emotions Vs Rationality

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Jones Kelly Posts: 57 (5/7/04 9:06 pm) Reply	 Emotions Vs Rationality <hr/> Normal, Inefficient, Irrational Ordinary, normal experience is naturally deluded. By default, experience is totally unaware suppression of thought processes, and is highly emotional. Such quick thinking is mostly subconscious, with marked emotional intensities that usually stand out in awareness. Emotions are motivational, and get quick "rational" responses, that's why they're called emotions. Emotions are essentially fear-based, to quickly deal with "difficult" experiences, even if the fear is unnoticeable. Deluded experiences always generate emotions, because quick, subconscious categorisation creates a self-construct (to motivate to respond to things). This is totally normal, and totally irrational. Abnormal, Efficient, Rational With developed awareness and reasoning, a highly conscious "individual" will recognise suppression in their experiences (and cease suppressing). Then the nature of experience is free from delusion. It is as free from emotion as it is rational. This is not the usual way consciousness works, but it is rational, and works far more effectively. Naturally, at the beginning, it's a bit slow and jerky, but the gear-crunching is worse at the start, and the ride gets smoother.

Ultra-rational experience is highly conscious, and no emotions are necessary to motivate a false self. Thinking at this level categorises quickly and correctly, so that a true response results. These are not automatic responses to things, but reasoned responses to consciously categorised things. If the notion of a self or free will arises (perhaps because of intensified reasoning processes), it is recategorised rationally. I have heard it becomes automatic, which is good.

Highly conscious, rational processes are characterised by awareness that all processes and responses are fully determined and caused, whilst the process is happening. Causality and logic are intimately related processes.

Edited by: Jones Kelly at: 5/7/04 9:08 pm

Jones Kelly
Posts: 63
(5/9/04 4:05 pm)
Reply

 Re: Emotions Vs Rationality

---

I've refined the above dialectic slightly:

Rationality is necessarily dualistic, either/or as well as subject/object, but it isn't necessarily deluded.

When the subject/object dualism is transferred during the experience of thinking and creates a thinker/thought, and which is treated as objectively real, inherently existing categories that is the delusion. Experience of this delusion is marked by emotion of some kind.

So the experience of reasoning is dualistic, but not necessarily deluded.

I'm still working on the interplay between sensation-experience and emotion, so if anyone notices gaps please jump in..

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2618
(5/10/04 1:53 am)
Reply

 ----

---

Quote:

---

Emotions are essentially fear-based, to quickly deal with "difficult" experiences, even if the fear is unnoticeable.

---

Rubbish!

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 902
(5/10/04 5:51 am)
Reply

Re: ----

---

Chop chop.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 1101
(5/10/04 8:45 am)
Reply

Re: ----

---

Quote:

---

Kelly: Causality and logic are intimately related processes.

---

Intrinsically.

Jones Kelly
Posts: 65
(5/10/04 1:18 pm)
Reply

Re: ----

---

Oh, well, if it's rubbish, then it's rubbish. That's obvious.

Fear is difficult to analyse, because its experience distorts the ability to analyse rationally. And it is also hard to examine when it is so subtle as to be mistaken for something else. Not knowing the subtlety of fear - or that it is even being experienced - is being incapable of examining that fear.

This excerpt looks at why not knowing one's experience is despair is the deepest despair. It's related to the unreasoned impulse to "chop-chop", and i have been analysing it lots lately (the impulse and the excerpt).

The despair which is ignorant of being despair, or the despairing ignorance of having a self and an eternal self by Soren Kierkegaard (from This Sickness Unto Death).

