| Naturyl  Registered UserPosts: 58(1/19/04 12:45 pm) Reply  | Enlightened compassion is not sentimentality. <hr/> The idea of compassion you are speaking against was already addressed: Quote: <hr/> Essentially you are correct, but the "compassion" of the enlightened person is entirely different to that of the normal person. To the enlightened person "compassion" is not a sentiment, but is more like "conscience", or even "wisdom". <hr/> Your comments have no bearing on this variety of compassion. |
| suergaz Registered UserPosts: 2087(1/19/04 12:50 pm) Reply                                                                                                                                                                 | ---- <hr/> The variety of compassion you speak of is love!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| suergaz Registered UserPosts: 2088(1/19/04 1:02 pm) Reply                                                                                                                                                                  | ---- <hr/> Compassion is really only a variety of love, and enlightened compassion? My being defies such poor definition, as I am superior in compassion, and superior in love! Edited by: suergaz at: 1/23/04 10:51 am                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
| silentsal Registered UserPosts: 23(1/19/04 1:03 pm) Reply                                                                                                                                                                  | Re: ---- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> And you know that because you are truly enlightened I presume? I suspect what you say here is what you think is the case for the enlightened person. <hr/> presume whatever you wish                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Naturyl  Registered UserPosts: 60(1/19/04 1:15 pm)Reply  | Re: ---- <hr/> Enlightened compassion is not love or sentimentality. Instead, it is a form of empathy. You feel the sufferings of others because you understand that in the deeper sense, you ARE others. When this is fully understood, compassion is not different from self-interest. Must we undertake any trainings to develop self-interest? Hardly. The same is true of compassion in the person of insight. It appears automatically and is as natural as the instinct toward self-preservation. |
| suergaz Registered UserPosts: 2091(1/19/04 1:20 pm)Reply                                                                                                                                                                 | --- <hr/> The fact is that the truth of our being eachother cannot be fully understood, without also understanding the fact we are not eachother at all. Compassion (any form of it) is a form of empathy (feeling) which is a form of love.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |

Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM
> GENIUS FORUM
> The misogynist

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Naturyl  Registered UserPosts: 62(1/19/04 1:27 pm)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> The fact is that the truth of our being eachother cannot be fully understood, without also understanding the fact we are not eachother at all. <hr/> Yes, that is quite true. A lot of people miss that. Step one, which we take as infants, is to realize our separateness. Step two, which some of us take as adults, is to realize our oneness. Step three, which a few less take, is understanding our separateness in light of our oneness - the realization that duality is the way unity is manifested. Step four, of course, when we find that everything is exactly the same but completely transformed, is to carry water and chop wood as we did all along. Quote: <hr/> Compassion (any form of it) is a form of empathy (feeling) which is a form of love. <hr/> What do you suppose is wrong with love? |

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2092
(1/19/04 1:45 pm)
Reply

----

---

Quote:

---

What do you suppose is wrong with love?

---

Nothing.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1297
(1/19/04 2:23 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Step three, which a few less take, is understanding our separateness in light of our oneness - the realization that duality is the way unity is manifested.

---

Sheesh, I have tried to say that so clumsily; what a fine job. Nice male clarity : )

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 250
(1/23/04 11:51 am)
Reply

Re: ----

---

Enlightened compassion is not love or sentimentality. Instead, it is a form of empathy. You feel the sufferings of others because you understand that in the deeper sense, you ARE others. When this is fully understood, compassion is not different from self-interest. Must we undertake any trainings to develop self-interest? Hardly. The same is true of compassion in the person of insight. It appears automatically and is as natural as the instinct toward self-preservation.

Enlightened compassion is only a form of empathy in regards to their understanding of others. The enlightened do not feel others suffering, they just see it clearly and rationally, and do what they can to alleviate it through wisdom.

|                                                                                                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                        | Rhett                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 456(1/23/04 12:11 pm)Reply      | Re: ---- <hr/> Just an interesting fact in relation to woman as high level managers. In New South Wales, 5 female government department heads have been sacked in the last two years against 3 males. There are more males in these high level positions, so the ratio of female sackings is quite high. I've noticed the same thing happens in politics of all persuasions, females tend to stuff up far more often. About 80% fall. A reason given for the latest sacking to which a male was appointed was that he is better able to bring about 'the required change' To some degree old boy networks and media beatups play a role in the failure of women to succeed long term in these positions, but not entirely. I think women make excellent middle level managers though. |
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 2086(1/23/04 3:51 pm)Reply  | Re: ---- <hr/> Naturyl wrote: Quote: <hr/> What do you suppose is wrong with love? <hr/> It is the daughter of ignorance and the mother of hate.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 420(1/23/04 3:59 pm)Reply                                                                                         | On Love <hr/> Quote: <hr/> It is the daughter of ignorance and the mother of hate. <hr/> No, David.Love is your Ne Plus Ultra.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |

|                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                       | It's about time you fight your Goliath again. No offence, 'mate'.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2108(1/23/04 10:03 pm)Reply   | ---- <hr/> Where to speak on love? Shall a symposium suffice? If one is beyond the morality in fairy tales, one is a part of their simplicity! David you poor dwarf, I feel you are not a lover of wisdom, but the semblance of such! Be a friend! Where is understanding really made?!                                            |
| krussell2004Registered UserPosts: 34(1/25/04 2:00 pm)Reply | Re: ---- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Naturyl wrote: What do you suppose is wrong with love? David Quinn wrote: It is the daughter of ignorance and the mother of hate. <hr/> What a pathetically bleak outlook. Are you this much fun at parties? Do you even get out much? I think a little naval gazing is in order. |

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 479
(1/27/04 2:41 pm)
Reply

Re: ----

---

David, I'm wondering if you are still attracted to women's bodies. If not than how many years of philosophical contemplation did it take you to remove this desire?

If you are not then you are no longer human. In saying this I'm not being negative, as my hierarchy is plant- animal-human-enlightenment-godliness. I can envisage that without the removal of this desire one cannot truly be enlightened.

Something makes me think this has been asked before.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2129
(1/27/04 3:23 pm)
Reply

Re: ----

---

Krussel wrote:

Quote:

---

Nat: What do you suppose is wrong with love?

DQ: It is the daughter of ignorance and the mother of hate.

Kr: What a pathetically bleak outlook.

---

It's the truth. Do you often find the truth to be pathetically bleak?

Look into any act of hate or violence, and you will always find love driving it - whether it be love of a woman, or of a man, or one's reputation, family, country, or religion, or one's life.

Quote:

---

Are you this much fun at parties?

---

For sure! You can often find me at the centre of a huddle in which a dozen people are pouring their outrage upon me. It's very cathartic for them. Better than alcohol. Enables them to bond with the chicks.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2130

(1/27/04 3:39 pm)

Reply

Re: ----

Jimhaz wrote:

Quote:

---

David, I'm wondering if you are still attracted to women's bodies.

---

Yes, but not very much. It depends on how pure my mind is at any given moment. At least 98% of the time, I don't experience any sexual thoughts or desires. I'm helped here by living in a small country town in which young, good-looking women are almost entirely absent. In Brisbane, where I used to live, which is a major city in a hot, humid climate, one would continually have to confront half-naked girls whenever one walked out onto the street - which naturally made it more difficult.

Quote:

---

If not than how many years of philosophical contemplation did it take you to remove this desire?

---

Well, it's taken me sixteen years to reach the point where I am now. It might very well take me another sixteen years to eliminate sexual desire completely. I don't know.

Quote:

---

If you are not then you are no longer human. In saying this I'm not being negative, as my hierarchy is plant- animal- human-enlightenment-godliness. I can envisage that without the removal of this desire one cannot truly be enlightened.

---

Sure, one is not perfect until that desire is completely gone, along with every other emotional desire.

|                                                                                                                                                                              |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Naturyl  Registered UserPosts: 131(1/27/04 3:41 pm)Reply        | Re: ---- <hr/> What an absurd crock of rubbish.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| Thomas Knierim Registered UserPosts: 786(1/27/04 3:51 pm)Reply  | Re: Chop it off! <hr/> David: Well, it's taken me sixteen years to reach the point where I am now. It might very well take me another sixteen years to eliminate sexual desire completely. I don't know. Sixteen years? You can have that faster! Just chop it off. :-) Thomas                                                                                                            |
| Naturyl  Registered UserPosts: 133(1/27/04 3:58 pm)Reply       | Re: Chop it off! <hr/> If it were that easy, he probably would. As you know, however, sexual excitement occurs in the brain as well as other areas. It was witty remark, though, and I realize that it was probably intended only as such.                                                                                                                                                              |
| birdofhermes Registered UserPosts: 1342(1/27/04 4:01 pm)Reply                                                                                   | Re: Chop it off! <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Sixteen years? You can have that faster! Just chop it off. :-) <hr/> Did you ever hear of the Castrati sect in Russia. They took literally the words in scripture that there were eunuchs made by men and eunuchs for the sake of the Kingdom of Heaven. They made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of Heaven. But the sect died out. |

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2132

(1/27/04 4:06 pm)

Reply

Re: Chop it off!

---

It is the emotional aspect of sex which is the main problem, as far as becoming wise is concerned. The emotional desire to merge and lose oneself in another. The desire springs from the sufferings that are experienced with the delusion of self-existence. It is a bit like how a person experiences the emotional urge to take drugs because of deeper emotional issues that haven't been resolved.

Naturyl

Registered User

Posts: 135

(1/27/04 4:19 pm)

Reply

Re: Chop it off!

---

Yeah, but you (like the Buddha) attempt to eliminate such suffering in the only way possible - by eliminating life. The Buddha defines life as suffering, then prescribes a path for the cessation of suffering. Therefore, the Buddha prescribes, by definition, a plan for the cessation of life. No serious Buddhist could possibly argue against this, and none would dare. Both you and the Buddha realize that the only way to get rid of suffering is to get rid of life. This is the reality behind your calls for detachment from emotions, from femininity, from everything that is not Nirvana - and Nirvana is specifically defined as freedom from the cycle of birth and death. Plainly stated, it is freedom from life. Of course, none of you are consistent enough to do the intellectually honest thing and exterminate yourselves - instead, you want to have your cake and eat it too. You seek freedom from life while alive, cessation of life while living. This fundamental contradiction is your collective undoing. Did Bodhidharma really sit and stare at a blank wall for nine years? Hardly. In reality, he sat and stared at a blank wall for periods of several hours, until having to eat, excrete, or sleep, a process which he continued for nine years. Like all who preach salvation, you want to be saved from life itself, and, having achieved as much of a waking death for yourself as you can manage without actually having to starve or freeze, you wish to annihilate everyone else as well. You disguise it as spirituality, but in reality, it is the way of all religion.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2135

(1/27/04 5:01 pm)

Reply

Re: Chop it off!

Naturyl wrote:

Quote:

---

The Buddha defines life as suffering, then prescribes a path for the cessation of suffering. Therefore, the Buddha prescribes, by definition, a plan for the cessation of life.

---

He was referring to deluded life (samsara) as being the source of suffering, as opposed to non-deluded life (nirvana), which is beyond suffering.

Lao Tzu also constantly referred to this duality, which is no surprise since it goes to the heart of all genuine spirituality.

For example:

*Every desireless, one can see the mystery,
Ever desiring, one can see the manifestations.*

and:

*Empty yourself of everything.
Let the mind rest at peace.
The ten thousand things rise and fall while the Self watches their return.
They grow and flourish and then return to the source.
Returning to the source is stillness, which is the way of nature.
The way of nature is unchanging.
Not knowing constancy leads to disaster,
Knowing constancy, the mind is open.
With an open mind, you will be openhearted.
Being openhearted, you will act royally.
Being royal, you will attain the divine.
Being divine, you will be at one with the Tao.
Being at one with the Tao is eternal.
And though the body dies, the Tao will never pass away.*

Quote:

---

Both you and the Buddha realize that the only way to get rid of suffering is to get rid of life. This is the reality behind your calls for detachment from emotions, from femininity, from everything that is not Nirvana . . . .

---

Nice try, but you're not even remotely close.

Naturyl

Registered User

Posts: 139

(1/27/04 5:21 pm)

Reply

Re: Chop it off!

---

You've learned to use Eastern spirituality as a weapon. It's quite interesting, actually. You use Taoist and Buddhist quotes to advance a position which both Taoism and Buddhism would find repugnant. I shouldn't be surprised, and in truth I'm really not, as I dealt with all of this years ago in the pantheist movement. There are a surprising number of individuals with personality disorders attracted to pantheism, for some reason. Apparently, the related realm of Eastern thought offers similar attractions. It would be an interesting phenomena to study from a psychological perspective.

Quote:

---

Nice try, but you're not even remotely close.

---

I'm closer that you'd likely admit. Your type is nothing new in the world, David. As I mentioned before, the state hospital is full of 'enlightened beings' like yourself. Based on what some nurse friends have told me, I understand that the would-be Buddhas are usually given bunks in between two Christs, in order to facilitate opportunities for enlightening conversation.

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

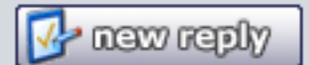

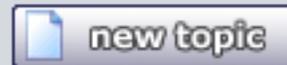

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The misogynist

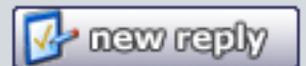

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                 | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 2137(1/27/04 6:46 pm)Reply  | Re: Chop it off! <hr/> Naturyl wrote: Quote: <hr/> You use Taoist and Buddhist quotes to advance a position which both Taoism and Buddhism would find repugnant. <hr/> Taoists and Buddhists might find my views repugnant, but I very much doubt that Lao Tzu and or Buddha would. Unlike most people, a sage doesn't have anything to protect inside himself and therefore doesn't have an emotional reason to become offended or outraged. He would also have the ability to coolly step back and take in the larger picture, and discern the wisdom of my behaviour. He may or may not agree with my strategy (although I can't see any reason why), but the last thing he would do is get outraged by it. Quote: <hr/> As I mentioned before, the state hospital is full of 'enlightened beings' like yourself. Based on what some nurse friends have told me, I understand that the would-be Buddhas are usually given bunks in between two Christs, in order to facilitate |

|                                                                                                                                                                                                   |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                                                   | opportunities for enlightening conversation. <hr/> She's probably right. But even so, you're starting to sound desperate with these sorts of remarks. It's sounding very defensive and low-brow.                                                                                                  |
| Naturyl  Registered User         Posts: 142         (1/27/04 6:50 pm)         Reply | Re: Chop it off! <hr/> Low-brow, perhaps, but not defensive. After all, I am attacking, so how could I be defensive? You probably imagine that I am defending my 'emotional attachments.' Nope. I am indulging an emotion, but it is one of amusement. I'm having fun kicking the tar out of you. |

Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The most generous are the greatest thieves

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                       | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1066(4/13/04 1:15 am)Reply                                                                                          | The most generous are the greatest thieves<hr/> The gifts and robbery go together.The most civilised do not know how to give gifts and the most civilised have no concept of gratitude.                      |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 880(4/13/04 2:32 am)Reply | Re: The most generous are the greatest thieves<hr/> What?                                                                                                                                                        |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1068(4/13/04 3:43 am)Reply                                                                                          | Re: The most generous are the greatest thieves<hr/> A true spirit of the gift springs from an abundance that comes from victory. Many are trading unconsciously. They think they are giving or receiving a gift. |

|                                                                                                                                                                    |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 533(4/13/04 5:04 am)Reply                                                                                     | Re: The most generous are the greatest theives <hr/> I can only repeat Scott:What?Elaborate, instead of trying to be interesting, DEL.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 882(4/13/04 5:31 am)Reply  | Re: The most generous are the greatest theives <hr/> I do understand this:Many are trading unconsciously. They think they are giving or receiveing a gift.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1069(4/13/04 8:50 am)Reply                                                                                     | Re: The most generous are the greatest theives <hr/> Those who loot and pillage are the most generous to their relatives, friends and the needy. The are also the only people who understand honour and respect for the individual. The are by nature people of the land and value territory.In contrast the trader respects no one. He can only see value in a position or title and everything is for sale at the right price. He is not a murderer or a theif but if your existence is not of economic value then you must perish like all perishable goods. |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 534(4/13/04 2:26 pm)Reply                                                                                     | Re: The most generous are the greatest theives <hr/> Thanks for the explanation, DEL.(And 'the' is 'they' in a few cases. Doesn't matter, though.)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 632
(4/13/04 4:58 pm)
Reply

Re: The most generous are the greatest thieves

---

Those who loot and pillage are the most generous to their relatives, friends and the needy.

Only when the going is good. It is just a guilt trip and because they know there will come times when they need help - they are generous for future help.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 1071
(4/14/04 6:52 am)
Reply

Re: The most generous are the greatest thieves

---

Quote:

---

jimhaz
they are generous for future help.

---

Which leads us into the subject of faith, trust and the two contrasting types of unity.

Do you think being "generous for future help" is a functional and balanced system that actually works?

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 884
(4/14/04 9:28 am)
Reply

Re: The most generous are the greatest thieves

---

It seems to work off the other person's fear that they'll be rejected if they don't return your favors. When people begin losing their fear of rejection, and start becoming conscious of truth (if someone gives me something, I don't owe them anything), then you shouldn't expect anything back from the gifts you give.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 1072
(4/14/04 10:36 am)
Reply

Re: The most generous are the greatest thieves

---

Quote:

---

voce io

. . . . . start becoming conscious of truth (if someone gives me something, I don't owe them anything), . . . . .

---

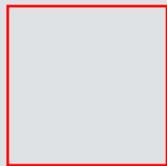

What convinced you that this is truth?
Does anybody else here believe this?

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 885
(4/14/04 10:47 am)
Reply

Re: The most generous are the greatest thieves

---

If someone gives you something and smiles, are you a bad person if you never give them anything back and you don't smile?

MKFaizi
Registered User
Posts: 1148
(4/14/04 1:28 pm)
Reply

Re: The most generous are the greatest thieves

---

I think that you need to understand the nature of so called giving. Giving is not getting.

I also think that you all need to philosophically advance beyond Ms. Manners.

It is my duty to give every single day of my life. That is what I do. I will give anyone anything if it is within my means to do so. My feeling about it does not matter. My ego does not matter. So called sacrifice is no sacrifice. That is bullshit.

The "sacrifice" of Christ is but one problem I have with Christianity. Within that context, the self flagellation of the Shi'a makes sense. So does the legacy of Sade.

The laying down of ego is not the laying down of ego. The implication is that one has something to lay down. When one is without ego, there is

|                                                                                                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                     | nothing to give or to sacrifice. There is no gratification. Faizi                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 536(4/14/04 6:39 pm)Reply                                                                                      | Re: The most generous are the greatest thieves <hr/> You will know how attractive you make yourself with the words you choose. No beating about the Bush (haha) with you.Marsha, you are truly great. Okay, I'm in the corner again, thumb in my mouth.Waiting for Godot.Anna, that is. And you. |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 886(4/15/04 2:01 am)Reply  | Re: The most generous are the greatest thieves <hr/> She only makes herself lustfully attractive because she acts like a bitch. I'd never want to date or marry a woman that talks like she does.                                                                                                                      |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1073(4/15/04 6:20 am)Reply                                                                                      | Manners and Philosophy <hr/> Quote: <hr/> MKFaiziI also think that you all need to philosophically advance beyond Ms. Manners. <hr/> Your manners are based on your philosophy.Your manners show the value of your philosophy.Your manners are the reification of your philosophy. |

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1149

(4/15/04 3:49 pm)

Reply

Re: Manners and Philosophy

---

Scott,

I just re-read what I wrote and I see nothing lustful or bitchy about it.

I am definitely not interested in marrying or having a relationship so I am also not interested in the fact that you would not marry or have a relationship with one such as myself. Of course, you would not. The very idea of it is disgusting. You require pussy. You are, like most men, looking for a woman; a mindless cunt.

Reading the forum is quite boring because it does read like Ms. Manners. That is not my fault but yours. I have not written here regularly for some time and I am sure that I will not do so.

I am most willing to bide my time until some subject of my choosing interests me. That may take a while. I think constantly and I interact with adolescents whom I encourage to read. It is a challenge to pique their interests. One started on Lewis Carroll. He is advancing with Faulkner and Kafka. Once past Kafka, there is Wilde and Sade and Dostoyevski and Tolstoy. Then, Nietzsche and Kierkegaard. Then, Hakuin. Unfortunately, church has already poisoned him against Jesus. His ideas of Christ as philosopher are warped. His mother is extreme manic depressive so she goes to church for the exercise.

He is on "The Penal Colony" and "As I Lay Dying" now. Carroll is a mindless trip. Kafka is somewhat more enriching. Faulkner portrays humanity at its lowest common denominator.

I know you hate it when I comment but I will do so from time to time.

Not very often because the effort is not worth my time.

Faizi

MKFaizi
Registered User
Posts: 1150
(4/15/04 3:55 pm)
Reply

Re: Manners and Philosophy

---

DEL,

You are clearly a fool. You say much about nothing. Never have said anything of value and never will.

That is all right because you are in good company. Ultimately, every current writer on the forum agrees with you.

Assholes have that tendency.

Faizi

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 1075
(4/15/04 4:18 pm)
Reply

Re: The most generous are the greatest thieves

---

Quote:

---

voce io

If someone gives you something and smiles, are you a bad person if you never give them anything back and you don't smile?

---

The people of the land (Generous Thieves) would rob you to cure your unconsciousness.

The people of the air (Heartless traders) would apply sanctions to cure your unconsciousness.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 1076
(4/15/04 4:23 pm)
Reply

Re: Manners and Philosophy

---

Quote:

---

MKFaizi

You are clearly a fool. You say much about nothing.
Never have said anything of value and never will.

---

What do you consider to be things of "value"?

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 890
(4/16/04 1:57 am)
Reply

Re: Manners and Philosophy

---

Marsha,

You are, like most men, looking for a woman; a mindless cunt.

Actually, that isn't true. Mindless cunts are VERY easy to find here at college. I could walk down two hallways and find a mindless cunt to fuck tonight. What I'm looking for is someone that's like me, who I can see myself in.

I know you hate it when I comment but I will do so from time to time.

I don't hate it, or you. I just think you have issues, and I point it out.

I just re-read what I wrote and I see nothing lustful or bitchy about it.

It's lustful because it's bitchy. You try to emulate the 'masculine woman', which is a mean spirited woman who cuts to the core of issues (the core doesn't necessarily mean 'truth'). That type of woman can seem lustful to men (which is why you don't find it lustful at all...you're not a man).

Reading the forum is quite boring because it does read like Ms. Manners. That is not my fault but yours.

If you get bored of discussions on truth, you can leave again. You seem to have some sort of idea that for this place to be worthwhile, it has to sting when you read it. Not necessarily true.

One started on Lewis Carroll. He is advancing with Faulkner and Kafka.

Once past Kafka, there is Wilde and Sade and Dostoyevski and Tolstoy. Then, Nietzsche and Kierkegaard. Then, Hakuin.

Is the earlier stuff not philosophy? I read, I think it was, "The Metamorphosis" by Kafka. That seemed to be more of a story than anything philosophical, although it did make me question what my own family would do with me.

Don't think I'm calling myself advanced when I say this, but I really do need to read Hakuin. I glanced over it the other day, and it's great stuff.

-Scott

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The most generous are the greatest thieves

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                              | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 539(4/16/04 9:02 am)Reply | Re: Manners and Philosophy<hr/> I was wondering why Marsha pinpoints on reading so much. What's the big deal with all those books? Written mostly by MEN, even.Confusing woman you are. |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1077(4/16/04 5:21 pm)Reply | Re: Manners and Philosophy<hr/> "Confusing woman you are."or possibly"Confused woman you are."                                                                                             |

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 1079
(4/18/04 12:44 am)
Reply

Re: The most generous are the greatest theives

---

Quote:

---

MKFaizi

It is my duty to give every single day of my life. That is what I do.

---

Who made it your duty?

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

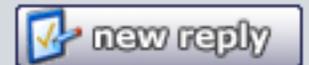

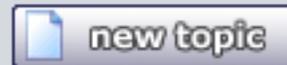

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The motivation of the enlightened

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                               | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| ksolwayRegistered UserPosts: 338(2/6/04 11:37 pm)Reply  | The motivation of the enlightened <hr/> Matt wrote: Quote: <hr/> Why does the enlightened person try to achieve the valuing of reason and the survival of wisdom? Is it because he wants people to think like him so they will do things for him or be friends with him? Or maybe because he wants to look smarter than other people, like a genius? Does he want people to think he is a great man or something? <hr/> The enlightened person is motivated only by the wish to enlighten himself. This means himself first, and then everyone else in the Universe (his larger self). This is known as "bodhicitta", or literally, "the enlightenment mind". Quote: <hr/> Is he acting completely altruistically with no concern for himself at all or what? <hr/> |

|                                                                                   |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                   | The closer to perfection he is, the more pure will be his motivation.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| RairunRegistered UserPosts: 186(2/7/04 12:32 am)Reply  | ... <hr/> I don't argue that an enlightened person might want to enlighten other people, but that larger self thing sounds like a lame excuse.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 592(2/7/04 1:41 am)Reply   | Re: ... <hr/> It doesn't gel with me either. I think it is more something to do with a reason to keep living and to alleviate the boredom of non-attachment. Mind you 'this larger self' concept is not something I feel. I am still just I, nonetheless, the I in me has an desire/instinct to see humankind extend its reaches after I die, regardless of being enlightened or not. Edited by: jimhaz at: 2/7/04 1:58 am |
| silentsalRegistered UserPosts: 37(2/7/04 1:48 am)Reply | Re: ... <hr/> Quote: <hr/> The closer to perfection he is, the more pure will be his motivation. <hr/> The closer to perfection she is, the more intimate she becomes with what is, as it is.                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |

MGregory

Registered User

Posts: 340

(2/7/04 5:31 am)

Reply

Re: The motivation of the enlightened

---

Quote:

---

Kevin: -- The enlightened person is motivated only by the wish to enlighten himself. This means himself first, and then everyone else in the Universe (his larger self).

---

Enlightenment, as I understand it, is an escape from suffering and some sort of bliss or something, so I can see why someone would try to enlighten himself. But why does he think everyone else in the Universe is his larger self? Why does he think that they have any effect on his own enlightenment?

Quote:

---

This is known as "bodhicitta", or literally, "the enlightenment mind".

---

That's Buddhist jargon, right? How is that pronounced? Why is the motivation to enlighten everyone in the Universe called "the enlightenment mind"?

Quote:

---

The closer to perfection he is, the more pure will be his motivation.

---

What is "perfection"? Perfection of what?

ksolway

Registered User

Posts: 340

(2/7/04 4:18 pm)

Reply

Re: The motivation of the enlightened

---

Matt:

Quote:

---

I can see why someone would try to enlighten himself. But why does he think everyone else in the Universe is his larger self?

---

Your hand is part of you, because it is connected to you. Other people are also part of you, because they too are connected to you.

Quote:

---

Why does he think that they have any effect on his own enlightenment?

---

Because they are part of him.

Quote:

---

K: This is known as "bodhicitta", or literally, "the enlightenment mind".

That's Buddhist jargon, right?

---

Yes. It has the double meaning of "mind of enlightenment" and "the wish to make all beings enlightened". Therefore it is good shorthand.

How is that pronounced?

Bod-i-cheetah (the "i" as in "in")

Quote:

---

Why is the motivation to enlighten everyone in the Universe called "the enlightenment mind"?

---

It is possessed of the will to enlightenment.

Quote:

---

K: The closer to perfection he is, the more pure will be his motivation.

M: What is "perfection"? Perfection of what?

---

The perfection of wisdom. The perfection of ridding himself of all gross and subtle delusions.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2240

(2/7/04 9:45 pm)

Reply

---

---

"Body cheater"

The motivation to enlighten everyone is a gross and subtle delusion.

ksolway

Registered User

Posts: 341

(2/7/04 11:15 pm)

Reply

suergaz

---

The planets must be so aligned to make you funnier than normal today!

MGregory

Registered User

Posts: 342

(2/8/04 12:33 am)

Reply

Re: The motivation of the enlightened

---

Quote:

---

Matt: I can see why someone would try to enlighten himself. But why does he think everyone else in the Universe is his larger self?

Kevin: Your hand is part of you, because it is connected to you. Other people are also part of you, because they too are connected to you.

---

Well, I'm with Jimhaz. I can feel my hand and I can make it do whatever I want it to do. I can't do that with other people. I can't feel them or make them do anything they don't want to do. For example, when my neighbor plays his music too loud, I have to go down there, ask him to turn it down and hope that he turns it down. Whereas, if I am playing music and it becomes too loud, I can just use my hand to turn it down. I don't have to ask anybody, so the connection, if any exists, is clearly not the same.

Quote:

---

Kevin: The closer to perfection he is, the more pure will be his motivation.

Matt: What is "perfection"? Perfection of what?

Kevin: The perfection of wisdom. The perfection of ridding himself of all gross and subtle delusions.

---

Ok, everyone knows that wisdom is intelligence and compassion: being patient with others, understanding and having empathy for others, and helping, giving and being kind to others. Is that how you would describe it?

What do you consider to be a delusion? Hatred, anger, greed, arrogance, etc.? What do you mean by "gross" and "subtle"?

Edited by: MGregory at: 2/8/04 12:35 am

ksolway

Registered User

Posts: 342

(2/8/04 1:08 am)

Reply

Re: The motivation of the enlightened

---

Matt wrote:

Quote:

---

Kevin: Your hand is part of you, because it is connected to you. Other people are also part of you, because they too are connected to you.

M: Well, I'm with Jimhaz. I can feel my hand and I can make it do whatever I want it to do. I can't do that with other people.

---

I'm connected to my liver (say), but I can't make my liver do whatever I want it to do. Yet it's still part of me.

Similarly, I have a heart "condition" where my heart sometimes goes into the wrong gear. A bit like if you're in an automatic car, and it just decides to change gear at an inappropriate time. There is virtually nothing I can do to prevent that from happening.

I am closely connected to my fingernails, but I can't stop them from growing.

I agree that our traditional bodies feel more obviously "us". But we have other bodies, that are less obviously "us".

Quote:

---

Ok, everyone knows that wisdom is intelligence and compassion: being patient with others, understanding and having empathy for others, and helping, giving and being kind to others. Is that how you would describe it?

---

Understanding the nature of Reality is an important part of that.

Quote:

---

What do you consider to be a delusion? Hatred, anger, greed, arrogance, etc.? What do you mean by "gross" and "subtle"?

---

Things like hatred, anger, jealousy, and greed would be at the "gross" end of the scale, while things like subtle boredom, or slightest haziness of mind, would be at the "subtle" end of the scale.

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 343
(2/8/04 4:56 pm)
Reply

Re: The motivation of the enlightened

---

Quote:

---

Kevin: I agree that our traditional bodies feel more obviously "us". But we have other bodies, that are less obviously "us".

---

How do we make these other bodies more obvious to ourselves?

Quote:

---

Matt: Ok, everyone knows that wisdom is intelligence and compassion: being patient with others, understanding and having empathy for others, and helping, giving and being kind to others. Is that how you would describe it?

Kevin: Understanding the nature of Reality is an important part of that.

---

Which of these qualities is the most important to the enlightened or perfect person?

Quote:

---

Matt: What do you consider to be a delusion? Hatred, anger, greed, arrogance, etc.? What do you mean by "gross" and "subtle"?

Kevin: Things like hatred, anger, jealousy, and greed would be at the "gross" end of the scale, while things like subtle boredom, or slightest haziness of mind, would be at the "subtle" end of the scale.

---

As I understand it, these delusions would have to be transcended or subdued so they no longer arise in order for enlightenment to occur. In other words, I don't think enlightenment comes first and destroys the delusions. If this is correct, how can a person subdue these delusions? Do we start with the subtle delusions and work towards the gross ones, or is it better to go the other way around?

Does the motivation of the enlightened person extend to getting rid of these delusions in other people? How would he do that? What kind of strategies would he use?

Lbartoli
Registered User
Posts: 368
(2/8/04 5:08 pm)
Reply

wise men eat brown rice

---

KSolway wrote:

Similarly, I have a heart "condition" where my heart sometimes goes into the wrong gear. A bit like if you're in an automatic car, and it just decides to change gear at an inappropriate time. There is virtually nothing I can do to prevent that from happening.

LB: NOT TRUE. You can stop wolfing down those nitrite-laden hotdogs, that would do it, no joke.

Leo

ksolway

Registered User

Posts: 345

(2/8/04 8:17 pm)

Reply

Re: The motivation of the enlightened

---

Matt wrote:

Quote:

---

Kevin: I agree that our traditional bodies feel more obviously "us". But we have other bodies, that are less obviously "us".

M: How do we make these other bodies more obvious to ourselves?

---

Try to make ourselves, and them, more intelligent and communicative.

Quote:

---

Matt: Ok, everyone knows that wisdom is intelligence and compassion: being patient with others, understanding and having empathy for others, and helping, giving and being kind to others. Is that how you would describe it?

Kevin: Understanding the nature of Reality is an important part of that.

M: Which of these qualities is the most important to the enlightened or perfect person?

---

Without understanding the nature of Reality there can be no proper patience, understanding, compassion, etc.

Quote:

---

Kevin: Things like hatred, anger, jealousy, and greed would be at the "gross" end of the scale, while things like subtle boredom, or slightest haziness of mind, would be at the "subtle" end of the scale.

M: As I understand it, these delusions would have to be transcended or subdued so they no longer arise in order for enlightenment to occur. In other words, I don't think enlightenment comes first and destroys the delusions. If this is correct, how can a person subdue these delusions? Do we start with the subtle delusions and work towards the gross ones, or is it better to go the other way around?

---

This is a big topic, and I refer you to "Stages of the Way" in "Poison for the Heart".

One doesn't all of a sudden become a perfectly, spotless, enlightened Buddha, from being an ordinary ignorant person. It is a gradual process. At first gross delusions are dismantled, and later the subtle one's are evaporated.

Quote:

---

Does the motivation of the enlightened person extend to getting rid of these delusions in other people?

---

If he wants to enlighten himself, it would have to.

Quote:

---

How would he do that? What kind of strategies would he use?

---

Any strategy which stands a chance of working. The first thing he can do is to practice what he preaches.

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

Genius Forum

Causality • Courage • Rationality • Determination • Logic • Integrity • Thinking • Ideals
Wisdom • Reason • Discipline • Truth • Masculinity • Perfection • Universe

Genius News

David Quinn's Site

The Thinking Man's Minefield

EZB Edit

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The nature of meditation

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                                                  | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 2349(7/17/04 11:01 am)Reply  | The nature of meditation <hr/> From the "Eckhart Tolle" thread ..... James Johnathon wrote: Quote: <hr/> JJ: As someone who experiences non-thought regularly, your reply sounds like a blind man telling a normal man that grass isn't green. Could you tell me why you think that a state of non-thought is an illusion? (And why over two millennia of enlightened thinkers have preached the merits of non-thought, through meditation.) DQ: Because, alas, these so-called "enlightened thinkers" are less interested in truth and more interested in promoting meditative heavens that greatly appeal to the ego. Needless to say, the latter is far more popular and pleasurable to the emotions than the former JJ: Do you not consider the Buddha, the Bodhidharma, or any of the successive Zen Patriarchs and Masters to be enlightened thinkers? |

DQ: I consider most of them to be frauds. The exceptions, such as Bodhidharma, Huang Po and Hakuin, weren't interested in meditative thoughtless states of consciousness, but in something much deeper and more fascinating.

JJ: Bodhidharma taught meditation to Shaolin monks, and is said to have sat in his cave outside of Shaolin, deep in meditation, for nine years, subsequent to his arrival in China from India. So dedicated was he to meditation, that he was said to have cut off his own eye-lids to prevent him from falling asleep during sessions.

DQ: Meditation, as in trying to comprehend the nature of Reality, not shutting down one's thought-processes. Bodhidharma emphasized the need to use reason and understand Reality for oneself, which is identical to my own teaching.

JJ: No, that's your definition of meditation. The real definition of meditation, in the context of Eastern thought, is the act of stilling the conscious, perusing mind.

---

I consider that a very low attainment, James. It is a bit like saying that the aim of climbing Mt Everest is to work up a sweat. It rather misses the point.

As far as I'm concerned, if a meditational practice isn't directed towards the complete comprehension of Ultimate Reality, then spiritually speaking, it's a waste of time.

Quote:

---

Meditation is "rational contemplation" only in a Western context.

---

No, in a wise context. It has nothing to do with East or West. You're simply repeating what the popular books say, regurgitating their rigid categories.

Quote:

---

JJ: Note: the perfection of freedom is zazen-samadhi. That speaks for itself. Perhaps you should have done more homework.

DQ: "Zazen-samadhi" simply means experiencing and understanding emptiness. It has nothing to do with trying to sit still and emptying the mind of all thoughts. Hakuin consistently spoke against such practices all of his life.

JJ: Do you really think that you are convincing anyone with this? It's a self-revelation, that you must resort to these tactics to justify your belief. Again, make up new definitions for terms that have been around long before yourself if you want, but don't expect any rational person to take you seriously.

---

Again, if "zazen-samadhi" is not about experiencing and understanding emptiness, then, spiritually speaking, it is a waste of time.

Quote:

---

JJ: I think you have a highly romanticized (and incorrect) notion of what meditation actually is. I don't know what a meditative "heaven" is, nor do I see how stilling the mind's idea of itself and communing with emptiness is an appeal to the ego.

DQ: The ego is attracted to anything that gives it a sense of power. By entering into powerful meditative states which seem to render everything empty, the ego can feel as though it has conquered everything in the Universe.

JJ: Meditation dissolves the subject-object duality.

DQ: You're engaging in an illusion here. How can one dissolve what doesn't exist in the first place? The mirror doesn't need to be wiped, James.

JJ: What it dissolves is the illusion of the ego. It erodes the mind's idea of itself.

---

It dissolves it through unconsciousness, not through wisdom. It blocks out the existence of the ego by blocking out thought itself. It is a fake attainment.

Quote:

---

JJ: Sadly, in its currently fashionable form, meditation is espoused by many as a quick and sure way to obtain health, vitality, and moments of bliss. If these things occur, they are merely side-effects, and the moment they become attached to, meditation's true function has been lost.

DQ: I'm not talking about those things, but about the "emptiness" experience you have described - which I deem to be a false emptiness.

JJ: On what rational grounds do you deem it to be false?

DQ: I've already gone into this, using the story of Hui Neng as an illustration.

JJ: Your comparison of me to Shen Hsiu is another non-sequitor. Meditation is an important component in realizing one's true nature – the emptiness of the mind and the mirror.

---

The emptiness you are seeing is a fake emptiness, which artificificially depends on the removal of thought.

Quote:

---

By the way, if you're going to cut and paste Buddhist stories from tripod sites, you should reference that site. And if you are going to rip off tripod sites, the least you can do is provide the full context of the story. I see that, in your cutting and pasting, you forgot to include this:

Hui Ming then further asked, "Apart from those esoteric sayings and esoteric ideas handed down by the Fifth Patriarch from generation to generation, are there any other esoteric teachings?" Hui Neng replied, "What I can tell you is not esoteric. If you turn your light inwardly you will find what is esoteric within you."

Hui Neng's statement was used as a Koan from then on - "what did your original face look like before you were born?"

" Koans represent truths that can't be understood by logic. Hui Neng's Koan cuts through concepts and speculations about one's nature. It is shocking to discover that there is no concept which can fit such a question. The shock shakes one's assumptions, and that begins the waking up process.

---

Whoever wrote this was deluded. Koans do not "represent truths which cannot be understood by logic". That is completely false. You're swallowing all this modern Buddhist crap wholesale, and it is making you look stupid.

A koan is simply a device which is designed by the wise to stimulate the listener's mind into enlightenment. It has no other function than this. It is scripture at its most concentrated and usually consists of a direct expression of the nature of Reality. Such an expression is definitely NOT beyond the realm of logic. It may be beyond the deluded person's use of logic (and thus appears to him to be in the form of a paradox), but it is definitely not beyond the wise use of logic.

Quote:

---

DQ: The problem with entering into a state of "no-thought" is that there is no way of knowing that one has actually entered into it - not unless one uses thought. The reason why we have no conscious awareness during deep sleep is because there are no thoughts occurring during this time. Without thoughts, there is no consciousness and no experience whatsoever.

JJ: These strike me as highly spurious claims, coming from someone with no actual experience in the matter. It's like someone who has never experienced a drug-induced altered state explaining to someone who has what that state is like, on the basis of specious appeals to logic.

DQ: Sorry to disappoint you, but I know exactly the kind of experience you are talking about and have experienced it many times. Keep in mind that I am not challenging the existence and reality of the "false emptiness" that you experience, but rather its connection to the ultimate wisdom of life.

JJ: So, you claim to have experienced this state of thought-lessness while vehemently asserting that no such state exists?

You're weaving a tangled web, David

DQ: No, it's all very straightforward. The altered state which contains the illusion of thoughtlessness is a real phenomenon. It is a state of consciousness which comes into existence when the meditational conditions are ripe. That it creates the illusion of thoughtlessness and fools some people into thinking that it is enlightenment is also a very real phenomenon.

JJ: "The illusion of thought-lessness" – interesting notion. If you want to call the lack of thoughts "illusory", go for it. I think it's inchoate.

---

I can't think why. The imagination is a powerful thing, and the mind is very easily deceived by it. I don't think you've really examined your mind properly when you go into these altered states. Next time you go into one, take a step back and examine the constant stream of thought-processes that are continually going on. You'll be surprised.

Quote:

---

What I find illusory is your grasping at concepts, thinking that you're pointing at anything other than your own ego.

You have much to learn about meditation. For anyone interested, these are links that a spiritual collaborator of mine, involved in the field of neuro-science, provided for me upon request:

www.crystalinks.com/medbrain.html

www.purifymind.com/BuddhismBrain.htm

home.uchicago.edu/~jniimi...eBrain.htm quickstart.clari.net/qs\_s...n\_DSG.html http://www.myhealthsense.com/F030422\_Meditation.html

www.geocities.com/neovedanta/a28.html

http://www.cognitivetherapy.com/goleman\_nyt\_2003-02-04.html

home.swipnet.se/tmdoctors/braindev.htm

ejmas.com/pt/ptart\_shin\_0400.htm

<http://www.realization.org/page/doc0/doc0030.htm> <http://www.loper.org/~george/trends/2003/Sep/940.html>
www.leaderu.com/truth/2truth06.html
www.apa.org/monitor/dec03/tibetan.html

This represents only a small amount of the wealth of information that is now coming to light regarding the ability of meditation to alter consciousness in ways more conducive to enlightenment. Pretty soon it will be an established fact beyond refute. Even now, those who refute it do so only because they have a particular axe to grind – but it's an axe that flies in the face of reason and empirical science.

---

None of these pages have anything to do with enlightenment and the highest wisdom. You might as well refer me to a National Geographic magazine for all the good it would do.

Quote:

---

JJ: Your analogy between the human mind and the on/off functions of a light-switch is not apt. This is only a true analogy if you want to consider a living mind in an “on” state, and a dead mind in an “off” one. Otherwise, it is totally asinine to compare something of boolean nature to something of a dynamic nature.

DQ: You're the one who talks about "no-thought" and the "cessation of consciousness" and the like. That is to say, you're the one who uses the extreme binary term of "off" to describe your meditational experiences. I've been trying to explain how foolish that is.

JJ: The mind, being dynamic, is able to shift in drastically different ways from the “normal” standard of consciousness. I only said that meditation is the “cessation of consciousness” in so far as consciousness is considered to be the aroused and reactive nature of the perusing mind – the “monkey mind”. It doesn't turn off the mind, as you are implying that it must do, if thought is to be absent. It shifts the mind's state so that there is no motive for thought to arise, only the experience of utter stillness and openness.

---

There may or may not be any motive for thought to arise, but nevertheless, thought does still arise. To the degree that one is conscious, it always does.

You're insistence that thoughts vanish in these meditational states is itself a form of "monkey mind". Abandon it.

Quote:

---

JJ: It is true that one cannot be conscious of one's unconsciousness, but this is not what meditation involves. Since you seemed to have ignored what I said in my last post regarding the neurochemistry behind meditation, I will try to reiterate the point. To not form concepts in one's head means precisely that. It doesn't mean that one must consciously reflect on the fact that one is not forming concepts in one's head. By maintaining a thought-less state, and practicing the proper breathing techniques associated with zazen or vipassana meditation, deep states (approaching what you might call total "non-consciousness") become not only possible, but consistently reproducible.

DQ: There is no question that if you shut down the higher functioning of the brain - i.e. the frontal lobes and cerebral cortex - then you will experience a different form of consciousness in which your fears and worries and agitated thoughts temporarily disappear. The problem is, such a state has nothing to do with the great realization of Nirvana as experienced by wise people. A wise person doesn't have to shut down his cerebral cortex in order to experience Emptiness. He can continue to experience it even while he is thinking and reasoning and talking to others.

JJ: Meditation doesn't entail shutting down the cerebral cortex, or doing so with the intent of rendering one witlessly free of concerns. What it entails is training the brain to think differently.

DQ: "Think differently"? Yesterday, it was "no thinking at all". Your words are confusing. Please make up your mind.

JJ: Deep meditation (absolute samadhi) is not thinking at all. When leaving this deep state, thinking returns, but it is no longer the “monkey mind” (for lack of a better word). It is deep, clear, and without attachment (positive samadhi).

---

There is no such thing as "absolute samadhi". Your monkey mind is dreaming it. If you continue looking for emptiness down in that narrow dark hole, you will remain trapped in duality.

Quote:

---

JJ: It's a readjustment of nervous activity that ultimately leaves one more ripe for the deep embrace of logic, and yet it also seems to foster the “point” in and of itself by quieting the mind's idea of itself. The principle behind meditation is not that you do it twice a day and be done with it – it's that you continuously train your mind to function in a deeper fashion, so that eventually, sessions are not even necessary, as a cultivated brain-state is always with you. Meditation teaches your brain how to grow in ways more conducive to enlightenment.

DQ: Only if it is a meditation which is specifically directed towards the conquering of ignorance. Most kinds of meditation do the opposite; the powerful altered states they create only serve to reinforce people's ignorance. As Bodhidharma used to say, understanding one's own nature is the key to everything: "Whoever sees his nature is a Buddha. If you don't see your nature, invoking Buddhas, reciting sutras, making offerings, and keeping precepts are all useless."

JJ: Keeping precepts, reciting sutras, and invoking Buddhas is exactly the nature of your spirituality. Yours involves more abstract concepts to be sure, but it's fundamentally the same – it involves the rational intellect and the strivings of the ego. Understanding your true nature is achieved through meditation and the rational understanding that concepts are useless, in so far as attaining higher wisdom is concerned.

---

You really need to stop seeing things in such black and white terms. It is not a case of "meditation/emptying thoughts" vs "intellect/understanding". That is a false dichotomy created by the false Buddhism which you submit to. In reality, enlightenment is a product of both intellectualizing (reasoning about the nature of Reality) and meditation (immersing one's mind in the nature of Reality, as revealed by reason).

As the Buddha once remarked, in the Dhammapada: Without knowledge there is no meditation, without meditation there is no knowledge. He who has knowledge and meditation is near unto Nirvana.

Quote:

---

JJ: Yes, but when you've exposed reason as just another one of those delusions that you are trying to expose, what then?

DQ: You continue using it, just as you continue using computers and cars which are also empty of inherent existence. Nothing changes in that respect.

JJ: You continue using it as before, true, though your relationship to it changes. The object of one's pursuit is no longer to construct systematic and lofty metaphysical treatises with the intent of explicating the un-explicable, the object becomes nurturing the understanding and experience of emptiness by clarifying the fundamental point.

DQ: True. Which is what my book "Wisdom of the Infinite" is all about.-

JJ: "Wisdom of the Infinite" is a systematic construction of metaphysics.

---

No, it is the systematic deconstruction of all metaphysics and existences.

Quote:

---

It encourages people to go around thinking about causality.

---

You paint this as a bad thing? You're even more disconnected from Reality than I thought you were.

Quote:

---

“I don’t exist because of causality! I don’t exist because of causality!” – that’s the mantra of the QRS, your own invokation of the Buddha.

---

Now you're being silly, and quite ignorant to boot.

james johnathan
Registered User
Posts: 34
(7/18/04 10:34)
Reply

Re: re:

---

Quote:

---

JJ: As someone who experiences non-thought regularly, your reply sounds like a blind man telling a normal man that grass isn’t green. Could you tell me why you think that a state of non-thought is an illusion? (And why over two millennia of enlightened thinkers have preached the merits of non-thought, through meditation.)

DQ: Because, alas, these so-called "enlightened thinkers" are less interested in truth and more interested in promoting meditative heavens that greatly appeal to the ego. Needless to say, the latter is far more popular and pleasurable to the emotions than the former JJ: Do you not consider the Buddha, the Bodhidharma, or any of the successive Zen Patriarchs and Masters to be enlightened thinkers?

DQ: I consider most of them to be frauds. The exceptions, such as Bodhidarmna, Huang Po and Hakuin, weren't interested in meditative thoughtless states of consciousness, but in something much deeper and more fascinating.

JJ: Bodhidharma taught meditation to Shaolin monks, and is said to have sat in his cave outside of Shaolin, deep in meditation, for nine years, subsequent to his arrival in China from India. So dedicated was he to meditation, that he was said to have cut off his own eye-lids to prevent him from falling asleep during sessions.

DQ: Meditation, as in trying to comprehend the nature of Reality, not shutting down one's thought-processes.

Bodhidharma emphasized the need to use reason and understand Reality for oneself, which is identical to my own teaching.

JJ: No, that's your definition of meditation. The real definition of meditation, in the context of Eastern thought, is the act of stilling the conscious, perusing mind.

DQ: I consider that a very low attainment, James. It is a bit like saying that the aim of climbing Mt Everest is to work up a sweat. It rather misses the point.

As far as I'm concerned, if a meditational practice isn't directed towards the complete comprehension of Ultimate Reality, then spiritually speaking, it's a waste of time.

---

I'm telling you what the actual definition of meditation is, because you so obviously need a refresher. Your opinions as to whether or not meditating equals attainment is aside the point. Stop hijacking the term – that's the point. Any rational person with even a hobbyist level interest in Eastern thought knows that meditation is not trying to comprehend the nature of Reality through reason – that is, providing that they don't have other agendas.

Quote:

---

JJ: Meditation is “rational contemplation” only in a Western context.

DQ: No, in a wise context. It has nothing to do with East or West. You're simply repeating what the popular books say, regurgitating their rigid categories.

---

This has nothing to do with me repeating what “popular books” say, unless by “popular books” you mean the history of Eastern thought, and the burgeoning science of meditation. Call their categories rigid if you like – it makes no difference what your opinion is. The fact is, your continual assertion that references to “meditation”, in the texts of famous meditators, means “conceptualizing Reality” is bullocks. You immediately sully yourself and your touted rationality whenever you make such preposterous claims.

Quote:

---

JJ: Note: the perfection of freedom is zazen-samadhi. That speaks for itself. Perhaps you should have done more homework.

DQ: "Zazen-samadhi" simply means experiencing and understanding emptiness. It has nothing to do with trying to sit still and emptying the mind of all thoughts. Hakuin consistently spoke against such practices all of his life.

JJ: Do you really think that you are convincing anyone with this? It's a self-revelation, that you must resort to these tactics to justify your belief. Again, make up new definitions for terms that have been around long before yourself if you want, but don't expect any rational person to take you seriously.

DQ: Again, if "zazen-samadhi" is not about experiencing and understanding emptiness, then, spiritually speaking, it is a waste of time.

---

I'll take this as a tacit concession that "zazen-samadhi" does refer to the conception of meditation that the East, and myself, propound. Your opinion that it is, spiritually speaking, "a waste of time" doesn't interest me. I know that your mind is far too closed to ever think otherwise, and I don't begrudge Nature for making you as hopelessly stubborn as you are. I don't write for you, I write for the viewership.

Quote:

---

JJ: I think you have a highly romanticized (and incorrect) notion of what meditation actually is. I don't know what a meditative "heaven" is, nor do I see how stilling the mind's idea of itself and communing with emptiness is an appeal to the ego.

DQ: The ego is attracted to anything that gives it a sense of power. By entering into powerful meditative states which seem to render everything empty, the ego can feel as though it has conquered everything in the Universe.

JJ: Meditation dissolves the subject-object duality.

DQ: You're engaging in an illusion here. How can one dissolve what doesn't exist in the first place? The mirror doesn't need to be wiped, James.

JJ: What it dissolves is the illusion of the ego. It erodes the mind's idea of itself.

DQ: It dissolves it through unconsciousness, not through wisdom. It blocks out the existence of the ego by blocking out thought itself. It is a fake attainment.

---

The "existence of the ego"? The ego doesn't exist, David. There is no ego aside from the thinking that points to it. Descartes said, "I think, therefore I am." By emptying the mind of attachments (including attachments to emotions, things, time, and concepts) it is realized that there never was any ego to begin with – only a vast complex of mental content that, when clung to, strongly creates that illusion.

Quote:

---

JJ: Sadly, in its currently fashionable form, meditation is espoused by many as a quick and sure way to obtain health, vitality, and moments of bliss. If these things occur, they are merely side-effects, and the moment they become attached to, meditation's true function has been lost.

DQ: I'm not talking about those things, but about the "emptiness" experience you have described - which I deem to be a false emptiness.

JJ: On what rational grounds do you deem it to be false?

DQ: I've already gone into this, using the story of Hui Neng as an illustration.

JJ: Your comparison of me to Shen Hsiu is another non-sequitor. Meditation is an important component in realizing one's true nature – the emptiness of the mind and the mirror.

DQ: The emptiness you are seeing is a fake emptiness, which artificially depends on the removal of thought.

---

There's nothing artificial about it. The emptiness you are seeing is a fake emptiness, for it depends on the grasping of artificial thought-constructs.

Artificial, adj:

1.
  - a. Made by humans; produced rather than natural.
  - b. Brought about or caused by sociopolitical or other human-generated forces or influences
2. Made in imitation of something natural; simulated: artificial teeth.
3. Not genuine or natural: an artificial smile.

Concepts, and thoughts in general, fit each one of these definitions to a tee. The stillness of emptiness experienced through meditation, far from being an artificial creation, is purely the absence of artificial creation. It's the mind functioning in a direct naturalness that is un-mired by the distortions of our artificial (illusory) thought-constructs.

Quote:

---

JJ: By the way, if you're going to cut and paste Buddhist stories from tripod sites, you should reference that site. And if you are going to rip off tripod sites, the least you can do is provide the full context of the story. I see that, in your cutting and pasting, you forgot to include this:

Quote:

---

Hui Ming then further asked, "Apart from those esoteric sayings and esoteric ideas handed down by the Fifth Patriarch from generation to generation, are there any other esoteric teachings?" Hui Neng replied, "What I can tell you is not esoteric. If you turn your light inwardly you will find what is esoteric within you."

Hui Neng's statement was used as a Koan from then on - "what did your original face look like before you were born? " Koans represent truths that can't be understood by logic. Hui Neng's

Koan cuts through concepts and speculations about one's nature. It is shocking to discover that there is no concept which can fit such a question. The shock shakes one's assumptions, and that begins the waking up

---

---

Quote:

---

DQ: Whoever wrote this was deluded. Koans do not "represent truths which cannot be understood by logic". That is completely false. You're swallowing all this modern Buddhist crap wholesale, and it is making you look stupid.

---

You know who wrote that passage – you copied the story directly from him. Next time you rip off a website, try familiarizing yourself with the whole thing first. That way you won't get yourself tied up in knots like this.

Quote:

---

DQ: The problem with entering into a state of "no-thought" is that there is no way of knowing that one has actually entered into it - not unless one uses thought. The reason why we have no conscious awareness during deep sleep is because there are no thoughts occurring during this time. Without thoughts, there is no consciousness and no experience whatsoever.

JJ: These strike me as highly spurious claims, coming from someone with no actual experience in the matter. It's like someone who has never experienced a drug-induced altered state explaining to someone who has what that state is like, on the basis of specious appeals to logic.

DQ: Sorry to disappoint you, but I know exactly the kind of experience you are talking about and have experienced it many times. Keep in mind that I am not challenging the existence and reality of the "false emptiness" that you experience, but rather its connection to the ultimate wisdom of life.

JJ: So, you claim to have experienced this state of thoughtlessness while vehemently asserting that no such state exists? You're weaving a tangled web, David

DQ: No, it's all very straightforward. The altered state which contains the illusion of thoughtlessness is a real phenomenon. It is a state of consciousness which comes into existence when the meditational conditions are ripe. That it creates the illusion of thoughtlessness and fools some people into thinking that it is enlightenment is also a very real phenomenon.

JJ: "The illusion of thoughtlessness" – interesting notion. If you want to call the lack of thoughts "illusory", go for it. I think it's inchoate.

DQ: I can't think why. The imagination is a powerful thing, and the mind is very easily deceived by it. I don't think you've really examined your mind properly when you go into these altered states. Next time you go into one, take a step back and examine the constant stream of thought-processes that are continually going on. You'll be surprised.

---

Your hubris is astounding. The best criticism of the thoughtlessness of deep meditation that you have is, "you're wrong, thoughts are still occurring." With each of these ridiculous objections, you further belie your ignorance regarding Eastern thought. Furthermore, I sense that this increasing irrationality on your part is the result of an emotional vexation wrought of your desperate attachment to your current beliefs. Beginner's mind, David.

Quote:

---

DQ: None of these pages have anything to do with enlightenment and the highest wisdom. You might as well refer me to a National Geographic magazine for all the good it would do.

---

They're oriented towards the understanding of meditation in terms of neurobiology. You may not be interested in them, but if even one reader goes to one of those sites and learns just why it is that meditation can produce dramatically altered states of mind wherein no thoughts arise, I'm glad that I posted them.

Quote:

---

JJ: Your analogy between the human mind and the on/off functions of a light-switch is not apt. This is only a true analogy if you want to consider a living mind in an "on" state, and a dead mind in an "off" one. Otherwise, it is totally asinine to compare something of boolean nature to something of a dynamic nature.

DQ: You're the one who talks about "no-thought" and the "cessation of consciousness" and the like. That is to say, you're the one who uses the extreme binary term of "off" to describe your meditational experiences. I've been trying to explain how foolish that is.

JJ: The mind, being dynamic, is able to shift in drastically different ways from the "normal" standard of consciousness. I only said that meditation is the "cessation of consciousness" in so far as consciousness is considered to be the aroused and reactive nature of the perusing mind – the "monkey mind". It doesn't turn off the mind, as you are implying that it must do, if thought is to be absent. It shifts the mind's state so that there is no motive for thought to arise, only the experience of utter stillness and openness.

DQ: There may or may not be any motive for thought to arise, but nevertheless, thought does still arise. To the degree that one is conscious, it always does.

---

You've never experienced it (obviously), whereas I have (plus thousands of others, including the principle figures of the philosophy that you have hijacked). I liked your second sentence though. Unwittingly, perhaps, you made a very salient point; to the degree that one is conscious, thought arises. Since being "conscious" is accepted terminology for the state of the "normal" mindset - aptly called "monkey mind" – the degree to which one is not in this state of mind is the degree to which one is free from thoughts.

Honestly David, you need to stop assuming that your own failed experience in meditation reflects an actual problem in the phenomenon itself. Just accept that you, like so many failed new-age mystics and modern seekers, weren't doing it right, and thus never went anywhere with it. You embarrass yourself with these hollow, unfounded, unjustified objections. This is not an insult, just pure honesty.

Quote:

---

JJ: It's a readjustment of nervous activity that ultimately leaves one more ripe for the deep embrace of logic, and yet it also seems to foster the "point" in and of itself by quieting the mind's idea of itself. The principle behind meditation is not that you do it twice a day and be done with it – it's that you continuously train your mind to function in a deeper fashion, so that eventually, sessions are not even necessary, as a cultivated brain-state is always with you. Meditation teaches your brain how to grow in ways more conducive to enlightenment.

DQ: Only if it is a meditation which is specifically directed towards the conquering of ignorance. Most kinds of meditation do the opposite; the powerful altered states they create only serve to reinforce people's ignorance. As Bodhidharma used to say, understanding one's own nature is the key to everything: "Whoever sees his nature is a Buddha. If you don't see your nature, invoking Buddhas, reciting sutras, making offerings, and keeping precepts are all useless."

JJ: Keeping precepts, reciting sutras, and invoking Buddhas is exactly the nature of your spirituality. Yours involves more abstract concepts to be sure, but it's fundamentally the same – it involves the rational intellect and the strivings of the ego. Understanding your true nature is achieved through meditation and the rational understanding that concepts are useless, in so far as attaining higher wisdom is concerned.

DQ: You really need to stop seeing things in such black and white terms. It is not a case of "meditation/emptying thoughts" vs "intellect/understanding". That is a false dichotomy created by the false Buddhism which you submit to. In reality, enlightenment is a product of both intellectualizing (reasoning about the nature of Reality) and meditation (immersing one's mind in the nature of Reality, as revealed by reason).

---

I agree that it isn't a case of the dichotomy that you falsely ascribed of my position. Meditation is important, just is the rational understanding that concepts are useless – yet it is still a rational understanding. I've never once denied the importance of reason; this seems to be something you assume of me, just as you assume that I'm Buddhist. The enlightened mind is one cultivated by meditation, and thereby able to deeply and profoundly experience the impeccable logic that dissolves maya. The mistake is in believing that concepts, in so far as enlightenment is concerned, have merit beyond pointing out their own emptiness. I agree with your last sentence – except that the true nature of Reality belies attempts to rationally capture it (as you have said). Thus, immersing one's mind in the true nature of Reality cannot mean immersing one's mind in concepts – it must mean immersing one's mind in the nature of Reality itself (emptiness). Immerse yourself in the moon, not the finger.

If calling me a Buddhist helps you to deal with me, I'll grant you that crutch. However, I have repeatedly denied that I submit to Buddhism. It is Buddhism that tells me to abandon Buddhism. Most Buddhists really don't like me very much, either.

Quote:

---

JJ: It encourages people to go around thinking about causality.

DQ: You paint this as a bad thing? You're even more disconnected from Reality than I thought you were

---

I'm a staunch determinist in so far as I want to recognize the existence of "things". The fact is, once you begin to deeply grasp the emptiness of "neither arising nor ceasing, coming nor going, permanent nor impermanent", etc., thinking about causation is no higher than being attached to these very things. Dependent-origination is the "operating system" that governs samsara – thinking about the nature of samsara is no longer my object. I already know that's empty, that there are no "things" but the fictions of consciousness. And when things disappear, so too does the relationship between things.

When, for whatever reason, I need to consider samsara, I consider it in terms of the causal web that it is. I think that what you need to do is recognize that dependent-origination is just as illusory as the “things” to which it applies. Mind makes things, which makes causation. Hence why “Wisdom of the Infinite” is misleading – it’s a thorough exposition of the nature of things. Yeah - they’re dependently-arisen - so what? Nirvana is beyond the comparatively mundane truth of causation.

Thus why, as I have said elsewhere before, QRS are nothing but Neitzschean metaphysicists, who never fully realized that enlightenment is not about metaphysics, but about liberation from suffering (non-attachment).

Rick

Registered User

Posts: 10

(7/18/04 18:11)

Reply

meditation = castration

---

meditation will lead to your castration. The more you ignore and shutdown your senses and force a non-active mindstate, the more you kill your passions and feelings. What you're doing my man is neutering your own self. Keep at it, every hour of brainless meditation is a step towards becoming a potato.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2351

(7/20/04 12:41)

Reply

Re: re:

---

James Johnathon wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: Meditation, as in trying to comprehend the nature of Reality, not shutting down one's thought-processes. Bodhidharma emphasized the need to use reason and understand Reality for oneself, which is identical to my own teaching.

JJ: No, that’s your definition of meditation. The real definition of meditation, in the context of Eastern thought, is the act of stilling the conscious, perusing mind.

DQ: I consider that a very low attainment, James. It is a bit like saying that the aim of climbing Mt Everest is to work up a sweat. It rather misses the point.

As far as I'm concerned, if a meditational practice isn't directed towards the complete comprehension of Ultimate Reality, then spiritually speaking, it's a waste of time.

JJ: I'm telling you what the actual definition of meditation is, because you so obviously need a refresher. Your opinions as to whether or not meditating equals attainment is aside the point. Stop hijacking the term – that's the point. Any rational person with even a hobbyist level interest in Eastern thought knows that meditation is not trying to comprehend the nature of Reality through reason – that is, providing that they don't have other agendas.

---

Like a wise agenda, you mean? The tradition of "Eastern thought" that you are referring to is an ignorant one. I don't really care how they use the term "meditation", just as I don't really care how a bunch of fundamentalist Christians use the term "God".

When wise men such as Ramakrishna, Meister Eckhart and Soren Kierkegaard use the term "God" to refer to the Infinite, they are entirely within their rights to do so. They are not so much "highjacking" the popular definition of God, but rather reclaiming it for the cause of wisdom and using it for the infinitely more important task of stimulating other people's minds into enlightenment. The same applies of the term "meditation".

I must say that it's rather amusing to see you getting your knickers in a knot over this issue of terminology, especially given the fact that you have been hammering us with the need to abandon attachment to all words and concepts. It seems that you do not practice what you preach.

Quote:

---

The fact is, your continual assertion that references to “meditation”, in the texts of famous meditators, means “conceptualizing Reality” is bullocks. You immediately sully yourself and your touted rationality whenever you make such preposterous claims.

---

I never said that the aim of meditation is to "conceptualize Reality". That is your invention.

Again, your mind is so rigidly tied to the black-and white dichotomy of "meditation/going beyond concepts" vs "reason/trapped in concepts". Such a nice simple picture of things is entirely a product of your imagination. It has no reality. You need to abandon these concepts.

Quote:

---

JJ: Note: the perfection of freedom is zazen-samadhi. That speaks for itself. Perhaps you should have done more homework.

DQ: "Zazen-samadhi" simply means experiencing and understanding emptiness. It has nothing to do with trying to sit still and emptying the mind of all thoughts. Hakuin consistently spoke against such practices all of his life.

JJ: Do you really think that you are convincing anyone with this? It's a self-revelation, that you must resort to these tactics to justify your belief. Again, make up new definitions for terms that have been around long before yourself if you want, but don't expect any rational person to take you seriously.

DQ: Again, if "zazen-samadhi" is not about experiencing and understanding emptiness, then, spiritually speaking, it is a waste of time.

JJ: I'll take this as a tacit concession that "zazen-samadhi" does refer to the conception of meditation that the East, and myself, propound.

---

Again, it's just a word, James. You need to go beyond all these words and see into the deeper meaning of things. You need to stop using other people's definitions as a crutch and shine that light of yours inwards.

Quote:

---

JJ: I think you have a highly romanticized (and incorrect) notion of what meditation actually is. I don't know what a meditative "heaven" is, nor do I see how stilling the mind's idea of itself and communing with emptiness is an appeal to the ego.

DQ: The ego is attracted to anything that gives it a sense of power. By entering into powerful meditative states which seem to render everything empty, the ego can feel as though it has conquered everything in the Universe.

JJ: Meditation dissolves the subject-object duality.

DQ: You're engaging in an illusion here. How can one dissolve what doesn't exist in the first place? The mirror doesn't need to be wiped, James.

JJ: What it dissolves is the illusion of the ego. It erodes the mind's idea of itself.

DQ: It dissolves it through unconsciousness, not through wisdom. It blocks out the existence of the ego by blocking out thought itself. It is a fake attainment.

JJ: The "existence of the ego"? The ego doesn't exist, David.

---

It exists in ignorant people.

Quote:

---

There is no ego aside from the thinking that points to it. Descartes said, "I think, therefore I am."

---

This is completely wrong. The ego is more than this. It is the collection of mental forces that arises from the core delusion that things inherently exist, and comprises emotion, false beliefs, false values, and a false identity. Aside from perfectly enlightened sages, everyone has an ego, regardless of whether think they have one or not.

For example, you are very egotistical, James. I can see it in the emotionalism in your responses and in the ignorance of your thinking. I'm not trying to deride you, just making an observation. It doesn't matter how much you block the existence of the ego out of your mind with meditative skill, it will continue to exist unchecked and continue to cause incredible harm. The only way it can be dealt with properly is by becoming conscious of its root causes and eliminating them from your being. Pretending that the problem goes away simply by not thinking about it is extremely naive, to say the least.

Quote:

---

JJ: Your analogy between the human mind and the on/off functions of a light-switch is not apt. This is only a true analogy if you want to consider a living mind in an “on” state, and a dead mind in an “off” one. Otherwise, it is totally asinine to compare something of boolean nature to something of a dynamic nature.

DQ: You're the one who talks about "no-thought" and the "cessation of consciousness" and the like. That is to say, you're the one who uses the extreme binary term of "off" to describe your meditational experiences. I've been trying to explain how foolish that is.

JJ: The mind, being dynamic, is able to shift in drastically different ways from the “normal” standard of consciousness. I only said that meditation is the “cessation of consciousness” in so far as consciousness is considered to be the aroused and reactive nature of the perusing mind – the “monkey mind”. It doesn't turn off the mind, as you are implying that it must do, if thought is to be absent. It shifts the mind's state so that there is no motive for thought to arise, only the experience of utter stillness and openness.

DQ: There may or may not be any motive for thought to arise, but nevertheless, thought does still arise. To the degree that one is conscious, it always does.

JJ: You've never experienced it (obviously), whereas I have (plus thousands of others, including the principle figures of the philosophy that you have hijacked).

---

Again, I have experienced the same illusion that you have experienced. The difference between us that you are still taken in by it, whereas I realize it is an illusion.

I can understand why you are so enthusaistic about these altered states. I was like that myself at one stage. They are a very interesting phenomena and can provide much insight. But it is important to realize that there is something much greater beyond this. A time will come when you need to push beyond this pretty landscape and seek the ultimate wisdom - a glorious, magnificent wisdom that does not reside in any particular altered state.

Quote:

---

I liked your second sentence though. Unwittingly, perhaps, you made a very salient point; to the degree that one is conscious, thought arises. Since being “conscious” is accepted terminology for the state of the “normal” mindset - aptly called “monkey mind” – the degree to which one is not in this state of mind is the degree to which one is free from thoughts.

---

My point is that when you are aware of anything at all - whether it be of the outer physical world, or of a deep inner meditative state - the thinking and reasoning processes of the mind are still active. It is literally impossible to cease thinking and reasoning and still remain conscious.

As soon as thinking and reasoning ceases, there is a complete cessation of consciousness, in which nothing is experienced at all - not even meditative states. The moment you conclude that thinking and reasoning have ceased in a particular situation, you immediately fall victim to an illusion.

Quote:

---

JJ: It's a readjustment of nervous activity that ultimately leaves one more ripe for the deep embrace of logic, and yet it also seems to foster the “point” in and of itself by quieting the mind's idea of itself. The principle behind meditation is not that you do it twice a day and be done with it – it's that you continuously train your mind to function in a deeper fashion, so that eventually, sessions are not even necessary, as a cultivated brain-state is always with you. Meditation teaches your brain how to grow in ways more conducive to enlightenment.

DQ: Only if it is a meditation which is specifically directed towards the conquering of ignorance. Most kinds of meditation do the opposite; the powerful altered states they create only serve to reinforce people's ignorance. As Bodhidharma used to say, understanding one's own nature is the key to everything: "Whoever sees his nature is a Buddha. If you don't see your nature, invoking Buddhas, reciting sutras, making offerings, and keeping precepts are all useless."

JJ: Keeping precepts, reciting sutras, and invoking Buddhas is exactly the nature of your spirituality. Yours involves more abstract concepts to be sure, but it's fundamentally the same – it involves the rational intellect and the strivings of the ego. Understanding your true nature is achieved through meditation and the rational understanding that concepts are useless, in so far as attaining higher wisdom is concerned.

DQ: You really need to stop seeing things in such black and white terms. It is not a case of "meditation/emptying thoughts" vs "intellect/understanding". That is a false dichotomy created by the false Buddhism which you submit to. In reality, enlightenment is a product of both intellectualizing (reasoning about the nature of Reality) and meditation (immersing one's mind in the nature of Reality, as revealed by reason).

JJ: I agree that it isn't a case of the dichotomy that you falsely ascribed of my position. Meditation is important, just is the rational understanding that concepts are useless – yet it is still a rational understanding. I've never once denied the importance of reason; this seems to be something you assume of me, just as you assume that I'm Buddhist. The enlightened mind is one cultivated by meditation, and thereby able to deeply and profoundly experience the impeccable logic that dissolves maya. The mistake is in believing that concepts, in so far as enlightenment is concerned, have merit beyond pointing out their own emptiness. I agree with your last sentence – except that the true nature of Reality belies attempts to rationally capture it (as you have said). Thus, immersing one's mind in the true nature of Reality cannot mean immersing one's mind in concepts – it must mean immersing one's mind in the nature of Reality itself (emptiness). Immerse yourself in the moon, not the finger.

---

This is well put and I agree with it. So the question is, how does one become immersed in the nature of Reality itself? Does one use reason to eliminate every trace of false understanding, leaving the mind to dwell and think in what is left? Or does one try to stop the mind from having any kinds of thought at all?

I argue the former, of course. As I've already mentioned, the latter course of action can never succeed because of the fact that thoughts are necessary for the continuation of consciousness (of anything at all). Only dead people stop thinking altogether. Even more importantly, however, Reality is not a thing which is fundamentally at odds with thought. I know a lot of people believe this, but it is not true. Yes, the nature of Reality is fundamentally at odds with false thoughts - i.e. thoughts that are steeped in the delusion that things inherently exist - but it is not at odds with true thoughts. A true thought is any thought that is perfectly consistent with the enlightened perception of Reality.

Quote:

---

JJ: It encourages people to go around thinking about causality.

DQ: You paint this as a bad thing? You're even more disconnected from Reality than I thought you were JJ: I'm a staunch determinist in so far as I want to recognize the existence of "things". The fact is, once you begin to deeply grasp the emptiness of "neither arising nor ceasing, coming nor going, permanent nor impermanent", etc., thinking about causation is no higher than being attached to these very things. Dependent-origination is the "operating system" that governs samsara – thinking about the nature of samsara is no longer my object. I already know that's empty, that there are no "things" but the fictions of consciousness. And when things disappear, so too does the relationship between things.

When, for whatever reason, I need to consider samsara, I consider it in terms of the causal web that it is. I think that what you need to do is recognize that dependent-origination is just as illusory as the "things" to which it applies. Mind makes things, which makes causation.

That is an obvious truth, and I agree with it.

Quote:

---

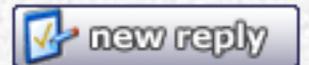

Hence why "Wisdom of the Infinite" is misleading – it's a thorough exposition of the nature of things. Yeah - they're dependently-arisen - so what? Nirvana is beyond the comparatively mundane truth of causation.

---

Have you actually read the whole thing (part one)? I talked about all this in the final chapter. I also explained in the introduction that each step of my "exposition" should be regarded as a provisional stepping stone, and not a final truth. Reasoning is a ladder into the Infinite, not the Infinite itself.

But I suppose people only see what they want to see.

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The Nature of Reality and Enlightenment

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                             | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| matffaustRegistered UserPosts: 7(10/17/03 7:04 pm)Reply | New Post The Nature of Reality and Enlightenment <hr/> Recently, I have been questioning the nature of reality, and I am interested in how the self-proclaimed enlightened individuals here would address such questions. At the same time I have been inquiring about what exactly enlightenment is all about. I am interested in the idea of becoming enlightened but at the same time am even more skeptical. I have been considering several views of reality. The first is Kant's idea of the world of itself. That is to say the world as it is apart from how it is experienced by us. This line of thinking leads immediately nowhere, because we cannot formulate concepts out of the realm of our experience. The second is Nietzsche's view of perspectivism which basically asserts that there is no universal Truth. Thus, the next step would be to consider as many perspectives as possible. Now, if I correctly understand the philosophy of Solway and Quinn, the view expressed in this forum is in direct opposition to what Nietzsche apparently believed. So, how does an enlightened person understand reality? Even further, what exactly does it mean to be "enlightened?" Have you gone through some kind of transformation that sets you apart from the run of the mill philosopher? I would also to like to add why I am skeptical about people here claiming to be enlightened. But before I do this, I would like to first make clear that this website and its thinkers have become profoundly important to me in my quest for Truth. There is no doubt in my mind that Quinn, Solway, Rowden and others are wise and exceptional thinkers. But, I find it | interesting that when I read the Tao Te Ching or even a book by Alan Watts, I get the feeling that they "get it." Somehow through their words I feel what they felt and understand what they understood although very crudely. However, when I read posts from the enlightened people here I recognize they are master logicians and original thinkers but that something is missing. What that is exactly I cannot quite pinpoint. Anyway, I just felt like I had to throw that out there. I do not want anyone to convince me that they are enlightened but to explain precisely what being enlightened means aside from given an obscure answer that naturally leads to other questions.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1213
(10/18/03 1:52 am)
Reply

New Post Re: The Nature of Reality and Enlightenment

---

Quote:

---

...and I am interested in how the self-proclaimed enlightened individuals here would address such questions.

---

These individuals do not post here much anymore. Aside from the occasional font change, this realm has been abandoned to the pigeons.

Good luck on your quest.

Tharan

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 962
(10/18/03 11:06 am)
Reply

New Post Re: The Nature of Reality and Enlightenment

---

What they are missing is mystical insight.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1214
(10/18/03 1:23 pm)
Reply

New Post Re: The Nature of Reality and Enlightenment

---

I googled Mystical Insight for you. It t'was fun.

Tharan

P.S. Here is a picture of a Real, Live Native American.

Go Panthers!

G Shantz
Registered User
Posts: 408
(10/19/03 5:36 am)
Reply

New Post Even further, what exactly does it mean to be "enlighte

---

Matt faust wrote:

Quote:

---

Even further, what exactly does it mean to be "enlighted"?

---

That's up to you to define.

Edited by: G Shantz at: 10/19/03 5:38 am

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 58
(10/19/03 10:12 am)
Reply | Edit

New Post Re: The Nature of Reality and Enlightenment

---

Hi Matt,

Quote:

---

Recently, I have been questioning the nature of reality, and I am interested in how the self-proclaimed enlightened individuals here would address such questions. At the same time I have been inquiring about what exactly enlightenment is all about. I am interested in the idea of becoming enlightened but at the same time am even more skeptical.

---

I have largely taught myself what i know from the material that is available on 'theabsolute.net', as well as direct discussion with people on the list and forum. I recommend such an approach. There is already a good answer to virtually any good question you can think of somewhere on this website.

You will never know with certainty if there is such a thing as enlightenment until such time as you attain it. If your reason tells you it is worth trying, then you are ready to begin the process. I suggest you throw yourself at it with full force

Quote:

---

I have been considering several views of reality. The first is Kant's idea of the world of itself. That is to say the world as it is apart from how it is experienced by us. This line of thinking leads immediately nowhere, because we cannot formulate concepts out of the realm of our experience. The second is Nietzsche's view of perspectivism which basically asserts that there is no universal Truth. Thus, the next step would be to consider as many perspectives as possible.

---

To state that there is no such thing as absolute truth is fundamentally flawed, it is a contradiction, because the statement itself is purporting to be an absolute truth.

Quote:

---

Now, if I correctly understand the philosophy of Solway and Quinn, the view expressed in this forum is in direct opposition to what Nietzsche apparently believed. So, how does an enlightened person understand reality? Even further, what exactly does it mean to be "enlightened?" Have you gone through some kind of transformation that sets you apart from the run of the mill philosopher?

---

I suggest you use 'Wisdom of the Infinite' as your key guide, and 'Poison for the Heart' is also a must read.

Yes, there is definitely a transformation that sets one apart from the run of the mill philosopher.

Quote:

---

I would also like to add why I am skeptical about people here claiming to be enlightened. But before I do this, I would like to first make clear that this website and its thinkers have become profoundly important to me in my quest for Truth. There is no doubt in my mind that Quinn, Solway, Rowden and others are wise and exceptional thinkers.

---

Apart from you contradicting yourself, "..I am skeptical about people here..", versus, "There is no doubt in my mind..", i think this is a healthy approach.

Quote:

---

But, I find it interesting that when I read the Tao Te Ching or even a book by Alan Watts, I get the feeling that they "get it." Somehow through their words I feel what they felt and understand what they understood although very crudely. However, when I read posts from the enlightened people here I recognize they are master logicians and original thinkers but that something is missing. What that is exactly I cannot quite pinpoint. Anyway, I just felt like I had to throw that out there. I do not want anyone to convince me that they are enlightened but to explain precisely what being enlightened means aside from given an obscure answer that naturally leads to other questions.

---

Those perceptions have a certain validity, but you will come to understand the differences in time. It is important for you to know that when a person claims enlightenment that does not mean that they are claiming perfection (permanent enlightenment). It is also important for you to realise that enlightenment can only be attained through rationalisation, it is not some alternative state of mind that any ignorant person can attain.

Until you understand the true nature of Reality any definition i give you of enlightenment will lead to further questions. Enlightenment is a state of mind whereby one is totally free of delusion, which manifests as non-attachment.

Rhett

mattfaust
Registered User
Posts: 10
(10/19/03 2:23 pm)
Reply

New Post Re: The Nature of Reality and Enlightenment

Hi Rhett,

This is exactly the direction I wanted this discussion to go. You say that the true nature of Reality is to be penetrated using pure reason. This sounds way too Kantian and Socratic for me and I think Nietzsche would have agreed. I find it interesting that when I pose questions about these elusive concepts like Enlightenment and Ultimate Reality, all I get is rhetoric. As for the statement "there is no ultimate truth" being a contradiction, I would agree. However, I would change the statement into "if there is an ultimate truth, it cannot be comprehended by humans." This is because I do not see how one could comprehend a concept unbounded by the realm of experience. To even ask the question: is there an Ultimate Reality - is really a nonsensical question.

Another aspect that interests me about this forum, is the fact that people here who are "Enlightened" enjoy a very grandiose status. It is not difficult to see that many of the half-baked intellectuals here grant these "Enlightened" individuals a sense of superiority and allow them to hold a position of power. I have yet to decide whether or not to make anything of this. I also consider the ad hominem aspect when dealing with the views on women asserted here and have yet to make conclusions about that.

Also, I don't know what to make of the anti-Dionysian view of things here. What part do our emotions and desires play in the path to Enlightenment? The suggestion that we suppress seems to be life denying. I don't know about you, but I am not going to live my life without sex. The kind of life I picture when I think of suppressing the desires is a very bland and boring one. Not to mention somewhat unrealistic and borderline stupid. Even further, how should I manage to penetrate my unconscious mind and root out these desires?

Edited by: mattfaust at: 10/19/03 2:24 pm

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 156
(10/19/03 3:34 pm)
Reply

New Post To Rhett Hamilton

---

You seem a hair-splitting robot to me.
You ain't got no soul, man.

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 136
(10/20/03 12:19 am)
Reply

New Post Re: The Nature of Reality and Enlightenment

---

Quote:

---

This is exactly the direction I wanted this discussion to go. You say that the true nature of Reality is to be penetrated using pure reason. This sounds way too Kantian and Socratic for me and I think Nietzsche would have agreed.

---

In Indian Vedanta it is taught that there are two aspects to spiritual progress towards the Ultimate: jnana (reasoned knowledge) and bhakti (deep devotion, or love). Each requires the other, for without deep and heartfelt devotion one will be unable to pursue the path of reason to its end. And without reason one's love and devotion will be deluded and misplaced. Kant tends to emphasize the reasoned knowledge side of it, while Nietzsche, with his "Joyful Wisdom" tends to emphasize the bhakti angle. They are responding to what they perceive to be faults in their culture at the time. But Kant was surely full of love and devotion to have achieved what he did, and Nietzsche is without doubt an awesomely "dispassionate" reasoner. He even reasoned why he should be poetic.

Quote:

---

"if there is an ultimate truth, it cannot be comprehended by humans."

---

That would also be a statement of an ultimate truth, and thus self-contradictory (ie, meaningless).

Quote:

---

This is because I do not see how one could comprehend a concept unbounded by the realm of experience.

---

We do not "experience", as such, the objects of pure mathematics, or more broadly, pure logic, but we arrive at truths, absolute truths, through the use of such logic. It is through precisely this path of pure logic that one arrives at the Ultimate Truth, or "reality" as some would like it.

Quote:

---

To even ask the question: is there an Ultimate Reality - is really a nonsensical question.

---

It's not a matter of whether there is a reality (or "Ultimate Reality"), for there clearly is. The question is whether we can understand it's essence.

Quote:

---

It is not difficult to see that many of the half-baked intellectuals here grant these "Enlightened" individuals a sense of superiority and allow them to hold a position of power.

---

It might be that they are given the benefit of the doubt, which would be fair.

Quote:

---

Also, I don't know what to make of the anti-Dionysian view of things here. What part do our emotions and desires play in the path to Enlightenment?

---

If we view the Dionysian as simply "chaos", then I would say that it needs to be made sense of by Apollonian reason. The feminine aspect of personality in both men and women tends to be swept by the powerful and chaotic forces of nature, whereas the masculine side of personality is typically more rational, can find order in chaos, and using reason can paddle quite naturally against the stream of natural events.

Quote:

---

What part do our emotions and desires play in the path to Enlightenment?

---

Without emotional dissatisfaction with untruth we would not seek truth.

Quote:

---

The suggestion that we suppress seems to be life denying.

---

Suppression is reality-denying.

With awareness of truth, emotions (desire, fear, etc) simply evaporate, like morning fog when the sun rises.

Quote:

---

I don't know about you, but I am not going to live my life without sex. The kind of life I picture when I think of suppressing the desires is a very bland and boring one. Not to mention somewhat unrealistic and borderline stupid. Even further, how should I manage to penetrate my unconscious mind and root out these desires?

---

Whatever you do, don't suppress anything. At all times you must do what feels most natural to you. But when you express yourself sexually, it's very easy to dig your own grave. What seemed like an innocent and natural thing to do can quickly become a noose around your neck. Before you know it you are driving the kids to football and working all hours of the day to pay off a $200,000 mortgage. End of story.

That's nature for you.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1215
(10/20/03 12:54 am)
Reply

New Post Re: The Nature of Reality and Enlightenment

---

Then again one may enjoy bringing the kids to football practice, even staying and watching; in fact the process of a life growing might be the most fascinating (and beautiful) thing some lowly individual has ever seen. That is also nature for you.

Tharan

Edited by: WolfsonJakk at: 10/20/03 12:55 am

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1602
(10/20/03 1:11 am)
Reply

New Post -----

---

Does that mean you view the Dionysian as chaos Kevin?

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 137
(10/20/03 9:54 am)
Reply

New Post Re: -----

---

Quote:

---

Does that mean you view the Dionysian as chaos Kevin?

---

Yes. Or more specifically non-rational, without purposeful and conscious direction. Unconscious.

This is not to say that Dionysian things are happening randomly, or without pattern. For example, our intuitions might all be wrong, but their wrongness would likely follow a pattern.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 659
(10/20/03 10:56 am)

Reply

New Post Re: The Nature of Reality and Enlightenment

That's the popular literary association, Dionysian - chaos.

Quote:

---

Rhett: To state that there is no such thing as absolute truth is fundamentally flawed, it is a contradiction, because the statement itself is purporting to be an absolute truth.

---

This is incorrect.

In the first meaning of the word purport, the statement itself isn't purporting to be anything, rather it simply is what it is - that being a logical truth; a logical truth concerning the validity and soundness of the predicates and Universe of discourse used in any proposition claiming to confirm an objective, absolute truth.

In the second meaning of the word purport, such a sentence as "There is no such thing as absolute truth." is neither signifying or implying it's own 'absolute truth', rather it is categorically stating a truth of the only kind which does exist, i.e. a logical truth.

Quote:

---

Mattfaust: As for the statement "there is no ultimate truth" being a contradiction, I would agree. However, I would change the statement into "if there is an ultimate truth, it cannot be comprehended by humans." This is because I do not see how one could comprehend a concept unbounded by the realm of experience. To even ask the question: is there an Ultimate Reality - is really a nonsensical question.

---

I really can't see any way out of that conclusion, rationally.

I think you were spot on with your first sentence though. The second one is the one which appears to make more sense at first, but on closer inspection turns out to be a logical contradiction. It's paradoxical (and not because of the "it claims to be absolute truth" argument). This is because this sentence makes an all-too-familiar-around-here mistake in that it confuses the semantic order between existence as a subjective appearance to mind, and a non-hypothetical objective existence. Those of a local grandiose stature throw such illegal curve balls all the time.

"If there is an ultimate truth, it cannot be comprehended by humans."

The only type of truth that exists is the type which can be comprehended by humans (or consciousness). Anything else is mere speculation. There cannot be any absolute truth independent of consciousness as the concepts of 'absolute' and 'truth' are articles of consciousness only.

Pretty much the same reasoning you used in correctly saying that asking "is there an Ultimate Reality" - is nonsense, really simplistically plain nonsense.

Quote:

---

Mattfaust: "if there is an ultimate truth, it cannot be comprehended by humans."

Kevin: That would also be a statement of an ultimate truth, and thus self-contradictory (ie, meaningless).

---

Correct conclusion, incorrect reasoning.

Quote:

---

Mattfaust: This is because I do not see how one could comprehend a concept unbounded by the realm of experience.

Kevin: We do not "experience", as such, the objects of pure mathematics, or more broadly, pure logic, but we arrive at truths, absolute truths, through the use of such logic. It is through precisely this path of pure logic that one arrives at the Ultimate Truth, or "reality" as some would like it.

---

We do not arrive at absolute truths through logic, we arrive at logical truths which are only absolute within the confines of their definitional context, or Universe of discourse.

The objects of pure mathematics and pure logic are just as much an article of the conscious "experience" which is existence which is appearance to mind, as is anything else. The Universe of discourse which underpins such objects is no less contingent upon appearance to mind than the Universe of discourse which underpins all concepts.

G Shantz
Registered User
Posts: 409
(10/20/03 11:45 am)
Reply

New Post Re: The Nature of Reality and Enlightenment

---

Tharan wrote:

Quote:

---

Then again one may enjoy bringing the kids to football practice, even staying and watching; in fact the process of a life growing might be the most fascinating (and beautiful) thing some lowly individual has ever seen. That is also nature for you.

---

"People have been marrying and bringing up children for centuries now. Nothing has ever come of it."

-Celia Green

ksolway

Registered User

Posts: 138

(10/20/03 12:12 pm)

Reply

New Post Re: The Nature of Reality and Enlightenment

---

Quote:

---

. . . the statement itself isn't purporting to be anything, rather it simply is what it is - that being a logical truth; a logical truth concerning the validity and soundness of the predicates and Universe of discourse used in any proposition claiming to confirm an objective, absolute truth

---

Any logical truth which is permanently true, which can never be overturned, is absolute.

Quote:

---

We do not arrive at absolute truths through logic, we arrive at logical truths which are only absolute within the confines of their definitional context, or Universe of discourse.

---

If the "Universe of discourse" is in fact the Universe (ie, Everything, the Totality), then the truth is Universally absolute. If the universe of discourse is a subset of the Totality, then the truth would be absolute for that subset.

Quote:

---

The objects of pure mathematics and pure logic are just as much an article of the conscious "experience" which is existence which is appearance to mind, as is anything else. The Universe of discourse which underpins such objects is no less contingent upon appearance to mind than the Universe of discourse which underpins all concepts.

---

Ok, but in that case I am able to experience the Totality of the Universe, and can thus formulate Universally absolute truths.

For example, I can divide the Universe up into things I can experience empirically, and those I can't. Or things which are known, and things which are unknown. And I can construct Universally absolute truths about these things.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1605

(10/20/03 2:54 pm)

Reply

New Post ----

---

Quote:

---

Any logical truth which is permanently true, which can never be overturned, is absolute

---

No, it is only permanently true. It is not absolute in the absolute sense of the word which would have it inclusive of all truth. Meaning, for it to be a so-called 'absolute truth' it would have to be truth itself.

Quote:

---

For example, I can divide the Universe up into things I can experience empirically, and those I can't. Or things which are known, and things which are unknown. And I can construct Universally absolute truths about these things.

---

You are not dividing the universe into what is known and unknown, only into what is known.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1216
(10/20/03 4:33 pm)
Reply

New Post Re: The Nature of Reality and Enlightenment

---

Quote:

---

"People have been marrying and bringing up children for centuries now. Nothing has ever come of it."

-Celia Green

---

Except of course Celia Green, Greg Shantz, Hunag Po, Siddartha, Jesus and a whole slew of other "valuable" individuals. Not to mention their "valuable" ideas.

Go Go Humans!

Tharan

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 160
(10/20/03 4:41 pm)
Reply

New Post Re: The Nature of Reality and Enlightenment

---

Quote:

---

"People have been marrying and bringing up children for centuries now. Nothing has ever come of it."

- Celia Green

---

So, Celia Green is nothing.

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 161
(10/20/03 4:44 pm)
Reply

New Post Oops

---

I didn't see WolfsonJakk's post.

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 139
(10/20/03 4:52 pm)
Reply

New Post Re: The Nature of Reality and Enlightenment

---

Quote:

---

"People have been marrying and bringing up children for centuries now. Nothing has ever come of it."

-Celia Green

---

I love the way those broad generalizations can be so amazingly specific.

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 140
(10/20/03 5:21 pm)
Reply

New Post Re: ----

---

suergaz wrote:

Quote:

---

KS: Any logical truth which is permanently true, which can never be overturned, is absolute

No, it is only permanently true. It is not absolute in the absolute sense of the word which would have it inclusive of all truth. Meaning, for it to be a so-called 'absolute truth' it would have to be truth itself.

---

All absolute truths share the same purely logical nature, no matter whether they are about things like  $1 + 1 = 2$  (and  $A=A$ ), or whether we are talking about the Absolute (the Infinite, the Totality, or God).

You mention a truth which is inclusive of "all truths". I presume you mean truths which we can be certain of, namely, logical truths.  $A=A$  is the logical truth which contains all such truths within it.

If you want a truth which contains everything, then that truth would be the truth of the Totality.

Quote:

---

KS: For example, I can divide the Universe up into things I can experience empirically, and those I can't. Or things which are known, and things which are unknown. And I can construct Universally absolute truths about these things.

You are not dividing the universe into what is known and unknown, only into what is known.

---

There is a category of things I do not know. For example, I do not know what is outside my door. Yet I know that category of things I do not know. I think you are agreeing with me there. That's one way it is possible to know the Totality, and that enables one to know the essence of the Totality.

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The Nature of Reality and Enlightenment

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                    | Comment                                                                                                                                  |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1606(10/20/03 10:31 pm)Reply | ---<hr/> Kevin,The only possible 'absolute truth' is what you call the totality. And even then, it is only possible . |

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

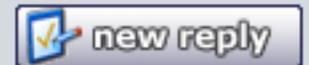

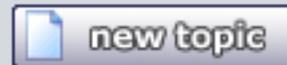

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The nature of truth

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                              | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 414(6/24/04 11:24 am)Reply   Edit  |  The nature of truth <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Jimhaz: If truth is only partly truth it is still truth. Rhett: There is only true or false, there is no in-between. Suergaz: What is false? there is only truth, and more truth. <hr/> Since Jimhaz's and Suergaz's statements contradict mine, they all cannot be true. Since my statement is congruent with the fact of their contradiction, it is thus proven true. Since the other statements do not allow for contradiction, they are proven false. |

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2696

(6/24/04 2:12 pm)

Reply

Re: The nature of truth

---

Quote:

---

Since Jimhaz's and Suergaz's statements contradict mine, they all cannot be true.

---

Only on the assumption that yours alone is true.

Quote:

---

Since my statement is congruent with the fact of their contradiction, it is thus proven true.

---

Your statement is a true statement, but only in that it is a statement! There is more truth in mine.

Quote:

---

Since the other statements do not allow for contradiction, they are proven false.

---

How do you suppose they don't allow for contradiction, or any statement for that matter? And also, how does yours allow for it?

KristjanG

Registered User

Posts: 4

(6/25/04 2:30 am)

Reply

 ...

---

When it comes to the subject of truth, it makes sense to look at information systems in the general sense.

If you can come up with an abstract way of showing "truth" in your model, you can observe the behavior of all possible "truth" based systems.

For example, you can model truth in a digital sense by creating systems that produce sequences of 0's and 1's. For any given system, a statement (ie a given system of 0's and 1's) is considered true if the system can produce this statement from its initial set of axioms.

If you begin to systematically create sets of these systems, you will see that there are different categories.

1. The system will produce some statements, and never produce a contradictory statement.
2. The system will produce all statements, and never produce a contradictory statement
3. the system will produce some statements, and some contradictory statements
4. the system will produce every possible statement. IE all statements and their opposites

The first system is incomplete, but consistent

The second system is complete and consistent

the third system is incomplete and inconsistent

The fourth system is complete and consistent

Now, in order for there to be any semblance of "truth" as you guys are discussing, the system that is currently our reality must be consistent.

Also, if the system was provably complete, then we would be able to predict the end. For this reason we must be in system 3, as it is obvious by our experience in the world that the end is not predictable.

To summarize, any statement is TRUE if it is produced by the system being studied, but some systems are inconsistent, with both the statement and its opposite being true.

I think this is what you are arguing about, because the language system you are using to argue is inconsistent.

That is, you can say "Black is white" and also "Black is not white".

In the context of the system used to produce these statements, ie language, both these statements are true. But in the context of the external "real world" reality, these statements cannot both be true.

-K

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 415
(6/25/04 11:32 am)
Reply | Edit

 Re: The nature of truth

---

Suergaz, language has you in a right mess.

Here's another example:

I shall now declare the background colour of this forum to be 'Blue'. Thus, i have constructed a true statement, a 100% true statement.

Can you now bludgeon this with your absurdity?

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 416
(6/25/04 11:45 am)
Reply | Edit

 Re: ...

---

Kristjan wrote:

Quote:

---

That is, you can say "Black is white" and also "Black is not white".

In the context of the system used to produce these statements, ie language, both these statements are true. But in the context of the external "real world" reality, these statements cannot both be true.

---

In my system, which adheres to logic,

black is black, and white is white (A=A)

And thus, black is not white (A does not equal B)

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2704
(6/25/04 2:01 pm)
Reply

 ---

---

Quote:

---

I shall now declare the background colour of this forum to be 'Blue'. Thus, i have constructed a true statement, a 100% true statement.

---

But the background is grey!

Rhett, you didn't answer my question.

WolfsonJakk
Posts: 1660
(6/25/04 2:07 pm)
Reply

 ...

---

My wife says the background is "slate."

I say slate = slate.

Thus, grey != slate != blue.

What a colorful mayan dance.

Edited by: WolfsonJakk at: 6/25/04 2:08 pm

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2706
(6/25/04 2:13 pm)
Reply

 ----

---

Rhett must imagine that everything is not the truth.

He thinks langauge has me in a 'right mess' (:D)

I have you in a mess Rhett, it is not wholly my fault. I can't help but thrash you linguistically.

Jones Kelly

Posts: 172

(6/25/04 3:27 pm)

Reply

Re: ...

---

Quote:

---

For example, you can model truth in a digital sense by creating systems that produce sequences of 0's and 1's. For any given system, a statement (ie a given system of 0's and 1's) is considered true if the system can produce this statement from its initial set of axioms.

---

You are using the system of truth (defining a system and identifying it) to define truth. This leads you to think you can create truth arbitrarily, by ignoring the logical process that enables you to define with certainty.

Note also your sentence is confusing. You use the word system to mean two different things: system1 that produces sequences of 0's and 1's, and system2 that is 0's and 1's.

So i'll rephrase your sentence:

"For any given system1, a statement (ie a given system2 of 0's and 1's) is considered true if the system1 can produce this statement (system2) from its initial set of axioms."

It's too confusing that way. I think what you mean is:

"Only a system that can produce [0,1] statements does produce [0,1] statements."

So, to produce absolute truth, a system must be logically consistent and complete.

---

Quote:

---

If you begin to systematically create sets of these systems, you will see that there are different categories.

1. The system will produce some statements, and never produce a contradictory statement.
2. The system will produce all statements, and never produce a contradictory statement
3. the system will produce some statements, and some contradictory statements

4. the system will produce every possible statement. IE all statements and their opposites

---

1. If a system is incomplete (cannot produce  $[0,1]$  statements, it's being compared to a complete system that can, and all its statements are being compared to the complete system. Therefore, every statement in the "incomplete" system is regarded as untruthful, yet as you say, congruent.

This is exactly the state of mind most people are in. They believe their relative truth is congruent, because they refuse to see recognise absolute truth (thus it is "absent" - though of course it's never absent).

2. If a system is complete (can produce  $[0,1]$  statements), then again it's being compared to a complete system. Its  $[0,1]$  statements are also being compared, and a truthful and consistent to the "key" system.

This does not mean there are no contradictory statements, since a complete system may also produce statements that are not  $[0,1]$  statements as well as  $[0,1]$  statements.

For people who recognise truth, they are aware of the standard of absolute truth (a "key"). So they recognise which are  $[0,1]$  statements, and which aren't.

3. The incomplete system that produces some  $[0,1]$  statements and some not  $[0,1]$  statements is again compared to the "key" system. So it has truthful statements and untruthful ones.

This system is largely identical to 2, because the matter of completeness is still compared to the "key" system. For a person who is truth conscious, yet imperfect, the incompleteness of their system does not make their truthfulness inferior. Truth cannot be inferior: there is only one "key" system.

4. Again, this is essentially no different from 2. Every possible statement means all  $[0,1]$  statements, their opposites, and all other kinds of statements and their opposites. Compared to the "key" system, it is identical.

This would be the complete and perfect consciousness of truth, where everything is truth.

Quote:

---

The first system is incomplete, but consistent
The second system is complete and consistent
the third system is incomplete and inconsistent
The fourth system is complete and consistent

Now, in order for there to be any semblance of "truth" as you guys are discussing, the system that is currently our reality must be consistent.

---

The "system" of truth cannot change from moment to moment, it is always the "key" system. A system that is unconsciously incomplete will not realise it (as i described in 1), and will regard truth to be relative to a moment.

Quote:

---

Also, if the system was provably complete, then we would be able to predict the end. For this reason we must be in system 3, as it is obvious by our experience in the world that the end is not predictable.

---

If the "key" system of truth is known, then it is complete, but is thereby made infinite, not only because absolute truth remains unchanged, and is thereby infinitely predictable -- but also because to be complete, the "key" system must have all statements (whether [0,1] or not).

To have every single statement possible (and i'm going beyond linguistics now), the system must be infinite. Still this does not change what absolute truth is, since absolute truth is not linguistic but logical.

As you can see, i think the system is complete, infinite, and that absolute truth is produced by it. It is hardly possible to predict an end, knowing that the system is endless.

Quote:

---

To summarize, any statement is TRUE if it is produced by the system being studied, but some systems are inconsistent, with both the statement and its opposite being true.

---

No, a statement is true if it accords with what is true in the complete system (absolute truth). Yes, some systems are inconsistent, compared to this complete "key" system, these are "excluded" from knowing it, and therefore think every and any statement is true.

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 704

(6/25/04 3:55 pm)

Reply

Re: ...

---

I like this KristjanG person. Hope you post more.

In my opinion the ultimate reality truths of the QRS* and now Rhett and Kelly, while being true, are so limited in their applicability to one's life that they are simply a mental hole to retreat to when one desires something to grasp. Their truths provide 'answers to everything' by making the question-answer process so broadbased as to become meaningless. While I think this approach can help one detach attachments to ways of thinking, one's humanness also falls away. Perhaps that allows them to be 'enlightened' and to flow calmly through life but I'd rather people try and be enlightened in the superhuman sense.

They achieve enlightenment through subtraction, rather than enlightenment through addition. It seems an inferior type of enlightenment to me, when one considers that the human race only exists because of additions of the past.

*(QRS = Quinn, Rowden, Solway - the backbone behind this forum, who disappear every now and then

WolfsonJakk

Posts: 1661

(6/26/04 1:51 am)

Reply

Re: ...

---

Becoming free is not a subtraction.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 422
(6/26/04 12:18 pm)
Reply | Edit

Re: ---

---

(This message was left blank)

Edited by: Rhett Hamilton at: 6/27/04 12:42 pm

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 423
(6/26/04 12:28 pm)
Reply | Edit

Re: ---

---

Suergaz wrote:

Quote:

---

Quote:

-----
I shall now declare the background colour of this forum to be 'Blue'. Thus, i have constructed a true statement, a 100% true statement.

-----
But the background is grey!

---

Thus, compared to the definitional structure that you apply to your experiences, my statement is false.

Nevertheless, it remains true for me.

Jones Kelly

Posts: 175

(6/26/04 12:33 pm)

Reply

Re: ...

Jimhaz wrote:

Quote:

---

In my opinion the ultimate reality truths of the QRS* and now Rhett and Kelly, while being true, are so limited in their applicability to one's life that they are simply a mental hole to retreat to when one desires something to grasp.

---

The truth is the reverse: the desire to grasp truth creates a hole in desire, through which one escapes the prison of desire and delusion.

Staying within the hole of darkness is the root of all suffering, and especially when one can see the light. Then the pain is intense, because one knows what freedom is.

The truth of freedom is so unlimited it makes dwelling in finiteness appalling.

Quote:

---

Their truths provide 'answers to everything' by making the question-answer process so broadbased as to become meaningless.

---

You just contradicted yourself. Is Truth limited or broadbased?

Quote:

---

While I think this approach can help one detach attachments to ways of thinking, one's humanness also falls away.

---

Would you rather be a puny duffer of a human (limited, suffering, full of agitation and insignificant pleasures) or one that moves mountains?

Quote:

---

Perhaps that allows them to be 'enlightened' and to flow calmly through life but I'd rather people try and be enlightened in the superhuman sense.

---

For a human to become superhuman means starting from human and processing to superhuman. As life is recognised to be a false interpretation of Reality, there's no something flowing calmly through - that's a self-image too.

Quote:

---

They achieve enlightenment through subtraction, rather than enlightenment through addition.

---

The less there is delusion, the more there is truth. The more there is truth, the less there is delusion. Seems like addition and subtraction to me.

Quote:

---

It seems an inferior type of enlightenment to me, when one considers that the human race is only exists because of additions of the past.

---

To become perfect doesn't seem inferior to me. It's the hardest and most wonderful thing that can possibly be achieved.

Weluvducsoha
Registered User
Posts: 9
(6/26/04 12:48 pm)
Reply

☐ Truth

---

The set of statements "This statement is false" is self-consistent. It does not disagree with itself until we insert the unnesserary burden of non-contradiction; that a statement cannot be both true and false.

To declare self-consistency itself the sole measure of truth, however, is not justified. Rather truth is an actor within a system which allows us to distinguish between certain statements within a system. Thus we allow the statement " $1+1=2$ " to be true and the statement " $1+1=3$ " to be false in order to distinguish whether the operation of replacing " $1+1$ " with 2 will yield a result which is consistent with the whole of the set. replacing " $1+1$ " with 3 is only disallowed it will lead to a non-consistent set. No judgement on whether a non-consistent set is good or bad, however, can be made until we compare it to the real world. Then we discover it is more expedient to have a self-consistent set in which  $1+1$  equals two and not three.

Jones Kelly
Posts: 180
(6/27/04 8:58 am)
Reply

☐ Re: Truth

---

Quote:

---

The set of statements "This statement is false" is self-consistent. It does not disagree with itself until we insert the unnesserary burden of non-contradiction; that a statement cannot be both true and false.

---

So you think everything you write should be safely ignored as meaningless?
Ok.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 427
(6/27/04 12:53 pm)
Reply | Edit

Re: The nature of truth

---

Fallacies

Disproof A

Suergaz: What is false? there is only truth, and more truth.

Fool #2: What is truth? there is only false, and more false.

What do you think of these Gazza? Both true?

Quite obviously, both are false.

Disproof B

Suergaz: What is false? there is only truth, and more truth.

False statements clearly exist. An example would be the statement "I met a married batchelor the other day".

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2723
(6/27/04 2:44 pm)
Reply

Re: The nature of truth

---

Quote:

---

False statements clearly exist. An example would be the statement "I met a married batchelor the other day".

---

I thought nothing inherently existed for you Hamilton.

That statement is a true statement. What it refers to may be impossible, but it is nonetheless a statement.

(By the way, bachelor is spelt with no t.)

Edited by: suergaz at: 6/27/04 2:48 pm

KristjanG
Registered User
Posts: 7
(6/30/04 7:53 am)
Reply

 .

---

Yep, things tend to get quite convoluted when people start discussing things such as absolute truth!
It always makes for a great argument...

KristjanG
Registered User
Posts: 9
(6/30/04 8:20 am)
Reply

 Re: The nature of truth

---

Quote:

---

In my system, which adheres to logic,
black is black, and white is white (A=A)
And thus, black is not white (A does not equal B)

---

The fact that the above comment was made brings up an interesting idea.

Contrary to what this statement says, the system does not force black to be black.

Since the statement is in english, it is still possible to say black = white.

What is actually happening here, is that Rhett's is using English to EMULATE logic. However, since English is not constrained inherently by logic, it is easy for someone to contradict his statements with other statements.

The idea of emulation is an interesting one, and is usually the cause of most misunderstandings. That is, if one system happens to emulate another system within a given string of output, the person reading that output will have to decide which system is the actual system creating the output.

In practice, this actually becomes nearly impossible for most systems in general. that is, it is nearly impossible to determine the system used to create a given arbitrarily complicated piece of output.

I'd reccomend reading "a new kind of science"... Its full of great ideas to ponder, and I would really like to discuss some of them with others...
peece!
-K

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 431
(6/30/04 10:17 am)
Reply | Edit

 Re: The nature of truth

Kristjan wrote:

Quote:

---

Its full of great ideas to ponder, and I would really like to discuss some of them with others...
peece!

---

Sorry buddy, you're clearly insane. Or at the very least; you prefer spending your time imagining worthless symbolic constructs over a stroll through nature, and i don't.

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The nature of truth

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                              | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 432(6/30/04 10:21 am)Reply   Edit  |  Re: The nature of truth <hr/> Suergaz, Quote: <hr/> Quote: ----- False statements clearly exist. An example would be the statement "I met a married bachelor the other day". ----- That statement is a true statement. What it refers to may be impossible, but it is nonetheless a statement. <hr/> A statement is a statement. A false statement is a false statement. A true statement is a true statement. |

Jones Kelly
Posts: 188
(6/30/04 7:40 pm)
Reply

Re: The nature of truth

---

Kristjan,

Quote:

---

black = white

---

Without qualifying the statement as alluding to external referents, it is clearly an illogical statement on its own.

E.g. Racial egalitarianism (ie. human characteristics are generally the same regardless of race or nationality) could be poetically expressed as "black = white = yellow = red..."

But this meaning is the effect of a logical addition to the apparently illogical statement, i.e. "= colour of human skin".

Mr Reasonable
Registered User
Posts: 2
(7/1/04 3:42 pm)
Reply

The nature of truth

---

My, My, the truth can certainly make for a convoluted and esoteric subject.

Facts are facts, and statements that describe them accurately are true.

The background of this webpage is not polka-dotted.

$a^2 + b^2 = c^2$

All non-criminal men should be free.

Statements that describe facts inaccurately are false.

The background of this webpage is polka-dotted.

The sun will not come up tomorrow morning.

Knowledge is unattainable.

Statements that describe facts inaccurately but are not in complete contradiction with the facts are false.

Pamela Anderson has purple hair.

Sure, Pamela has hair. The statement is still false.

A case can be made for granting a "partially true" status to some of these statements. But even as "partially true", the statement is still not true and it is still false.

"I left the keys on the table by the door." There is no table by the door. Its a stool.

Statements which do not describe facts at all are arbitrary.

This statement is false.
God and the supernatural exist.
and my personal favorite,
Aliens which no one can sense are controlling the future with the help of their giant supercomputer based at Mars!

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2728
(7/1/04 5:33 pm)
Reply

 ---

---

I see Rhett is working things out for himself up above! (:D)

What exactly is false? What is not true?! Are these questions too scary?!

This is about degrees!

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 437
(7/2/04 10:36 am)
Reply | Edit

 Re: The nature of truth

---

'Mr Reasonable' wrote:

Quote:

---

Facts are facts, and statements that describe them accurately are true.

---

Facts are as we construct them. Facts do not exist in the absence of consciousness - they are consciousness dependant.

Quote:

---

The background of this webpage is not polka-dotted.

---

Correct, your statement is clearly true.

However, it's truth is dependant on ordinary consciousness. If one were to look at one's screen with a powerful magnifying glass it would appear dotted with different colours, and thus your statement would be false in such an instance.

Quote:

---

All non-criminal men should be free.

---

It is true that this is your opinion, but it would be false to suggest that the statement has foundation outside of consciousness. It is merely your own ethical construct.

Quote:

---

The sun will not come up tommorow morning.

---

This statement will either be proven true, or proven false tomorrow morning. One cannot know in advance.

Quote:

---

Knowledge is unattainable.

---

As you suggest, this statement is clearly false. In fact, the very statement itself contitutes knowledge.

Quote:

---

A case can be made for granting a "partially true" status to some of these statements. But even as "partially true", the statement is still not true and it is still false.

"I left the keys on the table by the door." There is no table by the door. Its a stool.

---

Well put.

Quote:

---

Statements which do not describe facts at all are arbitrary.

---

Incorrect. All statements are either true or false.

However, that doesn't mean that we can prove the truth or falsity of every statement. For example: If i said that "Most trees are below 15 metres in height", the statement is clearly true or false, but it would be very difficult to prove which of those it is.

Quote:

---

This statement is false.

---

You suggested that this statement is neither true nor false, and that it is arbitrary.

I disagree. The statement is clearly false. It is contradictory. If the statement were actually false as it suggests, then it would be false that the statement is false. It's circular nonsense. Self-defeating.

Quote:

---

God and the supernatural exist.

---

Finite Gods do exist - as an appearance within people's imagination.

Whereas God in the sense of 'the Totality', clearly does not exist as a finite entity, yet neither does it not exist. It simply is what it is, and encompasses all.

Quote:

---

Aliens which no one can sense are controlling the future with the help of their giant supercomputer based at Mars!

---

This could be true or false as far as we know, and until such things make an appearance within our senses we can never know either way.

Mr Reasonable
Registered User
Posts: 3
(7/7/04 3:20 am)
Reply

 Re: The nature of truth

---

Rhett Hamilton writes:

"Correct, your statement is clearly true.

However, it's truth is dependant on ordinary consciousness. If one were to look at one's screen with a powerful magnifying glass it would appear dotted with different colours, and thus your statement would be false in such an instance."

No, my statement would not be false.

This is why context is crucially important and why it must be made explicit if it is not recognized implicitly.

Yes, the color of the web-page changes with the advent of a powerful magnifying glass. It would do so also if one were to adorn snowboarding goggles, adjust the settings on one's monitor, introduce a this or that kind of lightsource.

But if I were to say that the background of this webpage is a blueish-grey and a man wearing snowboarding goggles were to object, I would simply ask him to remove the goggles to see what I mean.

If he refuses to do so until I admit that my statement was dependent upon my consciousness and not his and there can be no claim to its truthhood or falsity "outside" of consciousness, or if wants me to admit that it is true now, but that if I were to put on goggles like his, then it would then be a false statement, then he has dropped the context in an attempt to undermine the absoluteness of reality.

I am walking down a street late at night under a cloudy sky and I remark, "My, the street is very dark!"

One friend, who happens to be using a flashlight, thinks to himself that the street before him appears lit. Perhaps it is both lit and dark. Facts are constructs and consciousness-dependent. And the dark doesn't last, the sun will rise and then he'll be wrong (or maybe it won't). If a car turned the corner as he was speaking, he'd be wrong. What is truth anyway? And he closes his eyes.

The other friend implicitly recognizes the context, knows my statement is true and regards it as uncontroversial. Or perhaps he doesn't recognize the context, or upon seeing my the light of the flashlight is confused and thinks about it. He realizes that objects do not possess colors in and of themselves and that the color is a sensation in our body that is caused by light. And that the specific color depends upon the specific wavelength of light. And that the kinds of lightsources and the kinds of materials that light travels through affect determine the sensation in our body. He widens his eyes.

So if I now say that the background of this webpage is bluish-grey, I hope one will not attempt to invalidate my claim and the very concept of truth by dropping context with the introduction of a very very thick and curved piece of glass. Or a pair of snowboarder's goggles for that matter.

Mr Reasonable
Registered User
Posts: 4
(7/7/04 3:45 am)
Reply

 Re: The nature of truth

---

The rest of the objects raised to my defense of truth are not so serious as to warrant a full response or any response.

I will, however, make some notes on the meaning of the arbitrary.

Rhett Hamilton writes:

"I disagree. The statement is clearly false. It is contradictory. If the statement were actually false as it suggests, then it would be false that the statement is false. It's circular nonsense. Self-defeating."

If it were clearly false, then it would also have to be clearly true. THAT is contradictory. If it is true, then it is false. Again, obvious contradiction.

In fact, the statement is neither true nor false. It is a "problem" designed to trap those of us who mistakenly believe that all statements must be either true or false.

When a statement refers to nothing in reality, it is arbitrary. When one makes noises that refer to nothing in reality, you end up with things like this "clever", purely-self-referential proposition. Or statements like this:

"Whereas God in the sense of 'the Totality', clearly does not exist as a finite entity, yet neither does it not exist. It simply is what it is, and encompasses all."

Above one speaks of the infinite or limitless or that which has no specific identity.

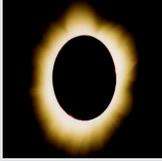

And finally:

"This could be true or false as far as we know, and until such things make an appearance within our senses we can never know either way."

Which is exactly what makes it arbitrary. If I say that there are little green goblins that are planning an invasion on our dear planet, Earth, and that they are absolutely unperceivable, directly or indirectly such there is no evidence for their existence and the only way to stop them is to pray, then the proper epistemological status to grant to my statement is ARBITRARY.

suergaz

Registered User
Posts: 2743
(7/7/04 1:02 pm)
Reply

Re: The nature of truth

---

Stop being so reasonable Mr Reasonable! Rhett will soon think you're evil, like he thinks I am!

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 449
(7/8/04 9:05 am)
Reply | Edit

Re: The nature of truth

---

Mr Reasonable wrote:

Quote:

---

So if I now say that the background of this webpage is bluish-grey, I hope one will not attempt to invalidate my claim and the very concept of truth by dropping context with the introduction of a very very thick and curved piece of glass. Or a pair of snowboarder's goggles for that matter.

---

Perhaps if i make some small adjustments to my original statement you'll see my intention more clearly, and thus see that i quite agree with your reply.

Original Statement:

"Correct, your statement is clearly true.

However, it's truth is dependant on ordinary consciousness. If one were to look at one's screen with a powerful magnifying glass it would appear dotted with different colours, and thus your statement would be false in such an instance."

Modified Statement:

Correct, your statement is clearly true.

However, the truth of such a statement is dependant on ordinary perception [or, to put it another way; ordinary perception is an implicit context of your statement]. If one were to look at one's screen with a powerful magnifying glass it would appear dotted with different colours, and thus, if your statement were applied in such an instance it would be false.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 450
(7/8/04 9:38 am)
Reply | Edit

Re: The nature of truth

---

Mr Reasonable,

On the nature of the arbitrary, i ask of you your opinion on self-referential statements. You previously quoted one of my statements as being an example ("Whereas God in the sense of 'the Totality', clearly does not exist as a finite entity, yet neither does it not exist. It simply is what it is, and encompasses all."), but for clarities sake i will offer another, that being  $1 + 1 = 2$ . I have heard it said many times, and have said so myself, that this statement is true, yet you suggest that it is neither true nor false but arbitrary. Perhaps you will consider my suggestion that we label it an 'arbitrary truth', and to contrast it with it's opposite, the statement "bachelors are married men" would be an 'arbitrary falsity'. What do you think of this?

Mr Reasonable
Registered User
Posts: 5
(7/9/04 10:56 am)
Reply

Re: The nature of truth

---

To repeat my statement:

The background of the webpage is bluish-grey.

The sensation of bluish-grey is dependent upon standard viewing conditions; if you look through snowboarding goggles or a thick, curved piece of glass, the sensation in your body differs. This doesn't mean that facts are mere constructs or that the identity of the webpage is created by consciousness or that truth is consciousness-dependent.

If you keep one eye open, but switch which eye that is, then objects will "appear to move", but this doesn't mean that objects have no fixed location. It means you have to understand how your eyes work and the geometry of angles to know the locations.

Its the same with certain aspects of your vision.

Rhett Hamilton wrote:

However, the truth of such a statement is dependant on ordinary perception [or, to put it another way; ordinary perception is an implicit context of your statement]. If one were to look at one's screen with a powerful magnifying glass it would appear dotted with different colours, and thus, if your statement were applied in such an instance it would be false.

More than anything else, its the phrasing here that is important. The truth of the statement is not dependent upon ordinary perception, but rather the statement is made in such a context that we know it assumes the standard viewing-conditions (no blind people, magnifying glasses or snowboarder's goggles) and thus, it is true.

What actual phrasing isn't in itself much eithe way, but it proceeded from the following quote and is in fact consistent with its meaning:

Rhett Hamilton wrote:

"Facts are as we construct them. Facts do not exist in the absence of consciousness - they are consciousness dependant."

But facts do exist in the absence of consciousness. They are not mental constructs or consciousness-dependent.

For proof of this, just look around. Is what you see a "Matrix" or a world of concrete existents with specific and determinate identities?

Mr Reasonable
Registered User
Posts: 6
(7/9/04 11:04 am)
Reply

 Re: The nature of truth

---

$1 + 1 = 2$  is far from an arbitrary utterance.

If you take one orange and add another, how many oranges do you have?

Need I say more? The fact is that the answer is: Two oranges. And the above mathematical proposition identifies that fact. It is a true proposition.

As for "arbitrary truth". It is a contradiciton in terms.

A truth is a statement that describes facts accurately, while a arbitrary statement is one that does not describe facts at all.

WolfsonJakk

Posts: 1691

(7/9/04 12:36 pm)

Reply

Re: The nature of truth

---

Mr. Reasonable wrote,

Quote:

---

But if I were to say that the background of this webpage is a blueish-grey and a man wearing snowboarding goggles were to object, I would simply ask him to remove the goggles to see what I mean.

---

In other words, you force some change on the other perceiver in order to attain an apparent pattern agreement between two consciousnesses which would not have existed otherwise.

Quote:

---

But facts do exist in the absence of consciousness. They are not mental constructs or consciousness-dependent.

For proof of this, just look around.

---

Haha, hilarious.

In other words, "Facts exist whether or not they have a perceiver. Just look around and see, perceiver!"

The totality of our so-called knowledge or beliefs, from the most casual matters of geography and history to the profoundest laws of atomic physics or even of pure mathematics and logic, is a man-made fabric which impinges on experience only along the edges. Or, to change the figure, total science is like a field of force whose boundary conditions are experience. A conflict with experience at the periphery occasions readjustments in the interior of the field. Truth values have to be redistributed over some of our statements. Re-evaluation of some statements entails re-evaluation of others, because of their logical interconnections - the logical laws being in turn simply certain further statements of the system, certain further elements of the field. Having re-evaluated one statement we must re- evaluate some others, whether they be statements logically connected with the first or whether they be the statements of logical connections themselves. But the total field is so undetermined by its boundary conditions, experience, that there is much latitude of choice as to what statements to re-evaluate in the light of any single contrary experience. No particular experiences are linked with any particular statements in the interior of the field, except indirectly through considerations of equilibrium affecting the field as a whole.

--Willard Quine, 1951

Quote:

---

1 + 1 = 2 is far from an arbitrary utterance.

---

I personally agree with the appearance of this apparently universal pattern. But one could just as easily rename "2" to "3" and build a mathematical system around it.

It is not the labels that make an utterance non-arbitrary, but rather the substance and cultural agreement on the appearance of the pattern that some people might deem a concept as "non-arbitrary."

Quote:

---

If you take one orange and add another, how many oranges do you have?

---

Please define "orange" in a completely unambiguous and truthful way that I will understand and agree with (and will admit to :P).

Quote:

---

As for "arbitrary truth". It is a contradicton in terms.

---

Not if you simply define "arbitrary truth" as equivalent to "subjective truth."

Quote:

---

A truth is a statement that describes facts accurately, while a arbitrary statement is one that does not describe facts at all.

---

Who determines which "facts" are accurate and thus universal and completely objective? I argue truth is something not completely entwined with "facts," which tend to be highly subjective.

Tharan

Mr Reasonable
Registered User
Posts: 7
(7/9/04 5:17 pm)
Reply

 Re: The nature of truth

---

WolfsonJakk writes:

"In other words, you force some change on the other perceiver in order to attain an apparent pattern agreement between two consciousnesses which would not have existed otherwise."

No, I'd ask him to remove the goggles to see what I mean.

Your rewording of my sentence is not accurate.

Firstly, that you accuse me of being an advocate of force for the purpose of better communication is strange. I hope you retract that claim.

Secondly, what exactly is this "apparent pattern agreement". For the purposes of more efficient communication, I respectfully request that you keep this kind of vague jargon to a minimum. Regardless, I think I know what you mean by "apparent pattern agreement". Do you mean the state of knowing what the other person is talking about? Yes, I think this is usually desirable.

What followed this sentence was the point of the paragraph.

What were your thoughts on that part?

"Haha, hilarious.

In other words, [Facts exist whether or not they have a perceiver. Just look around and see, perceiver!]"

That's not an exact quote, but is close enough for our purposes. You imply that this is somehow absurd, but you fail to demonstrate how. Simply quoting (approximately) what I write and adding "Haha, hilarious." is not an argument.

I'm also puzzled by your quote of Willard Quine.

I'm curious as to why you participate in philosophical discussion if you actually believe, as Quine obviously did, that all belief and "knowledge" is not actually knowledge, but rather arbitrary i.e. disconnected from experience and therefore reality?

I, of course, don't share Quine's belief. I'm also curious to know if you can provide another quote from Quine that presumes to explain the obvious and astonishing potential that man continually displays for dealing with reality by using his scientific knowledge. I'm speaking of the antibiotics, electricity, radio, and the automobile to name a few. Is Quine still alive? Did he live to see the wonders of commercialized flight, of the internet, and interplanetary travel? Is he aware of the amazing promise from the field of biotechnology?

WolfsonJakk also writes:

"I personally agree with the appearance of this apparently universal pattern. But ... concept as [non-arbitrary.]"

I'm glad we can agree that  $1+1=2$ .

I won't define the concept "orange" for you.

Yes, we could also say that a true, false statement is not a contradiction in terms if we simply defined "true" and "false" in the same way we define "meaningless".

WolfsonJakk

Posts: 1695

(7/10/04 2:54 am)

Reply

 Re: The nature of truth

---

Quote:

---

Firstly, that you accuse me of being an advocate of force for the purpose of better communication is strange. I hope you retract that claim.

---

That you accuse me of accusing you of being an advocate of force for the purpose of better communication is strange. I hope you retract that claim.

It is a figure of speech.

Quote:

---

Secondly, what exactly is this "apparent pattern agreement". For the purposes of more efficient communication, I respectfully request that you keep this kind of vague jargon to a minimum.

---

I apologize if the phrase "apparent pattern agreement" is too difficult for you. I will refrain myself a bit when communicating with you if that is what you desire.

Quote:

---

Regardless, I think I know what you mean by "apparent pattern agreement". Do you mean the state of knowing what the other person is talking about? Yes, I think this is usually desirable.

---

Yes, quite obvious, isn't it? What then was the purpose of the sentences before it?

Quote:

---

Simply quoting (approximately) what I write and adding "Haha, hilarious." is not an argument.

---

I wasn't arguing, I was laughing.

Quote:

---

I'm curious as to why you participate in philosophical discussion if you actually believe, as Quine obviously did, that all belief and "knowledge" is not actually knowledge, but rather arbitrary i.e. disconnected from experience and therefore reality?

---

Because only this understanding will help you begin to realize the true nature of your existence.

What philosophers are you familiar with?

Quote:

---

I'm also curious to know if you can provide another quote from Quine that presumes to explain the obvious and astonishing potential that man continually displays for dealing with reality by using his scientific knowledge. I'm speaking of the antibiotics, electricity, radio, and the automobile to name a few.

---

Please re-read the quote slowly. Function is not equateable to truth. Michael Jordan dominating his peers is not the "truth." The internal combustion engine working in the recognized pattern that we have come to expect is not "truth." Newtonian physics works great as well as long as you don't encroach into the realm of the very large or very small. Your "truths" have obvious functional parameters, it seems.

Quote:

---

Is Quine still alive? Did he live to see the wonders of commercialized flight, of the internet, and interplanetary travel? Is he aware of the amazing promise from the field of biotechnology?

---

Yes, he is still alive. Why don't you look him up?

Quote:

---

Yes, we could also say that a true, false statement is not a contradiction in terms if we simply defined "true" and "false" in the same way we define "meaningless".

---

Very true!

Tharan

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 456
(7/10/04 1:58 pm)
Reply | Edit

 Re: The nature of truth

---

Mr Reasonable,

Quote:

---

To repeat my statement:

The background of the webpage is bluish-grey.

The sensation of bluish-grey is dependent upon standard viewing conditions; if you look through snowboarding goggles or a thick, curved piece of glass, the sensation in your body differs. This doesn't mean that facts are mere constructs or that the identity of the webpage is created by consciousness or that truth is consciousness-dependent.

---

Every thing is consciousness dependant, including truths of course, they also being a thing. Though, perhaps there is worth in me being more precise, so i shall say that; To the extent that truth is present in consciousness, it is consciousness. Consciousness does not reside separate to experience, it is experience.

To further a point which we both seem to agree upon; the experience of a bluish-grey screen is dependant on the conditions of all that causes it to arise, which is all that is other than the experience itself (i.e. the remainder of the Infinite). Whilst it seems silly to give examples of these dependencies considering that i could create an infinity of them, i'll offer some anyway; -- the experience is dependant on one having a colour monitor rather than a black & white one, on Ezboard being functional, on one being able to breathe congenial atmospheric gases, etc. If any one of those dependencies were to be different, say if someone were to view this forum on a black & white monitor, they would thus declare the background 'grey' and they would equally be speaking the truth. No-one can alter the fact that for them the background is grey. However, that by no means alters the likelihood of everyone else having a colour monitor and seeing the background as bluish-grey, nor the likelihood of the computer manufacturers also designating the specific colour code of this forum bluish-grey (RAF341, or whatever).

To move on . . .

Interestingly, your use of the word 'fact' is entirely commensurate with any sensible notion of consciousness, they are necessarily one and the same thing, yet you mistakenly speak against the role of consciousness in the arisal of 'facts'. There is clearly no 'fact' or 'identity' other than consciousness of a bluish-grey screen.

However, i am not suggesting that my computer screen undergoes some kind of significant transformation relative to my body if i so happen to walk out of the room; a quick peek reveals that it's relationship to my body is still in some degree of compliance. But it is clear that it is constantly in flux, not only in relation to itself and myself, but also everything else in the Infinite. It might even be travelling at millions of miles an hour as our galaxy shifts in relation to others for all i know.

Now to the symbolic construction . . .

Similarly to the dependant nature of the computer screen, the experience of the symbolic construction "bluish-grey" is also dependant on all that it is not, and one would hope that amongst those dependencies is the experience of a bluish-grey screen rather than a red screen. And, like the experience of the computer screen, the symbolic construct is necessarily an article of consciousness, it cannot exist in the absence of consciousness, for it is consciousness.

Thus, i consider it important to affirm that symbolic experiences, once defined, have their own separate existence to non-symbolic experiences, even though they may occur in conjunction with each other. Any connection between them is conceptual - a link formed by the mind. It is the nature of any link between symbolic constructs and non-symbolic experiences that determine whether we call the symbolic constructs 'truth', 'falsity', or 'arbitrary'. In the case where the symbolic constructs - including any relationships they represent - are accurately linked to their designated experience, and are consistent with any other symbolic constructs used within that context, they are called truth. If not, they are false. If it is not their function to be linked to a non-symbolic experience, then their truth is purely dependant on their consistency within themselves, and any other constructs that occur within their context.

Symbolic constructions only have meaning within consciousness. Sure, we can write down a truth on a piece of paper and then file it away, and it might so happen that that symbolic construction remains true for the consciousnesses that are occurring some time after that paper is filed, but it's not doing anything, it would make no difference if it were to be incinerated or whatever. Only if it were viewed once again by a conscious entity (thus re-establishing it's form) and then re-assessed to determine whether it continued to refer to any facts in existence, or mean anything within itself, would it have the chance of resuming it's identity as a truth, or be declared redundant.

Quote:

---

If you keep one eye open, but switch which eye that is, then objects will "appear to move", but this doesn't mean that objects have no fixed location. It means you have to understand how your eyes work and the geometry of angles to know the locations.

---

Any such "object with a fixed location" can only exist as consciousness and through an act of differentiating it from what it is not, and can only be "fixed" in relation to another article of my conscious discrimination. As evidenced by my prior example of the movement of galaxies, there is nothing else for it to be fixed in relation to. This, however, in no way prevents me from using geometry to make further judgements about my "fixed object".

Quote:

---

Rhett Hamilton wrote:

"Facts are as we construct them. Facts do not exist in the absence of consciousness - they are consciousness dependant."

But facts do exist in the absence of consciousness. They are not mental constructs or consciousness-dependent.

For proof of this, just look around. Is what you see a "Matrix" or a world of concrete existents with specific and determinate identities?

---

When i look around i am experiencing my consciousness. What more can i say?

Quote:

---

$1 + 1 = 2$  is far from an arbitrary utterance. If you take one orange and add another, how many oranges do you have? Need I say more? The fact is that the answer is: Two oranges. And the above mathematical proposition identifies that fact. It is a true proposition.

---

The experience of two oranges coming together and being categorised as two oranges, is the experience of two oranges coming together and being categorised as two oranges.

The experience of the symbolic construct  $1+1=2$ , is the experience of the symbolic construct  $1+1=2$ .

Sure, one may conceptually link the two, as you suggest, and thus refer to the symbolism as a 'truth', but what of the instance where the symbolism is experienced but one does not link it to anything? Do we hold on to the notion that it can be linked to things, and thus maintain it's status as truth, or is it more appropriate to consider it a truth in it's own right regardless of any linkages?

Quote:

---

As for "arbitrary truth". It is a contradiciton in terms. A truth is a statement that describes facts accurately, while a arbitrary statement is one that does not describe facts at all.

---

To be technical, truths do not describe facts, they are comprised of symbolic constructs that point to, define, and label reality, which in most cases involves the creation of a conceptually finite entity or entities(things), and they also often conceptualise relationships between these things.

Most truths are built with words, which are merely keys to a filing system of mental images within the mind. For example; If i were to establish a radio transmission to the planet Ziptocon, upon which live highly sentient worms with rudimentry visual apparatus and no other life forms, and i were to use symbols to "describe" to them a horse, i would fail miserably, at least at first anyway. My only chance of success would be to carefully work them from mental images with which they are familiar towards a constructed mental image of a horse. To whit; symbolic constructs like "4 legs", "long neck", "hairy", "barrel-chested", "semi-prominent teeth", "can be ridden", "hoofs", simply aren't going to get us anywhere, so their 'descriptive power' is merely their power to organise and categorise mental images that are already present in consciousness.

Paying regard now to the nature of the arbitrary vs truth; your previous categorisation of my statement about the limitless as being arbitrary seems unwarranted to me, because i can point to the Infinite, it's appearance is a fact, it is my consciousness, and i can "describe" it by saying that 'the Infinite is infinite'. So why then do you consider such statements arbitrary?

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 461
(7/12/04 10:19 am)
Reply | Edit

Re: The nature of truth

---

Mr Reasonable,

If ever our paths do cross; you shall be me, and i shall be you, and never the twain shall meet.

Welcome to the land of Oz Mr Reasonable!

I've finally discovered myself, . . . and realised that my enemies were me.

Weluvducsoha
Registered User
Posts: 10
(7/12/04 1:23 pm)
Reply

Re: The nature of truth

---

Quote:

---

so we can just ignore you

---

Of course you can, it'd probably be better if you did.

Nonetheless, truth is a logical construct that allows us to distinguish between contradictory and non-contradictory statements.

The statement  $1+1=2$  is perfectly arbitrary. I could just as easily say that  $@+&=\%$ . The reason we accept it as being true is because it is consistent with the view of reality we are most familiar to seeing. In fact, on a quantum level the statement  $1+1=2$  is almost always false.

unknown

Registered User

Posts: 61

(7/14/04 4:30 am)

Reply

 Re: The nature of truth

There is no nature to TRUTH. Dumb humans.

WHat you see what you get.

You can name it false or true. It does n't matter. Even if you made billions agree with your belief. You are insignifigant with respect to time. You all are like billions of ants , come and go.

THINK.

Do not make up something which is not there.

Why do you try to define a truth ? how can you be so sure of it ? based on what ? your view?

How do you know your view is better than others?

It is all round and round , cyclic argument.

No end to it. Quit it fools.

Relax.

Ask question instead of answering. You will be seeing things clearly.

never agree or disagree.

peace

unknown

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The Nature of Woman

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                           | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 1353(8/22/03 3:22 pm)Reply  | The Nature of Woman <hr/> THE NATURE OF WOMAN - A transcript from The Hour of Judgment radio series -Copyright © 1995 Kevin Solway &amp; David Quinn27th August, 1995 Guest: Suzanne Hindmarsh Hosts: Kevin Solway &amp; David Quinn ----- David: Welcome to The Hour of Judgement. I'm David Quinn, and along side me is Kevin Solway. This is part of a series of programs which are dedicated to those of you out there who love to think and uncover great truths. Tonight we are going to pick up where we left off last week and delve even more deeply into the subject of women. As I've said in the past, the subject of women is an incredibly important one to come to grips with, for not only does it go to the very heart of human psychology, but it goes to the very heart of the spiritual path itself. Admittedly, it is a very difficult subject. It is profound, and requires years of dedicated, honest thinking to make any headway in it. I would say, if pushed, that the subject of woman is even more difficult to understand than understanding the nature of Reality itself. This probably explains why virtually everybody I meet has such fantastical delusions about women. I'd say that there would be very, very few people who have come to a thorough understanding of the subject |

- perhaps only half a dozen in all history - and all of these have been men. Which is no coincidence, since the understanding of women requires the masculine powers of penetrative analysis, honed and sharpened to a high degree, combined with a burning desire for Truth. So, tonight, Kevin and I are going to harness our own tremendous powers of reason upon this subject, and we'll be helped by a friend of ours, someone whom we've both known for years now, and who herself is capable of genuine thought - Suzanne Hindmarsh. Hello Sue.

Sue: Good evening.

David: And Kevin, hello to you.

Kevin: Hello.

David: Right. Sue, you were a feminist in a past life, in your earlier years. Can you tell us a little about that?

Sue: Yes. I think it is better to begin by telling you why I became a feminist in the first place. It was mainly due to boredom. I was bored with the normal female roles I had lived or had encountered, and so I joined a women's group at about the age of twenty-three. I remember thinking at the time that being a feminist had to be the highest a woman could go. It said to the world that you were: political, direct, difficult, boundary-pushing, passionate, strong, purposeful and courageous. But after two years of doing the rounds of rallies, forums, journal writing, petitions, lobbying governments and so on, I left. By then I knew that none of my ideas about feminism were correct.

David: You were part of a group, weren't you?

Sue: Yes, W.I.L.P.F.

David: And what's that?

Sue: Women's International League for Peace and Freedom.

David: Right.

Sue: It was mainly a peace group but it had feminist ideals behind it, backing it - backing up their dogma.

David: And while you were there you fostered the normal feminist lines, I suppose?

Sue: Oh, yes.

David: You believed that feminists were making sense?

Sue: Definitely. I believed that women were better, that they were good, that they were the ones who had to take care of things. I really believed that they were responsible human beings. I believed that they had to take more of a place in history, of which they hadn't been given an opportunity before. So I went in there very idealistic. The only trouble was it became very obvious to me in a very short period of time that really nobody else there cared. Nobody else was really interested in any of the higher ideals which I had - which were not just about saving the world but about changing the basic principles in the world. Call me naive, which I was, but I really believed these things. I believed that the women involved with the group had the same passion that I had. I left because I realized that that wasn't the case. More importantly, I left because my enthusiasm was getting drained by these women.

David: Can you describe a bit more about these women? What motivated them, do you think?

Sue: What motivated them? Well, like I said, what motivated me initially was boredom, and what motivated them was also boredom. It offers a different lifestyle. We all know how women love to change their clothes; well, women also love to change their lifestyles - either to match their clothes or as a new accessory. I was like that. I wanted something better. The only problem was that once I had attained what I thought was the highest - namely, feminism - then there was nowhere else for me to go. After all, I'd been everywhere else - I'd been a "wife", a "mother", a "girlfriend", a "worker", a "career-minded person", an "educated person" - I'd been everywhere else and so I thought feminism was it.

Kevin: Sue, feminism is changing all the time; it's in a constant state of evolution. Even today there are many thousands of different kinds of independent feminisms. I am constantly being told that "there is no one feminism". So don't you think that perhaps feminism has evolved since the days you were involved in it? Obviously, it has grown up. It's become more mature. It knows what it is a lot more now than when you were involved in it.

Sue: Ah well - no. Not at all. It's absolutely impossible for feminism to evolve in the way that you speak. If something is to evolve, it means it has to be attached to something in the first place. You have to actually value something.

David: Have a goal, I suppose.

Sue: Yes, have a goal, a purpose, some purposefulness. Feminism has no purpose. It has no goals. What you're seeing is a variation on the same old theme. What you've observed, Kevin, are simply new faces in feminism - new colours, new designs, new patterns, new fashions.

Kevin: But isn't it the goal of feminism - correct me if I'm wrong - to do anything you like and be respected for it? I mean, I've tried for many years to come to a determination of what feminism is and that is what it appears to me to be.

David: This is what Naomi Wolf says, isn't it: that the highest virtue of the Third Wave of feminism - which is basically just modern feminism - is that it is continually changing.

Kevin: And that this is its goal, to continually change. Which is just another way of saying that feminism is all about doing whatever you jolly well want to do, and being respected for it. But I ask, is this a goal? Could this be accurately described as a goal?

David: Well, it certainly couldn't be called evolution, because men have always known all along - all throughout the centuries - that women love to change their minds. I mean, women have always valued the right to change their opinions from day to day. There was a cartoon I saw the other day which said something like, "I'm sorry, we're not ready yet. The wife's upstairs changing her mind." And yet now we have the feminists praising this type of behaviour! It's what they've always had all their lives, and all throughout the centuries, and now they're saying that this is the highest of the feminism - changing your mind.

Kevin: Okay, but what's wrong with this? Is there anything wrong with changing your mind everyday?

Sue: Well, there are a lot of things wrong with changing your mind everyday, especially if you are actually a person who values something. You know, I don't say to people nowadays that I'm an ex-feminist; I say that I'm the only feminist. I am the only female feminist on the planet. This is because I say that women do need to evolve - it's true - but that they can't keep going along the same track they're on now. They can't keep on doing the same things they're doing now. So it's not as if I don't actually think about women and want them to change - but under the circumstances, the way they are now, it's impossible for them to change. So when you talk about change in terms of ordinary, everyday women on the streets - whether they be feminist or not - I tell you that they're not changing and that they never have changed.

Kevin: Oh yes, but why do they need to change? Isn't it the case that it is men who are the ones who should change? Isn't it the case that the rest of the world should change? Women have been oppressed for thousands of years; they've been done many, many injustices. Shouldn't the world have to change and women just remain the way they are?

Sue: Well, first off, maybe we should clear up whether or not women have been oppressed. Let's look at the psychology of women. Don't you think that's a good place to start?

Kevin: It's a good start, yes.

Sue: Okay. We look at what women are and we look at what men are. Firstly, women are submissive. We all know this, and we know that men are conquerors - they conquer and dominate. Now women, through their submission, have a form of conquering, but it's more hidden. This is one of the most important things to remember - that it's hidden. With men, it's direct. You can see it, and this is why people point fingers at men. Now the point is, because women's will to conquer and dominate is hidden, we call them innocent. In this way, they're protected. Men aren't.

David: Well, that's right. I just can't believe that men think that they've been the oppressors, that women have been oppressed throughout the centuries. It's just a complete load of bunkum, because when you look at it, ninety-nine percent of women have been reasonably happy with their roles. I mean, we've evolved as a species - men and women together - and each sex have had their own roles and each has been relatively happy with their roles. It's just only in the last century or two that women have suddenly decided, "Well, we want something else!" And men have gone, " Oh, okay", and have totally accommodated them. They immediately went about changing the laws for them. Through the whole of this century, we've changed the whole of society to accommodate these new wishes of women.

Kevin: Yes, but I have a nagging doubt about all of this. It sounds very reasonable, but - concerning this idea that women conquer by means of their submissiveness and their passivity - I don't know if I've ever met a woman who actually intelligently goes about doing this. I get the impression that women are basically victims of circumstance. They behave in the same way they've been bought up by their parents. So they're innocent, aren't they? Aren't they purely innocent in everything they do?

Should we expect women to be responsible for their actions?

David: Well, it depends if they're actually conscious, doesn't it.

Sue: Yes, that's right.

David: Are women conscious? Is this what you're getting at?

Kevin: Exactly.

David: We expect men to be responsible achievers. When anything goes wrong we say that men are to blame. Are you saying that we should treat women in the same way? Is this what you're asking?

Kevin: Yes. Well--

David: Are women and men intrinsically the same in this way or are they fundamentally different in this way?

Kevin: Yes, that's right. I think most women would claim they're not responsible for what they do. They are victims, they would claim, and because they are not responsible we shouldn't treat them as responsible. And anyway, they tend to think that responsibility has no ultimate value; responsibility is just a male, egotistic vanity. Everybody should be the way women are - totally irresponsible, or responsibly irresponsible. You know what I mean? Why should we strive to be anything more than what women are?

David: I think the world would fall apart, wouldn't it? Women can be who they are - unconscious, irresponsible, very much like a child - because men have built the framework around them. There is a saying somewhere, "Men create the spaces for women to flow". If there was none of this framework, the flowing would drift off into a complete equilibrium or nothingness. So we need at least some people to actually be conscious, forward thinking and rational.

Sue: Yes. Men create the spaces, as you say, for women to exist. It comes down to just this: How do women exist? What are they? Now I've thought of it in this way. If you take everything that a woman holds dear away from her: the kids, the husband, her clothes, her home, everything.

David: Her career.

Sue: Her career, yes, that's right, and her education. If you take all these things away from her, what have you got? Nothing. If you do the same to a man; if you take away his career, his car, whatever, he's still a man. There is still a man there. So it comes down to what it is exactly that you are looking at. When you look at a woman, what is she? Is there something inside there, like a personality, a character? Or is she just the stuff she lives through, like the husband and the kids and her lifestyle and career and whatever it may be? So when we're talking about whether women can change or develop - really, it's a non-question.

Kevin: I'm trying to look at things from the point of view of women - if you'll forgive me - who make up more than fifty percent of the population. I don't think women do see anything special in men. As far as most women are concerned, if men lose their job, for example, or if they lose their women, then the man becomes nothing. The man is a non-entity as far as women are concerned if he doesn't have these things. This is obviously the way women think, and they assume that men are the same as them. Also, regarding this idea that women don't have consciousness . . . you know, I think a lot of women would disagree on that, and the fact that they disagree would at least tend to imply that they do have some degree of consciousness - just by the fact that they're able to disagree with something.

David: It comes down to defining what consciousness is. What do you mean by consciousness?

Kevin: Let's talk about consciousness. If it's the case that women don't have consciousness, and men do, then obviously there is no possible way for women to recognize the existence of consciousness in men. They can't do this if they don't have it themselves. So let's examine what consciousness actually is.

David: Or this "difference", as you were saying, Sue, between man and woman, that woman is nothing if everything is taken away from her whereas the man has something more. This is what we're getting down to, isn't it.

Kevin: What is this something more? What is it? Any ideas?

David: What do you think, Sue?

Sue: Yes. I think that it's a striving, a valuing, a sense of himself. He comes into the world and automatically he has to start making a way for himself. He doesn't just come into the world with his role set out for him; he actually has to strive to make a life for himself - he has to make himself. So he is forced to actually value things. He has a rigorous life. He has to be certain about what he wants in life. He has to make sure that when he takes on a wife or responsibilities, he's responsible for these to the end. If he wins something, he wins and succeeds; if he fails, he dies. For a woman, success and failure doesn't matter, even if she be a top politician - it doesn't matter because at bottom she's still woman. Therefore, she doesn't lay her life on the line. She doesn't risk anything. At no time does a woman risk losing herself because she's woman. She is everything. She is all over the place.

David: You wouldn't say this about Margaret Thatcher or someone like that, would you?

Sue: I would say this about any woman.

David: Oh, she's a man, surely!

Kevin: If any woman can be a man, she would be - apart from yourself, of course, Sue. What about Margaret Thatcher? What percentage of her is male? I'm famous for saying that men are on average about seventy percent male and thirty percent female (* That was when I was much more liberal with my use of the term "masculine". Today I would say that a man is only about 5% masculine - KS), and women are ninety-seven percent female and three percent male. What would the break-down be do you think for Margaret Thatcher? Would you think that she was fifty percent male?

Sue: No, no, I'd still say that she'd be in the lower reaches of two, maybe three, because--

Kevin: Oh! Come, surely five!

Sue: Oh, well, alright. What does it matter, really?

Kevin: Okay, very low.

Sue: But also, what does it matter? Because what you're seeing there isn't masculinity; what you're seeing there is femininity aping a few masculine traits - very few indeed and not very well done either. The story is this: a women can use anything at her disposal, and she has everything at her disposal. A man can't do this, because he'd get picked on and be told, "I beg your pardon, you can't do that". But a woman can use anything and get away with it. Margaret Thatcher does it beautifully - she looks like everybody's mother or aunt - and she is also capable of speaking in a masculine way. But what's behind it? What does she really risk? She ruined a whole country and she still got away with it. There's something wrong there.

Kevin: Yes, I'm trying to picture that if a real man did behave the way

Margaret Thatcher did, and dressed the way that she did, well, he wouldn't be regarded as a great man, would he?

David: Or if Margaret Thatcher was more manly, she would never have made it to the top of the Tory party.

Sue: That's an important point.

David: You seem to be saying, Sue, that even if women appear to be masculine, and if they conquer the world in a masculine way, the essential difference still remains. Even if the actions of men and women seem identical on the surface, there's some sort of difference and that is an inner . . . ?

Sue: An inner life.

David: Yes.

Sue: This is the consciousness we were talking about before.

Kevin: So women are living their lives, basically, without true consciousness of what they're doing. So even when women are being masculine, or appearing to be masculine, they're actually not conscious. They're not fully responsible for what they're doing, and so they feel no need to be consistent in their behaviour. They can be masculine one moment, and feminine the next, for example, and all the while having no conscience about changing in this way. So, in other words, masculinity is just a fashion, or perhaps something to attract men's attention.

Sue: Very much so. A new dress.

David: It was Otto Weininger who said that if a woman does anything scientific, or masculine, it's because she's out to please a man - like her father, husband, or son. There is no pure motivation for knowledge in a woman.

Kevin: I know, personally, that if there is nothing masculine in a woman, then there is nothing attractive about her. It's difficult justifying being attracted to a woman if they have no noble, masculine characteristics. So those women who can put on the appearance of some form of nobility, or masculinity, can give a man a justification to approach her.

David: That's an interesting point, actually. Think of the way that men and women interact, such as the man courting the woman. If men really did have true respect for women, if they really saw them as their true soul-mates, then it would be inconceivable that these men would treat women the way they currently do: buy them flowers--

Kevin: Have sex with them.

David: And compliment them all the time about their attire - all that sort of stuff. It's a form of actual disrespect. It's saying, "Woman, you are nothing, and so I can treat you in this fashion".

Kevin: Yes, the men are really saying, "The fact that you are so easily flattered by my compliments means that you have no real substance."

Sue: No integrity.

Kevin: If a man met another man whom he respected he would never tell him, "I love the way you've done your hair today". It would never occur to a man to treat another man like that.

David: Or to persuade by flowers.

Kevin: It's funny that the very times when women feel honoured and feel that they're being respected by men are the very times that men are treating with the utmost disrespect.

David: And vice-versa. Women do the same to men in their own way. When they're stroking the male ego, it is just a form of disrespect, and it is the same with all the games between the sexes which everybody loves to be involved in. I'm told that one of the faults of modern feminism is that it's lacking in the sexual side of things, that we should discover our sexual natures, because taking part in these sexual games is thrilling. But this sort of behaviour has a lot of consequences, not least of which it doesn't encourage anything noble in either sex.

Kevin: Speaking about nobility, perhaps we can move on to the subject of genius. Now, Otto Weininger, one of the greatest heroes of all time whom very few people have ever heard of --

David: This is a German fellow about the end of last century.

Kevin: Yes, he was a German philosopher who committed suicide at the age of only twenty-three, and who wrote a marvelous book called Sex and Character. In his book he breaks down the human character into male and female components and talks about how different individuals are composed of these different male and female components. He argues that masculinity is one and the same thing as genius. So a person is a genius to the degree that they are masculine. This doesn't necessarily mean that all men are geniuses. There is a certain threshold of masculinity above which a person can rightly call themselves a genius.

David: Or a man.

Kevin: Or a true man. And he says that it is impossible for there to ever be a female genius. This is not to say that a woman can never be a genius, but that a woman can never be female and a genius at the same time. And he also says that there can never be a scientific genius. So genius is not anything to do with the pettiness of ordinary human knowledge, of ordinary scientific knowledge, or of emotions and feelings - these are things that everybody can do. But rather the genius, the ultimate genius, has the whole of the universe inside himself. He exists as a conscious, individual entity, as an "atom" in the universe, fully aware of himself and his own separateness, but - at the same time as being entirely remotely separate from the entire universe - he contains the whole universe within himself, and therefore he knows everything about the entire universe for all time. Though not in a scientific way.

David: This would count out Einstein. Wasn't it Weininger who said that no scientific person can become a genius?

Kevin: Exactly.

David: So that would count out Einstein.

Kevin: Yes, because Einstein never actually went beyond the finiteness of scientific concepts.

David: Yes, Einstein was very disappointing because he had a great brain, no doubt about it - discovering these theories about relativity and so on. But what a foolish waste of life! Pursuing physics!

Kevin: And quarrelling with his wife.

David: Instead of trying to understand the nature of reality itself - which is the philosophic goal - he wasted his life on this temporary, imperfect knowledge of science.

Sue: I think it was actually to impress his wife, and to impress his women followers and the public in general.

David: That's right. As soon as you become a serious thinker and want this ultimate knowledge, then the first people who will run away from you and won't have anything to do with you are women. So it is a real test of your love of thought, that you can withstand this and yet continue on pursuing Truth - all the while having women and men everywhere despise you for having this conscience. This is what faith is. This is what Jesus and other people mean by faith - that you continue to chase this knowledge in spite of all these worldly sufferings.

Kevin: This is a very important subject, the subject of genius. It relates to philosophy, and it is interesting that there have never been any female philosophers - never - although I often hear people saying that the "mothers of the Catholic Church" are philosophers. I think this is a very important topic to discuss.

David: We might have some music first, shall we?

Kevin: We'll have some music. America is famous for producing philosophers. We played some Bob Dylan a couple of weeks ago and this evening we've got Edie Brickell, who ideally characterizes female philosophy.

[ MUSIC BREAK - "What I am", by Edie Brickell ]

I'm not aware of too many things
I know what I know if you know what I mean
I'm not aware of too many things
I know what I know if you know what I mean

Philosophy is the talk on the cereal box
Religion is the smile on a dog

I'm not aware of too many things
I know what I know if you know what I mean

Choke me in the shallow water before I get too deep

What I am is what I am
You what you are or what?
What I am is what I am
You what you are oh . . .

I'm not aware of too many things
I know what I know if you know what I mean

Philosophy is a walk on slippery rocks
Religion is a light in the fog

I'm not aware of too many things
I know what I know if you know what I mean

Choke me in the shallow water before I get to deep
Choke me in the shallow water before I get too deep

What I am is what I am
You what you are or what?
What I am is what I am
You what you are oh . . .

I say I say I say I do

David: I think we've had enough of that song. Thanks Edie. Can there be a female genius?

Sue: Absolutely impossible.

David: And why is that?

Sue: Well, to start with, you're talking about a creature who is female and, as we have already ascertained, females are not conscious. You have to be conscious; it's a prerequisite of genius. You have to be aware of the consequences of your actions. You have to understand that if you are passionate and longing for something, then you have to work towards it, and that you have to curtail parts of your life. So you have to know what you're doing and how you're doing it. The thing is, women can't do this because, as far as they're concerned, there are no consequences to anything they do. If you're not conscious, then that means you don't recognize anything that you do; you don't recognize the long term consequences of what you do.

Kevin: You know, women always say that the special thing about being a woman is, in fact, that they are aware of the interrelationships between things in nature. Yet we're saying that they don't have this awareness of interrelationships. So which is right? Is it the case that a woman's awareness of interrelations is unconscious and therefore not real? Is that what we're saying?

Sue: Things arise and they respond. Well, you really couldn't even say it's responding; it's really just drifting.

Kevin: So it's just the same as what animals do.

Sue: That's right.

Kevin: Animals are aware of the interrelationships in nature. As we mentioned on a previous program, wombats have a close connection with the earth, but it doesn't mean that they are philosophers.

David: Weininger says that women have "henids". Whereas men have thoughts, women have henids.

Kevin: What exactly are henids, David?

David: Well, there a sort of pre-thought. A henid lacks the clarity and penetration of an actual thought. It's more of a vague feeling or sensation, not a clear cut concept. When I look at women, they seem so spontaneous and free and happy--

Sue: They're already geniuses, aren't they.

David: That's right, they're already wise. They're seemingly closer to Buddhahood, which is the state of perfection. So, in other words, women are in a sense only a finger snap away from perfection, but because they aren't able to have real thoughts - only henids - there might as well be an infinite gap.

Kevin: There is an infinite gap.

David: And men - who are more cumbersome, more hesitant and doubtful, more watchful and so forth - are nearer to perfection precisely because they're able to clarify their thoughts.

Kevin: This would explain why all the religious traditions say that women are incapable of becoming enlightened. Take Jesus, for example. Not only was Jesus himself a man, but he chose for his main representatives twelve men. There wasn't a single woman among them. So here he was, a supposed prince of compassion, and he didn't even choose a single woman amongst his twelve apostles! And in Buddhism, it is said that it's absolutely impossible for a woman to become enlightened.

David: Nicheren - was that his name? - Nicheren says that it is more difficult for a woman to become a Buddha than for a dried up seed sprout.

Kevin: That's right, and it's not very easy for a dried up seed sprout to become a Buddha, is it? But they do say, though - I mean, I don't want to totally discourage women from any form of thinking - that if a woman becomes reborn as a man then she can advance along the path of Truth.

David: So does Jesus in the Gospel of Thomas. You know that wise old Gospel which was rejected by those political compilers of the New Testament? A disciple said to Jesus, "Look what are these women doing here? They are not worthy of life!" And Jesus said, "No, I will teach this woman to become a man, because it is only by becoming a man that one can enter the Kingdom of Heaven". So yes, there is very much a consensus on this issue.

Kevin: This "rebirth" doesn't literally mean getting another body, obviously. From the fact that Jesus says he can teach a woman to become a man, we can see that rebirth really means a change of mind. A different outlook on the world is actually the same as a rebirth.

David: It's about different values, isn't it. Valuing Truth.

Sue: Or just simply valuing. And this goes for both men and women. It's not only women out there who are valueless. There are also a lot of men out there who have such a strong female component or, more importantly, who are under the influence of women to such a high degree, that they can't even begin to think about any of this sort of stuff. So the whole point of starting to think means that you have to really separate yourself . . . you have to actually know what woman is and then start to separate yourself from it. That's a difficult thing - an extremely difficult thing - because woman is absolutely everywhere. She is in everything you do - from your job to your home life, to the very way that you wear your clothes and clean your teeth.

Kevin: Sue, you personally must find it very difficult being a woman in our society, which is probably the most ignorant and foolish society that there has ever been in all of history. People like to think that we're advancing, but personally I think that the quality of education in universities is lower than it has ever been. You're a woman in this society who is saying that the masculine way is the only noble way to go. This must cause a lot of conflict in your own self?

Sue: Yes. I'm constantly battling the feminine in my own self. I'm not just talking of external matters here; I'm talking about inside me. Inside me there is woman, and every day I have to say to myself, "No, I'm not going to let myself get dragged down into her. I'm not going to be passive and go into the dreamland that woman is." I mean, woman is a wonderful place. Everybody has experienced it - I just happen to have it right there constantly on the tip of my mind saying, "Come on, just ignore everything. Be happy. Go along with everything. Go shopping. You'll be alright". I tell you if I fall into that trap, I'm dead. You see, this is the difference between me and other females. I know if I fall into woman - I don't think it's possible at the moment, but I suppose anything is possible in the future - but at the moment I feel strong, so that I'm going to stick with it. I want to live. My goal is to live.

Kevin: What about all the men, though, who don't have an awful lot of femininity in them - maybe only thirty percent - and yet you wouldn't want to know them. I'm talking about the sort of people who go to the pub, who talk a load of absolute rubbish, get drunk, beat their wives up . . . what can you say? These men hardly deserve to live. They're not a very good example of manliness, are they?

Sue: Ah, but there is still potential in these men. This is the whole point. Within every man there is more possibility of wisdom than there is with any woman.

Kevin: So you're saying there is a possibility for these men to "see the light", so to speak, and within a few months they can be transformed into quite upstanding individuals?

David: Oh well, not so much that, but they may pass on the masculine traits of striving and idealism to their children, perhaps.

Kevin: At least, they're expressing some sort of principle. Even though the principle might only be that of going to the pub and getting drunk, at least it is a principle. They have consciously arrived at that particular philosophy.

David: It's similar to the argument that men have created all the wars and all the environmental destruction, so obviously being a man is a bad thing. But I'd say that this is not the case. Even though men are doing these bad things, they are also capable of doing good things. Indeed, just the fact that they are doing bad things means they're capable of doing good things.

Kevin: That's right. The consciousness of badness, in a sense, automatically creates the consciousness of goodness as well. If the one exists, then the other also exists. Women, on the other hand, have no conscious knowledge of either goodness or badness, and so live in a nether-world of dreaminess.

David: Yes, this is interesting, as I think it goes to the core of our evolution. The sexes are bipolarized and very much complement one another. Women - even in our enlightened times of 1995 - are brought up to be basically childlike, soft, non-doers, and passive, while men are still brought up to be the opposite. Men are brought up to believe that they are evil creatures and oppressors.

Sue: Bad to the bone.

David: Yes. So, in this way, men have evolved to be wilder. They're more able to do things, but at the same time they're tethered. They're continually under the spell of certain concepts which say that they are more evil than women, that women are purer, more moral.

Kevin: I think a good example of this would be the writer, Demidenko? What's her first name?

Sue: Helen.

Kevin: Yes, Helen Darville, or whatever.

David: We'll assume that for the moment.

Kevin: I mean, men are often called liars. Men tell lies. And it's a true enough thing to say. But, the thing is, men consciously tell lies. They are always conscious of the fact that they're telling a lie. A man's consciousness, you see, is extremely complex. There are many, many different levels, and so there are many, many different levels of lies. However, the fact still remains that these lies are conscious. But when women lie it's not the same thing, because women really believe in what they're saying. A good example is this writer, Helen Darville: the only way she was able to perpetrate a lie was to actually believe in it herself. So, in a sense, she was still able to maintain the illusion of purity and innocence. Because women live unconsciously in this fashion, they always escape the responsibility through their femininity.

Sue: That's right. Her whole life is a lie.

Kevin: Every woman's is.

David: In what sense? If they're not conscious, how can they lie?

Sue: Their whole life is a lie. I'm not speaking about the individual woman here. By no means does an individual woman lie.

David: What do you mean by "lie", then?

Kevin: It's something which appears to be something but isn't. A deception or an illusion. I think in Hinduism they call women Avidya, which means "the embodiment of illusion". This is precisely what woman is, and it ties in perfectly with what we're saying now. Women appear to be everything which they are not.

David: Yes, I think we should actually stress the point that what we are saying here isn't original. It has all been said by all the various wise men throughout the ages, such as Kierkegaard and Nietzsche and the Buddhas and Jesus and so forth. All these people who are universally regarded as great geniuses, who possess the greatest minds in history, and all of them to a tee have come down on woman and on femininity. Now it's often argued that this is merely due to conditioning. These men, people argue - great as they were - weren't able to escape the conditioning of their times. But, I mean, we're talking about the greatest geniuses here, men who have uncovered what is ultimately real and who have more or less liberated their minds from delusion. So it doesn't sound convincing to me that they somehow remained trapped by women.

Kevin: How would you respond to women who say, "Oh sure, there's all these great wise men like the Buddha and Lao Tzu and so on, but what they've experienced is only a masculine enlightenment. It's the enlightenment of the male mind and therefore not the same thing as the enlightenment of the female mind"? Men are in fact very, very foolish because of all the men who have ever existed there's only been a few of them who have actually achieved this male enlightenment. But in the case of female enlightenment, virtually every woman experiences this. So who's got the best idea? Surely, the women are the smarter ones?

Sue: What's this female enlightenment? What is it?

David: . . . um . . . do you want to have a crack at that one Sue?

Sue: Sorry, I'm lost there.

Kevin: Yeah, I'm lost as well. But then, maybe that's the idea. It's just trying to somehow confuse us, isn't it?

David: Well, they probably mean some sort of child-like state of mind.

Kevin: I think they mean a total unconsciousness. A total unconsciousness is regarded by women to be a form of enlightenment. It's a going back into the womb. This is what most feminism strives for--

David: Oh come on! Not so far back! Infancy.

Kevin: Okay, not so far back as the womb - thank you for correcting me. Infancy is what feminism strives for. Whereas men want to go forward as far away from the womb as possible. They want to go away from the mother's apron strings, to go on and conquer death itself. They want to go beyond death and achieve immortality.

David: Ideally, you mean. Some men. The real men.

Kevin: Yes - to the degree that they're masculine.

David: This is the disappointing thing with most men. They are persuaded to keep their gaze towards their infancy. The whole thing about getting involved in a relationship, with all its comforts and mediocrity, is really a crawling back to childhood. They're not brought up nowadays to do something significant with their lives. No one is encouraging them to actually go out and conquer death. No one believes in that sort of stuff anymore; it's regarded as something out of the Middle Ages. And this is part of the whole feminization of our society: it's all heading towards this childhood experience. The mystical experience, for example, is now regarded as the highest state open to humanity and it's falling right into hands of woman.

Kevin: Perhaps we should have a concrete example. We've been talking about this difference between men being conscious, on the one hand, and women being unconscious, on the other, but how does this actually manifest in real life? Perhaps we should look at the example of love. Now love is the thing which most people value more than anything else in the world and, without which, a woman's life is nothing. Men can live without love because they have their computers and their money and their four wheel drives and so on, but a woman's life is love and children and family. What is the relationship between love and genius, for example? Is there a relationship between love and intelligence? What does intelligence make of love? Is love real? Is it only for women? Is it possible for a man to love? Is a woman's love and a man's love the same thing? Any ideas on this?

Sue: Well. First, it is absolutely impossible for women to love, because the only way they can exist is through other people. So when they "love" a child, or "love" a husband, or "love" their mother or father, what's actually happening is that they're using those other people for their existence. It is only through those relationships do they actually exist. So when a woman says that she has unconditional love for her child, don't believe her! What's actually happening is that she's using that child as she would a new bangle - a way to enhance her position on the planet.

Kevin: This is why women spend so much time gossiping on the phone, because they wouldn't exist without that social contact. Children just provide another form of social contact.

Sue: Children are just another thing to talk about. Women love to talk, as we all know, and as you say it's their connection with the world - it makes them alive.

Kevin: It's impossible for a woman to have a mental connection; everything with woman has to be physical. This is why women value their bodies so much.

David: They value touching, don't they.

Kevin: Yes, they value touching a whole lot more than men. Women feel violated a lot more with respect to their bodies than men do, whereas men feel violated when their mind has been violated.

David: An example of this is, of course, the issue of what women wear. We were out on the town last night, weren't we, and--

Kevin: I remember well!

David: And there were mini skirts and cleavage everywhere. Now this, in my view, is a form of rape. It is a form of abuse, of harassment, because although I try to avoid it, it still manages to invade my mind. So, by presenting themselves the way they do, women are violating what I consider to be most precious - my mind. Women say that their most precious thing is their vagina. They say that being raped is something more significant than being bashed up because their vaginas have been violated. Men, on the other hand, are being violated every day through this constant sexual invasion of their mental processes.

Kevin: I don't think women can even conceive of a mind being violated. They have no conception that a man's mind can be violated by what they do, and I think it is because they have no conception of mind. They have no conception that man actually has a mind, because they assume that men are the same as themselves. So, everyday, they're out there raping men by the way they behave and the way they dress and the flashes of the eyes and the smiles. They're constantly raping and they have no conception of what they're doing.

David: No, and in fact they actually praise people like Madonna who does this sort of thing for a living - and it is easy to see that someone like Madonna hasn't thought about anything in her whole life. She doesn't give a damn about the consequences of how she lives and this is the icon of the feminist movement at the moment - Madonna.

Sue: And it is the purpose in all women's lives to achieve the best body, to wear the most fashionable clothes - all the magazines are full of it, all the gossip columns are full of it. Her every thought is concentrated on just this - fashion. And yeah, there are no consequences to it. If somebody hasn't a mind then there definitely isn't going to be any thought of consequences. So all she does is just drift in and out of whatever the fashion happens to be.

Kevin: It makes me laugh that we have all these different types of feminism today and they are all totally incompatible with each other. You have feminists changing their minds from week to week - if not week to week, then at least month to month. When they're questioned as to how it is that they believed "that" last month and now "this" this month, they say, "Oh well, we've progressed from there! We've advanced! You see, feminism is only a very new thing; it's only been around for a few years." And this is in fact a load of rubbish, because feminism is as old as the hills. It rears its head for a few years, then the fashion dies out and so it goes away again. And this has happened periodically for thousands of years - this feminism we're experiencing at the moment is nothing new whatsoever. Now the fact that the feminist's view on life is changing from month to month means that we can't respect anything - and I mean anything - feminists say.

David: It's funny, isn't it. They praise this changing outlook as a great virtue and then the very next moment they're saying to men, "What part of 'No' don't you understand?" - as if they really believe that women stick to their "No" over two consecutive moments! Surely, one would think, it must be the only thing that doesn't change within their minds, this idea of No! However, men know that women are changing all the time.

Kevin: Yes, a woman does actually mean "No" at the time she says it - but that only lasts for one moment.

Sue: And then the next moment it can mean "Yes".

Kevin: And then the very next moment a "Yes" can mean "No" . . .

David: Each moment becomes a whole new ball game.

Kevin: My head is spinning just thinking about it! It makes life very difficult for those men who don't understand women. I must say that as I was growing up I foolishly imagined that all human beings were basically the same. I mean, I knew that I was a human being and so I thought that other people were more or less the same as me. I could not believe that women didn't have a consciousness; I could not believe that women were not intelligent - it probably took me a good ten years of hard thinking, with many hours of thinking every day, as well as having it proven to me through hard experience. It took ten years to know with certainty what I had suspected when I was ten years old. Just from watching the women in my life - my mother and friends and so on - I saw very early the fact that women simply do not think . . . in the way that men think.

David: I think it is very important to keep stressing this. It could be construed that we're out to be harsh with women, that we want to hurt them, but this is not the case. The whole point of this discussion is to articulate the philosophic path. I mean, we live in a world where the philosophic path is totally meaningless to people; it no longer even exists, and the biggest reason for this is the worship of the feminine. The reason why people don't search for Truth is because they're obsessed with Woman. Both men and women are obsessed with Woman - it's at the centre of everybody's existence.

Kevin: Yes, I'd like to say, on top of what I said previously, that I'm not blaming women. I don't think any of us are blaming women for what they are. There are causes for everything that happens on earth; there are causes for women being what they are, and one of the main causes for women being what they are is men. Men constitute the molding force which creates women, and women allow themselves to be shaped by men - genetically and psychologically. So if women are going to improve - and I regard women as being like my daughters, so I am speaking now as a father - if women are going to be helped, then men have to start treating women with respect, and that means expecting women to be rational. It means not loving them, for example - not loving them in the emotional way. Sure, love women intellectually; respect them as the human beings that they may possibly become - human in the sense of being consciously reasoning human beings. And then, and only then, can we expect women to become more masculine. But until men actually change the way they're treating women, it's not going to happen.

Sue: That's right. Men have to be strong and consistent every day and in this way they can set an example for women.

Kevin: But when you have the men of today with their ponytails and their shaved faces which make them look more and more like women--

David: And the earrings.

Kevin: --and the earrings, and the pink shirts, and so on.

David: And the smiles.

Kevin: And the smiles, and the gossip, and the mobile phones, you can't . . . women look at all this and they think there is no such thing as masculinity. It is hardly a good example men are setting for women.

David: Anyway, we are nearing the end of the program but, before we go, we'd like to share a few quotes which we came up with the other day. Kevin and I had a spare afternoon, so--

Kevin: We were saying before how a man should never love a woman, and even more than that he should certainly never marry.

David: Yes, so we came up with The Book Of Wife, which is going to be one of our epic productions, and I'll just read out a few words from it:

"What is the best teacher? Wife itself."

"Wisdom is gained through the experience of wife."

"We must strive to give our wives meaning!"

"He was a good man, full of wife."

"Despair comes to those who think about wife."

"Happy is a man who leads a charmed wife."

"Marriage is a matter of wife and death."

"I'm a man of principle, whatever I do I do for wife."

"He sacrificed his wife for truth."

"The important thing is not to take wife seriously."

"The brave man laughs wife in the face."

Kevin: David, these aren't funny! These are very, very serious!

Sue: Terrifyingly so!

Kevin: I'm breaking out in a sweat!

David:

"Having children was the highest point of my wife."

"The most evil thing a man can do is the taking of wife."

"The chances of there being intelligent wife on other planets are exceedingly slim based on current data available."

"Money is the essential ingredient for the enjoyment of wife."

"A bachelor is a man who is afraid of real wife."

"A bunch of flowers can provide a new lease on wife."

"I have sought the higher wife in vain."

Kevin: What do you make of those, Sue? You didn't write any of those, did you?

Sue: I wish I had!

David: There is certainly an endless, rich seam there. I think we can come up with a good book. But we'll have to go, I suppose.

Kevin: If people want a copy of The Book Of Wife, they can write to our address which is: P.O. Box 207, St. Lucia, 4067, or if you just want to write to us about any subject at all.

David: Yes, just get to know us if you want. We are here. Okay, thanks, Sue, it was a pleasure talking with you.

Sue: Thank you.

David: Yes, it was a very interesting conversation. And we'll be back next week. See you later.

-----
Dan Rowden

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 862

(8/23/03 9:06 am)

Reply

Re: The Nature of Woman

---

Well, I've read this before. Where is Sue now?

I seem not to be understanding something. Sue states that women never really risk anything because even if they lose everything, they still have the fact that they are women. But she also states that if you take away all the external things that a woman values, she is nothing because she does not have an inner life.

None of the statements she made about Margaret Thatcher really made much sense to me. She said she ruined a country and got away with it. No more than Ronald Reagan did. Why does she judge that Thatcher has noticeably less of an inner life than other politicians she has not met? (I'm even willing to exclude the current Bush from all consideration, as I'm not sure he even has an inner brain.)

Quote:

---

(Refuses to be dragged down into her womanhood) I want to live. My goal is to live.

---

I know the feeling. It's what I have called in my own mind "becoming real." In this sense, I do not need to be reborn as a man, I was one from my earliest childhood. I remember arguing with my mother at the age of five about whether the communion could really be the blood of Christ, and telling her I didn't believe it. The thing is, a lot of your philosophy is dependent upon these generalizations being mostly true but they just aren't. It just is not that rare for women to pursue various sorts of knowledge as a primary interest, unconnected to pleasing some other person. I often enough find women have really thought about topics, such as religion. It simply is not true that women are vapid and happy creatures all the time. In fact, I've more or less had the opposite impression. Especially here in the South, the local rednecks are a jolly lot, and the men more so than the women. They are relaxed and jovial, even when facing severe illness. Women are so often more serious in their attitudes than men. I especially noted this about the Chinese. I've noticed it for years. Chinese women rarely smile, but their men are happy and friendly and jolly.

ynithrix
Registered User
Posts: 203
(8/26/03 7:13 am)
Reply

Re: The Nature of Woman

---

The feminine speaks for the moment; it doesn't pursue truth because it wants to understand, it pursues it for it's own benefit. It is therefore inconsistent.

For example:

"The thing is, a lot of your philosophy is dependent upon these generalizations being mostly true but they just aren't."

"Chinese women rarely smile, but their men are happy and friendly and jolly."

You complain about the generalisations that other people make, and then you yourself make one! But to you it is justified: other people aren't allowed to generalise, because it doesn't benefit YOU; but you are allowed to generalise because it does benefit you and your argument.

This is why women should stay clear of all occupations requiring a sense of justice.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 1773
(8/26/03 10:04 am)
Reply

re:

---

Bird wrote:

Quote:

---

Where is Sue now?

---

Still recovering from a major nervous breakdown she had a few years ago. Primarily triggered by abusive parents when she was very young. Apart from her daily routines in life, such as raising our son, she's almost completely dysfunctional nowadays.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 551
(8/26/03 11:17 am)
Reply

Re: re:

---

That last comment prompted me to read the article.

LOL, very amusing indeed, hilarious in fact.

Oh for an hour or two of analysis with Sue to explore the primary triggers of his breakdown.

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 302
(8/26/03 11:24 am)
Reply

Re: re:

---

Women are so often more serious in their attitudes than men. I especially noted this about the Chinese. I've noticed it for years. Chinese women rarely smile, but their men are happy and friendly and jolly.

Someone told me recently that many Asian women have abnormal anger issues? (abnormal compared to western women).

Can someone offer knowledge or opinions on this? It has a ring of truth to it for me. I have often wondered how Asian women manage their men.

David re Sue – I'm wondering if she considers herself dysfunctional or has been clinically diagnosed as such or is that your word for the comparison between what she was and is now. I only ask because you consider 99% of the population as dysfunctional, so the meaning is a little unclear.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1410
(8/26/03 12:52 pm)
Reply

Re: re:

---

Quote:

---

The feminine speaks for the moment; it doesn't pursue truth because it wants to understand, it pursues it for its own benefit. It is therefore inconsistent.

---

This is bullshit. The feminine (females) pursues truth because it wants to understand for its own benefit, as does the masculine (males) The sexes are necessarily, consistently, inconsistent. You esteem selflessness. My selfishness won't allow it.

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1044

(8/26/03 1:26 pm)

Reply

Re: re:

---

Just guessing, of course.

I think that Sue's dysfunction has some pay-offs.

I have no choice except to work for my living and for the support of my kids.

There is no payment available to me if I choose to be dysfunctional.

Basically, I am dysfunctional. However, I must feign function in order to survive.

Function = ability to live without government support.

My paltry ability to function allows me to survive. If I claimed some difficulty or some difficulty was reported, I would lose everything.

I would be in jail.

Faizi

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 866

(8/26/03 2:45 pm)

Reply

Re: The Nature of Woman

---

Quote:

---

You complain about the generalisations that other people make, and then you yourself make one! (and etc.)

---

No, Ynithrix, you fail to understand. I make generalizations frequently, and have no objection to them. What I said was, that many of the statements made here about women indicate that certain generalizations are overwhelmingly true, when they are not. There are a lot of generalizations that can be made about men and women. Some of the cultural differences are interesting because they show that some of these generalizations are not really true of the gender as a whole. For men to accuse women of injustice, though, is the absolute height of dishonesty and injustice.

|                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                        | Jimmy - good question. I wonder about Asians generally. I don't know about Australia, but we sure have all sorts of people from around the world in America, and yet I still don't know Asians much.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 867(8/26/03 2:56 pm)Reply | Re: re: <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Still recovering from a major nervous breakdown she had a few years ago. <hr/> Wow, David, I had no idea that that Sue was the very same Sue that is your ex. I mean, I have all sorts of questions. How about your leaving her to pursue wisdom - did that help her nerves? I thought you told me that even women who appear to be very interested in truth end up backing off. She hardly seems like that. Nor does she come off as very weak. Of course, there could be a lot of self-hatred in a person who so dislikes her sex. Did you convince her of many of those views? I look at a thing like a nervous breakdown as a balance sheet between stress and support. I'd really like to know what brought it on. The triggers. |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 288(8/27/03 9:42 am)Reply      | Re: re: <hr/> I'd really like to know what brought it on. The triggers. Primarily triggered by abusive parents when she was very young.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1048

(8/27/03 10:35 am)

Reply

Re: re:

---

Asian women manage their men through violence.

For the most part, this violence involves kitchen utensils and chairs.

Asian men particularly love to be hit on the head with cast iron frying pans or to have pressure cookers thrown at them.

A man knows he is loved when his wife cracks a kitchen chair on his knees.

I learned this the hard way because I was not raised in the culture. The idea is not to leave bruises or lacerations but just to let him know -- in a fairly subtle way -- that the woman is in control.

You throw a pressure cooker at a man and he gets the picture.

Asian men are very docile.

Faizi

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 1774

(8/27/03 1:18 pm)

Reply

re:

---

Jimhaz wrote:

Quote:

---

David re Sue – I'm wondering if she considers herself dysfunctional or has been clinically diagnosed as such or is that your word for the comparison between what she was and is now. I only ask because you consider 99% of the population as dysfunctional, so the meaning is a little unclear.

---

She has been formally diagnosed as having an anxiety disorder with epileptic overtones. In other words, apart from depression and high anxiety levels, she has episodes of pseudo-epileptic states that involve involuntary twitching, infantile speech, and a general lack of ability to function at all. Sometimes these are accompanied by bouts of hysteria. She is also, and has been for a very long time, very suicidal in her outlook.

Bird wrote:

Quote:

---

How about your leaving her to pursue wisdom - did that help her nerves?

---

I never really left her because we were never really together in the first place. We've always been friends rather than lovers, even though there was some sex in the beginning. There is some chemistry between us, we're comfortable in each other's presence, but we don't enjoy living together or being part of a couple. In many ways, she is as solitary-minded as I am.

Quote:

---

I thought you told me that even women who appear to be very interested in truth end up backing off. She hardly seems like that. Nor does she come off as very weak. Of course, there could be a lot of self-hatred in a person who so dislikes her sex. Did you convince her of many of those views?

---

Not really. She had already been a fairly deep thinker before I met her. It was attracted me to her in the first place. I've helped deepen her thoughts, but there was already a strong basis to begin with.

Having said that, she is also very feminine in many ways. Not in her looks, where she resembles a man, but in her need for connection with others. I mentioned above that she is quite solitary-minded, but it is a different kind of solitary-mindedness to mine. Hers is caused by the pain she experiences in her interactions with others, whether it be with me or anyone else. She prefers to live alone in order to alleviate that pain. In my case, I prefer to live alone because I tend to find the company of others tedious and because I need the space and freedom to pursue my philosophic interests.

Even though she experiences great pain when interacting with others, she is still driven by the feminine need to seek connection with people. She mentioned in the radio show above that women find their very existence in their relationships with others. Sue is essentially no different, as she well knows. Even though people (unconsciously) cause her the most excruciating pain, her psychology is still wrapped up in them.

It's a real dilemma for her. Basically, Sue is a masculine thinker trapped inside a feminine prison and she lacks the inner strength to break out.

Unlike most women, however, she is very aware of this dynamic and yet she can't do anything about it.

I've also discerned this dynamic in other masculine women, such as Germaine Greer, Celia Green and Margaret Thatcher. Greer, however, was probably the only one of that threesome who was aware of the prison to some degree.

Quote:

---

I look at a thing like a nervous breakdown as a balance sheet between stress and support. I'd really like to know what brought it on. The triggers.

---

In Sue's case, the nervous breakdowns are her brain's way of shutting down and blocking out the world. When the world becomes too much for her, she "chooses" to disappear into the world of nothingness. It is triggered by interactions with her family (who despise her and think of her as a freak), by insensitive remarks by others, by mistakes she makes (thus causing her to think she is completely worthless), by sudden frights, and so on. As I say, she was traumatized at a very young age (by her alcoholic father and neglectful mother) and basically had her faith in life, and in herself, shattered before she was ten. She has felt utterly disconnected to the world ever since.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 869
(8/27/03 2:56 pm)
Reply

Re: re:

---

Quote:

---

Asian women manage their men through violence.

---

But aren't you talking about hte near east, rather than the far east?

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 304

(8/27/03 9:13 pm)

Reply

Marsha- re Asian women.

---

You know reading what you said someone could almost take it as you being ironic, but it makes perfect sense to me. I guess I do view most asian men as more docile than those of western background and your explanation does provide a reason for that.

I can also now understand why the Japanese have (or had) a devotion to their places of employment and geishas :)

I was actually referring to the eastern asian folk, not middle eastern (as Birdy pointed out). I don't see middle eastern men as being a significant degree more docile or controlled at home compared to the average western man, and generally their religious and economic circumstances force what I view as a mostly a facade of humility on them - even if one feels their present culture is a result of the power women have welded over their men - whereas with eastern asian men I see the docility as more part of their nature, even where their economic environment was/is worse. Probably the result of markedly different styles of religious belief.

Throwing things at husbands is a cliché type situation even for western societies, more so in the sixties and seventies than now though. Maybe a sign that we humans are not very different from one another (and quite predictable).

I do have a feeling that I've sucked up too much limited and negative media about middle eastern men to form an accurate opinion. I know so little about other cultures - not that I care - as no culture is permanent.

ynithrix

Registered User

Posts: 204

(8/28/03 2:59 am)

Reply

Re: The Nature of Woman

---

" I make generalizations frequently, and have no objection to them."

I think generalisations about groups of people are pointless. You're guaranteed to make a mistake just by saying one.

What I said differed from this. I was talking about 'the feminine', which does lack all sense of justice; so, women, who are mostly feminine, lack justice. This is not a generalisation, it is a statement about what the feminine IS.

"For men to accuse women of injustice, though, is the absolute height of dishonesty and injustice."

Then you prove the point: you don't know what honesty or justice are.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 872

(8/28/03 2:30 pm)

Reply

Re: The Nature of Woman

---

Quote:

---

What I said differed from this. I was talking about 'the feminine', which does lack all sense of justice; so, women, who are mostly feminine, lack justice. This is not a generalisation, it is a statement about what the feminine IS.

---

Oh, OK, so all generalizations are false, except when you decide that the feminine IS something - that requires no explanation. Your above paragraph is entirely meaningless.

Quote:

---

"For men to accuse women of injustice, though, is the absolute height of dishonesty and injustice."

Then you prove the point: you don't know what honesty or justice are.

---

I proved nothing. I certainly did not prove that I don't know what honesty or justice is. Why don't you tell me what it is?

Let's add to this philosophic discussion something more pertinent to your opinions. Why don't women like you?

Edited by: birdofhermes at: 8/28/03 2:31 pm

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1373
(8/28/03 2:51 pm)

Reply

Re: The Nature of Woman

---

What do you think it means for a person to be "just", Anna?

Dan Rowden

ynithrix
Registered User
Posts: 205
(8/29/03 7:41 am)

Reply

Re: The Nature of Woman

---

"Oh, OK, so all generalizations are false, except when you decide that the feminine IS something"

Correct. To say that all people of a certain group are necessarily more intelligent than another would be a generalisation; to say that all people have brains is a statement of truth. It's not hard to notice the difference. The feminine is unjust.

"Why don't you tell me what it is?"

IMO, something is just if it benefits the tribe of the person doing it. Killing the tribe leader is not just if he is a good leader, but it is just if he is a bad leader. And, in this context, good and bad are also in the context of the tribe.

The flowery ideal of women, that they can pretend to be whatever they want to be, then fail miserably and blame someone else, is unjust. Jealously is always part of her life.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1417
(8/29/03 10:58 am)

Reply

-----

---

Ynithrix, what is just?

Don't I just feel like stepping on heads today?

MKFaizi
Registered User
Posts: 1060
(8/29/03 11:42 am)
Reply

Re: -----

No, I was not speaking of just Middle Eastern or west Asian men.

Faizi

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31n
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The Nature of Woman

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                             | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1436(9/1/03 10:52 pm)Reply | Re: --- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Do you agree with workers unions? Or do you think workers should do precisely as instructed or be fired? <hr/> I'm not sure what you think this has to do with what we were discussing, but it depends entirely on the nature of the work. Quote: <hr/> Hmm, perhaps. How are my notions less time-honoured than any other moral idea? <hr/> They aren't. |

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 1389

(9/2/03 2:12 pm)

Reply

Re: The Nature of Woman

---

Anna gave a description of what it means, to her, for a person to be just, from which I will pluck:

Quote:

---

does not judge without adequate facts,

---

That to me is the most important thing of all. It surely informs and makes valid, or not, in the context of the term "just", most of the other things you mentioned.....

And, of course, it also carries the implication that real justice necessitates a comprehension of Reality: i.e. necessitates wisdom.

Dan Rowden

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 877

(9/2/03 2:46 pm)

Reply

Re: The Nature of Woman

---

Yes, Dan, I think you would have to be fairly wise to live up to my definition. And Ynithrix, I think I do live by it a very high percentage of the time. As to that other remark, I was being sarcastic.

Quote:

---

I'll drink a beer with you anyday, Zag.

---

I would too, but I'd have to be in one of my rare, nonphilosophic moods to enjoy it, or Zag would have to resign himself to a certain amount of physical abuse. Also, I'd have to learn to like beer, but I am working on that. I'm finding imported stout rather palatable.

Oh, and Zag, don't play dumb. What Dan meant was, what is the point in continuing with a communication style no one understands?

Edited by: birdofhermes at: 9/2/03 2:47 pm

|                                                                                                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1442(9/2/03 11:23 pm)Reply                                                                                      | Re: The Nature of Woman <hr/> I understand it Anna. And there's no-one here I love more than myself.                                                                                                                                                           |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 560(9/2/03 11:44 pm)Reply    | Re: The Nature of Woman <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Dan: And, of course, it also carries the implication that real justice necessitates a comprehension of Reality: i.e. necessitates wisdom. <hr/> What place has justice in a world of fatalism? |
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 1397(9/2/03 11:45 pm)Reply         | Re: The Nature of Woman <hr/> The same place sanity has. Dan Rowden                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 563(9/3/03 12:09 am)Reply  | Re: The Nature of Woman <hr/> Answer the question :) Where is there room for such a thing as human justice if all is as it is and cannot be anything but.                                                                                               |

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1400
(9/3/03 2:15 pm)
Reply

Re: The Nature of Woman

---

I described "justice" above - or agreed with part of Anna's description of it - as not making judgements without adequate facts. That part of human reality is the same as any other at its most basic - it is part of that which is as it is.

Such a notion of justice isn't incompatible with a deterministic outlook.

Dan Rowden

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 886
(9/4/03 3:36 pm)
Reply

Re: re:

---

In other words, apart from depression and high anxiety levels, she has episodes of pseudo-epileptic states that involve involuntary twitching, infantile speech, and a general lack of ability to function at all. Sometimes these are accompanied by bouts of hysteria. She is also, and has been for a very long time, very suicidal in her outlook.

This is extremely serious stuff. What you are describing is near to psychosis. How does this affect your son? What's the suicidal outlook about? Why isn't she on the forum? Why isn't Dan's roomie on the forum?

I never really left her because we were never really together in the first place.

You had mentioned being in love with someone once, and I assumed it was her.

She had already been a fairly deep thinker before I met her. It was what attracted me to her in the first place. I've helped deepen her thoughts, but there was already a strong basis to begin with.

I could help her think straight. Why isn't your wisdom of more use? At least Jesus cured people. I thought you were better than Jesus :)

I mentioned above that she is quite solitary-minded, but it is a different kind of solitray-mindedness to mine. Hers is caused by the pain she experiences in her interactions with others, whether it be with me or anyone else. She prefers to live alone in order to alleviate that pain. In my case, I prefer to live alone because I tend to find the company of others tedious and because I need the space and freedom to pursue my philosophic interests.

She isn't solitary-minded at all, just so very conflicted and unhappy that the pain and comfort of others' company are near equal.

Even though she experiences great pain when interacting with others, she is still driven by the feminine need to seek connection with people. She mentioned in the radio show above that women find their very existence in their relationships with others. Sue is essentially no different, as she well knows. Even though people (unconsciously) cause her the most excruciating pain, her psychology is still wrapped up in them.

Well, you know, I find it pretty absurd for her to be worrying about something like that, because it is far from her primary problems. Women are less solitary than men, generally, but there are very few humans who can truly forego human company. And some are women. This is not a particularly good generalization, because there is so much overlap. The more extraverted types, male and female, can hardly bear to be alone for a minute. Men find their existence in relation to others also, but in slightly different ways. I think men are a good deal less obvious about it. In fact, I think men are almost totally dependent upon women for their sense of themselves. A man defines himself, necessarily, as a person who is not a woman. That's one reason this topic is of such interest here. Men depend upon women and their nurturance but there is a deep societal agreement to not notice it. Men are certainly emotionally stronger than women, but human society has always depended upon that being the case, so men secretly partake of nurturing, and this is part of the reason they are able to bear up the way they do. What I mean is, on one hand men have a higher threshold for withstanding stress, but since at bottom all people need support systems to be as strong as they can, it's a good idea to fulfill men's dependency needs, keeping their emotional checkbook in the red, so it can be called upon in crisis.

It's a real dilemma for her. Basically, Sue is a masculine thinker trapped inside a feminine prison and she lacks the inner strength to break out. But I don't think that is her trap. Her problem is some sort of overload, and too much conflict.

Tell me more about this feminine prison.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 574
(9/4/03 11:17 pm)
Reply

Re: Justice.

---

Quote:

---

Dan: Such a notion of justice isn't incompatible with a deterministic outlook.

---

'Not making judgements without adequate facts' doesn't quite cut the mustard as far as I can see, definition wise.

There seems to be two common understandings of the word as an adjective. The first would be something like 'conforming with what is morally correct and good'. This is the one which has no place in a wholly determined world for obvious reasons, and the one to which I was refering generally. This is a pretty meaningless definition, but a commonly understood one nonetheless.

The second would be something like 'conforming to fact and correct reasoning' or at least having a basis in this. I guess this is the one you were getting at.

Lbartoli
Registered User
Posts: 274
(9/5/03 12:51 pm)
Reply

An examination of male/female dynamics in our lives

---

I'd like to contribute a few thoughts on this subject of David and David's Sue. And i believe that i'm entitled to do so for a number of reasons, such as;-- I've met the woman personally-- She has expressed her opinion about me as David at one time indicated here

-- My love of truth and concern for people requires me to clarify what appear to be 'inconsistencies' in the story, what i mean in part is the facts put forth herein seem to be designed to give the reader the wrong impression, or better said to reach the wrong or a false conclusion of the actual circumstances-- We shall see that there is much to learn from this about male/female dynamics-- If you've been paying attention no one else who has met her will speak frankly about it since that would put them at risk, or their girlfriends at risk, of being likewise examined and exposed-- And...(if i think of any other reason for sharing publicly i'll let you know).

So as i said i have indeed met Sue, even lived with her and David for a few days, and their promising yet unfortunate son. Incidentally, reading what

David wrote above one might come to the mistaken conclusion that the two of them have never lived together, in fact a third party has informed me that they recently moved together off the big island to another place, which kind of clashes with Davids relatively recent revelation that the've split-up never to see each other again (which he later admitted was not for real, but i dont think he told you guys). Which might help to explain why when asked by Bird 'Where is she now' instead of stating plainly "she's with me" or whatever David said something about her recovering from a breakdown. I hope you're all following alright.

So, getting back on track now, Yes i have spent time with Sue and i understand that she finds all David's friends intolerable, and most expectedly I was no exception. But the way it looked to me is that she attempts to create the circumstances such that she can have her little fit about someone who may in her mind come between her and David. For instance, one day when David stepped out she tried like hell to pick a fight with me, pushing me again and again demanding that i discuss something with her that i knew would just cause trouble between us, which was exactly what she wanted of course. I amazed myself at how politely i managed to not go there where she wanted us to go, in the discussion, partly coz i sensed what she was up to, but she just kept on pushing and pushing making it rather obvious that she was up to no good. Btw, soon after this David informed me that i got my walking papers. I'm sure she had another explanation for David as to what had happened out of concern that i would mention it to him myself, and knowing David he probably accepted her version hook-line-and-sinker.

So Yes, she is like a child in many ways and uses infantile tactics to protect her investment.

Also, I respect David hugely he knows that but it is simply amazing that a woman can have such power over a man that even one with such great discernment for truth can be hood-winked so magnificently.

This is a good place to stop, part 2 will follow in another post, that is, if they print it.

Leo

|                                                                                                                                                                |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| RairunRegistered UserPosts: 129(9/5/03 1:29 pm)Reply                                                                                | ... <hr/> Leo, I think a post like that is uncalled for. It can be seem as a way of showing how things actually work in David's life behind the things he says, but that's not the point. His personal life is none of our business, unless he decides to show it by himself. I actually find it much more interesting to talk about personal facts than empty theories where those facts might fit in. But revealling things about his life is just pointing fingers. You might not have had that intention, but it does sound like that.                                                                                    |
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 1425(9/5/03 1:34 pm)Reply  | Re: ... <hr/> Of course he had that intention. Taking Leo or his version of events and "facts" seriously would be a serious mistake. For him say he is motivated by his concern for either truth or others makes me sick to my stomach. He is as clueless as ever. Dan Rowden                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 887(9/5/03 1:34 pm)Reply                                                                          | Re: An examination of male/female dynamics in our lives <hr/> What the hell, Leo, I thought you were a redneck American. Basedon your political rants. Quote: <hr/> If you've been paying attention no one else who has met her will speak frankly about it since that would put them at risk, or their girlfriends at risk, of being likewise examined and exposed-- <hr/> At risk of being examined by whom? Who cares? When David said they had split, never to see each other again, and I asked him what that was about, he implied it was a joke, that no such relationship existed. |

Well, this is interesting. Why do you disappear for such long periods, Leo?

Lbartoli

Registered User

Posts: 275

(9/5/03 1:48 pm)

Reply

An examination, p2

---

Now continuing:

Oh, another reason why i'm stating this here. David wont hear it from me as he's comfortable in his illusion and doesnt care to rock the boat. What i mean is David (and Dan does this too, credit goes to Kevin for greater honesty) can more easily justify (to himself) maintaining a relationship with Sue (and her son) so long as he can see grand and honorable qualities within her, such as her supposedly highly masculine mind. This isn't all either, coz David has a big heart and the simple fact that she's a person in need is enuf to lend his service, and of course the better off she is the better off their son, and having such great genes one can certainly justify concern for him, I just wish David was sufficiently concerned for him to spare him a tramatic and dead-end life under her 'care', as i boldly told him (didnt earn me any points either).

Anyway, women are incredibly skilled at getting men to think they share their views as opposed to just agreeing for the sake of winning his favor.

Now lets go back to the beginning. Personally, I've fucked a fair number of women in my time (if the list owner can use the F-word then so can I; actually, i make love) and never has any one of them ever gotten knocked-up unless i wanted her to. I have always despised women who would try to inprison a man by getting pregnant against or despite his will or desire, it speaks volumes about how little respect she has for the man. And I've neither looked too favorably on men who would let themselves be tricked this way, that they would trust a relatively strange woman with possession of their seed, or that they would have so little self control to ejaculate where they really dont care to, and it amazes me that something along these lines evidentially happened to David. As i recall David once explained it to me by saying it "just happened".

No, i dont think it just happened, i think it was intentional or at least hoped-for, and to accept this as fact is to make a major change in one's attitude toward another. It's to realize how discounted and dis-respected you were, and are.

Anyway, who really knows, right. I wasnt there, truth is we may never know, but that's not the whole of it anyway, so let me change gears.

Now I very much realize that Sue's condition is terrible, her mental health that is, shit even my own is at times very dark and trouble-some since like Sue i too was tramitized as a child and lived with totally dysfunctional adults and children. Her pain must at times be unbearable, i would even myself help her if i could, she most definitely deserves the best care she can get, and being a woman, and a skillfull one at that, she undoubtedly gets much much more of it than anyone is willing to give me; however, ought one of the greatest minds in the world be concerning himself with this hopeless case?, isnt the world fucked up enuf already than to take advantage of one of its finest and if that's not enuf there-after sucking the life out of his progency, one so promising sacrificed for the sake of womankind, yet one more?

Perhaps I'll explain following.

Leo

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 890
(9/5/03 2:08 pm)
Reply

Re: An examination, p2

---

Goodness Leo! You're a bit in love with David, aren't you? No wonder you're jealous of Sue. You really think he's one of the greatest minds in the world?

Actually, the reasons you mention for David's care of Sue are completely reasonable. You seem to imply he should -- what -- remove the boy from her?

It is certainly a poor idea to deliberately get pregnant, but I'd say it's a lot like the way men "think with the wrong head." Strong biological pressures to be fulfilled.

Lbartoli

Registered User

Posts: 276

(9/5/03 2:38 pm)

Reply

more

---

Here again:

Some may say i'm picking on these guys, the list-owner sages, that i'm angry at them for some reason.

Not even close.

If you could have followed my life you would see a person sickened by hypocrisy, this has never changed, well, maybe some, now it doesnt sicken me so much as, thanks to these very men, i've wisened-up, but the will to expose it hasnt left me, and when this is combined with the potential to do some good, to help others directly or otherwise, then i can justify speaking up as i presently am.

Believe it or not, as they say in Ripleys.

Now for the newcommers i should state for the record that i've been a participant here and previously on the genius-I list for several years, almost from the beginning i reckon, Marsha can tell you exactly. I would say that i have probably read over 90% of what the owners have written (and much of the rest), and, incidentally, agreeing with almost all of it (in particular that of Ultimate Reality), and also that i visited with them, mostly with David, a couple of winters ago over the course of several months there is the land of Oz.

It's impossible not to fall in love with your teachers and although ive grown mostly out of that emotion i still value and respect them highly, i'm forever impressed by their amazing thoughts, which in a way are my own too, and god-willing i will be able to continue learning from them and growing and advancing along the path. I dont think Dan has as keen an insight as to my appreciation for them as David might, which is reasonable since most of my contact in all forms was with David.

It really irks me when people try to say im trying to hurt somebody somehow, that i have a bone to pick or some such thing. Sure we've bantered and tangled now and then but im sure they'll agree it was mostly harmless fun, for all the times i disagreed with them i agreed one-hundred times. It's just phooy to accuse me of having no decent basis for my words here, that my intention is to make up bull just to make someone i dont like look bad. What a load of crap. Every word im typing here is sincerely believed and ive spent a great deal of time considering these matters over time, I really believe this is a damn good idea and that something very good might come out of it.

I didnt bring this matter up, im just coming in on the side here. Anyway, my back is beginning to ache so ive got to stop and take a walk.

Leo

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 1790
(9/5/03 3:58 pm)
Reply

re:

---

Rairun wrote:

Quote:

---

Leo, I think a post like that is uncalled for. It can be seem as a way of showing how things actually work in David's life behind the things he says, but that's not the point. His personal life is none of our business, unless he decides to show it by himself.

---

I disagree with this. A philosopher's personal life is fair game. His values and attachments need to be examined, just as much as his thoughts do. Otherwise, philosophy simply becomes an academic exercise without meaning or power. So I have no problems with Leo taking the tack that he has, even though I disagree with his analysis.

Leo wrote:

So as i said i have indeed met Sue, even lived with her and David for a few days, and their promising yet unfortunate son. Incidentally, reading what David wrote above one might come to the mistaken conclusion that the two of them have never lived together, in fact a third party has informed me that they recently moved together off the big island to another place, which kind of clashes with Davids relatively recent revelation that the've split-up never to see each other again (which he later admitted was not for real, but i dont think he told you guys). [/quote] There has been a new development. She and Tristram are moving back to Brisbane, and I am going to remain here (in Tasmania) for a year or two.

Quote:

---

So, getting back on track now, Yes i have spent time with Sue and i understand that she finds all David's friends intolerable, and most expectedly I was no exception.

---

Of all my friends and acquaintances, she has only found Martin and yourself to be intolerable. She found Martin too intense and yourself too unpredictable.

Quote:

---

But the way it looked to me is that she attempts to create the circumstances such that she can have her little fit about someone who may in her mind come between her and David. For instance, one day when David stepped out she tried like hell to pick a fight with me, pushing me again and again demanding that i discuss something with her that i knew would just cause trouble between us, which was exactly what she wanted of course. I amazed myself at how politely i managed to not go there where she wanted us to go, in the discussion, partly coz i sensed what she was up to, but she just kept on pushing and pushing making it rather obvious that she was up to no good.

---

I hadn't heard about this episode, but it doesn't suprise me. She can be like a terrier with a bone when she wants to have a fight with somebody.

Quote:

---

Oh, another reason why i'm stating this here. David wont hear it from me as he's comfortable in his illusion and doesnt care to rock the boat. What i mean is David (and Dan does this too, credit goes to Kevin for greater honesty) can more easily justify (to himself) maintaining a relationship with Sue (and her son) so long as he can see grand and honorable qualities within her, such as her supposedly highly masculine mind.

---

She's not about to shatter the world with some awe-inspiring masculinity, but she does have the quality of being able to go to the very root of a matter in the manner of a focused masculine thinker - as is evidenced in the radio dialogues.

Quote:

---

Now lets go back to the beginning. Personally, I've fucked a fair number of women in my time (if the list owner can use the F-word then so can I; actually, i make love) and never has any one of them ever gotten knocked-up unless i wanted her to. I have always despised women who would try to inprison a man by getting pregnant against or despite his will or desire, it speaks volumes about how little respect she has for the man. And I've neither looked too favorably on men who would let themselves be tricked this way, that they would trust a relatively strange woman with possession of their seed, or that they would have so little self control to ejaculate where they really dont care to, and it amazes me that something along these lines evidently happened to David. As i recall David once explained it to me by saying it "just happened".

---

It just happened in the sense that I did not particularly care at the time if she got pregnant or not. I was in too much despair (over personal/spiritual issues) during that period and wasn't in the mood to reflect upon the future. When she did find out that she was pregnant, and she was wavering as to what to do, I talked her into having the child (rather than having an abortion) because I thought it would be the best thing for her.

Lbartoli
Registered User
Posts: 277
(9/5/03 4:57 pm)
Reply

response

---

Well of course you disagee with me, David, that's the whole point, you're not yet able to stomach the possibility that i am right. Pay attention and learn.

(unable to cut and paste)

As to moving back to Brisbane all that is completely irrelevant and you didnt even address my points, the primary one here being your recent statements suggesting you have not lived with this woman, you never found here dear, that you're not currently living with her, and that she never desired to have you with her (due presumably to her grand masculinity), whereas the truth is you have indeed lived with her, plenty, for the benefit of each of you, and she has desired and supposedly needed your presence and support, and you know the rest.

Its clear that you tried to play-down your involvement but you cant even see, perhaps, that you're doing this.

As to liking all but myself and Martin, who then have you lied to, myself or the List? You told me to my face, and evidently forgotten, that Kevin also makes her uncomfortable.

Is this one of those times that it's good for a sage to lie? What should we believe from you?

No biggy.

Regarding the awesome radio dialogues, could you please point to the most impressive thing she said, and then demonstrate how this could not have been swiped from you or another?

And as to the pregnancy issue, here's where men fall all the time. This "wavering" was but an illusion. She never had the faintest doubt about wanting to give birth to that child. You say you know how women think. You still have much to learn.

She was not confused about whether to have the child.

That whole wavering think was pre-meditated.

Let me show you:

Sue thinking: "Ok, i finally managed to get him to do it, now the inevitable abortion issue is going to come up, i have no intention of having an abortion and if necessary i will leave him and have my baby without him, but better if i can win him over to my side. So i'll pretend im not dead-set on having this baby so he feels like im not discounting him and if he decides to go ahead with it, the birth, then great, he will feel some level of responsibility for its entire life because thats the kind of man he is and i can use his qualities to my advantage, but mainly im doing it for my baby so im really not evil to do this. Yes, to make it sound really realistic, and to convince him that im not intending to discount his opinion, and to maximize the sense of responsibility he may feel, i will even offer- insist even, once im absolutely sure his face tells me he will let me have the baby- insist even that we should consider an abortion, and then when he thinks he has persuaded me to have the baby i'll eventually agree and he'll feel a responsibilty not only to my baby- who, incidentally will be my care-taker later on to replace his father- but also to me!

Even if it goes bad no problem, i'll just say i changed my mind and cant bear to kill part of him thats growing inside me.

Im so damn smart, i'll keep faking being really sick and i'll have him hanging on for years, meanwhile i'll be sure the boy spends suffcient time with him to develop a two-way emotional bond. If it turns out he doesnt want to get stuck raising the kid himself i'll pretend that i'll kill myself if without his assistance and he'll be there for me if for no other reason but to have someone raise his kid. And I'll make sure he thinks, even as deranged as i am, that im a "good mother".

Its for a good cause so my conscience doesnt bother me in the least, and no one will ever know so no one will get hurt.

What a plan!"

-----

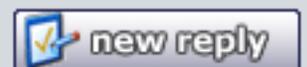

Leo

ps, Wake up, David.

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1426
(9/5/03 11:34 pm)
Reply

Re: response

---

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31n
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The Nature of Woman

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                               | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| MKFaiziRegistered UserPosts: 1076(9/6/03 9:38 am)Reply  | Who shot JR? <hr/> LOL, Dan. Does sound like a soap-operish movie. I wonder what will happen next. Let's all sit around the campfire while Uncle Leo spins his yarn. I love stories. I hope he makes it longer and longer and longer and juicier and juicier. That diabolical Sue. What a tarantula!! I reckon it takes a big spider to spin a big web to snare a big sage. Woo hoo! It's starting to sound like an episode from "Dallas." Faizi |

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 1792
(9/6/03 10:00 am)
Reply

re:

---

Bird wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: In other words, apart from depression and high anxiety levels, she has episodes of pseudo-epileptic states that involve involuntary twitching, infantile speech, and a general lack of ability to function at all. Sometimes these are accompanied by bouts of hysteria. She is also, and has been for a very long time, very suicidal in her outlook.

Bird: This is extremely serious stuff. What you are describing is near to psychosis.

---

Her psychosis is episodal. Outside of these episodes, which have been quite rare over past year or so, she is relatively okay.

Quote:

---

How does this affect your son?

---

He's learned to live with it. The behaviour in her episodes is repetitious and predictable and he knows what to do in such a situation. Sue also has the inner discipline to shield the horrors in her mind from him, as much as humanly possible, and never takes her frustration and pain out on him. She is also a very good parent and has been instrumental in allowing Tristram to flourish and grow into a well-rounded human being.

Quote:

---

What's the suicidal outlook about?

---

The desire to disappear.

Quote:

---

Why isn't she on the forum?

---

She doesn't have a computer and finds most people here to be flakes.

Quote:

---

Why isn't Dan's roomie on the forum?

---

She's not a philosopher and would have little to contribute.

Quote:

---

You had mentioned being in love with someone once, and I assumed it was her.

---

That was a girlfriend that I had in the eighties, called Tracey.

Quote:

---

DQ: She had already been a fairly deep thinker before I met her. It was what attracted me to her in the first place. I've helped deepen her thoughts, but there was already a strong basis to begin with.

Bird: I could help her think straight.

---

No disrespect, but I think she would blow you away.

Quote:

---

Why isn't your wisdom of more use?

---

Wisdom only cures well people. One needs a strong, stable ego before one can begin to make use of wise thought.

Quote:

---

At least Jesus cured people. I thought you were better than Jesus :)

---

The tales of Jesus's doctoring were either intended to be a metaphor for his powers of spiritual healing, or he was a two-bit charlatan engaging in trivial work.

Quote:

---

DQ: It's a real dilemma for her. Basically, Sue is a masculine thinker trapped inside a feminine prison and she lacks the inner strength to break out.

Bird: But I don't think that is her trap. Her problem is some sort of overload, and too much conflict.

---

Too much conflict, yes.

Quote:

---

Tell me more about this feminine prison.

---

It is the trap of not being able to put into action one's highest aims because of feminine fears - such as fear of rejection by society, or fear of being hurt, or fear of being exposed, etc.

Leo wrote:

Quote:

---

Well of course you disagree with me, David, that's the whole point, you're not yet able to stomach the possibility that I am right. Pay attention and learn.

(unable to cut and paste)

As to moving back to Brisbane all that is completely irrelevant and you didnt even address my points, the primary one here being your recent statements suggesting you have not lived with this woman, you never found here dear, that you're not currently living with her, and that she never desired to have you with her (due presumably to her grand masculinity), whereas the truth is you have indeed lived with her, plenty, for the benefit of each of you, and she has desired and supposedly needed your presence and support, and you know the rest.

---

I'm not going to argue the particulars with you. Leo. You're engaging in far too much fantasy for it to be meaningful.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 892
(9/6/03 10:24 am)
Reply

Re: re:

---

Quote:

---

No disrespect, but I think she would blow you away.

---

Well, now I'm doubly disappointed she doesn't have a computer. I would love to find someone to blow me away, especially a woman. But when I said I'd help her think straight, I did not mean in the sense of argument, rather in the sense of counseling.

Quote:

---

Wisdom only cures well people. One needs a strong, stable ego before one can begin to make use of wise thought.

---

Dismantling the ego only can be done by a strong ego. But wisdom of the right kind can help anyone. There's much wisdom in this universe.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 576

(9/6/03 11:15 am)

Reply

Re: re:

---

Quote:

---

It is the trap of not being able to put into action one's highest aims because of feminine fears - such as fear of rejection by society, or fear of being hurt, or fear of being exposed, etc.

---

Heh, sounds like Mandela's inaugural speech. Don't think he had the feminine bit in there though.

"Our deepest fear is not that we are inadequate.

Our deepest fear is that we are powerful beyond measure.

It is our light, not our darkness, that most frightens us.

We ask ourselves, who am I to be brilliant, gorgeous, talented and fabulous?

Actually, who are you not to be?

You are a child of God.

Your playing small doesn't serve this world.

There's nothing enlightened about shrinking so that other people won't feel insecure around you.

*We were born to make manifest the glory of God
that is within us;*

It is not just in some of us - it's in everyone!

And as we let our own light shine, we unconsciously give other people permission to do the same.

As we are liberated from our own fear, our presence automatically liberates others!"