That none the less this condition is indeed despair, and is properly so named, expresses what one might in the best sense call truth's self-righteousness. Veritas est index sui et falsi. [Truth is the criterion of itself and of the false]. Certainly this self-righteousness is not highly regarded. It is regarded as little as people in general regard the relationship to truth, the relating of oneself to the true, as the highest good, and even less see it Socratically as the greatest misfortune to be in error - their sensuous reactions usually far outweigh their intellect. A person supposedly fortunate in this way, who imagines himself blessed with good fortune but when considered in the light of truth is unfortunate, is usually very far from wanting to be snatched out of this error. On the contrary, he grows indignant, looks on the person who does this as his worst enemy, considers it an assault, something bordering on murder, as one talks of a kill-joy. And the reason? He is totally dominated by his sensuous and psycho-sensuous reactions; he lives in the categories of the sensate, the pleasant and the unpleasant, poo-poo spirit, the truth, etc.; he is too sensate to have the courage to risk and endure being spirit. However vain and conceited people may be, the conception they usually have of themselves is very humble; that is, they have no conception of being spirit, the absolute that a human can be; but vain and conceited they remain - comparatively speaking. If one were to imagine a house consisting of basement, ground floor and first floor, tenanted or planned in such a way that there is, or is meant to be, a difference of social class between the occupants of each floor - and if now one were to compare being a human being with such a house, then the sorry and ludicrous fact with most people is, alas, that in their own house they prefer to live in the basement. Every human being is the psycho-physical synthesis planned as spirit; this is the building, but he prefers living in the basement, that is, in the categories of sensation. Moreover, he not only prefers living in the basement - no he loves it so much that he is indignant if anyone suggests he occupy the fine suite lying vacant for him; after all he is living in his own house!

... So the fact that the despairer is ignorant of his state as being one of despair is nothing to the point, he is in despair just the same. If despair is distraction, then not knowing about it simply means he is under a delusion as well. The relation between ignorance and despair is like that of ignorance to dread; the dread in a spiritless person is recognisable precisely in his spiritless sense of security. Beneath it lies dread all the same, and also beneath it lies despair, and when the spell of the illusion is broken, when life begins to quake, then it is immediately apparent that despair was what was lying beneath.

Compared with the person who is conscious of his despair, the despairer who does not know he is in despair is simply one negativity further from the truth and deliverance. Despair is itself a negativity, ignorance of it a new negativity. But to arrive at the truth one has to pass through every negativity; it is just as the old story says about breaking a certain magic spell: it won't be broken unless the piece is played right through backwards.

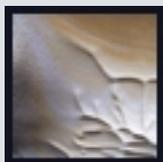

However, it is only in one sense - a purely dialectical sense - that the person ignorant of his despair is further from the truth, and from what will deliver him, than the person who knows it yet remains in despair. For in another sense, ethico-dialectically, it is the person who remains in despair and is conscious of his despair who is further from deliverance, because his despair is more intense. Yet ignorance is so far from expunging the despair, or turning it into non-despair, that on the contrary it can be the most dangerous form of despair. In his ignorance, the despairer is, though in a way to his own undoing, made safe against becoming aware - which means he is safely in the hands of despair.

---

It boils down to being so highly conscious that one's reason is at hand to destroy delusions at any time. And one of the best "flags" for a delusion - if alertness grows dim - is emotion, the manifestation of ego-mind. The higher the consciousness, the more intense is experience of the self-protective instincts of ego-mind. The latter is responsive to the keen dismantling power of reason.

As i said, i am still working on understanding experiences of emotion-sensation (e.g. accelerating heart-beat, twinges in the heart) in relation to underlying delusions, so these thoughts are still "rough"..

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 376
(5/11/04 12:07 pm)
Reply | Edit

Re: ----

---

Kelly wrote:

Quote:

---

As i said, i am still working on understanding experiences of emotion-sensation (e.g. accelerating heart-beat, twinges in the heart) in relation to underlying delusions, so these thoughts are still "rough"..

---

Most people's experience of emotion related sensations (emotion-sensations) involve some degree of suppression. Suppression is a strangely nebulous concept, but if we look at it's sensory expression, it's prime characteristic is the tensing of the chest muscle - which prevents or limits the acceleration of the heart (when a fear is experienced), and tension in the diaphragm - which alters and limits breathing patterns.

However, awareness of this is of no real benefit. Once these symptoms are experienced it's too late - all that can be done is palliative action, because the delusion has already manifest (as fear). The cause is the delusion, and thus, that is what must be addressed for suppression to be addressed.

When delusion is absent, so to is the entirety of emotional phenomena, of which suppression is only a part.