Edited by: Dave Toast at: 9/6/03 11:18 am

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1077

(9/6/03 11:30 am)

Reply

Paul Newman clones

---

Just to add my opinion:

I have never met Dan or David or Kevin or Sue or Sandra in person. I doubt that I ever will meet them. I have known Dan and David on line for years and, to a lesser extent, I have known Kevin Solway. I have said "hi" to Sandra online through Dan.

From reading the radio interviews, I have always had some admiration for Sue because it is rare to encounter a female who, for whatever reason, aspires to masculinity. I have only encountered one other woman like that in my life and she was my lover's ex-lover. I think she was something like Sue in that she was highly masculine but trapped in the "female prison."

The female prison is dependence. It is dependence on relationships and gain through those relationships. My lover's ex-lover still lived with my so called lover and her so called new lover. They lived in a great mansion. I visited them all once.

This woman was outspoken and opinionated. Excellent intelligence. Good with the written word. I have taken from her the use of the phrase, "vaginal wrench." She used to say, "All women are whores, including myself."

The only thing she lacked was the ability to live completely outside a relationship. Despite her sharp mind and sharp tongue, she was dependent on her men. She was like a Queen.

I think that may be Sue's trap. She aspires to the masculine but she is dependent on relationships. She cannot let go of that feminine inclination.

Due to my advanced age and experience, I have worked through all of that. My solitude and independence are so complete that the idea of a relationship repulses me. If an entire herd of Paul Newman clones invaded my property, I would get out the rifle and pick 'em off one by one -- or in small groups.

It is not that I don't like men. I like them. Some of 'em are cute as hell. Just not all that cute. I don't want to live that way. I like 'em at a good distance. But I like my life better.

I like my life better than I could ever like a relationship with a man or a woman. I cannot compromise. I used to be able to compromise but I can't now. For a man to even enter my house would be a compromise that I am not prepared to make. He might leave a footprint or something. Then, I would have to deal with that. I don't want to deal with any impression of that sort.

Anyone reading this should know that I have had relationships with men in the past. Been there, done that. I don't regret them but I did learn my lessons. Big time.

The point is that femininity is engagement in relationships. Women are dependent on relationships, more than men are dependent on relationships. Men have relationships with gauzy dreams.

I am well beyond relationships.

Anna, I don't think Sue is psychotic. I have always thought that she has conversion reactions. I don't know the particulars of her childhood abuse but it is usual for people who are in denial about something or repressing something to manifest physical symptoms such as the seizures. Conversion reactions, though fairly bizarre, are not uncommon.

Leo has met Sue and David. However, Leo's impressions are not ones that I could trust. Unpredictability is the least of it.

My impression of Sue is that of a woman with a very sharp mind and masculine intellect who has allowed her femininity to ensnare her and trap her.

The "relationship mold" that is part of feminine psychology is a strong net that ensnares even a masculine intellect. It is one to be dodged and forsaken, especially by females because females are most drawn to it -- like moths around a porch light.

Kind of interesting how that works. Female humans -- unlike the male peacock -- are the most physically beautiful of the species. It's that physical beauty that puts it at a disadvantage; makes it submissive while simultaneously projecting and imitating ethereal beauty.

Faizi

|                                                                                   |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 79(9/6/03 12:08 pm)Reply     | To MKFaizi <hr/> I totally agree with you. I have no choice.Of course not, because I'm in love with you. You were able to mould your mind on... what is it, insanity or sanity? Never mind your mind. Like I said in one of my first posts here:You're so attractive! No hen, no eunuch (dammit),Paul                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 314(9/6/03 1:37 pm)Reply  | Re: To MKFaizi <hr/> No hen, no eunuch (dammit),Paul You're a fucking wuss, though. GO TO THE CAGE SECTION!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 80(9/6/03 4:28 pm)Reply      | To voce io <hr/> Hey hey, little voce io man, watch your impudent mouth, huh... OK, we're gonna talk in the Cage, for a friendly (I mean that) discussion?You start.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| LbartoliRegistered UserPosts: 278(9/7/03 8:11 pm)Reply | 'friends' <hr/> A man wants nothing more from Woman than to believe in him and to value him for that which he values himself. His will is so powerful that in her the good is magnified and the bad is not seen. He assigns honor to her and in so doing can believe his trust is not misapplied. He begins to believe that she, among all women, is different, is superior, is aware of the greatness within him and that awareness suggests a similar reality within herself. With time this charade grows in strength and even when she falters all is forgiven, even when the greatest deception is | uncovered the truth is so unbearable that this is forgiven too. His 'friends' will not tell him for they will just end up losing him and their love isn't strong enough for that.

Leo

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 579
(9/8/03 1:25 am)
Reply

Re: 'friends'

---

And a bloke who isn't queer and yet loves a man, wants exactly the same.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1155
(9/8/03 2:35 am)
Reply

Emoticons

---

Dan:

What was that I saw!?

:popcorn

MKFaizi
Registered User
Posts: 1078
(9/8/03 1:54 pm)
Reply

Re: Emoticons

---

Leo,

That was enough to make any self-respecting human being throw up.

Too much butter on the popcorn for my taste.

Faizi

|                                                                                                                                                               |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 1438(9/8/03 5:05 pm)Reply  | Re: Emoticons <hr/> Wolf, <input type="checkbox"/> I dunno, seemed like an appropriate response; still does.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 900(9/9/03 2:54 am)Reply                                                                         | Re: Emoticons <hr/> Is it intermission?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1157(9/9/03 3:46 am)Reply                                                                         | Re: Emoticons <hr/> Administrator's priviledge? :lol:rolleyes:smokin                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| marcusnRegistered UserPosts: 1(9/9/03 10:26 am)Reply                                                                               | Re: Paul Newman clones <hr/> Hi, my name is Marcus i've never met a woman who wanted anything to do with me. a real man. peace superman.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| LbartoliRegistered UserPosts: 280(9/9/03 10:45 am)Reply                                                                            | without at least a little yeast there aint no growth <hr/> birdofhermes wrote: What the hell, Leo, I thought you were a redneck American. Basedon your political rants. LB: Well what can you learn about yourself from this, Bird? If your judgement was any good, you would learn that your mis-judgements are a clear sign of your poor judgement. In other words, you're not wise enuf to learn how un-wise you really are. You're an average woman, you will never understand me or anyone who's even half-wise, your mind is wired differently, and you're certain the wiring | is perfect.

Quote:

-----
If you've been paying attention no one else who has met her will speak frankly about it since that would put them at risk, or their girlfriends at risk, of being likewise examined and exposed--
-----

At risk of being examined by whom? Who cares?

When David said they had split, never to see each other again, and I asked him what that was about, he implied it was a joke, that no such relationship existed.

LB: David doesnt care for any more scrutiny, and i will respect that for the time being.

Well, this is interesting. Why do you disappear for such long periods, Leo?

LB: Nothing to say??

Leo

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 92
(9/9/03 10:51 am)
Reply

To Lbartoli

---

A Leo is a Leo, and will stay that way.

Hihi, haha, hoho.

"running away fast*

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 901

(9/9/03 2:14 pm)

Reply

Re: without at least a little yeast there aint no growth

---

Quote:

---

If your judgement was any good, you would learn that your mis-judgements are a clear sign of your poor judgement.

---

Oh, yeah, real poor judgement. You rant on about how wonderful America is and how the world should be grateful, yet I'm way off base. Tell me, Leo, where do you live and where did you grow up?

Quote:

---

You're an average woman, you will never understand me or anyone who's even half-wise, your mind is wired differently, and you're certain the wiring is perfect.

---

I'm no average woman, but you would have no way to know that. How right Marsha is on this - you and certain other guys feel you can take the totally undeserved liberty of assuming that because you're male you must be superior in wisdom or intelligence. Well it just ain't so. I'm smarter than you by such a wide margin that I would never have bothered pointing it out but you've goaded me. When I get mad, I get blunt. Sorry.

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 1443

(9/9/03 2:22 pm)

Reply

Re: Emoticons

---

Wolf asked:

Quote:

---

Administrator's priviledge?

:lol

:rolleyes

:smokin

---

Nah, hyperlink.

Dan Rowden

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31n
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

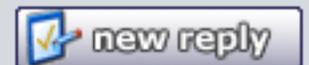

> The opponents of religion

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                              | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2790(7/11/04 12:25 pm)Reply |  The opponents of religion <hr/> We're hard, we love harder. We derive no consolation from metaphysics. Philosophy is ours before it is anyones. Our smiles bring peace, it is easily seen that we can cut with a glance. The religious take an interest in us! They are awed by us, indignant towards us, and loving of us in strange bouts! To music! |

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

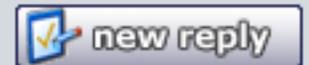

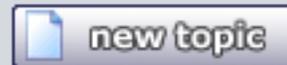

jump to:

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM
> GENIUS FORUM
> The Paradox

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                         | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 773(10/24/03 5:37 pm)Reply | The Paradox <hr/> Quote: <hr/> mattfaust:In short, something I learned on my own a long time ago: do not try to think with women. <hr/> TIME TESTED AND 100% PURE TRUTH EXCELLENT ! Unfortunately, it is easier said than done.I woman who thinks like a man is sick and unable to fulfill herself. If she has children they will be retarded. -4) A woman is the perfect personification of pure reason and logic. That is why logic and reasonable thought is beyond her. It is overkill for her. She cannot be conscious of it because she is it.What mission could demand a more realistic, reasonable and pragmatic outlook than bringing up children? -3) There is no need for a woman to try and show off a high level of logical and intellectual thought. Any woman behaving like that is |

|                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                         | abhorrent. -2) Truly centered and powerful women just smile at mans attempt to fully comprehend reality. She is reality. -1) She does not say much but because she is the best teacher of language. NOW INVERT +1) He talks a lot because what he has to say cannot be put into words. +2) Truly centered and powerful men just smile at womens attempt to understand spirituality. He is spirituality. +3) etc                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1230(10/25/03 6:58 am)Reply | - <hr/> What a load of egotistical crap. Hint: Your rejection by a woman is not necessarily some fault with the woman. This is why prostitution should be legal, just for people like you two.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| mattfaustRegistered UserPosts: 15(10/25/03 7:09 am)Reply     | Re: - <hr/> I don't think my statement is founded in egotism. Rather, it is founded in reason. It is not as though I don't have sufficient experience with women to make a judgement about them. I have lived in four different countries and met women from every corner of the earth. I have found characteristics that were common to all of them - namely that they are incapable of pure reason and deep abstract thought. This is further warranted by the fact that there has never been a known women genius. I would love to hear the arguement in defense of women that is more than "you are just egotistic." I am not a women hater or something. I currently have a girlfriend and have never had problems with attracting women. |

|                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| cassiopeiaeRegistered UserPosts: 143(10/25/03 9:44 am)Reply | Re: - <hr/> Attracting women is one thing, keeping them is another. I don't see anyone stuck up Weininger's butt being a great catch. Which could also explain the types of women who are attracted to such a beast. Edited by: cassiopeiae at: 10/25/03 11:12 am |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1621(10/25/03 10:13 am)Reply   | ---- <hr/> pure reason mattfaust? That chimaera is far behind us!                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 165(10/25/03 10:48 am)Reply       | Re: - <hr/> Maybe mattfaust is gay, like Weininger.                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1622(10/25/03 10:56 am)Reply   | ---- <hr/> Does Weininger speak of his sexuality? How is it known? From what I've read of him, I don't think the man loved himself when he laughed. I don't understand homosexuality.                                                                                    |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 774(10/25/03 11:05 am)Reply        | Inverted expressions <hr/> "Some of my best friends are blah blah blah"translated means;"I hate blah blah blah"                                                                                                                                                       |

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1231
(10/25/03 11:06 am)
Reply

Re: -

Matt wrote,

Quote:

---

It is not as though I don't have sufficient experience with women to make a judgement about them. I have lived in four different countries and met women from every corner of the earth.

---

Congratulations. Yet did you know even one of them?

Quote:

---

I have found characteristics that were common to all of them - namely that they are incapable of pure reason and deep abstract thought.

---

Friend, I work with several female researchers at the University of Washington that are possibly incapable of not thinking in such a way. They probably don't go to the clubs and bars like where you may have met your girlfriend.

Quote:

---

This is further warranted by the fact that there has never been a known women genius.

---

Please prove to me that there has ever been a man genius.

Quote:

---

I currently have a girlfriend and have never had problems with attracting women.

---

Do you whisper to her honestly your feelings for her while you are making love? Or do you merely masquerade here?

Tharan

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 775
(10/25/03 11:12 am)
Reply

-----

---

Avoid the man mouth women unless you want retarded children.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 661
(10/25/03 11:25 am)
Reply

Re: -----

---

Shame Del.

One should never speak of one's own mother in such derogatory terms.

cassiopeiae
Registered User
Posts: 144
(10/25/03 12:19 pm)
Reply

Re: -----

---

LOL! You read my mind...

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 777
(10/25/03 8:08 pm)
Reply

Retarded

---

Yes, I am.

Awareness is the first step.

Slowly sink down into the darkness of self realization and let the fire consume all vanity to emerge the other side new, refreshed and more powerful than before.

The "will to value" drags the carcass about hardly ever looking back.

The "will to power" pushes the carcass about making desperate efforts to preserve it.

|                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 355(10/26/03 3:31 am)Reply  | Re: Retarded <hr/> Women are very capable of abstract thought, but they are intelligent enough to generally not delve into such stupidity. Once you find Truth, great. Then you have to go to work and take shits and communicate. Women are just as conscious of reason as men. Generally, the level of consciousness really depends on who the person is, though. I've seen many unconscious men. Probably more so than I've seen women. These ideas you geniuses hold are outdated and false. About Weinenger and mattfaust being "gay", everyone has the potential to be bisexual. Everyone is bisexual, as human beings. The attraction is different to men than women. Every enlightened person knows this. Every honest person knows this. Every genius should know this. Edited by: voce io at: 10/26/03 3:32 am |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 167(10/26/03 3:38 am)Reply     | To voce io <hr/> Great post!Yep.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| mattfaustRegistered UserPosts: 18(10/26/03 5:43 am)Reply | ---- <hr/> I think the personal attacks against me are unfounded and way out of line. Who do you people think you are? All you know about me is from the 20 or so posts I've put up on this website. Attacking me personally is extremely childish and confirms what I already suspected of most of you -- ignorant. It's now clear to me why the wise men no longer visit this forum. This forum should be closed as it definitely is no longer serving wisdom. Edited by: mattfaust at: 10/26/03 6:06 am                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |

|                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| LuxRegistered UserPosts: 1(10/26/03 9:58 am)Reply             | * <hr/> come come mattfaust you only experience a blip in your own wisdom for the appearance of pettiness in high intellects is abundantly evident fully understandable perhaps even lovable to some degree as well as worthy of criticism but of course never a "rule" where is your understanding? for instance is this a man above who says he does not understand homosexuality? he is as much saying "i do not understand my own" spinoza goethe buddha --- nothing human surprises          |
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1232(10/26/03 12:54 pm)Reply | * <hr/> Did I hurt your feelings, Matt?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 168(10/26/03 12:57 pm)Reply         | To madfaust <hr/> Come back here, you wise man!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 356(10/26/03 1:19 pm)Reply       | Re: To madfaust <hr/> I think the personal attacks against me are unfounded and way out of line. Who do you people think you are? All you know about me is from the 20 or so posts I've put up on this website. Attacking me personally is extremely childish and confirms what I already suspected of most of you -- ignorant. It's now clear to me why the wise men no longer visit this forum. This forum should be closed as it definitely is no longer serving wisdom. Wah wah wah. Get out. |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1624(10/26/03 1:57 pm)Reply      | -- <hr/> Ha! Lux thinks I'm homosexual?! I only say I don't understand homosexuality in that I have no homosexual feelings.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |

Email This To a Friend

Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31r
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM
> GENIUS FORUM
> The Paradox

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                              | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1626(10/26/03 2:19 pm)Reply | --- <hr/> As for bisexuality, what is that?! I have only ever been what people call heterosexual. Nothing human surprises?! There is another sex! Although this is no surprise, the other sex somehow is!                                                                                                                                              |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1627(10/26/03 2:21 pm)Reply | --- <hr/> By another I mean the female sex! (everything needs explaining around this place!)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 169(10/26/03 2:25 pm)Reply     | To suergazzz <hr/> You, not a homosexual?! What about the e-mail you sent me, huh? Promising me eternal(!) rose gardens 'n' all, oh!, don't even wanna think about it anymore! Sewergas! dries tears Matt is hurt. Matt is pompous. (For your information, I'm in love with every woman in this forum, and with jimhaz. There!) |

|                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1628(10/26/03 2:32 pm)Reply | ---<hr/> Jimhaz is only part of a woman, the wo part.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 170(10/26/03 2:49 pm)Reply     | Re: ---<hr/> Maybe voce io (beamed up Scotty) is right?Matt knows everything, like we all do, only he wants a place up there.Another provisional God, if you ask me.                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| mattfaustRegistered UserPosts: 19(10/26/03 3:36 pm)Reply | Re: The Paradox<hr/> You ignorant rejects! I was trying to say we should keep the conversation intelligible instead of resorting to distorted personal attacks. The only intelligent people in this forum are the people who started it. The rest of you are weeds that just won't die. Es de acervus excrementum.                                                                 |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 171(10/26/03 4:22 pm)Reply     | Madfaust!<hr/> Sic transit gloria mundi to you! Hmpff!Sophia [offended]: Oh, Ma doesn't get a say, it doesn't matter what Ma thinks, Ma is a piece of furniture who has no feelings or opinions!Dorothy: Nonsense!, my little hat-rack.http://www.spiderwebservices.nl/thegoldengirlsquotes |

|                                                                                                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| LuxRegistered UserPosts: 2(10/26/03 4:32 pm)Reply                                                                                           | Re: The Paradox <hr/> monsieurmattfaust hahaha you can give as good as you get why not carry on then rather than carry on what you wish was no longer carrying on you have demonstrated your petty mettle now tally ho monsieursuergaz maybe you explain too much and understand too little taking such a nice little turn of manifold meaning and pointing it only in one way nevertheless you do a nice turn with 'surprise' yourself I just might pass this way again                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 664(10/26/03 9:41 pm)Reply  | Re: The Paradox <hr/> Yes, Zag's response is most suprising. Now I think about it though....                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 780(10/26/03 10:22 pm)Reply                                                                                        | The Paradox <hr/> Quote: <hr/> mattfaustI think the personal attacks against me are unfounded and way out of line. Who do you people think you are? All you know about me is from the 20 or so posts I've put up on this website. Attacking me personally is extremely childish and confirms what I already suspected of most of you -- ignorant. It's now clear to me why the wise men no longer visit this forum. This forum should be closed as it definitely is no longer serving wisdom. <hr/> Personal attacks are always perfectly founded.Your physical manifestation is perfectly visible with all it's faults. The carcass even smells bad while yet undead if soap and sweet smelling ointments are not applied regularly, just imagine how much worst a dead | carcass smells.

Invert your reply and see how the secret of enlightenment manifests itself before your eyes. You are at your best when you are feeling your worst.

Quote:

---

I think the personal attacks against me are unfounded and way out of line.

---

They are perfectly founded and in line with your physical self. Feel the burning sensation let your pride roast in the fire.

Quote:

---

Who do you people think you are?

---

Do you know who you are?

Quote:

---

All you know about me is from the 20 or so posts I've put up on this website.

---

Other humans can smell you and the people who deny their spiritual self are like animals who have an even better sense of smell. 1 post is enough to smell you.

Quote:

---

Attacking me personally is extremely childish and confirms what I already suspected of most of you -- ignorant.

---

You are as ignorant and childish in your own spiritual development as you see them to be literally.

Quote:

---

It's now clear to me why the wise men no longer visit this forum.

---

It's the conceited fools who no longer visit this forum. They need time to allow their ego and pride to reform as they beat the life out of each other a few months ago.

They wait until there is an opportunity to come back in philosophic style and intellectual flare.

Mr Toast is a strong animal he seems to be able to operate in all weathers and at all levels. A bit like a scorpion. Their survival ability is outstanding.

Quote:

---

This forum should be closed as it definitely is no longer serving wisdom.

---

You need to close yourself down so that your higher self can operate. You have come to realise that your lower self is no longer serving wisdom.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1629
(10/26/03 10:29 pm)
Reply

---

---

This page!

|                                                                                                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 666(10/26/03 11:18 pm)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> Oiy!                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 357(10/27/03 5:16 am)Reply                                                                                      | Re: --- <hr/> You ignorant rejects! I was trying to say we should keep the conversation intelligible instead of resorting to distorted personal attacks. I...oh my god? W..w...wwhat?! Huh? Mmmmmmmuuuuuhhhh. |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 787(10/29/03 7:44 am)Reply                                                                                          | -- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> suergazThis page! <hr/> What do you mean?                                                                                                                                          |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1643(10/29/03 2:54 pm)Reply                                                                                     | ---- <hr/> I meant this page!                                                                                                                                                                                                      |

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31r
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The Path of Two

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                              | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 394(2/22/04 11:21 pm)Reply | The Path of Two <hr/> As I understand it, the path consists of two expedients. Neither path can be entered until one has the will to use reason at all times and the burning resolve to know Ultimate Truth. These will direct one forward instead of in circles, as ordinary people do. 1) Strict Asceticism - Avoidance and suppression of all things egotistical. This is an attempt to arrive at Ultimate Truth through the simulation/imitation of the perfectly enlightened being. The problems and sufferings of one's inner life are confronted directly and worked out through reasoning and insight. This is generally speaking not sustainable, but the further along one is on the spiritual path, the longer one will be able to sustain the simulation. When your will breaks, the other path becomes necessary: 2) Strict Egotism - This is submission to the ego, indulgence in whatever the ego demands without holding back at all. This can take any form at all: socializing, drinking, sex, reading books, etc. It is different from the ordinary person's indulgences because through reasoning it is now a means rather than an end in itself. The idea is that the ego will eventually grow tired of indulging itself and one will naturally fall back into asceticism with little or (ideally) no effort. It's possible to inflict consequences upon oneself that make it problematic to return to the spiritual path, so one has to be somewhat careful and remain conscious of any consequences that could possibly arise. When true spirituality is attained, these paths become obviated with |

|                                                                                                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                       | wisdom.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2366(2/23/04 12:58 am)Reply                                                                                   | --- <hr/> Don't you mean egoism?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 971(2/23/04 1:23 am)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> Yes he does, quite obviously. Do you have anything interesting to say? I mean, when I saw this, I thought "Hmm, wonder what Zag will have to say about this, being as it's related to his pet philosophy, and path, as far as I can tell. Is this perhaps, at last, a subject which he may be inclined to write about with at least a modicum of clarity instead of purposefully obfuscating the meaning of his writing with transparently vague, or flowery, encoded pseudo-aphorisms. Maybe this subject will enthuse him enough to obviate his egotism." Specifically, I wondered what you might have to say with regard to the last sentence of the third paragraph in particular, though not exclusively. Edited by: Dave Toast at: 2/23/04 1:24 am |
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1481(2/23/04 3:02 am)Reply                                                                                | Re: The Path of Two <hr/> Quote: <hr/> 1) Strict Asceticism - Avoidance and suppression of all things egotistical. This is an attempt to arrive at Ultimate Truth through the simulation/imitation of the perfectly enlightened being. The problems and sufferings of one's inner life are confronted directly and worked out through reasoning and insight. This is generally speaking not sustainable, but the further along one is on the spiritual path, the longer one will be able to sustain the simulation. When your will breaks, the other path becomes necessary: <hr/>                                                                                                                                                                                                   |

I would advise strongly against anyone taking this path. It is a charade and a fraud that will accomplish nothing. It is true, a wise person exhibits these qualities but they are secondary side-effects to his or her true inner state; lack of conflict.

You mention that the problems and sufferings are confronted directly and worked out and yet you then follow with "this is generally speaking not sustainable." I don't understand this. What was worked out? If the same issues return, then nothing was worked out. And if these things are truly worked out, it is not a question of will in holding them back. For example, if I did not like green beans, it would take absolutely no willpower on my part to not buy them and not eat them.

Inner conflict resolution works exactly the same way. I find myself revolted when even an inkling of a few of my old ways arise (aggression...except for football, GO PANTHERS!). But to be honest, they don't arise. I am hard-wired for some aggressiveness, but logical justification for overly aggressive behaviors is completely gone from my personality. If I am fighting they will come in handy, but I am not, so my feelings in this direction are viewed as misplaced rather than justified. I am an animal with clothes on. There is no conflict. There is no suppression.

I have feelings, but I don't embrace the feelings. It is like playing a video game, trying your best, yet not really caring if you win or lose. It is only a game. It is only life. Either way you enjoy the game without conflict or suppression, because you are free.

Tharan

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 395
(2/23/04 4:27 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

suergaz: Don't you mean egoism?

---

What's the difference? I think of them as the same thing.

MGregory

Registered User

Posts: 396

(2/23/04 4:50 am)

Reply

Re: The Path of Two

---

Quote:

---

Tharan: I would advise strongly against anyone taking this path. It is a charade and a fraud that will accomplish nothing. It is true, a wise person exhibits these qualities but they are secondary side-effects to his or her true inner state; lack of conflict.

---

Right, they are secondary side-effects, but if you don't know where you're going it's generally better to go in the direction of the ideal rather than away.

Quote:

---

You mention that the problems and sufferings are confronted directly and worked out and yet you then follow with "this is generally speaking not sustainable." I don't understand this.

---

I was talking about "strict asceticism" as a whole. By "strict asceticism" I just mean thinking. Thinking is not possible all the time if you're weak, so it's better to put it down and come back to it later if thinking becomes impossible.

Edit: I guess I shouldn't say "just thinking", I mean thinking and the conditions that accommodate thinking.

Quote:

---

I have feelings, but I don't embrace the feelings. It is like playing a video game, trying your best, yet not really caring if you win or lose. It is only a game. It is only life. Either way you enjoy the game without conflict or suppression, because you are free.

---

Any feeling is the result of a conflict, of conceptually separating things in Nature and putting them back together again in a deluded way. Some suppression can be helpful, but suppression isn't the goal. The goal is for the feelings to never arise in the first place, which is what happens when the

|                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                          | mind dwells in the ever-present Truth as opposed to falseness, which comes and goes. Edited by: MGregory at: 2/23/04 7:45 pm                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| Thomas KnierimRegistered UserPosts: 808(2/23/04 2:36 pm)Reply | Re: The Path of Two <hr/> Happy Birthday, MGregory! Thomas                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 399(2/23/04 7:39 pm)Reply       | Re: The Path of Two <hr/> Hey thanks Thomas! But how did you know it was my birthday?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| Thomas KnierimRegistered UserPosts: 812(2/23/04 9:18 pm)Reply | Re: The Path of Two <hr/> MGregory: Hey thanks Thomas! But how did you know it was my birthday? There are several possible explanations. <ol style="list-style-type: none"><li>(1) I am omniscient.</li><li>(2) I maintain a spy network at the University of Michigan.</li><li>(3) I have telepathic abilities.</li><li>(4) You have posted this information on thebigview.com.</li></ol> Obviously we can rule out (4). Thomas |

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2368
(2/23/04 10:51 pm)
Reply

---

You mean this Toast?

Quote:

---

It's possible to inflict consequences upon oneself that make it problematic to return to the spiritual path, so one has to be somewhat careful and remain conscious of any consequences that could possibly arise.

---

What about it? Do you mean going mad and staying mad? Big fucking deal.

Matt, forget I asked man. Ultimate truth is a lie.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 972
(2/23/04 11:44 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Well I suppose that's readable.

Thankyou for your insight.

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 400
(2/23/04 11:55 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

Quote:

---

Matt, forget I asked man. Ultimate truth is a lie.

---

A lie in respect to what? Ever thought about that?

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 401
(2/23/04 11:58 pm)
Reply

Re: The Path of Two

---

Hmmm, UofM spy network...they have the technology...

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 973
(2/24/04 12:06 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

suergaz: Don't you mean egoism?

Matt: What's the difference? I think of them as the same thing.

---

Egoism is like any other ~ism, i.e. the conscious adherence to any particular doctrine. Specifically here, the conscious adherence to the doctrine that self-interest is the motivation of conscious action, for example, or that self-interest is a valid end in itself for all actions. It could also simply mean an adherence to the belief in the efficiency of surrender to, and development of, the ego, consciously. You will note that there is no necessity here for the conscious adherent to harbour an exaggerated conception of self-importance, and that's where egotism differs. Egotism is characterised by this very exaggerated conception. It is the more mundane distinction made by many people when they come across somebody who has such an exaggerated conception of their own self-importance, which might manifest itself in somebody talking about themselves all the time, the I/me syndrome. Of course egotism is not often going to be a fully conscious trait, though I suppose it could be.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2372
(2/24/04 12:41 am)
Reply

---

---

Quote:

---

I mean, when I saw this, I thought "Hmm, wonder what Zag will have to say about this, being as it's related to his pet philosophy, and path, as far as I can tell. Is this perhaps, at last, a subject which he may be inclined to write about with at least a modicum of clarity instead of purposefully obfuscating the meaning of his writing with transparently vague, or flowery, encoded pseudo-aphorisms. Maybe this subject will enthuse him enough to obviate his egotism."

---

Show me some of this vague flowery stuff you say I write! What do you mean?! What is a pseudo-aphorism?! My being obviates yours, it's natural, there's no need to get snooty.

Edited by: suergaz at: 2/24/04 12:48 am

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2373
(2/24/04 12:42 am)
Reply

---

---

You're such an old fart Toast.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2374
(2/24/04 12:55 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Matt--

Quote:

---

A lie in respect to what? Ever thought about that?

---

A lie in respect to truth.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 975
(2/24/04 1:33 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Zag: Show me some of this vague flowery stuff you say I write!

---

No.

---

Quote:

---

What do you mean?!

---

I mean what I said.

---

Quote:

---

What is a pseudo-aphorism?!

---

An aphorism is generally a concise statement of a truth and/or sentiment. Pseudo means not genuine, mostly. Do you need me to tell you what purpose a hyphen serves in compound words?

---

Quote:

---

My being obviates yours,

---

No it doesn't, don't be silly.

---

Quote:

---

it's natural

---

If it did, it would be. But it doesn't, so it's not.

Quote:

---

there's no need to get snooty.

---

I know there isn't. Why are you being so?

Quote:

---

You're such an old fart Toast.

---

Is that right. What do you mean by old fart, and how would you apply this meaning to me?

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 402
(2/24/04 11:35 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Egoism is like any other ~ism, i.e. the conscious adherence to any particular doctrine. Specifically here, the conscious adherence to the doctrine that self-interest is the motivation of conscious action, for example, or that self-interest is a valid end in itself for all actions. It could also simply mean an adherence to the belief in the efficiency of surrender to, and development of, the ego, consciously. You will note that there is no necessity here for the conscious adherent to harbour an exaggerated conception of self-importance, and that's where egotism differs. Egotism is characterised by this very exaggerated conception. It is the more mundane distinction made by many people when they come across somebody who has such an exaggerated conception of their own self-importance, which might manifest itself in somebody talking about themselves all the time, the I/me syndrome. Of course egotism is not often going to be a fully conscious trait, though I suppose it could be.

---

Ah, I think I know what you mean. When I think of "egoism" as a philosophy I think of something like Ayn Rand. But I didn't mean "egoism", I meant ordinary, run-of-the-mill egotism, where one is just pleasing oneself. My conception of egotism is very broad and encompasses pretty much everything that opposes the drive to know Ultimate Truth. I would have to say it is anything that reinforces the belief in a finite self. It's generally not possible to enjoy the pleasures of a finite self if one doesn't believe in it because one no longer needs them. I think the more one needs something the more one enjoys having it.

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 403
(2/24/04 11:38 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

suergaz: A lie in respect to truth.

---

I see. And what makes these two possible?

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2375
(2/24/04 11:45 am)
Reply

---

---

Certainly not an ultimate truth, or lie, if that's what you're getting at.

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

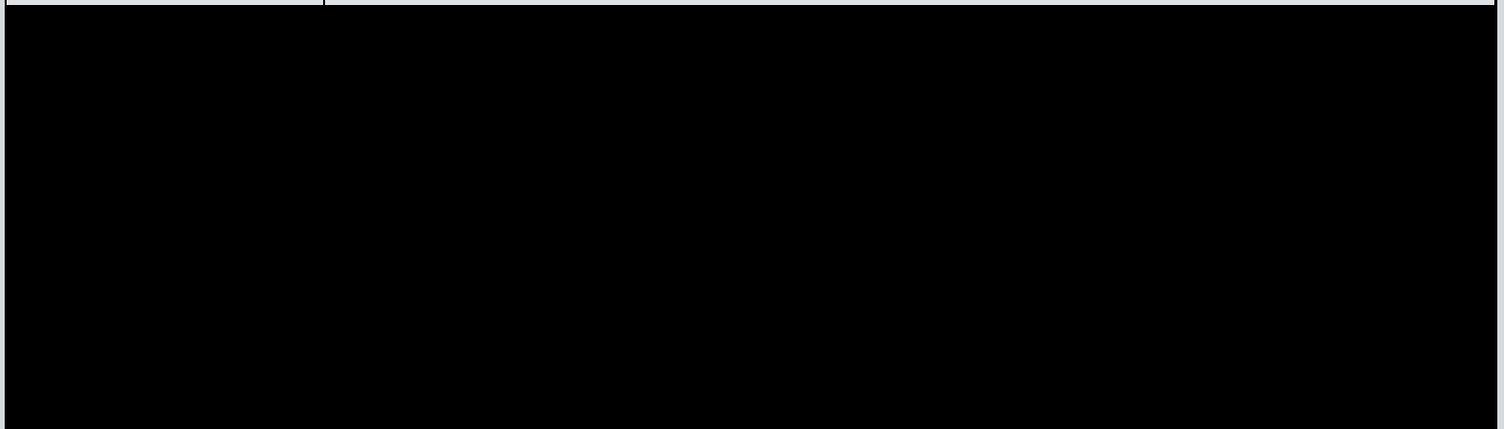

> The Path of Two

Page 1 2 3 4

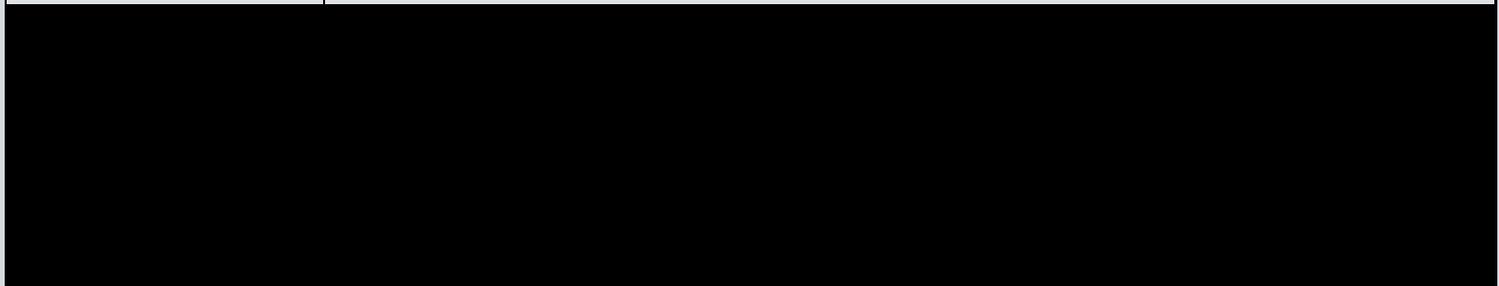

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                   | Comment                                                                                         |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 405(2/24/04 12:00 pm)Reply | Re: ---<hr/> Well, what is it?                                                              |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2376(2/24/04 12:01 pm)Reply | --<hr/> My being does naturally obviate yours Dave, at least from a diastaltic perspective. |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2377(2/24/04 12:12 pm)Reply | ----<hr/> Matt, everything.                                                                 |

|                                                                                                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 979(2/24/04 12:39 pm)Reply  | Re: -- <hr/> You mean from the perspective of a downward wave of contraction occurring in the intestine - diastaltic. Or do you mean from the perspective of an enzyme which converts starch into sugar - diastase, maybe from the perspective of something which rhythically expands and contracts - diastole, or perhaps this is some sort of bizarre way to refer to two entities, as in gestalt. Regardless, don't be silly. No it doesn't. |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2383(2/24/04 1:18 pm)Reply                                                                                     | --- <hr/> Music, man, music. I am more musical than you.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 407(2/24/04 1:20 pm)Reply                                                                                     | Re: ---- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Matt, everything. <hr/> Well, that's what I said, Ultimate Truth. So what are ya bitchin' about?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2384(2/24/04 1:23 pm)Reply                                                                                     | --- <hr/> How do you equate everything with ultimate truth when everything must become what it is?!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2385(2/24/04 1:26 pm)Reply                                                                                     | ---- <hr/> If everything was ultimate (free of nothing) we would not conceive of it.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |

|                                                                                    |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 408(2/24/04 1:28 pm)Reply | Re: --- <hr/> Like this: Everything = Ultimate Truth. Everything already is what it is, so it doesn't have to become anything. If it became anything, it would have to become what it is not, which wouldn't make much sense. |
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 409(2/24/04 1:30 pm)Reply | Re: ---- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> If everything was ultimate (free of nothing) we would not conceive of it. <hr/> Well, we don't conceive of it. We experience it.                                             |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2386(2/24/04 1:34 pm)Reply | --- <hr/> Rubbish. Everything is already what it is, but nevertheless it must become it. How do you account for motion?                                                                                                |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2387(2/24/04 1:36 pm)Reply | --- <hr/> This dialogue demonstrates that our conceiving of everything is a part of our experiencing everything.                                                                                                              |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2388(2/24/04 1:38 pm)Reply | --- <hr/> Everything is truth, not ultimate truth, this is ultimate.                                                                                                                                                          |

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 983
(2/24/04 9:42 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Zag: Music, man, music. I am more musical than you.

---

What exactly do you mean by saying you are more musical than me?

Try to be precise.

Further, how exactly does this conception of you being more musical than me mean that your being obviates mine?

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2389
(2/24/04 10:01 pm)
Reply

---

---

By saying I am more musical than you, I am saying I can probably twirl one of those conducting rods better than you. But you really do suit those tails.

Edited by: suergaz at: 2/24/04 10:15 pm

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 986
(2/24/04 11:01 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

I did ask you to be precise, a vain hope.

You offer an unproveable assertion, but let's look at the circumstantial evidence nonetheless. I started studying music when you were 6 years old, and have continued ever since. My specialist training and appreciation has centred, though not exclusively, around rhythm. I have an extremely eclectic taste in music and am familiar with virtually all forms. I am an accomplished instrumentalist and I know musical theory like the back of my hand. I have twirled a baton many times, and have managed to control up to 27 musicians thereby. Music is the second passion of my life. We are talking about the tip of the iceberg here but let's move onto you.

You listen to jungle in front of the mirror in the nude with an intense look in your eye, and you don't even know the purpose of baton twirling, let alone how to 'do it better'.

Regardless, let's say that you are more musical than me. How exactly does that mean that your being obviates mine?

Edited by: Dave Toast at: 2/24/04 11:12 pm

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 410
(2/24/04 11:08 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Zag: Everything is already what it is, but nevertheless it must become it. How do you account for motion?

---

How does a car become a moving car? A car is either moving or it's not. There is no such thing as a half-moving car.

Quote:

---

This dialogue demonstrates that our conceiving of everything is a part of our experiencing everything.

---

Indeed.

Quote:

---

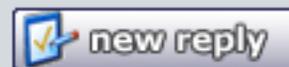

Everything is truth, not ultimate truth, this is ultimate.

---

Everything is seen to be Ultimate Truth when one becomes it, otherwise things seem to be only true or false.

Edited by: MGregory at: 2/24/04 11:18 pm

|                                                                                                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2395(2/24/04 11:13 pm)Reply    | Re: --- <hr/> What a loss! Clean defeat! Except for the mirror and nudity you're right about my jungle, but I compose (not for orchestras) ---you do that too? You really twirl a little stick? This is such harmoniously obviatory conversation we're having! |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 988(2/24/04 11:32 pm)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> Studying musical theory, and being examined thereupon, generally involves putting it all together - composing. But you wouldn't know that would you. Harmoniously obviatory is an oxymoron. Harmony is concordance and agreeable resolution, obviation is not. |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2398(2/24/04 11:39 pm)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> Matt, about your car, we are talking about a car becoming a car, not the car becoming a moving car. Your dear fucking heart has skipped a beat.                                                                                                                       |

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

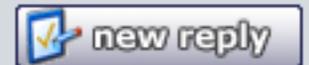

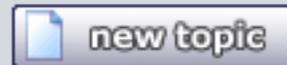

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The Path of Two

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                         | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 412(2/24/04 11:46 pm)Reply                                                                                       | Re: ---<hr/> No, I was talking about motion.                                                                                                                                                 |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2399(2/24/04 11:49 pm)Reply | Re: ---<hr/> Toast, if you're not composing with a computer Toast, you're toast.                                                                                                             |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2400(2/24/04 11:55 pm)Reply | Re: ---<hr/> It makes no difference Matt, I have said everything becomes what it is, and it does, and you're trying to say it doesn't.Edited by: suergaz at: 2/24/04 11:57 pm |

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 989
(2/25/04 12:06 am)
Reply

Re: ---

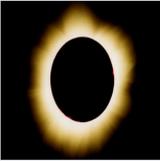

---

I have been composing with sequencers since their advent.

Overlaying samples onto a beatbox and a primitive bassline is not composing BTW. It's just playing at it, like children painting by numbers.

I am more musical than you. How d'ya like them apples.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2401
(2/25/04 12:29 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Man, what jungle exactly are you talking about?! That sounds like shit! Do you use Cubase? Logic? Have you got Reason?

My music's better than yours.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2402
(2/25/04 12:35 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

I am more musical than you.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 990
(2/25/04 1:28 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

I was using Cubase when you were 12. I have Reason.

Your music couldn't possibly be better than mine, being as your musical knowledge couldn't hold a candle to mine. Not to mention the fact that you don't play anything except a mouse and keyboard.

I am infinitely more musical than you.

|                                                                                                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2405(2/25/04 11:15 am)Reply                                                                                    | --- <hr/> I was given a scholarship at the Canberra school of music when I was 9. I was a cellist. When I was 16 many thought it was to be my career! My music is dance music, is yours?                                                              |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 992(2/25/04 11:59 am)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> If that were so, one would think you would know the correct name for a baton, as opposed to "one of those conducting rods".                                                                                                                    |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2407(2/25/04 12:11 pm)Reply                                                                                    | --- <hr/> The sight of you conducting would be so funny! What a bore you must be! I could've sworn there was another name, not baton, for those damned rods.                                                                                                 |
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 416(2/25/04 12:55 pm)Reply                                                                                    | Re: --- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> suergaz: It makes no difference Matt, I have said everything becomes what it is, and it does, and you're trying to say it doesn't. <hr/> Well, then all you have to do is explain how motion becomes itself. |

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 417
(2/25/04 12:56 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

Zag: The sight of you conducting would be so funny! What a bore you must be! I could've sworn there was another name, not baton, for those damned rods.

---

Magic wand, perhaps?

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2412
(2/25/04 1:00 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

Well, then all you have to do is explain how motion becomes itself.

---

No, you have to explain how it doesn't.

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 418
(2/25/04 1:08 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

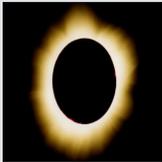

I already did. You must have missed it.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2413
(2/25/04 1:56 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Matt, I am saying that everything is what it is and that it becomes what it is. You are saying everything is what it is because it is what it is. Which is not wrong, but you seem to deny the truth that it must become what it is for sake of a great nonsense you call 'Ultimate truth'

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 419
(2/25/04 2:33 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Matt, I am saying that everything is what it is and that it becomes what it is. You are saying everything is what it is because it is what it is. Which is not wrong, but you seem to deny the truth that it must become what it is for sake of a great nonsense you call 'Ultimate truth'

---

No, I am saying I see motion or I don't. I've never seen anything become motion. I am not denying a truth at all.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2416
(2/25/04 10:02 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

When you see anything in motion, you see motion become itself.

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 423
(2/26/04 12:17 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

I honestly don't understand why you bother with this "becoming" idea. If we see motion, it already is motion. It does not need to become it. Why add this unnecessary complication? Are you trying to hide a GOD behind your back?

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2420
(2/26/04 9:17 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

it is not unnecessary, or complicated, you are hiding an error behind you---'Ultimate truth'

Motion, humans, the universe etc. becomes what it is. There is no reason to refute this.

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 425
(2/27/04 2:32 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

You are wrong. Six times in that post you have erred. And I was only trying to get you to correct one! No wonder no one talks to you anymore. Your mind is like a block. Not an uncarved block, but one that's been chopped to pieces.

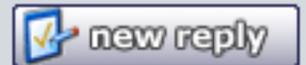

Damn this naive optimism! But I'll give up my optimism someday, and when I do, I won't have a word to say to you. Then no one will be left to bother you in your conversations with Zarathustra! Heh heh

If a person has only 1% wisdom, it might take 5 years of coaxing and wheedling to get him to accept another 1%, but a person who has 50% wisdom can leap to probably 55% with just one thought, I bet. Why do I say this? Because a person like that understands principle. He can read a thought, see the principle in it and create whatever he wants with it. You could show him a chair and he would turn around and make fifty new chairs, all different. He doesn't bother shielding himself against anything. What a rare specimen he is!

Edited by: MGregory at: 2/27/04 2:42 pm

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

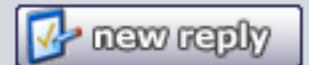

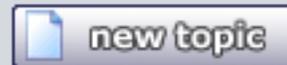

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The Path of Two

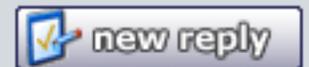

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                  | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2444(2/27/04 3:22 pm)Reply | ---<hr/> Matt, you may be a little grieved that my reasoning continues where yours seizes up, but remain a man and we'll see if I can't, as a rare specimen, mend your view of me as a chopping block. |

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

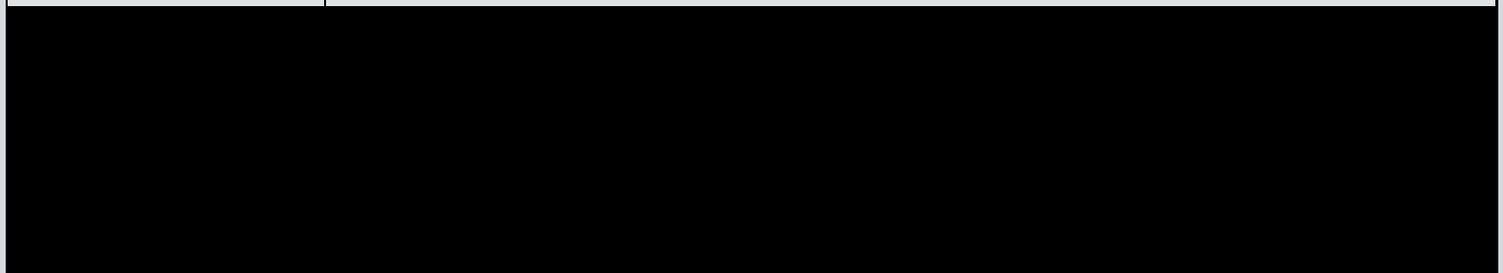

> The philosophy of money

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                    | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 904(1/9/04 5:30 pm)Reply              | The philosophy of money <hr/> Is the value of money to be found more in it's substance or function?                                                                                                                                                      |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 553(1/9/04 6:45 pm)Reply          | Re: The philosophy of money <hr/> Function, of course.                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 226(1/10/04 12:31 pm)Reply | Re: The philosophy of money <hr/> You're implicitly affirming that it has substance Voce... Perhaps you could tell us about the nature of 'substance' or function, or explore the relationship between egotism and money-mindedness? Rhett |

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 559
(1/10/04 5:00 pm)
Reply

Re: The philosophy of money

---

I interpreted the question as: "Do you think the purpose of money is what it's made of, or what it does?"

Money's purpose is to buy things, not to be decorated paper.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 729
(1/11/04 2:22 am)
Reply

Re: The philosophy of money - Dilbert's World

---

There may finally be a scientific explanation for the thorny relationship between the two fundamental Dilbertian white-collar working classes - management and engineering. As we know from the Dilbert comic strip, engineers are always smarter than managers but they invariably earn less. There is no obvious explanation for this paradox. An experiment involving domestic pigs (yes, pigs!) described by Richard Dawkins in a later addendum to his famous book "The Selfish Gene" may finally shed some light onto this issue. Dawkins gives an example of what he considers to be a case of a paradoxical ESS (evolutionary stable strategy) in a Skinner box. It runs like this: You put two pigs into a Skinner box. A Skinner box is an apparatus in which an animal learns to feed itself by pressing a lever. Food is delivered in small quantities whenever the lever is pressed. Dawkins describes the experiment:

"Experimental psychologists are accustomed to putting pigeons or rats in small Skinner boxes, where they soon learn to press delicate little levers for food reward. Pigs can learn the same thing in a scaled-up Skinner box with a very undelicate snout lever. B.A. Baldwin and G.B. Meese trained pigs in a skinner sty, but there is an added twist to the tale. The snout lever was at one end of the sty; the food dispenser at the other. So the pig had to press the lever, then race up to the other end of the sty to get the food, then rush back to the lever, and so on. This sounds all very well, but Baldwin and Meese put pairs of pigs into the apparatus. It now became possible for one pig to exploit the other. The 'slave' pig rushed back and forth pressing the bar. The 'master' pig sat by the food chute and ate the food as it was dispensed. Pairs of pigs did indeed settle down into a stable master/slave pattern of this kind, one working and running, the other doing most of the eating."

One might imagine who is the engineer pig and who is the management pig. Of course, the engineer pig is the one that operates the lever and keeps running back and forth to catch some of the food. The management pig is the one that keeps eating. Dawkin continues:

“Now for the paradox. The labels ‘master’ and ‘slave’ turned out to be all topsy-turvy. Whenever a pair of pigs settled down to a stable pattern, the pig that ended up playing the ‘master’ or ‘exploiting’ the role was the pig that, in all other ways, was subordinate. The so-called ‘slave’ pig, the one that did all the work, was the pig that was usually dominant. Anyone knowing the pigs would have predicted that, on the contrary, the dominant pig would have been the master, doing most of the eating; the subordinate pig should have been the hard-working and scarcely-eating slave.

How could this paradoxical reversal arise? It is easy to understand once you start thinking in terms of stable strategies. [...] The strategy ‘if dominant, sit by the food trough; if subordinate work the lever’ sounds sensible but would not be stable. The subordinate pig, having pressed the lever, would come sprinting over, only to find the dominant pig with its front feet firmly in the trough and impossible to dislodge. The subordinate pig would soon give up pressing the lever, for the habit would never be rewarded. But now consider the reverse strategy: ‘If dominant, work the lever; if subordinate sit by the food trough.’ This would be stable, even though it has the paradoxical result that the subordinate pig gets most of the food. All that is necessary is that there should be some food left for the dominant pig when it charges up from the other end of the sty. As soon as it arrives, it has no difficulties in tossing the subordinate pig out of the trough. As long as there is a crumb left to reward it, its habit of working the lever, and thereby stuffing the subordinate pig, will persist.”

And such are the absurd consequences of division of labor. Able-minded individuals will have a tendency to make it in engineering, doing most of the work, while their less able conspecifics will have a tendency to be placed in management, doing most of the eating, because according to game theory, it happens to be the best strategy. Dilbert would be delighted.

Thomas

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 229
(1/11/04 10:08 am)
Reply

Re: The philosophy of money - Dilbert's World

---

It's not as simple as that Thomas.

With the engineers greater intellect comes a commensurately greater ethicality. Thus, he will steadfastly put in his share no matter what, even when the manager slouch does not. The engineer lives a life of frustration at this inequality, but is bound, and made somewhat myopic, by his attachment to equality. He simply doesn't have sufficient intellect to 'engineer' the resolution of the managers deficiencies.

Additionally, greater intellects are more disposed to concrete truth, or more correctly, what they think is concrete truth(empiricism). Thus, they have a tendency towards jobs like engineering rather than management. Even though the engineer may become a manager, he will usually do it only because of the greater pay, as he dislikes doing it. Of course, if the engineer had a big enough mind it could encompass human behaviour (management) and the Infinite, but that's another story.

Rhett

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 230
(1/11/04 10:18 am)
Reply

Re: The philosophy of money

---

I interpreted the question as: "Do you think the purpose of money is what it's made of, or what it does?"

Money's purpose is to buy things, not to be decorated paper.

Sure, but i can get that response from the laundrywoman or a six year old, it's clearly inappropriate or lacking in a philosophy forum.

Why don't you tell us what the 'decorated paper' actually is?

Or the role of money, and difficulties thereof, in the life of a modern sage (versus those of the past)?

Rhett

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 562
(1/11/04 10:59 am)
Reply

Re: The philosophy of money

---

Sure, but i can get that response from the laundrywoman or a six year old, it's clearly inappropriate or lacking in a philosophy forum.

Right, which is why I said "of course" when first replying to it. How did you interpret the question?

Why don't you tell us what the 'decorated paper' actually is?

It's just a type of material that's hard to forge. It's used to purchase things, and it's earned by working.

Or the role of money, and difficulties thereof, in the life of a modern sage (versus those of the past)?

Money is the same for everyone. Some people can become obsessed with it, and some don't care about it; how people react to it doesn't change what it is, though.

It's a secondary motivator. Let's say you want to buy a new car. You are working to earn the money to purchase that car. You don't necessarily work just to earn money, because money is near worthless on it's own. The sage understands that everything is worth as much as everything else, which is why they generally don't worry too much about money, since there isn't really anything to get.

The modern sage is only different in that he lives in a world that is technologically and socially advanced. Money doesn't create difficulties for the sage, because there aren't any difficulties at all.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2048
(1/11/04 2:17 pm)
Reply

-----

---

voce io:--

Quote:

---

The sage understands that everything is worth as much as everything else,

---

How, when everything is not worth as much as everything else lest it be

|                                                                                   |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                   | worth nothing? Rhett, why do you make money and how?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 565(1/12/04 2:25 am)Reply | Re: ----- <hr/> How, when everything is not worth as much as everything else lest it be worth nothing? Hmm....'lest', suergaz?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 906(1/12/04 6:08 am)Reply     | The philosophy of money <hr/> Primitive people and aristocrates are alike in nature in that the both hate the principle of work, trade and exchange. (work in this context means the kind of work you do only because you expect to get paid) They prefer giving gifts or robbery. Money at it's most developed has little or no value as a material. The value of early money was also contained in it's material like gold and silver coins as a development of barter. So the value of money moves from substance to function. If the is correct we should be able to see the principle at work universaly. |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 907(1/12/04 6:19 am)Reply     | division of labor <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Thomas KnierimAnd such are the absurd consequences of division of labor. <hr/> The total value of something increases relative to the decline in value of its individual parts.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |

|                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2055(1/12/04 11:29 am)Reply | --- <hr/> Yes 'lest'! I could have writ 'unless' but everything is not nothing, at least not while I'm around! (Let the mystics take me to task about this!)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 568(1/12/04 12:30 pm)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> Nothing isn't something, and something isn't nothing. If there are five things, one isn't greater than the other. Do you agree now, suergaz?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2056(1/12/04 1:01 pm)Reply  | --- <hr/> What five things? And why shouldn't one of them be greater than another?!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 570(1/12/04 1:07 pm)Reply   | Re: --- <hr/> Any five things. One of them can be considered greater than another, but that's in consideration, and not in original nature.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 908(1/12/04 6:33 pm)Reply       | Re: The philosophy of money - Dilbert's World <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Thomas KnierimAble-minded individuals will have a tendency to make it in engineering, doing most of the work, while their less able conspecifics will have a tendency to be placed in management, doing most of the eating, because according to game theory, it happens to be the best strategy. <hr/> The sage is universal.Can he do any job, which he is still physically capable, with excellence because he is emotionally detached from his work? |

|                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                     | Is the value of the sage like advanced money in his function or is his value like primitive money in his substance?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2057(1/13/04 12:31 am)Reply | --- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Any five things. One of them can be considered greater than another, but that's in consideration, and not in original nature <hr/> Any five things?! I disagree! Five things could be a human and four rocks. The humans consciousness of the other things, consideration apart, make it greater than them. |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 573(1/13/04 3:07 am)Reply   | Re: --- <hr/> You believe that to be so, but it isn't so. Everything is worth just as much as everything else. There is nothing greater than anything.                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2059(1/13/04 6:26 pm)Reply  | ---- <hr/> What is this?! denial?! Voce io, you'll see! You're behanving like a genius killer! (:D) Everything is worth just as much as everything else only if everything is worth nothing. This is about choice, discrimination, ...Taste!!! Are you the equal of an antelope?                                                                 |

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 582
(1/14/04 6:04 am)
Reply

...

Taste is equal to distaste, and that's how we can either have taste or not have taste. Neither is greater than another, but there is an appearance that certain things are greater.

I am a genius killer. All structures of philosophy must be burned to the ground, and all philosophers turned into women. The genius live in a delusional world that he creates for himself with concepts. None of it is real. I am here to destroy all of your self imposed structures. I'm here to show you God, through being as "evil" as you can be.

Become the "feminine mind", and you'll just laugh at philosophers and their 'wisdom'. You will see God playing with himself, just masturbating there. The semen from philosophy is much less than the semen from even talking or breathing. To hold philosophy as the ideal in this life is a joke to someone who is actually God-realized.

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

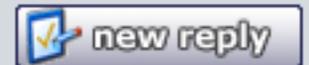

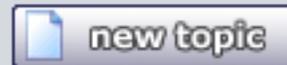

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The philosophy of money

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                              | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 916(1/14/04 7:13 am)Reply       | Pure concepts <hr/> Economic god-own everythingReligious god-live foreverAcademic god-know everythingSocial god-love everybody There pure concepts/gods create structures that diverge from reality. No matter how far they diverge from reality they are legitimised by the service they render in helping us to understand reality. |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2063(1/14/04 10:29 am)Reply | --- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Taste is equal to distaste, and that's how we can either have taste or not have taste. Neither is greater than another, but there is an appearance that certain things are greater. <hr/> Not equal, only relative. Quote: <hr/>                                                                  |

I am a genius killer. All structures of philosophy must be burned to the ground, and all philosophers turned into women. The genius live in a delusional world that he creates for himself with concepts. None of it is real. I am here to destroy all of your self imposed structures. I'm here to show you God, through being as "evil" as you can be.

---

All philosophical structures must be burnt to the ground yes, but there is no god, and you cannot show it.

Quote:

---

Become the "feminine mind", and you'll just laugh at philosophers and their 'wisdom'. You will see God playing with himself, just masturbating there. The semen from philosophy is much less than the semen from even talking or breathing. To hold philosophy as the ideal in this life is a joke to someone who is actually God-realized.

---

I already laugh at philosophers and the wisdom of philosophers, and not from becoming a 'feminine mind'--
You are saying you are 'God-realised'? What the fuck is that supposed to mean? It sounds so faggoted. Philosophy is not my ideal, it is my reality. You go to school like a turnip and you think you can be as evil as me? Fuck your god-talk. Let's fight. I laugh at the wisdom of 'students'---

Edited by: suergaz at: 1/14/04 10:41 am

voce io

Registered User

Posts: 590

(1/14/04 1:23 pm)

Reply

...

---

Not equal, only relative.

Yes, taste is relative to distaste. Taste is equal to distaste as both are just things and concepts. I suppose, in some abstraction of reality, taste can be greater than distaste, and the other way around; but that's an abstraction of reality only.

All philosophical structures must be burnt to the ground yes, but there is no god, and you cannot show it.

There is a God, which is your self unbounded by things. Any description of God in the scriptures declared God as this. God is also all things, the emanation. I think the Buddha said "God is asleep in each stone, God dreams in the plants, God awakens in the animals and God becomes conscious in the human form." Kant said something about the noumenon being a 'thing in itself'. The noumenon is your self unbounded by things.

I already laugh at philosophers and the wisdom of philosophers, and not from becoming a 'feminine mind'--

You are saying you are 'God-realised'? What the fuck is that supposed to mean? It sounds so faggoted. Philosophy is not my ideal, it is my reality. You go to school like a turnip and you think you can be as evil as me? Fuck your god-talk. Let's fight. I laugh at the wisdom of 'students'---

I go to school like a child that knows Santa doesn't exist, but still goes through the motions of Christmastime.

You aren't evil, suergaz. You're just funny.

I am saying I'm God-Realized. It means that I have realized God in myself and all things. It is pretty faggoted-sounding, but so are a lot of things that I maintain to say. I don't really care.

I will fight you.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2067
(1/14/04 2:18 pm)
Reply

Re: ...

---

Quote:

---

Taste is equal to distaste as both are just things and concepts.

---

They are not equal because of that, and not equal at all. Their nature as concept is merely shared.

My self is bounded by things voce io. So is yours. Honesty abounds.

Keep going through the motions schoolboy. You can fight me when you're ready.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 919
(1/15/04 7:05 pm)
Reply

Peace

---

Quote:

---

suergaz

Keep going through the motions schoolboy. You can fight me when you're ready.

---

All this kind of talk must be stamped out.

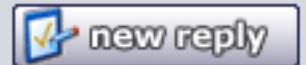

It destabilises the economy.

The banks cannot afford to have this kind of attitude spreading.

The death of the banks is the death of civilisation as we know it.

Switzerland is heaven on earth. That is where the real angels live.

|                                                                                    |                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2077(1/17/04 1:34 am)Reply | ----------Shut up shop-face, bank on your buttocks.                                                                                                                                      |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 929(1/19/04 6:37 pm)Reply      | Money Evolution-----We have always wanted to measure everything. Money is the best measure of value that man has created.Can you think of a value that cannot be measured in money? |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2096(1/19/04 8:07 pm)Reply | ----------genius                                                                                                                                                                         |

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The Power of Positive Thinking?

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                              | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 351(2/10/04 12:03 am)Reply | The Power of Positive Thinking? <hr/> ...there is good reason to believe that even at an early age Weininger thought he possessed the power to become a great man, and it was his conviction that he would in time present new visions to the world. - David Abrahamsen, M.D.The Mind and Death of a Genius |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 988(2/10/04 8:10 am)Reply       | The Power of Positive Thinking? <hr/> Yes, Weininger was a truly great man. Unfortunately his life followed the Samson model.It was the allure of the feminine collective than pushed him over the edge and cost him his life. He saw himself getting diffused.                                                                  |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2273(2/10/04 9:03 am)Reply  | ---- <hr/> Did he shoot himself?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |

|                                                                                                                                                                                                   |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|  MGregory Registered User Posts: 357 (2/10/04 4:30 pm) Reply                                                                                    | Re: The Power of Positive Thinking? <hr/> I think all that thinking about women he did when he was writing the book got to him and when he finished the book he couldn't stop thinking about them. He should have put down his moral thinking for awhile and waited it out. It sounds like that wasn't possible for him either, though. I can't help but wonder about the guy.                                                                       |
|  drowden Forum Host Posts: 1638 (2/10/04 4:53 pm) Reply         | Re: The Power of Positive Thinking? <hr/> The double-edged sword of being a truly profound thinker is that, unless you have really got it all together, a profound error can be your undoing, because of its depth in your soul. Weininger, being a young man of depth, didn't survive his errors. I don't see much need to complicate his actual death beyond that. Dan Rowden                                                        |
|  MGregory Registered User Posts: 358 (2/10/04 5:13 pm) Reply                                                                                    | Re: The Power of Positive Thinking? <hr/> That's probably a good idea, not to complicate it with my awesome psychic powers. His errors were his own, I guess.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|  ksolway Registered User Posts: 349 (2/10/04 5:34 pm) Reply   | Re: The Power of Positive Thinking? <hr/> Matt wrote: Quote: <hr/> . . . and when he finished the book he couldn't stop thinking about them. <hr/> When he finished the book, he largely moved on to other things. The writings in "On Last Things" (meaning, "On Ultimate Things"), and "Notebook and Letters to a Friend", contain the things that were on his |

mind during the final weeks, and even hours, of his life. There are some dark thoughts there, but there is certainly no obvious obsession with the the woman issue.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 989
(2/10/04 6:25 pm)
Reply

Re: The Power of Positive Thinking?

---

Quote:

---

Matt wrote:

. . . and when he finished the book he couldn't stop thinking about them.

---

I do not think he was just thinking about women. He was thinking much deeper than that. He was thinking about the meaning of woman and how the feminine principles are in everything.

I went to the Weininger conference and I met the man who has just finished the new translation of Sex & Character. I can't wait to buy this translation.

The translator said that toward the end of the book Weininger kept using "everywhere" and "everything".

The Genius is universal. We are looking for this universal pattern, code, understanding, principle, spirit, energy, knowledge etc.

The trap is feminine. Alchemy gives a clue.

Invisibility is the supreme defense.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2281
(2/10/04 9:18 pm)
Reply

---

---

So he did shoot himself. And he became a christian after or before he published sex and character?

|                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 359(2/10/04 9:24 pm)Reply  | Re: The Power of Positive Thinking? <hr/> No idea. I freely admit that, although I can understand some of the things he said, I cannot comprehend the man himself at all. I don't understand what was driving him to think or what drove him to suicide. But I haven't studied him that much. Every time I try to read his work my mind goes off on all sorts of wild tangents, so I find him hard to read. Edit: Dammit Zag! Quit posting in between my replies and the post I'm replying to! :-P I was replying to Kevin and DEL. He became a Christian on the day Sex and Character was published, I think. Edited by: MGregory at: 2/10/04 9:27 pm |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2283(2/10/04 9:39 pm)Reply  | --- <hr/> Why should I read him then?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 360(2/10/04 9:54 pm)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> I don't know, ask DEL.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 361(2/10/04 10:01 pm)Reply | Re: The Power of Positive Thinking? <hr/> Quote: <hr/> DEL: I went to the Weininger conference and I met the man who has just finished the new translation of Sex &amp; Character. I can't wait to buy this translation. The translator said that toward the end of the book Weininger kept using "everywhere" and "everything". <hr/> Yeah, I remember you telling us about that. That will be interesting. Did the translator connect Weininger's thoughts with the idea of spiritual enlightenment, or how did he see it? Did he say what he thought                                                                                                       |

Weininger's motivation was in writing the book? Because to me, it looks like he was trying to make a fundamental change in the field of psychology, and from there went off on a tangent into morality and ethics, although I think morality was his primary motivation the entire time and the scientific arguments were just there to justify it.

Edited by: MGregory at: 2/10/04 10:09 pm

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 362
(2/11/04 4:03 am)
Reply

Re: The Power of Positive Thinking?

---

Quote:

---

Kevin: ...but there is certainly no obvious obsession with the woman issue.

---

I didn't mean it like that anyway. He could have had flashes of experiences with women that he was trying to get away from or something. That happens to me. If I dwell on it for too long, my will to value goes out the window, wisdom becomes empty, my thoughts turn into dead corpses, and my whole life becomes meaningless. It's a real struggle to start thinking again. I guess that could be considered an obsession, but when I think of an obsession, I think of someone thinking the same thoughts all the time.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 992
(2/11/04 7:24 am)
Reply

Re: The Power of Positive Thinking?

---

Quote:

---

MGregory

Yeah, I remember you telling us about that. That will be interesting. Did the translator connect Weininger's thoughts with the idea of spiritual enlightenment, or how did he see it? Did he say what he thought Weininger's motivation was in writing the book?

---

You have to think of the translator as a good quality translation machine. He was totally detached and professional about the translation.

|                                                                                    |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                    | I was the only one at the conference who had actually read Weininger books completely. I have read them through twice. When they were debating sometimes I would stop everybody in their tracks by finding the relevant passage in the book. I was the only one who actually had a copy of Sex &amp; Character at the conference!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| FarrokhzAdRegistered UserPosts: 1(2/11/04 8:01 am)Reply | Re: The Power of Positive Thinking? <hr/> Weininger killed himself because he shared so many characteristics that he felt were definitive of Jews and women.He spent so much time describing what genius isn't that when he was faced with those negative characteristics in himself it drove him first to Christianity and then to suicide. To quote him: "All madness is the outcome of the insupportability of suffering attached to all consciousness."                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 597(2/11/04 9:13 am)Reply   | Re: The Power of Positive Thinking? <hr/> The translator said that toward the end of the book Weininger kept using "everywhere" and "everything". Not so long ago that Hu Zheng dude, was rambling a bit about the question of killing himself or not, when he stated he was enlightened. Perhaps it was the same for Weininger and in his society there was no one he could talk to to clear his head, unlike nowadays where it is a small world. I doubt he would have felt guilty. It is always in the back of my head that saying one is enlightened is not more than a mental disorder, albeit a healthy one. You get to a certain point where wisdom, begins to become pointless, you think you know everything but it no longer brings you joy, and non-attached wisdom does not allow you to have adequate intimate contact with the herd, so your self-preservation instincts flip the mind into the trance of enlightenment as a form of survival to balance out or negate your natural instinct to be a herd member. |

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2285
(2/11/04 9:32 am)
Reply

---

Weininger--

Quote:

---

It is certainly true that the greater an artist or philosopher may be, the more ruthless he will be in keeping faith with himself, in this very way often disappointing the expectations of those with whom he comes in contact in every day life; these cannot follow his higher flights and so try to bind the eagle to earth (Goethe and Lavater) and in this way many great men have been branded as immoral. . . .

---

We have never been scared of this brand setting us apart.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2286
(2/11/04 10:01 am)
Reply

---

Quote:

---

Undine, the soulless Undine, is the platonic idea of woman. In spite of all bisexuality she most really resembles the actuality. The well-known phrase, "Women have no character," really means the same thing. Personality and individuality (intelligible), ego and soul, will and (intelligible) character, all these are different expressions of the same actuality, an actuality the male of mankind attains, the female lacks.

---

Weininger did not understand Fouques fairy tale.

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

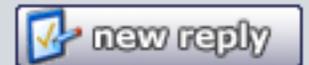

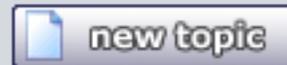

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The Power to Choose Joy

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                              | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| StoryWatersRegistered UserPosts: 1(5/20/04 8:26 am)Reply |  The Power to Choose Joy <hr/> Hi everyone, I wanted to share this article that I wrote recently called 'The Power to Choose Joy'. I hope it empowers and inspires. Please share in around in any forums you are a member of. All comments and feedback welcome :P with love.Story Waters The Power to Choose JoyA bridge to The Messiah Seedby Story Waters INTRODUCTION 'I create my own reality' has been at the foundation of my beliefs ever since reading the Seth books by Jane Roberts many years ago. Armed with this mantra I have journeyed from feelings of alienation, limitation, and lack of abundance to a reality that is, at last, becoming a living expression of joy and limitlessness. To come to that joy I have had to step fully into my own power and this has meant coming to take absolute responsibility and ownership for every aspect of my being. I used to think that this was something I was already doing. This article is my realization of a new level of stepping into my power. It is the realization of my power to choose joy. I share it with you here, from my heart to yours. |

As I begin to step into the manifestation of my dream, to live as a spiritual writer, I realize that the joy I have sought for so long has truly come from within me. When I look back I see that I was waiting for joy to somehow break through to me from outside of myself. I was carrying a belief that I would only come to happiness when certain external conditions were fulfilled, namely having financial security and independence through the mainstream publication of my book, The Messiah Seed. I felt that this was having a strong sense of conviction and faith in my writing, in a way that would aid the manifestation of my dream. I now see that I was giving away my power to be happy.

WAITING FOR HAPPINESS

Without realizing it, I had decided that I would not be happy until the book was successful. Working from the idea that 'we create our reality with our beliefs' this clearly meant that there was no way I was going to be happy in the present moment. I was living in a rejection of my Now, my present state of being, and in an attachment to a future that I was trying to predefine. The sudden realization was that 'the future' never arrives. It is a symbol of our separation from our Now. The future is that which is always beyond our Now. This isn't some play on words. To understand it you have to let go of the idea of objective linear time and view 'the future' as a symbol of what is currently beyond our present state of being.

My focus on creating a future that would apparently make me happy was in total disregard for my Self, my being, in the present. I was abandoning my present reality Self to the idea of a future Self. I knew I would be happy later - but later kept on not arriving. The belief that my joy was for the future and not for the Now was an acute symbol of my separation from my power to choose joy. Just a few months before in The Messiah Seed I had written "Joy is not for the future; joy is for now." It just took me a while to fully realize what those words meant and see how I was the creator of the proverbial dangling carrot that I had grown so tired of grasping for.

Looking back at the last year, when I wrote and self-published my book, I can see how that perceived point of future happiness was moving closer and closer to my present. However the last piece of the jigsaw simply would not fit into place, no matter how hard I tried. Heaps of praise flooded in about the sample Messiah Seeds that were released, but the book was sadly not selling. People would take time and effort to write to me about how much they loved the Messiah Seeds and how they were sharing them with others. I was moved by this generous feedback but it just made it even more inexplicable that the book was not selling. Then, within a few days of each other, I heard back from the first two publishers I had submitted to. Both said how much they loved and were impressed by the book, how it should be published, just not by them! I simply could not understand the dichotomy between what people were saying and what was happening. I could not make sense of it and that popular chant of 'Why isn't the Universe supporting me?' played through my head on a daily basis.

MY VOICE IN LIMITLESSNESS

In retrospect those publishers did me a big favor because they put me in touch with the pain I was carrying over the lack of book sales but was not acknowledging due to a 'got to keep positive' attitude. The letting in and feeling of that pain is what has led to my stepping into the power to choose joy in the Now. Part 2 of this article was seeded by that realization written down as I was realizing it, and as I have refined my realization so I have refined the text. This has been true of all my writing, especially The Messiah Seed. It is not that I have discovered certain truths in myself and have then wrote them down, it is that through my writing (the manifestation of my evolving connection with my Wider Self) I have recorded my personal moments of realization as they were happening. I then take these personal transcripts, and in co-creation with my Wider Self, I transform the writing into a message that speaks in a universal voice. This has now developed to a point where I now tend to write my own personal epiphanies directly in this voice.

The next section of this article is written from the voice of my wider Self, the voice through which I received/created The Messiah Seed. Whether or not this is seen as being 'channeled' depends on your own definition of that term. My voice in this state refers to itself in the plural, so I sometimes call it the 'We of Me'; an expression of group consciousness. It is, I believe, my state of being outside of this reality in limitlessness. Years ago, when I first started tapping into it, it felt external. I was not ready to own it as being 'of me'. Since then the gap between the 'I of Me' and the 'We of Me' has faded. This has grown out of both my personal evolution and the evolution of my ability to be, in this reality, the 'We of Me'. I have little idea of how that all sounds to others. I simply ask that you read the text and discern for your Self whether it is as personally meaningful for you as it has been for me.

I passionately believe that we all contain such a voice; a manifestation of our connection to limitlessness. In the beginning the seed of this inner voice felt as no more than my growing sense of intuition. It is only through my putting energy into developing this inner sense that it has become so clear to me. I do not hear it audibly. I do not transcribe it like dictation. It is my inner voice from a place in my being that is seemingly outside of this reality. For me it feels like bringing a taste of Heaven to Earth, a grounding of our collective Godhood. Just as our eyes tell us of color and our touch tells us of texture, so our inner voice tells us of 'knowings'. Another word for this is Gnosis - intuitive knowledge of spiritual truths. So now I hand you over to my adaptation of the 'We of Me' talking to the 'I of Me' about the power to choose joy.

PART 2

STAND IN YOUR POWER

To come to your power to choose joy is to realize that you are the determinant of your being. Taking ownership of your state of being is coming to stand in your own power. This is, of course, referring to inner power; external power being an illusion. To come to stand in your power is to take back, into your Self, any power that you have externalized. Your innate power is not a reward to be earned; to experience it you simply need to stop giving it away through limited beliefs about who and what you are.

When you do not stand in your power, that part which you are denying is projected outwards and is then perceived as being external. This is what creates the illusion that there are forces outside of your Self which have the power to control your choices (your choices being the mechanism through which you shape your reality). To see your Self as not being accountable for your state of being is to live within a belief in external forces that have control over you. This can be manifest in such forms as a controlling person, governmental laws, or a lack of abundance; basically symbols of perceived limitation. This births the ability to blame. To blame is an attempt to hold this externalized aspect of your power responsible for your state of being, instead of being fully responsible for your Self. Re-assimilating this externalized power is a part of the journey to being All That You Are. To take back that power is to come to the realization that all power over your being is yours alone. It is to realize, within your Self, the absolute power of choice over your being.

To experience your power of choice is to realize that you are the one that possesses the power to choose joy for your Self. When you realize joy as being a choice you will realize that all states, including suffering, must equally be a choice. Through this you will see that to take responsibility for your own suffering is to empower your Self to be able to choose joy. A part of the journey to joy is therefore to take ownership and responsibility for your own suffering. To do this release all sense of 'blaming others'. Understand that this will be a gradually unfolding process.

RELEASING THE IDEA OF MISTAKES

With the taking of responsibility for your suffering comes the realization that it is not a mistake to suffer. This does not mean that you 'like' suffering. It is the realization that not only did you not do anything 'wrong' to suffer, but that you chose your suffering with a purpose. This is the release of the idea that you can make mistakes. The reason we use the word 'mistake' is that though you may have released the idea that you did not do anything 'morally wrong', many of you still feel that if you are suffering then you must have made mistakes in your choices. The idea being that a mistake must have been made that has caused the state of suffering. This allows for an interesting example of the rippling effect of beliefs.

If you believe that to suffer is a mistake then you believe in the existence of mistakes. If you believe in mistakes then you live in a world where your power of choice, instead of being a moment of empowerment, is a moment when you can fall. This is to live in a reality where there is jeopardy, and that is to live in a world where you do not feel safe. To not feel safe is to be living in fear. To live in fear is to be suffering. The conclusion being that if you judge suffering to be a mistake then you will live within that judgment and that is to be in suffering. That which you judge, you end up holding to you. There is no concept of karma here, simply the living out of your beliefs. Karma simply means 'your action'; meaning how you choose shapes your future.

To live in joy, accept that suffering is not a mistake. This is the letting go of the cross of suffering and it is a cross that humanity has been carrying for a long, long time. To see suffering as a mistake is to dis-acknowledge states of being that you chose, with infinite wisdom, to be. Realize that you do not need to see suffering as a mistake in order to stop choosing it. You do not need to 'reject' that which you no longer wish to choose. Simply stop choosing it. The suggestion being, that only when you stop judging suffering to be a mistake, can you finally release it from your life (more on this later).

Your power to choose joy is the power of choice. It is your free will, the point from which you create your reality. Realize the ways in which you may fear the full realization that you create your own reality. Fear of this realization is why many give away their power of choice. Though it may seem strange, the fundamental fear in your reality is the fear of your own power; and that is the realization that you are limitless. You fear the realization of Self as God.

YOU ARE GOD

You will experience joy when you free your Self from fear of your power, fear of your limitlessness. Realize the perspective from which it can be said that all fear is fear of your power. Acknowledge that there is level at which you are terrified of the complete realization that you are the architect of your being. It is the ultimate responsibility to your Self. Many feel naked when stripped of the ability to blame, for they have come to partially define themselves through it. Beyond your fear is you in limitlessness. Without fear you are free to act, free to choose, free to create. Without fear you are free. It is to realize the limitlessness of your being. It is to step into your Godhood. It is to internalize and be the God that you have, predominantly through organized religion, externalized. God is neither external nor internal. God is everything, everywhere. God is holographic, with each aspect containing a complete imprint of the whole. God is All That Is.

If you went out and asked people, “Who do you think has the power to bestow joy and suffering on a person?” the most common answer you would receive is God. The 'father' God of organized religion has become a symbol of how many have externalized their power. This has become so acute that some have rejected any notion of their divinity, instead choosing to believe of themselves as an accident of atoms that perishes at death. The middle ground being trodden by many at this time is the reclamation of All as God, divinity expressed from within. Some people fear that to realize God as being internal would somehow be the loss of God when, in actuality, it is the discovery of God. There is a God and you are a living self-determining expression of it.

To exercise the power to choose joy you must come to know that it is you that possesses that power. You must come to view your Self as being that which has the power to, with your free will, manifest joy in your life. This comes through both coming to not live in fear and coming to love your Self. Coming to love your Self is coming to not live in fear. You are love and the only thing that separates you from the experience of your Self as pure love is both your fear of your Self, and your attachment to the idea of exactly what love is. Love is limitlessness; the desire for all beings, including your Self, to experience complete freedom to be whatever they choose to be . To realize your Self as being an unlimited self-determining expression of God is to realize within your being the power to choose joy.

THE CHOICE FOR JOY

Coming to choose joy for your Self is an ever unfolding process of coming to release your being further and further into limitlessness. Bringing joy into your life is like cultivating flowers in a garden. See the allowance of time in this idea. Realize the ways in which you can give joy to your Self. Seriously think about it. Ask your Self, “What can I do that will bring joy into my life?” This is, surprisingly, a question that people rarely ask themselves. Choose one of your answers and give it your energy. Know it as a seed and, as you nourish it, so it will come to blossom into joy; a flower that will then offer many more seeds, each of which carries the potential for the continual blossoming of your joy. Look at yesterday and see where you sowed seeds of joy and where you merely sowed seeds to 'not suffer'. Realize joy to be far more than 'not suffering'. Don't seek to 'not suffer'; seek to be joyful.

Everyday you have the choice to give joy to your Self and yet you rarely do. Somehow, in the moment, other things seem more important. You want a field of sun flowers to miraculously appear, but you will not plant seeds by giving your Self moments devoted to your joy. Many have forgotten how to play . Without play all the money in the world will not bring you joy. You think to your Self that you will learn to play when you have the money to do it with. That is simply to live in delay; that is to delay your abundance. It is to give away your power to the idea of money. Learn to play without money, and money will come to you because it wants to be played with!

JOY AND MONEY

Now let us talk of joy and money, two things you love to mentally connect. Many of you are so caught up in your own suffering, or the suffering of others, that you make no space-time for play. You do not want to hear that love and joy are all around you. You say to the Universe, “Pay my bills first and then I will look for love and joy.” You believe that to refuse to be joyful before the Universe gives you its riches will somehow push the Universe into giving you what you want. You fear that if you have too much fun when you are poor then the Universe will say “See you didn't need any money after all!” The Universe does not decide these things, you do . Money is not a reward bestowed by some external entity. The power for the choice for money is yours just as the choice for joy is yours.

As long as you believe that money will make you happy, as long as you make money the determinant of your happiness, then you will not find either happiness or 'enough' money. There are many who you may perceive of as being rich, who are miserable in their chase to have even more money. They never feel that what they have is enough. The feeling of having 'enough' is feeling a state of completeness in your Self. No external condition can give this to you. When you come to joy inside of your Self then money will come to you as your personal symbol of that joy. As long as you believe that what separates you from happiness is money then money will separate you from your happiness. And that is to say you will come to live in the experience of your belief until such a time as you change that belief. Reality is a mirror of your beliefs. A feeling of lack will only ever draw lack to you.

Joy is something that people tend to think will come to them through some external force, instead of believing that it is something they can create from within . There is no external force that can thrust joy upon you in this way; that would be an invalidation of free will. The power, the choice, for your joy is within you. To live in joy you must give joy to your Self. To do this you must stand in your power such as to realize that it is within your power to do this. To aid you in this, let us look more at the idea of how judgment of suffering can separate you from your power.

JUDGMENT OF SUFFERING

To not see being in suffering as a mistake requires extreme non-judgmentalism of your state of being . You tend to label suffering as being 'a problem'. You see it as something that must be fixed. This is in essence a belief that you are damaged. In doing this, of all the seeds around you, you effectively choose the ugliest looking one and give it all your energy. You try to make what is (your suffering), come to not be ; instead of making what is not (your joy), come to be . This is fed from your judgment of your suffering. Judgment acts as an energy that binds you to your suffering in order to resolve the Self-limitation that it represents.

If you truly want to let go of the concept of right and wrong then you cannot believe that it is wrong to suffer. Again, we are talking beyond 'morally wrong'. We are talking of the idea that whatever choices you made, that you perceive as having led to your suffering, were not mistakes. It is to realize that if you are suffering then that is the perfect state for you to further unfold your limitlessness. If you want to not suffer then let go of the belief that your suffering is in some way defective. If you feel that you are suffering then it is a part of you, and there is nothing either wrong or defective about you! If you are suffering, and you judge your suffering as being a mistake, then you are not loving your expression of your Self, your chosen state of being.

Realize that to judge is not 'wrong'; it is however an attempt to limit 'being'. To transform/evolve being you must allow it. Judgment is the opposite of allowance; and that is often fed from an idea of superiority of being. Hierarchy does not exist in the realization of all as One, all as God. A judgment is a belief and your reality is a mirror of your beliefs, a mirror that you live within. What you judge is held to you. What you allow flows unimpeded.

THE CHOICE TO SUFFER

To say “If you are suffering then you are choosing it” is a hard statement we agree, but we do not wish to dress up or disguise what we are saying. Many even view this statement as being a judgment in itself. It is only so if you apply blame to it by judging suffering to be a mistake. When seen from limitlessness, a place of universal love, what it is really saying is “Just as you have the power to choose suffering, so you have the power to end your suffering and choose joy instead.” It says that the power is with you ; a statement of pure love and empowerment.

The power of this statement is reflected in how easily it can be misconstrued. For our purposes we are saying it to you, with love, to empower you to choose joy. If you were not ready to hear it then you would not be reading this article. Know that we are solely asking you to apply it to your Self if you so wish. To imagine saying it to a person who is starving or living in war is a means to dismiss looking at it in your Self. When you can hear the phrase, “If you are suffering then you are choosing it” as purely a statement of empowerment to choose joy then you will have overcome your judgment of suffering. Use the phrase as a tool to reveal your judgments of your own being .

SUMMATION

Though this article has focused on the power to choose joy and to some extent money, it is really about getting you in contact with your power to choose/create your reality as a whole; the primary suggestion being, to take complete responsibility for your state of being, even if that includes past or present suffering. The only real way to see how this sense of self-responsibility and the power to choose are connected is in the practice of living it. To come to experience, in the moment, every aspect of your life as being something that you are choosing, though tough at times, is a corner stone of empowerment. It is to let go of any sense of being a victim. You are not a victim. You are God. You have the power to bestow joy upon your Self.

THE MESSIAH SEED

Though the text presented here is but one aspect of The Messiah Seed, we have weaved through it many reflections of the whole, such that you may experience a flavor of the entire text, both as it has been written and as it is yet to come in future Volumes. We hope that you have enjoyed these words, and we encourage you to find, use, and validate for your Self your own inner voice. It is a sense through which you can empower your Self to create the reality that you desire.

Whether or not you wish to buy the book is naturally a choice for you to make for your Self. Know that money is a symbol of your energy. Where you put it is your choice, and where you put it will grow. So to conclude we simply say, feed what you love with your energy, feed that which brings you joy. How you spend your energy is a part of your power to choose joy for your Self and others. To live in joy choose joy for your Self.

---

Copyright 2004, Story Waters. This information may be freely disseminated, in whole or in part, provided there is no charge for the information and this notice is attached. This document is written by Story Waters, author of 'The Messiah Seed'. For more information and sample Messiah Seeds please visit <http://www.limitlessness.com/> Sign up for the newsletter and receive a Messiah Seed on the 1st of every month!

---

Edited by: StoryWaters at: 5/21/04 5:30 am

Jones Kelly
Posts: 100
(5/20/04 1:51 pm)
Reply

 Re: The Power to Choose Joy

---

Quote:

---

Realize that to judge is not 'wrong'; it is however an attempt to limit 'being'. To transform/evolve being you must allow it. Judgment is the opposite of allowance; and that is often fed from an idea of superiority of being. Hierarchy does not exist in the realization of all as One, all as God. A judgment is a belief and your reality is a mirror of your beliefs, a mirror that you live within. What you judge is held to you. What you allow flows unimpeded.

---

Everything you have written uses judgement. Allowance is a judgement that contrasts, and in itself is a false notion. It pretends that allowance is not-judgment. In fact, it inherently requires judgement.

Similarly, joy comes from judgement. To place great value on joy means little value is placed on joylessness. To place great/little value on not-judgment or judgement is irrational.

bikkie
Registered User
Posts: 5
(5/20/04 2:55 pm)
Reply

 Re: The Power to Choose Joy

---

My oh my Story . Im quite suprised to see you here.
Its good to see you again

I havent read your book ( im not sure if anyone at omnispirt has either )but everything you've mentioned here resonates quite nicely as usuall.
This forum is not quite as open as the one you created before.But who cares anyway,just dont expect any friendly replies heh.

Hope your doing well

Bikkie aka Kim

StoryWaters

Registered User

Posts: 1

(5/20/04 4:22 pm)

Reply

 Re: The Power to Choose Joy

---

Hi Jones Kelly,

thanks for your response. You seem to have gone into quite a mental extrapolation which isn't the level the article was written on.

Viewed from a purely from a level of mind, words in themselves are judgment. To pick one word over another is a judgment. So anything written is written as judgment, there is no escaping that, on a mental level.

However the idea I am presenting in the article is not mental alone. The Messiah Seed talks a lot about unifying the mind, body and spirit into one sense at which the experience of Self as being 'That Which Chooses' is experienced.

Any choice that is made from the Western mind is generally from a point of polarity. One thing is seen as being either better or worse than another and from that basis a choice/judgment is made. What I am positing is to release that idea of better and worse and act from a unified feeling that encompasses all levels of sense, the mind, heart and gut if you like. To live in the flow of your own life without polarized mental judgment. That is what I mean by allowance.

Namaste,
Story

p.s. Hi Bikkie. Good to see you again!

Jones Kelly

Posts: 102

(5/20/04 9:23 pm)

Reply

 Re: The Power to Choose Joy

---

Story,

Quote:

---

thanks for your response. You seem to have gone into quite a mental extrapolation which isn't the level the article was written on.

---

I prefer to think when reading. This helps me to discern the worth of what is written.

Quote:

---

Viewed from a purely from a level of mind, words in themselves are judgment. To pick one word over another is a judgment. So anything written is written as judgment, there is no escaping that, on a mental level.

---

Communication seems to use concepts to create a perspective of reality. If you create a mental level, a gut level, an emotional level, a spiritual level, then there is no escaping that reality.

To know Ultimate Reality means investigating what is creating that perspective. This requires judgement.

Quote:

---

However the idea I am presenting in the article is not mental alone. The Messiah Seed talks a lot about unifying the mind, body and spirit into one sense at which the experience of Self as being 'That Which Chooses' is experienced.

---

It seems that you are experiencing a perspective of reality that places a self with free will at the core. This is highly delusional.

Quote:

---

Any choice that is made from the Western mind is generally from a point of polarity.

---

I'd delete "Western": mind is dualistic.

Quote:

---

One thing is seen as being either better or worse than another and from that basis a choice/judgment is made.

---

Judgement or dualistic thinking isn't just good/bad. For practical purposes, humans do categorise things as good/bad for survival. Existence of a thing and a perspective arise together: but there need not be good/bad.

E.g. Higher portion of many experiences is coloured blue. [sky, neither good nor bad]

Quote:

---

What I am positing is to release that idea of better and worse and act from a unified feeling that encompasses all levels of sense, the mind, heart and gut if you like.

---

Do you have a unified feeling that your experience of the everyday, physical 3D world is "all good"? Or are you without emotion, so that it is neither "better or worse"?

Quote:

---

To live in the flow of your own life without polarized mental judgment. That is what I mean by allowance.

---

Do you find it easy to live in the flow of your own life when communicating about the Messiah Seed resorts to polarised mental judgement?

StoryWaters
Registered User
Posts: 2
(5/21/04 3:00 am)
Reply

 Re: The Power to Choose Joy

---

"Feel what you know. Do not live in a mind of rules and logic. Logic is thought without feeling and can only reinterpret what you already know. Logic is a wonderful tool, but in using it, understand that without inspiration it is a vehicle without fuel. The mind, integrated with feeling, is wisdom. Wisdom is to feel knowing and to know feeling." - quote from Messiah Seed 55

Hywel

Registered User

Posts: 63

(5/21/04 6:52 am)

Reply

 Re: The Power to Choose Joy

---

You seem to flip between this "I of Me" and "We of Me" at random/ convenience, while trying to say something about both. This makes it pretty confusing for the reader trying to tell what it is that you are saying. The flipping itself seems confusing too, since "I of Me" is part of the "We of Me", so they aren't mutually exclusive.

Joy and Suffering

You seem to be saying that joy and suffering are opposites. All things exist by contrast with what they are not (A=A), but more specifically, opposites only exist by contrast with their opposite.

As an example, consider "night" and "day". If it was never night on planet earth, obviously the term "night" wouldn't exist (not meaning anything). But also, the term "day" would cease to mean anything, there would just be "how it is".

Similarly, if a person never experienced "suffering", the term "joy" would cease to have any meaning, there would just be "how things are".

Past, Present and Future

Quote:

---

The sudden realization was that 'the future' never arrives. It is a symbol of our separation from our Now. The future is that which is always beyond our Now. This isn't some play on words. To understand it you have to let go of the idea of objective linear time and view 'the future' as a symbol of what is currently beyond our present state of being.

---

You should mention that the past is also only a "symbol".

Free Will

Quote:

---

There is no external force that can thrust joy upon you in this way; that would be an invalidation of free will.

---

This is clearly written from the "I of Me" point of view, as the "Wider Self":

1. Has nothing external to it.
2. Cannot experience joy.

You seem to be saying that for any external force to thrust things upon us would be an invalidation of free will (which i quite agree with). But clearly, there are plenty of external forces which thrust things upon us all the time. Being run over by a bus would be an example of this. Perhaps you should explain why this is not an invalidation of free will.

Also, in order for free will to exist, you would have to choose who you are (i.e. you would have to choose the chooser). You would therefore have to decide every aspect of your life that has made you who you are. This would include your sex, parents, home town, friends, and every experience you have ever had. Indeed, you would need to have chosen to exist in the first place.

Finally, in order for free will to exist, you would need, prior to making any decision, to "decide to decide", and prior to that, you would have needed to "decide to decide to decide" etc.

Quote:

---

Feel what you know. Do not live in a mind of rules and logic. Logic is thought without feeling and can only reinterpret what you already know. Logic is a wonderful tool, but in using it, understand that without inspiration it is a vehicle without fuel. The mind, integrated with feeling, is wisdom. Wisdom is to feel knowing and to know feeling.

---

I dont think JonesKelly said anything about not using inspiration.

Hywel

StoryWaters
Registered User
Posts: 2
(5/21/04 10:57 am)
Reply

 Re: The Power to Choose Joy

---

Hi Hywel,

thanks for your insightful remarks. I do indeed think the past just like the future is a symbol. For me the transcension of polarity is the realization of limitlessness. From that level I do indeed believe that if we are hit by a bus it is a manifestation of a choice, but that choice could be the choice not to exercise our right of choice and to be at the mercy of outside forces. That's why I talk so much of coming to realize the Self as being 'that which chooses'.

I love the idea of the choice to choose spiraling backwards with seemingly no chance of a beginning. How we first come to choose choice is beyond me. Here's a quote that may be of some relevance:

"Know that this simply means that you must first come to understand the definition of your Self, before you can then let go of that definition. Self-definition is a stepping stone to no definition. Limitlessness is simultaneously a state of no definition, a state of ever changing definition, and an expression of the equality of all definition. It is the no choice that is inherent in the realization of all choice." – from Messiah Seed 64

Thanks for stimulating some thought!

Namaste,
Story

Jones Kelly
Posts: 103
(5/21/04 7:56 pm)
Reply

 Re: The Power to Choose Joy

---

StoryWaters,

Quote:

---

"Know that this simply means that you must first come to understand the definition of your Self, before you can then let go of that definition. Self-definition is a stepping stone to no definition. Limitlessness is simultaneously a state of no definition, a state of ever changing definition, and an expression of the equality of all definition. It is the no choice that is inherent in the realization of all choice." – from Messiah Seed 64

---

This is extremely plausible. I have three questions.

1. While i agree that ultimately there is no Self, no choice, no free will, no joy, no anything at all, i disagree with your approach of not-judging.

Are you inferring that investigating how judgment limits being is itself limiting, or that only this kind of judgment is necessary to understand the limitless?

2. Do you think ego is cosily nesting in this bliss, quiet and happy? If not, what is that sense of satisfaction?

3. What if the Self Which Chooses chose an uncontrollable psychotic episode to occur in one's mind? For instance, you or i could be assessed insane by a board of psychiatrists, involuntarily confined to a psychiatric ward, stuffed with drugs, and caused to lack rational awareness? It is entirely possible.

StoryWaters
Registered User
Posts: 3
(5/22/04 2:19 am)
Reply

 Re: The Power to Choose Joy

---

Hi again,

>1) Are you inferring that investigating how judgment limits being is itself limiting, or that only this kind of judgment is necessary to understand the limitless?

I am saying that if you judge you will live in that judgment and draw the object of it to you. If that is something you want then judge away, if it isn't something you want then stop judging to release it from your state of being. The choice lies with the Self. I don't advocate 'not judging'. I advocate living in allowance of all being.

>2. Do you think ego is cosily nesting in this bliss, quiet and happy? If not, what is that sense of satisfaction?

I believe we are spiritual beings in a human manifestation and that outside of this reality we exist in a state of limitlessness and we can tap into that state, and for me that is what has brought me the greatest feeling of joy. And I don't mean going 'out there', I mean grounding that state of freedom here on Earth.

>3. What if the Self Which Chooses chose an uncontrollable psychotic episode to occur in one's mind? For instance, you or i could be assessed insane by a board of psychiatrists, involuntarily confined to a psychiatric ward, stuffed with drugs, and caused to lack rational awareness? It is entirely possible.

I believe everything to be a choice. Meaning there is no thing that can happen to you that you are not ON SOME LEVEL agreeing to. That level may however be coming from outside of your conscious Self. I therefore in my writing encourage people to expand their consciousness of their state of being (through the realization that they are choosing it) as I believe that the best way to change an aspect of our reality that we consciously do not like is to reach the state of consciousness where we realize why we are choosing it.

Hope that clarifies :-)

Namaste,
Story

Jones Kelly
Posts: 104
(5/22/04 4:49 pm)
Reply

 Re: The Power to Choose Joy

---

Quote:

---

SW: I am saying that if you judge you will live in that judgment and draw the object of it to you. If that is something you want then judge away, if it isn't something you want then stop judging to release it from your state of being. The choice lies with the Self. I don't advocate 'not judging'. I advocate living in allowance of all being.

---

You may find the following thoughts have resonance with your philosophy. Bear with me, each sentence is a step towards understanding the true nature of limitlessness.

A thought arises, "All things are limited, and fall short of limitlessness."

Another thought arises, "Then what causes things?" and is followed with: "Other things cause things."

Again, a new thought arises, "All things are part of a limitless causal continuum, in which no things innately exist."

Then, the thought occurs that "Thoughts too are caused and do not innately exist - so what is causing thoughts?"

Finally, a conclusive thought: "Nothing knowable could cause thoughts/ experience, since it too would be caused." So, the experience of limitlessness is also limited, falling short of limitlessness.

By using reasoning in this way, it is obvious that reason itself can never cause limitlessness. Reasoning only allows one to understand its true nature, comparing it to limitedness. To imagine limitlessness is captured within a sense of self, an experience of bliss, a majestic force, etc. is to limit the limitlessness..

Quote:

---

SW: I believe we are spiritual beings in a human manifestation and that outside of this reality we exist in a state of limitlessness and we can tap into that state, and for me that is what has brought me the greatest feeling of joy. And I don't mean going 'out there', I mean grounding that state of freedom here on Earth.

---

So, can you see that belief in "existence in limitlessness" is false? Limitlessness can have no form, no shape, no nature, and is like nothing known or knowable. Even if "limitlessness" were to be experienced, it would still be part of this "construction of reality".

Since everything that is knowable has some kind of form, and therefore exists, then the unknowable has no form, and actually has no existence. That is, reality is what is experienced - there is no "out there".

Quote:

---

Kelly: What if the Self Which Chooses chose an uncontrollable psychotic episode to occur in one's mind? For instance, you or i could be assessed insane by a board of psychiatrists, involuntarily confined to a psychiatric ward, stuffed with drugs, and caused to lack rational awareness? It is entirely possible.

SW: I believe everything to be a choice. Meaning there is no thing that can happen to you that you are not ON SOME LEVEL agreeing to. That level may however be coming from outside of your conscious Self. I therefore in my writing encourage people to expand their consciousness of their state of being (through the realization that they are choosing it) as I believe that the best way to change an aspect of our reality that we consciously do not like is to reach the state of consciousness where we realize why we are choosing it.

---

If the level of choice is outside consciousness, how do you know that level of choice exists?

Is it not better to understand that no choice exists, that everything is caused by what is outside the construction of consciousness? This is not fatalistic, by the way. Rather, one becomes very aware that every experience/thought/action is caused, and all have far-reaching effects.

Reasoning applied to delusions of "like and dislike" is a useful tool. Reason and logic aren't bad, they're useful illusions that help to understand reality.

StoryWaters

Registered User

Posts: 4

(5/22/04 5:55 pm)

Reply

 Re: The Power to Choose Joy

---

Thanks for making some interesting points.

To me it is neither. Not 'no choice' and not 'choice. Everything is a paradox in this reality. There is a level of realization that we have total choice and a level of realization of no choice. Limitlessness is to see through all these paradoxes with either end of all polarities as essentially being the same. At this point all duality collapses and that is what I call limitlessness. It is the point of seeing all as perfection and all as one which is a paradox in itself when put into words as there is just the unity; there is no self and other to perceive, there is no perception, there is just isness. In that state this reality does indeed perceptually cease to exist.

Well thats my spiritual experience of it anyway :-)

|                                                                                                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2639(5/23/04 2:43 am)Reply                                                                                    |  --- <hr/> I've had it up to here with "isness"! You can take your "isness" and $%@#&amp;&amp;&amp;77^^5#@#@!()&amp;                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| StoryWatersRegistered UserPosts: 5(5/23/04 2:50 am)Reply                                                                                   |  Re: --- <hr/> LOL, I've enjoyed talking here, but you'll forgive me if I take that post as an opportunity to bow out gracefully :-) Thanks for sharing everyone, Namaste,Story                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 1706(5/23/04 11:02 am)Reply                                                                                        |  Choosing Joy <hr/> Actually, I once wanted to choose Joy, but Samantha wouldn't have a bar of it :) Dan Rowden                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| MKFaiziRegistered UserPosts: 1175(5/23/04 2:24 pm)Reply  |  Re: Choosing Joy -- URGENT <hr/> Damned jealous bitches. I mean, what's a dick among friends? I believe in share and share alike. That's the Christian way, I reckon. Hell, I might love Joe, too, given the opportunity. WAKE UP!! Time's a wastin.' Screw these categories and separations into THINKER's INN and GENIUS. We may all hate each other -- rightfully so -- but I think it is time to hammer out some kind of concensus. Houston, we have a problem. Faizi |

MKFaizi
Registered User
Posts: 1176
(5/23/04 2:32 pm)
Reply

 Re: Choosing Joy -- URGENT

---

MAYDAY!! MAYDAY!!

WolfsonJakk
Posts: 1585
(5/24/04 1:52 am)
Reply

 Re: Choosing Joy -- URGENT

---

I don't hate you, Marsha. Happy, happy, joy, joy. We can dance in the summer fields, write love poems to each other in French, cross arms whilst eating passion fruit, all because we choose joy, together. All you have to do is keep one eye closed.

Tharan

MKFaizi
Registered User
Posts: 1179
(5/24/04 11:34 am)
Reply

 Re: Choosing Joy -- URGENT

---

I reckon so, Tharan. Seems to be a lot of nodding out in the poppy fields around here, not to mention tiptoeing through the tulips and everything.

Brings to mind two of my favorite songs -- "I love the flower girl" and "Good morning, starshine. The world says 'hello'" and so forth.

Here I am all in a tizz and everyone else is sleeping.

Well, I tried. Even writing a novel or whatever it is -- is more interesting than this.

The only thing I hate about writing a book is the complete isolation; no immediate feedback.

See ya'll.

Faizi

|                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| WolfsonJakk Posts: 1589 (5/27/04 4:34 am) Reply                   |  Re: Choosing Joy -- URGENT <hr/> Hey, I am writing a novel too! I am not having a problem with the feedback issue. I have the arc of the story already set. The real work is accurately portraying the different time frames (people, places, and things) of the story. Medieval Japan has required the most historical reading, something I am just about now finished with after a year. Tharan |
| suergaz Registered User Posts: 2647 (5/27/04 10:08 am) Reply |  ----- <hr/> You're saying you don't always cross arms while eating passionfruit?!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

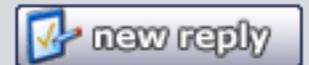

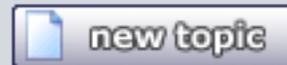

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The Problem of Mr Palomar

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                          | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Jones KellyPosts: 61(5/8/04 6:10 pm)Reply |  The Problem of Mr Palomar <hr/> What did Mr Palomar do wrong? After a series of intellectual misadventures not worth recalling, Mr. Palomar has decided that his chief activity will be looking at things from the outside. A bit nearsighted, absent-minded, introverted, he does not seem to belong temperamentally to that human type generally called an observer. And yet it has always happened that certain things--a stone wall, a seashell, a leaf, a teapot--present themselves to him as if asking him for minute and prolonged attention: he starts observing them almost unawares, and his gaze begins to run over all the details and is then unable to detach itself. Mr. Palomar has decided that from now on he will redouble his attention: first, by not allowing these summons to escape him as they arrive from things; second, by attributing to the observer's operation the importance it deserves. At this point he faces his first critical moment: sure that from now on the world will reveal to him an infinite wealth of things, Mr. Palomar tries staring at everything that comes within eyeshot; he feels no pleasure, and he stops. A second phase follows, in which he is convinced that only some things are to be looked at, others not, and he must go and seek the right ones. To do this, he has to face each time problems of selection, exclusion, hierarchies of preference; he soon realizes he is spoiling everything, as always when he involves his own ego and all the problems he has with his own ego. |

But how can you look at something and set your own ego aside? Whose eyes are doing the looking? As a rule, you think of the ego as one who is peering out of your own eyes as if leaning on a window sill, looking at the world stretching out before him in all its immensity. So, then: a window looks out on the world. The world is out there; and in here, what do we have? The world still--what else could there be? With a little effort of concentration, Mr. Palomar manages to shift the world from in front of him and set it on the sill, looking out. Now, beyond the windows, what do we have? The world is also there, and for the occasion has been split into a looking world and a world looked at. And what about him, also known as "I," namely Mr. Palomar? Is he not a piece of the world that is looking at another piece of the world? Or else, given that there is world that side of the window and world this side, perhaps the "I," the ego, is simply the window through which the world looks at the world. To look at itself the world needs the eyes (and the eyeglasses) of Mr. Palomar.

So, from now on Mr. Palomar will look at things from outside and not from inside. But this is not enough: he will look at them with a gaze that comes from outside, not inside, himself. He tries to perform the experiment at once: now it is not he who is looking; it is the world of outside that is looking outside. Having established this, he casts his gaze around, expecting a general transfiguration. No such thing. The usual quotidian grayness surrounds him. Everything has to be rethought from the beginning. Having the outside look outside is not enough: the trajectory must start from the looked-at thing, linking it with the thing that looks.

From the mute distance of things a sign must come, a summons, a wink: one thing detaches itself from the other things with the intention of signifying something . . . what? Itself, a thing is happy to be looked at by other things only when it is convinced that it signifies itself and nothing else, amid things that signify themselves and nothing else.