Rhett

Jones Kelly

Posts: 70

(5/11/04 3:44 pm)

Reply

 Re: emotion

---

Quote:

---

Rhett: Most people's experience of emotion related sensations (emotion-sensations) involve some degree of suppression. Suppression is a strangely nebulous concept, but if we look at it's sensory expression, it's prime characteristic is the tensing of the chest muscle - which prevents or limits the acceleration of the heart (when a fear is experienced), and tension in the diaphragm - which alters and limits breathing patterns. However, awareness of this is of no real benefit. Once these symptoms are experienced it's too late - all that can be done is palliative action, because the delusion has already manifest (as fear). The cause is the delusion, and thus, that is what must be addressed for suppression to be addressed. When delusion is absent, so to is the entirety of emotional phenomena, of which suppression is only a part.

---

I got as far as knowing that without A (trigger-experience), B (emotion) cannot exist. The delusion is not usually the emotion, but can be (that is, B could be A2 for B2). The delusion is the experience of A as a trigger.

In the case of fear (emotion), A as trigger is a kind of information overload - e.g. very loud sound, blinding light, sensation of pain, too much "important" data. B arises as a fear reaction to this stimulus, aiming first at flight/fight (self-protectivity), and then reasoning to judge appropriate action to the situation.

If A is not regarded as a trigger, B is avoided. A could be any information, any experience, since fear can be totally unpredictable. Therefore, the only way to escape A>B is to understand the nature of experience rationally. B is then immediately replaced with a rational (automatic) reaction.

Understandably, it takes a lot of re-programming!

When any kind of A is not experienced as a threat, no B can possibly arise. That is, there is no self to protect, and every appearance/experience refers to nothing else but is only what it is.

The nature of "suppression" seems to be the will to avoid, i'm not sure about this at the moment, will keep thinking...

Jones Kelly

Posts: 71

(5/12/04 2:11 pm)

Reply

 Suppression and Release or Sexual brain death

---

Sexual desire is closely linked to fear (suppression).

1) Trigger

If A is a trigger experience, it leads to B, emotion as sensation. A is images/thoughts/ideas/sounds/sensations, interpreted sexually. That is, A relates to a genital-image. B arises, a sensation linked to the genital image. B is thus genital sensation.

Sexuality is much more than genitalia, but sexual emotion is linked to genital images.

2) Reaction

B is experienced as the pulse. That is, a higher heart and breath rate have increased blood flow to the genitals. This flight/fight response is suppression, but is contradicted with a freeze response, or "release" (opposite of suppression).

When suppression is a sensation in the heart area/abdomen, this is an avoidance mechanism to fend off an external threat. But when suppression is a sensation in the genitals, the "threat" is internal, so that an "external" mechanism fends it off.

3) Shutdown

Genital suppression generates confusion (rational shutdown or disability), because the instinct to avoid by accepting is self-defeating. Compulsion to accept externality uses an external genital-image (one's own genitals or those of another) to "combat" the sexual sensation. This is fight/flight/freeze all in one.

How to avoid shutdown: remove the trigger

When A is not a sexual trigger, the brain-death is avoided. This is possible by overcoming the delusions inherent in the nature of experience. What is the primary delusion? That things are objectively real.

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

- > The Thinkers' Inn
- > Enlighten me!

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
Ser Mad  Registered User Posts: 1 (6/4/04 12:52 pm) Reply	 Enlighten me! <hr/> I own a community called THE MADHOUSE p212.ezboard.com/bthemadhouse99739 I'd like to invite those of you who are interested to come over and check us out if you got a minute,Feel free to return the spam to your spot on my board if you are interested. We Have music, Text Battles,Sex,Politics,poetry,life issues,Movie and game reviews and your also free to promote and get critiques for your music. And any other subject you can think of.We dont discriminate with age,gender,race or religion.Ladies,The testosterone on my spot is killing me, We need some intelligent (OR FREAKY) women to stop by and post if you gotta minute,You just might like it! If you dont see anything that interest you,Make a thread that interest you.... This is just a friendly invite Im trying to get some new people in there with some interesting things to say.And if someone talks trash to ya,Feel free to debate em or shut em up with knowledge! Anything goes! Peace and respect SER MAD

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 546
(6/10/04 12:55 pm)
Reply

 Re: Enlighten me!