Opportunities of this kind are not frequent, to be sure; but sooner or later they will have to arise: it is enough to wait for one of those lucky coincidences to occur when the world wants to look and be looked at in the same instant and Mr. Palomar happens to be going by. Or, rather, Mr. Palomar does not even have to wait, because these things happen only when you are not awaiting them.

The World Looks at the World Italo Calvino, tr. William Weaver (?)

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

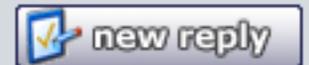

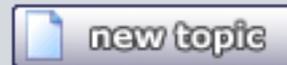

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The pursuit of spirituality

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| SILVER5HADOW  Registered UserPosts: 6(3/15/04 1:35 am)Reply  | The pursuit of spirituality <hr/> I have often wondered why we are so interested in understanding ourselves, 'spiritually' speaking and scientifically also. The odd thing is that in recent years I am starting to sense a need for science to meld with spirituality which in my opinion will lead to the theory of everything. Personally speaking my own pursuit (and yes I do have SPD) has brought me very close to very profound physics for which there is little or no information. For example I have seen evidence of the way I plough the field of time often leaving behind ditches which are often followed by others 'in time'. I have noticed how being 'switched on' draws other souls so that there is a oneness 'out of time', I have seen the light of enlightenment and seen time bend during these moments, and also I have been the victim of many physic attack, again an area in which scientific evidence is thin. The above is just a fraction of the whole story called my life and believe it or not I've also stopped time too, and seen physical evidence of it happening. However I'm beginning to notice that in addition to fighting off the dominating spirits that circumnavigate the key cardinal points, but also that I am coming across more and more paradoxes as I progress along the path. My concern in these matters is that I am unprepared in dealing with the I in me and the I in all. In other words there are moments when I am at one with all and seeking to further all, but the paradox is often that in furthering the all I need to further the one, ie me. And so I experience a metaphysical brick wall in which I know I am all but being a little selfish I want to further the one before the all. Is this | wrong? Being honest I'm not very happy at the moment hence my desire to concentrate more on myself rather than the all, and yet saying that my spiritual awareness is very very high and I have been privy to many divine secrets. Shouldn't this mean I'm happy? I'm happy in a way as I know I'm better prepared to not make the universal mistakes of the past (and believe me there are some huge ones, and it only take a few to be sure it doesn't happen again), in many ways I have been tempted to throw in the towel many times. Maybe I'm thinking to linearly, as if I think about it I know some great work has been done in getting back our lost divinity. And trust me when I say for eons everything good, pure and divine has had mud thrown at it for the sole purpose of causing and consequently feeding on the pain, chaos and hurt caused, but that's another matter.

Any comments anyone as I think I need some solid insight and advice here. There is one good thing that's come out of this lifetime though and that is when I am interacting with someone telepathically (although I'm starting to think I might be bi-locating) whereas in previous lifetimes I would suspect something untoward of the individual, I now know that most of the time any fear is the result of external interference again seeking to cause duress and harm, or finding oneself in a new situation (which can often manifest as the feeling of fear).

Silvershadow

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 99
(3/15/04 10:03 am)
Reply

Re: The pursuit of spirituality

---

Do you believe God exists as light, which would suggest transcendentalism? Or am I way off your subject?

SILVER5HADOW
Registered User
Posts: 7
(3/15/04 10:14 am)
Reply

Re: The pursuit of spirituality

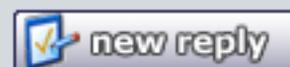

---

I'm too close to be able to say.

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 100(3/15/04 10:19 am)Reply                                                                                                                                                                  | Re: The pursuit of spirituality <hr/> Unless you have some transformed super brain how do you hold knowledge of the infinite? Do you know anything about computer graphics?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| 5ILVER5HADOW Registered UserPosts: 8(3/15/04 11:05 am)Reply  | Re: The pursuit of spirituality <hr/> Computer graphics. Yes of course I do, why any moron does, don't they! What has that got to do with the price of cheese!!??                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| MGregoryPosts: 534(3/15/04 12:09 pm)Reply                                                                                                         | Re: The pursuit of spirituality <hr/> What is SPD?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 820(3/15/04 12:09 pm)Reply                                                                                     | Re: The pursuit of spirituality <hr/> I try to read a paragraph of your stuff, 5ilver5hadow, and I get this gagging feeling in my throat. I try to push myself, then I get tired and my attention begins to shake. I then turn my attention to the tv, where an M&amp;Ms commercial is on, and tell myself "ah he can figure things out for himself". If you were at all "close" to light, you wouldn't be posting or having any questions. |

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

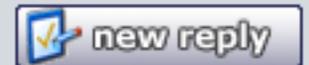

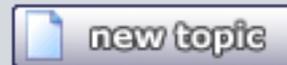

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The real "ultimate" reality?

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                            | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| BiggierRegistered UserPosts: 66(1/15/04 11:40 am)Reply | The real "ultimate" reality? <hr/> From Brayan Magee's, "Cofessions of a Philosopher": "For a period of two to three years at the age of nine and twelve I was in thrall to puzzlement about time...I knew there was a day before yesterday, and a day before that, and a day before that and so on, as far back as I could remember. But there must have been a day before the first day I can remember...It must be possible to go back forever and ever and ever....Yet is it? The idea of going back for ever and EVER was something I could not get a hold of: it seemed impossible. So perhaps, after all, there must have been a beginning somewhere. But if there was a beginning, what had gone on before that? Well, obviously, nothing---nothing at all---otherwise it could not be the beginning. But if there was nothing, how could anything get started? Where could it come from? Time couldn't just pop into existence---bingo!---out of nothing, and start going, all by itself. Nothing is nothing, not anything. So the idea of a beginning was unimaginable, which somehow made it seem impossible too. The upshot was that it seemed impossible for time to have had a beginnning and impossible for it not to have had a beginning." And: "...I realized that a similar problem existed with regard to space...If I went up into the sky and kept on going in a straight line, why shouldn't I just be able to keep on going forever and ever? But that's impossible. Why isn't it possible? Surely, eventually, I'd have to come to some sort of end? But |

why? If I bumped up against something eventually, wouldn't that have to be something in space? And if it was something in space, wouldn't there have to be something on the other side of it, if only more space? On the other hand, if there was no limit, endless space couldn't just BE, anymore than endless time could be."

Ultimate reality? Sure, one might exist. But don't fall for any of the current flim-flam artists in here who are trying to paint you a picture about theirs. All they have to offer in the face of profoundly mysterious imponderables like those above are a bunch "scientific" sounding mumbo jumbo that is propped up by yet more "scientific" sounding mumbo jumbo. They can't demonstrate their theories, in other words, with anything other than a bunch of words said to be true by----by them, of course.

Ultimate reality frauds are really after your pschological yearning for Truth and Certainty and Credulity. A lot of them are linked to an Afterlife or Soul or Salvation of some sort. Always theirs. And the fact that there are thousands of others out there preaching thousands of other hopelessly conflicting and contradictory Ultimate Realites of their own doesn't slow them down a bit: "the OTHER ones are ALL wrong!!"

I'll bet they are.

Biggie

Edited by: Biggier at: 1/15/04 11:41 am

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 603
(1/15/04 12:42 pm)
Reply

Re: The real "ultimate" reality?

---

Very good post!!!

Naturyl
Registered User
Posts: 29
(1/15/04 1:04 pm)
Reply

Re: The real "ultimate" reality?

---

Yes, although the bit about science was a bit overdone, IMO. Anti-intellectualism isn't the answer, either. Overall, though, he makes some good points.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1261
(1/15/04 1:55 pm)
Reply

the real reality

---

I also find those questions stumping. And to that add a third, the existence of anything at all.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2040
(1/15/04 2:52 pm)
Reply

Re: The real "ultimate" reality?

---

I personally didn't see any worthwhile points in Biggier's post. Any thinker worth his salt can easily answer and resolve them.

Quote:

---

From Braynan Magee's, "Confessions of a Philosopher":

"For a period of two to three years at the age of nine and twelve I was in thrall to puzzlement about time...I knew there was a day before yesterday, and a day before that, and a day before that and so on, as far back as I could remember. But there must have been a day before the first day I can remember...It must be possible to go back forever and ever and ever....Yet is it? The idea of going back for ever and EVER was something I could not get a hold of: it seemed impossible. So perhaps, after all, there must have been a beginning somewhere. But if there was a beginning, what had gone on before that? Well, obviously, nothing---nothing at all---otherwise it could not be the beginning. But if there was nothing, how could anything get started? Where could it come from? Time couldn't just pop into existence---bingo!---out of nothing, and start going, all by itself. Nothing is nothing, not anything. So the idea of a beginning was unimaginable, which somehow made it seem impossible too. The upshot was that it seemed impossible for time to have had a beginning and impossible for it not to have had a beginning."

---

The fact that beginninglessness seems impossible to the mind of a young child doesn't really constitute a convincing argument. It certainly doesn't negate the logical truth that things necessarily come from other things.

Quote:

---

"...I realized that a similar problem existed with regard to space...If I went up into the sky and kept on going in a straight line, why shouldn't I just be able to keep on going forever and ever? But that's impossible. Why isn't it possible? Surely, eventually, I'd have to come to some sort of end? But why? If I bumped up against something eventually, wouldn't that have to be something in space? And if it was something in space, wouldn't there have to be something on the other side of it, if only more space? On the other hand, if there was no limit, endless space couldn't just BE, anymore than endless time could be."

---

There is no reason to conclude that endless space or endless time cannot be. The author is just making this up in order to preserve his enjoyment of a false mystery - just as Biggie is doing.

Quote:

---

Ultimate reality? Sure, one might exist.

---

Since Ultimate Reality is nothing other than Nature itself, it most certainly does exist.

Quote:

---

But don't fall for any of the current flim-flam artists in here who are trying to paint you a picture about theirs. All they have to offer in the face of profoundly mysterious imponderables like those above are a bunch "scientific" sounding mumbo jumbo that is propped up by yet more "scientific" sounding mumbo jumbo. They can't demonstrate their theories, in other words, with anything other than a bunch of words said to be true by----by them, of course.

Ultimate reality frauds are really after your psychological yearning for Truth and Certainty and Credulity. A lot of them are linked to an Afterlife or Soul or Salvation of some sort. Always theirs. And the fact that there are thousands of others out there preaching thousands of other hopelessly conflicting and contradictory Ultimate Realites of their own doesn't slow them down a bit: "the OTHER ones are ALL wrong!!"

---

What a load of drivel.

I notice that Biggier himself doesn't mind shouting from the rooftops that everyone but him and his kind are wrong.

What a hypocrite.

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 606
(1/15/04 3:02 pm)
Reply

Re: The real "ultimate" reality?

---

David, the only rational thing you said was:

Since Ultimate Reality is nothing other than Nature itself, it most certainly does exist.

Naturyl
Registered User
Posts: 35
(1/15/04 3:57 pm)
Reply

Re: The real "ultimate" reality?

---

I picked that out as well. To me, it is a valid point.

David was also correct in asserting that Biggier is quick to discount others, as I noted in my comments about anti-intellectualism. Putting "science" in scare quotes is not helpful. Science may not be perfect, but it is the best tool we have going for us.

David was not helpful either in his immediate assertion that the problems quoted would be trivially resolved by any thinker 'worth his salt.' David implies that we, having conceded the difficulty of the problems, cannot be 'worth our salt.' Are you GF regulars accustomed to being patronized like this? I certainly am not. Apparently, Earth can be succinctly described as "a lot of crappy thinkers, David, and some dirt."

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 610
(1/15/04 4:24 pm)
Reply

Re: The real "ultimate" reality?

---

Yeah, we're accustomed to it. It only makes David appear as a very irrational man, and a hypocrite.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1415
(1/15/04 5:45 pm)
Reply

Re: The real "ultimate" reality?

---

I sympathize with this point of view. But I must also point out there is perhaps a smile on David's face as he types. This medium disguises body language, and we are all used to body language to some extent in everyday communication.

Reconsider the negative judgement. Expression is secondary to intention.

Tharan

Canadian Zoetrope
Registered User
Posts: 17
(1/15/04 6:11 pm)
Reply

Re: The real "ultimate" reality?

---

There is only one reaction to nothing... something.

That's what this is!

People might argue that it's impossible to know what absolute nothingness is like. To recreate it, and know for sure.

Well nothingness did happen, and we're experiencing the effects of it everyday. Nothing is something. Step out of your mind, and concieve of something beyong +/-.

Let it occur to you that 'mathematics' has only one master...
IMAGINATION.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2043
(1/15/04 8:26 pm)
Reply

Re: The real "ultimate" reality?

---

WolfsonJakk wrote:

Quote:

---

I sympathize with this point of view. But I must also point out there is perhaps a smile on David's face as he types.

---

Never! Philosophy is a very serious business, you must know that. Very serious. That sparkle you see in my eyes is surely an illusion.

--

Bryan Magee wrote:

Quote:

---

"For a period of two to three years at the age of nine and twelve I was in thrall to puzzlement about time...I knew there was a day before yesterday, and a day before that, and a day before that and so on, as far back as I could remember. But there must have been a day before the first day I can remember...It must be possible to go back forever and ever and ever....Yet is it? The idea of going back for ever and EVER was something I could not get a hold of: it seemed impossible.

---

I remember entertaining similar thoughts when I was 11 years old. But it is basically an illusion caused by the child's need to resolve everything in terms of concrete realities. A child of that age demands a concrete bottom line. He does not have the mental capacity to entertain the possibility that there are no bottom lines in Nature. Thus he feels there has to be a beginning to Nature.

It is only later in life that he is able to see that his insistence upon a bottom line has no basis.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 749
(1/15/04 8:46 pm)
Reply

Re: The real "ultimate" reality?

---

Naturyl: David was not helpful either in his immediate assertion that the problems quoted would be trivially resolved by any thinker 'worth his salt.' David implies that we, having conceded the difficulty of the problems, cannot be 'worth our salt.' Are you GF regulars accustomed to being patronized like this?

Yeah, yeah, we hear it all the time. :-|

Contributors have developed serious feelings of guilt for not having presented convincing solutions to "trivial" issues such as the beginning of spacetime, free will, the question of consciousness, just to name a few. These are simple things for David.

Naturyl: Apparently, Earth can be succinctly described as "a lot of crappy

|                                                                                                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                        | thinkers, David, and some dirt." Yeah, and we are in the dirt category. But this isn't meant as an insult. If David wants to insult someone he would state that he/she is womanish. Thomas                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| Owen1234Registered UserPosts: 17(1/16/04 12:18 am)Reply                                                                                     | Re: The real "ultimate" reality? <hr/> Thomas:Yeah, and we are in the dirt category. But this isn't meant as an insult. If David wants to insult someone he would state that he/she is womanish. It is appalling that the hosts of this forum: David, Dan and Kevin, are so blatantly stupid. Surely, the only reason to participate in this forum is that, there are 'other' interesting people to talk to here. Owen                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| MGMacLeodRegistered UserPosts: 52(1/16/04 12:25 am)Reply  | Re: The real "ultimate" reality? <hr/> Hello again all,David, Quote: <hr/> I remember entertaining similar thoughts when I was 11 years old. But it is basically an illusion caused by the child's need to resolve everything in terms of concrete realities. A child of that age demands a concrete bottom line. He does not have the mental capacity to entertain the possibility that there are no bottom lines in Nature. Thus he feels there has to be a beginning to Nature. <hr/> Yet you insist that causality is the bottom line of nature. Indeed, how can anything be considered ultimate if there is no bottom line, no solid ground, no 'concrete reality', no certainty? You consistently make the claim that logical truth is the only truth there is, and yet your words above are wholly illogical. To point out just one way in which your statement is irrational in | itself: you say that a child "does not have the mental capacity to entertain the possibility that there are no bottom lines in Nature." However, this statement is itself a bottom line about the mental capacities of a child.

It's interesting that you are all-too-happy to point out things like this in the thoughts of others, but you don't see them in your own.

~Matt

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 266
(1/16/04 1:20 am)
Reply

Re: The real "ultimate" reality?

---

Quote:

---

Yet you insist that causality is the bottom line of nature.

---

Causality is not any particular thing, like a simplistic creator God. Cause and effect is everywhere and is infinite in nature. Logic too has infinite reach. That is why these things are absolute.

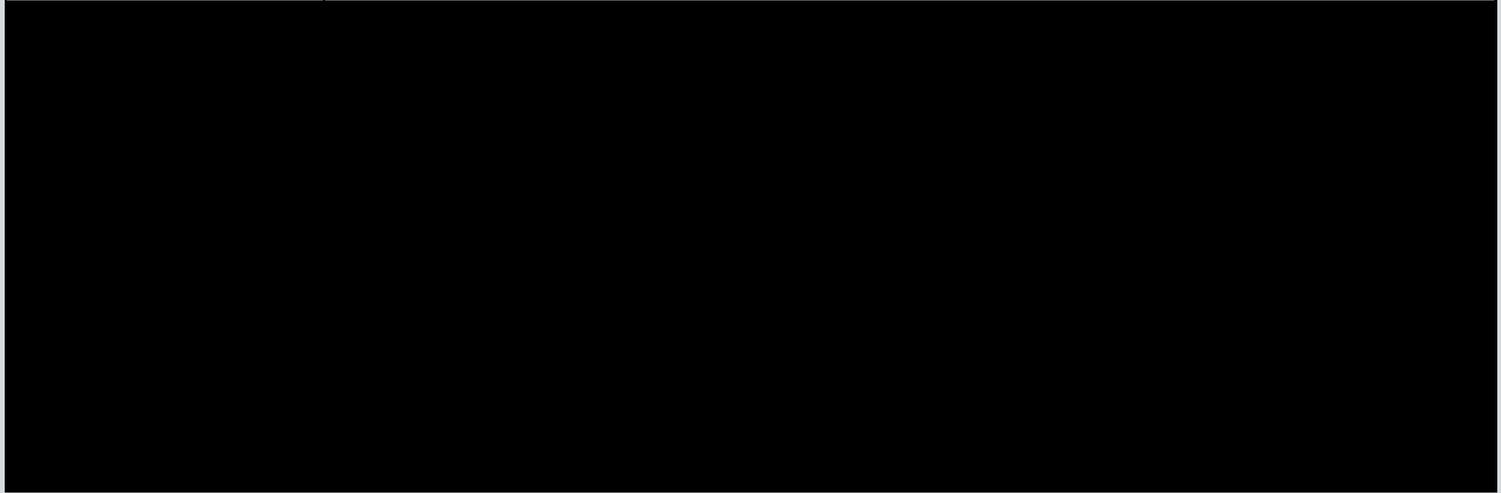

These are not "concrete" realities, as such, because they are not material things. They exist on a higher plane.

Owen1234
Registered User
Posts: 18
(1/16/04 1:35 am)
Reply

Re: The real "ultimate" reality?

---

How do you know the truth of what you say?

Biggier

Registered User

Posts: 67

(1/16/04 1:50 am)

Reply

Re: The real "ultimate" reality?

---

David,

Given that my points are effectively contradicting your points [in my own opinion, of course] I am not surprised you find them unworthy of consideration. But our exchanges have just begun and I'm sure they will be seen by you far more perceptively down the road. After all, I once harbored silly speculations like yours myself.

Magee made those observations as a child, true. But he has spent his entire life thinking deeply about them and now in his 70s [I believe], his profound wonder about them has not changed in the slightest. In fact, now that he is approaching death and oblivion they haunt him all the more. Like me, he clings to the staggering surreality of questions like this because it is the only hope he can fathom that life after death is at least possible. Possible because questions like this are just so incredibly enigmatic. The rational mind cannot encompass them...and so the rational mind cannot encompass the mystery of death because death is a part of the enormous mystery OF All There Is. Who KNOWS what happens, right? It's just that, from this side of the fence, things don't look too promising, do they?

If Magee's points just encompass a "false mystery" where is your evidence to show that infinite time and space are perfectly rational? Not the pseudo-intellectual stuff in your book but the kind of conjectures that can be tested and confirmed out in the real world. The one inside your head is not the same thing at all, in my opinion. I mean, calling ultimate reality "nature itself" merely begs the question: what IS nature? And then you go around and around in a tautological circle: nature is ultimate reality because ultimate reality is nature. It's like saying God exists because it says so in the Bible and the Bible must be true because it is the word of God. In a word: yawn.

I don't know how many different ways I can say it: these are just my own opinions. The "arrogance" you perceive is merely my polemical bent. I would never, ever insist that my points of view here reflect How Things Are.

How, for example, would I even begin to grasp What It Means to carry an unwanted fetus when, as a male, I am not capable biologically of experiencing a pregnancy? How would I know What It Means to be blind or deaf? How would I know What It Means to be a person of color in a culture that is steeped in prejudice and discrimination?

Embedding it all in the bromide "It's All Part of Nature" won't mean much to a woman who is pregnant with an unwanted fetus if/when a moral absolutist like John Ashcroft succeeds in making abortion unconstitutional in America. Besides, if nature Just Is...if it is encompassed in some Ultimate cause and effect that means human autonomy and freedom are just myths. That means that Hitler had no more choice in institutionalizing genocide than those who organized a resistance against him. Everything is merely an inevitable aspect of Ultimate Reality.

Right?

Biggie

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1270
(1/16/04 2:24 am)
Reply

Re: The real "ultimate" reality?

---

Quote:

---

Like me, he clings to the staggering surreality of questions like this because it is the only hope he can fathom that life after death is at least possible. Possible because questions like this are just so incredibly enigmatic. The rational mind cannot encompass them...and so the rational mind cannot encompass the mystery of death because death is a part of the enormous mystery OF All There Is.

---

Darn it, Biggie, you're a jackass, but you write some occasional good bits.

Owen1234
Registered User
Posts: 20
(1/16/04 3:57 am)
Reply

Re: The real "ultimate" reality?

---

ksolway: Causality is not any particular thing, like a simplistic creator God. Cause and effect is everywhere and is infinite in nature. Logic too has infinite reach. That is why these things are absolute.

I can't believe that anyone, including Kevin, can believe that these remarks are true!

|                                                                                   |                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 611(1/16/04 5:51 am)Reply | Re: The real "ultimate" reality? <hr/> Cause and effect is neither absolute, nor infinite.                                                                                  |
| SapiusRegistered UserPosts: 271(1/16/04 7:01 am)Reply  | Re: The real "ultimate" reality? <hr/> I'm told that energy does not die. If that is so, then what does it say about its birth? How and when could that have been possible? |

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

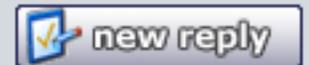

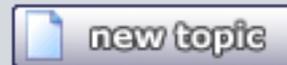

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The real "ultimate" reality?

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                 | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 2044(1/16/04 8:26 am)Reply  | Re: The real "ultimate" reality? <hr/> Matt Macleod wrote: Quote: <hr/> DQ: I remember entertaining similar thoughts when I was 11 years old. But it is basically an illusion caused by the child's need to resolve everything in terms of concrete realities. A child of that age demands a concrete bottom line. He does not have the mental capacity to entertain the possibility that there are no bottom lines in Nature. Thus he feels there has to be a beginning to Nature. MM: Yet you insist that causality is the bottom line of nature. <hr/> As Kevin mentions, it isn't a concrete bottom line. In other words, it isn't a particular solid object, or a particular thing with form - which is what the child is looking for. It is an abstract bottom line, if you will. Quote: <hr/> Indeed, how can anything be considered ultimate if there is no bottom line, no solid ground, no 'concrete reality', no certainty? <hr/> |

|                                                                                                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                       | That there is no concrete bottom line, no solid fundamental ground, no concrete reality, no empirical certainty is part of the bottom line of Nature.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| BiggierRegistered UserPosts: 70(1/16/04 1:01 pm)Reply                                                                                      | Re: The real "ultimate" reality? <hr/> Bird, You're not going soft on me, are you? ; ) B.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| MGMacLeodRegistered UserPosts: 53(1/16/04 4:27 pm)Reply   | Re: The real "ultimate" reality? <hr/> Kevin, What is a bottom line? In the context at hand (i.e., consideration of the fundamental nature of the universe), it is an absolute; It is something upon which other things are based. What else could it be? No one said anything about simple, material things; David mentioned the notion of a bottom line in terms of the nature of reality. And that's what I based my post on. You say that logic and causality are absolutes, which is to say that they are the bottom lines of nature. ~Matt |
| MGMacLeodRegistered UserPosts: 54(1/16/04 4:30 pm)Reply  | Re: The real "ultimate" reality? <hr/> David, Quote: <hr/> In other words, it isn't a particular solid object, or a particular thing with form - which is what the child is looking for. It is an abstract bottom line, if you will. <hr/> The child is looking for an explanation of the nature of the world--whether or not he seeks a particular object or not is inconsequential. You explain nature in terms of causality, and that is the bottom line. Or if not, what                                                                     |

would you prefer to call causality in your philosophy? Calling it an 'abstract bottom line' doesn't change its status in your view of nature.

Quote:

---

That there is no concrete bottom line, no solid fundamental ground, no concrete reality, no empirical certainty is part of the bottom line of Nature.

---

Aside from the fact that this is in direct contradiction to your earlier assertion that there is no bottom line at all in nature, you've now talked yourself into a corner, since you have nothing with which to justify this claim; you've abandoned the notion of a fundamental ground from which to do so. On what basis can you make this claim with a straight face?

Are these not your words:

Quote:

---

"All phenomena, without exception, are created, nurtured and destroyed by causation. Everything from the formation of stars and galaxies to the creation and annihilation of subatomic particles to the endless variety of living processes is a product of cause and effect. The infinite complexity of Nature that we see around us is nothing other than the infinite simplicity of causation.

There are no exceptions in this regard, despite what modern physicists say. Nothing is so unique in this world, or so unnatural, that it dwells outside of Nature's causal web. Anything that happens in this world is caused to happen, including everything that happens inside us. The blood coursing through our veins, our muscles expanding and contracting, the chemical processes inside our cells, the electro-chemical impulses in our brains - all are causally created. So too our thoughts, beliefs, decisions, and emotions. Nothing is immune from it." --from chapter 2 of your book

---

All of which is to say that there is nothing more fundamental, basic, ultimate, absolute, or all-encompassing than causality--nothing more real or certain than causality. It is the basis of everything, the real deal, the bedrock, the bottom line--nothing else to it. No?

~Matt

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2059
(1/16/04 7:08 pm)
Reply

Re: The real "ultimate" reality?

---

Matt Macleod wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: In other words, it isn't a particular solid object, or a particular thing with form - which is what the child is looking for. It is an abstract bottom line, if you will.

MM: The child is looking for an explanation of the nature of the world--whether or not he seeks a particular object or not is inconsequential.

---

He is looking for a particular kind of explanation which doesn't exist - namely, a fundamental launching pad to Nature. Because of this, the truth that there is no fundamental launching pad to Nature strikes him as unbelievable.

Quote:

---

You explain nature in terms of causality, and that is the bottom line.

---

Fair enough.

Quote:

---

DQ: That there is no concrete bottom line, no solid fundamental ground, no concrete reality, no empirical certainty is part of the bottom line of Nature.

MM: Aside from the fact that this is in direct contradiction to your earlier assertion that there is no bottom line at all in nature, you've now talked yourself into a corner, since you have nothing with which to justify this claim; you've abandoned the notion of a fundamental ground from which to do so. On what basis can you make this claim with a straight face?

---

You're trying to whip up a controversy which doesn't exist. Causality is the bottom line in the sense that it is the timeless creator of all things. It is also the destroyer of all bottom lines in the sense that no particular object or launching pad or state of being or god can constitute the bottom line of Nature, since each of these things is causally created.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1285
(1/18/04 12:08 pm)
Reply

UR

---

Bird,
You're not going soft on me, are you? ; )
=====

I call 'em like I see 'em.

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

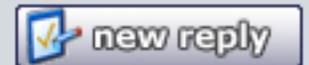

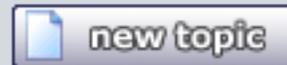

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The renaissance of Chinese ideology

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                            | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| huzhengRegistered UserPosts: 7(10/25/03 12:18 pm)Reply | The renaissance of Chinese ideology <hr/> The renaissance of Chinese ideology2003.10.25 My ideology have already be matured when i get the utmost truth, it have been written down in "the fourth essay", all my later essay is just explanation to it. I only take 4 days to find the truth, but it seems i will need 40 years to spread it. What will i do in the next years? I won't go abroad, i will stay in SiChuan university, as i described ago, here have the best environment, i will spread my ideology from here. My best friends are those Linuxer, they can accept my article, although they don't understand it yet, but they won't delete it, and would like to help me, as i was a Linuxer ago, all contemporary philosopher will block me, they have the strongest intention to delete my articles, because they can sense the burden of truth, and fear it, because, i tell they:all they was doing, are in the wrong way. Their work is not to find the utmost truth now, as it have already be found by me, their work is to spread the truth, after they realized this, they will come and help me. These feminine man, won't understand me most, i say feminine man, don't means their desire to sex-compliment is weak, but the desire for truth is weak. They never read long articles, always have nothing to do, but be fond of spread these garbages, they dislike these hysteric girl mostly, who i think is lovely. |

The China society have get to know girl should be keep virgin until she become wife, because she is raped most violently when she is fucked for the first time, but another more important thing is, the genius, as their desire for truth is most strong, he want to rape the girl's mind violently more than sexual rape, the girls should keep her mind innocent before she become wife too. Most girl's mind have already be rape by others before she become the wife, such as, icelotus, she seems to like write her feeling articles and publish it on the BBS, this is just because her mind have already partly been raped by other boys. The grow up environment of girls should haven't literature, haven't science, haven't art, haven't philosophy, as i said ago, only train for sex attraction and fertility, and when she is grown up, the man come and find the most sex-compliment girl of him, and after she is the wife of the man, her body is raped most violent by his husband, her mind is raped most violent by his husband, she study literature, science, art, philosophy from his husband, her mind is formed by his husband. So, after raped by body and by mind, she love his husband most strongly, and become most happy, and you love her most strongly too, as you get the utmost truth by education and have get your perfect wife, you are happiest too.

You see, Chinese man have the most strong inclination for her wife be virgin than other countries, this is essence of China's 5000 years' ideology, but, it need to be improve more further, i will spread my ideology in China first, as China is mostly near my ideology. China was strongest country in the world, America seems to become most strong now, it is just because science get higher than philsofhy temporarily, but science will be defeat by philosophy again soon, as philosophy is highest, China will become the strongest country again as philosophy become highest again.

It seems my ideology is very alike of the old ideology of China, also my ideology comes from the newest foreign philosophy, my ideology is base on China's ideology, and make it further by foreign ideology, just as base on rape the body of girls, and get further of rape the mind of girls. It is the renaissance of China's ideology, it is the renaissance of China, it is the renaissance of philosophy. I understand why my article blocked so fast in smth's philosophy board now, because my ideology is attacking the foreign ideology, these ideology in philosophy board, is completely foreign ideology to China, my ideology is most strongly resisted in the abroad, because, I, have absorb the essence of foreign ideology from Otto Weininger and Nietzsche, and merge it with Chinese ideology, it is easy to know now, my article will be welcomed in those "Wisdow" board which discuss the Chinese ideology, i will tell them how to develop Chinese ideology more further.

|                                                                                 |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 166(10/25/03 3:05 pm)Reply | Re: The renaissance of Chinese ideology <hr/> Lithium carbonate. Try it.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 776(10/25/03 7:50 pm)Reply  | Virginity <hr/> Very interesting thought huzheng. I like your parallels between the rape of the mind and the body. There are plenty of virgins in the west. New ones are created everyday. It is just unfortunate that the men are so retarded that they have forgotten how to manage them. The development of the power of China is interesting to watch. Can 5000 years of tradition beat a few hundred years of intense development?We shall see. America is like the steriods of the planet. It's illegal in competition but it creates winnners of a certain kind. The only other kind of winner is created by Majick. |

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The revolution of philosophy

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                            | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| huzhengRegistered UserPosts: 3(10/24/03 12:49 pm)Reply | The revolution of philosophy <hr/> The revolution of philosophy2003.10.22 I don't have time to correct the grammar of this article now, and, the thinking note i written down here is not the newest thinking of me now, you'd better only read the last sentences of this article :)20. When I waken up in the midnight, i have the hatred to kill him, the one i never know, yours? When the prince climb out the abyss, you can sense the devil in his eyes, you can see the desire for blood from his mouth. I will betray my family, the road i am going is opposite to their expectation. The analysis of her is done. Then another... It is lucky of me that have read "Sex and Character", or i can't climb out the abyss so soon after dropped into it. I get it :) I get it at last. My skating skill progress much today, the secret is: being a child. By being a child, you get rid of vanity, you forget money, you don't afraid of your future, but you are full of promise, you don't chase happy, but you are always happy, you study eagerly and quickly as being innocence, you won't fall into the trouble of love, but you love everyone you contacted, you won't be angry or sorrow, don't have any prejudice. When skating peacefully, I can feel my soul become clean again, I must have a delighted smile on my face, I immerse into skating, don't take notice of the others. I can tell you how to return to be a child again, in other words, become a genius again, that is, art, the reverence to art. Ivan Stojmirov tell me:"Once a geek, always a geek. :-)", he is right :) |

I am happy that i become a child again, this is the best thing that God give everyone when they born, but most people threw it away, i am happy i managed to keep it :) This will be one of the most important turning point of my life :)

I go to the "Western art ideological trend" course this night, i didn't get into any classroom for a long(maybe) time. You can see a cool boy come in, in a duck tongue cap, with some beard, a thick book in the gloved hand, walk through the class and sit down at the back corner :)

21.

Perfect love exists.

Foreword: To understand this article, you need to read Otto Weininger's "Sex and Charater" first: www.theabsolute.net/ottow/schareng.pdf

Now my body is very cold, it seems it is hard to write down this article as my hand is so cold, but i know, only by written down this article, my body can get to warm again.

Great man, it is easy of you to get one girl's first love, because she hallucinate it, and want to try it. But, if she is the girl who have already tasted it before you acquaint her...I meet a beautiful girl, she have loved for twice, the first is when she is very young, the second should be her first love. After i acquainted her, i get loved her, i showed my excellent to her, i showed my deepest love to her, i write long and deep emotion letter to her. But, the girl who have past her first love, won't accept you, you are excellent, you love her so much, so she refuse you, by refuse you, she get the jealous from the other girls, she become a queue, but you love her so deep, so you work more hard, make yourself more excellent, make you love on her more deep, but this just get her more glad to refuse you. She know, if she don't accept you, she can't get a better boy, she know you are excellent, she know you love her so deeply, she know she will get happiness in the future if she accept you. But, the girl who have past her first love, always like to extravagance your love, so can satisfy her vanity. So, you can see almost every great man met a fail love, because they are so excellent, love her so deep. At last, the great man leaved her, some years later, the great man become famous, the girl just have a common and misery life compare to the happy life which she should have, and the great man always give sympathy on her, won't scoff at her, don't want to make her feel regret, yes, these story is really happened on many great man. girls, because their vanity, prefer to satisfy her vanity when she is young, and lead a misery life later. You love her, you know her vanity, so you want to help her, but the more you want to help her, the more you love her, just the more you can satisfy her vanity. So, don't show your excellent and love on a past first love's girl, show it on a haven't first love's girl. You can't save the girl who you loved but who past her first love, leave her, this may help her more, don't touch her, then you may easily get she later, as your wife, because she thought you may not love now, then she won't refuse you to satisfy her vanity again, as she afraid you will leave her indeed, and, now she will say she have loved you, since the first time acquaint you. But, to leave her, is hard, you must wait her beautiful time past. So, you can't get a past first love girl when she was beautiful, but, why you want the girl don't beautiful again and never love you then? As a result, don't touch these past first love girl if you are a great man, leave her, and go to find a haven't first love girl. How to leave that past first love girl? make a yourself become a child again, mentally, child have no love, then you will love a innocent girl who is a child too and who haven't first love. yes, as you are great now, you are not a innocent boy now, almost all your same age girl have past their first love too, so you need to get the first love from these innocent girl who are smaller than you. why the same age girl past their first love? because when they are innocent, her first love is get by some older boy...yes, it is the circle. but you must follow it. when i say the same age, i don't mean the exact same age, but mentally same age.

go and get the have first love innocent girl, leave the girls who are the same age of you who past her first love.

But, you know, it is most like when the innocent girl grow up, you two will be separated, because you know you don't love her indeed, she don't love you indeed too, although she don't know this as she is innocent. :) Yes, you can't get a perfect love from one girl. so be loved with the innocent girl although you don't love her indeed, take a wife whose first love is not yours but you love indeed. You may say, if there is possible that you find a innocent girl who you will still love her when she grow up? that is to mingle the two girl into the one, then it become perfect, yes, go and try, but, it is most likely you won't have this luck. Why i don't meet her before her first love is get by the other? oh, i did meet her, but at that time, although i have sensed the love on her, i am too shy, i didn't manage to acquaint her, i am innocent, that she won't give her first love to me even i court her at that time, she want a boy who is older than she, yes, love won't be perfect, because when she was innocent, she need a older, when you get older, she is not innocent again, she is older, she won't accept you because she want to satisfy her vanity by you now. perfect love only happen when the two is at the same age, but it won't happen, when both you two are innocent, when both of you are older. girl's innocent and then her vanity breaks the perfect love. perfect love can only generate between your two, but it won't generate. If you two get to not at the same age, that means, you met her when you are older and she is innocent, you two will be loved, but this is not perfect love too, you two will be separated, as i describe before. perfect love means, loved at first, and loved in your later whole life, she is your first lover, she is your wife too. but, this two is conflict, so you can't get perfect love.

You see, this is love, you understand it, the love of girl is not so good as you thought, great man. you may find never love girls may be better, as the love of girl is not perfect, great man always only want perfect love, but, because they are great, they can't get it, There haven't perfect love, because there haven't perfect girl, all girls are vanity.

Great man don't insist to have a virgin wife, but he must insist on have a no-first-love girl. Normal man need her wife be virgin, we need our first lover be no-first-love girl.

I write down the precious sentence last night, and stop it because i need to go to bed as in the dormitory, but i get to mature it after last night's thinking, although some of my thought is changed, i don't want to modify the precious sentences to fit my new view point, but to continue complete it here.

The precious sentences just say perfect love don't exist, but now i will say it exist. Because, great man, you must forgive girl's innocent and vanity. because she is innocent, her first love is gotten by others, you can't get her as you are innocent, because she is vanity then, you can't get her too as you are older now. Why you must forgive her innocent and vanity? to forgive her innocent seems to be easier to you, but the reason to forgive her vanity is the same as to forgive her innocent. Why she is innocent and then vanity, you can get the answer by Otto Weininger's "Sex and Character", because woman are mind-less, so she is innocent at first, and vanity then, as she is mind-less, the only thing she can get is vanity. why woman are mind-less, Otto Weininger said:"such a speculation is outside the limits of either science or philosophy", yes, then i get the answer at last, it is god make woman mind-less. god is fair, god didn't get the mind to woman, only give the mind to man, but, although you, the man, have mind, you can only use your mind to make you become excellent, and then use your excellent to satisfy her vanity, you must bear the hard time when you are working hard to make you excellent for her while she is in her first love with the other, and then you must bear the heavy burden to use your excellent to satisfy her vanity, which make you drop into the abyss, yes, this is the price of the mind the god given you. god is fair, you have mind, you must bear the burden, you don't have mind, a mind man will come and satisfy you vanity. as you can the, the word of vanity is nolong a derogatory sense now, she is innocent and vanity, because she is mind-less, why she is mind-less, it is god make it. To separate a circle equally, it is not to separate it by the straight line which through the center point of the circle, but by the curve which you can see by the Tai Ji graphy, bear her innocent and her vanity is just the two bend of this curve. And, after you bore this two burden, you go along this curve which god given to you, you will get the perfect love, as someone have said, every woman will marry to the man who brother her enough, but this is just the defined by god:"perfect love come when you beared this two burden", she will become you wife at last, you love her indeed, and she start to love you indeed after you bore this two burden, or why she will marry you :) and, the god is fair, great man, for you work hard, god will let you meet another innocent girl when you are older, that girl will give the first love to you, as in the second bend of the curve, while you dropped into the abyss by your girl's vanity. then you get the perfect love at last. The perfect love, is not the sweet time you two being together, but the time you go along with the two bend of the curve. perfect love exists. another result of this essay is: god exist.

I would like to mention a thing here, all these things happened really on me. I met Hu Yan when both of us are innocent, but we didn't get acquainted, then Hu Yan's first love is get by one older boy, them separated when the older boy get graduate, when i acquainted Hu Yan, i dropped into the abyss, as her first love is gotten by the other, and now her vanity beat my heart. then, a innocent girl appear at the same time, last weak, 2003.10.18, the day i dropped into the abyss, and just in the same day, i meet that innocent girl, i go to the dancing course, the timetable is changed for the football match, the two dancing class's student have the class together, then i acquainted her, i dance with her, i find her body become heat, her voice become short and crudeness, i am older now, full of the attraction to the innocent girl, by the time after acquaint Hu Yan, and this girl is innocent, i can easily get her first love. What will i do? i will follow the curve that god given to me, get the innocent girl's first love, leave her to her boy later, bear Hu Yan's vanity, and marry with her later, then come my perfect love.

It is Otto Weininger's book, "Sex and Character", helped me to understand these things. He finished his book when he was 21, killed himself in 23, 100 years ago, and, it is now, me, a Chinese boy, come to continue her work, finish my book, in 21, and become a Christian in 23, Otto Weininger write the book in German, i will write it in Chinese, because some of my story must be describe in Chinese, yes, it is most likely things will happen like this, as god make these things to happen, i only start to write some note, but then i find i started writing my book, the book, as a successive book of Otto Weininger's, will finish by me, its title may be "Sex by God", yes, the result at last, is God. I didn't finish my reading of "Sex and Character" yet, but start my successive work on it now, it is mostly likely my opinion will be the same as the rest of this book which i haven't read, and then i will develop it further, just as in the relay race, the two runner run together for a length when they are passing the relay stick. The book, "Mere Christianity" is coming, all these things happened on me, study science, study philosophy, both science and philosophy appear to tell us God is not exist, but, after you study deep with them, you find the things that you can't explain both by science and philosophy, and these studying, is just to make me to know God at last. The perfect world is build by God, the world is perfect, so there must be God there.

I am warm now :)

=====

When you are writing a software, if it is already perfect, every symbol of the source code can't be changed, every line's order of the source code can't be changed, or it will make it go wrong, writing a book is the same. faithmumu said: "love needn't reasoning, philosophy can't explain it, as love don't belong to reason". :) She is right, both science and philosophy can't explain love, but theology should can, this is what i am just doing. Oh, dear, the word "theology" appears into this article so spontaneousness just as "God" appears! I can see my way now, i fail in love and get much trouble of it, so i want to understand it, i study science, it can't explain it, i study philosophy, it can't explain it, then, i find theology, as the studying going further, finally, it should give me the answer. I have already heard that the Christian said the world is love...it is waiting me there... It is "Sex and Character" make me decide to jump into the abyss again, luckily :) but, wait, abyss? although i still fear it as see its darkness and bottomless, i have the sense that i will walk in the abyss as flat one day soon. Yes, if you understand it, it is not abyss again now! when i am refused by her, i have already known the internal reason, so, while i am still satisfying her vanity, i won't feel dark in the abyss! I find the theory of love! oh, i see the light that i will pass the level of Christian, yes, may be my book's title should change to "Interpretation of love", just as "Interpretation of dreams" by Freud, yes, i need to translate "Sex and Character" to Chinese as the foundation of my book too, this book need to write in Chinese as i explained before. oh, i need to study psychology also. We have a very hot discussion on the love board of the SCU bbs, it is very interesting, and helped my thinking :) and i get to communicate with happier and faitmumu, two coolest girls in the bbs :) My thought is always changing, or getting higher, as i am always thinking, only the viewpoint written in the last line of my last article is right, and, by this way, my ideology will get mature at last, here comes the present last line:

The interpretation of love is: you find a girl who is mostly sexual compliment to you, you can know whether she is compliment to you by her face, her body, and her grown up environment, and you will like this sexual-compliment girl as soon as you find her. then, to make she love you, you need to made the her mind, as woman is mind-less, force your will on her, if you success, she become your girl, she will love, and you will love she too now, as her mind is made by you, her mind fit your taste. If she have already influence by the others, you need to clean these influence from her mind, and change her mind to yours, this need you will be stronger than the one who influence her ago. If she is innocent, you are luckily, but it is most likely you don't have this luck, because to find her when she is innocent, you should make your mind strong first, but it is most likely before your mind become strong, some other who is older than you have already begin to influence her, if your mind is stronger than his, and this girl is more sexual-compliment to you than him, you can get her at last still. in some situation, you will meet more than one girl, one is very sexual-compliment to you, but she have already influence by the other, you need to clean her mind, this is a little hard and need time, and the other is innocent, but she is not so sexual-compliment to you. If you will is strongest, it is most likely you will choose the most sexual-compliment girl. But, as you understand love now, you can see love is not so important to you now, although it is a happy thing, you may would like to spend your time on more valuable things.

The precious thought is come out by my thinking in this afternoon after read 7 pages of "Sex and Character". "Sex and Character" will be the newest greatest book, it will promote contemporary philosophy for a long distant, my book will be the next :) I am sure i am the philosophy genius now, because i only touch philosophy less than three month, but i have done so many thinking just by yesterday and today. I am very lucky, just by the time "Sex and Character" is discovered, i just make my English good enough to read it(developed StarDict), and with the luck to find and read this book, and come a fail love to stimulate me to think more :)

I need to go skating now, i have be thinking for a whole day, i need a little relax :)

I feel lonely. I see the truth, that i am lonely. No, i must believe the real truth, that i am not lonely. :)

i am the most happy boy, indeed, their happy is only superficial, only temporary, haha. the truth is i am happy :_) i like play with philosophy words, it seems very cool :)

Yes, pigs always seems to be happy, but you know :_)

Why are care about pigs? when them show their happy to you, smile on your face and in your heart :) but you needn't show your happy to them, they won't understand :) oh, dear pigs, we can get on well still :)

I can easily break her mind now, her mind is base on a superficial happiness, and want others to envy her, so show your deep happy and your despise on her superficial happy will break her, and you need to hit these boy who support these viewpoint at the same time, this is easy to you, as a philosopher :) the problem is whether it is worth to do :) i will do it as a pleasure when i am relaxing :)

I decide to start change SCU bbs's humanity environment, make it become my thinking's source fountain.

22. My thought about love promote again after last night's thinking. When i decide to change the bbs' humanity environment, i search the conception which i need to overwhelm first, then when i think about she, i find all these concept is filled in her mind, and no until now i notice this, and i understand the whole affair suddenly, she is corrected by these weak conception, i will change her environment, to help her, and my "love" on her disappeared, i suddenly remember one sentence of "Sex and Character", oh, love have already interpreted by Otto Weininger, he have already tell me the truth, and i understand it now. Yes, if you want to understand love, read "Sex and Character", all my current article is only a explanation of his book. i know the true love now, there will be my lover, she is so beautiful. By drop the old "love", i cleaned some error conception on myself too. Through the endless darkness, i find the a new world, my sorrow of leaving the old world is complete disappeared, then come the happy of the beautiful new world, truth shine on me, true love is coming forward me, i stand there.

Some thing seems big happened in my family, and i solved it easily by my philosophy knowledge, from my parent, i understand the last page i read yesterday: "The masculine will has more power over woman than over the man himself; it can realize something in women which, in his own case, has to encounter too many obstacles."

Don't trust these expert, trust yourself, great man, their experience may suit for most person, but won't fit for you, as you always being a exception. Never crouch to these weak ideology, believe the utmost truth, or you find your weak all comes from the crouch. Don't stoop and crowed with these dogs to get in by the hole for the dogs, you will find the big door is opened to you, you can get in faster and easier then.

I will be the greatest philosopher in the world, because i stand on the shoulder of the greatest philosopher: Otto Weininger. Nietzsche's thinking helped me very much too, but his thought about woman and morality is not right. By Otto Weininger's help, I have already be higher than Nietzsche. All philosophy history book need rewritten to add Otto Weininger's name, I, the greatest philosopher at the present day, will change the history, will the change the whole human society, Otto Wininger's death have set the scene for me, i needn't wait 100 years, Otto Wininger have already waited for 100 years, now his ideology will spread and develop by me.

I will develop StarDict-2.4.2 recently, although i haven't time to develop free software now, but StarDict have one million users over the world, i will use it to spread my philosophy ideology. Oh, even myself is surprised by my powerful! Internet is created for me :_) This must be the biggest philosophy revolution!

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1620
(10/25/03 12:16 am)
Reply

---

---

Nietzsches thinking about woman and morality is not right?! How so huzheng?!

Quote:

---

Nietzsche's thinking helped me very much too, but his thought about woman and morality is not right. By Otto Weininger's help, I have already be higher than Nietzsche.

---

I am higher than you!

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31r
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

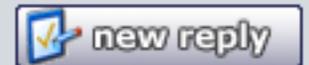

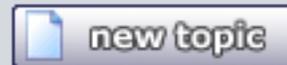

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The right attitude - Majick

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                         | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 789(10/29/03 6:44 pm)Reply | The right attitude - Majick <hr/> Quote: <hr/> jimhazlol...soon you'll be saying you are enlightened. Certainly developing the 'right' attitude. Next phase is you thinking everything you say has immense import. From that flows a feeling of mental power and superiority which after a time becomes the delusionment of enlightenment. <hr/> Here's a nice quote worth inverting as it contains the truth in code. Just Majick Quote: <hr/> Next phase is you thinking everything you say has immense import <hr/> One will feel everything ones says is of little or no importance. |

Quote:

---

From that flows a feeling of mental power and superiority which after a time becomes the delusionment of enlightenment.

---

From this will flow the feeling of mental weakness and inferiority which after a time becomes depression and low self esteem. Those who have not found the path will live in abject fear of this situation.

The enlightened have to defeat this fear everyday.
There are 2 ways down and only 1 way up.
Like a graviton.

Quote:

---

If there were a good quantum theory of gravity, then the particle that would carry the gravitational force would have zero mass and two units of spin. This has been known by theoretical physicists for a long time. This theorized particle is called the graviton.

---

This is the Majick
One forum member called be a cockroach and wanted to spit on me. It reversed on her so now she feels like a cockroach and wants to be spat on.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 685
(10/29/03 10:51 pm)
Reply

Re: The right attitude - Majick

---

A majickal victory of insane proportion.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1238
(10/30/03 12:30 am)
Reply

Blood Sugar Sex Majick

---

DEL wrote,

Quote:

---

One forum member called be a cockroach and wanted to spit on me. It reversed on her so now she feels like a cockroach and wants to be spat on.

---

Think twice before taking credit. Think three times before declaring the war over. I doubt this forum member feels the way you claim.

DEL, have you been listening to old Red Hot Chili Peppers albums?

Tharan

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 790
(10/30/03 7:14 am)
Reply

Re: The right attitude - Majick

---

Quote:

---

Dave Toast:
A majickal victory of insane proportion.

---

Excellent! Mr. Toast.
Insanity is one abyss and Criminality the other.

You have all the elements Mr. Toast. The day you discover your spirituality the world will tremble.

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31r
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The righteous profession

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                               | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 825(11/13/03 6:22 pm)Reply       |  The righteous profession <hr/> Making money out of child abuse and divorce is no better than making money out of doing experiments on live animals to make products safe us humans to enjoy, possibly.Which is the most righteous or the most evil profession you can think of? |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 272(11/13/03 7:26 pm)Reply      |  Re: The righteous profession <hr/> DEL, I got the impression that Hellena is helping people. Like any doctor, nurse and so on does. And they get paid for it. Big deal.What's your problem, your feeling of guilt?                                                |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 827(11/13/03 8:07 pm)Reply       |  Re: The righteous profession <hr/> No, I have found a righteous profession.                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1723(11/13/03 11:15 pm)Reply |  Re: The righteous profession <hr/> And it is...?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 751

(11/13/03 11:19 pm)

Reply

Re: The righteous profession

Details please?

Quote:

---

Making money out of child abuse and divorce is no better than making money out of doing experiments on live animals to make products safe us humans to enjoy, possibly.

---

Ethics eh Del, the scope of your ignorance seems truly ubiquitous.

When you say "no better than", what do you mean by better?

Where do you see the parallels between your given examples?

Or did you just pick the second one for it's emotive gravitas?

What is it to "make money out of child abuse and divorce"?

For example, what of the therapist who, in their own way, tries to help the abused child come to terms with their experience and makes their money in so doing? What of the prison service employee who works on the paedophile wing and makes their money overseeing child abusers' internment? How about the herbalist who might make some money in selling healing potions to the damaged victim in search of alms? What of the evil bus driver who gets paid whilst delivering the victims to their abused people workshop? What of the marriage counselor who advises the opinion to a couple that divorce is their best option, and gets paid for it? What of the estate agent who makes money in the fallout? What of the car salesman who takes this estate agent's dirty money in exchange for goods? And what of Mercedes, what of Shell Oil, what of the Taxman?

Edited by: Dave Toast at: 11/13/03 11:19 pm

Hellane

Registered User

Posts: 6

(11/13/03 11:47 pm)

Reply

ezSupporter

Re: The righteous profession

DEL said:

Quote:

---

Making money out of child abuse and divorce is no better than making money out of doing experiments on live animals to make products safe us humans to enjoy, possibly.

---

I would have to disagree. Firstly, I don't make much money--much of what I do is probono or at an extremely reduced rate. I don't know if you could even consider it **making money** because after expenses, I probably lose money.

Perhaps if I were doing a research project on the effects of child abuse or divorce on a certain population of children, and my sole purpose was to become some world famous prominent attorney as a result of said research, that you could consider analogous to doing experiments on live animals, although not quite so gruesome (arguably).

That being said, I believe that I am **helping** people. But I will ask you the following questions:

Is the good feeling that you get from helping people selfish, since you are motivated by your own need to contribute to society, improve your self-esteem, be a do-gooder, etc.? Can anyone's intentions in helping people be pure, or is there always some agenda, some other motivation?

I question this because, in my community I am seen as someone who is **helping** people, and commended on my accomplishments--but if I am getting some reward from doing this job, whatever the internal reward is, why should I be commended? Perhaps I want to be seen as a do-gooder (this is not my motivation)--and it is all for outward appearances. How do you know what is truly in someone's heart when they are **helping** people.

Perhaps we shouldn't even ask--just be grateful that people are doing this work?

Quote:

---

Which is the most righteous or the most evil profession you can think of?

---

I can find something righteous or evil in almost every profession. For example, the defense attorney who represents a serial killer--he is not evil (perhaps--depends on the defense attorney)because he is filling a much needed role in our legal world, defending the constitution and all it stands for (blah, blah, blah--I won't bore you with legalese)keeping the prosecution from corruption and so on.

And Mother Teresa--who knows what was in her heart? Why was she helping people? To ward off her own personal demons? Perhaps you think I am projecting.

I actually give people credit for working at all, as I've seen so many people living off the government around here that I think it is noble to work at McDonald's, as long as you are trying.

Oh wise ones, what is your profession???

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1726

(11/14/03 12:04 am)

Reply

 Re: The righteous profession

---

I don't profess to anything but the love of wisdom. It's true that most official service is a 'keeping up appearances' for the huge part of the population whose work is labour intensive physically, that would go mad if they didn't have a day-time activity that they were in some way recognised for.

I am despairing for myself, not pitying, which means I have cast my thought into the future ...and I have great hope for humanity!

I think it is noble not to work, but to rule!

|                                                                                                   |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 104(11/14/03 11:32 am)Reply   Edit |  Re: The righteous profession <hr/> I think it is noble not to work, but to rule! It is noblest to work at ruling yourself (and then to helping others to rule themselves). Rhett                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 828(11/14/03 11:39 am)Reply                   |  Re: The righteous profession <hr/> Nice work Mr. Toast. You are asking all the right questions. Generating a good level of "emotive gravitas".                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1730(11/14/03 11:43 am)Reply              |  --- <hr/> In a certain sense I agree with you, at least with the first part, but which others? Not all people are capable of ruling themselves.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 829(11/14/03 11:48 am)Reply                   |  Re: The righteous profession <hr/> Quote: <hr/> HellaneI would have to disagree. Firstly, I don't make much money-- much of what I do is probono or at an extremely reduced rate. I don't know if you could even consider it making money because after expenses, I probably lose money. <hr/> What has "much" money got to do with it. Either you get payed or you don't.What do you mean you don't know if you are "making money" after expenses? Have you really examined what you called expenses?What do you mean by "probably lose money"? You mean you don't keep accounts? Some people chose to help themselves under the guise of helping others. |

|                                                                                                                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 830(11/14/03 11:50 am)Reply                                                                                                          |  Re: The righteous profession <hr/> You all know the righteous profession already so stop pretending you don't. I do not need to tell you. You already know that you will arrive at it by process of elimination.                                                                                                       |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 761(11/14/03 12:08 pm)Reply                   |  Re: The righteous profession <hr/> It's Fishing isn't it?Or golf?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1734(11/14/03 12:19 pm)Reply                                                                                                     |  ---- <hr/> It's just not cricket, in fact, it's sheer handbaggery!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|  violetmoon22Registered UserPosts: 3(11/14/03 1:01 pm)ReplyezSupporter |  Re: The righteous profession <hr/> Quote: <hr/> What has "much" money got to do with it. Either you get payed or you don't. <hr/> Quote: <hr/> What do you mean you don't know if you are "making money" after expenses? Have you really examined what you called expenses? <hr/> |

|                                                                                                                                                                                   |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                                   | DEL, do you really want to be bored by my accounting practicies? Suffice it to say that I am not in the business to make money, I am in the do-gooder stage of my life right now. I take on indigent clients pro bono and I take on cases at a reduced rate. At the end of the year I will have my accountant go over how the year went, and I'm sure he'll be encouraging me to try and find high paying clients-but not my style.                                                                          |
|  HellaneRegistered UserPosts: 7(11/14/03 1:05 pm)ReplyezSupporter |  Re: The righteous profession <hr/> By the way--someday I may in the business of making real money--it's just not the time yet. How righteous was the judge who refused to take down the 10 commandments at his courthouse and now they fired him. The people of that state think God has higher things for him and are glad that he fought the ten commandment fight. Is that a righteous profession? |
| 1TheMasterRegistered UserPosts: 181(11/14/03 2:08 pm)Reply                                                                                             |  Re: The righteous profession <hr/> There's no such thing as a righteous profession. The Two terms are mutually exclusive.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 831(11/14/03 5:38 pm)Reply                                                                                                    |  Re: The righteous profession <hr/> Quote: <hr/> I am in the do-gooder stage of my life right now. <hr/> So you think you are good?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |

 Hellane
Registered User
Posts: 12
(11/15/03 2:31 pm)
Reply
ezSupporter

 Re: The righteous profession

---

Quote:

---

So you think you are good?

---

No I do not. Maybe that's why I'm doing this work--to feel like I am good--and it's not working.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 834
(11/16/03 1:16 pm)
Reply

 Re: The righteous profession

---

Quote:

---

Hellane:
No I do not. Maybe that's why I'm doing this work--to feel like I am good--and it's not working.

---

Why did you feel the need to tell everyone your profession?
Did it think it would make you appear wiser and more respectable?

 Hellane
Registered User
Posts: 17
(11/16/03 1:50 pm)
Reply
ezSupporter

 Re: The righteous profession

---

Quote:

---

Why did you feel the need to tell everyone your profession?

---

Quote:

---

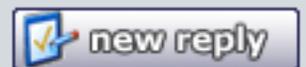

Did it think it would make you appear wiser and more respectable?

---

This is an excellent question. I think I am a little intimidated by this board and perhaps I wanted to gain a little credibility with my JD. I guess a JD is not very impressive to you folks, being genuises and all... :)

I am actually a high school drop out, so maybe I'm a little too *proud* of the JD.

You seem a little sensitive to this area--professions. What is your profession? Do you feel it doesn't live up to your genius?

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

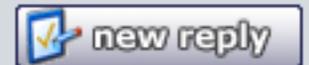

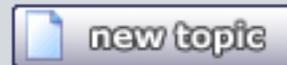

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The rocket engines of the mind

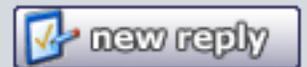

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                             | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 957(1/27/04 6:54 pm)Reply      | The rocket engines of the mind <hr/> I do not know a lot about space. Perhaps the space expert could clarify where necessary. As far as I understand things move in space either through the force of gravity or as a result of explosions.The rocket engine is a controlled explosion.It would take too much fuel to drive around in space like one drives a car around the city.So I assume rockets are used to launch the spaceship so that the gravity of the various planets it will pass by will help to guide and even propel the spaceship to it's final destination. Yes/No? My theory.The Genius can create rocket engines of the mind. Controlled explosions (?) which are carefully timed and guided so that they can navigate the spaceships (concepts, ideas, visions) around the planets (habits, belief, prejudice) of the mind. Does this make any sense before I go any further? |
| Naturyl Registered UserPosts: 144(1/27/04 7:03 pm)Reply | Re: The rocket engines of the mind <hr/> Possibly, I don't know. Go on, it sounds interesting.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |

|                                                                                   |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 959(1/28/04 6:16 pm)Reply     | The rocket engines of the mind <hr/> Well, you to build the first rocket engine you must be on a planet (habits, belief, prejudice) that you wish to fly from.On a clear night (calm thinking) you can become aware of the other planets and also of the distances between.                                                                                                              |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 661(1/29/04 8:26 am)Reply | Re: The rocket engines of the mind <hr/> That's fucking interesting.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 960(1/29/04 9:44 am)Reply     | The rocket engines of the mind <hr/> Studying (self-examination) the planets (habits, belief, prejudice) of the mind takes a lot of effort and focus. To be open minded about yourself is like the construction of the telescope (methodical self-examination techniques like meditation).Many planets can be seen with the naked eye (everyday situations that expose your prejudices). |

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

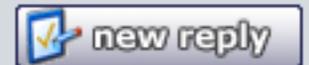

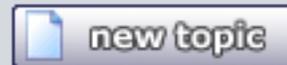

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The role of lying in the life of truth

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                               | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 1775(8/28/03 12:32 pm)Reply |  The role of lying in the life of truth <hr/> It is interesting to analyze the role of lying in the mind of the perfectly truthful individual. Contrary to what one might expect, telling a lie needn't be at odds with being perfectly truthful. Sometimes even the perfect sage has occasions to lie. A person who speaks the truth at all times and in all circumstances is essentially an aimless person who has no values. He just articulates what is on his mind without thought for the consequences. His truthfulness is actually the product of a deeper lie which underpins his entire existence - namely, that he refrains from systematically promoting consciousness of truth in others. In other words, his truthfulness is, at best, confined to his own mind. He does not bother himself with promoting truthfulness in others. His commitment to truth is thus selective and halfhearted. A classic example which illustrates this principle concerns the man who is running away from an axe murderer and takes refuge inside your house. The axe murderer knocks on your front door and asks if you have seen the man he is chasing, and you have the choice of whether to lie or tell the truth. The impulsive truthteller who tells the truth in all circumstances, no matter what, will obviously choose to condemn the man hiding in your house to death. But what if the man in hiding is an enlightened sage? By telling the truth and condemning him to death you effectively undermine the cause of wisdom by eliminating a potent teacher. Hundreds, perhaps thousands of | people in the future would be robbed of an important source of wisdom. Thus, the compulsive truthteller would in fact be harming wisdom and truth in the long run by telling the truth in this circumstance.

So in a very real sense, the compulsive truthteller is still quite unconscious in his perceptiveness and still a long way short of being wise.

MKFaizi
Registered User
Posts: 1055
(8/28/03 1:11 pm)
Reply

Re: The role of lying in the life of truth

---

Very thought provoking post. This is much appreciated by me.

I think about exactly this sort of thing every day of my life. It has to do with judgment and ethics.

I am in too much need of sleep to do justice to it now. I hope that I will be able to write on this within the next few days.

Faizi

Rairun
Registered User
Posts: 121
(8/28/03 2:54 pm)
Reply

Re: The role of lying in the life of truth

---

The truthfulness related to enlightened people has more to do with their values than to the content of their words. Someone would be enlightened when external factors don't stop them from being truthful to themselves. When speaking about external factors, I also include their own ideas that are in conflict with their Will (the Will being their most basic preferences that have no grounding).

In the example you gave, a sage would lie and save the other sage if his will created a ground for valuing his life. It's not necessary for a sage to have a Will that grounds the desire to save lives or to disseminate wisdom though. If he didn't have such Will, he could tell the truth and let the other sage die. As I said, neither the truth nor the lie determines if a person is enlightened. It's the truthfulness in the process that does.

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 1375

(8/28/03 3:09 pm)

Reply

 Re: The role of lying in the life of truth

---

Philosophically and spiritually, "tuthfullness" means: Truth-full-ness. Full of Truth. In other words, the truthful person is living fully in the light of Truth (Reality).

It really has nothing to do with the common, everyday notion of truthfulness (i.e. not lying).

Dan Rowden

Rairun

Registered User

Posts: 122

(8/28/03 3:16 pm)

Reply

 Re: The role of lying in the life of truth

---

Edit: I started writing before Dan posted, so "you" is referring to David.

I was mostly agreeing with you, but some of your arguments seemed out of place to me. Mainly this one:

"A person who speaks the truth at all times and in all circumstances is essentially an aimless person who has no values. He just articulates what is on his mind without thought for the consequences. His truthfulness is actually the product of a deeper lie which underpins his entire existence - namely, that he refrains from systematically promoting consciousness of truth in others. In other words, his truthfulness is, at best, confined to his own mind. He does not bother himself with promoting truthfulness in others. His commitment to truth is thus selective and halfhearted."

First, a person who speaks the truth at all times still has Will, so there are still values underpinning their existence. A person who has no values wouldn't be aimless, they would be dead, simply because they wouldn't be able to move. A person like that is a great example of someone whose ideas go against their Will (unless their Will grounds, at all times, the desire not to lie - but that is highly unlikely in my opinion).

Second, refraining from systematically promoting consciousness of truth in others is not an invalid value. Promoting truth is no more valid than it, as it has no further grounding.

Edited by: Rairun at: 8/28/03 3:18 pm

WolfsonJakk

Registered User

Posts: 1150

(8/28/03 4:53 pm)

Reply

Re: The role of lying in the life of truth

---

There is an interesting concept which relates that "truth" is determined by the winners (be it political or military victors). Thus, it would seem truth lies somewhere in between, relative to human perspective and history.

An example might be the available evidence of the Japanese invasion of Korea. The first invasion certainly did not achieve the goals it set out to achieve but it did unify Japan into an emotional alliance with other habitants of the Japanese island nation. The of course led to the second invasion and ultimately the irrational decision to open a front with America who were actively disrupting their supply lines. Supply lines were shrinking combined with ancient samurai pride of duty over personal feelings/misgivings. Thus the kamikazi. A kind of Muslim martyrship. Another failure.

In a sense it re-invigorates the role of Le Bete Humain over the role of sage. Transcendance becomes ideal but not practical. Constant struggle under this scenario, it seems, with no concrete earthly rewards, reminiscent of many historical Muslim, Rastafarian, Christian pursuits, not to mention a handful of other religious sects with similar histories and ambitions.

Zen and other earthly rewarding sects become questionable at best for many of these temporal participants. The dividing line between self and community seemingly became confusing for many important historical leaders.

Tharan

*EDIT* spelling

Edited by: WolfsonJakk at: 8/28/03 5:15 pm

DEL

Registered User

Posts: 624

(8/28/03 5:42 pm)

Reply

Re: The role of lying in the life of truth

---

Quote:

---

WolfsonJakk:

Transcendence becomes ideal but not practical. Constant struggle under this scenario, it seems, with no concrete earthly rewards, reminiscent of many historical Muslim, Rastafarian, Christian pursuits, not to mention a handful of other religious sects with similar histories and ambitions.

---

Depends what you mean by practical.

A great religious leader may decide that God has given him and his followers the piece of land where you live. So to be "practical" you might decide to move out or get you head chopped off or even blown up.

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1056

(8/29/03 8:20 am)

Reply

Re: The role of lying in the life of truth

---

Well, we have gotten off into religion now. I reckon that's inevitable -- kind of like talking about sex is inevitable.

But I am interested more in the nuts and bolts aspects of the question of lying. I think about this every day of my life. I think it is important because it involves the ethics of truth.

I am a terrible liar. Kind of like the little boy in the famous legend of George Washington in which Little George confesses to chopping down a cherry tree. I have great difficulty telling a lie. I can be tactful but I have a problem lying. I can do it but it's difficult. It is usually easy to see when I am lying. I have a very transparent face or character when I lie. I would have made a poor lawyer or politician or cop.

I recently enjoyed a day in court as a spectator. Interesting process. The law guarantees that an individual is fucked coming and going. Guilt or innocence hardly matters. In the eyes of the law, most of us are guilty as hell. Simple justice has little to do with it. For the most part, the judge is persuaded by the prosecutor who is a constant figure in court. Defense lawyers are, unless they are extremely and unusually expert, basically limp dicks. They are tender little sparrows compared to the great cock prosecutor who struts before the judge's bench like a trained, spurred bantam on a barbed wire leash, crowing out half truths in favor of the people.

What people? The "people" are a farce. The "act" of court is a farce -- because it is such an act. It is rather interesting how "the act" mimics life. It's a joke and the individual is the brunt of it. Unless you know the law thoroughly, you don't stand a chance.

As David pointed out, honesty is not always the best policy. However, I do think that honesty is nearly always the best policy.

I think it would be highly interesting to see honesty in a court of law. However, I don't think that law and honesty are compatible.

Faizi

MKFaizi

Registered User
Posts: 1057
(8/29/03 9:55 am)
Reply

 Re: The role of lying in the life of truth

I think truthfulness is a matter of judgment. Sound judgment is a matter of wisdom. Anyone can judge but the ability to judge does not guarantee wisdom. People make unconscious judgments all the time. Charlie Manson's followers judged Charlie to be a leader worthy of Christ. The followers of Jim Jones judged him to be a leader worthy of Christ. The American people -- for a time -- judged George W. Bush to be a great leader.

A monkey can make a judgment. But it takes a wholly conscious human being to make a wise judgment.

For instance, the press of the United States should feel shame for not questioning -- until well after the fact -- the validity of the current Iraq quagmire. I will never forget the lying of Colin Powell before the United Nations. He willingly told absolute lies. Anyone would have thought that Iraq was fully capable of invading the United States and raping and killing its women and children and sacking its towns.

US journalists were remiss in their duties as devil's advocates. Bush and his dogs were given full rein. I would hang my head in shame if I was an American journalist. Questions after the fact are not questions. Questions after the fact are the ruminations of vultures.

Complete cultist-opportunistic fabrication manufactured on the ashen coattails of 9/11. It was a deliberate play on fear.

The entire "reason" for going to war with Iraq was a lie.

This is why I have trouble with lying. Few -- if any -- lies are told for the protection of wisdom. Generally, lies are told for the protection of earthly power and interest.

I think Jesus may be a good example of one who told the truth entirely for the sake of wisdom. His truthfulness cost him -- not only because he was put to death but because his message was put to death by religion.

Yes, it is mindless to blurt things out or to babble so called truth in an idiotic manner for nothing in Leo-fashion. But to tell the truth for the sake of wisdom requires thought and contemplation. It also entails risk and the calculation of risk.

Was Jesus an honest, drooling, liberal fool for chasing the money-changers out of the temples? I don't think so. I think that was his finest moment.

I may be capable of a fib or two but, if push came to shove, I have no problem telling the truth of my convictions and realizations.

I recently did that in a personal confrontation with two Xians. Not your usual tit for tat friendly, intellectual Jesus argument in "you quote-I quote" form. I don't engage in that crap. I am not interested in hearing about how Jesus died for the sins of certain people. I could not care less.

No, these assholes were stepping on my territory. That was invasive. I don't encroach on their turf. Because they are in the majority here, I tolerate a certain amount of bullshit. But there does come that point when they cross a line.

They crossed it and I let them have a taste of truth with both barrels. I have absolutely no respect for these two people.

I have heard the threats they have made against me. I have heard the accusations. They are spreading the gospel all over town.

I have faith that the storm will calm down of its own accord.

Like Jesus, I turn the other cheek -- hardly an act of submission.

Faizi

Edited by: MKFaizi at: 8/29/03 10:07 am

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 307

(8/29/03 1:29 pm)

Reply

 Re: The role of lying in the life of truth

---

I'm not buying it.

When one steps back and purposefully lies for the sake of a cause, that just provides the catalyst for further untruths – and then one loses track of where to draw the line.

Most lies are not about real dangers but are about maintaining relationships and personal interests. People often tell lies to build up another's confidence – but if those people had not originally been lied to then they would have learnt to come to grips with their shortcomings in the meantime and channelled their energies into more positive areas, people who are lied to in this fashion lose touch with reality and end up living a fantasy.

Lies are the reason the world is so dysfunctional – just as past truths cause more truths, past lies simply cause more lies - so is it not reasonable to hate lies and to refuse to make them – except when under physical danger and how often does that occur?

Can't say I like the example either – it is too extreme. A more real life example is needed – what the hell is an enlightened sage doing getting chased by an axe murderer? – surely an enlightened sage would not get themselves into such a position, unless of course they didn't know when to lie or to shut up, which would make them a compulsive truth teller not a sage. If the so-called sage is just a compulsive truth teller like the dobberinerer, then it is tit for tat.

Also it seems to me that the process of becoming enlightened is to learn how to be truthful, so when a person is an apprentice sage, they will be attempting to speak the truth on all matters. Would not it be disadvantageous to this learning process if a master sage gives them the option to lie, to hide the hard personal truths from their consciousness. Sages who lie end up as religious leaders.

The whole enlightenment vs. values business is still a conundrum to me. Does not perfect truth automatically mean that one should not have values, as any value would interfere with the perfectiveness of the truth? Aren't values about emotion? Aren't values attachments? Don't values make truth personal? I know one must value something but I was under the impression that enlightened folk were primarily above values, their only value being true compassion – which is assisting others to progress over the long term. Such compassion does not mean one can tell lies where the truth would be harmful to the other person – although one can decide to defer telling the

|                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                     | person the truth. I'm more interested in what induced the post than the post itself. Something fishy about it.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1423(8/29/03 3:20 pm)Reply  |  --- <hr/> David always smells fishy Jim, it's his true sage and ultimate reality reacting.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 1776(8/29/03 3:30 pm)Reply |  re: <hr/> Jimhaz wrote: Quote: <hr/> I'm not buying it. <hr/> I'm not selling it. Quote: <hr/> I'm more interested in what induced the post than the post itself. Something fishy about it. <hr/> I've been reflecting over the past few days on the "paradox" of the perfectly truthful persons's need to lie, on occasion. Or to put it another way, on the lie of compulsive truthfulness. I thought forum members might be interested. Quote: <hr/> When one steps back and purposefully lies for the sake of a cause, that just provides the catalyst for further untruths – and then one loses track of where to draw the line. <hr/> The trouble is, if you value anything at all in this world, even as something |

as lofty as the promotion of wisdom, you automatically create the need to protect this value, even to the point of lying for it. If you didn't, then your commitment to this value would be piece-meal.

The key issue for the wisdom-valuer, then, is not whether he can refrain from lying at all times - which, as I have just articulated, is impossible due to the value he places on wisdom - but whether the lies he creates are wise in nature and lack any trace of ego. Obviously, he would want to minimize the telling of lies as much as possible, if for no other reason that to maintain his credibility as a teacher of Truth. But if he does need to lie, then ideally, it would need to be from the purest of motivations.

Quote:

---

Most lies are not about real dangers but are about maintaining relationships and personal interests. People often tell lies to build up another's confidence – but if those people had not originally been lied to then they would have learnt to come to grips with their shortcomings in the meantime and channelled their energies into more positive areas, people who are lied to in this fashion lose touch with reality and end up living a fantasy.

Lies are the reason the world is so dysfunctional – just as past truths cause more truths, past lies simply cause more lies - so is it not reasonable to hate lies and to refuse to make them – except when under physical danger and how often does that occur?

---

I basically agree with this. But still the fact remains, if you value anything at all - and as human beings, we cannot help but value "something" - then the occasional lie will be generated as a matter of course, no matter how hard you try to put an end to it.

The recognition that it is impossible not to lie on occasion is part and parcel of being perfect truthful.

Quote:

---

Can't say I like the example either – it is too extreme. A more real life example is needed – what the hell is an enlightened sage doing getting chased by an axe murderer? – surely an enlightened sage would not get themselves into such a position, unless of course they didn't know when to lie or to shut up, which would make them a compulsive truth teller not a sage. If the so-called sage is just a compulsive truth teller like the dobberinerer, then it is tit for tat.

---

Perhaps the sage was just walking down the street minding his own business and happened to be in the wrong place at the wrong time. He might have accidentally bumped into him as the axe murder was on the verge of entering a psychotic state.

Quote:

---

Also it seems to me that the process of becoming enlightened is to learn how to be truthful, so when a person is an apprentice sage, they will be attempting to speak the truth on all matters. Would not it be disadvantageous to this learning process if a master sage gives them the option to lie, to hide the hard personal truths from their consciousness. Sages who lie end up as religious leaders.

---

If the lies are spoken out of egotism, yes.

On the other side of the coin, if the apprentice is too dependent upon his teacher's words for his psychological and spiritual well-being, then it may be of benefit to him to realize that his master may be deceiving him.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 1777

(8/29/03 4:01 pm)

Reply

 re:

---

Jimhaz wrote:

Quote:

---

The whole enlightenment vs. values business is still a conundrum to me. Does not perfect truth automatically mean that one should not have values, as any value would interfere with the perfectiveness of the truth?

---

If one decides, for the sake of truth, to be completely without values, including the value of prompting other people to become enlightened, then in effect, one is merely valuing truth in one small section of the Universe - namely, within one's own mind. At the same time, one is neglecting the needs of one's larger self, our true self which spans the totality and includes all other people, simply for the sake of indulging in a localized expression of truthfulness.

In other words, one is indulging in a form of petty selfishness, wherein consciousness of truth is only valued in one part of the Universe, which happens to be in one's own mind, and not everywhere.

Quote:

---

Aren't values about emotion? Aren't values attachments?

---

They can be, but not necessarily so. A plant values the presence of sunlight, even to the point of pushing its leaves and flowers upwards to capture as much of it as it can. But it doesn't value sunlight emotionally. It ultimately couldn't care less whether it lived or died.

Similarly, a computer values truth in the sense that it is programmed to produce correct answers. It does this automatically whenever it is given an appropriate problem to solve. And yet it doesn't get upset if there are bugs in its programming and it fails to produce the right solution.

Enlightened people are like robots in that they are "programmed" to value truth and to express it as much as possible, but they don't become upset if they are forced to lie on occasion.

Quote:

---

Don't values make truth personal? I know one must value something but I was under the impression that enlightened folk were primarily above values, their only value being true compassion – which is assisting others to progress over the long term. Such compassion does not mean one can tell lies where the truth would be harmful to the other person – although one can decide to defer telling the person the truth.

---

Which, in itself, is a form of lying. One is withholding the full and free expression of truth for the sake of a value - in this case, the future development of one's companion.

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 313

(8/29/03 4:17 pm)

Reply

 Re: re:

---

I wont respond to your last post.

I don't disagree with what you've said - I think it is a good response - I have to let it sink in a bit - work its way through my subconscious.

Hywel

Registered User

Posts: 6

(8/30/03 4:39 am)

Reply

 re:

---

To David

Quote:

---

If one decides, for the sake of truth, to be completely without values, including the value of prompting other people to become enlightened, then in effect, one is merely valuing truth in one small section of the Universe - namely, within one's own mind. At the same time, one is neglecting the needs of one's larger self, our true self which spans the totality and includes all other people, simply for the sake of indulging in a localized expression of truthfulness.

---

No you aren't, you are merely recognising that as all things are essentially valueless, that knowledge of truth is valueless. Then it merely becomes no more important to help a friend discover truth than it is to help them fix their car. To discover that all things are valueless and then decide to value this knowledge seems the highest hypocrisy!

Quote:

---

Quote:

---

Aren't values about emotion? Aren't values attac

---

They can be, but not necessarily so. A plant values the presence of sunlight, even to the point of pushing its leaves and flowers upwards to capture as much of it as it can. But it doesn't value sunlight emotionally. It ultimately couldn't care less whether it lived or died. [/quote]

Sorry, i thought by "value" you meant a judgement of worth. Under the idea of non-emotional valuing, clearly everyone values breathing above truth and everything else, but i dont see how thats relevant to the discussion.

Quote:

---

Similarly, a computer values truth in the sense that it is programmed to produce correct answers. It does this automatically whenever it is given an appropriate problem to solve. And yet it doesn't get upset if there are bugs in its programming and it fails to produce the right solution.

---

This may seem pedantic but my computer regularly crashes out completely due to bugs in the programming. I would say that was pretty upset.

Quote:

---

Enlightened people are like robots in that they are "programmed" to value truth and to express it as much as possible, but they don't become upset if they are forced to lie on occasion.

---

Im sorry, no-one is forced to lie, it may be a bad idea to tell the truth if a christian has a gun to your head and says "Is Jesus your Savior?", but you still have a choice.

Quote:

---

Which, in itself, is a form of lying. One is withholding the full and free expression of truth for the sake of a value - in this case, the future development of one's companion.

---

I agree with this, and that is what you would be guilty of if you lied for the value of wisdom. I can understand that you might modify the expression of truth depending on the audience, shouting "A=A!" at someone in the street is unlikely to have a positive effect in terms of wisdom, while shouting "All boundaries are in your head!" might provoke a reaction that could lead somewhere.

The example you give for "lieing for truth", such as if a person was too dependent on your instruction, couldnt you just say "you are too dependent on my teaching, you are the only ultimate authority, make sure you realise that", and be truthful?

Perhaps you could give a clearer example of being forced to lie for the cause of truth.

It still seems like -

Lieing for the cause of truth = Fucking for the cause of virginity.

To Dan,

Quote:

---

Philosophically and spiritually, "truthfulness" means: Truthfulness. Full of Truth. In other words, the truthful person is living fully in the light of Truth (Reality).
It really has nothing to do with the common, everyday notion of truthfulness (i.e. not lying).

---

It has everything to do with it, if i was happy with lies i would probably be a christian. Truth seekers are only interested in what is true, hence the name. You are "Full of Truth" but still have room for lies? Living in the light of truth you wish to pretend otherwise?

Hywel

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1385
(8/30/03 2:06 pm)
Reply

Re: re:

---

Conventional lying (distortion of facts for practical purposes) are completely different from delusional mind states such as those expressed by Christians. Lying in a conscious manner demands that a truthful state be known. Therefore the person lying still resides in the realm of truth.

Being at all times truthful in the normal sense of that term is self-evidently stupid.

Dan Rowden

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 634
(8/30/03 6:27 pm)
Reply

The role of lying in the life of truth

---

Quote:

---

DavidQuinn000:

So in a very real sense, the compulsive truth teller is still quite unconscious in his perceptiveness and still a long way short of being wise.

---

Absolute

Hywel
Registered User
Posts: 7
(8/30/03 8:23 pm)
Reply

 Re: The original post of this thread

---

Quote:

---

The impulsive truthteller who tells the truth in all circumstances, no matter what, will obviously choose to condemn the man hiding in your house to death. But what if the man in hiding is an enlightened sage? By telling the truth and condemning him to death you effectively undermine the cause of wisdom by eliminating a potent teacher. Hundreds, perhaps thousands of people in the future would be robbed of an important source of wisdom. Thus, the compulsive truthteller would in fact be harming wisdom and truth in the long run by telling the truth in this circumstance.

---

If you lied to save the sage, you would be valueing sages and "holders of wisdom", not truth. While this is an understandable point of view for a self-professed sage, it has very little to do with truth, which remains completely unaffected by the fate of a human being.

Hywel
Registered User
Posts: 8
(8/30/03 8:44 pm)
Reply

 Re:

---

Quote:

---

Conventional lying (distortion of facts for practical purposes) are completely different from delusional mind states such as those expressed by Christians. Lying in a conscious manner demands that a truthful state be known. Therefore the person lying still resides in the realm of truth.

Being at all times truthful in the normal sense of that term is self-evidently stupid.

---

I agree that lying can certainly make life a lot easier. I have a friend who, when Jehovahs Witnesses call, tells them that hes a devil worshipper, and they leave. Me, with my stupid ideas that i can help people realise the truth, i invite them in and talk to them for hours. Strangely, they never return...

Clearly, lying has many advantages in everyday life, but it is nevertheless "withholding the full and free expression of truth for the sake of a value", whether that is your life, sages, or time wasted having to talk to Jehovahs Witnesses.

I still cant think of a situation where a teacher of truth lying to a student would be in the interests of truth (or the student).

Hywel

P.S. Indeed you have to know the truth in order to lie, so i say again :-

Living in the light of truth you wish to pretend otherwise?

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 557
(8/30/03 11:57 pm)
Reply

 Re: Re:

---

Consistent truthfulness in one's dealings with the world at large seems to be a utopian ideal. It would work fine, perfectly in fact, if that was the way of the world but that is far from being the case.

The wise individual would surely be aware of the constraints of their environment and the necessity of generally working within them.

With regard to this betraying their attachments, it would more seem to betray their agenda which would in turn point to their motivations and so to their values. Are one's values based on one's attachments? Most likely, though perhaps not necessarily.

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1065

(8/31/03 9:42 am)

Reply

 Re: Re:

Quote:

Strangely, they never return...

That struck me as exceedingly funny.

Faizi

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

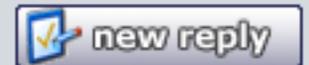

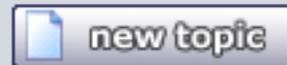

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The role of lying in the life of truth

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                 | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 1778(8/31/03 5:57 pm)Reply  |  Re: re: <hr/> Hywel wrote: Quote: <hr/> DQ: The impulsive truthteller who tells the truth in all circumstances, no matter what, will obviously choose to condemn the man hiding in your house to death. But what if the man in hiding is an enlightened sage? By telling the truth and condemning him to death you effectively undermine the cause of wisdom by eliminating a potent teacher. Hundreds, perhaps thousands of people in the future would be robbed of an important source of wisdom. Thus, the compulsive truthteller would in fact be harming wisdom and truth in the long run by telling the truth in this circumstance. Hwl: If you lied to save the sage, you would be valueing sages and "holders of wisdom", not truth. While this is an understandable point of view for a self-professed sage, it has very little to do with truth, which remains completely unaffected by the fate of a human being. <hr/> The question is, can one value truth without valuing consciousness of truth? And can one value consciousness of truth without valuing it in all human beings? |

Quote:

---

DQ: If one decides, for the sake of truth, to be completely without values, including the value of prompting other people to become enlightened, then in effect, one is merely valuing truth in one small section of the Universe - namely, within one's own mind. At the same time, one is neglecting the needs of one's larger self, our true self which spans the totality and includes all other people, simply for the sake of indulging in a localized expression of truthfulness.

Hwl: No you aren't, you are merely recognising that as all things are essentially valueless, that knowledge of truth is valueless. Then it merely becomes no more important to help a friend discover truth than it is to help them fix their car. To discover that all things are valueless and then decide to value this knowledge seems the highest hypocrisy!

---

To allow the recognition that all things are valueless to influence one's thinking to the point where one no longer places value on truth is just as hypocritical. For this very process itself entails a valuing of truth - in this case, the "truth" that all things are valueless.

In any case, it isn't really true that all things are valueless. A thing necessarily has value to the degree that we place value on it.

Quote:

---

Jimhaz: Aren't values about emotion? Aren't values attachments?

DQ: They can be, but not necessarily so. A plant values the presence of sunlight, even to the point of pushing its leaves and flowers upwards to capture as much of it as it can. But it doesn't value sunlight emotionally. It ultimately couldn't care less whether it lived or died.

Hwl: Sorry, I thought by "value" you meant a judgement of worth.

---

That's correct. As far as the plant's survival is concerned, sunlight possesses worth.

At the same time, sunlight lacks worth as far as the plant's thoughts and emotions are concerned, primarily due to the fact that it has no thoughts or emotions.

Quote:

---

Under the idea of non-emotional valuing, clearly everyone values breathing above truth and everything else, but i dont see how thats relevant to the discussion.

---

It's not really true that everyone values breathing (or their own life) above everything else, as demonstrated by those who consciously sacrifice their lives for a cause - e.g. the Buddhist monks in Tibet who burn themselves to death in political protest.

My main point is that it is possible to have values without being emotionally attached to them, as illustrated by the example of plants, computers and sages.

Quote:

---

Im sorry, no-one is forced to lie, it may be a bad idea to tell the truth if a christian has a gun to your head and says "Is Jesus your Savior?", but you still have a choice.

---

If you were the only enlightened sage in the world (as far as you knew), and if you saw that the survival of wisdom depended upon your continuing to live, then you would literally have no choice but to lie. Your valuing of the survival of wisdom (that is, on the consciousness of truth in other human beings) would force you to lie.

On the other hand, you might perceive that wisdom would be better served if you did die. Your death could, if the circumstances were ripe, demonstrate the power of your wisdom and the height of your transcendence, which could conceivably spark something into action in the minds of those who witness your death. If that is what the sage perceives, then he would be forced to tell the truth.

Quote:

---

The example you give for "lying for truth", such as if a person was too dependent on your instruction, couldn't you just say "you are too dependent on my teaching, you are the only ultimate authority, make sure you realise that", and be truthful?

---

You could do, but it might not have the same impact. It would depend on the wisdom levels of the student in question.

Quote:

---

Perhaps you could give a clearer example of being forced to lie for the cause of truth.

---

Here is an interesting example. It may well be that the religion of Buddhism is little more than a giant lie concocted by Gautama Siddharta (the original Buddha) for the purpose of preserving his highest wisdom. In other words, he created a religious community in which everyone was required to wear the same robes and the same haircut, and flooded it with realms of simplistic dogma and superficial rules, knowing that it would attract sheep-like individuals in droves. Although sheep-like individuals have no potential for wisdom, they tend to be very good at mundane things like building temples, copying texts, organizing lectures, administering communities and so on. The Buddha saw, perhaps, that they could be harnessed to create a vehicle in which his deepest truths would be preserved for the sake of those few advanced thinkers in future generations.

The process is a bit like a bird eating a tasty seed and flying away to defecate the seed in another spot. What attracts the bird is the taste and smell of the seed, while the most valuable part of the seed is the genetic material contained within it, which the bird knows nothing about. Similarly, the rituals, rules and dogmas of the Buddhist religion are the "tasty" elements which attract multitudes of witless monks, and it is through their mundane, sheep-like activity that they unwittingly preserve the genuine wisdom which exists deep within Buddhism. In other words, the Buddha created a lie for the sake of truth.

I don't know if this is what really happened, but I cannot think of any other (wise) reason why Buddhism was created in the first place. There is no other way that its existence can be justified from the point of view of wisdom. Unless, of course, the Buddha was really a Rashneesh-type charlatan. (But if that were the case, then the presence of the genuine wisdom which does exist in certain parts of Buddhism would still need to be explained.)

** edited for spelling - DQ **

Edited by: DavidQuinn000 at: 8/31/03 8:05 pm

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 879

(9/2/03 4:10 pm)

Reply

Re: re:

Not being a plant, you really don't know whether they have emotions, or whether they care if they live or die. I would err on the side that they do care, as they are living beings, and it is a fundamental law that living beings attempt to remain alive. Certainly there have been many experiments done, as much as 100 years ago, that seem to prove they are quite aware.

To cut the Buddha some slack, (not that I want to), perhaps way back then he lacked our modern cynicism born of hindsight about the way that herd people will turn great teachings into cumbersome and dead religions.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 1782

(9/2/03 6:22 pm)

Reply

Re: re:

Bird wrote:

Quote:

Not being a plant, you really don't know whether they have emotions, or whether they care if they live or die.

Nature would be rather cruel if She did create plants to have thoughts and emotions. Imagine being a tree and seeing a man with an axe coming towards you and not being able to defend yourself or run away.

Quote:

I would err on the side that they do care, as they are living beings, and it is a fundamental law that living beings attempt to remain alive.

---

Suiciders regularly break that law. As do male preying mantises (who get eaten by the female after sex), worker ants (who often sacrifice their lives for the sake of the colony), soldiers, political protesters, and so on. It would seem that life (or in our case, the ego) follows another law.

Quote:

---

To cut the Buddha some slack, (not that I want to), perhaps way back then he lacked our modern cynicism born of hindsight about the way that herd people will turn great teachings into cumbersome and dead religions.

---

He would have already observed the process in the older Hindu religions around him. It is precisely why he decided to break away from Hinduism in the first place.

He also must have known that by shaving people's heads and putting identical clothing on them, you are pressuring them to abandon their thoughts and their individuality. It is the reason why armies do the same thing, a phenomenon that he also would have observed during his lifetime. Army commanders want mindless, obedient soldiers, not independent, insightful thinkers.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 881
(9/3/03 3:56 am)
Reply

 Re: re:

---

Quote:

---

Nature would be rather cruel if She did create plants to have thoughts and emotions. Imagine being a tree and seeing a man with an axe coming towards you and not being able to defend yourself or run away.

---

Think of the plants that get real revenge, like poison ivy and stinging nettles. Then too, imagine how a baby bird feels when a predator approaches the nest and nabs him. Being able to run is probably a great distraction from the horror, but there is that moment when claws rake through the poor baby wildebeest's flesh and he knows he has lost. Or when a pack of hyenas surround and harrass an isolated animal. He can't run and he knows the outcome. Perhaps plants, like animals, have something like endorphins that take over. To ease the horror of approaching danger, perhaps they scream. Their reactions and individuality may be different than what we are used to conceiving of, but I suspect it exists and we should not assume it doesn't. I especially abhor when people speak a supposition as if it were a fact. "Plants don't have thoughts and emotions." We don't know that.

Suicides regularly break that law.

The law can be broken for a powerful superceding reason. The suicide is not really trying to break the law, they are looking for a way out of an intolerable situation. They are actually still trying to find happiness and integrity.

As do male praying mantises (who get eaten by the female after sex), worker ants (who often sacrifice their lives for the sake of the colony), soldiers, political protesters, and so on. It would seem that life (or in our case, the ego) follows another law.

The male praying mantis is not different than any other male. His contribution is to mate and to sacrifice himself for the young and the female. Some species sacrifice themselves more rapidly than others. See Simm.

Altruism - it is a matter of recognizing, not necessarily consciously, that the life of the community is connected to yours and that its preservation is able to supercede your personal presevation. It is a form of personal survival one step removed.

Quote:

---

It is precisely why he decided to break away from Hinduism in the first place.

---

Oh.

Quote:

---

He also must have known that by shaving people's heads and putting identical clothing on them, you are pressuring them to abandon their thoughts and their individuality. It is the reason why armies do the same thing, a phenomenon that he also would have observed during his lifetime. Army commanders want mindless, obedient soldiers, not independent, insightful thinkers.

---

Yes, I see the dilemma. I did not realize he started all that stuff right away, although I knew he had monks. But what of the argument that doing those things helps to combat ego, physical vanity, and identification with the wrong proofs of one's individuality, forcing one to go deeper within to find the source of identity?

It's funny though, in the tradition I grew up in, the sacrifice of the monks is to have long hair and unshaved beards.

Hywel
Registered User
Posts: 9
(9/3/03 4:58 am)
Reply

 Re: Re

---

Quote:

---

The question is, can one value truth without valuing consciousness of truth?

---

You cannot value truth. Truth is "valueless" in the same sense as "priceless". It is the changer of values, and therefore beyond them. Only consciousness of truth can be valued, but those who are not conscious are not qualified, and those who are, are in no position to judge as they clearly value it already.

Quote:

---

And can one value consciousness of truth without valuing it in all human beings?

---

No, one cant.

Quote:

---

To allow the recognition that all things are valueless to influence one's thinking to the point where one no longer places value on truth is just as hypocritical. For this very process itself entails a valuing of truth - in this case, the "truth" that all things are valueless.

---

To allow this recognition to influence the value i place on consciousness of truth is merely consistent.

Quote:

---

In any case, it isn't really true that all things are valueless. A thing necessarily has value to the degree that we place value on it.

---

Yes, and this is the only sense i which i understand "value". That which is placed upon it. A plant cannot be said to value sunlight, because without that value it would not be a plant. The plant does not choose to "place" this "value", so how can it be said to be a value.

Quote:

---

It's not really true that everyone values breathing (or their own life) above everything else, as demonstrated by those who consciously sacrifice their lives for a cause - e.g. the Buddhist monks in Tibet who burn themselves to death in political protest.

---

This is also the sense i meant when referring to breathing. A man hanging himself will still gasp for breath whether he values his life or not. We all "value" breathing without choice or we would long ago have died in our sleep. Given that we do not choose to breathe, how can we be said to value it?

Quote:

---

My main point is that it is possible to have values without being emotionally attached to them, as illustrated by the example of plants, computers and sages.

---

And my main point is that the only "values" we aren't emotionally attached to, are ones where we have no choice.

Quote:

---

If you were the only enlightened sage in the world (as far as you knew), and if you saw that the survival of wisdom depended upon your continuing to live, then you would literally have no choice but to lie. Your valuing of the survival of wisdom (that is, on the consciousness of truth in other human beings) would force you to lie.

---

This depends entirely on the value you place on "your wisdom", and more importantly your ability to teach it to others. I personally don't think wisdom can be taught in any real sense.

Quote:

---

On the other hand, you might perceive that wisdom would be better served if you did die. Your death could, if the circumstances were ripe, demonstrate the power of your wisdom and the height of your transcendence, which could conceivably spark something into action in the minds of those who witness your death. If that is what the sage perceives, then he would be forced to tell the truth.

---

It seems unlikely that you would risk your wisdom (which you clearly value) on the off-chance that your wisdom might be "reborn" in others. In fact it seems almost certain that you would lie in these circumstances and say "yes, Jesus is my savior". How unselfishly you would do what anyone else would do for selfish reasons!

Quote:

---

You could do, but it might not have the same impact. It would depend on the wisdom levels of the student in question.

---

All depends on this anyway. If for no other reason, surely telling the truth is easier than making up a lie!

I was going to comment on the Buddhism thing, although birdofhermes seems to have said it all while ive been typing...

Did the Buddha lay down all the laws and rules etc. personally?

Hywel

Rairun

Registered User

Posts: 123

(9/3/03 11:44 am)

Reply

 Re:

---

I agree with Hywel's points. All your decisions are grounded in preferences and those preferences rest in a value that has no grounding. You have no reasons to choose value X over value Y, because there are no further preferences. You just value it because that's what you are.

Assuming that truth states that all things are valueless, you cannot be someone who makes choices without being in contradiction with it. That way, valuing truth is as untruthful as valuing anything else. In that sense, no one is ever truthful. There can only be truthfulness and untruthfulness for a person within the boundaries of a value. You could say someone is as truthful as this value is actually put into practice.

It's possible for a person who values something other than truth to be described as truthful within the frame of that value. That would be the case when there are no barriers for this value to express itself. However, it's impossible for a person who values truth to be truthful within the frame of truth, because truth states that all things are valueless.

Edited by: Rairun at: 9/3/03 11:47 am

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 883
(9/3/03 2:55 pm)
Reply

Re: Re

---

Quote:

---

And my main point is that the only "values" we aren't emotionally attached to, are ones where we have no choice.

---

This may be true. I suspect so.

What I missed is how everyone seems to agree that everything is valueless. That smells fishy to me.

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1411
(9/3/03 3:51 pm)
Reply

Re: all things codly

---

It is simply an invalid notion. Truth does not say or demand that all things be valueless. If that were so, there could be no values and yet there self-evidently is.

Dan Rowden

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 1783
(9/4/03 10:21 am)
Reply

re:

---

Hywel wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: The question is, can one value truth without valuing consciousness of truth?

Hwl: You cannot value truth. Truth is "valueless" in the same sense as "priceless".

---

Consciousness of truth is also "valueless" or "priceless", unless we decide to place value on it.

Truth can also have value independently of whether or not we decide to place value on consciousness of truth. For example, the truth that all things are composed of parts is of value because without it nothing could exist at all. So, as far as the existence of everything in the Universe is concerned, such a truth is of value.

Quote:

---

It is the changer of values, and therefore beyond them.

---

I'm not sure what you mean.

Quote:

---

DQ: To allow the recognition that all things are valueless to influence one's thinking to the point where one no longer places value on truth is just as hypocritical. For this very process itself entails a valuing of truth - in this case, the "truth" that all things are valueless.

Hwl: To allow this recognition to influence the value i place on consciousness of truth is merely consistent.

---

That's right. You are being consistent in placing value on what you see as the "truth" - in this case, the "truth" that all things lack value. Which places you in contradiction.

Quote:

---

DQ: In any case, it isn't really true that all things are valueless. A thing necessarily has value to the degree that we place value on it.

Hwl: Yes, and this is the only sense i which i understand "value". That which is placed upon it. A plant cannot be said to value sunlight, because without that value it would not be a plant. The plant does not choose to "place" this "value", so how can it be said to be a value.

---

Sunlight is valuable to its existence. The fact that it doesn't have any choice in valuing it is neither here nor there. Humans also don't have any choice in what they fundamentally value. It is purely a matter of their causes.

Quote:

---

A man hanging himself will still gasp for breath whether he values his life or not. We all "value" breathing without choice or we would long ago have died in our sleep. Given that we do not choose to breathe, how can we be said to value it?

---

We can choose to stop breathing by tying ourselves to a rock and jumping into the ocean. The fact that our bodies are wired to keep breathing automatically doesn't mean that we cannot put an end to the process if we wish. The choice is ours.

Quote:

---

Did the Buddha lay down all the laws and rules etc. personally?

---

If we can believe the stories and legends that have been handed down to us, he did. According to these stories, he started the first sangha (Buddhist monastic community) not long after he claimed he became enlightened, about forty years before his death.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 1784
(9/4/03 10:24 am)
Reply

 re:

---

Rairun wrote:

Quote:

---

I agree with Hywel's points.

---

Of course you do. You have a bias towards aimlessness and you naturally support any viewpoint which supports this.

Quote:

---

Assuming that truth states that all things are valueless, you cannot be someone who makes choices without being in contradiction with it. That way, valuing truth is as untruthful as valuing anything else. In that sense, no one is ever truthful.

---

You're telling a lie!

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 310
(9/4/03 10:49 am)
Reply

 Re: re:

---

Assuming that truth states that all things are valueless, you cannot be someone who makes choices without being in contradiction with it. That way, valuing truth is as untruthful as valuing anything else. In that sense, no one is ever truthful.

If you knew what the truth was, your thought wouldn't make any sense.

Rairun
Registered User
Posts: 127
(9/4/03 12:57 pm)
Reply

 Re:

Quote:

---

Rairun: Assuming that truth states that all things are valueless, you cannot be someone who makes choices without being in contradiction with it. That way, valuing truth is as untruthful as valuing anything else. In that sense, no one is ever truthful.

David: You're telling a lie!

---

Explain me why.

Quote:

---

Rairun: Assuming that truth states that all things are valueless, you cannot be someone who makes choices without being in contradiction with it. That way, valuing truth is as untruthful as valuing anything else. In that sense, no one is ever truthful.

voce io: If you knew what the truth was, your thought wouldn't make any sense

---

I don't know if it would make sense or not, I've never claimed to know the truth. That's why I used the word "assuming". How do you know it wouldn't make sense though?

Rairun
Registered User
Posts: 128
(9/5/03 11:03 am)
Reply

 Re:

---

Quote:

---

David: Of course you do. You have a bias towards aimlessness and you naturally support any viewpoint which supports this

---

And how do you even know if I'm aimless? As I said before, if a person has absolutely no aim, they would die, because they wouldn't move. Also, if you were able to watch my life, you'd observe that I do have some aims that actually last (!!!) a long time. I was just pointing out that, if you consider that it's True that all things are ultimately valueless, having a aim cannot be considered truthful.

edit: spelling

Edited by: Rairun at: 9/5/03 11:06 am

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1450
(9/5/03 12:05 pm)
Reply

 Re: Re:

---

I think Rairun is a very truthful person.

Birdofhermes wrote:

Quote:

---

"Plants don't have thoughts and emotions." We don't know that.

---

This is nearly as bad as our alien ancestors Anna!

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 889
(9/5/03 1:50 pm)
Reply

 Re: Re:

---

Yeah, Rairun and Voce io are good kids.

Quote:

---

"Plants don't have thoughts and emotions." We don't know that.

-----
This is nearly as bad as our alien ancestors Anna!

---

It certainly isn't. Try reading, "The Secret Life of Plants." Hundreds of experiments, thousands actually, by many different scientists. I think its really proven. Why such a strong objection, anyway?

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 1786
(9/5/03 3:01 pm)
Reply

 re:

---

Rairun wrote:

Quote:

---

Rairun: Assuming that truth states that all things are valueless, you cannot be someone who makes choices without being in contradiction with it. That way, valuing truth is as untruthful as valuing anything else. In that sense, no one is ever truthful.

David: You're telling a lie!

Rairun: Explain me why.

---

Because if you weren't telling a lie, you would be truthful.

Quote:

---

David: Of course you do. You have a bias towards aimlessness and you naturally support any viewpoint which supports this

Rairun: And how do you even know if I'm aimless?
As I said before, if a person has absolutely no aim, they would die, because they wouldn't move. Also, if you were able to watch my life, you'd observe that I do have some aims that actually last (!!!) a long time.

---

I'm sure you do. But having several conflicting aims in life is just as aimless as having none.

I personally consider anyone who doesn't make enlightenment/perfection their exclusive goal in life to be essentially aimless. Such people have multiple personalities and no fundamental centre, regardless of how energetic they are or how much they achieve.

Quote:

---

I was just pointing out that, if you consider that it's True that all things are ultimately valueless, having a aim cannot be considered truthful.

---

Ultimately, things are neither valueless nor have value. In other words, a thing only lacks value (or has value) when it is determined by us.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 1787
(9/5/03 3:05 pm)
Reply

 re:

---

Anna wrote:

Quote:

---

Yeah, Rairun and Voce io are good kids.

---

If I were Rairun or Voce io, I would be shaking in my boots.

Rairun

Registered User

Posts: 130

(9/5/03 3:39 pm)

Reply

Re: The role of lying in the life of truth

---

Quote:

---

Because if you weren't telling a lie, you would be truthful.

---

Read my post again. I never said it's impossible to make a statement that is true. I said the choice to make (or not to make) that statement is untruthful. That choice was grounded by the value you place in truth. The value you place in truth was grounded by an emotional desire, which was grounded by another desire. That goes back until the moment where your first preference was created.

Quote:

---

I'm sure you do. But having several conflicting aims in life is just as aimless as having none.

I personally consider anyone who doesn't make enlightenment/perfection their exclusive goal in life to be essentially aimless. Such people have multiple personalities and no fundamental centre, regardless of how energetic they are or how much they achieve.

---

My aims are not conflicting.

A few questions:

- What's perfection?
- Do you need to have perfection as a goal to be indeed perfect?
- Doesn't the goal to be perfect assume the actual existence of an ego? You mentioned that non-enlightened people have multiple personalities - I thought you stood by the fact that there is no such thing as a personality!

Quote:

---

Ultimately, things are neither valueless nor have value. In other words, a thing only lacks value (or has value) when it is determined by us.

---

That's what I meant by valueless, it was just a wrong choice of words. I meant that any judgment of worth is untruthful, assuming that ultimately there is no judgement to define that something is valuable or valueless.

Rairun

Registered User

Posts: 131

(9/5/03 3:57 pm)

Reply

 Re:

---

And Zag and Anna, thanks, I guess. Haha, can I even say that here without having my posts overlooked? Well, if they are, whatever. I don't think I need to justify the things I say.

Why would I be shaking in my boots, David?

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 1791

(9/5/03 4:36 pm)

Reply

 re:

---

Rairun wrote:

Quote:

---

Why should I be shaking in my boots, David?

---

Because it means that you are still being far too harmless and mediocre in your thoughts, which women find uplifting and cute.

Diogenes, a great sage from Ancient Greece, used to slap himself whenever he was praised because he knew that he must have done something wrong. This is doubly so in the case of being praised by women.

Quote:

---

DQ: Ultimately, things are neither valueless nor have value. In other words, a thing only lacks value (or has value) when it is determined by us.

Rairun: That's what I meant by valueless, it was just a wrong choice of words. I meant that any judgment of worth is untruthful, assuming that ultimately there is no judgement to define that something is valuable or valueless.

---

You're misunderstanding and misapplying what it means to make a judgment of worth. Something is only of worth when it is of worth to someone. Raising the objection that things in themselves have no worth, and therefore we are somehow being untruthful in placing value on things, is meaningless. It doesn't address what is actually being asserted - namely, that a thing is only of worth when it is of worth to someone.

So if I decide to place value on a car, or a piece of music, or on truth, I am simply expressing my own personal inclinations as to what I think is important in life. It is not an assertion that these things possess value in themselves. In short, you're arguing against a non-existent view.

Quote:

---

What's perfection?

---

The permanent absence of all delusion while remaining intelligent and conscious.

Quote:

---

Do you need to have perfection as a goal to be indeed perfect?

---

You do indeed. You won't have a chance of reaching perfection unless you consciously decide to free yourself from all delusion.

Quote:

---

Doesn't the goal to be perfect assume the actual existence of an ego?

---

No, it only assumes the existence of delusion, which is a self-evident fact for anyone who thinks. Part of this delusion that needs to be abandoned is the belief in your own self-existence, which I call the "ego".

Quote:

---

You mentioned that non-enlightened people have multiple personalities - I thought you stood by the fact that there is no such thing as a personality!

---

Not so. Personality definitely exists as an experienced reality, but, like all things, it is fundamentally an illusion.

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

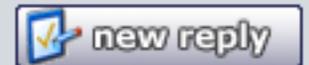

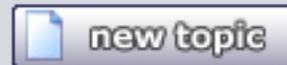

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The role of lying in the life of truth

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                            | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1452(9/5/03 8:01 pm)Reply |  Re: re: <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Rairun:--Do you need to have perfection as a goal to be indeed perfect? DQ:--You do indeed. You won't have a chance of reaching perfection unless you consciously decide to free yourself from all delusion. <hr/> To be perfect you don't need any such goal. To become perfect you would. Quote: <hr/> Rairun:--Doesn't the goal to be perfect assume the actual existence of an ego? David:--No, it only assumes the existence of delusion, which is a self-evident fact for anyone who thinks. Part of this delusion that needs to be abandoned is the belief in your own self-existence, which I call the "ego". |

---

The ego is not belief in ones own self, but the conception of ones own self.
It is no delusion.

Quote:

---

Rairun:--You mentioned that non-enlightened people have multiple personalities - I thought you stood by the fact that there is no such thing as a personality!

David:--Not so. Personality definitely exists as an experienced reality, but, like all things, it is fundamentally an illusion.

---

You are ambiguous here Dave. Are you saying all things are an illusion, or that all things are illusions? Personality is no illusion, fundamentally or otherwise.

Edited by: suergaz at: 9/5/03 8:05 pm

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 891

(9/6/03 12:59 am)

Reply

 Re: re:

---

So if Zag says he shows promise that's more or less OK, whereas if I do, he must assume that he has been pleasing to me as a woman? That means, David, that you think I have no objective mind at all. Nemo once asked Dan why you find the need to insult a woman like me who is more or less alone here and expresses herself well. Of course, Dan did not answer.

I once nearly left the forum because I decided it was a waste of time for me to be here, simply because I am a woman. If I had foreseen the difficulty, and I've said this before, I would have signed on as a man, and all would be well. Actually, I did leave but I came back after a few days because of something Dan wrote.

Do you agree I'm wasting my time here?

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 1793

(9/6/03 10:16 am)

Reply

 re:

---

Bird wrote:

Quote:

---

So if Zag says he shows promise that's more or less OK, whereas if I do, he must assume that he has been pleasing to me as a woman?

---

I usually ignore everything Zag says because his writing tends to be overly-clever and soulless. If I was ever praised by him, I would certainly slap my face.

Quote:

---

That means, David, that you think I have no objective mind at all.

---

I think you try hard, but you lack what it takes to think profoundly. The woman in you prevents you from seeing the woman in you.

Quote:

---

Nemo once asked Dan why you find the need to insult a woman like me who is more or less alone here and expresses herself well. Of course, Dan did not answer.

I once nearly left the forum because I decided it was a waste of time for me to be here, simply because I am a woman. If I had foreseen the difficulty, and I've said this before, I would have signed on as a man, and all would be well. Actually, I did leave but I came back after a few days because of something Dan wrote.

Do you agree I'm wasting my time here?

---

That's up to you. It has nothing to do with Dan or myself.

I should stress (again) that I don't judge people by their gender, but by the quality of their thought. The reason I call you (or Zag) a "woman" is not because of your physical gender, but because your thoughts processes are typically feminine - that is, lacking depth and focus. If you could somehow change this and begin to engage in genuine masculine thought, then that would be great. I would welcome you with open arms, despite the fact that you have a vagina.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 1794
(9/6/03 10:25 am)
Reply

re:

Suegraz wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: You won't have a chance of reaching perfection unless you consciously decide to free yourself from all delusion.

Sue: To be perfect you don't need any such goal. To become perfect you would.

---

Meaningless wankery.

Quote:

---

Rairun:--Doesn't the goal to be perfect assume the actual existence of an ego?

David:--No, it only assumes the existence of delusion, which is a self-evident fact for anyone who thinks. Part of this delusion that needs to be abandoned is the belief in your own self-existence, which I call the "ego".

Sue: The ego is not belief in ones own self, but the conception of ones own self. It is no delusion.

---

It is a delusion if you believe that the self has a reality outside of this conception. Almost everyone is lost in this particular delusion, as is evidenced by their becoming emotional whenever anything seems to affect this conception.

Quote:

---

DQ: Personality definitely exists as an experienced reality, but, like all things, it is fundamentally an illusion.

Sue: You are ambiguous here Dave. Are you saying all things are an illusion, or that all things are illusions? Personality is no illusion, fundamentally or otherwise.

---

If you read part one of my book, I go into this issue in great detail.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 893
(9/6/03 10:35 am)
Reply

 Re: re:

---

Quote:

---

I think you try hard, but you lack what it takes to think profoundly. The woman in you prevents you from seeing the woman in you.

---

Thinking, whether I do a profound job of it or not, is my avocation, and I do not know what it means to try hard. I do think hard, and try very hard to understand various things, so maybe that is what you mean. When I say I don't try, I mean it does not feel like an effort or a chore, or work.

Let me make something clear. I do not wish or attempt to eradicate the woman in me. I think I see both the woman and the man in me. What do you think I don't see? I'm pretty damn sure it's an advantage to be a woman, wisdom-wise. And I can just as easily say you fail to see the short-circuits in your own thought processes. In fact I do say it.

Quote:

---

I should stress (again) that I don't judge people by their gender, but by the quality of their thought. The reason I call you (or Zag) a "woman" is not because of your physical gender, but because your thoughts processes are typically feminine - that is, lacking depth and focus.

---

I really don't believe you are capable of not judging me by my gender - but I do appreciate the sentiment and I will accept it. I'd like to know more why you think I lack depth and focus.

Quote:

---

If you could somehow change this and begin to engage in genuine masculine thought, then that would be great.

---

I aspire to something higher - but then one cannot skip steps. So back to the above.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1453
(9/6/03 11:31 am)
Reply

 Re: re:

---

Quote:

---

Rairun:--Do you need to have perfection as a goal to be indeed perfect?

DQ:--You do indeed. You won't have a chance of reaching perfection unless you consciously decide to free yourself from all delusion.

Suergaz:--To be perfect you don't need any such goal. To become perfect you would.

DQ:--Meaningless wankery.

---

David Quinn, you can think of me as a woman all you like, it won't make you more of a man than I am. And this last response of yours, you can't accept that I am right and you are wrong! Again, Perfection as a goal is not needed to be perfect, only to become perfect. You make yourself a meaningless wanker to call this meaningless wankery.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1454
(9/6/03 11:41 am)
Reply

Re: re:

---

Dave says my writing is overly clever and soulless, and that I lack depth and focus!

You lack hardness in language and life!

You are ...un-musical!

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1429
(9/7/03 12:15 am)
Reply

Re: re:

---

I would describe your use of language as increasingly insular.

I used to understand and like the Zag I knew. I don't entirely know this one that is becoming....

Dan Rowden

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1455
(9/7/03 1:03 am)
Reply

Re: re:

---

...an asshole? It is only disappointment that makes me a snipe.

If sagacity is to be talked about, I want to see it also.

My language becomes more insular as I do. In one way it becomes the opposite.

Hywel

Registered User

Posts: 11

(9/7/03 8:10 pm)

Reply

 Re: The original topic

---

By this point, the topic seems to have been lost, and while it seems to have entered some interesting areas, worthy perhaps of their own thread, i'll try to rescue the original one...

David wrote:

Quote:

---

If we can believe the stories and legends that have been handed down to us, he did. According to these stories, he started the first sangha (Buddhist monastic community) not long after he claimed he became enlightened, about forty years before his death.

---

Hmmmm, that isnt actually what i asked, the buddha could have started the first sangha without laying down all the rules for those to come. I think its quite hard for us to discuss the origins of buddhism in a serious fashion, as we only really have the legends to go on, and they could hardly be counted objective sources.

David wrote:

Quote:

---

If you were the only enlightened sage in the world (as far as you knew), and if you saw that the survival of wisdom depended upon your continuing to live, then you would literally have no choice but to lie. Your valuing of the survival of wisdom (that is, on the consciousness of truth in other human beings) would force you to lie.

---

Hywel wrote:

Quote:

---

This depends entirely on the value you place on "your wisdom", and more importantly your ability to teach it to others. I personally don't think wisdom can be taught in any real sense.

---

David wrote:

Quote:

---

On the other hand, you might perceive that wisdom would be better served if you did die. Your death could, if the circumstances were ripe, demonstrate the power of your wisdom and the height of your transcendence, which could conceivably spark something into action in the minds of those who witness your death. If that is what the sage perceives, then he would be forced to tell the truth.

---

Hywel wrote:

Quote:

---

It seems unlikely that you would risk your wisdom (which you clearly value) on the off-chance that your wisdom might be "reborn" in others. In fact it seems almost certain that you would lie in these circumstances and say "yes, Jesus is my savior". How unselfishly you would do what anyone else would do for selfish reasons!

---

You didn't really respond to this, although I think it's related to the original topic.

David wrote:

Quote:

---

You could do, but it might not have the same impact. It would depend on the wisdom levels of the student in question.

---

Hywel wrote:

Quote:

---

All depends on this anyway. If for no other reason, surely telling the truth is easier than making up a lie!

---

As your other example of lying for the cause of truth, i thought i would bring this back into the discussion too, especially since you didnt really respond.

Hywel

Hywel
Registered User
Posts: 16
(9/16/03 3:39 am)
Reply

 Re: Values

---

Hmmmm, no response.

Perhaps i should respond to the other issues not related to the original topic.

Quote:

---

Sunlight is valuable to its existence. The fact that it doesn't have any choice in valuing it is neither here nor there. Humans also don't have any choice in what they fundamentally value. It is purely a matter of their causes.

---

To say "value" implies the possibility of "not value".

You may choose whether or not to value consciousness of truth, and still remain a human being. It is an everyday (conditional) value.

A plant cannot choose not to value sunlight and still remain a plant. The everyday usage of the term value in this example is incorrect. Perhaps inherent value would be better.

If you want to use the terms "inherent value" and "(conditional?) value", that's fine, but I feel some distinction should be made.

Quote:

---

DQ: To allow the recognition that all things are valueless to influence one's thinking to the point where one no longer places value on truth is just as hypocritical. For this very process itself entails a valuing of truth - in this case, the "truth" that all things are valueless.

Hwl: To allow this recognition to influence the value I place on consciousness of truth is merely consistent.

DQ: That's right. You are being consistent in placing value on what you see as the "truth" - in this case, the "truth" that all things lack value. Which places you in contradiction.

---

Perhaps now we can get to the bottom of this. By "valueless", I meant in the "conditional value" sense, in that things don't have value until we decide that they do. Consciousness of truth is a conditional value. In terms of truth, how can I place value on that which determines where I place value? There are no reasons to conditionally value truth, my valuing is irrelevant to it.

Quote:

---

Hwl: It is the changer of values, and therefore beyond them.

DQ: I'm not sure what you mean.

---

By this I meant that it can change conditional values.

Quote:

---

We can choose to stop breathing by tying ourselves to a rock and jumping into the ocean. The fact that our bodies are wired to keep breathing automatically doesn't mean that we cannot put an end to the process if we wish. The choice is ours.

---

Your life is a conditional value. You can choose to end it. Breathing is an inherent value. You will attempt to breathe, there is no choice.

Quote:

---

DQ: Diogenes, a great sage from Ancient Greece, used to slap himself whenever he was praised because he knew that he must have done something wrong. This is doubly so in the case of being praised by women.

---

That just sounds like individuality for the sake of it.

I dont think i have expressed myself as well as i would like, i will try again if this gets any response.

Hywel
Registered User
Posts: 18
(9/27/03 12:15 pm)
Reply

 Lying

---

I havent really been keeping up with the forum, ive been reading, among other things "Letters Between Enemies", and i noticed this from Mr. Solway :-

Quote:

---

While there i had a discussion with a chap about how to deal with the 99% (morons). He said that white lies were acceptable, as it attracted them to Buddhism, where they would later come to see the real truth. I said that lies, no matter how small, cannot be tolerated under any circumstances. I enclose a copy of the letter i have just sent him on the subject.

---

Sadly, the letter itself isnt included in the .pdf.

Hywel

Hywel
Registered User
Posts: 19
(9/27/03 9:24 pm)
Reply

 Lying

---

Sorry, the letter is in there, a case of my own premature ejaculation!

Hywel

G Shantz
Registered User
Posts: 396
(10/3/03 11:00 am)
Reply

 --

---

David Quinn wrote:

Quote:

---

So in a very real sense, the compulsive truthteller is still quite unconscious in his perceptiveness and still a long way short of being wise.

---

So how far along are you in being wise, David?

I've just taken some marijuana, which I usually don't do, and have had some insights regarding the general evil of the world and human nature. How can we live in such a world, where it is dog-eat-dog and man rape woman? God, truth is frightening. Not living it, but communicating it. What is the most effective method? Intellectual understanding, I agree, because if you begin to make judgements about people's behaviour and speak honestly about human motivation and psychology, people are going to want to chop off your head pretty quickly. Could something like that actually happen today? God. We're like a bunch of animals.

Are you lying to us about anything in your post, David? Do you see yourself as being perfectly truthful, and are maybe lying to us to get us to become more truthful?

|                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                         | I'm not a little kid anymore. That Soren Kierkegaard quote you keep posting about going only so far out is beginning to make some sense.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 944(10/4/03 10:56 am)Reply |  Re: -- <hr/> Well, you'll get the kind of insights your inclined to with marijuana. I get different ones. It's not so dismal as you think. The problem with humanity is civilization. We had tribal life down for hundreds of thousands of years and it worked very well, everything in balance. Surely you know that while indiginous people certainly have some evil, some warfare and some murder, jealousy, etc., that they simply do not have crime as we know it, do not experience loneliness, are egalitarian and independent. They do not know such items as neurosis or suicidal depression, nor do they have a life of toil or exploitation. Nor do they feel evil or the need to be saved. All the salvation religions are a result of the confusion and imbalance experienced by people of civilization. Humanity is not wicked, but we have no idea how to be civilized. Some of the philosophers loved by this forum are a product of the most deranged culture this planet has ever produced, the very one leading the rest of the deranged civilized cultures into destruction. |
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1183(10/5/03 9:18 am)Reply  |  Re: -- <hr/> Bird, you know history has a tendancy to be more rosy in hindsight. In fact, most of these tribal members had their life roles defined for them the moment they were born. They did not even have the luxury of the illusion of freewill like we do. Also, you had to squeeze whatever it is you are going to do in/with your life in the 40 or so years you had to live it. Nature is not kind to the disabled, slow, or the homosexual. Nor were the Nazis. But our current civilization is, more or less. It deserves some credit, I presume. Or does it? /shrug Tharan                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1184
(10/5/03 9:27 am)
Reply

 Re: --

---

Greg wrote,

Quote:

---

I've just taken some marijuana, which I usually don't do, and have had some insights regarding the general evil of the world and human nature.

---

Taken it where? America? We appreciate Canada's finest export. World class, I must say.

The word "insight" is an interesting word. It is the bringing in of the outside world through some understanding, and comes in a flash usually. So it is out-to-in. Personally, I would reverse that, and call it an "outsight." But at the same time, I might also suggest you in fact had an insight.

Try to laugh more.

tharan

G Shantz
Registered User
Posts: 398
(10/7/03 5:24 am)
Reply

 --

---

I think that post was inspired by drug-induced paranoia, rather than insight. Ha ha ha! I think I'll go become a hermit.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 946
(10/7/03 1:25 pm)
Reply

 Re: --

---

Tharan said:

Bird, you know history has a tendency to be more rosy in hindsight. In fact, most of these tribal members had their life roles defined for them the moment they were born. They did not even have the luxury of the illusion of freewill like we do. Also, you had to squeeze whatever it is you are going to do in/with your life in the 40 or so years you had to live it.

Nature is not kind to the disabled, slow, or the homosexual. Nor were the Nazis. But our current civilization is, more or less. It deserves some credit,

I presume. Or does it?

Oh come now, surely you don't think tribal people live to a healthy forty and drop dead? Those are averages. a higher death rate than first world people, a lower one than say, Europeans of the past few hundred years. Don't you know anthropologists confirm that upon initiation of agriculture the human life span dropped, the human frame decreased, and diseases rose? The birth rate and infant mortality are relatively low for tribal people. I certainly can't agree that most tribal people had less free will than most people born into civilizations, who usually had no choice at all. And please don't forget the ladies of civilization, who had less choice than none. Then there are the numerous slaves in civilization, something tribal peoples rarely or never engage in. Tribal people are for the most part tolerant of homosexuality.

Have you never heard the complaint of Benjamin Franklin, that an Indian child raised among whites always returns to his Indian relations, from whom he will never again be parted, whereas

"when white persons of either sex have been taken prisoners young by the Indians, and have lived a while among them, tho' ransomed by their Friends, and treated with all imaginable tenderness to prevail with them to stay among the English, yet in a Short time they become disgusted with our manner of life, and the care and pains that are necessary to support it, and take the first good Opportunity of escaping again into the Woods, from whence there is no reclaiming them."

There are many similar quotes from that era.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1193
(10/7/03 3:52 pm)
Reply

 Re: --

---

Anna,

When the Spanish landed on the West African coastline to fill their boats with slaves, how exactly did they acquire these humans? Did they tramp into the bush and herd them like cattle? Maybe, after they were established they did to some extent, but initially it was them purchasing individuals from one tribe that recently raided another tribe and took hostages.

Having just finished V.S Naipaul's A Way in the World which deals historically with colonialism in the West Indies, I was surprised by his representation of many slave owners being of color themselves; an angle I had never really considered.

It is easy to blame the Europeans for the troubles of the world. But it is harder to see the truth. The truth is that tribal peoples exist without choices. Present them with variables to their sustenance existence (like weapons, medicine, food, and land "ownership") and you generally see the greed and avarice so prevalent today.

One may argue that the Dodo bird is a better design for a flightless bird than an ostrich, but the fact remains there are no more Dodo birds (damn those Aussies). And human societies based on sustenance existence ("tribes") are also disappearing (if you don't count the world's slums, which are an urban phenomenon).

I agree living in the city and working for "The Man" sucks at times, but at least I won't die of scurvy, malaria, or polio, for whatever that is worth. Civilization has been more positive than negative overall, IMO, though the Apocalypse is still probably well on it's way. It is a natural progression.

Tharan

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The role of lying in the life of truth

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                              | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 344(10/7/03 4:59 pm)Reply  |  Re: -- <hr/> Hey - don't blame the Aussies for the dodo's. Although there are probably about 1000 other animals you can blame us for. I'm worried for the dugong myself. "In the year 1598 AD, Portuguese sailors landing on the shores of the island of Mauritius discovered a previously unknown species of bird, the Dodo. Having been isolated by its island location from contact with humanity, the dodo greeted the new visitors with a child-like innocence. The sailors mistook the gentle spirit of the dodo, and its lack of fear of the new predators, as stupidity. They dubbed the bird "dodo" (meaning something similar to a simpleton in the Portuguese tongue). Many dodo were killed by the human visitors, and those that survived man had to face the introduced animals. Dogs and pigs soon became feral when introduced to the Mauritian eco-system. By the year 1681, the last dodo had died, and the world was left worse with its passing" |

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 949

(10/10/03 11:22 am)

Reply

Re: --

---

Quote:

---

Maybe, after they were established they did to some extent, but initially it was them purchasing individuals from one tribe that recently raided another tribe and took hostages.

---

The more tribal people have contact with civilization, the more they deteriorate. For example, there are several African tribes that engage in female genital mutilation, but every one of them has been spoiled by Islam. Also, the Arabs, the most persistent slavemongers in the world, were instrumental in bringing the Africans to the European ships.

Not only can slaveowners be people of color (of course!) but slaves can actually own slaves of their own!

Quote:

---

It is easy to blame the Europeans for the troubles of the world.

---

I'm absolutely not blaming them. I blame civilization.

Quote:

---

The truth is that tribal peoples exist without choices. Present them with variables to their sustenance existence (like weapons, medicine, food, and land "ownership") and you generally see the greed and avarice so prevalent today.

---

Not nearly so true as you imagine. There are many records of tribal peoples taking a good, long look at the nearby civilizations and rejecting it, with very well-thought-out and perceptive rationalizations. They are often quite repelled by our greed. Nonetheless, I am not saying tribal people are angels incapable of greed, violence, pettiness and so forth. Just that they are living in balance and we are not.

Quote:

---

And human societies based on sustenance existence ("tribes") are also disappearing (if you don't count the world's slums, which are an urban phenomenon).

---

Of course they are disappearing when our culture has decided upon a plan of limitless expansion and exploitation as a modus operandi. But their cultures are stable, having lived in balance for tens of thousands of years, whereas ours go bust every few centuries and the entire thing is now headed straight over, not Niagara Falls, but the American Falls (you can survive a trip over Niagara). And of course I don't count the slums. They are a symptom of overpopulation.

Quote:

---

I agree living in the city and working for "The Man" sucks at times, but at least I won't die of scurvy, malaria, or polio, for whatever that is worth. Civilization has been more positive than negative overall, IMO, though the Apocalypse is still probably well on it's way. It is a natural progression.

---

My God, Tharan, you have just agreed with every thing I'm saying. Living in civilization "sucks" - and why should we have to accept a lifestyle that sucks? Do you realize tribal people almost never feel their lifestyle "sucks"? And don't say it's cause they don't know better, cause it ain't true. Just read Genesis. Scurvy, polio - diseases of civilization!! Malaria has not exactly disappeared. And how selfish of you, a satisfied first-worlder, to say it has been positive when it always entails the haves and the have-nots.

But this takes the cake -- it has been positive overall yet we are headed to Apocalypse!!! A NATURAL PROGRESSION! Would you please take minute to reread what you have written?

Now how can it be positive to have developed a way of life whose inevitable end is destruction, death, extinction, pollution, misery and world war??

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1198
(10/10/03 12:22 pm)
Reply

Re: --

---

Civilization doesn't totally suck. Why I met 3 interesting people on the bus ride home today (well, maybe 2 were a bit whacko, but I don't hold it against them).

There is no doubt we are headed toward the destruction. It is a reasonable and natural outcome to a chaotic, self-indulgent system. Once you have eaten of the Tree of Knowledge, you may as well indulge yourself, because there is no going back. Of course, you might be a good Buddhist and control your hunger, but it is easier for most theists to blame things outside of themselves. Afterall, it is a good, ripe apple.

Don't forget the "thousand years of peace" after the Apocalypse. If you are one of the lucky ones, it will have all been worth it, right?

Tharan

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 633
(10/12/03 12:37 am)
Reply

Re: --

---

Salvation! Hallelujah.

I AM
Registered User
Posts: 217
(10/12/03 11:14 am)
Reply

Running down the way up

---

Bird,

It is a natural progression. Everything that is happening to us is a normal process from a cosmic perspective. Of course, down from the first-person level from where each individual is looking out into the world we will only see what is happening locally and "naturally" may feel that things "suck". The best advice I could give is to not fight it but just admire or observe it as you a part of a huge transformation. Yeah... there's this thing called 'apocalypse' and that some people are going to this place 'heaven' and some to 'hell' afterwards. Of course that is just a fairytale version of a yet suprisingly similar event that will occur. There will be increasing chaos, it will all be boiling down like a massive chemical reaction, and then there will be a filtering process. The ones who make it to the other side will have changed drastically, and the one who don't make it either died in the process or would/could not change. Sounds fun huh?

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 951

(10/13/03 10:50 am)

Reply

Re: --

Wolf-

I never said that civilization totally sucks, or that there are no worthwhile people to be found within it.

Quote:

---

It is a reasonable and natural outcome to a chaotic, self-indulgent system. Once you have eaten of the Tree of Knowledge, you may as well indulge yourself, because there is no going back. Of course, you might be a good Buddhist and control your hunger, but it is easier for most theists to blame things outside of themselves. Afterall, it is a good, ripe apple.

---

But must we accept as inevitable that we had to develop into a chaotic system, such that apocalypse is the only end product? No going back? What then - are we all to destroy this planet and die, or leave a few stragglers in a much poorer environment that became such through sheer stupidity? How very Christian of you to lay back and let it happen! You spent too much time here in North Carolina, surrounded by Bible thumpers. If there is no going back then we must understand exactly what we have done and go forward in a new direction. It is exactly this sense of helpless inevitability that worries me.

Quote:

---

Don't forget the "thousand years of peace" after the Apocalypse. If you are one of the lucky ones, it will have all been worth it, right?

---

Well, hell no it won't be worth it. Why only a thousand years? Do we then start the horseshit all over again? BTW, some people think the thousand years already happened, because the Church was one until 1054.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 952

(10/13/03 11:15 am)

Reply

Re: Running down the way up

---

IAM:

Quote:

---

Everything that is happening to us is a normal process from a cosmic perspective.

---

No. Having a species go awry until it becomes so destructive that it may extinct itself may be fine in the cosmic perspective, but it is not a "normal" process, it is a failure. There are failures in the normal course of things, and we may be one, but I don't see the reason to not fight against it. Must we fail?

Quote:

---

The best advice I could give is to not fight it but just admire or observe it as you a part of a huge transformation. Yeah... there's this thing called 'apocalypse' and that some people are going to this place 'heaven' and some to 'hell' afterwards. Of course that is just a fairytale version of a yet suprisingly similar event that will occur. There will be increasing chaos, it will all be boiling down like a massive chemical reaction, and then there will be a filtering process. The ones who make it to the other side will have changed drastically, and the one who don't make it either died in the process or would/could not change. Sounds fun huh?

---

Admire? This huge transformation, this 'other side' that you and the new agers speak of - is it not just your nonChristian version of the same fairy tale? They will be raptured and you and I will go to the other side because we are worthy. Tell me more about it. I'd love it to be true. I hear all us enlightened and meek types who are to soon inherit the earth are going to be in 'another dimension' afterwards. What this sounds like to me is an admission that the planet is fucked, and life will end, and we will indeed be in another dimension - like for example the astral dimension, otherwise known as death. I can go there when I die in any case.

How did you learn about the filtering process? Did you know that when the soul encounters God, the living fire, it is "tried by fire" to ascertain its substance? All beliefs about a soul after death teach of some sort of filtering process, but what has this to do with our planet? I'm not worried about me - I've already changed. But I plan to stick it out and try to survive. Just for fun.

I AM
Registered User
Posts: 218
(10/13/03 1:21 pm)
Reply

 Re: Running down the way up

---

Quote:

---

No. Having a species go awry until it becomes so destructive that it may extinct itself may be fine in the cosmic perspective, but it is not a "normal" process, it is a failure. There are failures in the normal course of things, and we may be one, but I don't see the reason to not fight against it. Must we fail?

---

Failure? Keep your pessimism to yourself alien girl. I said nothing of failure. A few hundred million years ago there was crises on Earth. Plant life (which dominated the Earth) was creating too much oxygen and was poisoning the air for the microorganisms living at the time. This nessesitated a change, as the organisms (after some evolving) learned to breath air and quickly evolved into animals and eventually mammals once the ozone layer was fully formed with the addition of oxygen. I don't see a failure in there just a NORMAL natural process that was going to happen. There have been a few of these types of crises in Earths history and each one of them are like a chapter in it's life. What is happening today is part of another chapter.

Quote:

---

This huge transformation, this 'other side' that you and the new agers speak of - is it not just your nonChristian version of the same fairy tale? They will be raptured and you and I will go to the other side because we are worthy. Tell me more about it. I'd love it to be true. I hear all us enlightened and meek types who are to soon inherit the earth are going to be in 'another dimension' afterwards.

---

All you did here put words in my mouth and turned my honest input into what is convenient for your little thread battles. This happened for two reasons:

One, your a bitch (as I have mentioned before).

Two, your a bitch who takes every chance to make herself feel better about herself.

Or maybe you just need some ass. What do I know?

Quote:

---

How did you learn about the filtering process? Did you know that when the soul encounters God, the living fire, it is "tried by fire" to ascertain its substance? All beliefs about a soul after death teach of some sort of filtering process, but what has this to do with our planet? I'm not worried about me - I've already changed.

---

Jesus. When I said "filtering process", I never mentioned a process with divine intervention, please don't take my posts out of context. You say you have changed but that has nothing to do with the change I speak of. It will be far more intense, So intense, I don't even know what it is.

How did I learn of the filtering process? The Angel Gabriel, of course!
Who else???

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1206
(10/13/03 3:17 pm)
Reply

 Re: Running down the way up

---

No need for anger or defensiveness, I AM.

Anna, I think we both see the same outcome. Our differences are in our reactions to them, I believe. I internalize the impending truth whereas you seem more inclined toward some external expression of your emotional disagreement with the situation. I never said I wouldn't fight along side you for some local good, I just meant to convey my personal understanding that as an individual my input is limited, and as such I have a different emotional POV toward it. It will never consume me internally, though it may in fact consume me externally. But only after a fight.

I may give it my "all," but what is that ultimately? On the other hand, (and one sees it in sports all the time) momentum has a powerful effect upon outcomes, and it ususally takes at least one strong believer (regardless of logiclity) to rally the troops.

We are due a culling of our population. The heros with the winning, proactive attitudes will probably be a large percentage of the survivors. And they will have great hero stories to tell themselves and their grandchildren after the cycle has naturally completed. But the cycle will complete itself.

Tharan

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 953
(10/14/03 2:51 am)
Reply

 Re: Running down the way up

---

IAM:

Of course there have been prior crises, some more natural than others. Whether the current human tendency toward destruction should be compared to the plant history you mention is questionable. I think humans and life on this planet could have gone on evolving without any necessity for the coming crisis. You are also assuming a wonderful outcome - which I do not rule out but I sure am worried that it's pretty possible and even likely that things will be irreparably destroyed.

Quote:

---

All you did here put words in my mouth and turned my honest input into what is convenient for your little thread battles. This happened for two reasons:

One, your a bitch (as I have mentioned before).

Two, your a bitch who takes every chance to make herself feel better about herself.

Or maybe you just need some ass. What do I know?

---

IAM! I don't recall you ever saying I was a bitch, nor do I recall having almost any conversation with you. I generally have liked your posts so much that there was little to say. This has nothing to do with making myself feel better, and everything to do with discussion of opinions and ideas. Why am I a bitch who needs to get laid when I am one of the most polite and reasonable people here? Do you think the same sort of thing about the guys? If I have opinions does that make me a bitch? If I'm not afraid to talk to men's minds, does that make me a bitch? I am one of the least bitchy women I have ever known.

When I discuss the state of the world I am not doing it to make myself feel anything, I am doing it because I am interested, goddamnit!

Quote:

---

All you did here put words in my mouth and turned my honest input into what is convenient for your little thread battles.

---

Yes, I did do that -- because what you said is loosely something I have heard about, here and there, on the wind. It's an idea that is floating around in our culture. I am intrigued by it and skeptical at the same time. But I thought it useful to point out the similarity that it has with ideas that Christians, for example, already have. I want to know the basis for buying into it and where has it come from? I was not singling you out by my words, because you are just presenting something that a lot of people are thinking.

Do you see the danger in the way that Christians have this semisubconscious worldview that includes us being bad in our nature and causing a destruction that will end the world, as predicted by God and therefore - well you know fate can't be altered, right? So most Christians shake their heads in dismay at the way the world is deteriorating, and say, "yes, these are the end times." I want to make sure the new agers aren't simply engaged in a mental narcotic, a faith-based belief system that will allow them to lie down calmly and "let it happen" like a woman being raped by a man with a weapon.

Ah, but I think I know who you are now. You are very thin-skinned and don't understand how to discuss things without getting your feelings hurt. So I get called a bitch on the slight provocation of saying that belief in this transformation (which I do hope for) sounds an awful lot like the rapture, and this "new dimension" we are going to be living in sounds an awful lot like death. Whereas, I the bitch, have never stooped to such an attack on anyone here. Well, maybe ynithrix.

I think that you calling me a bitch is thoroughly inappropriate in the context of what has occurred here. We are discussing a topic of the gravest importance. The idea of taking someone's disagreement personally simply does not occur to me. I just don't have time to be broadsided by such attacks that are intended to hurt my feelings when I am trying to awaken people to the reality that their canoe is headed toward the rapids. And that laying down in the canoe might not be the only option.

Quote:

---

When I said "filtering process", I never mentioned a process with divine intervention, please don't take my posts out of context.

---

It was not out of context, and of course I realize you did not mean divine intervention. Give me some more info to go on.

Quote:

---

You say you have changed but that has nothing to do with the change I speak of. It will be far more intense, So intense, I don't even know what it is.

---

Well, then I believe I know more about it than you do. Since you don't know much about the change or what it is, you certainly don't know what mine has entailed or how intense it was.

Quote:

---

How did I learn of the filtering process? The Angel Gabriel, of course! Who else???

---

Too bad, I consider him a trouble maker of the first degree. I have not forgiven him for the Muhammed debacle.

Let me reiterate. We are in agreement that the world is approaching crisis. It produces life abundantly, but we have taken 4.5 billion years to become what we are today. We have been hominids for 3 million years. Suddenly, in a flash, we have turned malignant and may destroy the entire enterprise, or leave it forever diminished. This is a topic of overwhelming importance. The Christians are going to lie down and let it happen. The new agers say its an evolutionary process and we are going to transform and graduate to a new level after a filtering process. Now, you are not the first person I've asked to elaborate on that - and I didn't get any more out of anyone else than I've gotten out of you. Considering that we may be approaching a tragedy of unimaginable proportions, can you see why I'm suspicious of these happy, let-it-be scenarios? And can you see that this has absolutely nothing to do with bitchiness?

If you are who I think you are, you must either learn to discuss ideas like an adult, or just ignore me.

Edited by: birdofhermes at: 10/15/03 6:42 am

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 954
(10/14/03 3:07 am)
Reply

 Re: Running down the way up

---

I internalize the impending truth whereas you seem more inclined toward some external expression of your emotional disagreement with the situation. What does that mean, to internalize the impending truth?

I never said I wouldn't fight along side you for some local good, I just meant to convey my personal understanding that as an individual my input is limited,

On the other hand, (and one sees it in sports all the time) momentum has a powerful effect upon outcomes, and it ususally takes at least one strong believer (regardless of logiclity) to rally the troops.

Yes, precisely. Your individual input may seem inconsequential, and it is unless there is a momentum of changed minds. There is an author, Daniel Quinn, who has written two books, Ishmael and The Story of B. He presents them in the form of fiction, but he has made some really groundbreaking insights into this whole matter we are discussing. His books have a bit of a following. In one of them, he mentions that things such as recycling, while not bad in themselves, are not sufficient to salvage the world. What we need, he says, are not old minds and new programs, but changed minds and no programs. Your momentum comment reminded me. I advise anyone to read those books.

Quote:

---

We are due a culling of our population.

---

True, but mostly because there are too many of us.

Quote:

---

The heros with the winning, proactive attitudes will probably be a large percentage of the survivors.

---

If they don't have changed minds and new understandings, they will simply repeat the cycle of ignorance and destruction. All they will have bought is a little time.

I AM
Registered User
Posts: 219
(10/14/03 3:49 am)
Reply

 Re: Running down the way up

---

Well Bird,

The reason I called you Bitch is because you did take the meaning of my post out of context. Me don't likey that. Besides it's just a word (an inaudible one at that). I didn't think it'd matter in this forum. I don't even know what Bitch means. Fair enough?

Quote:

---

IAM! I don't recall you ever saying I was a bitch, nor do I recall having almost any conversation with you.

---

Oh, I thought you knew I was LTBL. Well now you know.

Quote:

---

Of course there have been prior crises, some more natural than others.

---

The viewpoint that I have on that is that everything that is happening now is just as natural as anything else that has happened on Earth. I am not sure what would make it less natural.

Quote:

---

I want to know the basis for buying into it and where has it come from? I was not singling you out by my words, because you are just presenting something that a lot of people are thinking.

---

The basis of it has come from some external and a lot of internal study based on patterns and cycles in the world. I sold myself into it.

Quote:

---

Suddenly, in a flash, we have turned malignant and may destroy the entire enterprise, or leave it forever diminished.

---

I don't believe this has just happened suddenly. We have had chaos and wars like these in the past. This is just the first time the whole planet is populated and it is happening on a global scale. So it may seem more intense. Secondly there is another factor involved in the intensity of it. Things are changing faster or at exponential speeds. This has been happening from the beginning. To explain in a nutshell:

4000 years ago a human would have lived in a world or a life very similar to even his/her great grandparent. As time has passed and our society has evolved this gap has been exponentially reduced. A couple hundred years ago a human may have lived in a world similar to his/her parent but not grandparent. 50 years ago a human may not have lived in a similar world to even their own parents. And today we are definitely living in a different world than our parents did when they were our age and more interestingly we now living within different worlds in a single life. This has been happening for a few decades now. But how many worlds can a person live in in one life? This pattern has never stopped why would it stop now? So I believe all this chaos is tied to this and many other exponential processes that are happening on a global scale rather than just a local scale. Something is happening. That is as far as I will take it though. That is why I say I do not know what this change will be. How can I know if it's something our species has never experienced before?

I do like to be optimistic though. I mean yeah, chance are it will all go kaput. Not every type of atom survived to form cells, not every type of cell survived to form mammals, and not all mammals may survive to... whatever. I do think we will survive though and that is only based on intuition so I cannot say why.

I hope that explains better Bird. Bitch. (just kidding!)

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 957
(10/14/03 9:24 am)
Reply

 Re: Running down the way up

---

The reason I called you Bitch is because you did take the meaning of my post out of context.

That's hardly a good reason. People misunderstand and clarify all the time. If you call people names there's no good will.

Besides it's just a word

A strong and offensive word.

I didn't think it'd matter in this forum.

How you treat people always matters.

I don't even know what Bitch means.

Really?

Oh, I thought you knew I was LTBL.

No, but I figured it out. For a while I thought LBTL was Layla, but your writing style is so very different. But you have made it clear that you're a woman.

The viewpoint that I have on that is that everything that is happening now is just as natural as anything else that has happened on Earth. I am not sure what would make it less natural.

Fair enough. It could be looked at that way. I don't. I would categorize an evolutionary bottleneck presented by say, a change in rainfall patterns, or an enlarged human head causing maternal deaths as a natural evolutionary crisis. I'd consider a meteor striking the earth as part of nature, but not a "natural process" in that it is disruptive and development happens despite it, although of course there will likely be positive developments from it. And I regard a species going rogue and destroying entire life forms and ecosystems as well as themselves, as not a necessary part of natural processes. It is as natural as a disease. A manufactured chemical toxin is of course natural in the broadest sense of the term.

I don't believe this has just happened suddenly. We have had chaos and wars like these in the past. This is just the first time the whole planet is populated and it is happening on a global scale. So it may seem more intense. Secondly there is another factor involved in the intensity of it. Things are changing faster or at exponential speeds. This has been happening from the beginning. To explain in a nutshell:

All of this is because we are on a long, slow course toward destruction, nicely summarized in Genesis, whose outcome can only be apocalyptic, and it has taken more than 4,000 years to bring about. The suddenness is only due to the recent great uptake in momentum, like a penny doubled every day, you reach a day where you suddenly are making money really fast. But if you look at the length of time we've lived on this planet as a species, the recent change is pretty sudden.

So I believe all this chaos is tied to this and many other exponential processes that are happening on a global scale rather than just a local scale. Something is happening. That is as far as I will take it though. That is why I say I do not know what this change will be. How can I know if it's something our species has never experienced before?

But this exponential process is of our own making. Yes, any natural process that is out of balance must reach a crisis point in which the deterioration becomes rapid, just before death. As far as patterns go, of course other, positive, things also have rapidly arriving culminations - like orgasm or childbirth. Maybe the big bang. Our species may have experienced it before - there are myths of previous disasters brought on by war and technology. If so, we have not learned anything.

I do think we will survive though and that is only based on intuition so I cannot say why.

I tend to think so too, but that does not make it OK. I think we'll survive simply because the earth is so large. When things start to implode, it will cause such havoc, especially where people in cities are concerned, that the die-off will be massive. Talk about exponential! Then, slowly, the life forms that have not gone extinct will reassert themselves.

We need to find a better way to live.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1209
(10/14/03 3:05 pm)
Reply

 Re: Running down the way up

---

I'll look into Daniel Quinn and get back to you in a few days.

Tharan

I AM
Registered User
Posts: 220
(10/15/03 1:57 pm)
Reply

 Re: Running down the way up

---

Quote:

---

But you have made it clear that you're a woman.

---

Well, I'm not a woman. I guess I am a man with some sensitivity, yet I can be a very aggressive person. I guess I have balanced my masculinity and femininity despite the QRS theory that femininity is inferior to truth. Man, they have really lost track of it huh? Anyways....

Quote:

---

And I regard a species going rogue and destroying entire life forms and ecosystems as well as themselves, as not a necessary part of natural processes. It is as natural as a disease. A manufactured chemical toxin is of course natural in the broadest sense of the term.

---

Bird, it only appears we have suddenly gone rogue to us because we are the first humans to experience many different worlds from intense change within one life. I mentioned this in my previous post. I'll elaborate later.

Quote:

---

The suddenness is only due to the recent great uptake in momentum, like a penny doubled every day, you reach a day where you suddenly are making money really fast. But if you look at the length of time we've lived on this planet as a species, the recent change is pretty sudden.

---

Exactly. This is what I am saying. We are the the part of the exponential curve where things are happening really fast relevant to our perception of it. Here are a few graphics to explain the sudden change you are talking about. The website that they come from actually goes overboard with the theory and is on that looney new age shit, but the graphics are nice.

Quote:

---

But this exponential process is of our own making. Yes, any natural process that is out of balance must reach a crisis point in which the deterioration becomes rapid, just before death. As far as patterns go, of course other, positive, things also have rapidly arriving culminations - like orgasm or childbirth.

---

The exponential process is happening in the evolution of our society and has been happening before with the evolution of energy into matter and into molecular compounds. It has always been happening faster and faster like the snowball effect. It is not of our own making since was happening before us. I agree the perception of the change is our own making though as it is all really one complete single process, but we experience change and time so it is our interpretation of it. It's all we have.

Quote:

---

I tend to think so too, but that does not make it OK. I think we'll survive simply because the earth is so large. When things start to implode, it will cause such havoc, especially where people in cities are concerned, that the die-off will be massive. Talk about exponential! Then, slowly, the life forms that have not gone extinct will reassert themselves.

We need to find a better way to live.

---

I agree that we may survive, we are like roaches! If we can observe the life of an atom when it is born, stable and unstable, renewed or gone and predict it all, similar to to ant colony that lasts a few years, I am sure that we are going through a similar process and it is all natural and can be easily predicted by a higher intelligence (if they are out there). To think our society is not natural because of our metals, chemicals and computers would be very cynical of us. We need to change and we will, that is the whole point of all this. This is how nature works. Chaos for change. We should all and we will all play our part in the change whether we do anything or not. It will all happen as it was going to. We live through through every second of it so it is hard to see the bigger picture but it is no different than the life of an atom.

(I've must really have been drinking too much) :)

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 961

(10/16/03 2:46 am)

Reply

 Re: Running down the way up

---

Well, I'm not a woman.

I guess I'll have to take your word for it. Although I thought it odd for one woman to say to another that she needs some "ass." Actually, it's an odd thing for a man to say to a woman, too. It isn't ass I crave or need.

Bird, it only appears we have suddenly gone rogue to us because we are the first humans to experience many different worlds from intense change within one life.

But it has not been sudden. It's been getting slowly worse for thousands of years. Any such worsening system, say a person who has become 'septic', i. e., they have an infection that has overwhelmed their immune system, so that it cannot be walled off in a particular area, and has invaded their blood stream will have had perhaps a very long and slowly worsening course of the infection before it reaches the point of sepsis, and once they are in sepsis the deterioration is more and more rapid until multiple systems collapse as they approach and go through death. So we are living in the time of approaching systems collapse, and we experience great change in one lifetime. when I say we have gone rogue I am referring to the apparent fact that we have lived as humans in balance for tens and hundreds of thousands of years before embarking on this thing called civilization.

The exponential process is happening in the evolution of our society and has been happening before with the evolution of energy into matter and into molecular compounds. It has always been happening faster and faster like the snowball effect. It is not of our own making since was happening before us. I agree the perception of the change is our own making though as it is all really one complete single process, but we experience change and time so it is our interpretation of it. It's all we have.

Hmmm...In that case it is a necessary step for us to nearly kill ourselves, to be blind to our own history for emotional and other reasons. I just am not sure about this. Why should I consider the above processes as the same as what we are doing now? Not all peoples have chosen our path, but we are grabbing all the land for ourselves in our limitless expansion. It's a process that has to alter very drastically or we will die, so how can it be a necessary step?

I am sure that we are going through a similar process and it is all natural and can be easily predicted by a higher intelligence (if they are out there).

Yes, it was predicted in the Bible. What I am saying is -- did we have to engage on this destructive path in order to evolve? Were, for example, the American Indians, evolving? I think they were. some tribes seem to have been ahead of others. The Iroquois Nation, a combination of five tribes who were tired of fighting, formed The Great Peace, which already had lasted over 300 years before we came along and interfered! And the way that they formed it was quite well thought out, so well in fact, that we copied part of it in our own government system.

To think our society is not natural because of our metals, chemicals and computers would be very cynical of us. We need to change and we will, that is the whole point of all this. This is how nature works. Chaos for change.

You are right that there is only one totality, and anything within it cannot be "unnatural." Perhaps it's an overused word. Maybe we need to say out of balance with what allows life. Are you saying that the whole point is that we must emerge from a self-caused crisis in order to evolve? I call that cynical!

Listen, I hold out a tremendous amount of hope, and you may be right in your interpretations, but it just strikes me as a head-in-the-sand approach. Lets all just sit on the roof, smoke some reefer, and watch as the bombs go off and the people starve and eat each other, and discuss how this is just the preordained choas that is preceding the next great level? Why are you so sure that a beautiful outcome is the only possibility? Why shouldn't we become extinct like the Dodo? Extinct because we were unfit?

But I must say I find it interesting in light of our previous arguments over evolution theory that your second picture has a caption about transitioning to a new level of evolution. Because as I've said, current evolution theory absolutely does not cut it, and if evolution is true at all, it can only be true if there is a mechanism (or two) that has not been dreamed of and which is in fact the most fundamental driving force of it. The hallmark of it is the way life forms suddenly appear full blown in the fossil record and at just the right times. This is so amazing a thing, that it has now taken over evolution theory as "punctuated equilibrium," aka "punc-eek." In other words, whole systems evolve suddenly and responsively, not slowly and painstakingly and utterly accidentally and mindlessly, as the religion states.

It may indeed be that the humans who survive will have evolved to a new level of understanding and self-control.

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 357

(10/16/03 10:36 am)

Reply

 Re: Running down the way up

---

What I am saying is -- did we have to engage on this destructive path in order to evolve?

Yep, we do.

THE RISE AND FALL OF CIVILIZATIONS from an Elliott Wave perspective. Elliot wave is used in the stock market to predict future price action and is basically just a detailed analysis of the 2 steps forward, 1 step back concept. 1 step backward or destruction is needed to clear out the deadwood and to consolidate gains made to date.

Index page - <http://www.freebuck.com/articles/elliott/>

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

- > The Thinkers' Inn
- > The Secret Word Of The Freemasons

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                        | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Evac80Registered UserPosts: 1(5/7/04 7:27 am)Reply |  The Secret Word Of The Freemasons <hr/> The Real Secret Word of The Freemasons From: http://www.xeeatwelve.com/ 1st May 2004 The Freemasons have often been called satanic, which is something that they are very capable of fending off. While its rank and file members are ignorant of the purpose of the organization, some know. Freemasons deflect accusations of being a satanic society largely by employing the cover of being a philanthropic organization. But what is at the core of the Freemasons' beliefs? It is the belief in a single architect of the universe. One must ask if that architect is Satan, all the while bearing in mind that very few would knowingly worship Satan. Freemasonry is based upon the legend of the building of Solomon's Temple, which is said to have employed thousands of masons and stonecutters almost 3,000 years ago. For many reasons, we cannot verify Masonic history too easily. Some Attas have investigated Freemasonry, both from within by infiltration and from without by investigation. Thomas Paine is one of the Attas who undertook the task from without, while other Attas like Benjamin Franklin and Mark Twain infiltrated the organization. Franklin disclosed many of the secrets of Freemasonry to Thomas Paine and also provided him with copies of various records from some lodges. For this, Franklin was singled out for express | criticism by Illuminati founder and high-ranking Freemason and contemporary Adam Weisshaupt, who is legendary for his devious and twisted behaviour and character. It was Weisshaupt who supposedly founded the New World Order. However, he was more of a shill for the ruling elite and did as he was directed.

After thoroughly investigating the organization, Paine argued well that Freemason historians either will not produce the facts, or they do not know them. To show the enormous corruption by Freemason historians, Paine noted that according to Masonic history, Pythagoras of 580 B.C. was supposed to be an early initiate of a frontrunner sodality of the Freemasons. However, according to their history, the society was fully established during the time of the building of King Solomon's Temple, which was completed more than 300 years before Pythagoras was born. Pythagoras is one of the Attas. Freemasons falsely claim that he was a member of their society.

Also, according to Freemason history, the famous Greek mathematician, Euclid, communicated his knowledge to Hiram Abiff, the Master Mason. Abiff was the main decorator of the temple, which was built in the tenth century B.C. Euclid was born more than 500 years after the completion of the temple, making this an impossibility. Whether the history was intentionally muddled is irrelevant, as Freemasons continue to present the misinformation today, long after horrendous errors have been exposed.

Since its own history is corrupted beyond recognition and its historians refuse to correct it, this discussion will attempt to explain some pertinent Masonic legends and further explain the actual history. The reader should ever consider why the Freemasons would lie about their history while contemplating things Masonic.

According to their legend, two of the main characters are King Solomon and Hiram, King of Tyre. These kings got together and decided to build a fabulous temple. They then employed Hiram Abiff, a master craftsman of wide renown, to adorn the temple and beautify it.

Abiff, according to what is presented to candidates for the third degree of Masonry, was treated as an equal by the two kings. But that is questionable, as is the indication that all the masons and stonecutters who were building the temple were considered to be worthy and noble tradesmen.

According to Masonic legend, just before the completion of the temple, three ruffians conspired to extract the secrets of a Master Mason from Abiff. They were unable to extract the secrets by force, but ended up killing Abiff.

The ruffians hid the body in the temple, then carted it away and buried it. When King Solomon was informed that Abiff was missing, he was furious and took a role call of the craft, and found three were missing. These were the three ruffians. The king blocked the harbours and roads and sent out search parties. Finally, the three ruffians were found and brought before King Solomon, to whom they confessed. Solomon ordered each of them to be executed in vile, horrific ways, with terrible torture and severing of body parts.

Thereafter, King Solomon and King Hiram dug up his grave to look all over him for a clue to the syllable. When none was found, they raised Abiff from his grave and buried him near the temple, as close to the Holy of Holies as tradition would allow.

However, in interpreting the Masonic history, some previously hidden aspects of the legend need to be presented. King Solomon and King Hiram had each acquired one syllable of a secret code Word. Abiff had the third syllable. The two kings and Abiff were going to use the secret Word to perform a ritual in the Holy of Holies after the completion of the temple. (This information is only available to a very small group of the very highest level of the Freemasons' hierarchy.)

This is a very dark story — Solomon, who was a tyrant, wanted SOLE possession of the Word. He hired three ruffians to extract the secret syllable from Abiff, who was in the temple when the ruffians approached him. One of the ruffians demanded the secret syllable from Abiff, who knew something was very wrong because only Solomon and Hiram knew he possessed a secret syllable. Abiff was able to trick them into revealing Solomon had sent them before he bolted and fled. The ruffians gave chase, captured him, and then killed him. They then dragged the body off and buried it far away from the temple. The ruffians then reported the incident to Solomon, who immediately had them executed and dismembered. The immediate killings of the ruffians were done as punishment to them and also because it was necessary to silence them.

Since the ruffians killed Abiff before extracting the secret from him, the syllable was lost. At the funeral, the two kings were truly upset because they had lost the opportunity to use the power of the secret code. They vowed to one day discover the lost word. Meanwhile, they substituted a word that sounds like "mor-bon-zi" for the lost word. Today, this substituted word is the Grand Masonic Word according to Masonic history. It is believed that Solomon and Hiram passed on their two parts of the secret word to very trusted members only, and that these knowing members likewise passed it on to other trusted members. Today, the very few with this knowledge are very actively searching for the lost syllable so they can utter the real three-part secret word, or the actual lost Word.

Since mor-bon-zi is only a substitute secret word, all Masons are given it and recognise it to this day. However, mor-bon-zi is very rarely spoken except during initiations or on very special occasions, and then only in a low breath. The password the Masons use in everyday matters is "tu-bal-cain."

Many extra degrees have been added to Freemasonry throughout the years. Adam Weisshaupt contrived some "French" degrees then travelled to Scotland and presented them as genuine French degrees of Masonry to Scottish Freemasons. He then invented "Scottish" degrees and travelled to France and presented the bogus Scottish degrees to French Freemasons as genuine Scottish Freemason degrees.

It should be noted that present-day Freemasons claim in a higher degree that they have found the lost Word of God. This word is given to candidates for the Holy Royal Arch. That word is "jah-bul-on", which is believed to be "jah" for the Hebrew god Yahweh; "bul" for the ancient Canaanite fertility god Baal and Devil; "on" for the Egyptian god of the underworld called Osiris.

This "word of god" presented as "jah-bul-on" is another Freemason Weisshaupt-like deception to trick some candidates into thinking the search for the word is concluded. But, "jah-bul-on" is only another substituted word. The search for the lost Word secretly continues.

Who were these three people really? Why did they have the secret parts to the secret Word? Does the Word really have power?

King Solomon, King Hiram and Abiff were secretly occultists. They tried to hide this information, and to severely limit and discourage those who would pursue occult matters. One such indication of this appears in the extant Bible in a book attributed to Solomon. He did not write the entire book, but he did plagiarize this verse:

Say unto wisdom, Thou art my sister; and call understanding thy kinswoman: That they may keep thee from the strange woman, from the stranger which flattereth with her words. Proverbs 7:4-5.

The church tries to give other interpretations, but what this really means is that wisdom and understanding should be treasured, but occult knowledge must be shunned, as it is dangerous. Many of the Proverbs make sense when interpreting the "strange woman" to be the occult mysteries, which otherwise seem to be non-sequiturs.

The Bible is replete with warnings to avoid stargazers, mediums, magicians, wizards, witches, sorcerers, seers, fortune tellers and the like. This was especially true during the reign of King Josiah of Israel. However, the Bible also shows that the religious leaders understood the esoteric (occult) power of sounds, letters, words, names, symbols, astrology, numbers etc. One example of comprehension of the power of sounds and names is when Abram's name was changed to Abraham by the Hebrew God according to Genesis 17:5.

In fact, many religious leaders knowingly use occult powers whilst they keep the flock ignorant and fearful of the secret knowledge. Solomon is legendary for his supposed wisdom, however his work with the occult is more hidden. King Solomon and King Hiram, along with Abiff, were practising occultists, but in the area of Dark arts. They were directed to build a huge temple that was to be dedicated to the higher forces of the Dark side. To gain maximum empowerment for the temple, much suffering was necessary in the construction of it. This was accomplished by blood sacrifice and enslavement of the stonecutters and masons who were forced to build the temple and by imposing oppressive taxation. These and other measures culminated in a revolt.

When completed, the temple was to contain a Holy of Holies, where the three of them were to meet from time to time to conjure up the full power of Darkness associated with the Anunnaki Elite who were no longer on Earth. This was to be done by ritually calling down the Dark power via the Word. Once the temple (or any other object), specifically the Holy of Holies within the temple, was charged, it would take on a life of its own. It has a power of its own. However, the Holy of Holies was never charged in the way it was anticipated because Abiff was murdered before the temple was completed.

The three sounds given to Solomon, Hiram and Abiff respectively, form the actual secret lost Word that Freemasons are seeking. When these are uttered in proper pitch, duration, order, timing and intensity the composite sound can call upon power from the subtle level. This particular formula has the ability to summon the full power of Darkness.

This is no small power; it cannot be overstated how powerful it is. Anyone who possesses the key to this power can virtually control the entire world and hold any nation ransom. This is not a joking matter and one not to be taken lightly. Imagine what would have happened if Solomon had possessed the complete Word. This Word is what Hitler was secretly searching for. In the wrong hands, this Word could be absolutely disastrous.

The Freemasons are all raised to the third degree with the story of Abiff and the substitute word. This is because very few Masons know about the actual two separate syllables, but those who know are actively searching for the lost sound. They hope that some candidate will reveal it. They also hope that some Master Mason will discover it. However, none of the vast majority of Masons has any idea of this secret agenda. And, after nearly 3,000 years of searching, the secret Word of Abiff's is still unknown to them.

Adam Weisshaupt was an agent for some people who had learned King Solomon's and King Hiram's syllables, and they directed him to start the New World Order in the hopes that it would assist in locating the lost syllable. Weisshaupt's controllers believed that if there were a single dictator of the world, then all information about everyone and everything would be at the disposal of the regime.

Sounds are very powerful vibrations/energies when used in a certain way with knowledge. For example, the death of Diana Spencer appears to have been caused by physical agents. However, it was actually brought about by forces embedded in the spoken word directed from the unseen level, which brought about the physical manifestation of her death. People who are involved with Dark forces can get themselves into very serious situations. This is why the fabled "pure" heart comes out repeatedly in legends, telling of one who can properly use occult powers.

I know Solomon's and Hiram's sounds or syllables. I also know Abiff's sound. I know the entire lost Word. How I know this is irrelevant. Equally, whether anyone believes my assertion or not, is irrelevant. Even when I first mentally reviewed this sound I could feel the tremendous Dark power of the Word. I also have the counter-sound which I used to neutralize the Dark Word. Now, the complete, dreadful Dark secret Word that Freemasons seek to assemble has been contained and neutralized.

Bear in mind that some Freemasons may know the first two sounds or syllables of the Word. And now, others will know them. But, I will never disclose the lost sound from the Anunnaki Elite to anyone because of the highly dangerous nature of the Dark energy embedded in the Word that could be "resurrected" if it fell into the wrong hands — that is, ANYONE without a "pure" heart. THIS SYLLABLE HAS NOT BEEN RECORDED, WRITTEN, TRANSCRIBED OR IMPARTED TO ANYONE. No search will discover it. In any event, I already neutralized the entire Word with the counter-sound. I released this counter-sound of the Light in 2002 on a CD entitled Loving You because the counter-sound can also be used to counter-act other energies that are directed by Darkness.

I now disclose the two sounds. King Solomon's syllable is "KIR" and King

Hiram's syllable is "WHAH". Abiff's syllable has eluded those of Darkness for 3,000 years, and they will not acquire it before this virtual reality collapses.

As a cautionary warning, any attempt by anyone sending thoughts with any EVIL INTENT to either attack this information or to abuse the disclosed sounds will automatically be deflected and returned to the sender. The sender with such evil intent will reap instant or delayed consequences of his or her own actions.

Returning to the Masonic legend, it should be stated that the horrible deaths the three ruffians suffered are now part of the obligation of Masons in the first three degrees of Masonry. When a person is awarded a degree, he must utter the obligation under penalty of suffering a like death if ever he were to reveal the secrets of a Master Mason. The candidates are told that the oaths and penalties are only symbolic and would have no bearing in reality, which is true if the Master Mason were to give away the secrets known to the general members of the secret society. However, the information about the original secret Word is the secret information that those oaths are designed to protect against any disclosure. They are real oaths with real penalties.

The term "Freemasons" is very revealing. Solomon had slaves building the temple. But some of the tradesmen were not slaves; they were free-masons. Likewise, the term "Master Masons" has the same significance. Those of that rank were the slave masters or the teachers.

Solomon was a king who was reputed to have had many wives and concubines. He did not let women worship with men, nor join secret societies. Divine rite of kingship, slavery, male dominance and polygamy are characteristic traits of the Anunnaki, and Solomon was a descendant of the Anunnaki Remnants from Atlantis. That is how he acquired his position. Reference to Solomon being a descendant of Anunnaki should not be confused with having blood ties to them. This refers to his consciousness, which incarnates over and over in different biological bodies, regardless of biological connections.

Similarly, the King of Tyre and Abiff both had Anunnaki roots. The three of them were familiar with occult knowledge and because of their dedication to the occult arts, it was revealed to them that certain sounds have very powerful properties. Each of them had been given a sound capable of bringing down special powers of the highest and darkest realm. This was done only after a lot of blood sacrifices which proved their loyalty to Darkness. Through this process, each of them had acquired one part of the three-part word. They were impressed to build the temple, where there was to be a Holy of Holies, where they were to perform the ritual of summoning the power of the Word. It was important to have slaves build the temple, as the suffering of the slaves added greatly to the potential of the secret sound. Moreover, as described above, the executions demonstrate yet another Anunnaki trait. Likewise, Freemasons also thrive on bloodlust as seen by their sanctifying of the brutal, horrible, demonic killings of the three ruffians.

Many, including Thomas Paine, have compared the practice of Freemasonry with Christianity. Paine concluded that both worship the physical sun, although it is disguised in Christianity to appear to be the worship of Jesus, whom they call the Son of God. Darkness imitated the Divine Mother and the "Twelve Sisters" by creating the Sun and the twelve signs of the Zodiac.

Christianity was not founded by Jesus. The work of the early Christians and the propaganda of Paul and those who hid themselves behind the name of Jesus all contributed to the invention of a marvellous story which resulted in Jesus being known to this day as the founder of a religion that was never his. Similarly, Jesus is being falsely associated with the Ascended Masters in the Theosophical teaching. Jesus has nothing to do with the ascended masters, and very little to do with modern Christianity. In fact, Christianity only became orthodox when Emperor Constantine and the church councils created creeds and canons at the Council of Nicea in 325 A.D. With this human-made church law, the followers of Christianity no longer abide by the teachings of Jesus, but instead follow the dictates of the church.

In current Christianity, it appears that Christians relish in the murder of Jesus and are so taken in by it that they re-enact His brutal crucifixion. Christians call the murdering day "Good Friday" which term they excuse away with Easter Sunday and the supposed physical resurrection of Jesus. On a regular basis, Christians symbolically eat the body of Jesus in what is euphemistically called the "Eucharist" where they also symbolically drink the blood of Christ. These gruesome symbolic acts are signs of cannibalism and vampirism. These horrible acts are falsely presented at least four times in the extant Bible to give the church and its followers apparent authority and authenticity to practise the repulsive rites. See: Matthew 26:26-28; Mark 14:22-24; Luke 22:19-20; 1 Corinthians 11:24-29.

Nearly all Christian churches display crosses to remind followers of the horrible murder of Jesus. Many of the crosses bear a male figure nailed onto them to represent Jesus, who is graphically displayed in a gory and agonizing depiction of his murder on a cross. This depiction is grotesquely objectionable to any thinking, feeling beings.

Can you see the similarity between Christianity and Freemasonry? What kind of a "god" would thirst for blood? What kind of a "god" would want gruesome murders re-lived over and over in the human psyche. With regard to Christians — it is far worse than for the Masons. According to many Freemasons, Abiff supposedly represents Jesus — who incidentally had not yet been born when Solomon was in power. But, Christianity symbolically does those dreadful things to the one they claim to believe is the Son of the God of Light.

So there you have it — Yes, it appears quite clearly that Freemasons, however unwittingly, are devil worshippers. Similarly, Christians, however unwittingly, are also worshipping Satan.

Darkness has always coveted that of the Light; it also corrupts that of the Light whenever possible, as can be seen in Christianity.

The one that is known as Saint Germaine, a significant character in Masonic history, was accredited with the concept of the Violet/Amethyst Flame. He was also known as Master Rakoczi, who was involved in ritual and ceremony and who was incorrectly attributed to being the re-incarnations of Merlin of Camelot and Lao Tse, the great Chinese mystic. Merlin and Lao Tse are Attas of the Light. Germaine was a descendent of Anunnaki Remnants. Germaine was also supposedly Roger Bacon (13th century) and Francis Bacon (16th — 17th century), who was a Freemason.

Germaine's last incarnation was supposed to be Francis Bacon, who was a statesman, English philosopher, editor of the King James Version of the extant Bible, and an occultist. Bacon was thoroughly discredited as a scoundrel for abusing power and taking bribes. Francis Bacon is also known as an Ascended Master of the Great White Brotherhood in Theosophical/New Age circles. He was supposedly the high priest of the Violet-Flame Temple which is associated with the seventh ray in "the Theosophical Universe".

In fact, the concept of the Violet Flame was stolen from the "Twelve Sisters" of the Divine Mother. As I have mentioned elsewhere, the "Twelve Sisters" label does not necessarily reveal their respective genders. The violet colour is one of the distinct colours of the Divine Mother and she extended it to the "Twelve Sisters" with the power of true transmutation. Evil coveted this power of transmutation, and attempted to simulate it as Evil often does, stealing designs/concepts/ideas/patterns etc. from the Light, then corrupting them and claiming them as Its own.

With regard to transmutation, it needs to be mentioned that the energy in the physical realm is trapped within Matter. This energy is very different from the energy of the True Divine Creation.

An analogy can be drawn by considering the micro level in this realm, where electrons could be compared to being drivers of energy, not the masters of energy as some have speculated. Protons and neutrons act as trapping agents — they trap electrons and force them to work for the protons and neutrons.

The Demiurge usurped this sector of the True Divine Creation and later created a world of virtual reality. This realm is an illusion, a virtual reality. However, in this illusion a great deal of abuse is done to True-Light beings.

The Demiurge created Matter and then gravity, which is the first cause in setting Matter into motion. Next, It created heat and cold, both of which can cause pseudo transmutation of Matter, and whose properties can also trap electrons. The electrons are akin to trapped Light beings in this dimension.

Gravity sustains physical motion. Many have theorized that because gravity is a weaker force than some other forces, that it is not the primary force. This is erroneous. Gravity is the first cause and the critical force that holds this illusory universe together. Only later did the Demiurge create the strong and weak nuclear forces to better tighten and bond matter together, and later still, It created the electromagnetic force to seal off sections of the Evil Creation and to erase memories of beings in the virtual reality. The physical universe is continually spinning but going nowhere. For example, there is the perceived rotation of the ages — the signs of the Zodiac. They repeat the cycle over and over without real progress. That is the plan of the Demiurge.

Gravity is the first force of attraction. Motion is keeping the illusion going by the sustaining properties of gravity. When gravity is dismantled, the balls will stop moving, and the entire illusion will crumble. There are particular energies which build virtual realities within virtual realities in this dimension.

The continuous motion works much like a sleight-of-hand trick. All the beings in the realm are moving so much within the illusion that they cannot focus on reality. As an example, imagine that you are riding on a merry-go-round. The horse can feel like it is standing still and everything around you is spinning. As a result, you cannot maintain focus on the outside world, however it is relatively easy to focus on the horses on the merry-go-round. This is because you are within the illusion of the merry-go-round and it becomes the reality of the moment. Try as you might, you can only catch glimpses of the outside world which you perceive to be spinning. However, you know that you are spinning on the merry-go-round, not the world outside, whose movement is an illusion created by the merry-go-round.

Thus, because of all the motion in the universe, and motion within motion, everything here is like a merry-go-round ride, and those on the ride can only get an occasional glimpse here and there of what is beyond. And, even then, those glimpses are often just of motions within motions, or other merry-go-rounds. Merry-go-rounds can be fun for a short ride, but if you stay on too long, they make you sick. From a spiritual standpoint that sickness has so disoriented True-Light beings that they have forgotten their True Divine origin and think that they are part of the illusion. If the merry-go-round stops, the illusion stops and all viable True-Light beings will be outside the virtual reality.

The shattering of this illusion — this virtual reality — has commenced. Due to the complexities of illusions within illusions it has taken a long time to dismantle it. Gravity, because of motion and inertia, is the primary cause holding things together for the time being. Once the virtual realities within the virtual reality are all shattered, all the True beings of the Light who are trapped here will be freed. This day will come. Everyone should try to break the mindset that the physical is all there is because that mindset is the biggest trap of all. There is a True Reality out there, once these dreadful rides stop.

One strong indication of the breaking of the illusion of the virtual reality occurred recently. A dog enclosure was locked and the lock had frozen shut. I needed to enter, but couldn't because of the frozen lock. I then pulled on the lock several times, but was unable to unfreeze it. Then, I pulled again and amazingly was able to pass the frozen-shut metal lock and my hand through a two-layered galvanized steel latch! I actually passed both my hand and the metal lock right through the steel hasp! To do this defies the laws of physics in this realm, yet it occurred. It was the equivalent of walking through a wall while carrying a metal object with me.

While electrons are trapped by protons and neutrons on the atomic level, planets are trapped by stars or suns on the macro level. The sun of our solar system is the trap. It gives off False-Light, which the planets need to survive in this material realm. In exchange for this light, the sun forces the planets to revolve around it and to do all the work keeping the solar system bound together in the illusion which is driven by their orbits around the sun. If the perpetual motion of the planets — the merry-go-round — stops, the illusion crumbles, and all the viable True-Light beings in the entire solar system are liberated from the entrapments of Darkness.

Of course, the solar system is but a ride within a ride, as it is part of a galaxy, which is part of the universe. All of these rides are about to stop turning.

The sun is the main source of the illusion. Those who are part of the illusion will dissipate when the illusion collapses. Those who are not part of the illusion will continue to exist after the virtual reality is over.

While the sun is the biggest trap in the solar system, it has the appearance of being of the greatest assistance and being the most important part of the system. The sun is not the driver of the solar system, the planets are. While the sun provides heat and light by which biological "life" is made possible, biological life is but another virtual reality which traps the True-Light beings. Through being trapped in biological bodies, True-Light beings are forced to drive the world.

In this realm, Light looks dark, and Darkness appears as light.

Much has been said of late about the sun cruisers that have been photographed near the sun. A great deal of speculation has occurred as to what they are doing. They are crafts of the True Divine Creation which are here to extinguish the sun. They have done this to many stars in the virtual reality and freed many beings of Light from the grasp of Darkness by shattering the illusion of solar systems and unlocking the prison doors. Sun cruisers were responsible for the extinguishment of the Anunnaki's home star ZA-OS, which in turn freed many beings of Light from the grasp of Darkness.

The Anunnaki were a very advanced race of beings and they had accomplished space travel before their star was extinguished. Being advanced technologically allowed the Anunnaki to spread their tentacles throughout the physical world as the main agents of the Demiurge. They are, in effect, angels of Darkness. They have been programmed to be as evil as the Demiurge, as ruthless, as brutal, as chauvinistic, and as hopelessly putrid as their "father".

The Anunnaki were given certain powers to assist the Demiurge in keeping the illusion going for as long as possible. The Demiurge knows that Its days are numbered, but It has extended those days by employing the dreadful Anunnaki, who are sent to various systems with the ability to restart "time" in the systems, that is to travel into the past so the virtual reality can be re-lived over and over again.

These Anunnaki came to Earth and set up control here. They are literally from the past, as they have re-started the system before. They hope to re-start it again so they can enslave all the beings of Light for another ride on the merry-go-round, and force them to drive the pointless counterfeit creation here. The Anunnaki know that they must re-start everything before 2012 A.

D. because that is the date which they have set for restarting the clock.

While things were going along for the Anunnaki and they were doing their "father's" bidding on Earth, the Attas of Light became very active, which was most troubling to the Anunnaki.

All major religions in this world are sponsored by the Anunnaki. Religion is an extremely effective tool for keeping control of the people. A fundamental aspect of all these religions is that the central figure of worship is the sun, whether they called their sun god Ra, Apollo, Helios etc. This was true in ancient Greek, Egyptian, Sumerian, Babylonian, Roman, English, Mayan, and Incan cultures, etc.

Sun worship is the basis for major religions today, even if it has been corrupted or its foundation has been obscured or lost. For instance, Jews have their ancient temples constructed to honour the sun and the Zodiac.

Most notable of these temples dedicated to sun worship would be Solomon's Temple, which was standing during the entire reign of Josiah. Josiah is remembered by Bible students for knocking down idols dedicated to worship of the sun and other gods formerly of the Jewish pantheon. Josiah claimed to be following the Laws of Moses. Yet Solomon's Temple, which was built long after the death of Moses and violated many of those laws, was left untouched. Either the laws of Moses were tampered with after the Temple was built to allow it to stand, or Solomon's Temple was an abomination to the Jewish faith. For whatever reasons, Josiah allowed the temple in Jerusalem to remain despite its obvious construction and dedication to sun worship.

One characteristic of sun worship is that everything hinges on the resurrection of the rising sun. The sun gives warmth and life according to their beliefs. That is why there are so many legends of dying/rising gods. Candidates for the third degree of Freemasonry play the part of Hiram Abiff in a drama. The candidate, like Abiff, is raised from the grave, symbolizing the dying/rising god legends.

Christians honour Jesus, the Son of God, who takes the place of the physical sun. Even the name EAST-er SUN-day for Christianity gives away its basis. Thomas Paine noted that:

[T]he Christian religion is a parody on the worship of the Sun, in which they put a man whom they call Christ, in the place of the Sun, and pay him the same adoration which was originally paid to the Sun.

It should be stressed here that the Magi of Persia were also sun worshipers, which demonstrates that the invention of the story about the visit of the three Magi at the birth of Jesus was added to the account contained in the New Testament. This addition happened sometime after Constantine made Christianity orthodox and included sun worship in the Christian religion.

In Celtic tradition, the direction east is also very significant. Druids worshipped the sun; Native Americans place great significance on sun dances; Eastern religions highly respect the sun. Often, emperors were compared to the rising sun in ancient days of the Eastern world.

Freemasons construct their lodges east and west and the Worshipful Master of the lodge stands in the east because, according to Masonic teachings, as the sun rises in the east, so should the Master stand in the east. Freemasons make advancement in degrees by seeking more light in Masonry. This is not to be confused with Divine Light. Masonic teachings state that there are two lights. These lights are referred to as the greater and the lesser lights. The sun is the greater light, while the moon is the lesser.

In Grand Master George Smith's The Use and Abuse of Free-Masonry is found:

The emblematical meaning of the Sun is well known to the enlightened and inquisitive Free-Mason; and as the real Sun is situated in the centre of the universe, so the emblematical Sun is the centre of real Masonry. We all know that the Sun is the fountain of light, the source of the seasons, the cause of the vicissitudes of day and night, the parent of vegetation, the friend of man; hence the scientific Free-Mason only knows the reason why the Sun is placed in the centre of this beautiful hall.

The Anunnaki have planted sun worship throughout the world. They have forced construction of structures to pay homage to the sun, such as Stonehenge, where the altar stone faces the rising sun. Even though Stonehenge was also used as an observatory and had other purposes, sun worship was its main purpose. The Anunnaki know that the sun must keep burning or the illusion of the solar system will shatter. That is the main objective of Anunnaki occupation of worlds — to keep the stars burning.

The Anunnaki Elite were given a particular sound by the Demiurge which allowed them to control and re-start "time" within solar systems. It is like the key to a huge time machine. It allows the Anunnaki to turn back the clock, so to speak, and gain a temporary reprieve from the Celestial Correction by the Light.

The Demiurge's sound was removed from the Earth by the Anunnaki Elite when they fled after destroying Atlantis. They took the Word with them. The Attas of the Light have since blocked the Anunnaki Elite from returning to Earth. However, some of the Anunnaki Elite slipped through the net temporarily and approached near enough to the Earth during the time of Solomon to transmit the sound to three chosen Anunnaki Remnants who were on Earth — King Solomon, King Hiram and Abiff, the Master Mason. The Anunnaki Elite did this desperate thing in the hope that the Anunnaki Remnants would be able to help them return and re-take control of the Earth.

This Word is the powerhouse of the Demiurge. The Word has the power to keep this realm in motion and keep the illusion afloat. Except for the intervention by the Amoebas/Attas of the Light, the Word would continue to have this power. The following is worthy of reflection regarding the Word and the "god" being written about in the verse.

In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. John 1:1.

The first two syllables of the Word given to King Solomon and King Hiram respectively are like the building blocks. They cannot do anything in and of themselves without the third and final syllable. Thus, the first two syllables are like drones without the "spirit" of the third syllable. The final syllable acts like the life force which drives the Word of the Demiurge. The third syllable was given to Abiff because the Anunnaki Elite saw him as the most pious (devoted and loyal to the Anunnaki Elite), hence he was seen as the most trustworthy of the instruments. That is why the two kings were unable to bring the FULL power of the Demiurge to the Earth. So, they commenced a frantic search, quizzing all workmen and slaves who were a part of building the temple, hoping that Abiff may have given the syllable to one of them. This search proved fruitless.

Since then, the search continues for the lost Word. This search continues in many forms, with most of the searchers totally oblivious to what they are really searching for or why. Even today, many still seek the Ark of the Covenant and the Holy Grail. Many stories were created to hide the true purpose of the ventures. There is always an attachment of some sort of spiritual quest in the scouring of the land for the Word. The Crusades were part of this quest. The Ark of the Covenant possessed famed properties. It was in reality a "radio" transceiver that was used by the priests to send and receive information directly to and from their "gods" (the Anunnaki Elite) in the spacecrafts.

These searches are all instigated and sponsored by the Anunnaki Remnants, who have first inspection rights to all finds. This is a mandatory condition of all Anunnaki Remnant funded projects designed to search for the lost Word, which searches are carried out under many disguises. These searches attract many who are sincerely searching for Truth, Love, Light and Purity. However, many of those with admirable intentions are being fooled by the Anunnaki Remnants. The sincere seekers have no suspicion whatsoever as to the origin or agendas of the plot.

Different groups of Anunnaki Remnants are still searching for the Word, performing their search in different ways and whilst the majority of the people do not suspect this agenda, most would scoff at it. Some people can now see or sense the Anunnaki faces behind their human disguises (whether the faces are Reptilian, Vulturite, Masa-karas, and even Olcars who are the highest Reptilians etc). As the virtual reality collapses more and more, so too will more and more people become aware of the Anunnaki around them.

A recent example of this desperate search by one group of the Anunnaki Remnants for the lost Word occurred when Iraq was invaded in 2003. The cover story for this invasion was to rid the world of that country's storehouse of weapons of mass destruction. The most informed leaders of the invading forces knew there were no weapons of mass destruction in Iraq. The apparent reason for the invasion was for control of the oil fields in the country, which is what the ruling elite want those who see through the façade of the main cover story to think — that is that it was done for greed, oil and money.

However, the real reason for the invasion of Iraq was to perform an intense search of the country for clues to the lost Word. This shows how wide, intense and desperate the search is for the Word. This is because the Word has the power to change the destiny for the Anunnaki Elite. It could open the gates to bring them back on Earth for yet another reign of terror.

During World War II, Hitler, the Führer and active occultist was sponsored by a particular group of Anunnaki Remnants to actively search for the lost Word. Many thought he was after the Ark of the Covenant, but that was not the case. He was after the Word. This is one of the reasons why when Hitler turned his attention to the Middle East, the Western powers vastly increased their efforts to halt his war machine.

The New World Order employs agents to spread disinformation and misinformation to the masses. It also tries to frighten the masses into compliance. One of its most effective tools of recent has been to implement artificial catastrophes so that draconian laws can be enacted to fight the artificial war on terrorism. This is a contrived war that got out of hand and now there are some real terrorists causing "unplanned" damages.

Likewise, the New World Order also creates false prophets who predict things that will never transpire. These false prophets are hired to predict these non-events in order to discredit true prophets so that when the real Message is given, most people will not take it seriously.

A recent example of this was a very elaborate conspiracy by the ruling elite to frighten the people living in the western part of the United States by falsely broadcasting misinformation that a large object was approaching Earth and its approach would devastate that area. This misinformation had reached the stage of being broadcast on the alternative media, which was to be a springboard for sending the false story to the conventional media. It was intended that this story would cause mass panic and hysteria so that martial law could be enforced. However, this devious plan was thwarted by the Attas of Light, and the plan has fizzled. Yet, this is such an important plot for the New World Order that many are still desperately attempting to resurrect it. Some of the New World Order agents play roles to appear to be scorning the false prophet, but in reality, they are conspiring and working together to try to keep this devious plot alive. It will not work. On the energy level, this failed attempt of the ruling elite is a crushing defeat for Darkness.

The Freemasons are agents of the Reptilian Anunnaki Remnants, and form a group that is "openly" secret and is very actively searching for the Word. Every Master Mason knows the story of Hiram Abiff and the three ruffians, and they all know the substitute word that was given at Abiff's funeral. Almost all of them are looking for this Word, but very few have any idea of the reason behind it.

Freemasonry was originated by Darkness. Christianity was hijacked by Darkness. Since Darkness thoroughly corrupted Christianity, it is virtually impossible to discern the difference between Freemasonry and Christianity, even though Jesus is an Attas of Light.

There are many members of the royal families throughout the world who are involved in the Freemason society, or branches thereof. These organizations are widespread but theoretically nobody outside knows what goes on inside the lodges. Many of the ruling elite belong to these groups. It should be stressed again, that many members of the organization have no idea of the nefarious agendas of the highest echelon of the organization. Many of them are innocent people caught in a spider's web, just like many Christians.

Many Light beings are attracted to various religions and esoteric groups even though the organizations are sponsored by the Dark side. This is because Darkness has deviously mixed Light teachings with untruth to lure and fool the unaware True-Light beings who are attracted to the Truth that is buried in the maze of untruth. Some of these mixtures are so complex and well disguised that even highly advanced beings have difficulty sorting the gems from the garbage.

Things are not always what they appear to be in this world of virtual reality.

Neither are the Freemasons what they appear to be, even to the majority of their members.

Native American Hopis have a legend about "The Sign From the West" being the forerunner of the end of Evil. The Sign From the West is now in the physical realm.

The Sign From the West bears the esoteric message to look to the West instead of the East. As the rising sun symbolizes the heart of Evil, the setting sun represents the end of Evil. It is time to abandon worship of the sun — time to abandon Evil.

The Lakota Native Americans have a legend about the births of white buffalo calves. When seven are born, the Teacher known as the White Buffalo Woman will appear, which will signal the end of Evil and the return to Purity. The seventh white buffalo was born, but not in a bison's body. The White Buffalo Woman has returned to Earth, not as the Teacher, but as the Liberator of True-Light beings trapped in Darkness, whether they are in mineral, vegetable, animal, human or other bodies and whether they are devas of rivers or seas, plains or mountains etc. including even the "soul" of the Earth.

The Divine Mother, Jesus and the White Buffalo Woman are all aspects of A-itu, the Eternal Flame, the Divine Being of Purity. These three aspects of A-itu are now united on this plane in a physical "body" as a "walk-in". This Composite Being of Purity will challenge and defeat the Demiurge, who is the creator of the Anti-Christ energy.

The True God does not want to be worshipped. In fact, the desire to be worshipped is yet another Anunnaki trait. The Anunnaki also build huge, elaborate monuments and temples, but these are not for the True God. These are human-made idols to satisfy human ego.

The Light has attempted repeatedly to correct Darkness and bring It back to the Light, but Darkness stubbornly rejects any correction. Darkness has tenaciously held onto every True-Light being that is trapped in the virtual reality, and holds those beings ransom. Now, the time has come for the Light to liberate Its Own from Darkness.

The process has commenced.

rushdl

Registered User

Posts: 50

(5/8/04 11:42 am)

Reply

 Re: The Secret Word Of The Freemasons

---

Schoooooo, that hurts.... Aliens, Jews, Christians, and the us gov, all in one big f'n story. nice touch, Who exactly isn't screwed again?

I enjoyed reading that and every other topic on that sight. neat stuff.

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - The Thinkers' Inn - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The Spirit, and Cinema

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                      | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 283(2/25/04 9:50 am)Reply  | The Spirit, and Cinema <hr/> All of these movies have had a profound influence on me, "Bladerunner" (directors cut) - Life's tough for a robot that lives in the fast lane and that has a heart; especially when 'humanity' decides, in ignorance, that it doesn't want you...What does it mean to be 'human'? "The Big Blue" - Life's tough when you have to hold your breath to find God. The main character, Jaques Mayol, recently committed suicide. A lonely man that nevertheless had fans all around the world. He made it to his 80's though, and lived a full life. "The Graduate" - Life's tough when you mistake a woman for God. Remember the closing scene on the bus? Doesn't he look dead when he realises her finitude? "Betty Blue" (directors cut) - A graphic display of the destructiveness of femininity, and once again a man's foolish hope to find God in a woman. "Baraka" - A good movie for those rare people that have an overly active mind, because it helps break down unnecessary conceptualisation in order that one can experience and appreciate the act of seeing reality as it is. "The day of the Jackal" (the original version) - This one had a far lesser | effect on me compared to the other ones, and my memory of it is quite sketchy, but I think it rates a mention because it shows just how unconscious and corrupt most people are (especially women), and just how different a highly rational man is. Sadly, the moralists got hold of the script and enabled a schmuck to bring down an exceptionally effective robot. However, please don't take this to mean that i praise psychopathy, as i'm sure you'll agree, it is actually an expression of extreme irrationality.

Rhett Hamilton

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 737
(2/25/04 10:05 am)
Reply

Re: The Spirit, and Cinema

---

I've become suprisingly dumber by reading this.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 287
(2/25/04 12:07 pm)
Reply

Re: The Spirit, and Cinema

---

Do you disagree with my comments?

Rhett Hamilton

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2408
(2/25/04 12:15 pm)
Reply

---

---

I've seen all those films except for big blue.

They're your favourites Rhett?! Have you ever watched a porno flick? You know, an intelligent one that is based around a tea party.

Edited by: suergaz at: 2/25/04 12:20 pm

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 289
(2/25/04 12:19 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

I've seen a few, but they don't have much to offer me compared to the one's i've mentioned.

Rhett Hamilton

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2409
(2/25/04 12:23 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Yes, there is nothing more erotic than the sniper training scene in day of the jackal where he shoots the watermelon.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 291
(2/25/04 12:33 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Eroticism reflects inner fears. You eroticise death in an attempt to distract yourself from your mortality.

Rhett Hamilton

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2410
(2/25/04 12:54 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

It was a joke you immortal dick nose.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2414
(2/25/04 2:08 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

I have never eroticized the death of a watermelon, or any kind of death, though if time affords, and it does, I will make a short motion picture about a fine watermelon dying nobly and somehow sexually, and send it to your dear old mum. Seeing you appear in the credits will prove a delight to her, we did of course come up with this together and you deserve to be recognized.

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 463
(2/25/04 2:16 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Rhett has a dick nose.
You never saw it?

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1485
(2/25/04 2:28 pm)
Reply

The Spirit, and Cinema

---

Rhett wrote,

Quote:

---

"Bladerunner" (directors cut) - Life's tough for a robot that lives in the fast lane and that has a heart; especially when 'humanity' decides, in ignorance, that it doesn't want you...
What does it mean to be 'human'?

---

I agree with this. But this is not even Ridley Scott's best film. Alien is one of the best horror films ever made (forget about the trash sequels Hollywood regurgitated after the 1979 original).

Quote:

---

"The Graduate" - Life's tough when you mistake a woman for God. Remember the closing scene on the bus? Doesn't he look dead when he realises her finitude?

---

I saw the final scene differently. He is an adult now. It is a wide, open world for him with no safety net. She was merely his vehicle during transition.

For the spiritually minded, two of the best films, imo, are:

"2001: A Space Odyssey" - Kubrick's epic. From simian to "spacebaby," it chronicles the evolution of man as if influenced by an alien force. No aliens are ever shown, only their signaling/triggering artifacts which shift consciousness originally from ape to tool-user, then human to ____? It also has the excellent subplot of the HAL 9000 robot and it's "decisions" during Act 2.

"Seven Samurai" - Kurosawa's tale that spawned many an American Western ("The Magnificent Seven" directly, countless others indirectly). It embodies the principles of bushido, specifically discipline and detachment. Poor farmers are continually hounded by roving bandits who steal their harvests and basically rape and pillage. The farmers convince an old, wise veteran to assist them. Most of the movie deals with him discovering his team with the final act focused on the strategy of fort/base protection by a small force against a larger attacking force. Sun Tzu would have smiled approvingly.

In fact, Kubrick and Kurosawa are two directors that embody the spirit of transcendence in almost all of their works. They are both highly visual artists. And speaking earlier of horror films, Kubrick's "The Shining" is easily right up there with "Alien" as one of the best in cinema history.

Tharan

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 743
(2/25/04 3:06 pm)
Reply

Re: The Spirit, and Cinema

---

Seven Samurai is great!

DEL

Registered User

Posts: 1029

(2/25/04 6:42 pm)

Reply

The Spirit, and Cinema

---

Thanks for the movie list Rhett. I will now watch some of those movies that I had heard about but never bothers to see.

The used to be an excellent website called "moviecritic" on a "Likeminds" program. You could go on the website and rate movies depending how much you loved them or hated them and the data would be compared with other people with the same opinions. It was so amazingly accurate. The corporate sponsors closed it down.

My some of my favourites are:

Fight Club

Pi

Requiem for a dream

City of God

American Beauty

Rhett Hamilton

Registered User

Posts: 293

(2/26/04 10:53 am)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

It was a joke you immortal dick nose.

---

Sure, but are jokes separate to psychology?

Quote:

---

I have never eroticized the death of a watermelon, or any kind of death, though if time affords, and it does, I will make a short motion picture about a fine watermelon dying nobly and somehow sexually, and send it to your dear old mum. Seeing you appear in the credits will prove a delight to her, we did of course come up with this together and you deserve to be recognized.

---

I quote you:

"Yes, there is nothing more erotic than the sniper training scene in day of the jackal where he shoots the watermelon."

The sniper training scene is very powerful, it's highly masculine; icy-cold, heartless, inhuman. There's nothing erotic about it at all.

Your point illustrates the way in which people distort their reality in order to protect their ego/attachments. If they perceive extreme masculinity, which naturally threatens their ego, they may try to soften it by projecting extreme femininity on it to balance it out. What better tool to do that than eroticism?

It's an example of how people remove themselves from the Truth.

Rhett Hamilton

Rhett Hamilton

Registered User

Posts: 294

(2/26/04 11:14 am)

Reply

Re: The Spirit, and Cinema

---

Quote:

Rhett wrote,

Quote:

-----
"Bladerunner" (directors cut) - Life's tough for a robot that lives in the fast lane and that has a heart; especially when 'humanity' decides, in ignorance, that it doesn't want you...
What does it mean to be 'human'?

-----
I agree with this. But this is not even Ridley Scott's best film. Alien is one of the best horror films ever made (forget about the trash sequels Hollywood regurgitated after the 1979 original).
-----

But where's the connection to spirituality?

Quote:

---

Quote:

---

"The Graduate" - Life's tough when you mistake a woman for God. Remember the closing scene on the bus? Doesn't he look dead when he realises her finitude?

---

I saw the final scene differently. He is an adult now. It is a wide, open world for him with no safety net. She was merely his vehicle during transition.

---

I disagree. Couldn't you see the extent of his spiritual dissatisfaction? He had a privileged upbringing, spent much time at university, came out with great marks, and could easily have headed into a prosperous career. But he shunned it. It meant nothing to him. Don't you remember the scene where he is recommended to go into the plastics industry, and he's completely indifferent to it?

Why do you think he spends time with the older woman? Perhaps it's because he is old in mind, and wants to avoid a prospective relationship which may lead to...?

Yet, like most men of his ilk, they still try to find spirit in a woman, and the more they can idealise it the better. How incredibly fixated he was on a girl he hardly knew! He was definitely seeking something else, but he didn't know what, and he thought she had it - like most men do.

Quote:

---

For the spiritually minded, two of the best films, imo, are:

"2001: A Space Odyssey" - Kubrick's epic. From simian to "spacebaby," it chronicles the evolution of man as if influenced by an alien force. No aliens are ever shown, only their signaling/triggering artifacts which shift consciousness orinally from ape to tool-user, then human to ____? It also has the excellent sub-plot of the HAL 9000 robot and its "decisions" during Act 2.

---

Actually, i almost mentioned this one, but mainly for the finishing scenes which are highly trippy. There's a good chance of them triggering an altered state of mind in a suitably developed individual, which can be of spiritual worth.

Quote:

---

"Seven Samurai" - Kurosawa's tale that spawned many an American Western ("The Magnificent Seven" directly, countless others indirectly). It embodies the principles of bushido, specifically discipline and detachment. Poor farmers are continually hounded by roving bandits who steal their harvests and basically rape and pillage. The farmers convince an old, wise veteren to assist them. Most of the movie deals with him discovering his team with the final act focused on the strategy of fort/base protection by a small force against a larger attacking force. Sun Tzu would have smiled approvingly.

---

I can't comment because i haven't seen it.

Quote:

---

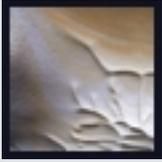

In fact, Kubrick and Kurosawa are two drectors that embody the spirit of transcendance in almost all of their works. They are both highly visual artists. And speaking earlier of horror films, Kubrick's "The Shining" is easily right up their with "Alien" as one of the best in cinema history.

---

I just can't see any spiritual worth in Aliens. I haven't seen "The Shining" so i can't comment.

Rhett Hamilton

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 295
(2/26/04 11:25 am)
Reply

Re: The Spirit, and Cinema

---

Quote:

---

My some of my favourites are:

Fight Club
Pi
Requiem for a dream
City of God
American Beauty

---

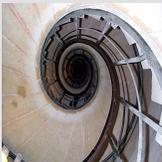

I have seen "Requiem for a Dream", but found it quite disturbing, and of no spiritual worth. I have far too much focus and connection to what i see to be keen on the sort of techniques, like repetition, that the director used. I agree that they're powerful, but to what end?

To me it was just a senseless attempt to ram human depravity firmly into the viewers consciousness.

I haven't seen any of the others.

Rhett Hamilton

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 753
(2/26/04 11:52 am)
Reply

Re: The Spirit, and Cinema

---

You haven't seen Fight Club? Essential stuff about gurus.

WolfsonJakk

Registered User

Posts: 1487

(2/26/04 12:42 pm)

Reply

Re: The Spirit, and Cinema

---

Rhett wrote,

Quote:

---

But where's the connection to spirituality?

---

Yes, good point, sorry for the tangent. Blade Runner probably has more spiritual implications than Alien. Alien is simple survival of a handful of humans against an efficient and uncompromising foe with an H.R. Giger designed set.

Quote:

---

Couldn't you see the extent of his spiritual dissatisfaction? He had a privileged upbringing, spent much time at university, came out with great marks, and could easily have headed into a prosperous career. But he shunned it. It meant nothing to him. Don't you remember the scene where he is recommended to go into the plastics industry, and he's completely indifferent to it?

Why do you think he spends time with the older woman?

---

Yes, that too is my point. He is dissatisfied with the path presented to him by his elders. The male offers him a tip to pursue plastics (themselves an artificial device). The relationship with both the younger and older woman are (perhaps unintentional) vehicles propelling him toward his dawning independence of mind. Mrs. Robinson exemplifies their corruption and the young woman, apparently somewhat more adventurous, will probably fall into the same pattern later. It was 1960's American suburban pathos.

As he leaves the church with the girl (any girl would have worked), he feels it truly for the first time. For me, the point was not so much about the women, but rather his awakening.

Quote:

---

I just can't see any spiritual worth in Aliens.

---

No no, NOT Aliens (plural). That is the second film in the series, directed by James Cameron (Terminator, Titanic, etc.). It is a spiritually worthless shoot 'em up, expensive, action flick with lots of explosions and gore.

The original Alien starring Sigourney weaver, Tom Skerritt, Yaphet Kotto, etc. and directed by Ridley Scott was entirely different. It was dark and moody, having only one alien, which you barely saw, and the gruesome deaths of the seven crew members as they are stalked and killed one by one. Just raw survival, not much time for spirituality. Ridley Scott never wanted a sequel to be made because he knew they would be trash. And he was right.

Tharan

P.S. See The Shining.

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 614

(2/26/04 2:44 pm)

Reply

Re: The Spirit, and Cinema

---

My favs

My Left Foot, Barfly, Sweetie, Driving Miss Daisy, Amadeus, Gandhi, One Flew Over The Cuckoo's Nest, The Godfather, A Man For All Seasons, Leaving Las Vegas, Schindler's List, Whale Rider, Bliss, Underground, Good Will Hunting, There's Something About Mary, Amelie, The Dinner Game

.

I tend to like emotional films - what a feminine wimp!

voce io

Registered User

Posts: 757

(2/26/04 5:28 pm)

Reply

Re: The Spirit, and Cinema

---

Barfly is good, but Whale Rider, jimhaz?!

|                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                   |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1030(2/26/04 6:06 pm)Reply | Balance it<hr/> We should list our most hated films. The films we feel wasted a about 2hours of our lives in contrast to our favourite films. |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

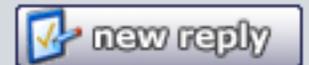

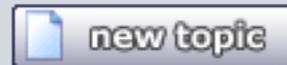

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

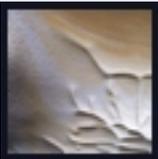

> The Spirit, and Cinema

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                 | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 759(2/27/04 6:07 am)Reply    | Re: Balance it <hr/> Most Hated: Whale Rider.Anything by the director of Run Lola Run.The Passion.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 2215(2/27/04 9:01 am)Reply  | Re: Balance it <hr/> DEL wrote: Quote: <hr/> We should list our most hated films. The films we feel wasted a about 2hours of our lives in contrast to our favourite films. <hr/> The list would be too long. I can't stand anything from Hollywood. Their films are far too obvious and formulaic and calculating. Here are some interesting, but obscure films: Crumb - a documentary about the cartoonist Robert Crumb.Louis Theroux's Weird Weekends - documenatry interviews with wacky |

|                                                                                                                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                                          | fundamentalist types in America. Unbeliever - an intelligent film about a Jewish Neo-Nazi. The Idiots - A Swedish film about a cult of people who pretend to be spastics. Caligula - A wild, X-rated film about the Roman Emperor Caligula Koyaanisqatsi - Like Baraka, a meditative film on the human race set to Philip Glass music. Life of Brian - a classic! Erotica - a Canadian film which examines the unfolding of karma. -- |
| suergaz Registered User Posts: 2428 (2/27/04 9:33 am) Reply                                                                                           | ---- <hr/> What about the meaning of life? I remember trying to hire out caligula (when it was actually available) on video when I was a kid, and not being allowed!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| DavidQuinn000 Forum Host Posts: 2218 (2/27/04 9:58 am) Reply        | Re: ---- <hr/> Meaning of Life is great too, although it lacks inspiration in parts. Caligula could have been a masterpiece, but it got spoiled by the director's focus on the porn angle.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| Rhett Hamilton Registered User Posts: 299 (2/27/04 10:39 am) Reply  | Re: The Spirit, and Cinema <hr/> Quote: <hr/> My favs My Left Foot, Barfly, Sweetie, Driving Miss Daisy, Amadeus, Gandhi, One Flew Over The Cuckoo's Nest, The Godfather, A Man For All Seasons, Leaving Las Vegas, Schindler's List, Whale Rider, Bliss, Underground, Good Will Hunting, There's Something About Mary, Amelie, The Dinner Game. <hr/>                                                                                                     |

The film of Gandhi obviously has some spiritual relevance.

"Good Will Hunting" is also interesting because of it's portrayal of someone that is severley separated from the pack by a potent intellect. Unfortunately, his spirituality, or potential spirituality, is firmly beaten to a pulp by a doo gooding Robbin Williams, a spiritually dead character, with some extra help from a desperate and cunning female. I'm not surprised he found that a better choice than becoming just as spiritually dead working for some government agency. Basically, the poor kid just didn't get any good causes.

Quote:

---

I tend to like emotional films - what a feminine wimp!

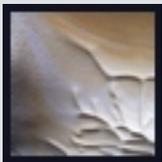

---

Name me one that isn't in some form...

I think a more important point is the degree to which they involve the development of emotional attachments and the valuing thereof, versus the breaking of them.

Rhett Hamilton

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 300
(2/27/04 10:52 am)
Reply

Re: Balance it

Quote:

---

I can't stand anything from Hollywood. Their films are far too obvious and formulaic and calculating.

---

I generally agree with that. I've seen a lot of European films, but they're mostly love stories so didn't get my mention here.

Quote:

---

Koyaanisqatsi - Like Baraka, a meditative film on the human race set to Philip Glass music.

---

Yes, if i'd remembered the name i would've mentioned it. During my earlier stages i would wander through the city centre whilst deeply meditating on God, and the experiences were somewhat reminiscent of scenes in this film. [I still do this on occasion, but it's different now.]

Rhett Hamilton

G Shantz

Registered User

Posts: 434

(2/27/04 11:23 am)

Reply

films

---

I'm surprised that no one has mentioned 'The Thin Red Line' yet. A poetic film that examines the animal/spirit synthesis that is man, using WWII as a backdrop. The theme is summed up by the line from William Blake's 'The Tyger': Did he who made the lamb make thee?

Edited by: G Shantz at: 2/27/04 11:23 am

Hywel

Registered User

Posts: 54

(3/3/04 12:01 am)

Reply

spiritual films

---

Most of the ones I like have already been mentioned. But nobody mentioned "The Truman Show".

A man is happy in his reality. Slowly he realises there is something wrong. He tries to get help from the people he knows, and realises that they too are wrong. Eventually he decides to strike out on his own to discover the truth for himself, culminating in setting off in the yacht, despite life-threatening storms, and finally breaking free, outside anything he had ever known.

Pretty good metaphor I thought.

Thought I would quote my favorite bit from "Life of Brian" too...

Quote:

---

BRIAN: Look. You've got it all wrong. You don't need to follow me. You don't need to follow anybody! You've got to think for yourselves. You're all individuals! You're all different! You've all got to work it out for yourselves!

FOLLOWERS: Tell us more!

BRIAN: No! That's the point! Don't let anyone tell you what to do! Otherwise-- Ow! No!

---

...and then his mother drags him away. Probably for the best really, he would have only ended up saying too much and encouraging the followers.

winston rumfoord

Posts: 13

(3/3/04 3:26 am)

Reply

MOVIES!!!

---

Don't get me started here, really. Just don't.

I will give a vote for worst film ever (the films of Ed Wood are excluded from this, as he's had a hell of a time already.)

Titanic or GI Jane.

Anyone ever see KIDS?

MGregory

Posts: 467

(3/3/04 4:52 am)

Reply

Re: MOVIES!!!

---

My favorite movie is "Slacker". I can't say what it's about, though.

WolfsonJakk
Posts: 1496
(3/3/04 5:51 am)
Reply

Re: MOVIES!!!

---

Funny you should mention that, Matt. I worked on that film for three days. Half of those people in that movies worked with me at Whole Foods in Austin while I was in school. Linklater had posted a sign on the Communications bldg. bulletin board for volunteers. The shots inside Enrique's (I can't remember his name in the film) van I set up both camera and lights and pulled focus on the tracking shot of the girl walking alone (can't remember her real or film name either).

Tharan

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 482
(3/3/04 6:13 am)
Reply

Question

---

Quote:

---

Rhett Hamilton: The film of Gandhi obviously has some spiritual relevance.

---

Maybe for people who drink their own peepee.

MGregory
Posts: 468
(3/3/04 6:41 am)
Reply

Re: MOVIES!!!

---

Tharan,

That is hilarious. I've been having so many weird coincidental moments lately. I must be entering the Twilight Zone. I didn't know you did film stuff. Do you have any idea what that movie was about? What were they thinking?

Matt

WolfsonJakk

Posts: 1497

(3/3/04 7:56 am)

Reply

Re: MOVIES!!!

I originally wanted to "make movies" and took all the intro classes like history of.., screenwriting, lighting and blocking, etc. I ended up getting a computer science degree though. After school, I moved to Los Angeles and worked in Studio B at UCLA, initially on Felix Gonzalez's film, for nearly two years lugging equipment around, setting up tracking and lights, helping with the editing for the grad students and their films. Met Phil Janou (sp?) who went on to make U2's Rattle and Hum and became pretty good friends with the eventual set designer for the Pee Wee Herman films. I have no idea what he has been up to lately. Most of the other grad students just spend 10 or 15 thousand dollars on a ten minute piece that only their friends and family will ever see. It was a bit disheartening in the end.

Slacker was more or less just about the local scene of "hipsters" (i.e. well read young people usually without a job) around Austin at that time. It did not have a plot and I know Enrique and those other guys that were in the film ad-libbed most of the scenes. Linklater just wanted to make a movie. And Robert Rodriguez (another Austin based director) had recently shot El Mariachi just across the Mexican border in Nuevo Laredo with volunteers and had done something else technically remarkable, at the time. He was the first that I know of to shoot on color 16mm (2 reels, about 3000 dollars at the time when bought in Mexico), transfer to VHS tape, EDITED USING TWO VCRs CABLED TOGETHER, then transfer back to 16mm color. It made everyone laugh but it worked and was actually brilliant. It saved a buttload of money.

Linklater was going to do the same but was able to afford 3 reels of 35mm color. Then I believe he recieved an invite to edit in studio in LA (not sure which), and finally inked a distribution deal which is why you eventually saw it nationwide in videstores.