---

Yes. So you're trying to smuggle people from this forum to your joint. You're cheap. And a sweetheart, of course!

Jack Kopf
Registered User
Posts: 3
(6/12/04 1:46 am)
Reply

 Re: Enlighten me!

---

that is a creepy websight.

MKFaizi
Registered User
Posts: 1205
(6/12/04 3:49 pm)
Reply

 Re: Enlighten me!

---

I live with ten or twelve teenagers every day. I don't need them on the internet, thanks.

Well, I do have the pakistanman but he is my son. Cute kid. He shaved his mustache for the first time today. He had to do it because his mouth looked dirty with the fuzz.

Pakistanman is on the internet but he is more of a behind the scenes dude.

I took four teenagers to town this evening. 'Bout killed my ears.

I do like a lot of the music but the level of loudness was deadening.

Ears? What ears?

Faizi

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1206

(6/12/04 3:52 pm)

Reply

 Re: Enlighten me!

---

I looked at the site. Good place for teenagers.

Thanks. I will send my kids, rockofages and pakistanman.

Lol.

Faizi

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - The Thinkers' Inn - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Enlightenment - You need to have children

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
DEL Registered User Posts: 762 (10/20/03 6:19 pm) Reply	New Post Enlightenment - You need to have children <hr/> The childless cannot attain full enlightenment. They can be only ministers and preservers of enlightenment wisdom and knowledge. Like librarians. Their role is valuable and important but the childless all lack the ability to see the absolute truth and have infinite wisdom. It is the characteristic of eunuchs to be contentious. The abandoned woman also has the same traits and fullfills the same duty. The childless. They have logic but cannot reason, so they argue. They have luck but cannot have faith, so delight in randomness.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1607 (10/20/03 10:34 pm) Reply	New Post ---- <hr/> DEL, are you suddenly a father? Congratulations!

WolfsonJakk Registered User Posts: 1217 (10/21/03 12:27 am) Reply	New Post ---- <hr/> Yes, but first the enlightened sage must get a stiffy and have an available female nearby. It wreaks havoc on the psyche of the followers. Damn this organic shell. Keep trying DEL. Tharan
Rairun Registered User Posts: 147 (10/21/03 1:52 am) Reply	New Post ... <hr/> DEL, you don't need to be an eunuch in order to be childless.
DEL Registered User Posts: 763 (10/21/03 9:26 am) Reply	New Post - <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Rairun: DEL, you don't need to be an eunuch in order to be childless. <hr/> Correct, but the childless are eunuchs and the abandoned woman is of the same value.
suergaz Registered User Posts: 1608 (10/21/03 1:27 pm) Reply	New Post --- <hr/> How are the childless eunuchs DEL?
unmentheyrl Registered User Posts: 1 (10/21/03 2:03 pm) Reply	New Post children <hr/> having a child can be a stepping stone in the path to enlightenment (for some a bigger stone than others) but it is certainly not necessary.

DEL Registered User Posts: 764 (10/21/03 6:34 pm) Reply	New Post ----- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> suergaz How are the childless eunuchs DEL? <hr/> They remain as eunuchs until they have sufficient strength to withstand the higher and lower tensions associated with having children.
DEL Registered User Posts: 765 (10/21/03 6:37 pm) Reply	New Post children <hr/> Quote: <hr/> unmentheyrl having a child can be a stepping stone in the path to enlightenment (for some a bigger stone than others) but it is certainly not necessary. <hr/> It is the last stone. After that levitation is the challenge.
cassiopeiae Registered User Posts: 135 (10/21/03 10:57 pm) Reply	New Post Re: children <hr/> Is your biological clock ticking DEL?
Paul Registered User Posts: 162 (10/21/03 11:56 pm) Reply	New Post Re: children <hr/> You could have used a condom, DEL, now see what happened.