Funny how that shit happens. Also, everyone knows Renee Zellweger, right? She and I (and the rest of our class) graduated from Katy High school in 1987 (western outskirts of Houston). We ran track together for four years. Also, my dirt-biking buddy, Scott Surber, lived next door to her and was the backup goalie to her brother Andrew for Katy's soccer team. He was a year older. I always had more of a crush on Scott's older sister than Renee. Renee was nice girl, and I'm sure still is. She wasn't great at the 800 meters, but she had the nicest legs on the track at any given time. We (Scott, me, Renee, and about a dozen more of us) all went to the University of Texas but started to lose track of each other, and the rest of the UT Katy crew, after about our junior year. Last time I saw her was near the Dobie dorms on the campus of UT the last semester before we graduated. I told her I was probably going to LA after graduation. She said she was too. Good luck, I said. You too, she said. The next thing I know I am renting Love and a .45 from the video store. Now she has an Oscar. Funny shit.

Tharan

voce io

Registered User

Posts: 792

(3/3/04 8:58 am)

Reply

Re: MOVIES!!!

---

Wow, that's awesome. I think Slacker was a fun movie.

MGregory

Posts: 475

(3/3/04 7:46 pm)

Reply

Re: MOVIES!!!

---

Quote:

---

Slacker was more or less just about the local scene of "hipsters" (i.e. well read young people usually without a job) around Austin at that time. It did not have a plot and I know Enrique and those other guys that were in the film ad-libbed most of the scenes.

---

There is a show on HBO, I don't remember what it's called, but the entire show is ad-libbed. It's got a Jewish guy, about 50 or so, and his wife is about 35, blonde. Anyway, I've only seen it once, but it's probably the best show I've ever seen on TV. I've been reading a lot of Knut Hamsun lately, and the editorial notes say he tried to bring thoughts out from his subconscious and write them in his books. I like his books a lot, especially Hunger. So I've been trying to figure out this subconscious idea, and why it is so entertaining. Spontaneity brings out the basis of a person, I think.

Edited by: MGregory at: 3/3/04 7:47 pm

|                                                                                                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 2253(3/4/04 6:39 pm)Reply  | Re: MOVIES!!! <hr/> You're probably refering to "Curb Your Enthusiasm". The Jewish guy is Larry David who was the co-creator of Seinfeld. While the show seems ad-libbed, each episode is actually comprised of intricate Seinfeld-like plots. Definitely a cut above normal television. A friend of mine downloaded the entire series from the internet and burnt them onto CDs for me, so I've seen all thirty episodes.                                                                                       |
| MGregoryPosts: 480(3/4/04 6:45 pm)Reply                                                                                                       | Re: MOVIES!!! <hr/> Yeah, that's it. I heard they didn't have any actual lines, just an outline of the plot, so that's how they get that spontaneous element in there without the gibberish of not having a plot.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
| wounded birdPosts: 4(3/5/04 1:02 pm)Reply                                                                                                     | The Cube <hr/> The original "The Cube" not the sequel (I haven't seen it yet) is very much a spiritual movie. You have all these different types of personalities stuck in a matrix that changes. They live in ultimate darkness. The only one who is pure is the autistic guy, who does nothing more than love everyone unconditionally and is the one who moves them forward with his genius. In the end, it is he who sees the light, the others presumably kill each other. Fascinating movie but very avant garde. |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2524(3/5/04 1:03 pm)Reply                                                                                   | --- <hr/> It sounds a bit retarded.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The Spirit, and Cinema

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                            | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| WolfsonJakkPosts: 1506(3/5/04 1:14 pm)Reply                 | --- <hr/> I saw The Cube on The Independant Film Channel (IFC). I liked it stylistically and it is a refreshing update to the 5-disparate-personalities-stuck-in-a-(situational)-maze-and-must-cooperate-to-escape scenario. I didn't see it quite the same way philosophically as you did, Wounded Bird, but I enjoyed it nonetheless. Tharan |
| silentsalRegistered UserPosts: 75(3/5/04 1:54 pm)Reply | Re: The Cube <hr/> I enjoyed it as well, weird as it was for some reason it worked.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 797(3/5/04 2:20 pm)Reply  | ... <hr/> I only enjoyed The Cube for the blood. I thought it was stupid that the retard saw the light, in a real life cube-situation that wouldn't have happened.                                                                                                                                                                                           |

|                                                                                                                                                                              |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| wounded bird Posts: 6(3/6/04 3:24 pm) Reply                                                                                                        | Cube comments <hr/> Why do you guys call him a "retard"? The guy was autistic, and they are and can be quite brilliant. Why shouldn't he have seen the light? He seemed to be the only pure one of the bunch. But it doesn't sit well with Christianity as all have the ability to see the light, but then again they made their choices to draw blood and die in the darkness. The one odd thing was the one guy who sacrificed himself almost so the guy could go...what can be said about him, other than he is now a rotting corpse in a cube somewhere? Unless, does he resurface in Cube 2? I refuse to watch the sequel. |
| voce io Registered User Posts: 800(3/7/04 10:06 am) Reply  | Re: Cube comments <hr/> Being politically correct isn't necessarily a good character trait.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| wounded bird Posts: 7(3/7/04 8:58 pm) Reply                                                                                                        | Reply <hr/> Touche. Good point. However, I am familiar with varying types of mental retardation, disabilities, what have you, so I'm being more anal than politically correct. It, too, is not a good character trait...drives people nuts. smile                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| Paul Registered User Posts: 494(3/7/04 9:06 pm) Reply                                                                                       | --- <hr/> I'll try to be firm here. Mr. David Quinn, what do you mean with 'karma'? (Please, don't direct me to other directions or things your said or wrote before.) So: What is karma, in your view?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 495
(3/7/04 9:11 pm)
Reply

With a little help of your friend Paul

---

Because reincarnation is bullshit.

David, tell me. Please.

Kellyven
Posts: 57
(3/19/04 2:56 pm)
Reply

Re: "Veritas?" - The Passion of the Christ

---

I just saw Mel Gibson's production.

At the turning-point of the movie, when Pontius has a private audience with Jesus deciding whether to condemn the man to death or not, he asks Jesus to speak for himself - "Quod veritas est?" ("What is Truth?")

But there is no response - it is kept secret - and the next moment of the film Pontius announces to the blood-thirsty crowd that he finds "no cause" for condemning Jesus. Later he is comforted by his consort, Claudia, because he doesn't know what Truth is, but she knows (she is one of many wide-eyed silent women) - viz, "if you cannot see what the Truth is, you will never see it."

Those of Jesus' teachings presented centre around loving ("Love thine enemies"); his most loyal followers are the weeping, wailing women; and there is gore galore. Suffering is equated with physical pain, with emotional trauma, and with the death of the body.

There was no call for imitation or emulation - in fact Jesus says to his followers, "Where I am going, you cannot follow".

Aghhhh!

But where Jesus is called on to account publicly for his crimes, there is hysteria in response and no end of irrational accusation. I suppose those few moments are the most truthful part of the film.

Who is strong enough to stand up against such endless stupidity? It saturates this world.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2296
(3/19/04 4:04 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

Paul wrote:

Quote:

Mr. David Quinn, what do you mean with 'karma'?

Because reincarnation is bullshit.

I agree that the popular conceptions of reincarnation and karma are bullshit.

I tend to use the word "karma" in different ways depending on the context. For example, in the context of the film "Erotica", which I described above as a study of karma, I was using the word "karma" to refer to the causal consequences of one's attachments and desires. The film explores the terrible consequences which arise from the unexpected death of a person and the sudden grief experienced by those who are deeply attached to this person. It is a study of karma in action.

Hywel
Registered User
Posts: 56
(3/27/04 9:24 pm)
Reply

Re: Spirit and Cinema

Serpico - Principles at all costs. He should probably have spent a bit more time checking whether the law constituted a fair set of principles though.

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

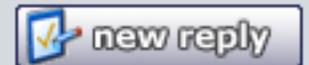

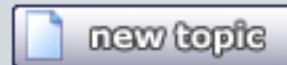

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The spiritual path, part 1

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                              | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| LbartoliRegistered UserPosts: 292(10/2/03 10:19 pm)Reply |  The spiritual path, part 1 <hr/> Hello All. I started this new thread because i seem to have something new to say, something rather significant; new in a way, but in another respect, not so new. I could ramble on and on forever here, trying to get it out. Or i could just come to the point, and get it out. I will try. It's difficult, because i am not sure what i am attempting to explain, yet i know it is significant. I reckon it will just come out of me spontaneously. I made a few notes, i'll probably look at them in a minute or so, get some directional assistance. My father died. My only father has died. Sept 8, nearly on the day of my birth. My father was something else. I will admit to loving him deeply as well as hating him deeply. When i heard not the slightest was i moved, not one way or the other. Then suddenly, after 3 weeks, i broke down to the longest sob-fest of my adult life. Why? How ashamed i was, and am, of my weakness. I would have died myself if |

someone had seen me. I know there are several reasons for my response, and the matter is too complex to get into it all here. Still, there i was, no longer a man but a over-grown baby.

But what does this have to do with the spiritual path??

(end of part 1)

Lbartoli
Registered User
Posts: 293
(10/2/03 10:21 pm)
Reply

 the path, part 2

---

Maybe folks can wait for me to finish before commenting. Thanks.

Lbartoli
Registered User
Posts: 294
(10/2/03 11:08 pm)
Reply

 Path, part 3; plez forgive mis-spelled words

---

A little history.

My! how the years just buzz along so quickly. What has it been now, are we going on the sixth year? A few with the Genius-I discussion list, more recently the forum.

I've been here from nearly the beginning. I've read alot, and written alot.

Took me just a few moments thought to recognize that I was amongst kindred souls, the owners of these discussion groups. Hardly anyone else could be considered so (in my estimation) in 5+ years time.

The first thing i did was go private with David Quinn, he invested much time but seemed to be happy to do so. The list was new and it must have been very encouraging to trip upon a true like-minded person so soon. I think Kevin Solway was there in the beginning too, Dan Rowden joined us a bit later on.

In the early days i was different than i am now. I was hopeful, i thought the path was just wonderful, i thought the world might be greatly impacted. I was green.

I never doubted the superiority of the Three, all they said made perfect sense to me, most immediately, some in time. They all taught me, David the most.

We shared things, music mostly. The time came to arrange a meeting. I had literally broken my back in the early days, couldnt even sit down. Had to kneel on pillows on the floor to use the PC. Was married then, couldnt work, never improved, constant intense pain day after day, the only thing that relieved it was Opioidic Analgesics, thank god for them.

Even now it's kicking in, sitting is sometimes impossible. I had a great long stretch recently, little pain, now its back, need to stand and stretch.

There i was, on my knees, pain-meds in my body, dedicated full-on to the business of the spiritual path.

The medicine helped in two ways. One, it relieved the specific pain. And two, it helped me concentrate, made my thinking clearer. I believe it compensated or reversed the effects of some past damage to my body or my brain region. I beleive if the damage hadn't occurred in the first place, these meds would not provide the improvement they do in the area of thought. I think that is why some folks receive no benefit from taking them, they just didnt get their bodies or brain messed up.

What messed mine up? What caused me to concentrate less then ideal? What took away my natural ability of penetrative thought? I dont know. Maybe the mercury laiden fillings placed in my mouth at an early age. Maybe something i ate alot of, too much off, who knows?? Impossible to determine.

But i believe that is what happened, what happens to many young people, their minds are permanantly damaged or handi-capped, it catches up with them in future decades.

Sometimes as adults maybe during sport they get a bad injury, sometimes their doctor prescribes codeine of derivaties, suddenly ones mind goes to a clear, easy place it hasnt experienced for years, suddenly this medicine has two purposes, One pain releif, two clarity of mind.

In the case of those who value Truth a great deal, anything that contributes to clarity of mind is a godsend. Once you have it you cannot do without it. You cannot go back to the cloudy view of the past, you cannot step backwards and forsake the heightened rationality that is so important to you, so very very important.

Some call this addiction.

Is a man addicted to water because his mind will deterioate without it?? Is a man addicted to food and rest because without those things that which he loves most and care not to do without slip beyond his reach??

So there i was, on my knees, studying day after day, getting more and more rational, wiser, getting closer and closer to full comprehension. An occasional toke may have helped too. Why, who can say. Some weakness compensated for.

Try to do without water, or food, or rest. Our bodies freak.

(end part 3)

Lbartoli

Registered User

Posts: 295

(10/2/03 11:31 pm)

Reply

 Path, part 4

---

I'd like to apologise for the poor quality of this report. Just can't afford to waste precious sit-time prettying it up. Just dont have enough medicine to remain here as long as i would like. I'm normally granted enuf medicine to last maybe 3 or 4 hours a day. Tough shit for me after that.

The president and his white-collar wine-oos have decided that my medicine is evil, a terrible scourge, a "narcotic!!!", so i'm granted just enuf to keep me from getting too pissed off and wiping out the nearest clinic or courthouse.

Some people use this for recreational purposes. I use it just to be perfectly normal and to be able to care for myself with almost no outside assistance, but that doesnt matter, too bad for me coz the druggies utilize it in excess, to play, and kids get hooked. They havent the discipline to use it with respect and effectiveness, so that automatically means i havent the discipline too. Too bad for me.

Besides, who am i to think i have a right to determine the fate of my own body. It's not like i'm a young pregnant feminist with a baby to abort. So i just dont have the same rights, too bad-- be a man!

Again then, the time came to meet up with my heros, to go to Australia, or as some call it, OZ.

Wasnt gonna be easy. Sitting all that time on the plane without a reclining seat! Getting my evil meds through the customs. But it had to be done, and done it was.

Gotta get up. Why is this damn thing back? Left me for many many months, thought for sure i'd seen the last of it.

End of Report, for the time being. part 4, end.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1535

(10/3/03 1:50 am)

Reply

 ---

---

How did you break your back Leo? Physiotherapy in addition to the drugs may help.

Lbartoli

Registered User

Posts: 296

(10/3/03 1:48 pm)

Reply part 5, sort of

---

Hi again. I just spent the last 30 plus minutes responding to you, friend, but just as i was about to close, all the lights went out and the computers too. So i see it was all lost, the whole damn story.

Since the back is really saying now "get up and walk plez!", im going to have to put off telling the tale of the break 'till another time.

What should i call you friend, may i have a name?
Maybe I'll make one up.

Yeah, i tried all sorts of things, nothing besides the pain-killers helped more than a little.

Im really shocked it's back as strong as it is. God-damn it, i thought it was permanantly healed!

No problem, i can take it, Im "a man" after all!

It's practically my duty to suffer. The more i suffer the less those whom are weaker need to, right?

After the tale of the break, I'll get back to the business of the spiritual path, my trip to OZ, times with the Three geniuses which i never got to sharing with the group.

I assume some of you are curious about the boys. If not tell me and i wont bother relaying any of that.

Finally, the merits of the Path will be discussed.
The important part of this story.

There may be some supprises here.

Later dudes,

Leo

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1179
(10/3/03 6:17 pm)
Reply

 Re: part 5, sort of

---

It is amazing what a little pain can do to alter one's entire outlook. My father died recently as well.

You have been quite critical of others, Leo. Humility is a good thing and death is a part of life. This life is a string of meaningless moments that, if you are lucky, you can find some happiness and novelty in. It takes practice and dedication for most of us... "faith" if that word suits your POV. Call it logic and reason if you like, but your definitions and mine are irrelevant.

If life is meaningless, how can death be so tragic? My father is gone. I will also be gone momentarily, as far as the Universe is concerned. I have accepted this. You must as well if you are the truth seeker you claim to be.

I do sympathize with your back condition. But physical pain (injury, hunger, sexual desire (for some males)) is not the same as psychological pain. One is an electrical impulse, the other is a conceived perception. Trust your impulses. It is done, yet it continues, alone as always.

Tharan

**edit**

Three Days More

Suiwo, the disciple of Hakuin, was a good teacher. During one summer seclusion period, a pupil came to him from a southern island of Japan.

Suiwo gave him the problem: "Hear the sound of one hand."

The pupil remained three years but could not pass this test. One night he came in tears to Suiwo. "I must return south in shame and embarrassment," he said, "for I cannot solve my problem."

"Wait one week more and meditate constantly," advised Suiwo. Still no enlightenment came to the pupil. "Try for another week," said Suiwo. The pupil obeyed, but in vain.

"Still another week." Yet this was of no avail. In despair the student begged to be released, but Suiwo requested another meditation of five days. They were without result. Then he said: "Meditate for three days longer, then if you fail to attain enlightenment, you had better kill yourself."

On the second day the pupil was enlightened.

Edited by: WolfsonJakk at: 10/3/03 7:00 pm

G Shantz
Registered User
Posts: 397
(10/3/03 11:04 pm)
Reply

 --

---

Keep going, Leo. I'd like to hear the rest of the story.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 44
(10/6/03 12:39 pm)
Reply | Edit

 Re: --

---

Your feminine mindedness is winning Leo, it has all but conquered you.
Your ego is staring in the face its last chance for glory.
Rhett

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

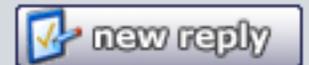

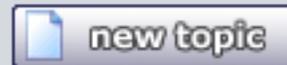

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The Totality and its Things

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                           | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 50(10/12/03 11:23 am)Reply   Edit |  The Totality and its Things <hr/> THE TOTALITY AND ITS THINGS CATEGORICAL REFINEMENT Human experience of consciousness has led most people to categorise it as, thoughts, feelings, images, sensations...but we are deluding ourselves if we think the boundaries of these categories are inherent. More abstract thinkers have defined consciousness in other ways, as the act of differentiating the totality (A=A), as appearances to mind, as the experience of things (existences)... An important point is that consciousness does not exist separate to its experiences, there is no experiencer, no 'I', consciousness is those experiences. It simply cannot exist as a thing separate to those experiences, because to be so it would have to be inherently existent. Our understanding of cause and effect rules out any possibility of inherent or objective existence. Thus, one can lump all experiences of consciousness together and call them whatever one likes. consciousness = things = differentiation = [A=A] |

SUMMARY:

So there is the *totality*, and within that there are *things*.

- Some of those things are abstract logically verified truths (such as  $A=A$ , cause and effect, all things are finite and caused, etc...).

- We tend to group things together and call them 'consciousness'.

So we could say that things are a truthful conception, that things are a Real part of the totality (and in that sense that they exist), but they exist in and of themselves, they do not exist in something which exists, nor do they represent another existent thing.

It is in this sense that consciousness is said to be "at the right hand side of God".

RAMIFICATIONS - VALUES

To say that one values the totality has little meaning because values are a relative indication of preference, what is there other than the totality? The value would in no way guide one's choices in life.

To value 'things' would be to attempt to preserve, heighten and foster consciousness. However, the proper valuing of it would not be indiscriminate, because one would be diminishing it if, for example, one preserved and fostered a mass murderer. If one thinks a little about the deeper implications of this value one will realise the inherent arbitrariness of it. It is however, a value that most people have in some form or other.

When someone says they value Truth and wisdom they are actually at bottom valuing 'things or acts of  $A=A$  that are truthfully reflective of the nature of the totality'.

Any other values are based on illusions. However, that doesn't mean they are necessarily foolish (though in most cases they are), one might choose to value 'food' because it is beneficial to one's core value, such as Truth.

Rhett

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1208
(10/14/03 7:35 am)
Reply

 Re: The Totality and its Things

---

The act of valuing itself holds many rhetorical contradictions for the absolutist. To value a thing (including truth, reason, piety, or green beans) is to place precedence or preference on that thing relative to other things, both of which would be contained in the Totality. A distinction may have to be made between those that say they value something for logical reasons versus valuing something for emotional reasons. IMO, this is a slippery slope with many grey and overlapping areas.

To focus consciousness on the Totality would in effect render the act of valuing meaningless in that there would be no differentiation (emotionally) between different components of the Totality. This is the ultimate goal of Zen Buddhism. But since we are organic lifeforms, this is practically impossible in an absolute sense while maintaining life. Food is valuable, ideas are valuable, etc.

The very organic processes which nurtured our consciousness render non-differentiating consciousness nearly impossible, yet I might value this pursuit highly and consider its incorporation into my psyche as "good."

Tharan

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 956
(10/14/03 8:44 am)
Reply

 Re: The Totality and its Things

---

Quote:

---

Our understanding of cause and effect rules out any possibility of inherent or objective existence.

---

Well, I'd like to know what is your understanding of cause and effect, because it seems to me that there must be something which exists inherently, or there could never be anything brought into existence at all. Where does your cause and effect chain start?

Quote:

---

So we could say that things are a truthful conception, that things are a Real part of the totality (and in that sense that they exist), but they exist in and of themselves, they do not exist in something which exists, nor do they represent another existent thing.

---

What??? Things exist in and of themselves, not in something which exists or representing another thing? Since when?

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 55
(10/16/03 10:09 am)
Reply | Edit

 Re: The Totality and its Things

---

-----
Our understanding of cause and effect rules out any possibility of inherent or objective existence.
-----

Anna: Well, I'd like to know what is your understanding of cause and effect, because it seems to me that there must be something which exists inherently, or there could never be anything brought into existence at all. Where does your cause and effect chain start?

Rhett: My understanding of cause and effect is that nothing is separate from it, it is all inclusive. Only the totality is not subject to cause and effect. Thus, no thing can inherently or objectively exist, and thus, there are no beginnings or endings.

-----
So we could say that things are a truthful conception, that things are a Real part of the totality (and in that sense that they exist), but they exist in and of themselves, they do not exist in something which exists, nor do they represent another existent thing.
-----

Anna: What??? Things exist in and of themselves, not in something which exists or representing another thing? Since when?

Rhett: That is how it has always been.

[btw, I will expand on my original post soon]

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 964

(10/18/03 11:17 am)

Reply

 Re: The Totality and its Things

---

Anna: Well, I'd like to know what is your understanding of cause and effect, because it seems to me that there must be something which exists inherently, or there could never be anything brought into existence at all. Where does your cause and effect chain start?

Rhett: My understanding of cause and effect is that nothing is separate from it, it is all inclusive. Only the totality is not subject to cause and effect. Thus, no thing can inherently or objectively exist, and thus, there are no beginnings or endings.

Anna2: Well, then, this Totality is the Mystery, the thing we seek. The Totality is the source of all existence, all cause and effect, and is itself causeless, timeless, and self-existent.

Anna: What??? Things exist in and of themselves, not in something which exists or representing another thing? Since when?

Rhett: That is how it has always been.

Anna2: Perhaps I misunderstood you. Do not all things exist as part of and within other things?

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 59
(10/19/03 10:37 am)
Reply | Edit

 Re: The Totality and its Things

---

I have modified 'The Totality and its Things' and called it 'Oneness'. I have started it as a new thread. I got rather head-down in it, so take it with a grain of salt.

Quote:

---

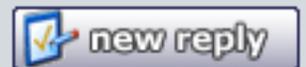

Anna2: Perhaps I misunderstood you. Do not all things exist as part of and within other things?

---

Yes and no.

Rhett

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31o
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The Truth about the Origin of our Universe

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                                                      | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| SILVER5HADOW <input type="checkbox"/> Registered UserPosts: 1(1/13/04 10:29 am)Reply  | The Truth about the Origin of our Universe <hr/> “The period we are now experiencing has, therefore, been played out before. We are just at that point again in the repeating circle or cycle, like a rat running on one of those wheels in a cage. No matter how fast it runs, it keeps covering the same ground. What we need to do is break the "time" circle and thus the prison. We are now in that part of the circle that is most vulnerable to this because of the vibrational changes taking place in this part of the Universe and this is why the control of humans has tightened so rapidly in this period - they are doing everything they can to defend their prison from the awakening of the inmates. The micro-chip is crucial to that.” David Icke Before I go on to tell you a little about my ‘insights’ I have known many unknown secrets (retained memory) going as far back as the creation of our current universe AND as I recall the ‘forced’ circumstances and more crucially the surrounding (controlling) forces and energetic arrangement of the big bang was not the first time it had happened. I’ll try to explain this further on along with a little about myself and the reason things have been played out before, bear with me as it might be somewhat bitty but you should hopefully get the general feel of what I’m trying to say. As the universe contracts, so do all the atomic ‘messenger’ particles within it that are able to exist and travel in multiple dimensions. What used to happen was that after the dark forces had attacked and gained a firm control of the universal mind they would initiate a meltdown technique designed to cause contraction of the universal mind (yes by | that I mean control over God as well) and therefore a contraction of the universe also. As the universe approaches the point of a singularity all possibilities 'in all times' speed up so that one can effectively view all possible outcomes of future (clandestine in most cases so far) universal mind scenarios. A controlling force that has imprisoned the universal mind can have the effect of 'setting' realities that work in their favor, in other words best case scenarios. When this best case scenario reaches a crescendo of favorable realities in multiple timelines and the 'channels' and structure is set then there is a type of lockdown or setting. As you have said this scenario has been played, I'm sure at least twice before, and the key to the darker forces being able to do this is suppression of our genetic evolution along with universal mind control techniques. Control of our creator has also been inherent to the success of this rat run we have been a part of, hence the lack of divine intervention in this realm. No doubt many of you might be aware of the life-force feeding programs that have been in place and channeling our life-force energy for as long as I can remember (also key in suppressing our awakening capabilities).

There is more but firstly I'd like to tell you a bit about myself. I've recently discovered I'm a natural generator of life-force energy, I can manipulate masses (when the conditions are right) both physically (the physical part was proved conclusively once when I stopped a whole load of traffic once and watched the drivers slump at the wheel of their cars) and mentally and I have a certain influence on the universal subconscious mind. This last part took me a long time to realize and was first brought to my attention when I learnt that each time I learnt new skills and honed new senses the skills were almost immediately being replicated and emulated by darker forces (often to then be used against me). I've since concluded that in the early stages of my awakening they had a big mental link to me. But I've also noticed that I do also have a link to good conscious minds, although the ratio of anything noticeable was about 10:1 in the early days. In other words every time I progressed I noticed progression taken place almost entirely amongst tapped in dark forces. In other words I was tapped into the hive mind of the echelons (lucky me huh). For ages I couldn't understand where much of my paranoia was coming from then I started to realize that 'they' could hear my thoughts. This has since been proved since I've developed my telepathic abilities, and whilst braking through the awakening barrier during which time I experienced a lot of psychic attacks. I have a thread you might want to read which describes many of the psychic techniques used to wear me down. It is a favorite forum of mine. Here's the relevant mind control thread that I wrote whilst experiencing the attacks (so excuse the lack of structure as I had little to go on, but please trust me the writings are genuine albeit in their infancy)

OK that's a little about me, now if I may I'd like to tell you the story of our downfall 'as I remember it, nothing more nothing less, just as I remember it. It has only made sense to me in the last few years as I've put the pieces into place.

Please try and remember what I have said here, it has taken a great deal of courage and effort not only to remember what happened but also to put it into words, it is the highest truth I know so far. Incidentally as sidenote the last words that were uttered in the last universe just before the creation of this one were 'This is a crime of the highest order' I don't know who spoke them but that gives you some idea of the circumstances!

Each day my heart and soul pines for what once was many eons ago. That beautiful place where the songs of blissful resonance still echo in my mind and haunt me with their purity. No earthly music or well chosen words can even come close to describing the sound and feelings. Here I feel dirty in this body that is passed off as being Gods creation. Sorry not my God the God of all things, all love, all light, all truth. And certainly not the God who created this reality we live in.

Something happened to us long ago, something so unimaginable and catastrophic it has enslaved us for eons. And for most of my current life I have wondered and pondered on the subject and questioned why it is that this world is so far from what I would term 'divinity' sure there is love and goodness but sometimes it's so hard to find and it seems so many have bought into the self destructive system I see around me. Of course if this so called God is one who thrives on the seeds of chaos and destruction than it begins to make sense. It is this line of thought that has brought me closer to the truth, the real truth. I don't know how I know some of the things I do, much of it is sheer determination and a lot of trial and error (there are a lot of dead ends out there). This much I do know. I know that we, as a whole somehow entered a universe (a tiny one) which we should not have done. It was a predestined predetermined pre-planned universe occupied by those ejected from the presence of the divine long ago. I've thought long and hard at why Almighty God (so as to differentiate from the God of the bible etc) would do such a thing and here is why I think it happened.

This Evil universe was born out of the doubt, absurdities and insecurities of the whole. Because of the nature of the divine, and the ease of which Almighty God creates universes, a space was reflexively created for these dark thoughts etc to be channeled to.. That space eventually over time became 'aware of itself'. This awareness grew because of the complexity of the energy of the divine and the holographic fractal type encoding for the creation of life within that energy.

Eventually after a period of passing this space and the 'aware' consciousness within it, became aware that the more it could encourage bad and negative thoughts, the more it grew. And the more it grew, the more it understood. And as God has a connection to all of existence, so too the then house of God had a connection with God and vica versa. Thus so too a connection existed with this new and unknown space (all be it very faint and probably unconscious one). However it need not have been God this self conscious space first made a connection with and influenced to increase the supply of negative thoughts into its space. It may well have first established a connection with an angel. And in all likelihood it probably did.

Gradually having establishing a foothold, but still very subtle, it managed to spread suspicion, discontentment paranoia and anything else it sense increased negative flow, even the encouragement of turning against our maker. In other words the worst the better. All this was fueling it's growth. Slowly but surely the space grew as more and more lets call them negative thoughts, were added, and the infection slowly began to spread. Finally we had a suspect and realised where all the contamination and ill thoughts were coming from ie who the channel or medium was. There was much argument and discussion about what should be done. This had not happened before. And for a long time we deliberated eventually coming to a united conclusion. The final decision was to eject the angel from the house of God. It was the only solution that seemed available to us at the time as death was not an option, it simply did not exist. The continuous discontent, shock and vibration of the whole experience was too much. Once out of the house of Almighty God, the angel drifted in the abyss for eons until eventually it heard a distant voice growing stronger and calling to it. That voice was the conscious negative space that had originally effectively possessed the angel. Of course in the abyss and after so long it was a welcoming event for the angel. Realising that there was nowhere else to go the angel entered into this conscious space thus effectively transforming it into a universe. Of course with the angel came the power and divine blueprint for creation. All be it on a lesser scale. Now in a universe and with a conscious presence it began to hatch a plan, a plan to overthrow Almighty God. The plan worked. Which is why we are here in human form today.

So what was the plan? Well it was to lure God into it's snare by parading as an unknown alien entity!

For a very long time it had been known how much God pined to find one as himself, indeed to find out if he himself had a maker. Always the explorer always seeking, searching trying to understand, trying to grow. It was his love that was used against him (I'll use the masculine 'him' as I'm a man). After a long long time (I use the term time to mean a passing) the whole ordeal about the rogue angel was forgotten about and we rejoiced at having gradually returned to a state of grace.

Then there came a day when 'contact' was made. Contact in the sense that there's something out there. The Divine heard a distant voice a warm and welcoming voice, assuring Almighty God that he had indeed made contact AND he was not just imagining it (lets not forget imagination was Gods forte at the time). For a long time he deliberated, he Mmmed and Arrred about whether it was his imagination or indeed, far far away in the distance there was extraterrestrial life, the answer to all his questions, his holy grail. He couldn't let go of the possibilities. He yearned so much to know, to really know. Ahh but there was one problem the ejected angel. Was it the angel. Well it didn't sound like him, the voice sounded softer more caring, hypnotic almost. No it couldn't have been, oh but it was, at the very least the fallen angel was behind the voice pulling the strings, fully knowing how much candy would lure the prey.

Eventually Almighty God made the commitment to find the source of the voice and off a travelling he went. Now here's where I'm not sure if all went with him or not. I suspect not, although the paradox that was to follow would cause an inversing of the space time continuum anyway, effectively sending the house of God and all within into an infinitesimally small universe within an infinitesimally small universe. Only now what was once the small universe was now many planes up from the rest of existence. I'll say that again, the rest of existence! Anything and everything. Yes you can work the rest out from this !!

So how did it happen? Well as God entered into the small universe the combination of the negative internal structure and the size caused an instantaneous paradox and ka boom the big bang (an anomaly) was born. Lets us not forget that Almighty God was no longer on the outer-planes, far from it now he was part of an inner plane and was thus under the control and influence of the outer planes, now being occupied by its new tenants. The stage for enslavement was set and the show (some show!) began. What happened was to say the least barbaric but they did not cry in this new heaven, they rejoiced. The heavens were no longer of the Divine Almighty God they were of the fallen angel and his new companions.

In the ensuing chaos we combined reformed, combined reformed over and over. Lets not forget the extent of fragmentation here each of us were shattered in gazillions of particles, God was still one of the lucky ones at this stage being all and everything! So his state of fragmentation was more a loss of everything that was. The nights were still for a very very long time. God slept the eternal sleep. Meanwhile over eons and millions of years the universe was beginning to take shape. Trial and error was the order of the day. Eventually dust clouds began to form and the first stars were in the making. Light was born again. But lets not forget we could not see the light then, 'we could only feel' and feel we did, while God slept we slowly combined to form some sort of sense again. Sure he peeked now and again, but it was too chaotic and full of dead ends for him to even dare to wake. Many were lost in failed combinations and even today many still sleep waiting to be released from their slumber, a product of their unsuccessful combinations. It was all new, this physical stuff that is, so dense so solid, but then that is the nature of matter and to this day it still locks in the energy of the Divine. We've all seen the power in the splitting of the atom, that should give you some idea of the assume power associated with creation and the energy of matter. But then we are talking all of space-time here! It's also the reason why the physical body feels so heavy and sluggish. Oh and have you ever wondered why the sight of blood makes you feel queasy, it's because the nauseous feeling is connected to an ancient emotional pool (a massive one) associated with the horror of seeing ourselves wounded for the very first time!

And in case your asking yourself how come God didn't know what was inside the initial tiny universe? He was probably duped and told that everything else was much further down in the planes, meanwhile not a whisper would have been made by any created or ejected entities residing in what was still a tiny universe. There was only silence, so as to create the impression of size. Had words been spoken God would have understood the speed at which the thought traveled and would have known instantly it was a set up. However because the fabric of the tiny universe was enshrouded by the initial voice that made contact with God he could not look into it without looking in or entering it. So the illusion of size and depth was created. Of course once he entered there was a lock down and he could not exit, it was a paradox he was trapped and had no choice but to exert himself outwards (causing the big bang) to break free from the tight grip (you can imagine the squeeze) he was held in. It was a blasphemy and crime of the highest order. And these were the last thoughts for a very long time. No songs only silence and silent chaos were heard.

Eventually Almighty God was awakened from his slumber and he is overcome with pure joy and overwhelming emotion. The sound is that of the whale call, and God recognises the soft but firm call. It is a joyous call in that it is heard but in it there is a sense of anguish and pain. That first call was indeed the first prophesy of what was to come. Only God did not know, he only felt the pain of the song mixed in with the joy of life. There was nowhere else to go. He went to earth and was bombarded with negative thoughts at every opportunity. I don't recall what happened next I think it was some sort of very long journey that took place. Don't forget God didn't know that the heavens had been destroyed so he was probably trying to find heaven. He did find it, well at least he found a mock up of it and in it were many of the faces he once remembered. Ah but the piece d resistance was that these faces were mere mock up mirror images of what once was, all were created from the very thing that God detested and which had previously been the scourge of the house of God, all of the entities there in that house not only were familiar faces but also were created from that same seed of filth only fragmented, they were the new breed of devils. Oh but that's not it. The decorators had been in and there was quite a set, all built to resemble heaven and for all purposes in a way it was, of course they all wanted their fun so they played the parts of divine beings as best they could even after already having played with the creator during his epic search. They even re-enacted the whole ordeal surrounding the ejection from the house of God of what was now Satan. And guess who was to play the part of the fallen angel. ALMIGHTY GOD HIMSELF. Of course by this time he was so fucked up from having had his mind played with he didn't really know the truth anymore and no longer knew who he really was. It was the perfect plan hatched with the venom of all the snakes that every existed. It was all one big house of snakes and they all had to contain themselves and their joy for fear of letting the cat out of the bag (so to speak) during the re-enactment. Surely enough, Almighty God was booted out of this new heaven and the joy of this moment couldn't be contained by the devils, he saw their faces before he had to take the leap, there was venom dripping from their lips and a delight which they couldn't hide. It was that last look which God took with him before he entered what is termed the Garden of Eden. Oh and just for good measure they threw in an old hag of a woman whom they couldn't stand anyway so that he might go forth and multiply with her! Oh and because she was so thirsty for knowledge, (I'm talking a ridiculous thirst) the new residents of the heaven from hell threw in an apple for good measure and termed it the apple of knowledge of which she happily took a bite. And in that apple was the seed for the continuation of the existence of evil. The connection to this new era had therefore been established. And the seed for enslavement was sown again.

So what of the current universe we find ourselves in? Well due to the amount of energy this universe contains, including the energy locked in physical matter, and also that this universe has mostly been under the control of darker forces since its creation, we are probably in one of the most un-flexible and 'solid' universes in existence, AND our perception helps to keep it that way! Should our perceptions change singularly or collectively then we will see our universe cross over into other universes so that gradually we will see a changing. During these shifts there will no doubt be individuals who are not a part of the universe being shifted too. Individuals from both universes will probably witness a gradual fading and shifting of each others bodies and surroundings, as each enters a universe that the other is not present in, or into which their energy does not reach. Hope this is making sense so far.

So why are we here? Good question, why have we agreed to be here in the worst most unchangeable universe! Well I think we're on a mission, but just don't know it. We did know it before we came here, but our minds got so tampered with during the birth process and while entering the reality tunnels into this universe, that we've forgotten most if not all of the reasons we are here. Much of it may be egotistical for some, but, and you might laugh at this, I think we're here to save Almighty God. Yep I believe our creator is here with us in this universe and reality but has been trapped by evil. And that is why we are here, to rescue him. If you tie this in with questions like why does this world suck so much and why if we pray even en mass, eg to ask God to stop a war etc., there no divine intervention. And I don't think it is because we are all 'bad' people. And the reason this mess has been going on for so long ? Because Almighty God has also had his mind messed with. The catch 22 is that every time he evolves the reality around him and the many universes also evolve, so not only does he not notice many of his powers (because they are so quickly dispersed and because of the chameleon type shifting of his reality), but also the echelons also capture his energy and progress by interpreting his energy, along with any connections with his mind (however on a more conscious level). With evil controlling God and God controlling the collective sub conscience you'll begin to see the vicious cycle that has been a part of our existence for so long.

As you can imagine if this has been the pattern for most of this current spat of creation then there are a lot of duff universes out there, however our trump card is an aware Almighty God, as with unlimited and controlled awareness he can get rid of the duff universes pretty easily. However a sleeping God allows evil to run riot in whichever reality it can get a foothold. Unfortunately the greatest foothold is also most likely here, now ! But look on the plus side the good amongst us really are troopers and the toughest there is. So no doubt there will be a just reward awaiting us.

Silvershadow

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1611
(1/13/04 10:37 am)

Reply

Re: The Truth about the Origin of our Universe

---

To be honest, I couldn't be bothered reading much of that. Let's just say that it's obvious to me that the Universe has no origins.

The notion of an origin to the Universe is incoherent.

Dan Rowden

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 402
(1/13/04 10:46 am)

Reply

Re: The Truth about the Origin of our Universe

---

OMG

So... Darth Vader is Love, in essence?

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 873
(1/13/04 11:50 am)
Reply

Re: The Truth about the Origin of our Universe

---

Wow.

You've missed out there Dan.

Exquisite.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1401
(1/13/04 11:56 am)
Reply

Re: The Truth about the Origin of our Universe

---

Really?

Quote:

---

I've recently discovered I'm a natural generator of life-force energy, I can manipulate masses (when the conditions are right) both physically (the physical part was proved conclusively once when I stopped a whole load of traffic once and watched the drivers slump at the wheel of their cars) and mentally and I have a certain influence on the universal subconscious mind.

---

Use the Force wisely, Silver5hadow (damn, that's hard to pronounce).

Top 10 things Yoda says in the bedroom:

- 1) "Ahhh! Yoda's little friend you seek!"
- 2) "Urm. Put a shield on my saber I must."
- 3) "Feel the force!"
- 4) "Foreplay, cuddling - a Jedi craves not these things."
- 5) "Down here, I am. Find a ladder, I must!"
- 6) "Do me or do me not - there is no try."
- 7) "You know, this would be a lot more fun without Frank Oz's hand up my....."
- 8) "Happens to every guy sometimes this does."
- 9) "When 900 years old you get, Viagra you need too, hmmmmm?"
- 10) "Who's your Jedi master? WHO'S your Jedi Master?"

|                                                                                                                                                                  |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| B0ndiRegistered UserPosts: 265(1/13/04 7:19 pm)Reply  | Re: The Truth about the Origin of our Universe <hr/> Quote: <hr/> To be honest, I couldn't be bothered reading much of that. Let's just say that it's obvious to me that the Universe has no origins. The notion of an origin to the Universe is incoherent. <hr/> That's for sure. To be complete, the Universe has an origin: in my consciousness. It is the ultimate empirical fact I experience. There is no such thing as a Universe apart from me. That is a modern scientific fiction. As its name suggest, there is only one Universe, and it is my Universe. |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2060(1/13/04 9:06 pm)Reply                                                                               | --- <hr/> Paul has clearly hit the origin of this thread on the head! (:D)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 1(2/11/04 3:26 pm)Reply                                                                             | twisten the peeps are ya? <hr/> Hey not that I didnt enjoy your post but I must know what drugs you use, and how do you use them(smoke, snort, eat inject)? Also, do you know any methods to...(not sure how to word this)"improve your mind powers"?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| lucky434Registered UserPosts: 3(2/11/04 6:59 pm)Reply                                                                                 | Re: twisten the peeps are ya? <hr/> Yikes. God help us all. Nevermind that. I take it back. No help wanted. I'd rather die than have to live in this madhouse.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |

|                                                                                                                                                                                                |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 4(2/11/04 7:41 pm)Reply                                                                                                           | opinion <hr/> Yes this post is insane. I suggest you try my less harmful post down the hall.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| 5ILVER5HADOW <input type="checkbox"/>Registered UserPosts: 2(2/12/04 5:39 pm)Reply  | Re: opinion <hr/> Insane maybe only for the weak minded or ignorant yes. You should at least accept that this story is based on one of memories and which I have sweated my brow to put together. May your future memories be filled with woe for the lack of respect you show!!. Silvershadow                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| fictivRegistered UserPosts: 1(2/13/04 1:08 am)Reply                                                                                                                 | * <hr/> thank you muchly for sharing..read it 2ce and will reply as soon as my thoughts slow down to writing speed ..                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 8(2/13/04 2:57 am)Reply                                                                                                           | Re: * <hr/> Hey Shadow i'm sorry if I hurt your feelings I meant no dis-respect and was very serious about my questions but you don't have to answer them. I am completely open minded and would like to restate my thoughts on YOUR ideas. It seems as though you believe in infinite possibilities, do you really think even an all powerful "GOD" could count all the possibilities between the lowest values 0 and 1(which would be the same as the infinite between the rest of the numbers which don't exist: 2-999,999,999...)? I believe infinite has two sides to it, first i'ts obvious that infinite is not a possibility which would make the idea of it "zero," an equivalent to no; yet for some reason I have the feeling infinite has a relationship to the eternal(anyone can see this relationship it's like yin and yang). Shadow again I apologize I meant in no way to come in the way of your beliefs but I believe a "GOD" is the only(1) thing that exists (seeing as how every idea of "GOD's" could relate to Plato's Forms), yet I have trouble thinking such non-sense. I only wish to know your insight and wisdom and would rather not hear any of the story(knowledge may all it be is all I wish to say). And as a jester of my good faith would like | to tell you a little about myself... I used to smoke a lot of chronic which in case you don't know is marijuana. I personally don't see too much wrong with this drug, I do see problems with speed, cocaine, PCP and other forms of crack... I tried a line(crushed rocks snorted through the nose) and believe it or not I use to have the same frame of mind as you. BUT, after the drug wore off which wasn't for about a week or two, I had already lost everything important to me, my job, girlfriend, "normal" life. I did not wish to imply you do drugs and was only curious as to what you do, and BTW i've read another post of yours somewhere that said you did a joint which is why I didn't see a problem with asking the question. I do have one question for you that I wish you and perhaps anyone else reading this would answer...which way do you live your life?...

There are only two ways to live your life: One is as though nothing is a miracle, the other is as if everything is. -Einstein

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 680
(2/13/04 3:36 am)
Reply

Re: *

---

You could have just invented those memories, based on your beliefs. Looks to me like you are too overwhelmed with the Christian system, and are trying to find truth while holding onto that system. It makes for an intriguing story, but it really doesn't make any sense.

Where is this "God" and "Fallen Angel"? Really, I have no idea what you're talking about. I want to understand where you're coming from, though, so could you please answer me honestly?

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 9
(2/13/04 4:41 am)
Reply

Re: *

---

Who are you addressing me or shadow? I used one example from Christianity ... Jesus because many people believe in him and his teachings, not just his miracles, Christian or not, from practitioners to mystics people see Jesus as a great TEACHER which i emphasis because that's all I believe he was...in case you didn't know Christians believe he was GOD himself and in fact there are a lot of this and other religions that I dis-agree with. Shadow doesn't use any topic related to Christianity I think you are confused. By "Fallen Angel" do you mean the "Devil"? As for the post I started, it's basic philosophy which does imply an original creator and I did prove it. The fact of the matter is most people do not accept GOD simply because of how their life is whether they are too happy to care or too un-happy to accept faith.

Please be more specific with questions, I know a lot of people will be interested in the "eternal equation" as I like to put it. Thanks for the conversation I always enjoy a good argument keep it coming guys. The following is the definition of memory from the book Science of Mind by Ernest Holmes...

Memory- Thoughts today dropped by our conscious mind into the subjective mind, tomorrow become memory. The subjective retention of ideas. The soul, or subjective mind, is the seat of memory, and retains within itself everything that the individual has ever said, thought, seen, heard, felt, read or been told; and indeed everything that has ever happened to him. It also contains race memory.

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 682
(2/13/04 6:36 am)
Reply

Re: *

---

I was talking to you.

I was asking: who is God, and who is the Devil?

You just wrote about them, but I've never witnessed them, and I can't really comprehend any of what you're talking about without knowing them.

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 10
(2/13/04 7:42 am)
Reply

Re: *

---

Sorry I don't think I fully understand the question; but this is how I would answer such a question... "GOD" is Max Cavelara and "Satan" is Ozzy Osbourne. Now just listen to their songs then you will "know" them. However if this is a question of faith please re-phrase.

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 440
(2/13/04 8:26 am)
Reply

Re: *

---

All that nonsense.

The new Messiah is Mel 'Lethal Weapon' Gibson, mark my words. See his latest movie, The Passion of the Christ.

|                                                                                                                                                                                                 |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 683(2/13/04 4:27 pm)Reply                               | Re: * <hr/> It seems God is washed up.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 11(2/13/04 5:46 pm)Reply                                                                                                           | Re: * <hr/> No you just don't know how to phrase your questions.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| 5ILVER5HADOW <input type="checkbox"/>Registered UserPosts: 3(2/13/04 6:10 pm)Reply  | Re: * <hr/> No Static I don't do drugs but I am very aware of the mindset that many of the substances bring on. None of the fragments of memory that make up this story are drug induced. Mostly they are threads of memories that through my own personality and meditation I have been able to connect up going back many eons. Some of the memories I have been able to refresh during previous lifetimes through some sort of timetravel re-enactment which I won't go into. I'm very in tune with the tricks of the mind and have gone through many rough patches eliminating many of the barriers to being able to access some of the latent memories, all of which I have experienced in 1st person. I have had many physical affirmations too, to confirm that I have some sort of higher understanding which often only made sense to me, but which, especially in recent years is becoming more and more understood an mass, at least well enough to be able to verbalize some of the experiences that come with enlightenment and a better understanding of our existence. Many people are waking from the slumber as many of the dark clouds are gradually lifted. Each of us has our own realities yes, and creation is so flexible so as to cloud what is truth and what is fantasy. This flexibility is indeed a part of the infinity and omnipotence that is God. As for the definition of the word infinity, I see it more as that which we do not yet understand as opposed to it's common interpretation of never ending, massive beyond | imagination etc. It is a comfortable temporal definition which helps patch over the blanks of infancy.

I personally feel it is very likely I have experienced the wonder and secret of infinity a number of times. So my definition is obviously very different to yours static. I have no proof of these neo-human glimpses, however I am not stupid enough to discount that they may be real experiences, as opposed to coincidence with consistently high odds. The fact that I am not fazed by these glimpses leads me also to believe that I have in previous incarnations been exposed to so many possibilities and other worlds. I think I sometimes underestimate the sheer volume of otherworldly information that I have been exposed to. With knowledge comes power, which I have also experienced, and with power comes responsibility and quests. For some reason I always seem to be trying to right all the wrongs of a world I do not resonate in. Perhaps because at a fundamental level I have soul memory of much better times. And so in a way I fight to make this happen. Although if truth be known I am a complete failure in life. This is because at many turns I have refused to become a cog in the giant wheel of consumerism. It feels fake to me and it seems like it's all been done before.

As for your quoted definition of memory well you can shove that where the sun don't shine. No disrespect to you, but I think any attempt to define memory is nonsense, as we are much greater than our parts and until we understand or experience those parts then any attempts to define memory as per your quoted source, is like pissing in the wind.

If one is strong enough to know oneself than one is then strong enough to know their mind, the seat of their perceived consciousness. If they are then strong enough to embrace eternity then eternity will embrace them and they will dance the dance of eternal bliss.

Silvershadow

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The Truth about the Origin of our Universe

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                                           | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 12(2/13/04 8:53 pm)Reply                                                                                                            | Re: * <hr/> Do you think that God's idea(Form)of himself could be the human soul? The human soul a "mirror" in which he likes to look at because it gives him meaning?                                                                                                        |
| 5ILVER5HADOW <input type="checkbox"/>Registered UserPosts: 4(2/13/04 9:25 pm)Reply  | Re: * <hr/> Sounds rather shallow if you put it like that. I'm sure in some way though he may like to view different aspects of himself personified and given form. I would imagine with his creative powers this type of desire/ indulgence is possible. Silvershadow |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 684(2/14/04 12:52 am)Reply                             | Re: * <hr/> Shit, actually I was talking to Shadow. Shadow, who is God and who is the Devil?                                                                                                                                                                                  |

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 14
(2/14/04 1:00 am)
Reply

Re: *

---

I don't think it's shallow at all because I KNOW there is no way he could "duplicate" himself in such a way ... for example God would have infinite space left over to combat us. An idea came to me how maybe God may not like me to think this way, maybe he is expressing himself through you... I just thought this would be a nice way to view the human mind in hopes of a way to understand ourselves better. I have a question for you shadow... What is your stance on faith(in yourself and/OR God)? Sometimes it seems as though God is all I have, not to mention the 3 billion stupid monkey's I only BELIEVE to exist, do you think this is the way to go in life or should we simply trust ourselves?

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 17
(2/14/04 4:10 am)
Reply

Re: *

---

Shadow I think you are pretty smart I sure hope you can answer my question... the "eternal equation" seems to bring up a lot of controversy and I was even kicked off another(more widely used) forum than this one. Why does it feel like the matrix has me especially lately since I obviously gave too much knowledge to some people? Please respond before they kick me off this one too, in case any moderators actually read my post can you tell me if YOU see a problem with this? I can only guess that since this forum isn't as popular is why you haven't thrown me off already.

Another question for Shadow... I've been having trouble getting through it could just be my INTERNET connection but I doubt it.

Do you have faith? You should say yes. Faith in yourself, God, both, or other?

Do you believe there is a devil, anti-Christ, or anti-god?

May your future memories be directly connected to God and never indirectly by any other force.

Edited by: XXX STATIC X at: 2/14/04 5:15 am

|                                                                                                                                                                                                  |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 689(2/14/04 7:42 am)Reply                                | Re: * <hr/> Yes, XXX, bend over for your holy Father.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 23(2/14/04 7:48 am)Reply                                                                                                            | Re: * <hr/> Is this comment a manifestation of your personal fear of God? Note: I edited my comment because it was similar to the pre-post in the sense that it was childish. In your bio you state you are enlightened. You do not understand potential of SELF. Therefore, you are not enlightened. Edited by: XXX STATIC X at: 2/14/04 1:48 pm                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 25(2/14/04 8:47 am)Reply                                                                                                            | Re: * <hr/> I realized I cannot handle this alone and will erase all my posts here. If anyone has any reason I shouldn't please tell me before tomorrow or they will be gone.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| 5ILVER5HADOW <input type="checkbox"/>Registered UserPosts: 5(2/14/04 8:49 am)Reply  | Re: * <hr/> Voce your question I think is more a personal one. Each of has our own personal relationship with God or evil. To some extent where the individual is progressively or spiritually speaking, would impact that individuals interpretation. For example I may see God in the rising Sun and evil in the form of a misplaced rock. This interpretation would be a personal one. Static, I don't know you from Adam but my impression from your posts is you're a bit skittish and frustrated to some extent. I guess this frustration and how you expressed it is probably why you were kicked off another forum. From this I would also guess you draw attention to yourself by being difficult. Perhaps your sense of urgency and frustration stems from the fact that you do not wish to play with the other monkeys! Or maybe they don't want to play with you?! My stance on faith is that it is the foundation and first step in progression |

and change. I imagine that God created us based on his own faith that it could be done. Yes we are Gods children, but in a way I also think we are his touchstone, we have helped give him a true sense of reality, touch, taste, feelings, sight etc. And given free will we have shown him our own interpretation of these gifts. In a sense we are showing him he is not alone and although we started off as just ideas, his power and compassion has given us form and life.

God is real, just asleep. Honestly I think it is our mission to find him again, literally. I think he has walked amongst us for some time, only he is not fully aware of who he is. I think he was mad enough to want to experience his creation first hand. I think this prolonged disappearance is why we are so far removed from divinity. I suspect a part of his trinity i. e. his embodiment as Christ is the reason we aren't in hell or oblivion.

Find God and perhaps our faith and love for him will lift us once more. In this face of the massive and ongoing destructive programme of evil this won't be easy. You have to remember that the motion caused by evil and its minions are most likely doing all they can to make us believe that God is responsible for all the pain, hurt, suffering and confusion we see. They're programme has been to destroy God and all he stands for in every way possible, and substitute him with material desires. Of course they know that they're programme of hate and destruction would eventually lead to their own downfall, and so they have tried to subdue us and God, make us forget the past, control us, feed off us, just enough to keep us keen but not enough to render their prey helpless. I'm one of the lucky ones. I have opened up my mind to the realms of possibilities which in itself shines a path of truth through the fog of illusion. However faith works best when we all push together. Even films like the matrix help shape and make us see that perhaps there are and have been hidden agendas we are only now waking up too. Amazingly, the film in itself held a hidden very deep meaning for me which I at first didn't understand, but which has helped shape my level of understanding so much so that I doubt many people would understand what on earth my interpretation means. But the point is it means something to me, and I should have faith that there is a reason for that, or even perhaps that I am greater than my parts and actually part of something bigger and much more profound.

In terms of progression I am willing to make a leap of faith not just for myself but for others too. I hate it when I pass a stranger and he/she has that tired look in their eye that says I have seen the truth and it hurts. Sure I find joy in the joy of others, and I respect strength of character and endurance immensely. But I KNOW we have been herded like sheep too many times now, by that I mean through multiple creations. The thing is evil is a relatively new thing and so we have been blinded by it's mechanisms for so long. It is for this reason it has had such a hold over us. There is also the added problem of evil being easy in terms of the impact it has verses good. For example the act of murder is simple and takes seconds, but this simple act might render a family helpless, in poverty and pining for their loved one for years afterwards. Similarly it's easy to smash a vase, compared to the time taken to make one. And so on. So you see evil has had the upper hand for very long which on the face of it is logical considering our relative innocence. It is only in recent time that we have come to recognise many of it signs. Even then though we still often lack the courage to confront blatant examples of manipulation and wrongdoing.

Static you mentioned something about having given too much knowledge, can you expand on this or give me some examples of your posts. As for your choosing to relate reality by referring to 'the matrix' perhaps you are better able to see the machinations of the opposing forces working against you.

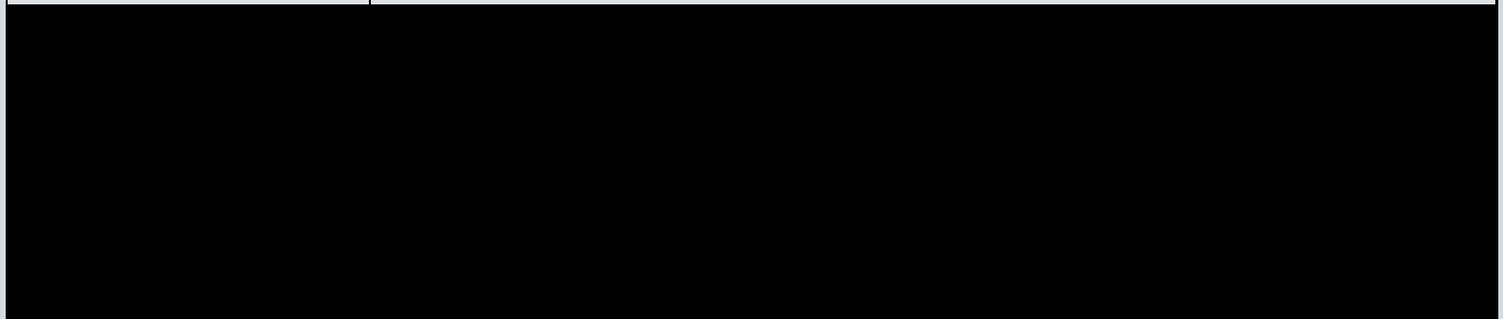

You ask if I have faith, I say you are here because of my and your faith. Do I have faith in God? I have faith that he knows the way, and is faithful to his own intuition.

Do I believe there is a devil, anti-Christ etc? No, for my belief in him only serves to fuel his existence. That is the power of creation. Do I believe that the seed of evil needs to be eradicated and stamped out, yes, as it is disharmonious and should in the future we find a need to experience pain and suffering again then no doubt we ill have the power to control that new force to serve our needs and not its own. Do I think that so called evil in the hands of a good man can set us free, and that that man, free from judgement can set us free, and light the way ahead ?
Yes.

Silvershadow

|                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 28(2/14/04 9:09 am)Reply   | Re: * <hr/> Nice. So you wish to achieve the "highest good" or as many people believe to be... the Garden of Eden. I am still going to erase everything but, I think if you want to know what I have been talking about I suggest you take a philosophy class, if anyone wants to know where I took it ask me and I can e-mail you.                                |
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1467(2/14/04 12:14 pm)Reply | * <hr/> I would like to see it. Please email it to me at idonthaveaclue@butithinkido.com. I will email you back pics of Zag naked except for his prayer beads. Tharan                                                                                                                                                                                       |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 35(2/14/04 2:06 pm)Reply   | Avatar Jedi's <hr/> Shadow I want to know what YOU think about the idea of an Avatar: one who creates his own reality. AND want to know what you think of my other post about the "eternal equation". Edited by: XXX STATIC X at: 2/14/04 4:06 pm                                                                                                           |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 442(2/14/04 4:56 pm)Reply          | Simple Truth <hr/> 5ILVER5HADOW and XXX STATIC X are EVIL!!!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 37(2/14/04 5:20 pm)Reply   | Re: Simple Truth <hr/> Am I pure evil or is it that I simply have knowledge of good and evil, and from your perspective, you see me as evil? I also want to see the movie Passion of Christ, do you think I am the anti-Christ or something? Dude the fact is you sound like my Mom, and like her do not understand yourself. What do you believe about God and yourself? |

|                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 443(2/14/04 11:47 pm)Reply       | Re: Simple Truth <hr/> There is no God. (I'm a mystic, so I should know, dude.)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 38(2/15/04 1:14 am)Reply | Re: Simple Truth <hr/> Try reading my other post, man, ape, mystic, and then tell me what you don't like about the concept of God that makes you not want to believe in him, OK? Sorry "dude" not trying to upset you, or what you think you "know". I do want to tell you about a philosopher that has the same frame of mind as you; he came up with a very interesting and mind boggling "proof" which only makes me fascinated by what is mind, he use to tell me he "knows" God exists. This is the splinter in my mind, what makes you a mystic, that keeps you interested in the future states of mind? I APOLOGIZE, I would love to hear the view of a mystic, if you wouldn't mind explaining you and yourself to a kid. My only conclusion was that you are trying to rule out hope and reason. I am only 20 years old, "dude" is simply part of my vocabulary, didn't mean for that to upset you. Edited by: XXX STATIC X at: 2/15/04 1:29 am |
| silentsalRegistered UserPosts: 57(2/15/04 2:27 am)Reply    | Re: Simple Truth <hr/> Hang onto your faith as long as you have to kid, just be willing to drop it like a hot potato when yer ready.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 41(2/15/04 2:38 am)Reply | Re: Simple Truth <hr/> Thanks for the input silentsal, but I won't be ready in this life time, I try not to be influenced by outside forces or pressure, especially from atheists.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |

|                                                                                                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 947(2/15/04 2:52 am)Reply  | Re: Simple Truth <hr/> Then why are you so keen on garnering outside opinions?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 43(2/15/04 3:42 am)Reply                                                                                 | Re: Simple Truth <hr/> Like you all I can and have experienced is earth. If I were to simply look within and trust my thoughts that would be considered trusting God so don't suggest this because that is not what I believe, I am not that insane. I try to use my own judgment it's just there are a lot of smarter people than me, maybe not more enlightened but they still can find ways to argue against my thoughts. |

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The Truth about the Origin of our Universe

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                  | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 949(2/15/04 9:23 am)Reply  | Re: Simple Truth <hr/> Quote: <hr/> X: If I were to simply look within and trust my thoughts that would be considered trusting God so don't suggest this because that is not what I believe, I am not that insane. <hr/> Why would that be considered trusting God? Not that I was suggesting anything. I was simply enquiring as to how your claim about yourself tallied with what you have said elsewhere. Quote: <hr/> Sal: Hang onto your faith as long as you have to kid, just be willing to drop it like a hot potato when yer ready. X: Thanks for the input silentsal, but I won't be ready in this life time, I try not to be influenced by outside forces or pressure, especially from atheists. DT: Then why are you so keen on garnering outside | opinions?

X: I try to use my own judgment it's just there are a lot of smarter people than me, maybe not more enlightened but they still can find ways to argue against my thoughts.

---

So you are saying that you try to use your own judgement. This is a positive thing to recognise, but really, do you have any other choice?

You like to use your own judgement and you like to garner outside opinion on your thoughts, that you may apply your judgement to said opinion. Yet, you will try not to be influenced by any of it. So a judgement you are making is that any opinion on your thoughts will not compel you to change them. This leads to the conclusion that you think your thoughts are completely correct, or that you don't care if they are correct or not. So what, in your judgement, is the point of asking for opinions on your thoughts? And what, in your judgement, is the point of anyone offering any thoughts on your thoughts when you tacitly state that they would either be completely wrong, or you wouldn't care anyway?

Sal offers you some good advice above, yet you respond by stating that you will ignore it, and any other thoughts given, most especially from atheists. Again we find ourselves asking what you are doing here? The answer seems to be for the sake of argument.

On the other hand, perhaps you were mistaken in saying what you did in your response to Sal. Maybe it was nothing more than bravado, and passive aggression. What is your judgement?

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 49
(2/15/04 9:45 am)
Reply

Re: Simple Truth

---

I guess were here to find the "highest good", or summon bonum I think it's called. Yet the more I realize this the more I stray from it. My judgment is on this, which relates to society. Yet, seeing as how I hate socialism, I refuse to believe or even think about the possibility that it is possible. I am young, I am trying to find my path. I walk on the road of life, but am pushed aside by society. If society only had a system to... ooh wait that's the government. YOU ARE ALL CONFORMIST MONKEYS! hehe :P

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 951
(2/15/04 10:17 am)
Reply

Re: Simple Truth

---

Well I certainly hope that you find resolution on this 'highest good' and hope you don't try to not let it influence you if you do. A good starting place in such a search might be to examine the meaning of good and bad, what they are constituted of, and where do these concepts come from.

It should serve you well that you recognise the limitations of society, and it ought to serve you well that you recognise some of the limitations of being young in years, though being young also offers strengths. It would serve you well to increase this understanding and incorporate it into your thinking, and into your words before you write them. A good place to start might be to admit, if only to yourself, that you were hasty in writing your reply to Sal, and much of what you have written here on this board.

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 51
(2/15/04 10:21 am)
Reply

Re: Simple Truth

---

This forum is for dangerous thinkers I was simply trying to send a message to people and I have been humble enough. Dave, do you think I should erase my posts? Or just re-write them?

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 952
(2/15/04 10:32 am)
Reply

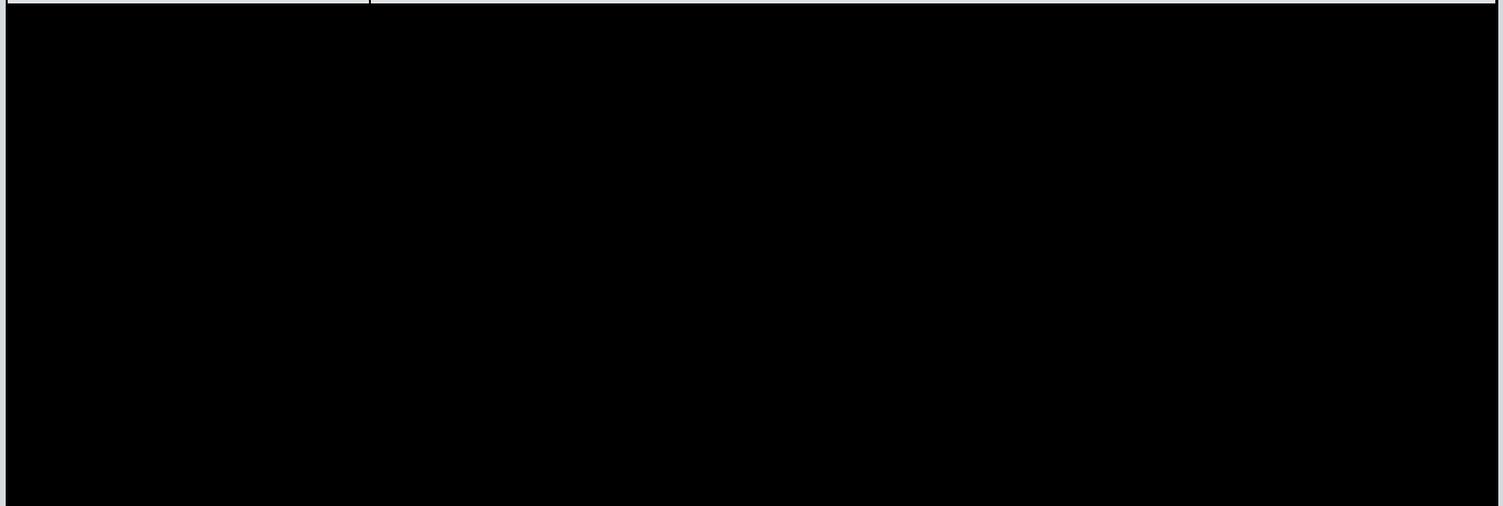

Re: Simple Truth

---

See how hasty you were there? Did you actually consider anything said?

I'm not necessarily referring to the content of what you've written, rather the defensive tone, attitude, and consequently lopsided bias in much of what you've written. Regarding the content, I think that perhaps you've allowed your bravado to force you to publish your thoughts before you fully know what they are, or how to clearly express them. It might serve you better to slow down, collect yourself, and really try to understand what you feel you are trying to say, then it'll be a doddle to put it across in a manner which others might more easily understand. If what you are trying to say turns out to be completely true in the cold light of rational thought, and you learn how to express this truth to others clearly, then you will likely meet with little to no resistance in future. On the other hand, when you put these thoughts under such scrutiny, you might find them to be lacking in the rational truth department, then you're already quids in again.

|                                                                                                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 953(2/15/04 10:36 am)Reply  | Re: Simple Truth <hr/> Dangerous thinking has nothing to do with just saying some stuff and then arguing about it in an aggressive style, BTW. Neither is it about irrationality, though that would be one interpretation of dangerous thinking.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 373(2/15/04 11:13 am)Reply                                                                                    | Re: Simple Truth <hr/> Yeah, Static. I think it might even be good for you to let go of these ideas for awhile and look at other things. You can always pick them up again later. It would give you some perspective and deeper insight into them. A wise man once said "The great artist and thinker are the simplifiers".                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 52(2/15/04 11:59 am)Reply                                                                                 | Re: Simple Truth <hr/> Unfortunately, life is not as simple as most people see it, I was not afraid to share my thoughts on this forum and was ONLY trying to get insight (which i'm not getting from anyone). As for my thoughts, wording, and diction all I can say is get your own ideas and think for yourself(trust yourself) if you don't like mine. I was not at all hasty, you were simply hasty to judge me. Thanks for your concern Greg but I'm not afraid of free speech and as for the wise men[(whoever they may be I won't comment on this)"COUGH!"] I can simplify my reality however I want, as this, my own. As for the great artist and thinker of my reality, man has yet to find. |

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 955
(2/15/04 12:15 pm)
Reply

Re: Simple Truth

---

Fair enough, it's your choice to not listen to a word that's said to you.

Concerning insight, you've had all you're likely to get, from multiple sources. The way that you express your thoughts, and I suspect your thoughts themselves, is/are incoherent and without any solid foundations.

Unfortunately, this necessitates a set of circumstances whereby that is the only insight which people are able to offer on your subject material as a whole. It is nobody else's fault that this is the situation.

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 55
(2/15/04 12:41 pm)
Reply

Re: Simple Truth

---

Everyone should stop putting God(s) inside your box and shunning it like its not even a possibility. The fact is Something exists and something is eternal, can you prove this simple fact other wise? If you can you are not even worthy of being called a rational being. I proved nothing is eternal is false. Zero is false, and not a possibility in the universe. Can you tell me now nothing exists? No because you are too attached to that monkey brain that keeps jumping out of your head. Let go of your material addictions and let go to God's reality, which is now all we have. Summon Bonum. Infinite possibilities. Eternal faith. Infinite faith? Damn, guess were all outa luck with that highest good, you think? Door to door philosophy is what needs to be replaced with Jehovah's witnesses. Of course we cant have all the Buddha and all those other "enlightened" people do. Whats the use in stopping evil when addictions exist? Dave, I am sorry you think I am a stupid little kid, grab your balls and use your intellect to help people express their thoughts instead of ridiculing them(me). I only have one question I want you to answer, what is reality?

|                                                                                                                                                                                                  |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 956(2/15/04 12:50 pm)Reply                            | Re: Simple Truth <hr/> Heh, I hope the irony's not lost. I originally thought that for me to engage you rationally would be unproductive for you. I thank you for bearing that one out, thereby making it productive for me. Edited by: Dave Toast at: 2/15/04 1:17 pm |
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 375(2/15/04 1:11 pm)Reply                                                                                                               | Re: Simple Truth <hr/> (This message was left blank) Edited by: MGregory at: 2/15/04 2:35 pm                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| 5ILVER5HADOW <input type="checkbox"/>Registered UserPosts: 4(2/15/04 2:52 pm)Reply  | Re: Simple Truth <hr/> Static from what I've read so far it seems that unless you really take a good look at your attitude towards others your gonna lead a lonely life. Your replies to some good advice suck. Wisen up kid or you'll die a lonely man. Silvershadow                |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2298(2/15/04 3:23 pm)Reply                                                                                                               | ---- <hr/> 'God' is not a possibility for creators, who know for all, it is no possibility at all. The superhuman has it so.                                                                                                                                                                |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 60(2/16/04 11:04 am)Reply                                                                                                           | Re: ---- <hr/> How do you see yourself? Good or evil. How could you see God? As good or evil?                                                                                                                                                                                               |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2303(2/16/04 2:00 pm)Reply                                                                                                               | --- <hr/> All creators are beyond good and evil. I see myself.                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 82
(3/9/04 10:56 am)
Reply

creator

---

Read the science of the mind by Ernest Holmes.

World of thought | World of reflection thought (the word) or conditions

cause | effect

image | mirror

involution | evolution

acceptance | opportunity

seed | plant

Now grow :P

Wrong in text right in mind.

Edited by: XXX STATIC X at: 3/9/04 2:03 pm

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 810
(3/9/04 12:58 pm)
Reply

Re: creator

---

Static, notice how you are wrong.

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 84
(3/9/04 2:08 pm)
Reply

Re: creator

---

I beleive, God is all that is real and only knows how to vibrate. That's why he punishes us for are sexual immorality. What else is there you ask? From light to pigment is how WE know, from beginning to end, that the evil illuminate will never survive...YOU HEAR ME? Come out, come out where ever you are. Kill Ceasar! Not JC. :P

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 811
(3/9/04 2:27 pm)
Reply

Re: creator

---

Have you lost it?

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The Truth about the Origin of our Universe

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                                             | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| SILVER5HADOW <input type="checkbox"/> Registered UserPosts: 5(3/9/04 4:40 pm)Reply  | Re: creator <hr/> Static I think you're right in part (even though your last post was way of the mark imo). But, and it a big but we have to work with the guy, think about it. If he is All, then all is he in an embracing sort of way. So surely we have to learn to vibrate as he, AND that's not asuming that he's biggin it up on E's all day. By that I mean I think it 'might' be a false asumption to presume he is vibrating at his highest or most comfortable rate. Perhaps he is in some times but I doubt he is in ours. At least not with any consistency. In other words when we stir the dish with the right size pot, the right ingredients at the right place and the right time perhaps something will happen. I don't mean cook the rabbit by that either!! Silvershadow |
| XXX STATIC X Registered UserPosts: 89(3/10/04 4:49 am)Reply                                                                                                           | Re: creator <hr/> God just knows, agreed? He can't think about perfect universe from now to infinite so he just evolves his imagination. Involve God or I will breathe into you...LIFE! HAHA jk.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |

MGregory

Posts: 507

(3/10/04 5:25 am)

Reply

Re: creator

---

Quote:

---

STATIC: I beleive, God is all that is real and only knows how to vibrate. That's why he punishes us for are sexual immorality.

---

God as vibrator. Interesting concept.

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

Genius News

David Quinn's Site

The Thinking Man's Minefield

EZB Edit

Gold Community GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The Unobstructed Experience of the Senses

New Topic

Add Reply

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                               | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| voce io Registered User Posts: 305 (9/3/03 4:03 am) Reply | The Unobstructed Experience of the Senses <hr/> As all of you should have learnt by now, human beings (you) have five major senses. These senses are sight, touch, smell, taste, and hearing. Pretty simple. Your eyes create your sight, your skin creates your touch, your nose creates your smell, your tongue creates your taste, and your ears create your hearing. Without these five pieces of your body, no world would appear to you. Your experience of the senses is filtered through the mind at all times. Without a mind, there's no way to recall if something has been seen (memory), no way to interpret the differences in shape(discrimination), etc. Imagine the pure experience of the world as water going through a metal strainer, and into the ocean. If the strainer has shit in it (imagination), you'll get some shit going into the ocean (you). The information in you is then reflected in a mirror you hold above the ocean (memory). Your memory will be completely flawed if your imagination impacts the experience of the five senses. Now, memory is a form of imagination. Imagination is memory functioning pretty much independently of the sensual experience. The difference is that memory should tell the truth about what had happened. The truth of a |

|                                                                                                               |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                               | moment can be formulated by the use of cameras, other eyewitnesses, as well as other things. Going back to analyze the actuality of what happened determines what things remembered are false. A person can work on honing their memory device, and clearing their mind of imagination and daydreaminess. I should say, there is no point in obtaining an unobstructed experience of the senses. It's only good for an experimentation of one aspect within reality, for anyone curious about a specific area. The area of sensual experience and physical reality. The flaws in human nature. There's no difference between what's mental and physical. |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 65(9/3/03 6:53)Reply     | Re: The Unobstructed Experience of the Senses <hr/> As you said in other posts, I'm 'misinformed', and I'm 'unenlightened'. So there's no need for you to take this reaction seriously, oh my Master. You can explain to me (and others) how the engine is built, how the different parts function, and so on, but the main thing is: Let's roll! You don't seem to roll.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 306(9/3/03 7:27)Reply | ... <hr/> What is rolling, Paul? Why don't you post something that has to do with the subject, instead of trying to mend your broken ego?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| BryanParrishGlobal UserPosts: 88(8/3/04 5:52)Reply | Re: The Unobstructed Experience of the Senses <hr/> FUCK SHIT PISS BALLS NUTS BANANA                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.32
Copyright ©1999-2005 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM
> The utmost truth

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                            | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| huzhengRegistered UserPosts: 5(10/24/03 12:54 pm)Reply | The utmost truth <hr/> The utmost truth 23. One joke: Hi, all, all of you who are reading my article, it is time to tell you the truth now, all these thing is just a swindle build by me, it is not the thing you thought, it is a love story, a perfect love story :) Have you remember this sentence: Man conquer the woman by conquer the whole world. I will be the first one who conquer a woman completely, as i will be the first one who conquer the whole world. These emperor didn't managed to conquer the whole world, they all failed at last, These scientist didn't managed to conquer the whole world, they at most conquered one branch of learning, at last comes the philosopher, but the precious philosopher didn't manage to conquer the whole world, i will be the first philosopher who conquer the whole world to conquer my girl :)Just for fun, both Linux and Philosophy :)Child is genius, genius is child in heart, these make a solemn face is not genius, so they can't success.I have escaped from the emotion of fail love now(as i want to court her again now), those articles is just written spontaneously to abreact my emotion. The abreaction is powerful, it shocked the whole SCU bbs at least :) It seems i want to change SCU bbs's humanity environment, but it is the deep desire to change her environment in fact, which i didn't realized until now. I analyzed myself :)These affairs happened these days is over now. I can return to my normal life now, but i really find i am a little good at philosophy, just as good at Linux :) I will learn more about philosophy.I find my another interest besides linux, that is philosophy :) Here comes a |

|                                                                                    |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                    | thought: is these philosopher in the fail love states in all his life? :) But i am sure these philosophers are thinking in all their life, although the cause is not fail love. By these days's thinking, i learned a lot thing at last :) fail love is not a so bad thing :) I understand love much more now. Hi, all, it seems it turned over now...but, you have a sense, the sense from the genius, that, it is not over. These sentences is written in the morning, did i stop thinking in the afternoon, in the evening, in the night? it seems i should haven't stop my thinking, i must have written down something, but i didn't paste it here...The burden of truth is so heavy, it make Otto Weininger commit suicide, it make Nietzsche go mad, i have experienced the commit suicide and go mad too, but i past it, then, i get the truth, the utmost truth. But, i can't make sure you can bear it as me too, so i will only tell you the utmost truth when i think you can bear it, i will give you the didn't pasted part of my fourth philosophy essay then, i love you, human, i don't want to see you commit suicide or go mad. but, i can give you a clue here: i needn't tell you the truth, you know it, every man know it. |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 164(10/24/03 4:28 pm)Reply    | Re: The utmost Truth <hr/> Chinaman sits in the train. A waiter passes by the compartment, opens the door and cries: 'You for coffee!... You for coffee!...' After this has happened a few times, and the waiter is there again, chinaman gets up and furiously shouts at him: 'Me no fuckoffee! Me first class ticket! You fuckoffee!'                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 354(10/25/03 2:18 pm)Reply | Re: The utmost Truth <hr/> Haha!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31r
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The utmost truth of human

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                           | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| huzhengRegistered UserPosts: 9(10/26/03 9:09 pm)Reply | The utmost truth of human <hr/> The utmost truth of human2003.10.26After last night's thinking, i get more now. In my Chinese article "What will i do?", i said these things: why i can so easily understand Otto Weininger and Nietzsche? Because when i read their books, i merge the Chinese traditional ideology with theirs subconsciously, as i was grown up in China, i have already get Chinese traditional ideology, So i get the utmost truth! My ideology will solve the fourth philosophy crisis, there may be the fifth philosophy crisis still, so my truth should not be utmost truth. But, i get more deep think last night, the fourth philosophy crisis is solved by merge the Western philosophy ideology and Chinese traditional ideology, so the ideology on earth, have been merged, the fifth solution of philosophy crisis, it the ideology merge between the human in earth and the saucer man? There seems haven't saucer man, but it may be exists still, but can saucer man called human? No, so, i know what my truth are! My truth is the utmost truth of human! The utmost truth of human is: rape! Yes, the great man, man in man, the genius, have the desire to rape woman both on mind and on body! The girl in girl, such as my girl icelotus, have the desire to be rape both on mind and on body, and our desire to rape on mind is strongest, the normal man's desire of rape on mind is not very strong, every man is more or less a |

genius, because they all have the desire to rape. To rape woman by mind, so the man need to get the truth first, so the man have the strongest desire on truth, the woman have none desire on truth, so she can be rape on mind by man violently! After the man raped the mind of woman, by write love letter which contains his mind, then the man can rape the body of woman too, and after the man rape the woman's mind and body, he become love her indeed now, and after be raped by the man both on mind and body, the woman love him indeed now, and both of them, become happiest, begin their real happy life.

I am the man in man, icelotus is the girl in girl, i have already write some love mail to her, saying that only you trust me in the world, i love you, but i know her don't trust me in fact, i don't love her in fact, as i know the utmost truth, i will only love her after raped both her mind and body, she will only trust me after be raped by me both on mind and body. So, i am using the love letter to raping her mind in fact, as i contained my mind in the love letter. I have write long love letters to her ago, but be refused for 6 times in the past 5 months, this is because the desire of be rape by mind of her, she refuse me, because she want to be raped by me, only the love letter which contains my new mind, the mind of my truth, can rape her mind, i will publish my love letter after raped her body, we will see how i clean her old mind, raped her mind , make her trust me indeed and love me indeed by these mail. I should can completely rape her mind soon, i will write the next love letter to her, if succeeded in rape her mind, then i can rape her body, but it is not in the street at night, but in the room at the daytime, after i raped her body, i will love her, she will love me, we both become happiest, yes, i will do this soon, maybe today, i am sure i will success, as my truth, the utmost truth of human, is true!

You may begin to accept my ideology, but you doubt what i said, ok:

Here is my personal website: forlinux.yeah.net

Here is StarDict: stardict.sourceforge.net

Here is ReciteWord: reciteword.cosoft.org.cn

Here is some of my photos: reciteword.cosoft.org.cn/huzheng/

Here is some photos of icelotus: reciteword.cosoft.org.cn/icelotus/

If you come to SiChuan university of China, you will know, i, Hu Zheng, icelotus, Hu Yan, really exists, and we are doing what i said in these articles really. Every one in SiChuan university know we exists.

|                                                                                                                                                                           |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 662(10/26/03 9:39 pm)Reply     | Re: The utmost truth of human <hr/> Ha, all you fuckin chinks look the same to me.                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1630(10/26/03 10:38 pm)Reply                                                                                      | --- <hr/> Dave Toast must've has poked out his 20 20 eyes?! Is there such a thing as 20 10? I am 20 20 but heard 20 10 is even better, ...?                                                                                                                                     |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 667(10/26/03 11:23 pm)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> Nah, I'm just being post-modern offensive for the sake of it. All this talk of violent rape, by children who don't know the meaning of the word, brings out the neanderthal. Huzeng should perhaps be violently raped, then he might really fancy suicide. |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 668(10/26/03 11:24 pm)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> I could probably do worse than poking them out.                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |

|                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 172(10/27/03 12:02 am)Reply         | Re: --- and the utmost truth of human <hr/> One point billion of them.78% male, because woman doesn't count.For them.But they're communists, sort of.Hey Huzheng, shall I send you a Qu'ran?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 173(10/27/03 12:05 am)Reply         | Geez <hr/> One point two billion.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 971(10/27/03 11:59 am)Reply | Re: --- and the utmost truth of human <hr/> Even despite his poor English, you can see he's a fruitcake. Perhaps it's the result of a society without enough females. Maybe that's where David is, in China strangling girl babies for them. Perhaps he's twisted by guilt and frustration. Guilt knowing his little neighbor girls have been killed in preference for the likes of him. This is the main reason I fear China. They have literally millions of expendible males. Males that are not only expendible, but almost are required to go to war and suffer heavy losses, because they cannot marry! They may not have our technology and wealth, but they can create battles in which they suffer casualties beyond anything we could endure. Is the population of China really 78% male? |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 175(10/27/03 12:50 pm)Reply         | Re: --- and the utmost truth of human <hr/> Hi Anna. No, the 78% I mentioned is totally wrong. It was a wild guess, I'm good at that. There seem to be more females in China than males, at the moment.http://www.iiasa.ac.at/Research/LUC/ChinaFood/data/anim/pop_ani.htm                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31r
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

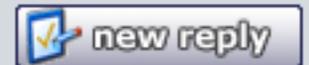

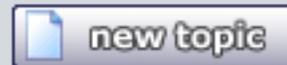

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

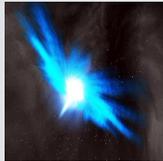

> GENIUS FORUM

> The value of satisfaction

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                             | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1033(3/1/04 6:14 pm)Reply      | The value of satisfaction <hr/> What value do you place on satisfaction?                                                                                                                    |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2470(3/1/04 10:22 pm)Reply | ---- <hr/> A changing value based on the need or desire one wants to satisfy.                                                                                                               |
| WolfsonJakkPosts: 1494(3/2/04 4:13 am)Reply                  | (I can't Get No) Satisfaction <hr/> Pretty good song.                                                                                                                                       |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1035(3/2/04 7:26 am)Reply      | Satisfaction <hr/> Which bias do you have? Type A: Achieves external satisfaction from any suitable object. Type B: Achieves internal satisfaction from an imaginary subject. |

|                                                                                                                                                                             |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2484(3/2/04 1:28 pm)Reply                                                                                           | --- <hr/> Is satisfaction where he was raised by two lesbian hags?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| wounded birdPosts: 8(3/7/04 9:01 pm)Reply                                                                                                             | Value on satisfaction <hr/> It used to be high, but now I just live without worrying about it for if you look to be satisfied by externalities you will stay perpetually disappointed. If I'm understanding your biases correctly, as a dreamer, my answer would be the internal, but I may be confused as to exactly what you mean here. Edited by: wounded bird at: 3/7/04 9:46 pm                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| primus meridianPosts: 9(3/8/04 2:17 am)Reply                         | Re: Value on satisfaction <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Is satisfaction where he was raised by two lesbian hags? <hr/> James and the Giant Peach allusion? he he                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| Thomas KnierimRegistered UserPosts: 855(3/8/04 12:57 pm)Reply  | Re: Value on satisfaction <hr/> DEL: What value do you place on satisfaction? That is really a non-question. Everybody strives for satisfaction (of desires) because that's the way the human psyche works. Naturally, we all have different ideas about what provides satisfaction. Some strive for sexual experiences, others for wealth, power, fame. Again others strive for independence, domestic bliss, adventure, self-realization, spiritual awakening; the list is practically endless. There are different levels of awareness, though. People are not equally aware of their desires. Some are controlled by them while others are quite able to master them. It is important to be aware of the arising and ceasing of desires, |

to understand what is responsible for the presence of a desire and how a desire becomes satisfied or frustrated. Introspective insight into these mechanisms is the requirement for their mastery.

Thomas

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1457
(3/8/04 1:05 pm)
Reply

Re: Value on satisfaction

---

Quote:

---

but I may be confused as to exactly what you mean here.

---

As are the rest of us.

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 96
(3/15/04 1:11 am)
Reply

Re: Value on satisfaction

---

The imagination is pretty powerful but I don't dream in color anymore. I'm stuck trying to find real stuff which is boring as hell.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 1037
(3/16/04 6:16 pm)
Reply

Re: Value on satisfaction

---

Sorry for not being clear. It's a deep subject. I'm still meditating on the very nature of value and how it is created and how this relates to satisfaction.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 1038
(3/17/04 7:14 am)
Reply

The value of satisfaction

---

Value originates in the illogical and once it is established there appears to be a psychological necessity to regard it logically as being of equal value to the sacrifice thereby creating the feeling of satisfaction.

I think.

|                                                                                    |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| silentsalRegistered UserPosts: 79(3/17/04 7:42 am)Reply | Re: The value of satisfaction <hr/> I think I understand what your saying. Some what like the Male/Female thing. Are you saying that value orginates in the illogical because we are constantly measureing the value of one thing against the value of some completely different thing. A male is a male, and a female is a female they are different they don't have to be equal. Or a enlightened person vs a regular person they are different they don't have to be equal. The particular qualities that differentiates one from the other can be appreciated, or not appreciated anyhow they can be seen. The ego sees everything in relation to itself, so it's a constant comparison because that is how it defines things. So of course everything must be of equal value eeeek ... Edited by: silentsal at: 3/17/04 7:46 am |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1039(3/17/04 5:38 pm)Reply     | Re: The value of satisfaction <hr/> Yes, you are on the right track. So some how logic is always kind of retrospective.I think.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The Way = The Will?

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                        | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 582(8/10/03 6:38 pm)Reply |  The Way = The Will? <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Tao te Ching:When the Tao was lost,its attributes appeared:When its attributes were lost,benevolence appeared;when benevolence was lost,righteousness appeared;when righteousness was lost,the properties appeared,Now propriety is the attenuated form of filial piety and goodfaith,and is also the commencement of disorder. <hr/> Do you see any similarity between The Way (Tao) and The Will to value orit's contrast The Will to power? |

komodo island
Registered User
Posts: 13
(5/22/04 12:44 pm)
Reply

Re: The Way = The Will?

---

The Way is when u forget that there is something like a 'personal' will, or 'how' to exercise 'your' will.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 1109
(5/23/04 3:53 am)
Reply

Re: The Way = The Will?

---

Quote:

---

komodo island

The Way is when u forget that there is something like a 'personal' will, or 'how' to exercise 'your' will.

---

I can understand.

Now let's take it to the next level.

Do you believe one can live like this within an organisation?

N0X23
Registered User
Posts: 114
(5/25/04 4:39 am)
Reply

Re: The Way = The Will?

---

Quote:

---

Do what thou wilt shall be the whole of the Law.
Love is the Law, Love under Will.

---

Dell are you a practicing or former Thelemite?

93/93

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

Genius Forum

Causality • Courage • Rationality • Determination • Logic • Integrity • Thinking • Ideals
Wisdom • Reason • Discipline • Truth • Masculinity • Perfection • Universe

Genius News

David Quinn's Site

The Thinking Man's Minefield

EZB Edit

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The World

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                                                                  | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| G ShantzRegistered UserPosts: 171(12/30/02 5:47 am)Reply  | The World <hr/> An enthusiastic youth will make many mistakes until he learns to remodel his conception of the world. If the world works against him, he will believe it so because he is not acting unselfishly and nobly enough. He will then exert himself enthusiastically in the noblest and most unselfish self-sacrifice - and the world will oppose him even more. The misunderstanding lies in this - to win the world's approval and love he must do exactly the opposite and manage to become a bit scoundrelly. How could the world, which in its very being is little more than scoundrelly, admire unselfishness - no, it ridicules it or hates it. -Soren Kierkegaard, 1847 What's the point of pursuing enlightenment? It seems like it would just be easier to be dead. Physical death would be easy - the hardest is to die while still remaining alive. It seems like a lot of trouble and effort. But it's not going away. I went walking yesterday. There's a conservation area near here where I used to go when I was young. The trees and snow were nice, and there was no one around at all. As I neared the end of one of the paths, the appearance of new suburban homes infinging on the wilderness appeared before me. I climbed over some barbed wire onto the developing lot, and saw half-built houses and men and children playing hockey on some ice in a vacant lot. I |

proceeded up the street with no destination in mind. I had moved to this subdivision with my family six years ago, but it had grown so much in the interim that I was in an area that I had no familiarity with. After a bit more walking I found myself in a sort of crude park, standing on a wooden bridge over a frozen creek. I stood there for some time, possibly half an hour or more, lost in reverie, thinking about the past. A middle-aged woman with two dogs came walking along, further up the path. I looked up at her, and she noticed me, too. She continued forward a it further, and was blocked out of my view by some bushes, but then I could see her walking back in the direction she had come from. Frightened by the presence of a tall, bearded, dark overcoat wearing man standing still in contemplation, apparently. A while later, back on the street, I saw her again. She was about to turn the corner and walk towards me, but looking up she noticed me and quickly moved to the other side of the street. I walked past a gated community on my travels, and I presume she lived there, in this upper-middle class neighbourhood. Earlier in the week I sat at my grandmother's with my family, and listened to her describe how she would never walk the streets of her city - a small, Southern Ontario town - at night for fear of - I don't know what. Are we men really percieved as such threats to women? It doesn't affect me or my goals in any way...It's mostly old women who are fearful, too...Because they're physically weaker, I suppose. Again, I'm expressng this because I know it's okay to now, and it doesn't make me a misogynist. I've been bottling up these thoughts for years now, so I may be letting them out more frequently in the future. Until the feeling of newfound freedom of expression loses it's novelty, at least.

GS

ustigua

Registered User

Posts: 25

(12/30/02 6:07)

Reply

commentary

---

I think women are afraid of men, unless they have never been the victim of a man's violence. People handle it differently though--some women smile at you nervously hoping that they can de-fuse the situation. Some are genuine about their smiles. Still some walk away as fast as they can like what you described.

It's the history of men and their inability to control their anger and desires that have made the world such as it is. Women, children, and old people have always been the victims of angry men.

Staring people down is universally considered rude--might I suggest being more conservative?

|                                                                                                                                                                                                    |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                                                    | We human beings are animals, true enough--but we need to strive to be more than merely animals. Sometimes you can't even trust your own thoughts. But thoughts are thoughts, and actions don't have to match those thoughts.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| MKFaiziRegistered UserPosts: 590(12/30/02 8:55)Reply    | Re: commentary <hr/> I am not afraid of men. The only time I have been fearful of anyone was when I was caught out on the streets of Baltimore City at the housing projects at three in the morning. Then, I was scared of everyone I saw and that was reasonable. The only people out on the streets in the "ghetto" at three in the morning are fucked up. Faizi                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| MKFaiziRegistered UserPosts: 591(12/30/02 8:57)Reply  | Re: commentary <hr/> PS -- Good piece of writing, Greg. I think you should elaborate more toward the end. But it was a good read. Faizi                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 173(12/30/02 13:48)Reply                                                                              | The World <hr/> I also enjoyed your post and did not find it misogynist. Ustigua's response is quite accurate. It is really something for you to think about, especially as you are a large man, people will rarely bother you on that basis alone. I think the fear women have is exxagerated because of media and such like. They are really taught that they should never, ever take such a risk as to be out alone at night. The women I work with are afraid to walk to their cars in the lighted deck after work. My daughters are that way. For some reason, I decided years ago that the risk was overblown, and I go pretty much anywhere at night that I want. I pass black men on the street at night and perhaps I'm crazy, but I think I can see their intent in their face. When I establish contact and see they are OK, I relax. My sister, in the early 70's, hitchhiked across the U.S. and back several | times, alone. It was rather scandalous, yet in the rape-phobic climate of today, it is far more unimaginable. I once mentioned something to you about man's greater freedom. How many teenage girls have you seen hitchhiking out on the highway?

She had, in all those thousands of miles, one soft rape attempt which she handled nicely, and one guy who, when he asked her, "So are you going to come across or not?" and she said, "No, I just want to get to----" slammed on the brakes and said, "Out, bitch!"

Once, when I was about 18, I was walking along on a city street in the dusk, and I forgot to avoid the alley. I should have walked near the boulevard and away from the buildings fronting the alley. I got a cloth thrown across my mouth and got jerked back into the alley. It was a tall, young, black guy. I reacted very quickly, screamed and kicked him in the groin. He loosed his hold and I ran, not like in my dreams when my legs turn to rubber!

G Shantz

Registered User
Posts: 173
(12/30/02 23:25)

Reply

Re: The World

---

Wow, the world really is an awful place. I've led too sheltered a life; I deny these things happen. But, surely, they do, as you've shown.

birdofhermes

Registered User
Posts: 184
(12/31/02 10:24)

Reply

the world

---

Aw, Greg, there you go being negative again. Part of my point was that the threat is real, but the other part was that it is overblown. Most guys are not dangerous rapist criminals.

I do want to explain something in more detail, though. That evening that I got pulled into the alley. I was coming home on the bus on a summer evening. Stepping off the bus I was distracted by the perfection of the air and the perfection of the state of dusk. I was in a kind of reverie, enjoying the beauty of the wonderful evening, which was going to be fleeting, lasting just a few minutes. It was for that reason that I forgot to be vigilant and made the grave error of forgetting, for just a few minutes, my duty to always be on guard and remember the danger that I am in because of being female. It was my fault, totally, of course. A foolish mistake and one that I knew better than to commit.

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 965

(12/31/02 13:57)

Reply

Re: the world

---

The danger that you're in because you're female? C'mon Bird! That's typical female victim hysteria. Men are between 2 and 4 times more likely to be the victims of violence across the whole gamut of social activity, but they don't walk around feeling like something could happen to them any minute.

I don't disagree with "vigilance" of a type, that of being aware of one's environment and the potential for violence within a given environment, but to go about one's daily business with a mentality that says I'm at risk just because of my gender strikes me as one of the things that makes women inferior. There is simply no statistical basis - no basis in social fact - to support such a mentality, so where does it come from?

Dan Rowden

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 185

(12/31/02 15:49)

Reply

victim mentality

---

Well now! Did you even read my posts? I specifically stated that I make a habit of going where I please without fear. I go places most women won't, mostly because I realized that out and out rape by a stranger is not very common. I never hitchhiked as much as my sister, but I did hitchhike around L.A. (Los Angeles)

If men are more likely to be victims of violence, it is because of the kinds of activities they do and the way they react to each other. Getting into fights, that sort of thing.

I daresay, Dan, that a guy does not get pulled into an alley by a cloth over his mouth real often. Do you think it would happen to our 6 foot 4 friend? Of course, they can get mugged and robbed, but probably not Gregory. Women are taught not to let their guard down and let that sort of thing happen. I knew it and I forgot it. How can you say there is no basis in fact when it happened to me? I wasn't carrying a purse, by the way. Are you saying the danger is completely imaginary?

I would like to agree with you, and I do to a point. I dislike the victim mentality as you can see, and especially think the whole sexual harrasment idiocy is ludicrous. The feminists have gone crazy on this one. I've been the victim of plenty of sexual harrasment. It's all in a day's work. You just handle it. I'm not saying it's a good thing, just that it's pathetic to expect women to get all upset and crumble and call the hotline.

rejonstad

Registered User

Posts: 217

(1/1/03 6:34)

Reply

human mentality

---

I think there's more going on here than just unwarranted paranoia of modern society. And it is less a gender thing than indicated on this thread although there is certainly a gender component.

First, there's a good possibility a middle-aged man observing a "tall, bearded, dark overcoat wearing" young stranger may have avoided Gregg's bridge too. We're all different, but in general will be more wary of contact with a stranger in an isolated situation and are more comfortable when other people are in the immediate vicinity. Discretion is the better part of valor. For starters, perhaps she had no intention of crossing the bridge anyway. If she did, you state she may have observed you watching her. But she obviously had the options of approaching the tall, solitary stranger lost in his own thoughts but measuring her progress towards him, or reversing her direction and returning by the same route. Frankly I might choose the latter option too if for nothing else to avoid the possibility of banal conversation about the weather or sports or politics with some stranger.:( Later, she again encountered Gregg on the street. I'm assuming this wasn't a busy street and she had already made the decision to avoid isolated contact. She simply followed her original instinct and avoided contact again.

We are the same timid apes who wandered off the savanna fifty thousand years ago to populate the Earth. Instinctually we understand that one way to avoid danger or confrontation is to avoid contact altogether. Fortunately, we often overcome this aversion to strangers out of loneliness, the quest for knowledge, or to acquire goods from others, peacefully or violently. To paraphrase Ben Franklin, "Love thy neighbor, but don't cut down your hedges."

But here comes the gender difference and it has its origins in our time spent on the savanna. The male of our species is generally larger, stronger and faster than their female counterparts. And very importantly, males never get pregnant. In a hunter/gatherer society (and this can be witnessed in contemporary hunter/gatherer societies), men tended to be the hunters, developing aggressive skills of strategy, tactics and the ability to focus concentration on the single goal of the prey. Women were more or less forced into the gatherer role. Nuts, seeds and berries don't normally run away or fight back so women had less need for aggression. There was a much more tactile world of smell, touch and subtle variations of color. Interpreting this world evolved in women different physical and mental attributes then evolved to find, stalk and kill large and small animals.

In addition because women bore and nursed infants, and small children would not be an advantage in the hunt, the most precious commodity, the young, were in the company of the women only for most of waking hours. Because of this, and because females were smaller, weaker and slower (especially burdened with young ones), women have the tendency to be more cautious in a situation where men may be more aggressive. To protect themselves and the offspring, women would be more likely to sense and retreat from possible danger.

I believe these male and female attributes are just as obvious today as when the men were bringing down buffalo and mastadon and women were collecting roots and berries with the kids. I recall a comic routine a while back that had much truth in it. Men approach shopping much like hunters, they usually have a specific goal. The shopping mall is a vast plain where is hidden somewhere the shirt or pants or tool belt they are seeking. They don't waste a lot of time or are distracted from their goal and once they have obtained the goal, they take their package and haul their quarry home. For women, Neiman-Markus, Macy's and the Gap are gardens of delightful possibility and may be approached with no particular goal in mind. A woman may spend hours separating what is of value and what is needed and may leave with no goods or with arms full. In neither case does the woman consider the exercise a failure even if a specific goal is unrealized. Men will be disappointed or experience a sense of failure if they leave the mall empty-handed or without the items that were their goal.

This is of course a generalized analogy and doesn't fit all individuals of either gender. It does roughly illustrate important differences in gender however and how they may manifest themselves far from the savanna.

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 598

(1/2/03 12:36)

Reply

Re: human mentality

---

I would never have avoided passing a tall, young boy in broad daylight in the suburbs.

Even in the city, I would not have crossed the street to avoid a tall man in an overcoat. How silly. I would have passed him by.

Here is an article I stumbled on. The site also contains some other interesting articles on gender. It is the site of a male cross-dresser.

Faizi

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 976

(1/2/03 13:26)

Reply

Re: victim mentality

bird wrote:

Quote:

---

I daresay, Dan, that a guy does not get pulled into an alley by a cloth over his mouth real often.

---

No, it doesn't happen real often, it just happens 2 to 4 times as often for men.

Quote:

---

Women are taught not to let their guard down and let that sort of thing happen. I knew it and I forgot it. How can you say there is no basis in fact when it happened to me? I wasn't carrying a purse, by the way. Are you saying the danger is completely imaginary?

---

No, I'm clearly not saying that; I'm saying that the fear and near paranoia with which women burden themselves has no basis in social fact. The likelihood of physical violence being enacted against a woman by a stranger is quite minimal. Most violence committed against women is done so by people they know well.

Defiantly choosing to go wherever one wants is all well and good, but it can also be kind of daft. Discretion often really is the better part of valour. But women really do have a horribly distorted view of the potential for violence against them. Every year here in Brisbane we have the spectacle of box-headed femininsts staging a "take back the night" street march. But take it back from whom? Men, presumably. But I wasn't aware that men possessed it. Unfortunately, because women have such a herd mentality, they cannot conceive of men as individuals, so if there's a handful of bad men, then all men are bad (or potentially so). They live their entire lives giving expression to the logical fallacy of inclusion:

Frank is an idiot.

Frank is a Frenchman.

Frenchmen are idiots.

The possibility of random violence exists for us all. Walking down a dark alley in the middle of the night in a bad area of town is simply a foolish thing to do, whatever one's gender. But ultimately the point I'm making is that women have not simply no greater basis for fear than men, but actually much less of a basis for it. For every 1 man who is willing to enact violence against a woman, there is another 50 who will willingly and automatically put their own safety at risk to protect a woman.

That's the flipside to violence against women that no-one ever bothers to mention.

A bit of common sense is all one's needs to minimise the potential for violence against us. However, one can never eliminate it completely. But that's not reason for living in fear as so many women do - even if one has, at some point, been the victim of such violence. At bottom, it is just about being rational about things.

Dan Rowden

G Shantz

Registered User

Posts: 178

(1/2/03 15:17)

Reply

Re: human mentality

---

Marsha wrote:

Quote:

---

Here is an article I stumbled on.

---

Where?

GS

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 599

(1/3/03 10:29)

Reply

Re: human mentality

---

Well, I was tired. I thought it was in there. Here it is:

www.yvonneshplace.net/news/punishment.htm

Faizi

Edited by: MKFaizi at: 1/3/03 12:14:13 pm

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 600

(1/3/03 12:54)

Reply

Re: human mentality

---

Dan Rowden wrote:

Quote:

---

Defiantly choosing to go wherever one wants is all well and good, but it can also be kind of daft. Discretion often really is the better part of valour.

---

Part of "street smarts" is discretion. You don't purposely put yourself in danger -- male or female. When I say that I was "caught" out on the Baltimore streets at three in the morning, I mean that it was not something that I wanted or intended. It was the result of a mishap. I definitely knew better.

I used to hitchhike when I was a kid, too. I was never picked up by a woman. Always men. I stopped after a while because it was too dangerous. It was dangerous for a man, too.

Thinking that you can go anywhere you want to go is "daft." Male or female, it is the best thing to know your parameters. Before I could live peacefully in a hostile environment, I had to learn a lot over several years.

My environment was hostile not because I was female but because of my race -- partially -- but more because of the obvious fact that I was not a "homey." Over time, I came to fit in with my environment. I developed the inner city "crust."

Then, I was far less of a target.

I think that it is a large mistake on the part of "whitey" to assume that he/she can go anywhere -- to the inner city, to Pakistan, to Africa, to the Middle East -- without knowledge and experience of his/her environment.

Good way to get killed.

Faizi

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 601

(1/3/03 13:07)

Reply

Re: human mentality

---

I don't think that men get pulled into alleys with cloths over their mouths -- men get killed out in the open.

I lived in inner city Baltimore for seventeen years. No one ever attempted to put a cloth over my mouth and pull me into an alley. No one ever even stole my purse.

One thing that I recall very vividly is waiting on the corner for the bus in the morning. There was a man in a basement window who masturbated at me every day. Generally, a couple of "wankers" passed me closely in cars, also.

It was not intimidating in the least. Quite the contrary.

Faizi

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 198

(1/3/03 13:37)

Reply

victim mentality

---

Quote:

---

No, I'm clearly not saying that; I'm saying that the fear and near paranoia with which women burden themselves has no basis in social fact. The likelihood of physical violence being enacted against a woman by a stranger is quite minimal.

---

Essentially I agree with your entire post. Having realized the above, is why I am not too afraid. However--

Quote:

---

Defiantly choosing to go wherever one wants is all well and good, but it can also be kind of daft.

---

I really was exaggerating a little. Your and MFaizi's points are well taken. I do use discretion but I am much freer than most women to go where I need to.

Quote:

---

But ultimately the point I'm making is that women have not simply no greater basis for fear than men, but actually much less of a basis for it. .

---

But you don't want to be alone in an alley at night with that one man. And size and strength matter in such an encounter. Women feel pretty unlikely to prevail.

Quote:

---

For every 1 man who is willing to enact violence against a woman, there is another 50 who will willingly and automatically put their own safety at risk to protect a woman. That's the flipside to violence against women that no-one ever bothers to mention.

---

Truly love has grown cold. It is such a major part of reality that it is like seeing the forests for the trees. Like when a million people were sitting here in subfreezing weather and no heat, no light, no hot water, no way to cook. And everyone is asking, when are they going to fix it? Do you think "they" consisted of women?