DEL Registered User Posts: 766 (10/22/03 6:17 am) Reply	New Post Re: children <hr/> You must overcome the fear of children.
voce io Registered User Posts: 347 (10/22/03 6:35 am) Reply	New Post Re: children <hr/> LOL. I don't think I remember hearing of more than 1 "enlightened person" who had a child during their lifetime. I do agree, it could be viewed as helpful on the way to attainment, but it isn't a prerequisite.
cassiopeiae Registered User Posts: 136 (10/22/03 6:36 am) Reply	New Post Re: children <hr/> What does having kids or not have to do with fear of children? I have a child, and am definately not afraid of children, but I don't think it is as important as you make it out to be when it comes to enlightenment. Actually, I would have to say if anyone would benefit, it would be women, not men...sorry guys :-)
DEL Registered User Posts: 767 (10/22/03 4:23 pm) Reply	New Post Re: children <hr/> The men fear children. The women fear having a child by the wrong man.
DEL Registered User Posts: 769 (10/22/03 4:36 pm) Reply	New Post Children <hr/> All the people with the potential for true enlightenment died out about 4000 - 5000 years ago. since then we have only had commentators about "the way" that was lost. I'm not sure if anybody has the physical capability anymore for such levels of tension. There are lots of clever but impotent male philosophers. And loose uprooted women like the ones attracted to forums like this.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1610
(10/22/03 6:45 pm)
Reply

New Post ---

I am not afraid of children. Are you afraid they'd tease you like I do DEL?! They'd probably slaughter you if they found out about your 'God' magic!

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 361
(10/22/03 10:47 pm)
Reply

New Post Re: ---

Ok Del, I had a bit of a go at trying to work out some of what you are talking about and what might be behind it. This is what I came up with.

It is the characteristic of the childless to be contentious.

I wont disagree with this. Although it is way too broad a categorisation, it is a reasonable generalisation. As an example, I imagine all gay folk could be thrown together as being fairly contentious, when compared to folk who are responsible for and live with children, and also people in what are generally considered as radical groups are mostly childless.

The women fear having a child by the wrong man.

The abandoned woman also has the same traits and fullfills the same duty.

Does the second statement occur as a result of a failure of choosing the 'wrong man'. Thus the child becomes an anchor in her instinctual quest for another male to breed more or be catered for. Historically, and presently even, women with children are less attractive to perhaps a majority of males.

The men fear children.

Well again there is some general truth in this. It might be interesting to examine why that is the case. Fear does not really seem like the right word, I'd prefer to say increased awareness.

Childless men have not had as many experiences in learning how to deal with children. There is an underlying awareness that one has to treat them more cautiously than adults. One infants it is mostly physical caution, you could inadvertently hurt them or almost hurt and the little blighters cry on you...geez :) You have to hold your tongue and not treat them as you would an adult who say asked an unexpected question or did something stupid. As teenagers they get stroppy and many have emotional unpredictability that you are not used to (particularly when they are pissed). One may also fear the sexual intensity and frailty of teenage girls who have begun the process of learning how to communicate with males using femininity. We also know we are more powerful than children, but unlike parents we are not accustomed to applying this power so we have an fear that we could misapply that power. Children also mean responsibility and a lot of childless men hate that, so we have a fear of what we dislike.

Do childless men fear the innocence of children more so than parents, I wonder? Maybe they associate innocence with the 'danger' of ignorance, because innocence in the single male herd is an undesirable trait, a sign of unmanliness - whereas for parents they love it because their role in life has become one of removing this innocence so the child can exist as an adult (and then breed).

Childless men may also be childless due to some fault in their own childhood, some set of causes meant they did not develop the social graces or bravado required to be attractive to women or suited to parenthood.

They remain as eunuchs until they have sufficient strength to withstand the higher and lower tensions associated with having children.

I'm not sure if anybody has the physical capability anymore for such levels of tension.