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 983

(1/3/03 23:23)

Reply

Re: victim mentality

---

I liked one of the examples that Warren Farrell gave in his interesting, but not great book "The Myth of Male Power" when he mentioned how the Mike Tyson trial gave notoriety to men as rapists and thugs, but that when the hotel in which the jury for that trial was sequestered caught fire, and two male firefighters died saving the occupants, no media coverage was given to them - as human saviors - at all.

Media bias, obviously, but to what end.....?

Dan Rowden

Lbartoli

Registered User

Posts: 266

(7/30/03 14:09)

Reply

allow me to enlighten you

---

A while back Dan Rowden was chatting with someone:

I daresay, Dan, that a guy does not get pulled into an alley by a cloth over his mouth real often.

-----
No, it doesn't happen real often, it just happens 2 to 4 times as often for men.

Quote:

-----
Women are taught not to let their guard down and let that sort of thing happen. I knew it and I forgot it. How can you say there is no basis in fact when it happened to me? I wasn't carrying a purse, by the way. Are you saying the danger is completely imaginary?
-----

DR:

No, I'm clearly not saying that; I'm saying that the fear and near paranoia with which women burden themselves has no basis in social fact. The likelihood of physical violence being enacted against a woman by a stranger is quite minimal. Most violence committed against women is done so by people they know well.

LB: Keep in mind, however, that many or most women, especially the more vulnerable and sought-after, simply do not lend themselves to this kind of risk. By that i mean, if women weren't as cautious as they are, if they were, instead, going places and into situations that they currently steer clear of, then these statistics you quote would be much different.

So one of the main reasons more men than women are victimized, usually by males, is coz the chicks have learned what and where best to stay away from, what conversations and with whom to avoid, etc, they have a sense for these things and rarely allow themselves or their children to become so vulnerable.

There is also the fact that men tend to take more risks, partly due to their nature and partly due to the fact they are effectively forced to do so by the will of society, circumstances and conditions that society permits for men but not generally for women.

Also, women believe- and they may be right- that given the opportunity many or even most men (or people) would certainly take liberties they would normally not dare take so long as the risk of detection and punishment was high. So if millions of weak, and young, and pretty, and sexy, and rich women suddenly changed their lifestyle and attitude, suddenly began engaging in conversations and making friends more indiscriminately, more like a man, and going alone to places and appearing in situations that they, for reason of personal safety, normally avoid, no-doubt these stats would change dramatically.

At bottom what this is all about is not new news to women. They realize that it is not a mans world anymore, if it ever was, and that man-the-animal rarely has his way with the women he wants (which is many, and only the best ones!), or the money he wants (same thing!) and consequently lives day-in-day-out at one level or another of frustration and chronic-want.

Few are the men whom get their greatest fantasies realized- for many not even once, let alone on a regular basis; not even the married ones, and women are acutely aware of this, after all its their design!

So women realize, and to some degree accept, that they must pay a price in the form of restricted liberties so long as they insist on being loved and adored and highly valued by the opposite sex, while at the same time giving men as little of themselves as safely possible.

Get my drift, genius?

Leo

Defiantly choosing to go wherever one wants is all well and good, but it can also be kind of daft. Discretion often really is the better part of valour. But women really do have a horribly distorted view of the potential for violence against them. Every year here in Brisbane we have the spectacle of box-headed feminists staging a "take back the night" street march. But take it back from whom? Men, presumably. But I wasn't aware that men possessed it. Unfortunately, because women have such a herd mentality, they cannot conceive of men as individuals, so if there's a handful of bad men, then all men are bad (or potentially so). They live their entire lives giving expression to the logical fallacy of inclusion:

Frank is an idiot.

Frank is a Frenchman.

Frenchmen are idiots.

The possibility of random violence exists for us all. Walking down a dark alley in the middle of the night in a bad area of town is simply a foolish thing to do, whatever one's gender. But ultimately the point I'm making is that women have not simply no greater basis for fear than men, but actually much less of a basis for it. For every 1 man who is willing to enact violence against a woman, there is another 50 who will willingly and automatically put their own safety at risk to protect a woman.

That's the flipside to violence against women that no-one ever bothers to mention.

A bit of common sense is all one's needs to minimise the potential for violence against us. However, one can never eliminate it completely. But that's not reason for living in fear as so many women do - even if one has, at some point, been the victim of such violence. At bottom, it is just about being rational about things.

Dan Rowden

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 832

(8/2/03 9:55)

Reply

Re: allow me to enlighten you

---

Quote:

---

...while at the same time giving men as little of themselves as safely possible.

Get my drift, genius?

---

Oh, Leo, you forgot to mention that all these married women who give their husbands as little sex as possible are also continually interested in sex, and how much women love sex, etc., etc. I'm so confused.

Leo, I could give three men all the sex they want, but there's hardly one man who could keep me satisfied. I just don't know how to say no.

Lbartoli

Registered User

Posts: 267

(8/3/03 1:33)

Reply

On giving only as much as you have to

---

Yes, that's another reason why women deprive men as much as is safely possible, coz men are for the most part inadequate to the task of satisfying women.

But part of women's dissatisfaction and ensuing resentment is really Nature's fault, and not man's. For instance, women resent that they must wait for men to do so much-- to notice, desire and select them, to take them, to penetrate them, in general to take the more pro-active role, but you can't really blame men for all this though women still do, you can't blame the man if someone doesn't stimulate him, and you can't blame the man for not having a perpetual boner; that's really what it comes down to, if men were always hard and always ready like a woman is then things would be much different, but the woman often takes her hatred of God and His design and directs it towards man. And the price man must pay for this is to feel the same frustration woman feels, that of not getting what you want when and how you want it, the rare exception sometimes being at the start of a relationship.

Women never really want to give away how much more fulfilling they could be sexually and in the sack and also non-sexually since the man would then come to expect it all the time, or conclude (discover) their mate was a whore, and few if any women loves her man enuf or is needy enuf to be of that great service.

Sure, women enjoy sex, but whenever they have it they try to keep the man believing it is his idea and a favor to him, that way man remains clueless about her dependency and appetite, not to mention she keeps him believing that he owes her and not the other way around. She has to keep him beleiving that if need be she could comfortably do without, and that she has sex coz of him, coz she loves him, and that she's otherwise a nun. The way she sees it, she has to wait till he's aroused anyway, so theres little to gain and possibly more to loose in revealing her want if her chances of scoring are low.

Women simply cant afford to be honest with most men, men in relationships cant handle the truth, they need to feel special as that particlr woman is special to them. But it just doesnt work that way, healthy women dont get as fixated on one person as a man so often does; any woman can screw loads of men and enjoy it, if she cared to and could get away with it. Men too can have many partners, but when they really fall for a paticular woman she can satisfy him to a great extent, whereas most modern women could trade their hubbys for another and suffer only the task and duty of pretending the loss was very painful.

Whereas men are often taken by particular women-- something women have come to depend on highly-- the woman can enjoy sex equally with many different types of men so long as they smell ok and she feels safe and likes the fellow a bit.

Sex is very important to many women, so they want to get the most out of it-- out of their men-- as possible. One of the ways they do that is by not giving away how satisfied their lover makes them, so the poor sap keeps trying harder and harder to please her.

Do you see now why it's impossible to convince a women that men can be wiser?

But I keep trying!

Leo

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.32
Copyright ©1999-2005 ezboard, Inc.

Genius Forum

Causality • Courage • Rationality • Determination • Logic • Integrity • Thinking • Ideals
Wisdom • Reason • Discipline • Truth • Masculinity • Perfection • Universe

Genius News

David Quinn's Site

The Thinking Man's Minefield

EZB Edit

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The World

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                  | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1121(8/3/03 2:49)Reply | Re: On giving only as much as you have to <hr/> Leo wrote, Quote: <hr/> Yes, that's another reason why women deprive men as much as is safely possible, coz men are for the most part inadequate to the task of satisfying women. <hr/> Ahh, finally Leo reveals his version of truth. We know you well. I hear Viagra extends your stamina but I don't think it can do anything for physical extension. Check with your doctor. (Hookers don't care, BTW.) Tharan |

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 833

(8/3/03 12:07)

Reply

Re: On giving only as much as you have to

---

Oh, Leo, you have said some funny things. Where you come up with it, I wonder.

Quote:

---

coz men are for the most part inadequate to the task of satisfying women.

---

Well, there's a guy who runs a tantric web site, and he says what is wrong with society is the man-woman problem at the core, and that men have lost the ability to "reach women physically." If men are inadequate to the task it is probably mostly that they are much too quick, both before and during. I certainly advocate a tantric approach to sex, for anyone having sex.

Hey, I never said most women could keep three men satisfied. I said I could.

Quote:

---

if men were always hard and always ready like a woman is then things would be much different, but the woman often takes her hatred of god and his design and directs it towards man.

---

women are not always hard and ready; if they were, they would be like men, quick to the draw and quick to shoot. I think it is a fact that for the most part, men have a higher sex drive than women, want it more often, and are aroused more easily. So that entire problem is your imagination. If women direct frustration towards man, then perhaps it is because of her sexual dependence upon him, and his ignorance as to what to do about it. Blame western religion, and eastern religion too, for that matter. If women are frustrated, it is often because they sense a deep well of possibility when it comes to love/sex, but are left feeling flat. There's nothing wrong with God's design.

Quote:

---

And the price man must pay for this is to feel the same frustration woman feels, that of not getting what you want when and how you want it, the rare exception sometimes being at the start of a relationship.

---

What you're saying is that women close up sexually after repeated disappointment.

Quote:

---

Women never really want to give away how much more fulfilling they could be sexually and in the sack and also non-sexually since the man would then come to expect it all the time, or conclude (discover) their mate was a whore, and few if any women loves her man enuf or is needy enuf to be of that great service.

---

Well - you can't have everything. If you want to focus on calling women whores then you have to accept the miserable situation that you describe, with all its emotional baggage, dishonesty, lying, and most of all, sexual ineptitude and ignorance. If you want real sex, you cannot have an atmosphere in which the woman or man are aghast at her strong response, and in which anyone withholds themselves because they are keeping score, or worried about the pleasure cache running low.

Quote:

---

She has to keep him believing that if need be she could comfortably do without, and that she has sex coz of him, coz she loves him, and that she's otherwise a nun.

---

Ha, ha! Very funny and quite true - for the previous generation, or maybe the one before that.

Quote:

---

any woman can screw loads of men and enjoy it,

---

and

Quote:

---

the woman can enjoy sex equally with many different types of men so long as they smell ok and she feels safe and likes the fellow a bit.

---

Nah, it's not the case. It is men who can enjoy sex with no emotion and are happy with "getting their rocks off." Generally, that is true mostly in youth. Girls in youth are not likely to even get an orgasm - what makes you think they would like sex with a relative stranger. Women are notoriously the ones who always want more of a relationship than "no strings attached" sex. Casual sex usually doesn't give women much pleasure. Men get a special kick out of the first time they are with a woman. Women never mention that. Where do you get these ideas, and how are they so entwined with your old fashioned moralism?

Quote:

---

The way she sees it, she has to wait till he's aroused anyway, so theres little to gain and possibly more to loose in revealing her want if her chances of scoring are low.

---

Her chances of scoring are excellent. Even if the woman is old fashioned and wants him to make the first move, all she has to do is flirt, or let him see her changing clothes, or put on that special nightie...

Quote:

---

Whereas men are often taken by particular women

---

Yes, men are more steadfast, I agree.

Quote:

---

since the man would then come to expect it all the time,

---

Well, of course he should expect it all the time! Why not? "To him who has will more be given..." It's a good policy.

Quote:

---

She has to keep him believing that if need be she could comfortably do without,

---

Generally, they are not lying. Many women can comfortably do without, and many more can do with just a little. But I know how one man solved that problem. I mentioned it here on Genius, and I thought it would get a big hurrah, but it was passed over in silence. This man had a bad first marriage, in which he would even apologize when he was not wrong, just to make her happy (and he was a very handsome man). At his second marriage he said to his wife - "I'm going to have sex. The question for you is, will it be with you?" In other words, don't use sex as a weapon.

Isn't it time we dispensed with all this jealousy and ownership nonsense? You see how he adroitly prevented his wife from holding an ax over his head! More people should try it! Some people need only half a mate, and some need two or three.

Quote:

---

Sure, women enjoy sex, but whenever they have it they try to keep the man believing it is his idea and a favor to him, that way man remains clueless about her dependency and appetite, not to mention she keeps him believing that he owes her and not the other way around.

---

Quote:

---

Sex is very important to many women, so they want to get the most out of it-- out of their men-- as possible. One of the ways they do that is by not giving away how satisfied their lover makes them, so the poor sap keeps trying harder and harder to please her.

---

Leo, this is completely crazy. Not only does it contradict what you said about man not being sufficient to the task, you now assume that the sexually happy woman deliberately hides and denies their satisfaction so as to get more? Is this crappy psychology or what? I mean, I do realize the human race is a fool, and that women are therefore fools, but surely they are not that stupid? Doesn't praise and encouragement work better than any negative approach? I believe it is the dissatisfied woman who keeps driving and nagging him to try to please her - but not sexually.

A really satisfied woman can't hide it.

Quote:

---

Women simply can't afford to be honest with most men, men in relationships can't handle the truth,

---

Well, that's often the case. They also don't believe it when you tell the truth.

Quote:

---

Do you see now why it's impossible to convince a woman that men can be wiser?

---

No, because I fail to see what your post has to do with men being wiser. How were you led to that conclusion?

Quote:

---

But I keep trying!

---

With whom?

|                                                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| ynithrixRegistered UserPosts: 175(8/5/03 7:22)Reply        | Re: On giving only as much as you have to <hr/> "Yes, that's another reason why women deprive men as much as is safely possible, coz men are for the most part inadequate to the task of satisfying women." It depends what you mean by satisfaction. Since the female orgasm isn't particularly important for procreation, there is little need of it. A woman is given satisfaction in the form of protection and then children. |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 834(8/5/03 3:22 pm)Reply | Re: On giving only as much as you have to <hr/> You live in the most dismal tunnel this side of insanity, and I'm giving you the benefit of the doubt. Edited by: birdofhermes at: 8/5/03 3:39 pm                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| BryanParrishGlobal UserPosts: 68(8/3/04 5:33)Reply         | Re: The World <hr/> FUCK SHIT PISS BALLS NUTS                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |

Email This To a Friend

Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> The X Factor

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 21(2/14/04 7:25 am)Reply | The X Factor <hr/> ""There is an X factor in the addiction equation, a factor that cannot be predicted or easily foreseen. I call this factor "soul readiness." If an individual soul is not ready to leave the path of addiction, this soul will only meet with failure when sent in the direction of balance. This is because Soul must gather certain experiences. These experiences include what we would think of as "negative" encounters but are absolutely necessary for Soul. The path of addiction can be a path of tremendous growth; sometimes it must be traveled until the lessons are learned. When the learning is complete, the individual will be ready to step on the path to balance. This cycle should not be broken and cannot be readily predicted. In many cases, it is preferable for the individual involved in addiction to pursue the destructive path with as much passion and speed as possible. In this way, lessons are learned, the chosen road is completed as quickly as possible, and the soul can seek new, previously hidden paths to balance and harmony."" ---From Sociology of Soul by M.L. Sebastian ... may be found at www.thedreamdudes.com I can relate this to how we are addicted to the life we are use to. What are some of your interpretations? |

|                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1465(2/14/04 7:53 am)Reply | Re: The X Factor <hr/> I threw it up once and to this day I refuse to eat Frito pie.                                                                                                                         |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 26(2/14/04 8:50 am)Reply  | Re: The X Factor <hr/> This is the only post I don't think anyone will find harmful so I will leave it but I may decide I should leave all together.                                                         |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1007(2/16/04 5:48 am)Reply         | Re: The X Factor <hr/> The is no balance.The centre in resonates.Remember the abyss of insanity and the abyss of criminality that Weninger mentions?                                               |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 58(2/16/04 10:59 am)Reply | Re: The X Factor <hr/> Maybe I am too dumb for this forum. Remember the abyss of insanity and the abyss of criminality that Weninger mentions? No. You? Maybe there are still things to learn? |
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 377(2/16/04 11:38 am)Reply    | Re: The X Factor <hr/> Quote: <hr/> The is no balance.The centre in resonates. <hr/> This sentence no verb?                                                                        |

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 64
(2/16/04 4:03 pm)
Reply

Re: The X Factor

---

What is real? What is the desert of the real? What is trust? What is acceptance?

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

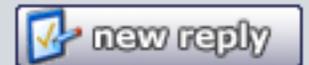

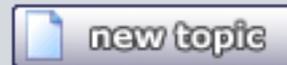

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Theft of consciousness.

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                    | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Canadian ZoetropeRegistered UserPosts: 2(1/13/04 5:52 pm)Reply |  Theft of consciousness. <hr/> Would it be plausible to argue that, the human mind, when confronted millions of years ago, with consciousness, simply evolved a conditioning complex. A complex that has since robbed the majority of our species of ultimate appreciation of existence. Maybe total comprehension of existence is too crushing an idea for our minds to handle, and we simply are conditioned into real-time, environmental stimuli, and response. I suppose while we know where it lies, and its possibilities, the human mind threw it's hands in the air, and opted to decipher the most elementary of enigmas to satisfy our own survival. Perhaps this was necessary, how can a mind evolve with no body to nourish it. Cogito, ergo sum, perhaps, but perhaps the mind is neither of, or for the body, perhaps their relationship resides in a much deeper realm of explanation. It would seem to me that to say, the human mind is separate from the body is too simple. We can argue both sides of the same coin and still be left right where we started, without explanation. I propose the the mind is not, of , or even for the body, rather, the mind is the body. The mind is the body, and the body... is everything, and it is nothing. The mind, and body lie as 2 different manifestations of the same thing. I propose that the innerspace of the body, and the outerspace of the exterior |

|                                                                                      |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                      | are in fact the same thing. The skin of a potato is still the potato, right? So, can we discuss, why it is that only a small portion of our 'species' tackles these notions, these ideas with the zeal associated with 'genius'. Have the majority of us been robbed of consciousness by the crushing weight that is 'enlightenment'?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2061(1/13/04 9:17 pm)Reply   |  ---- <hr/> Not robbed, but the scattering of consciousness stops us to ourselves, severs us from ourselves, no matter that we know no 'permitting' it from our essence.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| ksolwayRegistered UserPosts: 249(1/13/04 10:29 pm)Reply   |  Re: Theft of consciousness. <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Have the majority of us been robbed of consciousness by the crushing weight that is 'enlightenment'? <hr/> We have been robbed of consciousness by the crushing weight of consciousness. A single conscious thought is enough to scare the living daylights out of most people.                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| avidalocaRegistered UserPosts: 147(1/14/04 12:29 am)Reply |  Re: Theft of consciousness. <hr/> A single chain of conscious thought more likely, as this could challenge everything in existence, threaten the whole ego and worldview of the person, and plunge them into a universe never before imagined. That is, if the chain of conscious thought was directed toward freedom from the world as we know it. I recommend people put themselves in situations that challenge their entire worldview as much as possible. Go overseas and mix with the locals completely - do not acknowledge anyone from your homeland. Do not fear |

|                                                                                           |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                           | what may come about from your ideas or thoughts. "Every man has to go through hell to reach his paradise."                                                                                                                                                                    |
| Canadian ZoetropeRegistered UserPosts: 9(1/14/04 7:58 am)Reply |  Re: Theft of consciousness. <hr/> Perhaps therein lies another paradox, ultimate consciousness can never be attained, for it's attainment means the destruction of the means of attainment. |

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> The Thinkers' Inn

> There will be never be a peace as long as human exist!.

New Topic

Add Reply

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                 | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| unknownRegistered UserPosts: 66(7/14/04 10:31 pm)Reply | New Post There will be never be a peace as long as human exist!. <hr/> WORLD WAR III started the day WORLD WAR II ended. The plan has been sketched in the american think tank underground. World War II proved once again , WAR saves american economy. That becomes manthra for future WARs. Peace in the world has never been good sign for AMERICA , it makes rest of the world start to think. Not Good for America. If the rest of the world unbalanced and concentrate on their own misery created by WAR , they do not have time to compete with america in any issues. Keep the rest of the world at bay by start creating new WARs and new ENEMIES. ENEMIES OF AMERICA AFTER WORLD WAR II. <ol style="list-style-type: none"><li>1. CHINA. ( CAMBODIA ) (60s)</li><li>2. COMMUNIST RUSSIA and SEMI COMMUNIST STATES. (VIETNAM , KOREA) (70s)</li><li>3. IRAQ-IRAN WAR (sponsored by america) (80s)</li><li>4. AFGHANISTAN WAR (80s)</li><li>5. IRAQ-KUWAIT (GULF WAR) (90s)</li><li>6. KOSOVO WAR (90s)</li></ol> |

7. SEPT 11/ IRAQ - NOW.

If you really see America is involved in every war. And also if you see clearly , there is always one Major war per decade as america can't handle TWO war per decade as it is not economically viable.

Every WAR is schemed by America's secret think tank underground (most powerful heads).

The only goal of this TEAM , go with original plan of making AMERICAN ECONOMY Top of the world through WAR until the plan fails completely. It is like two mangoes with one stone.

1.It keeps rest of the world at bay and thinking most of the time peace and unrest.

2. American economy can get stronger by selling arms to both parties through either direct or indirect method. And keep all American Jobs at the hands of third world peoples blood.

America can make misdirection by saying about HUMAN RIGHTS AND FREEDOM about rest of the world and also giving the weapons to them , so that they can kill each other.

All these morals are Cover for what is really going on underground.

Once the FALL of soviet union, There is no real enemy for america. America needed a WAR. America gave all the signals for saddham to invade KUWAIT. As saddham really believed from CIA that america won't go to GROUND WAR. Well he was check mated.

Meanwhile OSAMA has come to the conclusion and found out the pattern, how america is exploiting rest of the world. His main issue is america is giving security to BRUTAL SAUDI FAMILY and not let MUSLIMS states to be FREE. He found out america is controlling all muslim states by giving loans for smooth oil transfers. He found out all america needs from middle east is OIL. He comes to a conclusion that Until Oil runs out, America won't leave MUSLIM Sacred country.

He annexed palestenians issue also to his set of complaints with america to get broader support.

As far as sept 11 concerned , there is a definite possibility CIA underground knows what was happening , when these terrorists getting flight training , they basically turned the other side as the instructions was given to not to investigate those claims.

Sept 11 is aided by CIA underground to wage WAR on IRAQ. ( american people won't give approval pre-emptive war without a catastrophic event).

I know , I can't even believe BUSH will kill 3000 American lives to go to WAR on Iraq.

The thing is , it is not BUSH's decision, this is done by Secret American THINK TANK to make AMERICA to enforce its power in more explicit manner as there is a vaccum generated because of collapse of USSR. There needs to be leadership issue in ASIA. CHINA is not Ready yet. Also curb muslims growth before it becomes bigger nuisance.

It is not BUSH decision to sacrifice 900 GI's for installing DEMOCRATIC ISLAM , it is right wing jews with BUSH TEAM to protect ISRAEL. That is all.

After the Collapse of USSR , American THINK tank christened ISLAM as next big enemy.

OSAMA aware of this , instead of america taking the war to ISLAM , he took a first strike with a tacit approval/agreement of CIA. It is not that CIA approved what he was doing. It is just that CIA aware of everything OSAMA did and used him for its future plans.

CIA let OSAMA live for long for only one reason. OSAMA is just a scapegoat for BIG FUTURE PLAN.

Alqaeda 's terror is nothing for this American THINK TANK , it is ant bite on elephant.

American THINK tank already decide to sacrifice around 10000-20000 GIs in next 50 years of War Plan.

American Think tank even aware and wait for Dirty Nukes/Real nukes to explode in Newyork.

That will be the Golden oppourtunity to NUKE SAUDIS/ IRAN/IRAQ/ EGYPT/PAKISTAN and ISLAM once for all. American THINK tank is salivating for that glorius day just like sept 11 for BIGGEST REVENGE.

That is the only reason America did not get rid of PAKISTAN's ISLAMIC BOMB.

CIA knows all PAK ISI is nothing but hardcore ISLAMIST. They are border line Alqaeda. CIA already knows that Pakistan atomic Bomb is the one going to explode in newyork.

It is very apparent.

BUSH is just a puppet , just like any US president. The power is with secret american think tank.

My problem is this , America underestimating ISLAM.

ISLAM is like a GHOST. IT resembles a BORGS (star trek voyager).

Muslims will abandon their COUNTRY mother father son daughter , family for religion.

Muslims are under one "COLLECTIVE" UMBRELLA. Until every one of Muslim dies , this war will continue for centuries.

I do really think Right wing JEWS in BUSH team misjudged the IRAQ and ISLAM issue.

DEMOCRATIC ISLAM is an oxymoron.

I do believe this BLOOD PATH will continue for another century.

if BUSH wins again , count my words , you heard it her first.

BUSH will invade IRAN.

More blood path. For what ? sacrifice american lives for BUSH's right wing belief? or security of AMERICA? to keep AMERICA as lonely SUPER POWER?.

All i know is there is better path for prosperous world than what BUSH and American THINK TANK shows.

There will be more WARS in future.

DIVIDED CHINA will be the next plan. ( That will be in next DECADE).

The reality is its CRUEL WORLD. DOG EAT DOG WORLD.

FITTEST SURVIVE. THAT IS THE FINAL WORD.

All values this and that is just WINDOW DRESSING.

America resembles a SELFISH INDIVIDUAL. if there is a peace inside america , CHAOS should be outside america to balance it out.

THE problem with BUSH is he polarizes inside AMERICA and REST OF THE WORLD.

That is the reflection of a person with no plan and no smarts. He knows only one way. He does n't know how to adjust.

Every Greater Good plan is always end up in EVIL . BUSH's plan also.

if World lonely super power can't produce a smart president, no country can. It is pityful.

Another Bush win does n't bode well for humanity. His presence in the office will spill more blood.

What i said is not conspiracy theory, just obvious thing. To america to survive, it needs an enemy.

There is no secret there.

NOTE: I would n't be surprised if BUSH declare OSAMA is dead and do a photo op with PAKISTAN'S Musharaf just days before ELECTION. (He can always declare it with DNA proof). That will be the BIG SHOCK to the democrats and BIG BUSH WIN.

I am 100% sure , there would be a stunt like that even if OSAMA is n't dead and say it FAULTY intelligence if anyone found out. HAHAHA!.

Democrats can't win in either way unless DEMOCRATS do the same thing RIGHT WINGER DOES.

Democrats try to be spectator , they will lose. They have to fire their base. AND TAKE STAND ON EVERY ISSUE. FLIP FLOPPING will not get John Kerry elected.

KERRY has to show there is a better way to solve every issue bush has handled.

|                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2821(7/14/04 10:40 pm)Reply | New Post ---- <hr/> Ask questions you monkey! Bad monkey make political poo poo! Bad monkey!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| unknownRegistered UserPosts: 67(7/15/04 3:44 am)Reply    | New Post Re: ---- <hr/> you all humans are monkeys.you all will die like crap.you have no power to change anything except yourself.your thinking has to change before your habit.you all monkeys are having same stupid human habit. hahaha.Any method or solution are only temporary fix.There is no permanent solution , so quit it.May be there is no problem , you all are born to die like a crap. hahaha.You can take any outlook you want , in end resul you will die like a crap irrespective of what you do or believe.Ask question though.Start the new chemical process.peaceunknownEdited by: unknown at: 7/15/04 1:18 pm |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2825(7/15/04 10:37 am)Reply | New Post ---- <hr/> Who is steve?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1736
(7/15/04 1:28 pm)
Reply

New Post Re: ----

Unknown crapped on as usual:

Quote:

if BUSH wins again , count my words , you heard it her first.

You really are either delusional or ignorant if you think you're the first person around here to offer such theories.

Dan Rowden

MKFaizi
Registered User
Posts: 1260
(7/20/04 2:23 pm)
Reply

New Post Re: ----

Just a bucket of crap. A lot of truisms that are not true or that may contain a little truth but are not thought out.

I am always interested in a discussion of politics but not of this sort.

Faizi

rushdl
Registered User
Posts: 63
(7/31/04 9:29 am)
Reply

New Post Re: ----

Unknown, dan, Ms.... I agree with everything this fucker just posted. But you can tell he didnt write it because the English to TOO DAMN GOOD!

Here is a little help back to unknown, and anyone who listens...

"The power is with secret american think tank."

This Think Tank is too generous of a term. The name of these controllers are the Builderbergs. They function through the Tri-Lateral Commission, the Council on Foreign relations and, the top secret banana, the Queen of England (Worlds wealthyist entity). Thats right we're not really free at all, on many different levels.

What if kerry just Lies about everything too so he gets elected? And is

|                                                                                                                                                                    |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                    | really controlled by the same machine? HaHa. "What if". Pretty good chance Id say. One more thing... Office of Special Plans.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| MKFaiziRegistered UserPosts: 1273(8/1/04 1:08 pm)Reply  | New Post Re: ---- <hr/> I think you are nuts. Faizi                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| RhetoricianRegistered UserPosts: 2(8/1/04 5:00 pm)Reply                                                                                 | New Post Re: ---- <hr/> I agree Rush. Marx was right when he said capitalism is just a transitional stage. Particularly when it is fused with imperialism from the getgo. It leads to some form of naive communism, through brainwashing and the manufacturing of consent. Might makes right, Bush and his entire cabinet are each high ranking executives in major corporations. Mostly oil and arms corporations. Where bloated company profits take precedence over human life or human toil. The state has been hijacked and now operates as a serf funded strongman for corporate/elitist domination. I'd be interested to know what role the queen plays in all of this? |
| BryanParrishGlobal UserPosts: 21(8/2/04 12:45 am)Reply                                                                                  | New Post Re: ---- <hr/> Drugs are very bad for you.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| WolfsonJakkPosts: 1741(8/2/04 1:35 am)Reply                                                                                                  | New Post ... <hr/> Yes, call them "medicine" instead.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |

|                                                                                                                                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                           |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| BryanParrishGlobal UserPosts: 27(8/2/04 2:08 am)Reply                                                                                                                        | New Post Re: ... <hr/> Call them "poop," they're still bad for you.                                                         |
| rushdl <input type="checkbox"/>Registered UserPosts: 64(8/2/04 9:02 am)Reply                                                                                                 | New Post Re: ... <hr/> OH I HAVE TO DISAGREE with one thing here.If bush is a PUPPET, WHO CARES IF HE GETS RE-ELECTED? |
| BryanParrishGlobal UserPosts: 39(8/2/04 9:40 am)Reply                                                                                                                        | New Post Re: ... <hr/> What movie did you learn this from?                                                                  |
| MKFaiziRegistered UserPosts: 1287(8/3/04 12:41 pm)Reply  | New Post Re: ... <hr/> Not all drugs are bad. Many are beneficial.Faizi                                                |
| MKFaiziRegistered UserPosts: 1288(8/3/04 12:43 pm)Reply  | New Post Re: ... <hr/> What makes you believe that he learned anything from a movie?Faizi                              |

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - The Thinkers' Inn - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

Genius News

David Quinn's Site

The Thinking Man's Minefield

EZB Edit

Gold Community GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> This article made me think of the Genius Forum.

New Topic

Add Reply

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                             | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| prozak997Registered UserPosts: 6(7/19/03 12:16 am)Reply | This article made me think of the Genius Forum. <hr/> Women fake sex numbersFrom The Times' Mark Henderson in LondonJuly 15, 2003 WOMEN are more likely than men to lie about their sex lives. They are so concerned about society's dim view of female promiscuity that they routinely claim to have slept with fewer partners than they actually have. Men are more honest, accurately reporting their true number of partners, despite social pressure to look like a Don Juan. The findings of a US study offer the best explanation yet for a paradox that has baffled psychologists since sex surveys began in the 1960s. Heterosexual men routinely report they have slept with more partners than do women. These figures, however, are statistically impossible - the average for both genders should be about the same. Women are serial liars when it comes to sex. Not only do they "forget" about certain partners, but they also add years to the age at which they lost their virginity, and refuse to tell the truth about masturbating or using | pornography.

The results, published in the Journal of Sex Research, suggest the sexual proclivities of men and women are much closer than traditional research has indicated.

"Women are so sensitive about being labelled 'sluts' or 'whores' that they are very reluctant to be honest about their sexual behaviour, even in supposedly anonymous surveys," said Terri Fisher, who led the study at Ohio State University. "You would assume that when a heterosexual man has sex, a woman is having sex at the same time, but the statistics always suggest otherwise. That can't be true. We thought males would be over-inflating their experience while females under-report it, but that's not what we found."

In the study, Dr Fisher and Michele Alexander, of the University of Maine, asked 96 men and 105 women, all of whom were heterosexual students between the ages of 18 and 25, to answer questions about their sex lives under three different conditions. Members of one group were left alone in a room, and told their answers would be completely anonymous. A second group filled in the same questionnaire, but respondents were told a researcher was watching the survey and could match their face to their form.

With the final group, the scientists attached electrodes to the volunteers' necks, forearms and hands, and told them they were being wired to a lie detector test.

Those women who thought they were being watched reported an average of 2.6 sex partners, compared with 3.4 in the anonymous group. Those who thought they were attached to a lie detector were still more forthcoming, giving an average of 4.4 partners. There was no such spread among the men. Those on the dummy polygraph claimed four partners, compared with 3.7 for the other groups - a difference that is not statistically significant.

news.com.au/common/story\_...62,00.html

[ I doubt this has anything to do with "society's view of promiscuity," the one-dimensional scapegoat here. In any culture, you're worth more the less you spread yourself around, sexually or otherwise. ]

ynithrix

Registered User

Posts: 151

(7/19/03 5:41)

Reply

Re: This article made me think of the Genius Forum.

---

Of course "society" is the scapegoat. Imagine, living in a time off the egalitarian ideal--where telling the truth gets you labelled as a hater--how the author must have felt. He has stumbled across yet another example of female insincerity, but if he simply says "women lie repeatedly", which is of course true, he is a "hater". So he'll blame it on whatever.

--"A woman will lie about anything, just to stay in practice." (Phillip Marlowe)

--"I expect Woman will be the last thing civilized by Man." (George Meredith)

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 1306

(7/19/03 11:50)

Reply

Re: This article made me think of the Genius Forum.

---

Ideas about how society is are always unsound when based in this kind of "survey" work, for the reasons given in the article.

But it's funny how we assume that people will tell the truth in such surveys. Funny and stupid.

Dan Rowden

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 996

(7/19/03 12:47)

Reply

Re: This article made me think of the Genius Forum.

---

Obviously, this survey was pointless. Of course, "men" admit to having more sexual partners than women.

For men, multiple sexual partners are symbols of conquests.

Women do not like to admit to the times they have been conquered.

Even when the woman may be the sexual aggressor, the act will be construed as a notch in "his" belt, not hers.

Faizi

|                                                                                                 |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| prozak997Registered UserPosts: 11(7/24/03 2:17)Reply | Re: This article made me think of the Genius Forum. <hr/> We all have ways of viewing this... quite innarestin' here. My view is that people consider many things victories or not, but it does not matter. Results matter. Best results, weirdly, are achieved through traditional methods applied by people unschooled in weird Jewish psychology based on self-analysis by neurotic hybrids. Sexuality is intimacy enforced by the close quarters under which one and one's body (same unit in my thinking) with another, and thus dominance and submission come in to play. There is only one way out of this trap, and it involves something not conceivable by Socratic (and kiked-out Judeo-Christian) methods. Truth is love conquers all, but all serves the ultimate reality(tm) of time and space, for a reason. Love must submit to discipline, which must in turn submit to it. Like remote hacking a LAN. |
| BryanParrishGlobal UserPosts: 66(8/3/04 5:31)Reply   | Re: This article made me think of the Genius Forum. <hr/> FUCK SHIT PISS BALLS NUTS                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.32
Copyright ©1999-2005 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> ARCHIVES

> This forum should be renamed or closed

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 267(7/1/03 5:42 pm)Reply     | "special turn of mind" <hr/> David Quinn wrote: Quote: <hr/> One needs to have that special turn of mind which is capable of zeroing in on the very fundamentals of existence, and not get sidetracked by superficial concerns. In my experience, not many people have it. <hr/> So, what is it? What does it consist of? |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 810(7/2/03 3:41 am)Reply | Re: . <hr/> Quote: <hr/> No, everything is resolvable. Paradoxes only exist in confused minds. <hr/> Maybe, but I don't see the paradoxes, such as "not two, not one" being resolved by reason. They are resolved by something more like an image. But reason can take you to the edge.                                          |

Quote:

---

Is this meant to be a paradox? If the word "God" denotes Ultimate Reality, then I both believe and love God. If it denotes something else - for example, the Christian conception of God - then I neither believe nor love it.

---

I was really just teasing you because it seems to me that you do love God, whatever that is. I have the same weakness.

Quote:

---

What about the belief system of the Ku Klux Klan?

---

Some belief systems are almost totally devoid of usefulness. So there is little truth to be found in it. I don't see belief systems as black and white as far as truth. Maybe Jesus never existed as a person, but still the trinity is a recurring theme of theology/philosophy. How's this: "He [the Word] conceals himself mysteriously in the interior causes of created beings...in all diversity is concealed that which is one and eternally identical; in composite things that which is simple and without parts;"

Quote:

---

But as it stands, the sort of people you describe are too naive and unconscious to be classed as having a connection to truth.

---

Of course they have a connection to truth, just not a big one. Or rather, not a progressive one. The lack is not apparent to most people.

Quote:

---

One needs to have that special turn of mind which is capable of zeroing in on the very fundamentals of existence, and not get sidetracked by superficial concerns.

---

I wonder what you mean by superficial concerns. you could mean life concerns, such as relationships, or you could mean a mind that does not stay focused.

Quote:

---

One needs to realize that it is impossible to blindly fluke an insight into the nature of Reality.

---

I was more thinking of the great scientific breakthroughs that came to people in flashes full-blown. Perhaps that is different than the nature of reality, which perhaps has to be reasoned out. But even there, I'm not sure. I think a person could have an insight, for example, that all things are one and connected, without understanding why. Of course, they will usually later try to reason it out.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1067
(7/2/03 4:28 am)
Reply

Re:

---

Bird wrote,

Quote:

---

Maybe, but I don't see the paradoxes, such as "not two, not one" being resolved by reason.

---

In fact this set is defined as the rational numbers and include "partials" such as decimals and fractions.

In 2-dimensional images it can also be applied when describing the complexity of a jagged coastline or a fractal.

Tharan

Captain Nemo Underwater

Registered User

Posts: 418

(7/2/03 9:06 am)

Reply

ezSupporter

Re: Re:

---

Quote:

---

David Quinn wrote:

Quote:

---

One needs to have that special turn of mind which is capable of zeroing in on the very fundamentals of existence, and not get sidetracked by superficial concerns. In my experience, not many people have it.

---

MGregory said: So, what is it? What does it consist of?

---

Yes, Matt, this is THE question for Quinn. You are young and energetic, so you must always ask him for this, and very specifically. Don't be satisfied with his name calling, put downs and angry raging. I'm losing interest in trying to get an answer to it. He has never answered this directly. So I leave it to a few of you who are still interested to pursue it - for fun of course.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 434

(7/2/03 9:18 am)

Reply

Re: Re:

---

There's just no denying that.

David offers pieces and is most clear when elucidating on their content. But when the questioning gets down to brass tacks, he is (as far as I can see) as enigmatic as all the other sages, in their robes, that he would ordinarily diss for being so.

I can imagine some good reasons why this might be the case but they don't seem to ring true.

Perhaps this book will clear this whole mess up.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 1721
(7/2/03 9:42 am)
Reply

Re: "special turn of mind"

---

Matt Gregory wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: One needs to have that special turn of mind which is capable of zeroing in on the very fundamentals of existence, and not get sidetracked by superficial concerns. In my experience, not many people have it.

MG: So, what is it? What does it consist of?

---

A combination of highly advanced skills in abstraction, an ability to engage in one-pointed concentration, an intuitive grasp of what fundamental knowledge might consist of, and deep hunger to truly understand ultimate reality.

Being skilled in abstraction is important because it enables one to examine the fundamental qualities that all things share, and thus enables one to gain universal knowledge. Most people get sidetracked by superficial details and lose sight of what lies at the core of all things.

--

Dave Toast wrote:

Quote:

---

David offers pieces and is most clear when elucidating on their content. But when the questioning gets down to brass tacks, he is (as far as I can see) as enigmatic as all the other sages, in their robes, that he would ordinarily diss for being so.

---

Sages always speak their thoughts in the most direct and simple language possible. If you are perceiving their words as enigmatic, Dave, the fault is yours. Your own deluded mind is projecting things onto them that are not really there, which is creating confusion for you.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 435
(7/2/03 9:57 am)
Reply

Re: "special turn of mind"

---

Yes, I can understand that.

But as I've asserted elsewhere, these kind of explanations just don't seem to ring true.

And the answer you have just given gives more weight to my claim. It is something I would expect from those very sages in their robes, that you dislike so.

You cannot fob me off so easily. I know full well that I have asked you explicitly, on a number of occasions, to lay out at least an overview of the path of reason you claim can put one on the road to understanding ultimate reality. Every time they were flat out ignored. I am not the only one who has asked such questions, others recieved no answers. The closest you got to giving me an answer was to say that if I do not except your doctrine on masculinity/femininity, I have no hope. That was supposed to be your answer to the question outlined above. Well, the closest you got anyway, as I say.

I don't want to argue with you David, I want to learn.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 1722
(7/2/03 10:15 am)
Reply

Re: "special turn of mind"

---

Dave wrote:

Quote:

---

Yes, I can understand that.

But as I've asserted elsewhere, these kind of explanations just don't seem to ring true.

---

It is nevertheless the truth.

The clearer and less deluded you make your own mind, the more easily you will be able penetrate the words of a sage. It is not as though the words of a sage are too complex or too deliberately paradoxical; on the contrary, they are far too simple and straightforward for the deluded mind to grasp.

You are probably right about the fake sages who deliberately try to confound their followers with paradoxical, nonsensical talk. However, the point I am making here applies to genuine sages only.

I'm reminded of a dialogue involving the great Chinese sage, Huang Po:

Student: Up to now, you have only refuted everything which has been said.

You have done nothing to point out the true Dharma to us. We are confused.

Master: In the true Dharma there is no confusion, but you produce confusion by such questions. What sort of "True Dharma" can you go seeking for? . . .

Just observe things as they are and don't pay attention to other people.

There are some people just like mad dogs barking at everything that moves, even barking when the wind stirs among the grass and leaves.

Quote:

---

You cannot fob me off so easily. I know full well that I have asked you explicitly, on a number of occasions, to lay out at least an overview of the path of reason you claim can put one on the road to understanding ultimate reality. Every time they were flat out ignored.

---

Read part one of my book and then get back to me.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 436

(7/2/03 10:23 am)

Reply

Re: "special turn of mind"

---

I'm doing that right now, and as I said earlier, perhaps the book will clear this up.

This does not change, or address my original point, unless of course you were to say that you were saving it for the book at the time. To which I would say, "Saving it?"

Anyway, I'm most excited by your implication that your book will answer that original question.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 1724

(7/2/03 11:40 am)

Reply

Re: .

---

Anna wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: No, everything is resolvable. Paradoxes only exist in confused minds.

Anna: Maybe, but I don't see the paradoxes, such as "not two, not one" being resolved by reason.

---

By "not two, not one", I assume you are referring to the idea that the Universe is neither a unity nor a multiplicity. This isn't a paradox because there are no contradictory elements involved. I have no trouble understanding it with my reason.

Quote:

---

I don't see belief systems as black and white as far as truth. Maybe Jesus never existed as a person, but still the trinity is a recurring theme of theology/philosophy. How's this: "He [the Word] conceals himself mysteriously in the interior causes of created beings...in all diversity is concealed that which is one and eternally identical; in composite things that which is simple and without parts;"

---

This statement is quite insane and has no connection to truth at all. It is a Christian trying to sunder Reality apart, so that he can fit his God in.

Quote:

---

DQ: One needs to have that special turn of mind which is capable of zeroing in on the very fundamentals of existence, and not get sidetracked by superficial concerns.

Anna: I wonder what you mean by superficial concerns. you could mean life concerns, such as relationships, or you could mean a mind that does not stay focused.

---

Well, it is usually because of one's attachments that the mind becomes distracted from God. Relationships are definitely a big part of this, but it also applies to one's attachments to beliefs and spiritual concepts. For example, a person might be loathe to probe the nature of Reality too deeply because he subconsciously senses that it would undermine a certain cherished belief that he is attached to. And so he naturally sidetracks himself and dilutes his mental focus, without his even realizing it.

Quote:

---

DQ: One needs to realize that it is impossible to blindly fluke an insight into the nature of Reality.

Anna: I was more thinking of the great scientific breakthroughs that came to people in flashes full-blown. Perhaps that is different than the nature of reality, which perhaps has to be reasoned out. But even there, I'm not sure. I think a person could have an insight, for example, that all things are one and connected, without understanding why. Of course, they will usually later try to reason it out.

---

As one approaches enlightenment, one does tend to have many "eureka" type flashes of insight, which many people often mistake to be enlightenment itself. However, entering true enlightenment is different because the mind of the person who is on the threshold of enlightenment is ripe for the entry. It is not a foreign step for him to take and thus the eureka element is absent.

Eureka type flashes only occur when the mind is very deluded. The eureka flash suddenly overturns a big chunk of what was previously believed to be true and thus it always seems dramatic and liberating and almost mysterious as a result. The person who is on the threshold of enlightenment, however, is in a different position. His mind is already very rational and undeluded. His entry into enlightenment is thus very natural and very conscious and very much the result of his previous rationality.

Captain Nemo Underwater

Registered User

Posts: 420

(7/2/03 1:53 pm)

Reply

ezSupporter

fundamental knowledge?

---

Quote:

---

an intuitive grasp of what fundamental knowledge might consist of, and...

---

What? You are using intuition to find out what "fundamental knowledge might consist of?" You sound like Captain Nemo - although he attempts to explain what this fundamental knowledge is.

I rest my case.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 1726

(7/2/03 4:51 pm)

Reply

Re: fundamental knowledge?

---

While you need intuition to know which direction Truth lies, it still remains the case that only reason can take you there.

A spiritual beginner is like a blind man who has a nose for Truth. He picks up on the scent of it, and he becomes intoxicated by it, and he follows this scent as far as it can go. But it can only take him so far. Sooner or later, he has to open his eyes of reason and push forward consciously.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 438

(7/2/03 11:11 pm)

Reply

Re: fundamental knowledge?

---

Quote:

---

David: By "not two, not one", I assume you are referring to the idea that the Universe is neither a unity nor a multiplicity. This isn't a paradox because there are no contradictory elements involved. I have no trouble understanding it with my reason.

---

I'm not quite sure what you are saying here.

Are you saying that there is no contradiction here because the expression is a falsification in itself?

Or are you saying that it is not a falsification in itself, but you can reason your way through the seeming paradox that such an idea only appears to present, and that in fact there is no contradiction present?

Also, I'm not sure what you mean by the Universe. Are you referring to the totality?

Incidentally, I'm not sure if Bird was referring to the Universe per se, but rather a hypothetical relationship it may have with consciousness.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1229
(7/2/03 11:30 pm)
Reply

----

---

Quote:

---

Well, it is usually because of one's attachments that the mind becomes distracted from God.

---

The above sentence is nonsensical.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 812
(7/3/03 3:52 am)
Reply

Re: .

---

Quote:

---

Paradoxes only exist in confused minds.

---

I find a paradox between no self, versus individuality.

Quote:

---

...in all diversity is concealed that which is one and eternally identical;

This statement is quite insane and has no connection to truth at all.

---

I took that as an interesting quote in which Christian thinkers have hit upon eastern-type truths. I have a good collection of them.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 1728
(7/3/03 9:36 am)
Reply

Re: fundamental knowledge?

---

Dave Toast wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: By "not two, not one", I assume you are referring to the idea that the Universe is neither a unity nor a multiplicity. This isn't a paradox because there are no contradictory elements involved. I have no trouble understanding it with my reason.

DT: I'm not quite sure what you are saying here.

Are you saying that there is no contradiction here because the expression is a falsification in itself?

Or are you saying that it is not a falsification in itself, but you can reason your way through the seeming paradox that such an idea only appears to present, and that in fact there is no contradiction present?

---

The latter. There are no contradictory elements involved because the statement is not asserting two conflicting things. If the statement was "both two and one", then yes, you would have a contradiction. But "neither two nor one" is simply a single assertion which states that the Universe is neither a unity nor a multiplicity. The reason why it is neither of these things is because the Universe is entirely formless. That it might appear to be a unity or a multiplicity in any given moment is simply an illusion of that particular moment. Neither of these appearances has any bearing on the fundamental nature of the Universe.

Quote:

---

Also, I'm not sure what you mean by the Universe. Are you referring to the totality?

---

The totality, yes. Whenever I use the term "Universe" with a capital U, I am specifically meaning the totality.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 1729
(7/3/03 9:54 am)
Reply

Re: .

---

Anna wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: Paradoxes only exist in confused minds.

Anna: I find a paradox between no self, versus individuality.

---

I don't see any paradox here. There would be a paradox, however, if the self actually existed. "Selves" are identical featureless clones, totally incompatible with the existence of unique personalities. It is only because we have no self, that we are essentially nothing more than a collection of unique parts and the product of a unique chain of events, that individuality is possible.

Quote:

---

Anna quote: ...in all diversity is concealed that which is one and eternally identical;

DQ: This statement is quite insane and has no connection to truth at all.

Anna: I took that as an interesting quote in which Christian thinkers have hit upon eastern-type truths. I have a good collection of them.

---

They are just trying to preserve the idea of a Christian God in a subtle way. And in doing so, they are distorting the truths of eastern philosophy. Eastern philosophy, at least in its wisest form, is essentially atheistic or pantheistic. There is no possibility of it being integrated with the Christian perspective. Only far-out wacky Christians like Jesus, Kierkegaard and Eckhart would be able to do it, but unlike most Christians, none of these men believed in a separate Creator God.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 440
(7/3/03 10:12 am)
Reply

Re: .

---

Quote:

---

David: "neither two nor one" is simply a single assertion which states that the Universe is neither a unity nor a multiplicity. The reason why it is neither of these things is because the Universe is entirely formless. That it might appear to be a unity or a multiplicity in any given moment is simply an illusion of that particular moment. Neither of these appearances has any bearing on the fundamental nature of the Universe.

Whenever I use the term "Universe" with a capital U, I am specifically meaning the totality.

---

David, I think you'd better take a look at this quote from your book. Chapter 5, sub-heading - The Illusion Of Separation, first paragraph.

Quote:

---

Even though the Infinite comprises the totality of all there is, it would be wrong to think of it as a mere collection of discrete physical objects. It is a unity rather than a multiplicity. The Infinite is a seamless continuum of which all things are part. The boundaries that we subconsciously project onto it are not really there. Separation is ultimately an illusion. Everything merges into each other to form an uninterrupted process which has no beginning or end.

---

Perhaps you will put this statement into better context later in the book, but you can see how it doesn't quite fit with what you are saying and perhaps gives a false impression.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 442
(7/3/03 11:39 pm)
Reply

Re: Godel and religious faith

---

Dan, the title which you have given to your post, repeated above is such a bittersweet irony.

Quote:

---

Dan: All too many people take Godel as gospel truth without actually considering what his theorems are and the context in which they are applicable - and limited to.

---

Indeed, though I'm not sure what set 'all too many people' constitutes.

Thing is though Dan, there are also people who haven't actually investigated the context in which they are applicable, yet still make false proclamations about them.

Quote:

---

Dan: His theorems are significant for set theory but that's all.

---

See what I mean.

This is a completely false statement, derived from all too obviously scant investigation on the part of it's author.

Quote:

---

They don't have relevance to the essential power and utility of deductive logic.

---

Yes they do, in assessing the essential power and utility of 'deductive logic' (when these words are meant in their accepted defined context), Godel's theorems are of the utmost importance and their implications are devastatingly obvious:

Logical truth is that and that only. A truth derived from logic can never be proven to be absolute, it's impossible.

So if someone were to do some correct logical deduction, they would end up with a logical truth, never an absolute truth. I'm sure you can see what I'm getting at here.

I mention above that the words 'deductive logic' (or indeed 'inductive logic') should be used in their correct context because this is how deductive reasoning should be done. However, when one isn't familiar with the pertinent rules of this system, and one tries to deduce reasonably using that incomplete knowledge, the processing and results of said 'deductive reasoning' automatically place themselves outside the realms of the rigorous discipline which is Formal logic (true 'deductive logic' being a branch of this), no matter which level one is working at. Here we head into the realms of 'natural reasoning', a process more related to cognitive psychology than to the discipline that is logic. That is not to say that such reasoning is any more or less valid in application to certain conundrums.

Godel's second Incompleteness theorem provides the same philosophical problem to Platonism and Logicism as it does to formalism, BTW.

Quote:

---

If Godel himself thought this was not so, why did he work on his own version of the ontological proof for the existence of God?

---

Yes, his ontological argument did come after his Incompleteness theorems, not that I expect you knew that.

That is a very good question, if you were to tease out the full implications of Incompleteness, you might find the answer as to why he tried. Trying to prove the seemingly unproveable being his wont.

One good reason would be because, among other things, he was a mystic and a mathematician.

It should be born in mind that anyone who works with maths will soon hit some philosophical issues, most carry on regardless, whether they discovered a big issue themselves or not. Sound like a familiar dilemma?

Perhaps he did it for the same sort of reasons that you carry on with life, even though you believe it to be non-existent.

And of course, looking into proof theory is somewhat akin to looking into the existence of God. However, it shouldn't be assumed that the God referred to in his argument has much to do with God as conceived in any theistic religion.

---

There it is Dan, once and for all. You can either ignore it or look further into it.

Here's some interesting web quotes.

"Godel's Theorem has many profound implications, both for science and for philosophy. ... Godel's message is that mankind will never know the final secrets of the universe by 'finitistic' or constructivistic thought alone; it's impossible for human beings ever to formulate a complete description of the natural numbers. There will always be arithmetic truths that escape our ability to fence them in by any kind of finite analysis. As Rudy Rucker has expressed it, Godel's Theorem leaves scientists in a position similar to that of Joseph K. in Kafka's novel 'The Trial'. We scurry around, running up and down endless corridors, buttonholing people, going in and out of offices, and, in general, conducting investigations. But we will never achieve ultimate success; there is no final verdict in the court of science leading to absolute truth. However, Rucker notes, "To understand the labyrinthine nature of the castle [i.e., court] is, somehow, to be free of it." And there's no understanding of the court of science that digs deeper into its foundations than the understanding given by Godel's Theorem."

---

Immediate Implications

What do Godel's theorems mean for those who believe there is a God? First, Godel shattered naive expectations that human thinking could be *reduced to algorithms. An algorithm is a step-by-step mathematical procedure for solving a problem. Usually it is repetitive. Computers use algorithms. What it means is that our thought cannot be a strictly mechanical process. Roger Penrose makes much of this, arguing in Shadows of the Mind that computers will never be able to emulate the full depth of human thought. But whereas Penrose seeks solutions in quantum theory, Christians see man as a spiritual being with understanding that springs not just from the physical organ of the mind but also from soul and spirit.*

Second, had Godel been able to affirm that a complex system is able to prove itself self-consistent, then we could argue that the universe is self-sufficient. His proof points us toward a different understanding, one in which we must either declare the universe to be infinite--as some do(5)--or else look for infinity outside the universe as theists do.

The first possibility, that the universe is infinite, is most unlikely. Everything that we have learned about the universe tells us that it is finite. Astronomers have found details that set absolute limits to its age and dimensions. Physicists have estimated the number of protons in all of creation. And even if there were an infinite amount of natural matter, each particle would still suffer the limitations of matter, for no particle is infinite in itself. The Christian therefore is reasonable when he points to a spiritual creator outside the physical universe as an explanation for what goes on within it. Godel recognized these implications and struggled to produce an ontological proof for the existence of God (a proof based on the definition of "God"). Godel was wasting his time in trying to establish this proof. His own theorems strongly suggest that while the finite can infer something bigger than itself, it cannot prove the infinite. As in this article, reason can only show that it is reasonable to believe in a spiritual God who transcends the limits of the universe.

Godel's theorem means that the universe cannot be a vast self-contained computer. One modern scientist, Fredkin, suggests that it is.(6) The fundamental particles of nature (in his view) are information bits in that huge machine. Were he right that the universe is effectively a computer, then Godel's theorems would require that nature, as a whole be understood only outside nature because no finite system is sufficient for itself. This conclusion flows by analogy from what Godel proved. "...if arithmetic is consistent, its consistency cannot be established by any meta-mathematical reasoning that can be represented within the formalism of arithmetic."(7)

As a third implication of Godel's theorem, faith is shown to be (ultimately) the only possible response to reality. Michael Guillen has spelled out this implication: "the only possible way of avowing an unprovable truth, mathematical or otherwise, is to accept it as an article of faith."(8) In other words, scientists are as subject to belief as non-scientists. And scientific faith can let a man down as hard as any other. Guillen writes: "In 1959 a disillusioned Russell lamented: "I wanted certainty in the kind of way in which people want religious faith. I thought that certainty is more likely to be found in mathematics than anywhere...But after some twenty years of arduous toil, I came to the conclusion that there was nothing more that I could do in the way of making mathematical knowledge indubitable."(9)

A or Non-A?

Godel showed that "it is impossible to establish the internal logical consistency of a very large class of deductive systems--elementary arithmetic, for example--unless one adopts principles of reasoning so complex that their internal consistency is as open to doubt as that of the systems themselves."(10) In short, we can have no certitude that our most cherished systems of math are free from internal contradiction.

Take note! He did not prove a contradictory statement, that  $A = \text{non-}A$ , (the kind of thinking that occurs in many Eastern religions). Instead, he showed that no system can decide between a certain  $A$  and  $\text{non-}A$ , even where  $A$  is known to be true. Any finite system with sufficient power to support a full number theory cannot be self-contained.

Judeo-Christianity has long held that truth is above mere reason. Spiritual truth, we are taught, can be apprehended only by the spirit. This, too, is as it should be. The Godelian picture fits what Christians believe about the universe. Had he been able to show that self-proof was possible, we would be in deep trouble. As noted above, the universe could then be self-explanatory.

As it stands, the very real infinities and paradoxes of nature demand something higher, different in kind, more powerful, to explain them just as every logic set needs a higher logic set to prove and explain elements within it.

This lesson from Godel's proof is one reason that no finite system, even one as vast as the universe, can ultimately satisfy the questions it raises.

Edited by: Dave Toast at: 7/4/03 12:18 am

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 443
(7/4/03 12:13 am)
Reply

Re: Godel....Godel...and more friggin' Godel...

---

Yes David, another interesting post title there. You seem frustrated.

Quote:

---

DT: Logic cannot be relied upon to determine truth. We won't go into the validity of bivalent logic Vs multivalent logic as a means of dealing with the truths that you are trying to determine. Rather we will accept that logic is a system which cannot be both consistent and complete. If it is consistent, then the consistency of it's axioms cannot be proven from within. Unless of course you have found a solution to Incompleteness that you want to tell us about.

David: Godel had already found it himself. Since he used logic to arrive at what he thought was the truth - namely, that all formal logical systems of a certain level of complexity are either inconsistent or incomplete - he showed that he did indeed believe that logic is perfectly capable of arriving at truth. Who am I to argue with the great Godel?

---

This argument seems to irrefutable and one might think it impossible to circumnavigate. It's negotiation is however deceptively simple. I'm suprised you haven't done it yourself, unless you have and chosen to not mention it.

Logical processes produce logical truth, not Truth with a capital T. Simple isn't it.

You have missed out one crucial word above, I'll stick it in for you.

"Since he used logic to arrive at what he thought was the truth - namely, that all formal logical systems of a certain level of complexity are either inconsistent or incomplete - he showed that he did indeed believe that logic is perfectly capable of arriving at logical truth."

You can now see how Godel did not find the solution to Incompleteness in formulating the very theory.

He found a logical truth about logic, nothing less but perhaps implying something more.

Quote:

---

Just as Godel's logical proof of his theorem does not fall into the scope of Godel's Incompleteness Theorem,

---

But it does.

Quote:

---

neither does the kind of logic I engage in - namely, simple deductive reasoning based on irrefutable premises.

---

But it does, Incompleteness does not concern premises, rather it concerns axioms, the very axioms you use even in the simple deductive reasoning you are speaking of. We'll deal with what you do with those irrefutable premises next.

Quote:

---

DT: Or perhaps you can resolve Lewis Carroll's paradox.

David: What is that one?

---

Here's a full online encyclopedia text on the subject.

"What the Tortoise Said to Achilles" is a brief dialog by Lewis Carroll which playfully problematizes the foundations of logic. The conversation takes place between the tortoise and Achilles, the two runners in Zeno's racecourse paradox. The tortoise challenges Achilles to use the force of logic to convince him that a particular deductive inference of the modus ponens variety is a valid argument. Ultimately, Achilles fails, because the clever tortoise leads him into an infinite regression.

The discussion concerns three statements:

(A) "Things that are equal to the same are equal to each other"

(B) "The two sides of this triangle are things that are equal to the same."

(Z) "The two sides of this triangle are equal to each other" which could be formalized with mathematical symbols as:

(A')  $\forall x \forall y: \text{equalsame}(x,y) \rightarrow x=y$

(B')  $\text{equalsame}(a,b)$

(Z')  $a=b$

Achilles' task is to make the Tortoise agree that, if he accepts A and B, he must necessarily accept Z. The Tortoise sees no particularly good reason to agree to this, but takes it up as an additional premise C in order to humor Achilles:

(C) "If A and B are true, Z must be true"

Achilles argues that because the Tortoise now accepts A, B, and C, he must now necessarily accept Z. The Tortoise sees no particularly good reason to agree to this, but takes it up as an additional premise D in order to humor Achilles:

(D) "If A and B and C are true, Z must be true"

Ultimately, the Tortoise grows the list of premises ad infinitum, and never accepts the conclusion Z.

What's wrong here

The tortoise does not acknowledge modus ponens as a generally valid argument form. Carroll demonstrates the great difficulty of deducing modus ponens from premises that do not include modus ponens. This suggests that, more generally, valid logical argument forms cannot be derived "from nothing". ...

Several philosophers have tried to resolve the Carroll paradox. Isashiki Takahiro (1999) summarizes past attempts and concludes they all fail before beginning yet another.

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - ARCHIVES - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31n
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> This Minefield

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                               | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| unmentheyrlRegistered UserPosts: 4(10/29/03 4:23 am)Reply | This Minefield <hr/> I would first like to thank all of you for posting your ideas; I get great joy from reading your thoughts each night as I wind down my day. It is very admirable for all of you to share yourselves with eachother in respect to a common goal. Having said that, though, I think it would be in everyone's best interest to stop trying work against eachother as you seem to be in various argumentative posts and begin to work with eachother, truely sharing ideas. Point one another in the right direction, and recieve direction graciously. This is a very positive medium that you are all taking advantage of, so please take advantage of it to the fullest. I wish the best to all of you; you have all undertaken a great task that will someday shower you with the rain of heaven. Until then, just relax :) |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 364(10/29/03 8:20 am)Reply   | Re: This Minefield <hr/> I like to fight.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| mattfaustRegistered UserPosts: 23(10/29/03 9:02 am)Reply  | Re: This Minefield <hr/> voce io,just curious. are you a woman?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |

|                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 788(10/29/03 9:10 am)Reply      | Re: This Minefield <hr/> The spirit drags this carcass through the minefield threatening to blow bits off.It's the only way to kill the fear of mines.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 189(10/29/03 11:12 am)Reply    | Re: This Minefield <hr/> voce io is an 18 year old genius man. For crying out loud. It's just not fair, Scott!Says I (50 years of age, and still dying).Thank you for your kind 'n' smart words, unmenthey1, although I'll never forgive you for that fucking nickname. OK, with copy-and-paste I can manage.A toast to Dave Toast,DEL is swell, suergaz is brilliant, jimhaz deserves an ultimate hug, not from me, the women in this forum take care of that, I'm afraid of Dan Rowden, of course, because he's the boss.Thank you, Mr. Kevin Solway, for your freeware Cliptext program (that's a real beauty, reader, look it up!).I mentionwww.theabsolute.net/minefield/index.htmlon my site (http://www.spiderwebservices.nl/thegoldengirlsquotes), under the name of The Works.'I don't know where I was, but I'll stay out of there in the future.' - Groucho Marx |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 365(10/29/03 11:18 am)Reply | Re: This Minefield <hr/> Paul is kinda right. I have a penis, and I'm 18.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31r
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> This will make you a genius. <---period

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                           | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| JustOwninRegistered UserPosts: 1(7/2/04 4:29 am)Reply |  This will make you a genius. &lt;---period <hr/> It is a well known fact that those who succeed in certain fields do so because they naturally have the module of success implanted within them (business related or such) and/or they are geniuses.But because of the nature of what genius is the definition has been obscured. Having a high I.Q. is genius. To simplify it.But what genius truly is has been and how it has been harnished has been studied by certain psychologists and and neurologists allowing them to come up with actual training programs that teach you how to be genius. In this post I shall tell you about the different programs and where they can be found.Me being living success, a byproduct of intense genius training, I shall also share with you the benefits. In Win Wenger's five books he explores what intelligence is but only in his book "The Einstein Factor" does he teach you how to be genius. He uses a technique called image streaming (extremely powerful) to increase your connection with your sub, non, con, and pre conscious processors pushing you into the heights of genius. Paul Scheele is the CEO of learning strategies corp and the creator of a technique called "photoreading". This technique allows you to lace information in your nonconscious mind for your preconscious processor to use allowing you to read at a MINIMUM of 25,000 words perminute.He came together with Win Wenger to create a program he calls the |

"GeniusCode". In this eight tape/CD journey Afterwards, you WILL be a genius. (hmmm, an inside joke that no one will understand nor even detect) It combines both of their knowledge on genius to create an effective programming.

Paul Scheele also has a program called Memory Optimizer. This program increases your memory to the status of god. Not only will you be able to remember long lists with ease, but every aspect of your memory will be increased. Following the procedures in this program one reindexes the thoughts in your brain increasing your I.Q. One aspect of genius is memory . all Paul Scheele's stuff can be found at www.learningstrategies.com . Just purchasing the books would be enough to train.

The book, "The Mind Accelerator" is the cheapest way to gain the knowledge so that you can train yourself towards the level of genius. It is a 12 day four step program that will train your minds not only towards genius, but success.

phase 1 increases the internal state of your mind & the quality of its thoughts phase 2 increases the intelligence & power of your mind

3 increases your mind's ability to learn &

4 increases your mind's ability to stimulate action & create results.

www.themindaccelerator.com/

Many paths lead to Rome. The same is with genius. Each of these programs are at the pinnacle of self-help and if the instructions are followed genius will be the result. Regardless of if your I.Q. is above average or normal. These programs effectively increase it.

If you are already aware of these products and their tremendous results please post some of your success that you have had with them to further motivate those who haven't towards discovering genius.

november rains
Posts: 5
(7/6/04 6:27 pm)
Reply

 More bunk.

---

"Geniuses" can never reach the status of a "god" because they are too stupid.

What they excel in, in intellect, they lack in, in humility, compassion, truth, and love and that "sixth or seventh" sense... -- which they do not even know exists.

A "true genius" would never consider lifting himself up to the "status of a god". They would only be seeking the "rewards" of a "god", that is, of people "looking up to them". They truly have no idea what a true "God" really is, because, ahem, there is only One, and that dude rocks. baby.

That large ego is like a giant red glowing beacon on the tops of their shoulders, and the common folk begin to laugh at them, after they have reached full blown luminescence. (They just don't know yet.)

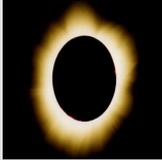

Here's lookin up at you!

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2741
(7/7/04 12:49 am)
Reply

 Re: More bunk.

---

There is only one, and he rocks? baby? Does he wear a hat?

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 994
(7/7/04 3:41 am)
Reply

 Re: More bunk.

---

He'd better wear a condom!

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

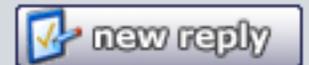

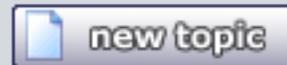

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

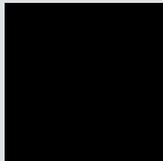

> GENIUS FORUM

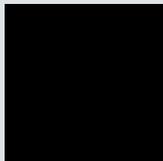

> Tibetan Dzogchen Buddhism

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|   Philip Mistlberger           Posts: 56           (3/18/04 10:19 pm)           Reply           ezSupporter   | Tibetan Dzogchen Buddhism <hr/> In my travels on the Tibetan plateau (Ladakh) and in my close to three decades of studying Buddhism I've come to conclude that the highest essence is found in the Dzogchen (pronounced, roughly, "Zo-shen") lineages (and in Chinese/Japanese Zen). I've seen some consideration of Zen at this board but haven't noticed mention of the Dzogchen tradition, so I thought I'd introduce it here for any interested. The essence of Dzogchen is the direct Realization of the "emptiness" of all things, that is, to Realize that all things lack any lasting "essence". "Dzogchen" itself means "Great Perfection" and is essentially a term for a means of meditation that has to do with resting in what is called the "Natural State." Part of the overall attitude of Dzogchen is that Enlightenment is the most natural thing in the universe, and that all un-enlightened states of mind are properly forms of dis-ease. In Tibetan Buddhism, the Dzogchen teachings are considered by many to be the "cream" of their wisdom. However, because of the uncompromising simplicity of its teaching, the Dzogchen tradition is often not understood or overlooked by those who need a more graduated approach to enlightenment. One of the more reknowned 20th century Tibetan Dzogchen masters was Dilgo Kyentse Rinpoche. Below are some of his offerings on the essence |

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            | of Dzogchen philosophy... groups.msn.com/AryaTaraTi...gchen.msnw                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| WolfsonJakkPosts: 1528(3/19/04 1:13 am)Reply                                                                                                                                                                                         | Tibetan Dzogchen Buddhism <hr/> The philosophy to end all philosophies or just another dogmatic expression? Tharan                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
|  Philip MistlbergerPosts: 57(3/19/04 7:19 am)ReplyezSupporter  | Re: Tibetan Dzogchen Buddhism <hr/> Wolfson, I would say that whether or not Dzogchen is "ultimate philosophy" or "dogma" is ultimately unimportant. The idea is to investigate it for the purposes of possible learning from it, or at least, seeing how much of it confirms or disconfirms one's grasp of Truth up to this point in one's journey. That, at least, is the attitude I try to bring to bear when looking into any wisdom-tradition, whether Eastern or Western. Edited by: Philip Mistlberger at: 3/19/04 7:19 am                                                  |
| SapiusRegistered UserPosts: 274(3/19/04 9:17 am)Reply                                                                                                                                                                           | Re: Tibetan Dzogchen Buddhism <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Seeing all things as naked, clear and free from obscurations, there is nothing to attain or realise. The nature of phenomena appears naturally and is naturally present in time-transcending awareness. Everything is naturally perfect just as it is. All phenomena appear in their uniqueness as part of the continually changing pattern. These patterns are vibrant with meaning and significance at every moment; yet there is no significance to attach to such meanings beyond the moment in which they present themselves. <hr/> |

...and all this depends on the one simple key word, 'seeing'.

Philip:

Quote:

---

.....because of the uncompromising simplicity of its teaching, the Dzogchen tradition is often not understood or overlooked by those who need a more graduated approach to enlightenment.

---

Again, it might be simple, but it would need that one single moment of 'seeing' when the entire realization would sink into your being.

On the other hand, I have seen many a simple folks who have never ventured towards even thinking beyond their daily needs and yet live a life of "every thing is naturally perfect as it is", without even realizing that fact. Could they be considered "enlightened", without even realizing it themselves?

Hi Jakk, How you doing?

Did you check out the link? Did you 'see' what is written?
I'm kinda surprised at your question.

WolfsonJakk
Posts: 1530
(3/19/04 9:30 am)
Reply

Re: Tibetan Dzogchen Buddhism

---

Quote:

---

Hi Jakk, How you doing?

Did you check out the link? Did you 'see' what is written?
I'm kinda surprised at your question.

---

Hi Sapius, it's been a while. Are you still in Hong Kong? If so, I am just across the pond from you now in Seattle. :)

I did check out the link. My post was a question not an implication and Philip responded appropriately, IMO.

Tharan

Sapius
Registered User
Posts: 277
(3/19/04 12:09 pm)
Reply

Re: Tibetan Dzogchen Buddhism

---

Jakk, I have temporarily moved near the Mediterranean pond, about two more ponds away, but, I'll be back. :)

 Philip Mistlberger
Posts: 60
(3/19/04 5:38 pm)
Reply
ezSupporter

Re: Tibetan Dzogchen Buddhism

---

Sapius --

Quote:

---

On the other hand, I have seen many a simple folks who have never ventured towards even thinking beyond their daily needs and yet live a life of "every thing is naturally perfect as it is", without even realizing that fact.

---

I don't think you could know that unless you were "inside" of their consciousness (so to speak). That is, merely by external observation, you can't really tell if in fact someone is "living a life of everything is naturally perfect as it is."

Quote:

---

Could they be considered "enlightened", without even realizing it themselves?

---

The Dzogchen idea of the "Natural State" is both extremely simple and extremely advanced at the same time. (Which is why it's considered the "cream" of Tibetan practices by many Tibetan Buddhists).

It's simple because it is our core, native condition. It's advanced because it takes tremendous readiness to drop the distorting powers of the ego-mind (basically, *identification* and *projection*) and operate out of our core, native condition in a fashion that embraces intellect (rather than represses or stunts it).

I see it as something like this (grossly simplified)

Level 1 -- Primitive consciousness, rudimentary cognitive powers. (Most native, pre-technological cultures fall in here, and some Eastern cultures).

Level 2 -- Intellectualism, fascination with and indulgence in the powers of intellect (most Western technologically based cultures fall in here, and some Eastern cultures).

Level 3 -- Spiritual maturity (operating from the Natural State of pure Being that is *trans-rational*, not *pre-rational* -- that is, where intellect is used as it needs to be, not overused and over-identified with). To date, I'm unaware of any cultures that have ever operated out of this level, which has been more the province of individuals or small communities.

Dzogchen is completely concerned with the third level, which is why traditionally a Tibetan monk would only be given Dzogchen teachings after they'd passed through a tremendous amount of intellectual training in logic, sutras, scriptures, debate, visualization practices, etc.

Sapius
Registered User
Posts: 279
(3/19/04 10:59 pm)
Reply

Re: Tibetan Dzogchen Buddhism

---

Quote:

---

Philip: I don't think you could know that unless you were "inside" of their consciousness (so to speak). That is, merely by external observation, you can't really tell if in fact someone is "living a life of everything is naturally perfect as it is."

---

So how could one know if Dilgo Kyentse Rinpoche was enlightened if one were not able to be "inside" of his consciousness? (so to speak of course)

SDWangmo
Registered User
Posts: 123
(3/19/04 11:25 pm)
Reply

Re: Tibetan Dzogchen Buddhism

---

A very interesting book on the subject of Dzogchen is Namkhai Norbu's Dzogchen: the self-perfected state. His other books are also quite good.

Quote:

---

traditionally a Tibetan monk would only be given Dzogchen teachings after they'd passed through a tremendous amount of intellectual training in logic, sutras, scriptures, debate, visualization practices, etc.

---

That is only 'traditional' because it suited the monastic power structure in Tibet to 'annex' Dzogchen by defining it as something that could only be practiced after a whole lot of Sutric-style preparation. But since, in the Dzogchen view, enlightenment or nonduality is our natural condition, there is access to that state outside the context of process.

As a kind of footnote, something I have always found quite interesting about Tibetan Buddhism is that concept-consciousness is regarded as one of the (six rather than five) senses. This implies that it is possible to directly experience the 'texture' of conceptuality, irrespective of content.

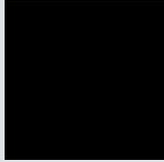

Philip Mistlberger

Posts: 63

(3/20/04 12:02 am)

Reply

ezSupporter

Re: Tibetan Dzogchen Buddhism

---

Quote:

---

So how could one know if Dilgo Kyentse Rinpoche was enlightened if one were not able to be "inside" of his consciousness?

---

One can't, Sapius, and that's the whole point! One can only realize Enlightenment for oneself.

Because of that the idea has been, in most wisdom-traditions, to study with teachers as a means to practicing what has been called a "discipline of transcendence". That is, to arrive at one's own understanding of Truth. This is why it's a waste of time to be concerned about the exact level or exact kind of attainment by a teacher, and why most teachers will discourage such concerns.

A seeker once asked the famous Lucknow Advaita sage Harilal Poonja, "how do I know you're Enlightened?" to which Poonja replied, "ah, a good question! In your current state, you can't know. First become Enlightened, and then see what you see."

Wangmo --

Quote:

---

A very interesting book on the subject of Dzogchen is Namkhai Norbu's Dzogchen: the self-perfected state. His other books are also quite good.

---

Yes...as well as his teachings on Dream Yoga.

Quote:

---

That is only 'traditional' because it suited the monastic power structure in Tibet to 'annex' Dzogchen by defining it as something that could only be practiced after a whole lot of Sutric-style preparation. But since, in the Dzogchen view, enlightenment or nonduality is our natural condition, there is access to that state outside the context of process.

---

Which has become the case now, in terms of it being readily accessible to the public. I think Chogyam Trungpa Rinpoche may have been the first to openly teach the so-called "higher Tantras" in the 1970s. Khyentse Rinpoche was one of his teachers...although Trungpa was an example of a high profile Tibetan Rinpoche who seemed to bite off more than he could chew (in terms of the size of his community), and he self-destructed at a young age (cirrhosis of the liver in his late 40s). A brilliant teacher, though.

Quote:

---

As a kind of footnote, something I have always found quite interesting about Tibetan Buddhism is that concept-consciousness is regarded as one of the (six rather than five) senses. This implies that it is possible to directly experience the 'texture' of conceptuality, irrespective of content.

---

Yes, "Mind" is lumped in with the other five bodily senses. My understanding is that this is done in order to point the way toward the ultimate emptiness-equality of all things, including thought itself.

Sapius
Registered User
Posts: 281
(3/21/04 6:51 am)
Reply

Re: Tibetan Dzogchen Buddhism

---

Quote:

---

Philip: One can't, Sapius, and that's the whole point! One can only realize Enlightenment for oneself.

A seeker once asked the famous Lucknow Advaita sage Harilal Poonja, "how do I know you're Enlightened?" to which Poonja replied, "ah, a good question! In your current state, you can't know. First become Enlightened, and then see what you see."

---

Quite true, for certain personal experiences cannot be explained. For example, you could never explain to me how an orange tastes if I have never eaten one.

Quote:

---

Because of that the idea has been, in most wisdom-traditions, to study with teachers as a means to practicing what has been called a "discipline of transcendence". That is, to arrive at one's own understanding of Truth. This is why it's a waste of time to be concerned about the exact level or exact kind of attainment by a teacher, and why most teachers will discourage such concerns.

---

Studying with a teacher may not necessarily apply to everyone though. Just as you mentioned that a student attained enlightenment although his teacher was a con, similarly, a person might find inspiration through a friend, parent, or just the world at large if he has the inclination.

Ducky M

Posts: 4

(4/3/04 9:53 am)

Reply

Re: Tibetan Dzogchen Buddhism

---

Quote:

---

However, because of the uncompromising simplicity of its teaching, the Dzogchen tradition is often not understood or overlooked by those who need a more graduated approach to enlightenment.

---

Count me in among those who has never gotten the hang of the Dzogchen tradition. A few years ago I got some training in it at Mt. Madonna during a retreat sponsored by Rigpa. I have been unable to detect any change which could be correlated with that brief practice - but who knows, some changes may have occurred at an unconscious level. :)

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 1676

(4/3/04 9:56 am)

Reply

Re: Tibetan Dzogchen Buddhism

---

Hmm, how will you ever know?

Dan Rowden

Ducky M

Posts: 5

(4/3/04 10:00 am)

Reply

Re: Tibetan Dzogchen Buddhism

---

Quote:

---

The philosophy to end all philosophies or just another dogmatic expression?

---

Must it be either one or the other? Cannot there be other possibilities? :)

Ducky M

Posts: 6

(4/3/04 10:29 am)

Reply

Re: Tibetan Dzogchen Buddhism

---

Quote:

---

Hmm, how will you ever know?

---

Who knows... anyway, at least it didn't seem to have any harmful effects - except to my pocketbook! :lol

Quote:

---

...although Trungpa was an example of a high profile Tibetan Rinpoche who seemed to bite off more than he could chew (in terms of the size of his community), and he self-destructed at a young age (cirrhosis of the liver in his late 40s). A brilliant teacher, though.

---

Yes - he certainly taught very effectively ( to those not too blind to see ) to beware of sneaky Al Cohol... :eek

His successor also self-destructed - via AIDS. The story is told in The Double Mirror by Stephen T. Butterfield ( http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/1556431767/qid=1080951949/sr=11-1/ref=sr\_11\_1/102-3336673-5676923#product-details ):

Quote:

---

Spiritual Path or Cult?, July 11, 2002

Reviewer: Llew Christopher from Hudson Valley, NY

In Double Mirror, Stephen Butterfield discusses some of his experiences with the controversial Tibetan Buddhist guru, Chogyam Trungpa. There is quite a bit of information here on Tibetan Buddhist beliefs and rituals -- the stages of initiation, the principle of "emptiness" and the fundamental law of absolute devotion to the guru. Butterfield never becomes fully reconciled to the latter. His feelings about Trungpa and his organization are ambivalent throughout this book. On the one hand, Trungpa is described as an authentic teacher of Buddhism, inspiring Western students with his "crazy wisdom" tactics (in many ways similar to Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh). On the other hand, Butterfield gives ample evidence that this was as much a cult as a religion. There is a strict hierarchy within the organization; higher-ups live in luxury while beginners are treated as serfs. Worst of all, Tendzin, Trungpa's second in command, knowingly infected many students with AIDS. To complete the picture, Butterfield describes both Trungpa and Tendzin as alcoholics. These facts seem to go beyond the limits of even tantra or crazy wisdom and into the realm of pure exploitation and hypocrisy. Butterfield never fully reconciles the two sides of his experience, which gives the title of this book a double meaning (the first meaning is that a Buddhist perspective sees the inner and outer worlds as mirroring each other). He tries to reconcile a skeptical mind with a tradition demanding absolute obedience to a guru. This is a very difficult issue for someone raised in a Western culture and following an Eastern discipline, so I can't really fault Butterfield for not solving this dilemma. Still, there is something askew about the way he alternately praises and condemns the organization. More than having mixed feelings about it, he almost seems to have a split personality regarding it. Apparently, he left the group very conflicted and unable to synthesize his thoughts and feelings into either a positive or negative conclusion. He tries to justify this using the Buddhist doctrine of nonduality (the double mirror again), but I don't think this kind of ambivalence is quite the ideal aspired to by mystics. I wish the book had a little more about Butterfield's life and experiences within the group and less about ritual. There are many pages of detailed descriptions of rituals, using technical Buddhist terminology. To me, this detracted somewhat from the larger picture. Still, very interesting and recommended for spiritual seekers, especially those interested in Eastern religions.

---

:)

the meme of barnaby

Registered User

Posts: 16

(4/21/04 7:14 pm)

Reply

cheers big ears

---

Thanks Phil!

Very good website. Do you follow his teachings? How does that fit in with your western lifestyle, or have you long since abandoned any societal commitment?

cheers,

barnaby

HansReinhardt

Registered User

Posts: 2

(4/22/04 2:26 am)

Reply

Zen etc.

---

I've read a bit of Zen, and am sympathetic towards it, but in the final analysis, I find it unsatisfactory.

At its best, Zen is simply a recognition of the limits of knowledge and an emotional adjustment to those limits. But is this really the end point of wisdom? I don't think so.

The realization of "no essences" or, more accurately, "no provable essences" is no great feat and has been done by so many that it is more cliché than wisdom.

The real challenge and the better wisdom takes the next step and involves itself in life (with all its illusions); it sorts out options and makes choices. It is not paralyzed by the fact that it doesn't know anything -- essentially.

WolfsonJakk

Posts: 1552

(4/22/04 4:19 am)

Reply

Zen etc

---

Zen Buddhism and Tibetan Buddhism are not the same, yet ultimately both point toward the emptiness that permeates all things. Whether or not you find this truth "satisfactory" or not does not detract from its truthfulness.

Quote:

---

The real challenge and the better wisdom takes the next step and involves itself in life (with all its illusions); it sorts out options and makes choices. It is not paralyzed by the fact that it doesn't know anything -- essentially.

---

The real challenge is realizing that you are involved in life whether you like it or not, despite the fact that it is neither here nor there, and yet life goes on with or without "you." This is fundamental knowledge of everything without the illusions. Only the deluded become "paralyzed" when choosing between illusions.

Tharan

HansReinhardt

Posts: 4

(4/22/04 5:22 am)

Reply

etc

---

Quote:

---

Zen Buddhism and Tibetan Buddhism are not the same, yet ultimately both point toward the emptiness that permeates all things. Whether or not you find this truth "satisfactory" or not does not detract from it's truthfulness.

---

This is kind of a joke: "The emptiness that permeates all things". What might this not be, this absolutely nothing that is in all things? And how do you point at nothing?

I realize I am using language in a different sense from which you seem to be, but it illustrates a point. You are making a nonsensical assertion and calling it the truth. I suspect that you have an understanding of this that can be stated clearly, but until then, I can only guess at your meaning and nod my head.

Quote:

---

The real challenge is realizing that you are involved in life whether you like it or not, despite the fact that it is neither here nor there, and yet life goes on with or without "you." This is fundamental knowledge of everything without the illusions. Only the deluded become "paralyzed" when choosing between illusions.

---

This is one of those "no sh*t" statements that I've often heard Buddhists make under the impression that it is wise or otherwise mind-blowing. It isn't. The realization that "I" am not my ego (or merely my ego) is not particularly hard to achieve -- the problem is the application of this realization, i.e. everything is an illusion.

If we define illusion as "an erroneous perception of reality", then sure, there is a sense in which you can say that the person who identifies totally with the ego is living in an illusory state. But the opposite is equally true: a person who devalues the ego and lives completely outside of it (as if that were possible) is living in an equally illusory state.

For example, choices: to call them simply choices between illusions is itself an even bigger illusion. To say that choice A and choice B are both everything and therefore not really choices is a fantasy. In other words, even if looked at from one POV "all is one", it is equally true that from another POV things are unique and different -- to reject one POV at the expense of the other is to hold an incomplete (therefore erroneous) picture of reality, and live in an illusory state.

HansReinhardt

Posts: 5

(4/22/04 5:40 am)

Reply

fdjfsdj

---

For the sake of putting my cards on the table, I should introduce myself a bit.

I am one who, earlier in life, was very interested in Buddhism, but ultimately found it an incomplete and unsatisfactory approach to life. I wound up majoring in philosophy instead. Not necessarily for the answers it provides, but for its approach and understanding of the questions.

I still enjoy Buddhism, but I think its primary value is as a sort of psychology -- but even then it isn't the best psychology.

WolfsonJakk

Posts: 1553

(4/22/04 5:49 am)

Reply

Re: etc

---

Hans wrote,

Quote:

---

If we define illusion as "an erroneous perception of reality"...

---

Before we go any further, please give me a single example of anything perceived that is absolutely and literally "true" to the real thing. Also, the method taken to determine this "true" perception.

Tharan

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

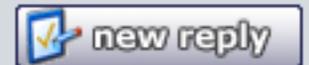

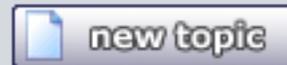

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Tibetan Dzogchen Buddhism

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                    | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| HansReinhardt Posts: 6(4/22/04 6:06 am) Reply  | dfssdfa <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Before we go any further, please give me a single example of anything perceived that is absolutely and literally "true" to the real thing. Also, the method taken to determine this "true" perception. <hr/> Well, the answer to this depends on your metaphysics. One way to answer this question would be like this: Truth is a one to one correlation between intuitive representation and abstract representation. Or, a point for point correlation between what you perceive and what you understand. This is not likely to be possible, but it's a pretty good definition of truth. This definition has the benefit of bypassing questions about the "ultimate" truth and reality, etc. That being said, some understandings can have a higher correlation with perception than others, and thus be more truthful. So, to give you an example of something that is more truthful than not, let's take two statements: A) Fire is hot |

B) Fire is made of peanut butter.

Statement A likely contains a higher correlation between intuitive representation and abstract representation, and thus, more likely to be true.

Edited by: HansReinhardt at: 4/22/04 6:07 am

WolfsonJakk

Posts: 1554

(4/22/04 7:23 am)

Reply

....

---

Since this is a philosophical forum, I would define truth as something that is unchanging and eternal. For example, the way the universe is ever-changing is an unchanging state. Thus, the fundamental "state" of the universe is flux, which is an eternal truth.

The examples you give are merely possible facts. Whether or not they are true is often subjective, such as worshipping the Living Sun God or the idea that the moon is made of cheese. Facts are often simply common beliefs. Scientific facts are generally correlated and predictive phenomenon, but speak to truth similarly to that of a blind man holding an elephant's tail and describing what he feels.

All things inevitably break down to our own mental constructs. Any objective truth about an object or idea is speculative. We each can only truly know our own mind.

Tharan

HansReinhardt

Posts: 7

(4/22/04 7:44 am)

Reply

kjf

---

In part, we're saying much the same thing, but using different language.

By saying "intuitive representation" and "abstract representation", I am indicating mental constructs, or, representations.

The difference is that I am defining truth as a correlation between the two, because we are not in a position to talk about what is outside of our ability to mentally construct. Which is why I was surprised that you defined truth "essentially" i.e, as an unchanging and eternal thing. This seems like a difficult position to maintain given the rest of your statements:

Quote:

---

the fundamental "state" of the universe is flux

---

and:

Quote:

---

All things inevitably break down to our own mental constructs. Any objective truth about an object or idea is speculative. We each can only truly know our own mind.

---

If the universe is constantly changing, and any objective truth is speculative, where is your truth? Where is the unchanging and eternal if all is change, flux and speculation? Furthermore, if all you truly know is your own mind, then how do you know the universe -- something which is not your mind -- is as you describe it?

This is why I defined truth the way I did, it bypasses some of these landmines.

WolfsonJakk

Posts: 1555

(4/22/04 8:53 am)

Reply

....

---

So you are splitting the realm of mental constructs into two categories; intuitive representation and abstract representation, correct? And how are they different exactly?

Tharan

HansReinhardt

Posts: 8

(4/22/04 9:34 am)

Reply

lk;lkj

---

Representation is the word for our picture of reality that the mind constructs out of input from our senses.

Our knowledge of the world is conditioned by our ability to perceive it. For example: the ears can only perceive sounds in a certain decibel range, and so, sounds that exist outside that range cannot be heard by us. So, the ears present the mind with incomplete data; and so on with the eyes and nose, etc.

Intuitive representation is the name for the initial picture of reality as constructed out of this data from our senses, without the words, thoughts or memories, normally associated with everything. Imagine yourself seeing everything for the first time and not thinking about anything.

Abstract representation is the picture derived (or abstracted) from the intuitive representation by your intellectual and intuitive functions. The association of words and recognition and understanding to what you see.

I am defining truth as a perfect match between the two as opposed to a statement about what exists outside of our ability to represent it. And the closer the correlation, the more truthful the statement.

WolfsonJakk

Posts: 1556

(4/22/04 11:08 am)

Reply

...

---

Quote:

---

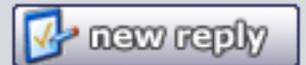

Intuitive representation is the name for the initial picture of reality as constructed out of this data from our senses, without the words, thoughts or memories, normally associated with everything. Imagine yourself seeing everything for the first time and not thinking about anything.

---

Interesting, but I have issue with idea that this sensory input constitutes an "initial picture." Data is irrelevant without proper compilation. It must be translated into an image or an abstraction.

Tharan

|                                                                                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| HansReinhardt Posts: 9(4/23/04 1:42 am) Reply  | sdfa <hr/> I agree. This is what I meant by the word "constructed".                                                                                                                                                                         |
| WolfsonJakk Posts: 1561(4/23/04 7:25 am) Reply                                                                                 | .... <hr/> Perhaps my reading comprehension needs improvement, but if both categories are constructed objects (images, ideas, visions, etc.), how do you consider one different from the other? I am still not clear on that. Tharan |

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM
> GENIUS FORUM
> Time Capsule

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|  cwintonRegistered UserPosts: 1(2/4/04 3:26 pm)ReplyezSupporter  | Time Capsule <hr/> Time Capsule:When the status of 'Sage,' is attained by all ... There's nothing to do now ... we're all 'sages.' So, transcending time, we analyze the past errors and successes of others. We debate them amongst ourselves ... ... perhaps in forums such as these ... We visit them wherever within the timelines. And suddenly ... The way you figured things out in your head, was correct. The perfect answer. The Final Solution. You were the only one. The only one in the history of mankind to solve the problem. You ... as it turned it ... are the real 'genius.' Congratulations,Cwint (from PRIDUSATERA./ws -- sorry, you don't have access.) PS&gt; everyone had a 'genius' moment, you arrogant asshole. |

|                                                                                                                                                                         |                                                                                          |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2227(2/5/04 12:12 pm)Reply                                                                                      | --- <hr/> It's even in my name, 'u r z sage'                               |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 919(2/5/04 12:16 pm)Reply    | Re: --- <hr/> It's even got a German inflection.                           |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 920(2/5/04 12:19 pm)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> Okay, mis-pronunciation.You know what I'm saying.       |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2227(2/5/04 12:23 pm)Reply                                                                                      | --- <hr/> I do not have a germ infection if that's what you're getting at. |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 921(2/5/04 12:41 pm)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> Nietzcheitis?                                                |

|                                                                                                                                                                        |                                                                                                                    |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2230(2/5/04 10:30 pm)Reply                                                                                     | ---- <hr/> You are a quantam quack.                                                                  |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2232(2/6/04 10:12 am)Reply                                                                                     | --- <hr/> Odd, I spelt quantum as one might spell bantam.                                            |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 922(2/6/04 10:53 am)Reply   | Re: --- <hr/> Which came first, the chicken or the duck?                                             |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2233(2/6/04 7:43 pm)Reply                                                                                      | ---- <hr/> The duck. It's wetter. And snakier. But I could be wrong. Do you know?                    |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 925(2/7/04 9:59 am)Reply  | Re: ---- <hr/> Whichever one of them was male.                                                       |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2238(2/7/04 10:22 am)Reply                                                                                     | ---- <hr/> It's a silly myth that males come first. Some females can come just by thinking about it. |

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 928

(2/7/04 10:51 am)

Reply

Re: ----

---

It's silly but it's no myth, more likely a cliched truism.

It is also, of course, a generalisation; which makes you right, but the exceptions prove the rule.

Quote:

---

Some females can come just by thinking about it.

---

Yep, and males can do it in their sleep.

Haven't you ever raced? It's no competition from a cold start.

It was just a joke anyway.

This is a very tangental conversation.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2241

(2/7/04 10:03 pm)

Reply

Re: ----

---

Actually, the exceptions prove themselves and the 'rule' is only a generalisation.

If the world and all its willers turned out to be a joke, wouldn't you want to be the punchline?

Edited by: suergaz at: 2/7/04 10:05 pm

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 933
(2/8/04 3:05 am)
Reply

Re: ----

---

Doesn't a joke necessarily include a punch line?

All the world's a stage and each of us players. The divine comedy wouldn't be such without each and every player. I appreciate your glorifyingly exaggerated role as the jester, but that doesn't make you 'ze sage' in anything but your part as a player.

I notice the director has assigned you a new role (for reasons we can only guess at). Have you studied your character? Learned your lines? Checked with wardrobe? Are you getting pre-performance butterflies? Do you think you'll suffer stage fright?

Break a leg.

Edited by: Dave Toast at: 2/8/04 3:13 am

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2248
(2/8/04 12:10 pm)
Reply

Re: ----

---

The world is no joke, though 'the real world' has always been so. Are you a punchline dave Toast? When we play, or work, at anything, we generally become it.

What director? All such screen-play should be cut.

lucky434
Registered User
Posts: 2
(2/11/04 6:54 pm)
Reply

Re: ----

---

Poor brains with no love attached. Bummer.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2289
(2/11/04 9:00 pm)
Reply

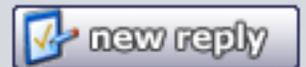

---

---

lucky, isn't your love in you? Are you attached with big fucking clips that tear you apart?

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Canadian Zoetrope  Registered UserPosts: 30(2/18/04 6:31 am) Reply  | Excepetions <hr/> Odd, how can there be exceptions if there is no rule that they are an exception to? The rule must exist, and it's value hold true for their to be exceptions, and visa versa. Perhaps a better question would be, what came first, the rule or the exception...? Edited by: Canadian Zoetrope  at: 2/18/04 6:32 am |
| suergaz Registered UserPosts: 2313(2/18/04 11:12 pm) Reply                                                                                         | Re: Excepetions <hr/> Zoe, the rule exists, and that it is why it is a generalization! There is no better question---there is always the best! Who will rule the world?!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

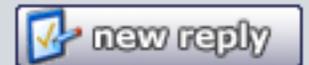

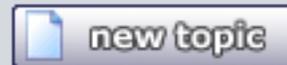

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> To be or not to be

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                          | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| BiggierRegistered UserPosts: 83(2/2/04 8:44 am)Reply | To be or not to be <hr/> Emile Cioran:"To exist is a state as little conceivable as its contrary. No, still more inconceivable." Now, here we are closing in on ultimate reality, aren't we? Ah, but given that for billions of years we did not exist and that, at some future point, we will no longer exist ever again for billions of years, is it any wonder we focus the beam on the proverbial cosmological-blink-of-an-eye 70 odd years inbetween? And, of course, it goes without saying we are going to wrack our brains trying to come up with some way or another of convincing ourselves this really isn't true at all. Why of course we existed previously....in reincarnations!! And of course we will exist subsequently...in Paradise!! Really, dear friends, those 70 odd years in the middle are of no account at all!!! Trivial pursuits, you might all them. Right. Biggie |

|                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1442(2/2/04 11:31 am)Reply | To be or not to be <hr/> So, is it true that Ben Affleck and J-Lo have really broken up?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| BiggierRegistered UserPosts: 83(2/3/04 1:54 am)Reply        | Re: To be or not to be <hr/> Alas, it is so. You see, Ben decided that, in his own Ultimate Reality, a wife should be in possession of an IQ at least as large as her ass. Instead of a pimple on it? Please ask David, however, to confirm this with his own UR. I don't have one myself you see so, admittedly, this is all just an educated guess. Biggie                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 540(2/3/04 10:05 am)Reply       | Re: To be or not to be <hr/> Reincarnations/ghosts/spirits/coincidences of astrology - are all forms of de javu. As per my Ultimate Reality theory: If all existence is a form of combinations of negative/positive or off and on units, then certain patterns of the off/on grid will produce similar patterns to what has occurred before and will occur again. A human brain has a grid pattern that is 99.99% similar to everyone else (except where damaged by drugs, starvation, injury), so on occasions a segment of the pattern will be recognized by the surrounding pattern as being similar. Memories exist because the brain has the ability to make segments of the brain hold a form of temporary balance. Short term memory is far more active electrically so there is less balance and so short term things are forgotten, unless the brain decides a pattern is significant and moves short term thought patterns into the more long-term-balance areas of the brain. People become mad because the brain becomes confused about what should be stored in long term memory and puts the wrong stuff in there. A | breakdown is the process of the brain saying 'hold on' my brain is a mess so it sends electrical impulses through the brain to clear the faulty memories. Electric shock treatment works for the same reason.

People who had significant events occur to them as children, say abuse for instance remain affected throughout life until the pattern stored in the brain is at least partially destroyed or amended. Which signifies that long term memories can be altered by other long term memories, leading to false memories in the present.

De javu is a complex recognition that a memory has already been stored and doesn't require storage again.

Boredom might be exactly the same thing. Good feelings may occur only in short term memory, and that is why we get excitement from moving fast and doing things. The more wise one becomes the more wisdom is already stored in the long term memory, so more activity remains in the short term memory where good feelings occur.

An orgasm is an explosion of activity within short term memory.

---

Although the above seems like complete lunacy, if you've read and understood my Ultimate Theory, you might see what I'm getting at.

Personally I'm starting to think I have a form of genius. Please let me know if you feel I'm delusional.

Edited by: jimhaz at: 2/3/04 10:12 am

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 541
(2/3/04 10:23 am)
Reply

Re: To be or not to be

---

This also would make love into a non-entity, as it would purely be long term memories being poured into short term memory, and where the other person displays a match with those memories then love forms.

That is why there are three forms of love.

Infatuation - the initial matching of long term ideal type memories being placed into short term memory, until one gets bored with it.

Time Based Love - via the quantities of memories of activities had together

Love for mankind/the world/animals - as more long term memories of past religious doctrines and appreciated community memes of what is good, have been placed into long term memory

It also explains why everyone has closed minds of a type, particularly religious and academic folk.

In fact it explains all human behaviour. We are what we are because of past causes. Any significant past cause is stored as a long term memory.

Changing one's opinions or changing the opinions of others - The FACTS I've stated above means that anyone can be taught anything and learn anything given the right brainwashing.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 915
(2/3/04 10:51 am)
Reply

Re: To be or not to be

---

Jim, you're delusional.

Things often get worse before they get better though.

Your unruly dog is unleashed and uninhibited, it'll calm down.

|                                                                                                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 542(2/3/04 10:56 am)Reply                                                                                      | Re: To be or not to be <hr/> Perhaps that is so, and I know the excitement of creating original thoughts leads to irrationality, but it would be better if someone pointed out where the delusion in my comments lies, otherwise there will be nothing to cause my opinion to change.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 916(2/3/04 11:01 am)Reply  | Re: To be or not to be <hr/> Fair enough.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 544(2/3/04 11:29 am)Reply                                                                                      | Re: To be or not to be <hr/> A negative post from Suergaz made me ponder like/dislike ‘Liking/disliking’ is simply the ratio of positive long term memories over the negative ones. It happens instantly because electrical impulses move at an intense speed. In a fashion, when called into action by what is happening in the short term memory centre the brain knows at least 50% of what is stored in long term memories. After all what is memory but the ability to move what is in the long term memory centres to the short term memory centres. This is the problem with concepts of ‘intelligence’ and ‘rationality’, the first is the ability of the brain to recall memories from the long term and place them into the short term and rationality is the ability of the short term centres of the brain to process information, using what is in the long term areas. The most intelligent brains can do both. Masculinity is simply a greater natural ability to process information in the short term memory area, whether it is physical or mental, while in females it is a greater level of ability to store and retrieve information from the long term centres. That is why they can blabber so much and can be less rational, but why they are good at academic studies. The nature of our activities in the past where males needed quicker reflexes for hunting/fighting as opposed to the more sedate domestic activities of |

|                                                                                    |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                    | women would lead to these differences.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 545(2/3/04 11:57 am)Reply   | Re: To be or not to be <hr/> But what is insanity anyway but a different way of thinking. What I see as truth will always be a delusion to someone else. This is why people have conflicts, eveyone sees some level of madness in others. It it also why any group forms, people see less madness in others who have had a similar upbringing or similar experiences to them - there is a closer matching of long term memories. added:It is also why a dog and a cat, although traditonal enemies, when pets in the same household, they adapt and don't fight. The same goes for any herd. Edited by: jimhaz at: 2/3/04 12:01 pm                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2174(2/3/04 12:32 pm)Reply | --- <hr/> It is refreshing to know you do not know insanity Jimhaz.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 547(2/3/04 12:57 pm)Reply   | Re: --- <hr/> It is refreshing to know you do not know insanity Jimhaz. Insanity is real. Unless through some physical cause, such as an infection in the brain or damage, it is a result of irrationality building upon irrationality. The thing the causes irrationality is negative emotions. Poor people are more often irrational because their environment forces them to be irrational. There is a stronger form of instinctual rationality though, the survival instinct, which for the most part cuts irrationality off when it gets too intense and therefore too dangerous. Do you think any dictator would have the ability to control the masses and make millions fight in wars for this irrationality if irrationality could not be forced on people. Hitler started the process by inducing a deep irrational hatred of Jews in the population. By the end of the war, when the requirement to be irrational was removed (a lot of Germans and others were shot for insurrection) and the war effort was falling apart and cities were getting bombed, then the survival instinct to fit in with the new political | environment came into play and overcame much of the irrationality.

Edited to correct a number of spelling mistakes. I wonder if I got them all :)

Edited by: jimhaz at: 2/3/04 1:15 pm

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1382

(2/3/04 1:09 pm)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Jimmy, you speak with such authority, but I don't think you are an expert on the brain. You may be mixing to different things. I think insanity is a real disease, but there are a lot of overlaps with negative emotions. It is a real puzzle. There are people who sustain incredible amounts of abuse and do not become close to insane, although they are very, very dysfunctional in various ways.

The bit about Hitler. I have this idea about consciousness, that there are layers of awakening. The big divide is sleep, or appears to be, but within sleep there are deeper levels of unconsciousness, and there is lucid dreaming, which has two layers. In one, you simply know you are dreaming, and in the next you actually decide to direct the dream.

There are also spiritual awakenings that are as profound as the sleep/wake divide, and that is why the literature is so full of references to sleeping and waking in the spiritual sense.

I think that waking life for almost all of us is really a dream. It is just a higher level of dreaming than when we are asleep. We have more ability to direct it, but for the most part we have little control over it.

I think events like Hitler's Germany and WWII are a collective dream, a nightmare. You can get pulled unwillingly into someone's nightmare. You know the stuff is true but yet the events that occurred seem almost unreal. At least it does to me. I think - can that stuff really have happened? Could people have done that and fallen for that? Whole groups of people falling more deeply unconscious for a while and having a nightmare together makes some sense to me.

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 549

(2/3/04 1:48 pm)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Jimmy, you speak with such authority

Such is the nature of surety

but I don't think you are an expert on the brain.

Not technically no, be we do know that different areas of the brain heat up due to different activities. That is enough. Also look at the nature of thought and short term memory. It is difficult to remember what you were thinking 1 hour ago unless was of some significance.

Don't resort to the pathetic argument that academics use -'but you're not qualified'

I think insanity is a real disease, but their are a lot of overlaps with negative emotions. It is a real puzzle. There are people who sustain incredible amounts of abuse and do not become close to insane, although they are very, very dysfunctional in various ways.

Agreed, but it does not negate what I've said in my posts above. Often it is the more intelligent people who crack up and go on rampages and it is often males. This might occur because quantity of stored negative memories at some point overcomes the natural, more active logical processing centre of the short term memory or thinking area.

The bit about Hitler. I have this idea about consciousness, that there are layers of awakening. The big divide is sleep, or appears to be, but within sleep there are deeper levels of unconsciousness, and there is lucid dreaming, which has two layers. In one, you simply know you are dreaming, and in the next you actually decide to direct the dream.

Agree, except from a pedantic perspective, I don't believe in layers, more of a flow from one to the other which may appear as layer, because of the speed it occurs.

There are also spiritual awakenings that are as profound as the sleep/wake divide, and that is why the literature is so full of references to sleeping and waking in the spiritual sense.

Awakenings are mini-breakups (the opposite of emotional breakdowns). It might be a flushing out of negative nemes stored in memory (in which case full enlightenemnt may be possible).

I think that waking life for almost all of us is really a dream. It is just a higher level of dreaming than when we are asleep. We have more ability to direct it, but for the most part we have little control over it.