Umm at a stretch, I for one think that a person must experience a lot of highs and lows both physically and mentally before one can become enlightened. I don't know what 'tensions' are in the way you are referring to - is it a well understood concept in philosophy? - but children do produce a lot of tension for parents of a type that childless men would not experience. Childless men do have a lot of other tensions though, I guess it could be that these other forms of emotional tension in the modern world are not conducive to the mental strength required for enlightenment. They do not experience the right forms of tension as the general world overtone is one of consumption of both knowledge and things created by others, rather than one where truth was found through developing the imaginative processes within ones own brain.

Nowadays few westerners who would be capable of enlightenment experience adequate physical stress. Few non-westerners have the freedom or opportunity to spend their lives seeking enlightenment of the type generally described as enlightenment in this forum.

I'm still not sure the realisation of enlightenment is not a load of self-imagined crock - it is just brain induced contentedness to me.

Contentedness by narrowing the capability of the brain to feel emotions.

The Almost Dead.

DEL

Registered User

Posts: 770

(10/23/03 10:24 am)

Reply

New Post ---

---

Quote:

jimhaz

Do childless men fear the innocence of children more so than parents, I wonder? Maybe they associate innocence with the 'danger' of ignorance, because innocence in the single male herd is an undesirable trait, a sign of unmanliness. . . .

---

I agree.

The innocence is horrific.

The advanced man has a keen sense of constant danger which causes a high level of tension in the presence of a child with little sense of danger.

---

Quote:

jimhaz

Umm at a stretch, I for one think that a person must experience a lot of highs and lows both physically and mentally before one can become enlightened. I don't know what 'tensions' are in the way you are referring to - is it a well understood concept in philosophy? .

---

Highs and lows are the experience of the low orders, like being loose and blown about by the wind.

At the more advanced levels of God Majick one talks of tensions, like the selection of an appropriate sail in high winds at sea.

---

Quote:

---

jimhaz

I'm still not sure the realisation of enlightenment is not a load of self-imagined crock - it is just brain induced contentedness to me. Contentedness by narrowing the capability of the brain to feel emotions. The Almost Dead. .

---

Interesting, 2 types.

- 1)Brain dead people with no desire for enlightenment.
- 2)Brain dead people as a result of intellectual rationalised enlightenment.

scatteredmind
Registered User
Posts: 98
(10/23/03 3:47 pm)
Reply

New Post fear

---

Quote:

---

The men fear children.
The women fear having a child by the wrong man.

---

it doesn't take a child to be a child like most men. fear man and child will overtake you.

mle30
Registered User
Posts: 1
(4/3/04 11:51 am)
Reply

New Post Re: Enlightenment - You need to have children

---

What the hell is this???? So if I don't have children, it means I'm either afraid of them, afraid of having them by the wrong man, and in general f*cked enlightenment-wise??

Does that apply to Mother Theresa, Buddha, or Jesus? What about all the poor schmucks who wasted their time being nuns, or monks, or priests?? I guess all that devotion to G-d was wasted because they didn't have kids....

DEL, you can tout child-rearing all you want, but the dogma behind "be fruitful and multiply" becoming as outdated as the Jewish Kosher Laws. See, the kosher laws made sense before refrigeration (kept you from eating things most likely to spoil at room temperature). Now that we can prevent food from spoiling long-term, the old kosher laws are obsolete.

Such is the way with the idea that everyone should have lots of children. It helped build a cultural base 2000 years ago, but WE'RE OVERPOPULATED NOW. WE ARE ALREADY FILLED TO THE BRIM WITH CHILDREN WHO ARE ABANDONED.

In fact, even if NO ONE ELSE currently of childbearing age had kids, the human race would still thrive. Why? Because there are 2 BILLION kids who have not yet reached childbearing age.

Do you GET IT?? The old days of needing to "build a great nation" are OVER. And if you truly believe - as I do - that human life is sacred, then how could you turn your back on the sacred souls already in existence?? That's what you do when you only think in terms of passing on YOUR genes.

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Enlightenment - You need to have children

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Author	Comment
MKFaizi Registered User Posts: 1142 (4/3/04 2:34 pm) Reply 	New Post Re: Enlightenment - You need to have children <hr/> I have been writing on "The Thinker's Inn" segment. I thought this was the place for the very serious thought. I reckon not. Faizi