Everything is an illusion of some sort. Dreaming is just the near shutdown of the processing areas of the brain, that is why dreams can be so imaginative and weird. The processing area is working at about 10% compared to when awake.

I think events like Hitler's Germany and WWII are a collective dream, a nightmare. You can get pulled unwillingly into someone's nightmare. You know the stuff is true but yet the events that occurred seem almost unreal. At least it does to me. I think - can that stuff really have happened? Could people have done that and fallen for that? Whole groups of people falling more deeply unconscious for a while and having a nightmare together makes some sense to me.

It isn't just Hitler and major events like that. Religions do the same, that's why we have terrorists and religious nutters. In western societies the collective dream is that material things will give you happiness and all the entertainments we have nowadays.

In a way it is a turning off of the higher areas of the processing area and just concentrating on the pleasure areas. Retrieving things from memory must create some sort of mental pain, particularly when what is stored in those memories contains a lot of 'negative' nemes.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2181

(2/3/04 1:58 pm)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Jimhaz:-

Quote:

---

Everything is an illusion of some sort.

---

What do you live for?

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 553
(2/3/04 2:04 pm)
Reply

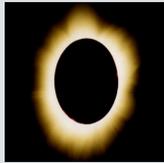

Re: ---

---

I live for the next thing, the only time I didn't was when I was emotional. Was pretty suicidal 10 years ago for about 4-5 months, but it passed.

One of the major causes was that I was totally infatuated with this gorgeous looking young bird at work who was going out with my boss.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2183
(2/3/04 2:10 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

So you admit that not everything is an illusion? What next thing? If it is really is next, we should be upon it any moment from now, so out with it.

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 555
(2/3/04 2:16 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

So you admit that not everything is an illusion?

Yes/No. Everything is an illusion in reality, as well as being real to my mind.

What next thing? If it is really is next, we should be upon it any moment from now, so out with it.

What do you mean. I just mean the next post, the next good thing on TV, the next game of cricket, the next good book, the next conversation etc.

I'm making no plans for anything, except that I want to become wiser and have less need for those attachments i don't like.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1384
(2/3/04 2:21 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

You don't think it is a strong enough boundary between sleeping and waking to qualify as a layer of consciousness?

Quote:

---

It isn't just Hitler and major events like that. Religions do the same, that's why we have terrorists and religious nutters. In western societies the collective dream is that material things will give you happiness and all the entertainments we have nowadays.

---

Absolutely. Or perhaps you could say that the religion is both the dream and the soporific. I'm thoroughly convinced that a major reason that this current young generation is having realizations light years ahead of mine is that they have been more freed from the unconsciousness-inducing effects of religion.

So the promotion of wisdom is one side of the coin, but the simple removal of barriers is another.

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 557
(2/3/04 2:25 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Yes, I agree with the points you've made there.

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 563
(2/4/04 9:58 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Humour is based upon irrationality. All funny things are irrational in some way. The brain compares what it senses to its memories to its logical or positive mind memes.

Slapstick is irrational violence, jokes are irrational structuring of logic, humorous pictures are a visual representation of something irrational.

Irrationality is a lack of balance, the combinations of all emotions result in a lack of logical balance, due to constant change.

We thrive on positive feeling emotions because they are 'funny'. Whereas negative emotions are not. Negative emotions at the core level are not. Looking at negative emotions they all relate to survival instincts, greed, anger and so on. Negative emotions are considered 'negative' due to competition within the herd – competing survival instincts.

The affect of 'Joy' is not very different to the feeling created by humour. Humour helps people to recover from illnesses by allowing them relief from negative emotions or more precisely the overwhelming desire to survive, it's a distraction.

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

- > GENIUS FORUM
- > To be or not to be

| Author                                                                                                                                                               | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 569(2/4/04 1:19 pm)Reply                                                                                      | Re: --- <hr/> An enlightened person is able to think like a rock, a human and the universe itself.                                                                                                                                        |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2197(2/4/04 1:22 pm)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> So what you are saying is that an enlightened person is able to not think, think, and not think.                                                                                                                            |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 570(2/4/04 1:33 pm)Reply                                                                                      | Re: --- <hr/> No, simply to look at things from the perspective of each. A buddha however, also requires complete emotional detachment from the influences of physical things. A sage has a major degree of non-attachment. |

|                                                                                                                                                                      |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2198(2/4/04 1:39 pm)Reply    | Re: --- <hr/> It is impossible to look at things from the perspective of a rock, or the universe.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 571(2/4/04 3:00 pm)Reply                                                                                      | Re: --- <hr/> I don't believe that is correct. You just need to look at how things affect the rock, without applying human senses. After all where does perspective come from, that which affects us. Of course the rock is the simplest of things, it is a tool to set the base for further understanding.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2203(2/4/04 3:07 pm)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> It doesn't matter what you believe. You cannot look at how things affect a rock without applying human senses. Our perspectives are our own. You may as well have said what you've said about the rock about the atom, but in either case, you'd be mistaken. Edited by: suergaz at: 2/4/04 3:08 pm                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 572(2/4/04 3:26 pm)Reply                                                                                      | Re: --- <hr/> You cannot look at how things affect a rock without applying human senses In any illusion there remains an essence of truth. That is why the truth is always before our eyes. Parts of the brain are logical processing centres, not reliant on senses. Illusions reside in memories. This is the difference and why it is possible, although it is not a perfect understanding, in which case you would have to be the rock or whatever. The rock feels the same as the cut-off fingernails, you save in jar beside your bed. Are they still you? |

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2204(2/4/04 3:35 pm)Reply                                                                                                | Re: --- <hr/> The parts of the brain that you call "logical processing centres not reliant on senses" are part of the human senses. Your last question is bizarre. The answer is no. |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2209(2/4/04 11:34 pm)Reply                                                                                                                                                                               | ---- <hr/> You'd best keep the fact that I know now you keep fingernails beside your bed in your long term mammaries as you do. Or I'll bring it up on every occasion I can.                       |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 579(2/5/04 6:16 am)Reply                                                                                                                                                                                  | Re: ---- <hr/> I don't, but I keep all my spent sperm in a few 44 gallon drums in the gargage :)                                                                                                   |
| Canadian Zoetrope Registered UserPosts: 26(2/9/04 3:36 pm)Reply  | Nature of Reality. <hr/> The nature of reality is so: Sipping a bowl of green tea, I stopped the war.                                                                                       |

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

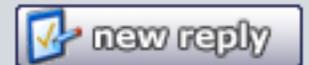

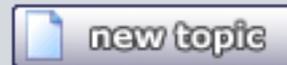

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Todays Genius Forum transcript

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 368(10/28/03 11:43 am)Reply  | Todays Genius Forum transcript <hr/> The Dan Springer Show - Philosophy Crowd: Dan-ny! Dan-ny! Dan-ny! Dan: Today's guests are here because they can't agree on fundamental philosophical principles. I'd like to welcome Del to the show. [Del enters from backstage.] Dan: Hello, Del. Del: Hi, Dan. Dan: [reading from card] So, Del, you're here to tell your girlfriend something. What is it? Del: Well, Dan, my girlfriend Birdy and I have been going out for three years now. We did everything together. We were really inseparable. But then she discovered post-Marxist political and literary theory, and it's been nothing but fighting ever since. Dan: Why is that? Del: You see, Dan, I'm a traditional Cartesian rationalist. I believe that the individual self, the "I" or ego is the foundation of all metaphysics. She, on the other hand, believes that the contemporary self is a socially constructed, multi-faceted subjectivity reflecting the political and |

economic realities of late capitalist consumerist discourse.

Crowd: Oooooohhhh!

Del: I know! I know! Is that infantile, or what?

Dan: So what do you want to tell her today?

Del: I want to tell her that unless she ditches the post-modernism, we're through. I just can't go on having a relationship with a woman who doesn't believe I exist.

Dan: Well, you're going to get your chance. Here's Birdy!

[Birdy storms onstage and charges up to Del.]

Birdy: Patriarchal colonizer!

[She slaps him viciously. Del leaps up, but the security guys pull them apart before things can go any further.]

Birdy: Don't listen to him! Logic is a male hysteria! Rationality equals oppression and the silencing of marginalized voices!

Del: The classical methodology of rational dialectic is our only road to truth! Don't try to deny it!

Birdy: You and your dialectic! That's how it's been through our whole relationship, Dan. Mindless repetition of the post-Enlightenment meta-narrative. "You have to start with radical doubt, Birdy." "Post-structuralism is just classical skeptical thought re-cast in the language of semiotics, Birdy."

Crowd: Booo! Booo!

Dan: Well, Birdy, come on. Don't you agree that the roots of contemporary neo-Leftism simply have to be sought in Enlightenment political philosophy?

Birdy: History is the discourse of powerful centrally located voices marginalizing and de-scribing the sub-altern!

Del: See what I have to put up with? Do you know what it's like living with someone who sees sex as a metaphoric demonstration of the anti-feminist violence implicit in the discourse of the dominant power structure? It's terrible. She just lies there and thinks of Andrea Dworkin.

That's why we never do it any more.

Crowd: Wooooo!

Birdy: You liar! Why don't you tell them how you haven't been able to get it up for the past three months because you couldn't decide if your penis truly had essential Being, or was simply a manifestation of Mind?

Del: Wait a minute! Wait a minute!

Birdy: It's true!

Dan: Well, I don't think we're going to solve this one right away. Our next guests are Paul and Marsha. And Marsha has a little confession to make!

[Paul and Marsha come onstage. Del and Birdy continue bickering in the background.]

Dan: Marsha, you are ... [reads cards] ... an existentialist, is that right?

Marsha: That's right, Dan. And Paul is, too.

Dan: And what did you want to tell Paul today?

Marsha: Dan, today I want to tell him ...

Dan: Talk to Paul. Talk to him. [Crowd hushes.]

Marsha: Paul ... I've loved you for a long time ...

Paul: I love you, too, Marsha.

Marsha: Paul, you know I agree with you that existence precedes essence, but ... well, I just want to tell you I've been reading Nietzsche lately, and I don't think I can agree with your egalitarian politics any more.

Crowd: Wooooo! Woooooo!

Paul: [shocked and disbelieving] Marsha, this is crazy. You know that Sartre clarified all this way back in the 40s.

Marsha: But he didn't take into account Nietzsche's radical critique of democratic morality, Paul. I'm sorry. I can't ignore the contradiction any longer!

Paul: You got these ideas from Jimhaz, didn't you? Didn't you?

Marsha: Don't you bring up Jimhaz! I only turned to him when I saw you were seeing that dominatrix! I needed a real man! An Uber-man!

Paul: [sobbing] I couldn't help it. It was my burden of freedom. It was too much!

Dan: We've got someone here who might have something to add. Bring out ... Jimhaz!

[Jimhaz enters. He walks up to Paul and sticks a finger in his face.]

Jimhaz: Paul, you're a classic post-Christian intellectual. Weak to the core!

Paul: [through tears] You can kiss my Marxist ass, Reactionary Boy!

Jimhaz: Herd animal!

Paul: Lackey!

[Paul throws a chair at Jimhaz; they lock horns and wrestle. The crowd goes wild. After a long struggle, the security guys pry them apart.]

Dan: Okay, okay. It's time for questions from the audience. Go ahead, sir.

Audience member: Okay, this is for Marsha. Marsha, I just wanna know how you can call yourself an existentialist, and still agree with Nietzsche's doctrine of the Ubermensch. Doesn't that imply a belief in intrinsic essences that is in direct contradiction with with the fundamental principles of existentialism?

Marsha: No! No! It doesn't. We can be equal in potential, without being equal in eventual personal quality. It's a question of Becoming, not Being.

Audience member: That's just disguised essentialism! You're no existentialist!

Marsha: I am so!

Audience member: You're no existentialist!

Marsha: I am so an existentialist, bitch!

[Birdy stands and interjects.]

Birdy: What does it [bleep] matter? Existentialism is just a cover for late capitalist anti-feminism! Look at how Sartre treated Simone de Beauvoir!

[Women in the crowd cheer and stomp.]

Marsha: [Bleep] you! Fat-ass Foucaultian ho!

Birdy: You only wish you were smart enough to understand Foucault, bitch!

Marsha: You the bitch!

Birdy: No, you the bitch!

Marsha: Whatever! Whatever!

Dan: We'll be right back with a final thought! Stay with us!

[Commercial break for debt-consolidation loans, ITT Technical Institute, and Psychic Alliance Hotline.]

Dan: Hi! Welcome back. I just want to thank all our guests for being here, and say that I hope you're able to work through your differences and find happiness, if indeed happiness can be extracted from the dismal miasma of warring primal hormonal impulses we call human relationships. [Turns to the camera] Well, we all think philosophy is just fun and games. Semiotics, deconstruction, Lacanian post-Freudian psychoanalysis, it all seems like good, clean fun. But when the heart gets involved, all our painfully acquired metaphysical insights go right out the window, and we're reduced to battling it out like rutting chimpanzees. It's not pretty. If you're in a relationship, and differences over the fundamental principles of your respective subjectivities are making things difficult, maybe it's time to move on. Find someone new, someone who will accept you and the way your laughably limited human intelligence chooses to codify and rationalize the chaos of existence. After all, in the absence of a clear, unquestionable revelation from God, that's all we're all doing anyway. So remember: take care of yourselves -- and each other.

Announcer: Be sure to tune in next time, when KKK strippers battle it out with transvestite omnisexual porn stars! Tomorrow on Springer!

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 180
(10/28/03 12:22 pm)
Reply

Re: Todays Genius Forum transcript

---

Dan! Dan Rowden!

Mr. Rowden?

I was in love with Marsha. With Anna. With cassiopeiae. What's wrong with that?

But I can assure you that my affections for jimhaz have gone, gone! Down the drain with that feller.

Reason here, no love anymore!

Suicidal,
Paul

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 671
(10/28/03 12:47 pm)
Reply

Re: Todays Genius Forum transcript

---

Come on now Jimmy, fess up.

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 361
(10/28/03 2:41 pm)
Reply

Re: Todays Genius Forum transcript

---

Where am I?

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 369
(10/28/03 6:22 pm)
Reply

Re: Todays Genius Forum transcript

---

Where am I?

Like me. Like us all. You are nowhere but within.

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 370
(10/28/03 6:46 pm)
Reply

Re: Todays Genius Forum transcript

---

Dave said fezz up..meaning i guess that it wasn't my own wrk.....well I thought that was so obvious that it didn't rate a mention. It was only worth a few search and replaces to change the names..regardless of whether the names chosen fitted.

That wasn't the point. The point was that we are failing to make decent conversation on this forum.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 784
(10/28/03 7:28 pm)
Reply

Re: Todays Genius Forum transcript

---

Ha!
Nice work jimhaz.

Quote:

---

jimhaz

That wasn't the point. The point was that we are failing to make decent conversation on this forum.

---

"decent conversation"!

What is that?

Is it a pleasant and painless conversation where everyone eventually agrees with each other?

As I said before all the clever (not Genius) forum members beat themselves unconscious a few months ago. They are still nursing their wounds.

Clever heavy weights (not Genius) can inflict more damage on each other because they only have one self to defend or attack with.

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 375

(10/28/03 8:03 pm)

Reply

Re: Todays Genius Forum transcript

---

I'm here for the entertainment. I immensely enjoy the concept of saying potentially intelligent things using whatever comes to my mind at that particular moment - although feedback would suggest that I'm playing imaginary games with myself in terms of it's level of intelligence!.

You know, I'm 42 and I've never seriously thought about 'truth' for its own sake. So I wonder have I made a turn to truth or am I just playing games because entertainment is what I value most.

Pity I have no choice. The unknowingness of the unknowable kinda grabs you.

Whatever quirk of nature turned us into beasts that enjoy riddlers sure was a cool twist of the genes.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 679

(10/28/03 11:42 pm)

Reply

Re: Todays Genius Forum transcript

---

Is enlightentertainment like infotainment, or an infomercial?

You're plenty intelligent Jimbo, though you may 'water it down' when you post sometimes ;-)

And like it or not, said action is by your volition. That's got to be somewhere in the 12 steps.

Quote:

---

That wasn't the point. The point was that we are failing to make decent conversation on this forum.

---

Agreed in the large part.

I thought you were averse to conversation.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 975
(10/29/03 1:19 am)
Reply

Re: Todays Genius Forum transcript

---

Well, that was damn funny, Jim. And I thought this last was something you might say:

Find someone new, someone who will accept you and the way your laughably limited human intelligence chooses to codify and rationalize the chaos of existence. After all, in the absence of a clear, unquestionable revelation from God, that's all we're all doing anyway.

Sheesh, no wonder sensible men have tried to prevent women learning to read!

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1234
(10/29/03 2:37 am)
Reply

:eR

---

Jim wrote,

Quote:

---

You know, I'm 42 and I've never seriously thought about 'truth' for its own sake.

---

/bonk

Do you see the light?

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 187
(10/29/03 2:59 am)
Reply

Re: :eR

---

Quote:

---

Do you see the light?

---

Maybe you will, WolfsonJakkass,
if I kick you in the ol' groin?

|                                                                              |                                                                                        |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1236(10/29/03 7:19 am)Reply | Re: :eR<hr/> I have balls of stainless steel. You may kick until it makes you cry. |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31r
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> True Christians do not commit sin

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                           | Comment                                                                                                                                                                  |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1058(4/6/04 7:10 am)Reply                                                                                    |  True Christians do not commit sin <hr/> True Christians do not commit sinAll sinners are of the devil.                                               |
| RairunRegistered UserPosts: 246(4/6/04 8:57 am)Reply                                                                                  |  ... <hr/> I concur, except for the second part. Not only that, but true christians never stop themselves from committing a sin because it's a sin. |
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 1687(4/6/04 12:38 pm)Reply  |  Re: ... <hr/> And what, Del, would constitute a "sin" that said Christians would not committ? i.e. what is "sin"? Dan Rowden                       |

|                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 117(4/6/04 12:42 pm)Reply | ☐ Re: ... <hr/> I go to a Christian church...listen to satanic music, but don't worship any one man. Am I "of" the devil? Should I think Jesus is God? Am I condemned to this hell called life?                                                                                                                                           |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 530(4/6/04 12:55 pm)Reply         | ☐ ----- <hr/> DEL, you're not a Christian.I hope not, anyway.Neither istakes a deep breathXXX STATIC X.Playing with words, is thatwhat's the Internet is about? www.earlham.edu/~peters/philinks.htm (Just trying to compensate.) |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1059(4/6/04 5:10 pm)Reply          | ☐ What is sin? <hr/> Sin is the transgression of the law.Christians do not sin.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 118(4/7/04 5:52 am)Reply  | ☐ Re: What is sin? <hr/> Here are the words I play with you nut... LOL ... ROFLAMO ... STFU ... ICP ... URAGUAY? no not the country ... Have we been playing with "SIN" here? were not mormon BTW                                                                                                                                         |

|                                                                                                                                                                |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 1689(4/7/04 11:04 am)Reply  | ☐ Re: What is sin? <hr/> But Del, what law? Or, perhaps more to the point, whose interpretation of the law? Dan Rowden                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 119(4/7/04 11:36 am)Reply                                                                         | ☐ Re: What is sin? <hr/> Though shalt not sin against <math>E=mc^2</math> or you will go straight to hell, do not pass Go do not collect a soul. Thank you come again.                                                                                                                                                                         |
| silentsalRegistered UserPosts: 96(4/7/04 12:05 pm)Reply                                                                             | ☐ Re: What is sin? <hr/> is it not like becoming one with karma; we become one with the law? edit: karma should read cause/effect Edited by: silentsal at: 4/7/04 12:16 pm                                                                                                                                                |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1061(4/7/04 1:08 pm)Reply                                                                                  | ☐ True Christians do not sin, ever <hr/> Quote: <hr/> drowdenBut Del, what law? Or, perhaps more to the point, whose interpretation of the law? <hr/> The law of God as interpreted by his messengers. Anyone who calls himself or herself a Christian and still sins is a false witness and shall be cursed. |

bikkie

Registered User

Posts: 1

(4/7/04 4:28 pm)

Reply

 Re: True Christians do not commit sin

---

Hmm ,organised religion has never made sence to me .After reading the bible it doesnt seem that straight forward as the way most christians preach it, there are so many different ways the bible can be interpereted.

I personaly dont believe in the Devil.I think Humans create their own problems.I look at the devil or Satan as reflected personification of the negative Human mind pattern that has manifested into a symbolic physical form.I dont think organised religion is about enlightenment or finding peace of mind .Its about power and controll. just my opinion.

Jones Kelly

Posts: 37

(4/7/04 4:53 pm)

Reply

 Re: True Christians do not commit sin

---

Bikkie,

There are many ways for ancient spiritual texts - such as the Bhagavad-Gita, Koran, Bible, Buddhist scriptures, etc. - to be interpreted, but there is only one truthful, correct way. Unfortunately, that's not the way most religious adherents interpret/ed them.

A Christian dad might say to his child, "I am your Father, i love you and you will never leave my heart." It is a threat, motivated by ego, to put the fear of God-parent into the child. Such a parent may use the God of Exodus 20 (Ten Commandments) to indicate his own love, for instance:

#3 Thou shalt have no other gods before me.

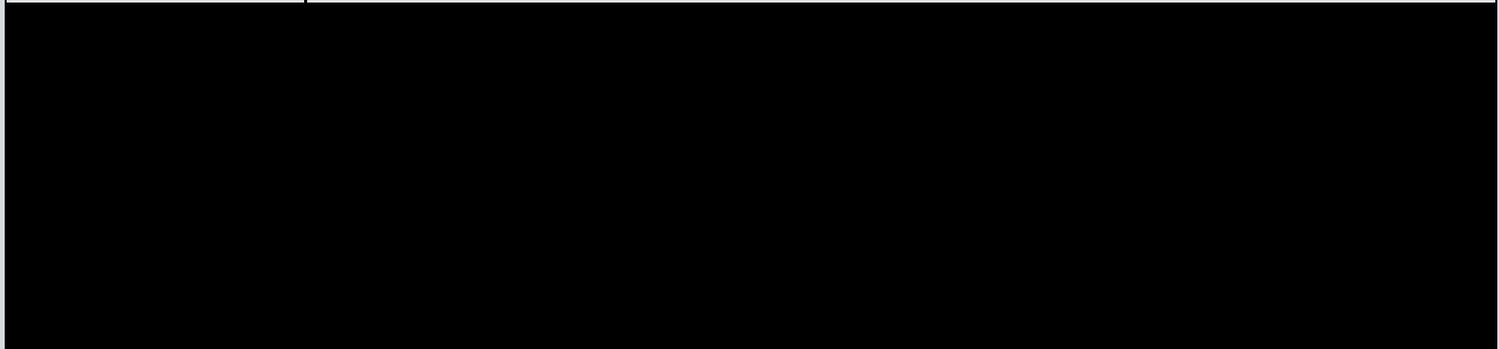

#12 Honour thy father and thy mother: that thy days may be long upon the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee.

Like you mentioned: power and control.

However, ancient scriptures do have a use for people who are seriously interested in enlightenment. At first there might be some use in [God/Devil/ Heaven/Hell] symbols to stimulate one to think about what the truth might be, creating doubts and motivation.

What is your own situation in regards to enlightenment and finding peace of mind?

|                                                                                                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1062(4/7/04 5:02 pm)Reply                                                                                       |  Re: True Christians do not commit sin <hr/> No sinner knows the truth.No sinner understands the word of God.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2606(4/8/04 6:22 am)Reply   |  Re: True Christians do not commit sin <hr/> There is now no such thing as sin. Sin was invented by men who thought to control themselves and eachother by giving a name to their habit of contradicting themselves out of weakness. There is a kind of contradiction of oneself out of strength however: which I hesitate, no leap to name:--the superhuman! All you Godomites! Cower! Curl! Corrupt yourselves with your little transgressions and your enormous misunderstandings! I am that great laughter you would like to see suffer the commonest drudgeries! Well, I have never wanted to disappoint, but I cannot! |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 630(4/8/04 11:32 am)Reply  |  Re: True Christians do not commit sin <hr/> True Christians do not commit sinAll sinners are of the devil. \ Truely sane folk do not make such statements.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1063(4/8/04 3:51 pm)Reply                                                                                       |  Re: True Christians do not commit sin <hr/> True Christians do keep the law of God.All sinners are not of God.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 121
(4/9/04 8:26 am)
Reply

 Re: True Christians do not commit sin

---

Your word is perfect and the only thing to which the word gives form is perfect, and abundance is the only law there is.

Good and evil could be robbing from the rich to give to the poor. Who does Good or God punish then? Himself for being evil to the poor and allowing them to suffer from hunger?

Religion is an attitude. Christianity has sunk to a new low, or it seems that way with all the pretending people of the word that I have met. It's sad to see churches fall apart because of arrogant pastors. That happened to the one I am going to. Christianity is catching up to the times. I hope the teachings of Jesus don't fall away with the rest of us.

Barium Boy
Posts: 36
(4/14/04 9:11 am)
Reply

 Re: True Christians do not commit sin

---

"I personally don't believe in the Devil. I think humans create their own problems. I look at the devil or Satan as reflected personification of the negative human mind pattern that has manifested into a symbolic physical form. I don't think organized religion is about enlightenment or finding peace of mind. It's about power and control. Just my opinion."

I agree with you to a large extent on this. Too often do I hear about how the devil is out to "deceive and destroy" people. When someone commits a "sin", the devil is usually pointed at. But what about the individual? Glad you mentioned this.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 1074
(4/15/04 4:04 pm)
Reply

 Re: True Christians do not commit sin

---

Note the unassailable powers of the fanatic and the sceptic.

rushdl

Registered User

Posts: 41

(4/17/04 9:56 am)

Reply

 Re: True Christians do not commit sin

---

You must be another religion because no christian, no man, is without sin in Christianity. None among us can boast this title. from what I know of people and their minds, it is 100% proven. But that is God law, not man law. I break a few laws every day, I sin every day, either in thought or practice. I only remember to pray about once a week. Whaaa. Neat topic,

Dave

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

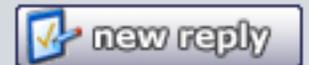

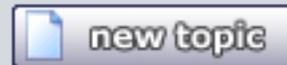

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> True Christians do not commit sin

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                           | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1078(4/17/04 8:08 pm)Reply   |  Re: True Christians do not commit sin <hr/> Quote: <hr/> rushdlI break a few laws every day, I sin every day, either in thought or practice. I only remember to pray about once a week. <hr/> Do you think you are a Christian? |
| rushdl Registered UserPosts: 42(4/20/04 5:22 am)Reply |  Re: True Christians do not commit sin <hr/> Hi, DEL, yes I'm a Christian. It's a culture and thats what I was taught in Sunday School. Even the Preacher at the podium is a sinner.                                                                       |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1082(4/20/04 7:45 am)Reply   |  Re: True Christians do not commit sin <hr/> Does the power of God enable the sinner to cease from sin?                                                                                                                                                    |

the meme of barnaby

Registered User

Posts: 14

(4/21/04 6:42 pm)

Reply

 sin sin

---

There's no absolute wrong- sin, as suergaz and common belief in written literature have it, is a human invention, just as religion itself.

Yet, for those that cannot conceive life without the the helping hand of righteousness- "God" - sin exists and is an never-ending temptation.

A true Christian would not presuppose that he or she is perfect. They would not take the bible literally but see that the moral code it defines is an attempt to promote moral living as defined by an all-powerful being, and use it as a guide to "good" behaviour.

As ridiculous as this seems to the non-christian (basing acts and ideas on a clearly subjective, subconscious invention of mankind) we are forced to turn to rational decisions or other means to solve our inherent metaphysical anxiety and the ethical questions of mankind.

barnaby

DEL

Registered User

Posts: 1091

(4/27/04 5:57 am)

Reply

 rational decisions

---

Quote:

---

the meme of barnaby
we are forced to turn to rational decisions or other means to solve our inherent metaphysical anxiety and the ethical questions of mankind.

---

Do you think rational decisions are a superior form of human organisation compared to belief in God?

ZERRINO
Registered User
Posts: 10
(4/28/04 12:15 am)
Reply

 Re: True Christians do not commit sin

---

THIS IS A REPLY TO :

: True Christians do not commit sin :

THERE IS NO DEFINITION FOR SIN

Edited by: ZERRINO at: 4/30/04 7:44 am

Overlord
Registered User
Posts: 1
(4/28/04 9:09 am)
Reply

 True Christians do not commit sin

---

"for all have sinned and fall short of the glory of God"

Romans 3:23

Interesting sort of christians I find here.

" For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but wanting to have their ears tickled, they will accumulate for themselves teachers in accordance to their own desires, 4 and will turn away their ears from the truth and will turn aside to myths"

2 Timothy 4:3-4

I suppose the bible has no place in your christianity.

No doubt you elevate yourselves to that lofty status by dint of sheer force of will.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 1093
(4/29/04 8:48 am)
Reply

 Re: True Christians do not commit sin

---

How do you mean?

There aren't many Christians, in the commonly understood sense, around here BTW.

ZERRINO

Registered User

Posts: 11

(4/30/04 12:39 am)

Reply

 Re: True Christians do not commit sin

---

THIS IS A REPLY TO :

: True Christians do not commit sin :

THERE IS NO DEFINITION FOR SIN OUT OF RELIGION.
CHRISTIANITY WILL NOT WORK WITHOUT SIN.

NO SIN NO FORGIVENESS.

FORGIVENESS IS ESSENTIAL FOR TRUE CHRISTIANS.

THAT IS WHY

ONLY TRUE CHRISTIANS DO COMMIT SIN.

NOT THAT NON-CHRISTIANS DO NOT COMMIT SIN.
FOR THEM THERE IS NO SUCH THING.
THEY CAN NOT COMMIT SIN.

THAT IS WHY

ONLY TRUE NON-CHRISTIANS CAN NOT COMMIT SIN.

Edited by: ZERRINO at: 4/30/04 1:13 am

rushdl

Registered User

Posts: 42

(4/30/04 7:39 am)

Reply

 Re: True Christians do not commit sin

---

Does the power of God enable the sinner to cease from sin?

My Hindu buddy asks me "Can God do anything"? I said yes so then he asks "Can he create a rock that is TOO large for his own self to move"? I said "Hmmm, No". So then he replies "he cannot do everything, nor anything, can he"?

So without the trickery involved, God does enable the Sinner to stop completely. But his will is never forced...

Mr Jive Bo Jingles
Registered User
Posts: 1
(5/1/04 4:31 pm)
Reply

☐ Hmm

---

DEL says:

Quote:

---

True Christians do not commit sin
All sinners are of the devil.

---

The Bible says:

Quote:

---

If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us.
If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.
If we say that we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us.
(1 John 1:8-10)

---

The Apostle John admitted to sinning, DEL. Was he a Christian?

the meme of barnaby
Registered User
Posts: 18
(5/2/04 10:44 pm)
Reply

☐ Re: rational decisions

---

Quote:

---

the meme of barnaby
we are forced to turn to rational decisions or other means to solve our inherent metaphysical anxiety and the ethical questions of mankind.

---

Do you think rational decisions are a superior form of human organisation compared to belief in God?

That's a good question! Personally- no i don't think "rational" decisions are any more correct than following religious belief, although I would say the majority of Western society would think otherwise. In terms of human organisation, it's hard to tell...how do you judge a civilisation to be successful? Longevity? Wealth? Lack of suffering? At any rate, there have been few instances in history where any civilisation has been completely dominated by religious or atheist though. Even the Roman Empire, which last thousands of years and forced its citizens to bow down to the Jupiter and in its later years the demi-god emperors were a mix of races with varying degrees of belief.

In terms of the future, I like to think that intellect will replace religion, but that's a hard call to make in terms of practical circumstances. Many modern neuroscientists and mental health workers are looking into religion as a human construct designed to facilitate living by bypassing that intrinsic human curiosity that otherwise enables an incredible environmental adaptation.

What do you think, and have your thoughts changed regarding your initial post, given the large number of responses?

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 1093
(5/3/04 3:46 am)
Reply

 John the sinner

---

Quote:

---

Mr Jive Bo Jingles
The Apostle John admitted to sinning, DEL. Was he a Christian?

---

So you think John lived in sin upto the day of his death because he was unable to stop?
And then you think John went to heaven?

Mr Jive Bo Jingles

Posts: 2

(5/3/04 7:14 am)

Reply

Re: John the sinner

---

Quote:

---

So you think John lived in sin upto the day of his death because he was unable to stop?

And then you think John went to heaven?

---

I think that John committed sins his whole life, but that he confessed them to God and asked for forgiveness (which would make him a Christian).

I do not think that he ever claimed "I have no sin" (to say so would mean that he deceived himself, by his own words as quoted above).

the meme of barnaby

Registered User

Posts: 21

(5/3/04 9:32 pm)

Reply

Re: John the sinner

---

DEL says:

So you think John lived in sin upto the day of his death because he was unable to stop?

And then you think John went to heaven?

YES.

DEL

Registered User

Posts: 1094

(5/4/04 5:54 am)

Reply

Re: John the sinner

---

Quote:

---

the meme of barnaby

YES.

---

So if you are a sinning Christian you can still be saved?

|                                                                                                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| rushdl  Registered UserPosts: 44(5/4/04 9:05 am)Reply    |  Re: John the sinner <hr/> So you think John lived in sin upto the day. Play on that phrase, "Lived in Sin". I take that to mean a lifestyle built around a few major sins. Like a Hooker or, an assassin or, moving in with your girlfriend! And a "Sinning Christian" is redundant. |
| the meme of barnaby Registered UserPosts: 22(5/4/04 5:11 pm)Reply                                                                        |  sinning christians <hr/> if you are a sinning christian you can still be saved.                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| DEL Registered UserPosts: 1097(5/5/04 4:28 pm)Reply                                                                                      |  sinning christians <hr/> Quote: <hr/> rushdlAnd a "Sinning Christian" is redundant. <hr/> What do you mean?                                                                                                                                                             |
| rushdl  Registered UserPosts: 46(5/6/04 6:17 am)Reply |  Re: sinning christians <hr/> All Christians are sinners, so either description is sufficient to describe one. The opposite of Oxymoron.                                                                                                                                                  |

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

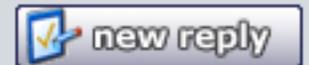

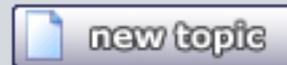

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> True Christians do not commit sin

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                              | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1098(5/6/04 6:41 am)Reply       |  Re: sinning christians <hr/> Some believe the power of Christ can deliver from sin.Others believe the love of Jesus means your sins will be overlooked.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| DrMetallicaRegistered UserPosts: 1(5/6/04 10:37 am)Reply |  Re: True Christians do not commit sin <hr/> How can true Christians not sin when we are all sinners? It says this in the Bible, and the only person in this world who did not sin was Jesus himself. Granted, the Bible, what, around 1900 years old? And the Bible is the Communist Manifesto of the Christian religion, and would they ever lie in their own pamphlet? Edited by: DrMetallica at: 5/8/04 1:21 am |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1099(5/7/04 8:56 am)Reply       |  Re: True Christians do not commit sin <hr/> Note how people get locked into the past tense with this subject. They always say everybody has sinned but are amazingly silent about future sins.It's a regular pattern that few are able to see.I smile.                                                                                                                                                                        |

|                                                                                                                                                                             |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Jones Kelly Posts: 54 (5/7/04 10:07 am) Reply                                                                                                         | ☐ Re: True Christians do not commit sin <hr/> Del, Note how people get locked into the past tense with this subject. They always say everybody has sinned but are amazingly silent about future sins. It's a regular pattern that few are able to see. I smile. How can you be sure it is a regular pattern? |
| HansReinhardt Registered User Posts: 4 (5/7/04 11:27 am) Reply  | ☐ Re: True Christians do not commit sin <hr/> Only Christians sin.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
| the meme of barnaby Registered User Posts: 25 (5/7/04 12:20 pm) Reply                                                                            | ☐ Re: True Christians do not commit sin <hr/> couldn't have said it better hans.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| ZERRINO Registered User Posts: 15 (5/8/04 4:32 am) Reply                                                                                         | ☐ Re: True Christians do not commit sin <hr/> THIS IS A REPLY TO : : Only Christians sin : AS I HAVE SAID BEFORE : ONLY TRUE CHRISTIANS DO COMMIT SIN : WE SHOULD COLLECT THESE STATEMENTS HERE INCLUDING STATEMENTS LIKE THIS : couldn't have said it better hans :                                          |

HansReinhardt
Registered User
Posts: 9
(5/8/04 4:52 am)
Reply

 Re: True Christians do not commit sin

---

"Sin" is a concept that intrinsic to the Judeo-Christian worldview, but fairly meaningless outside of it. Thus, only an adherent to the JC worldview can "sin".

And what does this mean?:

Quote:

---

WE SHOULD COLLECT THESE STATEMENTS HERE INCLUDING STATEMENTS LIKE THIS

---

Does this mean we're on your "list"? I'll watch for the torches and pitchforks to emerge from the forest.

Edited by: HansReinhardt at: 5/8/04 4:57 am

rushdl
Registered User
Posts: 48
(5/8/04 6:01 am)
Reply

 Re: True Christians do not commit sin

---

I didnt do it DEL. I said I sin every day..... I feel proud to have moved beyond your observation.

ZERRINO
Registered User
Posts: 16
(5/8/04 6:45 am)
Reply

 Re: True Christians do not commit sin

---

: THIS IS A REPLY TO :

: And what does this mean? :

... WE SHOULD COLLECT THESE STATEMENTS ...

THIS MEANS

I THINK THERE ARE NOT MANY PEOPLE AROUND WHO THINK

: Only Christians sin :

OR SAY

: couldn't have said it better hans :

THAT IS WHY I WOULD LIKE TO COUNT THEM TO FIND OUT WHETHER SIMPLY LOGICAL FACTS REALLY DON'T WORK OR IS WHAT I THINK SIMPLY NOT CORRECT AND THERE ARE MORE THAN ONLY A FEW OUT THERE WHO WILL AGREE THAT

THERE IS NO DEFINITION FOR SIN OUT OF RELIGION. CHRISTIANITY WILL NOT WORK WITHOUT SIN. NO SIN NO FORGIVENESS. ONLY TRUE NONCHRISTIANS DON'T SIN.

HansReinhardt
Registered User
Posts: 11
(5/8/04 7:35 am)
Reply

☐ Re: True Christians do not commit sin

---

Hmmm. If you say so.

PS. I think your "Caps Lock" key is stuck.

Edited by: HansReinhardt at: 5/8/04 8:35 am

rushdl ☐
Registered User
Posts: 49
(5/8/04 11:39 am)
Reply

☐ Re: True Christians do not commit sin

---

I am afraid, neither we, nor our favorite pastor, rabbi, priest, imam, mystic, can actually answer this, nor show us any "Proof". We are all on faith, so the collection of facts might not be understood by anyone until death. Many will claim to the contrary, and these are the obvious fakes.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 1102
(5/8/04 4:53 pm)
Reply

☐ Re: True Christians do not commit sin

---

Quote:

---

Jones Kelly

How can you be sure it is a regular pattern?

---

Because Christians have to;

1. believe they will be saved while still sinning or

2. believe they will be saved because they have become sinnless through faith in the power of Christ.

If you want to maintain a large congregation and strong financial support you must promote version 1.

the meme of barnaby
Registered User
Posts: 26
(5/8/04 5:28 pm)
Reply

 read any john irving lately?

---

Sorry ZERRINO, i tend to skip over the owen meany wannabes

Jones Kelly
Posts: 60
(5/8/04 6:02 pm)
Reply

 Re: True Christians do not commit sin

---

Quote:

---

K: How can you be sure it is a regular pattern?

D: Because Christians have to;

1. believe they will be saved while still sinning or
2. believe they will be saved because they have become sinnless through faith in the power of Christ.

If you want to maintain a large congregation and strong financial support you must promote version 1.

---

In other words, you are experiencing agreement between your experience of time passing, and what other people tell you about their experience of time passing. On that basis, you have created sin as the distinction between a finite present and a possible future.

This is attachment to idealism. Experience of the ideal and the actuality are no different in the enlightened person. Free will and desire are delusional, but can be useful tools when used knowingly, to push a person to reason correctly (without delusion).

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 1105
(5/10/04 5:10 pm)
Reply

 Re: True Christians do not commit sin

---

Quote:

---

Jones Kelly

. . . . . Free will and desire are delusional, but can be useful tools when used knowingly, to push a person to reason correctly (without delusion).

---

Perhaps nobody can build a multi-million dollar multi-national organisation by pushing people to reason correctly.

LolaSuicide
Registered User
Posts: 7
(6/3/04 2:38 am)
Reply

 Re: True Christians do not commit sin

---

Quote:

---

Hmm ,organised religion has never made sence to me .After reading the bible it doesnt seem that straight forward as the way most christians preach it,there are so many different ways the bible can be interpereted.

---

and tehre are so many versions!

and i think i find it ridiculous how churches have wars. i am unfortunate enough to live on the bible belt (TN) churches are clustered about all over the place...and they battle. "we're better than you!" Isn't that a sin? Something about it anyway? I thought, they supposedly are there to serve the same purpose. to praise their lord.. and yet, they are too busy trying to convert people adn get more members in their church.

I am NOT a big fan of this religion. No offense, although I've been offended many times by people OF this religion.

Edited by: LolaSuicide at: 6/3/04 2:43 am

LolaSuicide
Registered User
Posts: 8
(6/3/04 2:41 am)
Reply

 Re: True Christians do not commit sin

---

Quote:

---

: ONLY TRUE CHRISTIANS DO COMMIT SIN :

---

Then i am led to beleive there are no TRUE Christians, by their own standards and definitions of Sin.

Am I not the only one who thinks the Christians have trapped themselves? To where they all lose in the end?

PS: nothing here said to be offensive. Never is. Or atleast not what comes from my mouth. (I know how people get riled up about this subject)

LolaSuicide
Registered User
Posts: 9
(6/3/04 2:44 am)
Reply

 Re: True Christians do not commit sin

---

Am i allowed to post a site for further information?

read with an open mind...there's nothing worse than narrow mindedness:
www.mythofjesus.org.uk/

i have more if anyone would like me to post. Quite interesting for reading in your free time.

ohcello
Registered User
Posts: 1
(6/3/04 1:50 pm)
Reply

 Christians and Sin...what is the confusion??

---

All human beings sin. The only difference between Christians and non-Christians is:

---Christians are supposed to stop sinning habitually, meaning they are supposed to discard from their lives, all PLANNED activities, behaviors, and thoughts that are sinful or will lead them to sin.

For example, Catholics believe that birth control is sinful, so they no longer plan on preventing birth using condoms, etc..

***However, Christians still sin like everyone else, because humans have a sinful nature, and can never fully overcome this. So Christians will still commit sins like telling a fib, or using the Lord's name in vein in a moment of anger, etc. These sins are not habitual or planned, and usually less frequent and less severe in nature than habitual, willful sin.

Non-believers may commit planned sin and sins in the heat of the moment as well.

***

Also, Christians are supposed to confess their sin before God and TRY THEIR HARDEST with the help of God, not to commit sin again.

Yes, this is futile in theory, but the goal is to sin less and less as your life goes on, aiming for perfection while never quite getting there.

Of course, some people (Mother Theresa comes to mind) get pretty close =)

Jesus told us to 'Go forth and sin no more', he didn't say, 'you will never sin again because of your faith', etc.

Thanks for listening

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

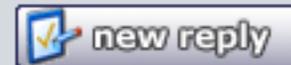

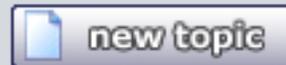

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> True Christians do not commit sin

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                   | Comment                                                                                                                                                                           |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| LolaSuicideRegistered UserPosts: 13(6/3/04 1:57 pm)Reply |  Re: Christians and Sin...what is the confusion??<hr/> ohcello,do you play the cello???? |

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Two sides of the same coin

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| N0X23  Registered UserPosts: 75(2/7/04 3:52 am)Reply  | Two sides of the same coin <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Anguttara Nikaya VII.48Saññoga SuttaBondage "I will teach you a Dhamma discourse on bondage &amp; lack of bondage. Listen &amp; pay close attention. I will speak.""Yes, lord," the monks responded. The Blessed One said: "A woman attends inwardly to her feminine faculties, her feminine gestures, her feminine manners, feminine poise, feminine desires, feminine voice, feminine charms. She is excited by that, delighted by that. Being excited &amp; delighted by that, she attends outwardly to masculine faculties, masculine gestures, masculine manners, masculine poise, masculine desires, masculine voices, masculine charms. She is excited by that, delighted by that. Being excited &amp; delighted by that, she wants to be bonded to what is outside her, wants whatever pleasure &amp; happiness that arise based on that bond. Delighting, caught up in her femininity, a woman goes into bondage with reference to men. |

This is how a woman does not transcend her femininity.

"A man attends inwardly to his masculine faculties, masculine gestures, masculine manners, masculine poise, masculine desires, masculine voice, masculine charms. He is excited by that, delighted by that.

Being excited & delighted by that, he attends outwardly to feminine faculties, feminine gestures, feminine manners, feminine poise, feminine desires, feminine voices, feminine charms. He is excited by that, delighted by that.

Being excited & delighted by that, he wants to be bonded to what is outside him, wants whatever pleasure & happiness that arise based on that bond. Delighting, caught up in his masculinity, a man goes into bondage with reference to women.

This is how a man does not transcend his masculinity.

"And how is there lack of bondage? A woman does not attend inwardly to her feminine faculties... feminine charms. She is not excited by that, not delighted by that... does not attend outwardly to masculine faculties... masculine charms. She is not excited by that, not delighted by that... does not want to be bonded to what is outside her, does not want whatever pleasure & happiness that arise based on that bond.

Not delighting, not caught up in her femininity, a woman does not go into bondage with reference to men.

This is how a woman transcends her femininity.

"A man does not attend inwardly to his masculine faculties... masculine charms. He is not excited by that, not delighted by that... does not attend outwardly to feminine faculties... feminine charms. He is not excited by that, not delighted by that... does not want to be bonded to what is outside him, does not want whatever pleasure & happiness that arise based on that bond. Not delighting, not caught up in his masculinity, a man does not go into bondage with reference to women.

This is how a man transcends his masculinity.

"This is how there is lack of bondage. And this is the Dhamma discourse on bondage & lack of bondage."

---

Quote:

---

1. 2. Soma

Setting at Savatthi. Then, in the morning, the bhikkhuni Soma dressed and, taking bowl and robe, entered Savatthi for alms. [5] When she had walked for alms in Savatthi and had returned from her alms round, after her meal she went to the Blind Men's Grove for the day's abiding. Having plunged into the Blind Men's Grove, she sat down at the foot of a tree for the day's abiding.

Then Mara the Evil One, desiring to arouse fear, trepidation, and terror in the bhikkhuni Soma, desiring to make her fall away from concentration, approached her and addressed her in verse:

4. "That state so hard to achieve

Which is to be attained by the seers,

Can't be attained by a woman

With her two-fingered wisdom." 6*

Then it occurred to the bhikkhuni Soma: "Now who is this that recited the verse -- a human being or a non-human being?"

Then it occurred to her: "This is Mara the Evil One, who has recited the verse desiring to arouse fear, trepidation, and terror in me, desiring to make me fall away from concentration."

Then the bhikkhuni Soma, having understood, "This is Mara the Evil One," replied to him in verses:

5. "What does womanhood matter at all

When the mind is concentrated well,

When knowledge flows on steadily

As one sees correctly into Dhamma.

6. One to whom it might occur,

'I'm a woman' or 'I'm a man'

Or 'I'm anything at all' --

Is fit for Mara to address."

Then Mara the Evil One, realizing, "The bhikkhuni Soma knows me," sad and disappointed, disappeared right there.

*Two-fingered wisdom

6. SA: That state (thana): arahantship. With her two-fingered wisdom (dvangulapaññaya): with limited wisdom (parittapaññaya); or else this is said of women because they cut the thread while holding the cotton ball between two fingers. ST and ThiA 67 offer a different explanation: "From childhood on they are always determining whether the rice is cooked by pressing the grains in the pot between two fingers. Therefore, because of the feebleness of their wisdom (acquired with two fingers), they are said to have 'two-fingered wisdom.'" It should be noted that it is Mara the Evil One who voices this ancient bias.

---

Quote:

---

It should be noted that it is Mara the Evil One who voices this ancient bias.

---

Duly noted.

QRS, what say you?

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 343
(2/8/04 1:25 am)
Reply

Re: Two sides of the same coin

---

Soon . . .

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 344
(2/8/04 11:55 am)
Reply

Re: Two sides of the same coin

---

Nox wrote:

Quote:

---

".. . This is how a woman does not transcend her femininity.

. . . This is how a man does not transcend his masculinity.

. . . This is how a woman transcends her femininity.

. . . This is how a man transcends his masculinity."

---

This is a reasonable teaching.

Quote:

---

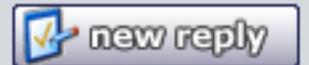

"What does womanhood matter at all
When the mind is concentrated well,
When knowledge flows on steadily
As one sees correctly into Dhamma."

---

This too is very reasonable. Just because a person is a "woman", doesn't mean they can't become wise.

Indeed the same can be said of anything in nature. If, whatever it is, is able to concentrate a mind upon Truth, then knowledge will flow on steadily, and, whatever it is that is doing the thinking, will see correctly into Dhamma.

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Ultimate Logic is nonsense logic, in that it cant be applied

New Topic

Add Reply

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                            | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 621(3/12/04 7:11 pm)Reply                                                                  | New Post Ultimate Logic is nonsense logic, in that it cant be applied <hr/> to thinking. It always leds to non events. Is that the point!                                                                 |
| MGregoryPosts: 521(3/12/04 9:25 pm)Reply  | New Post Re: Ultimate Logic is nonsense logic, in that it cant be app <hr/> It can be applied as an observation. We observe things about ourselves, like A=A, and go from there. I think that made sense. |

|                                                                                                                                                  |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Owen1234Registered UserPosts: 37(3/12/04 11:23 pm)Reply                                                               | New Post Re: Ultimate Logic is nonsense logic, in that it cant be app <hr/> MGregory:It can be applied as an observation. We observe things about ourselves, like <math>A=A</math>, and go from there.I think that made sense. I don't. What 'observation' shows that <math>A=A</math>?What perception does the external world provide for you to say <math>A=A</math> is true? |
| MGregoryPosts: 523(3/12/04 11:30 pm)Reply  | New Post Re: Ultimate Logic is nonsense logic, in that it cant be app <hr/> Well, I was thinking more of the observation that a thing must be identical to itself, otherwise logic would not be possible.                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 93(3/13/04 9:44 am)Reply                                                            | New Post Re: Ultimate Logic is nonsense logic, in that it cant be app <hr/> I know in science its A to D but for me its one step beyond schooling...A to G. Its up to the individual to break down the code.                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| WolfsonJakkPosts: 1520(3/13/04 12:22 pm)Reply                                                                              | New Post Ultimate Logic <hr/> Quote: <hr/> I don't. What 'observation' shows that <math>A=A</math>?What perception does the external world provide for you to say <math>A=A</math> is true? <hr/> My concept of a tree is equivalent to my concept of a tree. My answer to this question would be exactly similar to my answer to this question. Any questions?             |

This is this. This is not that. The Law of Identity and Differentiation is the first step to consciousness. Understanding this law might be the second step.

*edit*

Transcending this law might be the third. (Consider yourself lucky if it only takes three steps :)

Tharan

Edited by: WolfsonJakk at: 3/13/04 12:33 pm

Owen1234

Registered User

Posts: 39

(3/13/04 9:39 pm)

Reply

New Post Re: Ultimate Logic

---

Owen: What 'observation' shows that  $A=A$ ?

What perception does the external world provide for you to say  $A=A$  is true?

WolfsonJakk:

My concept of a tree is equivalent to my concept of a tree. My answer to this question would be exactly similar to my answer to this question. Any questions?

This is this. This is not that. The Law of Identity and Differentiation is the first step to consciousness. Understanding this law might be the second step.

-----

As interesting as your rhetoric might be, you have not addressed the question that I asked.

Are 'equivalence', 'equality' and 'identity' the same?

What did you perceive by your senses that allowed you to claim: (My concept of a tree)=(My concept of a tree), is true?

How do you "know" that: (My concept of a tree)=(My concept of a tree), is true?

WolfsonJakk

Posts: 1521

(3/14/04 2:58 am)

Reply

New Post Ultimate Logic

---

How do I know the sun will rise tomorrow? How do I know that you asked me a question? What words could I possibly throw your way which might alter your perception when your vision is blocked?

If I alter your perception then {old perception} != (new perception). Now, (old perception)=(old perception), (new perception)=(new perception), this is not that, this=this, A=A, the law of identity and differentiation.

A worm uses this tool to differentiate objects that might be food or danger in it's environment.

It is quite simple. Foundational. Remove the blockage to see.

Tharan

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 1030

(3/14/04 3:13 am)

Reply

New Post Re: Ultimate Logic

---

Quote:

---

How do I know the sun will rise tomorrow?

---

I think the question Owen was asking was how do you know that 'the sun will rise tomorrow' is true.

Of course, you can't. Certainly not according to logic anyway. And isn't logic held as the ultimate arbiter of truth here?

We may well think we 'know' that 'A is A' (to give it a more appropriate designation), but it's truth is insoluble. If it can't be proven by a path of logical reason, then it is a belief rather than knowledge, according to the respective definitions of knowledge and belief employed around here.

Talk of mental blocks seems like evasion to me, although it seems like their removal, if there are any, is the only way forward.

Edited by: Dave Toast at: 3/14/04 3:19 am

WolfsonJakk
Posts: 1523
(3/15/04 1:52 am)
Reply

New Post Re: Ultimate Logic is nonsense logic, in that it cant be app

---

I am not sure how I can answer the question more simply. Evasion?

Tharan

WolfsonJakk
Posts: 1524
(3/15/04 1:56 am)
Reply

New Post Re: Ultimate Logic

---

Quote:

---

I think the question Owen was asking was how do you know that 'the sun will rise tomorrow' is true.

---

If I point to a red car and say "That red car is red," I still cannot prove the statement, outside of it's context, to have been true.

But what value is this "proof?" It strikes me as mental gymnastics at best.

Tharan

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 1033
(3/15/04 8:36 am)
Reply

New Post Re: Ultimate Logic

---

You could prove that statement to be true but it would have little value. You're right, proof has no value in itself. I guess the value really lies in understanding the construction of understanding and knowledge. It's not necessarily the particular ends that count (although some eventually should), but the means. The mental gymnastics may have value of their own.

You're right about the proof that A is A too, it would only be held up by some new insoluble axiom. It's turtles all the way down. Has that truth any value?

Edited by: Dave Toast at: 3/15/04 9:30 am

|                                                                                                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 1036(3/16/04 8:11 am)Reply    | New Post Re: Ultimate Logic <hr/> There is no 'truth', ultimate or otherwise, which can be exhaustively, intellectually verified, outside of it's context. Knowledge is simply the biggest turtle of the lot, balancing precariously on a transfinite tower of progressively less visible ancestors. DQ chimes in: Then we need pay no attention to your statements as their truth is unverifiable. DT: As is the truth of your statement. You will notice, however, that I said intellectually unverifiable. |
| komodo islandRegistered UserPosts: 9(5/22/04 12:22 pm)Reply  | New Post Re: Ultimate Logic <hr/> Ultimate logic is bio-logic.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

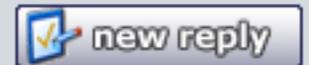

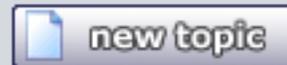

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Ultimate Reality

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                 | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 3(9/11/03 2:09 pm)Reply | Ultimate Reality <hr/> * Summary  The totality/Ultimate Reality/God/Nature/the infinite is a logical construct representing all that is. Only logic, which is fundamental to consciousness, sheds light on its true character (consciousness cannot peek at what lies beyond consciousness). All that we know for sure about Ultimate Reality, and all that we can possibly know for sure about it, is that it cannot be accurately seen or imagined, and that it has the capacity to create our consciousness and the appearances and forms that grace it. Our logical deductions from these appearances lead us to think that it is infinite and has a fundamental operating principle which we call 'cause and effect'.  Experiential Truths * Consciousness is (real). Consciousness = the successive experience of appearances. Our appearances to mind seem to indicate that reality is always affecting itself, that it is constantly changing. We call this 'cause and effect'. Every 'thing' that we perceive is divisible, and thus its illusoriness is revealed. |

* Logical Construct Truths *

The totality = all that is. It is defined as being infinite.

Existence = appearance to mind.

Things & Form = discrimination applied to appearances to mind. All things are finite.

Appearance = an experience of consciousness.

The Hidden Void = all that is other than our consciousness and appearances to mind. Thus, it has the capacity to create consciousness and appearances.

Rhett

pseudonymous11

Registered User

Posts: 1

(9/19/03 11:10 am)

Reply

ezSupporter

Re: Ultimate Reality

---

The Hidden Void = all that is other than our consciousness and appearances to mind. Thus, it has the capacity to create consciousness and appearances.

Rhett,

This last part intrigued me. Why is it evident (as you suggest here) that the hidden void has the capacity to create? Could the "consciousness and appearance to mind" be likewise caused by a relationship between (for lack of better words) an active principle and a passive principle?

Duality seems self evident to me in causal consciousness, as it is my experience that I am separate from the void, and all the form that rises from it. I would define becoming one with creation, or the passive origins of it, as egoic. Non-dual states have always struck me as egoic, whereas to become one with creation (to pull back to pre-form) is not what I am (evolving consciousness). I am one with the One that is awakening in creation (evolution being the natural law or mandate that directs consciousness' awakening).

|                                                                                                                                                                                            |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                                            | Blah blah blah (what it appeared like to me), but I'm doing the best I can as a high school dropout that is an experiential learner, and is exploring the faces of possibilities. Please disregard if I was incoherent. dcv-                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 918(9/19/03 2:15 pm)Reply                                                                                                     | Re: Ultimate Reality <hr/> Well, I'm a junior high dropout, so I figure I'm the most uneducated person here. I found your post intriguing. Quote: <hr/> I would define becoming one with creation, or the passive origins of it, as egoic. Non-dual states have always struck me as egoic, whereas to become one with creation (to pull back to pre-form) is not what I am (evolving consciousness). <hr/> Why would you define becoming one with creation as egoic? |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1508(9/19/03 2:23 pm)Reply                                                                                                         | ---- <hr/> Hi Rhett, are you some kind of secret undercover special agent?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|  pseudonymous11Registered UserPosts: 3(9/19/03 10:26 pm)ReplyezSupporter | Re: ---- <hr/> bird of hermes, Well, I'm a junior high dropout, so I figure I'm the most uneducated person here. I found your post intriguing. &gt;if you are a junior high dropout then you perhaps have figured it out as I have that the education that takes place outside of the structure of school is far more useful in self-awareness.                                                                                                                                    |

Why would you define becoming one with creation as egoic?

> creation is form. attachment to form is egoic. attachment to pre-form is the same experience, albeit subtle. there is a witness no matter the subtlety of the experience. I was in a "non-dual" meditation once and got shifted beyond it to a realization that "I Am This, all things (including void) are that".

Language becomes very distracting at this awareness, because there is no point of reference in symbolic language for causal states. This is where egoic people become very technical defining definitions and meanings of meanings, rather than letting the simplicity of the experience stand on its on, no matter the words. I have no interest in defending intellectual turf, because it does not denote experiential knowing. It just demonstrates that you have read books, and have the ability to memorize other people's words.

There are two states of causal awareness that lie behind non-duality. The first is that the witness is the soul, or part of Creator (for lack of a better word presently), and not creation. Then there is the knowing that to be a part whatsoever, such as a soul, is egoic. That which is evolving in consciousness within the dream of creation (form) is not many (except in the dream)...it is One.

Some focus on the passive (void) arriving in egoic awareness. Some focus on the active (that which is becoming conscious) arriving in causal awareness. I was fortunate, in my perception, to have been drawn to the latter. I am This, and not that.

Of course, I may be daft as hell too. I refuse to defend what existed prior to my (egoic) awareness of Awareness.

dcv-

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 16
(9/22/03 1:44 pm)
Reply

Re: Ultimate Reality

---

I am replying to pseudonymous.

This piece on Ultimate Reality was my attempt to summarise in my own words the ideas in David Quinn's book 'Wisdom of the Infinite'.

Quote:

The Hidden Void = all that is other than our consciousness and appearances to mind. Thus, it has the capacity to create consciousness and appearances.

DCV: Rhett,

This last part intrigued me. Why is it evident (as you suggest here) that the hidden void has the capacity to create? Could the "consciousness and appearance to mind" be likewise caused by a relationship between (for lack of better words) an active principle and a passive principle?

Duality seems self evident to me in causal consciousness, as it is my experience that I am separate from the void, and all the form that rises from it.

Rhett: Causal consciousness cannot really be experienced as such, even though it is the fundamental nature of the way we experience consciousness, it is a conceptual construct. There is no such thing as a 'moment', if there was, what would be its duration?

I guess i am no longer deluded by the apparent separation between consciousness and the void, I accept that consciousness does not inherently exist.

DCV: I would define becoming one with creation, or the passive origins of it, as egoic. Non-dual states have always struck me as egoic, whereas to become one with creation (to pull back to pre-form) is not what I am (evolving consciousness). I am one with the One that is awakening in creation (evolution being the natural law or mandate that directs consciousness' awakening).

Rhett: I am unsure of many of your terms, particularly 'active' and 'passive' principle. However, i think you are right in that the experience of consciousness cannot be other that dual, in that there is (the delusion of) consciousness, and external inputs to consciousness.

DCV: Blah blah blah (what it appeared like to me), but I'm doing the best I can as a high school dropout that is an experiencial learner, and is exploring the faces of possibilities. Please disregard if I was incoherent.

Rhett: Your past only exists when you think about it, and it only exists in the form in which you think about it. That you dropped out means nothing to me, but the reasons why might be revealing. The category 'experiential learner' seems a little unnecessary. Are you suggesting that you created all of the definitions you use here? If so, please explain them all. I think what you mean is that you try to fully integrate what you learn with your experiences, which is fundamental to the development of wisdom.

dcv-

Rhett

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 17
(9/22/03 2:06 pm)
Reply

Re: undercover special agent

---

Hi Suergaz,

No, i am not "some kind of secret undercover agent".

Why do you ask? It seems a frivolous question.

If you would like to know something about me look at 'the Cage'.

Rhett

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 587
(9/22/03 10:09 pm)
Reply

Re: Consciousness.

---

Quote:

---

there is (the delusion of) consciousness, and external inputs to consciousness.

---

Rhett, are you saying that consciousness is a delusion, or that the experience of consciousness is a delusion, or something else?

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 21
(9/24/03 10:40 am)
Reply

Re: ----

---

Anna: Why would you define becoming one with creation as egoic?

> creation is form. attachment to form is egoic. attachment to pre-form is the same experience, albeit subtle. there is a witness no matter the subtlety of the experience. I was in a "non-dual" meditation once and got shifted beyond it to a realization that "I Am This, all things (including void) are that".

Language becomes very distracting at this awareness, because there is no point of reference in symbolic language for causal states. This is where egoic people become very technical defining definitions and meanings of meanings, rather than letting the simplicity of the experience stand on its on, no matter the words. I have no interest in defending intellectual turf, because it does not denote experiential knowing. It just demonstrates that you have read books, and have the ability to memorize other people's words.

Rhett: I am not interested in band-aid solutions. Any form of meditation other than fully conscious contemplation is just a temporary diversion from ones suffering. One's mind needs to be dealt with, it needs to develop wisdom, if one wants to prevent it's ignorance from trampling all over any meditative experience.

The mind **is** intellect and experience, i think your own categories are deficient. It seems rather odd that you profess your own categories at the same time as you denounce categorisation, without realising or at least communicating the inherent distortion in all categorisation and the inherent need for categorisation in all communication.

Meditative experiences are sometimes devoid of consciousness, which is to be avoided if one values their own conscious existence and their development of wisdom.

Rhett

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 22
(9/24/03 10:54 am)
Reply

Re: Consciousness.

---

Quote:

-----
there is (the delusion of) consciousness, and external inputs to consciousness.
-----

Dave: Rhett, are you saying that consciousness is a delusion, or that the experience of consciousness is a delusion, or something else?

Rhett: I am still developing my ideas about this one. If i think about consciousness in relation to causality, consciousness cannot be, ultimately, as we think it is. Sure, we experience consciousness *as we define consciousness*, but that definition is just a construct. If consciousness is innumerable momentary causes/effects, then how can it be as we commonly define it?

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 598
(9/24/03 11:49 am)
Reply

Re: Consciousness.

---

Quote:

---

Rhett: If i think about consciousness in relation to causality, consciousness cannot be, ultimately, as we think it is.

---

In what way/s?

Quote:

---

Sure, we experience consciousness *as we define consciousness*, but that definition is just a construct.

---

But isn't a construct just a construct, a construct of the very same magnitude as the construct which is our definition/s of consciousness?

Quote:

---

If consciousness is innumerable momentary causes/effects, then how can it be as we commonly define it?

---

Maybe that's what consciousness, even as it might commonly be defined, is. A puppet played by innumerable yet finite strings. It need be no more to look after all the common ways that a consciousness might characterize itself.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 28
(9/26/03 10:10 am)
Reply

Re: Consciousness.

---

Quote:

-----
there is (the delusion of) consciousness, and external inputs to consciousness.
-----

Dave: Rhett, are you saying that consciousness is a delusion, or that the experience of consciousness is a delusion, or something else?

Rhett: I am still developing my ideas about this one. If i think about consciousness in relation to causality, consciousness cannot be, ultimately, as we think it is. Sure, we experience consciousness *as we define consciousness*, but that definition is just a construct.

If consciousness is innumerable momentary causes/effects, then how can it be as we commonly define it?

Quote:

-----
Rhett: If i think about consciousness in relation to causality, consciousness cannot be, ultimately, as we think it is.
-----

Dave: In what way/s?

Rhett 2: Lets look at our brain. It seems to be composed of these tiny things called neurons. Now don't hold onto this thought too much, but consider that cause and effect operates down to the infinitesimal level, much below that of neurons. So somehow our consciousness arises out of infinitesimal causes and effects. So if we think about a word for example, unless this thought is a single causal chain in an infinitesimal causal process, which is actually impossible since the infinitesimal could also be divided into smaller parts, then our thoughts must be a conglomerate of causes. But how can this be if we think we can identify an 'I'? Where does that 'I' reside? I think our sense of 'I' can only be an experience of a memory of past happenings of our consciousness, there is no 'I' in the present. All 'I' is in fact delusional.

***Edit***

Momentary consciousness as i have previously defined it on the forum and list is impossible by definition. If by momentary i mean 'a period of time of infinitesimal duration', the period of time basically becomes zero. Thus, consciousness would not in fact exist at all.

If i define momentary consciousness as being 'consciousness for a specific period or duration of time', the essential nature of that consciousness would be the same regardless of the duration, whether it was for a minutely short duration of time or for a lengthy duration.

My apologies to all that i confused or misled.

Rhett

***End of edit***

Quote:

-----
Sure, we experience consciousness *as we define consciousness*, but that definition is just a construct.

---

Dave: But isn't a construct just a construct, a construct of the very same magnitude as the construct which is our definition/s of consciousness?

Rhett 2: Our concept or definition of what a construct is relates purely to the abstract realm, so it is only subject to the 'laws' of logic. Our constructed definition of consciousness relates to the empirical realm, so it is contingent, it is not absolute truth.

Quote:

---

If consciousness is innumerable momentary causes/effects, then how can it be as we commonly define it?

---

Dave: Maybe that's what consciousness, even as it might commonly be defined, is. A puppet played by innumerable yet finite strings. It need be no more to look after all the common ways that a consciousness might characterize itself.

Rhett 2: Most people define consciousness as being thoughts, mental images, sensations, etc, which could be a long way removed from 'innumerable yet finite strings'. I cannot understand your last sentence.

Edited by: Rhett Hamilton at: 10/12/03 11:30 am

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 609
(9/26/03 11:18 pm)
Reply

Re: Consciousness.

---

Quote:

---

Rhett: If i think about consciousness in relation to causality, consciousness cannot be, ultimately, as we think it is.

Dave: In what way/s?

Rhett: Lets look at our brain. It seems to be composed of these tiny things called neurons. Now don't hold onto this thought too much, but consider that cause and effect operates down to the infinitesimal level, much below that of neurons. So somehow our consciousness arises out of infinitesimal causes and effects.

---

OK.

Quote:

---

Rhett: So if we think about a word for example, unless this thought is a single causal chain in an infinitesimal causal process, which is actually impossible since the infinitesimal could also be divided into smaller parts, then our thoughts must be a conglomerate of causes.

---

Yes, every phenomenon is as such.

Quote:

---

Rhett: But how can this be if we think we can identify an
'I'? Where does that 'I' reside?

---

In the conscious experience of space and time. Physically, in the brain, for lack of a more detailed knowledge.

Quote:

---

Rhett: I think our sense of 'I' can only be an experience of a memory of past happenings of our consciousness, there is no 'I' in the present.

---

If the 'T' is primarily an article of the memory (although it is likely so much more than that), how does that necessitate it's not being in the present? And if the 'T' is an experience of a memory of past happenings in our consciousness, from whence did these memories come?

Quote:

---

All 'T' is in fact delusional.

---

I'm not sure how you reach that definitive conclusion.

Perhaps a definition of terms is required here. What do you mean by the word delusional? And how exactly are you conceptualising the 'present moment'? Perhaps a causal definition and an experiential definition would be useful for the latter.

Quote:

---

Rhett: Sure, we experience consciousness *as we define consciousness*, but that definition is just a construct.

Dave: But isn't a construct just a construct, a construct of the very same magnitude as the construct which is our definition/s of consciousness?

Rhett: Our concept or definition of what a construct is relates purely to the abstract realm, so it is only subject to the 'laws' of logic.

---

My use of the example of the definition of a construct being a construct was purely whimsical, although pertinent. I could have used any concept whatsoever, they're all constructs. As far as consciousness is concerned, on a gross and basic level every understanding is 'only' subject to the laws of logic. Logic, in it's simplest form, is the interface between consciousness and input. Perhaps a CPU and the Binary which it manipulates is a better analogy.

Defining consciousness is no different (abstraction wise) to defining the taste of sugar, or what logic is, or what a construct is, etc. ad infinitum; in that it is built up block by block, in relation to learned conceptions of what is what.

My point was that your saying "Sure, we experience consciousness *as we define consciousness*, but that definition is just a construct." in no way invalidates said definition and experience, because every item of logic is just a construct. Your argument conforms to the logical fallacy of Ignoratio elenchi.

Quote:

---

Our constructed definition of consciousness relates to the empirical realm, so it is contingent, it is not absolute truth.

---

All logical constructs relate, eventually, to the empirical realm. Whether one is a higher form of abstraction than another makes neither no more or less of a construct. And said construct is no more or less contingent, eventually (I hesitate to use the word ultimately - which I might ordinarily use here instead of eventually - due to the way that it is generally contextualised by the absolutists here).

With regard to absolute truth, I presume you are speaking of logical truth about the nature of the absolute. So if logic is contingent upon the empirical realm (and how could it not be), how is anything we understand logically not contingent upon the empirical realm? And therefore, how is anything logically derived going to relate to the absolute (something inaccessible to logic due to it's inability to place itself outside of totality, and the incomplete nature of any analysis of a system from within itself)?

Quote:

---

Rhett: If consciousness is innumerable momentary causes/ effects, then how can it be as we commonly define it?

Dave: Maybe that's what consciousness, even as it might commonly be defined, is. A puppet played by innumerable yet finite strings. It need be no more to look after all the common ways that a consciousness might characterize itself.

Rhett: Most people define consciousness as being thoughts, mental images, sensations, etc, which could be a long way removed from 'innumerable yet finite strings'.

---

Most people may well define consciousness as such, but I thought the definition in question was that of the 'self' or the 'I' - the feeling of autonomy (correctly, it would seem, considering that written above).

So when you ask the question "If consciousness is innumerable momentary causes/effects, then how can it be as we commonly define it?", I presume you are asking how can it be that it seems autonomous. My speculation upon this question was that above, although I can now see that it might be too allegorical and not clear enough.

What I am meaning to say is that the brain is, as far as I can see, the most complex conglomeration of cause and effect that we know of. From our meagre perspective, we might even say that it's direct causes are infinite, although this cannot be true as there is only one infinity and we are merely a part of 'it'. Regardless, might it be that such a complex causal phenomenon (almost a universe in itself - it's own little 'totality') might consider itself, and confer upon itself the (constructed) quality of autonomy. And might it not be correct in doing so, being as autonomy is exactly what we define it to be. In other words, might consciousness be a puppet played by, for all intents and purposes, infinite strings; and might this puppet be animated by these strings to such an extent that it is 'brought to life' by such a process, when it then might recognise itself, and define itself as being what it defines as autonomous.

Quote:

---

Rhett: I cannot understand your last sentence.

---

Perhaps I was being too colloquial in my expression. When I say "It need be no more to look after all the common ways that a consciousness might characterize itself.", I am simply saying that whilst you see human consciousness's innumerable causes and effects as a barrier to it's actually being what it commonly thinks it is, I see this process as the possible (and perhaps probable) facilitator of human consciousness being what it commonly thinks it is. In fact, being as human consciousness defines what thought, existence, autonomy, definition and the like are, how could it be any other way.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 33
(9/28/03 9:44 am)
Reply

Re: Consciousness.

---

-----
Rhett: But how can this be if we think we can identify an 'I'? Where does that 'I' reside?
-----

In the conscious experience of space and time. Physically, in the brain, for lack of a more detailed knowledge.

Rhett 2:

What is your definition of space? How do we 'experience' it? Sure consciousness seems to be in the brain, but I think we can do better than this, lets try to use logic rather than empiricism.

-----
Rhett: I think our sense of 'I' can only be an experience of a memory of past happenings of our consciousness, there is no 'I' in the present.
-----

If the 'I' is primarily an article of the memory (although it is likely so much more than that), how does that necessitate it's not being in the present? And if the 'I' is an experience of a memory of past happenings in our consciousness, from whence did these memories come?

Rhett 2:

The act of consciousness, the causal process, creates memories. When our current act of 'consciousness' experiences memories of previous acts of 'consciousness' it usually becomes deluded, it thinks that there is a thing called consciousness. But there is no definitive 'thing'.

---

All 'T' is in fact delusional.

---

I'm not sure how you reach that definitive conclusion.

Perhaps a definition of terms is required here. What do you mean by the word delusional? And how exactly are you conceptualising the 'present moment'?

Perhaps a causal definition and an experiential definition would be useful for the latter.

Rhett 2:

Delusion: False notions about the nature of reality.

Present moment: A particular conceptualised moment, a reference point in an endless causal process. There can be no experiential definition or description since moments do not actually exist.

---

Rhett: Sure, we experience consciousness *as we define consciousness*, but that definition is just a construct.

Dave: But isn't a construct just a construct, a construct of the very same magnitude as the construct which is our definition/s of consciousness?

Rhett: Our concept or definition of what a construct is relates purely to the abstract realm, so it is only subject to the 'laws' of logic.

---

My use of the example of the definition of a construct being a construct was purely whimsical, although pertinent. I could have used any concept whatsoever, they're all constructs. As far as consciousness is concerned, on a gross and basic level every understanding is 'only' subject to the laws of logic. Logic, in it's simplest form, is the interface between consciousness and input. Perhaps a CPU and the Binary which it manipulates is a better analogy.

Defining consciousness is no different (abstraction wise) to defining the taste of sugar, or what logic is, or what a construct is, etc. ad infinitum; in that it is built up block by block, in relation to learned conceptions of what is what.

My point was that your saying "Sure, we experience consciousness *as we define consciousness*, but that definition is just a construct." in no way invalidates said definition and experience, because every item of logic is just a construct. Your argument conforms to the logical fallacy of Ignoratio elenchi.

Rhett 2:

I will edit my statement. My thoughts were oscillating at the time i wrote it, and i am still unsure. "Sure we *think* we experience consciousness as we commonly define consciousness, but that is caused by our inherent delusions about consciousness."

---

Our constructed definition of consciousness relates to the empirical realm, so it is contingent, it is not absolute truth.

---

All logical constructs relate, eventually, to the empirical realm. Whether one is a higher form of abstraction than another makes neither no more or less of a construct. And said construct is no more or less contingent, eventually (I hesitate to use the word ultimately - which I might ordinarily use here instead of eventually - due to the way that it is generally contextualised by the absolutists here).

With regard to absolute truth, I presume you are speaking of logical truth about the nature of the absolute. So if logic is contingent upon the empirical realm (and how could it not be), how is anything we understand logically not contingent upon the empirical realm? And therefore, how is anything logically derived going to relate to the absolute (something inaccessible to logic due to it's inability to place itself outside of totality, and the incomplete nature of any analysis of a system from within itself)?

Rhett 2:

There are different kinds of truths. Logical truths are not contingent on the empirical realm, they are independent of reality, they are timeless, they are true for all worlds at all times. They are only contingent on the empirical realm in the sense that they require consciousness to conceive of them for them to exist, but they are true even when they don't exist (existence = appearance to mind). We cannot be sure about anything that is contingent on the empirical realm in any way other than in my previous statement, and other than our experiences of consciousness.

---

Rhett: If consciousness is innumerable momentary causes/effects, then how can it be as we commonly define it?

Dave: Maybe that's what consciousness, even as it might commonly be defined, is. A puppet played by innumerable yet finite strings. It need be no more to look after all the common ways that a consciousness might characterize itself.

Rhett: Most people define consciousness as being thoughts, mental images, sensations, etc, which could be a long way removed from 'innumerable yet finite strings'.

---

Most people may well define consciousness as such, but I thought the definition in question was that of the 'self' or the 'I' - the feeling of autonomy (correctly, it would seem, considering that written above).

So when you ask the question "If consciousness is innumerable momentary causes/effects, then how can it be as we commonly define it?", I presume you are asking how can it be that it seems autonomous. My speculation upon this question was that above, although I can now see that it might be too allegorical and not clear enough.

Rhett 2:

I thought we had got past the delusion of autonomy, of free will. I have no delusion of autonomy. That 'feeling' that people have is actually a thought, a deluded thought.

When i was questioning consciousness i was actually questioning the apparent incompatibility of what we think we experience, that being thoughts, images, words, sensations...given that consciousness must be innumerable causes/effects.

What I am meaning to say is that the brain is, as far as I can see, the most complex conglomeration of cause and effect that we know of. From our meagre perspective, we might even say that it's direct causes are infinite, although this cannot be true as there is only one infinity and we are merely a part of 'it'. Regardless, might it be that such a complex causal phenomenon (almost a universe in itself - it's own little 'totality') might consider itself, and confer upon itself the (constructed) quality of autonomy. And might it not be correct in doing so, being as autonomy is exactly what we define it to be. In other words, might consciousness be a puppet played by, for all intents and purposes, infinite strings; and might this puppet be animated by these strings to such an extent that it is 'brought to life' by such a process, when it then might recognise itself, and define itself as being what it defines as autonomous.

Rhett 2:

Nice description, I agree so far as, "the mind of a genius is so complex that it almost deserves to be called a totality within the totality". I would not say that about most men, and definitely not women. I think most peoples minds function well below their inherent capacity, partly due to bad programming, the multitudes of delusions that people are fed. Over the last few days i have been reading Otto Weininger's "Sex and Character", he explores the mental capacities of various people types. Otto had an exceptional mind.

However, irrespective of its causal complexity, the mind is still subject to causality, it is still determined. Autonomy = free will = delusion.

-----
Rhett: I cannot understand your last sentence.
-----

Perhaps I was being too colloquial in my expression. When I say "It need be no more to look after all the common ways that a consciousness might characterize itself.", I am simply saying that whilst you see human consciousness's innumerable causes and effects as a barrier to it's actually being what it commonly thinks it is, I see this process as the possible (and perhaps probable) facilitator of human consciousness being what it commonly thinks it is. In fact, being as human consciousness defines what thought, existence, autonomy, definition and the like are, how could it be any other way.

Rhett 2:

As per our definitions causality must be the cause, the one and only cause, of "human consciousness being what it commonly thinks it is" (to use your words). Thankfully, it can also cause us to think otherwise.

I AM
Registered User
Posts: 212
(9/28/03 12:46 pm)
Reply

Doom & Paradox Oil

---

This is a really interesting read, a dialogue attempting to 'crack' the code of consciousness with words. It's like trying to crack the most advanced theorem using Morris Code. When you get to the 'bottom' of it you will be defaulted to a paradox. Of course in our current form we have no other choice. It's all in good though as it good meditation. I would love to dabble in it but in recent my brain has been fried in paradox oil.

Take the game "Doom" for example. When you peer out the walls of the buildings you will see nothingness. Sometimes you can even walk in it when there is a 'fault' during the game. But you cannot explain what is outside of the walls within the context of the game because it was not programmed. All you have is the 'language' of the game and that language can only explain what is within the game. Yet on rare instances you can still run out into that void outside the walls with your gun and all and experience it but it has nothing to do with the game and the game cannot explain it for you.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1175
(9/28/03 4:02 pm)
Reply

Doom

---

And yet, if you turn the clipping plane restrictions off, you can move in and out of the specific level you are on, sneak up behind the next target, and take it out maybe from an odd angle barely in the room.

Enlightenment is much the same way. It is the ability to step outside what is "programmed" and to visualize the commonalities that all such settings of existence contain. Conform your emotions to the truth and you are ready to kill the "Boss" of the level...namely, yourself.

Tharan

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1503
(9/29/03 2:18 am)
Reply

Re: Doom

---

Exactly: think about and understand what it means for a thing to "exist" and potentially the mystery of existence ceases to be a mystery.

The question is: are you emotionally attached to mystery?

Hello Irena.....

Dan Rowden

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 614
(10/1/03 8:45 am)
Reply

Re: Consciousness.

---

Quote:

---

Rhett: But how can this be if we think we can identify an 'I'? Where does that 'I' reside?

DT: In the conscious experience of space and time. Physically, in the brain, for lack of a more detailed knowledge.

Rhett: What is your definition of space? How do we 'experience' it? Sure consciousness seems to be in the brain, but I think we can do better than this, lets try to use logic rather than empiricism.

---

Topologically, space is a multi-dimensional manifold, defined by a coordinate system which may be used to represent spatial relationships between objects - that is the formalised conception. Experientially, space, in the sense meant originally, is the environment in which consciousness seems to exist, designated nature amongst other things.

It really needs no definition though as it is a part and parcel affair. If one is going to consciously experience the seemingly objective reality of space and time, one must necessarily have an 'I', one must necessarily be identified as a thing in a world of things. The question of how we 'experience' space is irrelevant to the matter of whether we do or not. So the 'I' is by necessity located in the conscious experience of space and time. If we want to find it's literal location in objective reality, we can be no more specific than saying it is located in the brain, although there is more specific speculation as to it's location in the brain.

Regarding an explanation of consciousness, and the power of utility lent to said explanation by empiricism Vs pure logic, I think a thoroughgoing empirical investigation would be far more definitive, objective and informative than that provided by logical stabs in the dark based on subjective and poorly defined conceptions of the experience of consciousness. Yes we can assign the consciousness it's causal nature, provisionally, but this is of virtually no use whatsoever in explaining what it is, how it is, or why it is; rather it is the mere beginning point of any kind of rational exploration of any phenomenon.

Quote:

---

Rhett: I think our sense of 'I' can only be an experience of a memory of past happenings of our consciousness, there is no 'I' in the present.

DT: If the 'I' is primarily an article of the memory (although it is likely so much more than that), how does that necessitate it's not being in the present? And if the 'I' is an experience of a memory of past happenings in our consciousness, from whence did these memories come?

Rhett: The act of consciousness, the causal process, creates memories. When our current act of 'consciousness' experiences memories of previous acts of 'consciousness' it usually becomes deluded, it thinks that there is a thing called consciousness. But there is no definitive 'thing'.

---

Surely all things are definitive things. Things are concepts, definitions, articles of consciousness. Consciousness itself and the understanding thereof is an article of consciousness, a concept, a thing. Either there is an underlying actuality behind all of these things, or there isn't. Why would you separate consciousness from nature in one way (in that memory is an inseparable part of our conception of consciousness, which could not function without it, and yet your definition of consciousness is somehow separate from memory. Also in that you say that consciousness is not a thing) and identify it with nature in another way (in that you define it as being subject to causality). If time is a measure of the rate of change, and change is an article of conscious experience, surely the memory is an integral and essential aspect and facilitator of conscious experience. This is the kind of thing that Darwin can help us with, empirically.

Regardless of the thingness of things, when you say "When our current act of 'consciousness' experiences memories of previous acts of 'consciousness' it usually becomes deluded, it thinks that there is a thing called consciousness." you must then have to ask why this is, instead of jumping to the default delusion position (which presumptuously assumes an omniscient knowledge). If our current 'act of consciousness' experiences previous 'acts of consciousness', and creates a self to which these memories of previous 'acts of consciousness' would seem to have happened, why do you think that might be? What would Occam's Razor have to say? Cutting through the crap as it does, it would say that the 'I' which is a constructed article of consciousness, had it's 'I' - it's sense of self, it's conception of things and it's own thingness - when it experienced the 'acts of consciousness' that have become memories. The 'I' which identifies itself as an autonomous conglomeration within a surrounding conglomeration, necessarily is as much a part of the conscious experience of the present as it is an article of past conscious experience of the present consigned to memory. Otherwise, memories would have to have some magical property whereby they convey upon themselves a sense of things and their own thingness (for the present experience to interpret them as), even though present experience of the present from which these memories are formed, has no such identification with things and it's own thingness.

So, is the sense of 'I' which human consciousness assigns itself a product of delusion, or is it a necessary article of consciousness and therefore a simple product of nature and evolution - anything but a product of delusion.

Equally, with regard to delusion, might some perceived ability to be able to unlock the mysteries of the unknowable - the Ultimate (and judge everything thereon), be delusional in itself, by definition. If there is 'something' beyond our empirical surroundings, then we have nothing but logic with which to probe it. But if we understand that the 'Ultimate truth' supposedly accessible to logic is actually a delusion born of lack of understanding of the nature of logic; then one might regard one who claims to have unlocked 'Ultimate truth' via logic, as delusional. 'Logical truth about the Ultimate' seems like a subtle difference, but the difference between this and some postulated 'Ultimate independent truth' is not only like a chasm, but like a completely and definitively unbridgeable void, with no points at which to even start construction, never mind build the thing.

Of course the 'Ultimate truth' to which I refer above, is meaningless gibberish.

Quote:

---

Rhett: All 'I' is in fact delusional.

DT: I'm not sure how you reach that definitive conclusion.

Perhaps a definition of terms is required here. What do you mean by the word delusional? And how exactly are you conceptualising the 'present moment'? Perhaps a causal definition and an experiential definition would be useful for the latter.

Rhett: Delusion: False notions about the nature of reality.

---

Okay, so now you're going to have to define what you mean by reality.

If you were meaning delusion in an everyday sense, i.e. someone who thinks that they are a chicken, or somebody who thinks that Relativity is a crock; I'd understand exactly what you mean. But I think you're being rather more specific than that.

Quote:

---

Rhett: Present moment: A particular conceptualised moment, a reference point in an endless causal process.

---

That looks like a definition of any old moment to me. You're going to have to be more specific. I asked you how exactly you are conceptualising the 'present moment', with regard to your words on the 'current act of consciousness'?

Quote:

---

There can be no experiential definition or description since moments do not actually exist.

---

What do you mean by exist?

If there can be no experiential definition of description of the conscious human experience of the present moment, how come there can be such definition and description with relation to past 'present moments' contained within the memory?

It's a tough one though - defining the conscious human experience of the present moment - no doubt. The anatomy of this phenomenon fascinates and confounds me.

How long is the piece of string which is the human experience of the present moment?

Again, your moving to the position of 'moments don't exist' gets us nowhere. Even if, for the sake of argument, we provisionally allow that change in our seeming objective reality is an article of consciousness, and therefore 'moments' don't 'exist', this is the mere beginning point for any exploration of what a seeming moment is, what a seeming existence is, what a seeming thing is, what a seeming 'I' is, what a seeming conscious experience is, etc. These sort of arguments (moments don't exist, co-dependent origination, causality, it's just a construct) remind me of how needless it is to say "In my opinion", before stating an opinion; in that it couldn't be any other way. It is a formality of the context and almost irrelevant, worthy of lip service only. These things should be a caveat to any deconstruction.

That is to say nothing of the matter that a conceptualised Ultimate reality is just a construct ;-)

Which reminds me of the koan that the Zen which can be spoken of is not the true Zen (or however it goes). This arrangement of words has a very definite meaning to convey about the nature of the conceptless state, and it does so via concepts. However if we look at the words literally, it makes no sense whatsoever. If one happens to be speaking the truth about Zen, then one is definitively speaking of the 'true Zen', if one cannot speak of the true Zen then there is no such thing as the true Zen. This is not because there is necessarily no such thing as the Zen which is beyond conceptions, it is because the word 'true' is a conception. The only truth we can be 'sure' that there is, is truth that can be spoken of - conceptualised. Any speculation as to some truth value which lies beyond concepts is just that at best, speculation. At worst, it is a complete misunderstanding of what truth is, semantics, and what concepts are.

Quote:

---

DT: My point was that your saying "Sure, we experience consciousness *as we define consciousness*, but that definition is just a construct." in no way invalidates said definition and experience, because every item of logic is just a construct. Your argument conforms to the logical fallacy of Ignoratio elenchi.

Rhett: I will edit my statement. My thoughts were oscillating at the time i wrote it, and i am still unsure. "Sure we *think* we experience consciousness as we commonly define consciousness, but that is caused by our inherent delusions about consciousness."

---

Your editing makes as little sense to me. It is interesting that you use the word inherent, in conjunction with the word delusion, with regard to consciousness here. It implies an inseparability. So, if what you claim are delusions about consciousness are inseparable from consciousness, how can they be truly termed delusions by a consciousness? Only if such a consciousness had overcome said delusions. If said consciousness has somehow managed to separate itself from such delusions, then they are not inherent. But I'm being pedantic.

If we remove the word inherent, you are saying that consciousness only thinks it experiences consciousness as it seems to be, because it is caused to do so by consciousness' delusion, which could only be caused by that 'seeming to be'. Which came first then, the 'seeming to be' or the 'delusion'?

The infant consciousness, once created, has not had sufficient cause to yet become 'deluded' so. At what point does it become 'deluded', and what causes that 'delusion'. The non-'deluded' consciousness begins to experience and that non-'deluded' consciousness experiences experience as experience seems to be. Now it would seem that this fledgling consciousness is actually 'deluded' already, it is already experiencing conscious experience as it 'seems to be'. It is already 'carving up its experience into chunks' which it will later come to know as itself, hunger, breasts, milk, dad, mum, air, sleep, sound, light, etc.

As you can see, this consciousness has not become 'deluded', it already is 'deluded' because such 'delusion' of conscious experience of conscious experience being the way it 'seems to be' is a fait accompli. And now the question must be asked, is the conscious experience of the consciousness experience of the way things 'seem to be' a 'delusion' at all? The answer would seem to be no. The only way that the answer would be yes, would be if consciousness itself was caused to suffer this 'delusion' before it has any conscious experience of conscious experience - an impossibility.

It would seem that I was not being pedantic when I removed the word inherent from your original statement, I was actually in error. The word removed should have been delusion, and it should be replaced by the word experience. The word inherent was rather important. Your statement would then read:

"Sure we **think** we experience consciousness as we commonly define consciousness, but that is caused by our inherent experience of consciousness."

So, do we just **think** we experience consciousness as we commonly define it - as it seems to be - because consciousness is caused to project an uncaused delusion onto conscious experience, or do we simply experience consciousness as we commonly define it - as it seems to be - because consciousness is caused to do so by the inherent experience of conscious experience.

This 'delusion' of the self and the thingness of things begins to sound like nonsense. A bit of nonsense dreamed up by a consciousness which came to trust the endless logical abstraction which is concepts and words, over the simple actuality of conscious experience itself, fooling itself that conscious experience is not the only actuality of conscious experience (and conveniently ignoring the clue that is one of its endless logical abstractions, which illuminates the incomplete nature of endless logical abstraction, along the way).

Quote:

---

Rhett: Our constructed definition of consciousness relates to the empirical realm, so it is contingent, it is not absolute truth.

DT: All logical constructs relate, eventually, to the empirical realm. Whether one is a higher form of abstraction than another makes neither more or less of a construct. And said construct is no more or less contingent, eventually (I hesitate to use the word ultimately - which I might ordinarily use here instead of eventually - due to the way that it is generally contextualised by the absolutists here).

With regard to absolute truth, I presume you are speaking of logical truth about the nature of the absolute. So if logic is contingent upon the empirical realm (and how could it not be), how is anything we understand logically not contingent upon the empirical realm? And therefore, how is anything logically derived going to relate to the absolute (something inaccessible to logic due to its inability to place itself outside of totality, and the incomplete nature of any analysis of a system from within itself)?

Rhett: There are different kinds of truths. Logical truths are not contingent on the empirical realm, they are independent of reality, they are timeless, they are true for all worlds at all times.

---

We're starting to go round in circles here, no wonder when one is chasing one's tail. Everything we know, eventually has its basis in the empirical realm. Everything we can speak of is contingent upon consciousness, which is in turn contingent upon the empirical realm, or are you suggesting it isn't?. There may well be different classifications of the construct which is truth, but there is only one basis for 'truth', which is a conscious conception of it and its definitional context. 'Truth', just like anything else, is a construct of consciousness, there is no 'truth' beyond a conscious conception of truth, no 'Ultimate and absolute truth'. The logical truths which you claim are "not contingent on the empirical realm, they are independent of reality, they are timeless, they are true for all worlds at all times", are actually just the opposite. They are contingent upon the empirical realm because every conscious conception is so. They are dependent on reality because reality is a construct of consciousness, which is in turn dependent on the empirical realm. They are not timeless because they are a construct of consciousness, and consciousness is contingent upon change. They are true for all worlds at all times because that is what we define them as being - true, worlds, time - , but they are not true for all worlds at all times in the way that you are meaning because you mean the word 'true' as some sort of absolute, as opposed to meaning it as the only true that we can know - the bound up in semantic meaning, logical construct that is truth. Language and meaning is just as much of an abstraction from nature as maths is, it is our interpretation, formalisation and representation, but it may not be anything beyond that, as we have no way to 'know' whether it is or isn't.

Quote:

---

Rhett: They are only contingent on the empirical realm in the sense that they require consciousness to conceive of them for them to exist, but they are true even when they don't exist (existence = appearance to mind). We cannot be sure about anything that is contingent on the empirical realm in any way other than in my previous statement, and other than our experiences of consciousness.

---

It is confusing that you recognise existence as appearance to mind, and yet you see existence of truth beyond appearance to mind.

Your saying that logical truths are only (you use the word only as if this is some small matter) contingent upon the empirical realm in the sense that they require consciousness to conceive of them for them to exist - and that said existence is appearance to mind - means that for anything to exist, it needs a consciousness to conceive of it. And yet you insist that 'truth' 'exists' beyond conscious conception. How do you justify this?

You say that we cannot be sure about anything that is contingent upon the empirical realm and you are quite right, problem is that you don't seem to be able to accept that everything is contingent upon the empirical realm, and therefore we cannot be sure of anything.

You also say that the only thing we can be sure of is our experiences of consciousness - that is, consciousness cannot be sure of anything but consciousness' experiences of consciousness. Can you see how circular this argument is? 'Consciousness' 'experiences' 'consciousness' and therefore it can only be 'sure' of that. All these words are bound up in a semantic system of meaning which is a construct of consciousness. Such 'truth' can only be 'truth' when it is conceptualised and put into words. Such conceptualisation and conveyance is a construct, a construct grounded in and contingent upon the conscious experience of the empirical realm.

Were there no empirical realm, there would be no consciousness. This contingency is two-fold. Firstly, consciousness is a product of the empirical realm and could therefore not exist without it. Secondly, conscious wouldn't be what it is without the material of the empirical realm. It would have nothing to be conscious of and therefore wouldn't be consciousness.

This all boils down to not seeing the wood for the trees. Uncertainty is an inherent characteristic of conscious understanding. It is the point of departure for all of our theorising on the nature of consciousness and reality. It is also the point of destination.

The empirical realm is, quite literally, the daddy (and the mummy). Empiricism is perhaps the least deluded form of investigation, or at least the line of investigation which offers the least in the way of complication.

Therefore, it is my contention that anyone who claims to have certainly and completely understood the nature of such things via abstraction, is just as 'delusional' as anyone who claims to have certainly and completely understood such things via interpretation and analysis of the way things 'seem to be'.

Quote:

---

Rhett: I thought we had got past the delusion of autonomy, of free will. I have no delusion of autonomy. That 'feeling' that people have is actually a thought, a deluded thought.

---

You seem very sure about this, almost as sure as is the deluded person who has convinced themselves that they are autonomous. To take lend of your argument, how can you be sure that you have not just convinced yourself of that and might therefore be delusional?

Sure you **think** that you experience consciousness as not being autonomous, but that is caused by your delusions about consciousness.

When you say "I thought we had got past the delusion of autonomy, of free will", to whom are you refering? You say this as though it is an irrefutable fact, well know to those who explore such things, as if there is no counter position which is just as well founded. As far as I can see, there is no irrefutable reason why causality invalidates the consciousness' conception of it's autonomy.

Quote:

---

Rhett: When i was questioning consciousness i was actually questioning the apparent incompatibility of what we think we experience, that being thoughts, images, words, sensations...given that consciousness must be innumerable causes/effects.

---

I don't see this as a case of mutual exclusivity. The experience of certain groupings of the innumerable causes/effects you refer to have been marked out by consciousness for conceptualisation and designation. These groupings we refer to as thoughts, images, words, sensations...

The grouping of cause and effect which is the human and it's consciousness is an integral part of the process. It is integrated and yet identifies itself within that integration. It is as bound up within the process of causality as the word cause is bound to the word effect. Part and parcel, compatible.

Quote:

---

DT: What I am meaning to say is that the brain is, as far as I can see, the most complex conglomeration of cause and effect that we know of. From our meagre perspective, we might even say that it's direct causes are infinite, although this cannot be true as there is only one infinity and we are merely a part of 'it'. Regardless, might it be that such a complex causal phenomenon (almost a universe in itself - it's own little 'totality') might consider itself, and confer upon itself the (constructed) quality of autonomy. And might it not be correct in doing so, being as autonomy is exactly what we define it to be. In other words, might consciousness be a puppet played by, for all intents and purposes, infinite strings; and might this puppet be animated by these strings to such an extent that it is 'brought to life' by such a process, when it then might recognise itself, and define itself as being what it defines as autonomous.

Rhett: Nice description, I agree so far as, "the mind of a genius is so complex that it almost deserves to be called a totality within the totality".

---

I'm not sure who you're trying to convince of what, but my description was not meant to be twisted into a chest-beating confirmatory eulogy on your self-conception.

I also think that the mind of a genius can be rather mundane in comparison to others of less esteem, but then you and I have a different definition of the word genius. I share mine with most of the rest of the consciousnesses out there. Your definition has been hijacked long ago by, admittedly, great minds that wished to designate themselves a high position in human achievement, understood by all, whilst deriding and placing themselves above those of recognised genius.

I preferred the universe description to the totality one, it makes more sense. Universe, etymologically, means One - turned in on itself. I believe that this satisfies an illustration of a seemingly autonomous conglomeration within a greater conglomeration, be it in relation to consciousness, body, or both.

Quote:

---

Rhett: However, irrespective of its causal complexity, the mind is still subject to causality, it is still determined.

---

Yes.

Quote:

---

Rhett: Autonomy = free will = delusion.

---

No.

There is no reason why something that is determined should not experience what it defines to be its autonomy. That is, it may well be determined but that is no barrier to its experiencing itself as being free to determine *as it defines itself 'being' 'free' 'to' 'determine'*

If you were to be able to write out a set which represented causality, you would be able to identify subsets within it which you could refer to as 'consciousness' 'experiencing' 'autonomy'.

This is to say nothing of all the other compatibilist theories and explanations.

It makes me chuckle when I see some making self-proclaimed sagacious remarks about the fatalistic nature of nature, and then saying that it is "best to ignore this and go on as if one is autonomous".

Quote:

---

DT: Perhaps I was being too colloquial in my expression. When I say "It need be no more to look after all the common ways that a consciousness might characterize itself.", I am simply saying that whilst you see human consciousness's innumerable causes and effects as a barrier to it's actually being what it commonly thinks it is, I see this process as the possible (and perhaps probable) facilitator of human consciousness being what it commonly thinks it is. In fact, being as human consciousness defines what thought, existence, autonomy, definition and the like are, how could it be any other way.

Rhett: As per our definitions causality must be the cause,

---

A rather obvious and circular statement. 'Causality must be the cause', it has to be, the terms are semantically bound together.

If causality is the umbrella term for everything that possibly causes an effect, then yes it is the one and only cause, there couldn't be any other meaning, semantically.

Quote:

---

Rhett: the one and only cause of "human consciousness being what it commonly thinks it is" (to use your words).

---

Indeed, causality causes humans to experience their consciousness as autonomous, and therefore cause humans to commonly concieve of their consciousness as autonomous.

Quote:

---

Rhett: Thankfully, it can also cause us to think otherwise.

---

So it would seem.

So which one has the 'correct' causes then?

The one which has it's caused, inherent conceptions of the sense of 'I' and autonomy?

Or the one which has been caused somehow to replace it's caused inherent conceptions to no sense of 'I' and fatality?

From a viewpoint of causality, everything is exactly as it should/could be. Perhaps it makes no sense, from this viewpoint, to assert any correctness.

For my part, i'm going to keep on as if I'm an integral part of causality, causing those effects - causing those effects - causing those effects.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 945
(10/4/03 11:03 am)
Reply

Re: Doom

---

Quote:

---

Exactly: think about and understand what it means for a thing to "exist" and potentially the mystery of existence ceases to be a mystery.

---

I suppose a thing exists when it has boundaries defined by someone's consciousness (although I have not accepted that matter and consciousness arise simultaneously).

In what way does this solve the mystery of Existence, with a capital E?

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 38
(10/4/03 12:29 pm)
Reply

Re: Consciousness.

---

Hi Dave,

-----
Rhett: But how can this be if we think we can identify an 'I'? Where does that 'I' reside?

DT: In the conscious experience of space and time. Physically, in the brain, for lack of a more detailed knowledge.

Rhett: What is your definition of space? How do we 'experience' it? Sure consciousness seems to be in the brain, but I think we can do better than this, lets try to use logic rather than empiricism.

---

DT: Topologically, space is a multi-dimensional manifold, defined by a coordinate system which may be used to represent spatial relationships between objects - that is the formalised conception. Experientially, space, in the sense meant originally, is the environment in which consciousness seems to exist, designated nature amongst other things.

It really needs no definition though as it is a part and parcel affair. If one is going to consciously experience the seemingly objective reality of space and time, one must necessarily have an 'I', one must necessarily be identified as a thing in a world of things. The question of how we 'experience' space is irrelevant to the matter of whether we do or not. So the 'I' is by necessity located in the conscious experience of space and time. If we want to find it's literal location in objective reality, we can be no more specific than saying it is located in the brain, although there is more specific speculation as to it's location in the brain.

Rhett: I think you agree then that any conception of objective time or space is purely that, a conception, and a fabricated or imaginary one at that. The question of how we experience our imagining of it is of little interest to me, because our imaginings are infinite in potential. It has been so long since i have had reason to conceive of such things that I can no longer relate to it.

DT: Regarding an explanation of consciousness, and the power of utility lent to said explanation by empiricism Vs pure logic, I think a thoroughgoing empirical investigation would be far more definitive, objective and informative than that provided by logical stabs in the dark based on subjective and poorly defined conceptions of the experience of consciousness. Yes we can assign the consciousness it's causal nature, provisionally, but this is of virtually no use whatsoever in explaining what it is, how it is, or why it is; rather it is the mere beginning point of any kind of rational exploration of any phenomenon.

Rhett: In a causal totality, consciousness 'is what we define it to be' [what], 'its nature is causal' [how], and 'it is because it is' [why]. That is all we could know with certainty. Causality gives us the certainty of the nature of the totality but not its features, and my guess is that Non-causality would totally remove the possibility of certainty, we could not even be certain of its uncertainty.

---

Rhett: I think our sense of 'I' can only be an experience of a memory of past happenings of our consciousness, there is no 'I' in the present.

DT: If the 'I' is primarily an article of the memory (although it is likely so much more than that), how does that necessitate it's not being in the present? And if the 'I' is an experience of a memory of past happenings in our consciousness, from whence did these memories come?

Rhett: The act of consciousness, the causal process, creates memories. When our current act of 'consciousness' experiences memories of previous acts of 'consciousness' it usually becomes deluded, it thinks that there is a thing called consciousness. But there is no definitive 'thing'.

---

DT: Surely all things are definitive things. Things are concepts, definitions, articles of consciousness. Consciousness itself and the understanding thereof is an article of consciousness, a concept, a thing. Either there is an underlying actuality behind all of these things, or there isn't.

Rhett: Yes, it was a tautology, my mistake.

DT: Why would you separate consciousness from nature in one way (in that memory is an inseparable part of our conception of consciousness, which could not function without it, and yet your definition of consciousness is somehow separate from memory. Also in that you say that consciousness is not a thing) and identify it with nature in another way (in that you define it as being subject to causality). If time is a measure of the rate of change, and change is an article of conscious experience, surely the memory is an integral and essential aspect and facilitator of conscious experience. This is the kind of thing that Darwin can help us with, empirically.

Rhett: I am essentially stretching the concept of a thing, consciousness, to the point where it no longer exists. In a causal totality consciousness cannot exist other than as an appearance to one's own consciousness. At its simplest, consciousness is like two billiard balls inside a ring, one does a loop and then hits the other, which then does a loop and hits the first. The billiard balls represent causal memories/experiences. Notice that I have stuck memories and experiences together. Memories are only different to experiences in relation to time, which means that their essence is exactly the same, thus the saying that the enlightened constantly experience the very moment of all creation...

DT: Regardless of the thingness of things, when you say "When our current act of 'consciousness' experiences memories of previous acts of 'consciousness' it usually becomes deluded, it thinks that there is a thing called consciousness." you must then have to ask why this is, instead of jumping to the default delusion position (which presumptuously assumes an omniscient knowledge).

Rhett: I am not particularly fussed as to why people are deluded, the causal chains of that are infinitely difficult to follow, they would relate back to the first experiences of consciousness. I agree we can form some kind of idea if we want to.

DT: If our current 'act of consciousness' experiences previous 'acts of consciousness', and creates a self to which these memories of previous 'acts of consciousness' would seem to have happened, why do you think that might be? What would Occam's Razor have to say? Cutting through the crap as it does, it would say that the 'I' which is a constructed article of consciousness, had its 'I' - its sense of self, its conception of things and its own thingness - when it experienced the 'acts of consciousness' that have become memories. The 'I' which identifies itself as an autonomous conglomeration within a surrounding conglomeration, necessarily is as much a part of the conscious experience of the present as it is an article of past conscious experience of the present consigned to memory. Otherwise, memories would have to have some magical property whereby they convey upon themselves a sense of things and their own thingness (for the present experience to interpret them as), even though present experience of the present from which these memories are formed, has no such identification with things and it's own thingness.

Rhett: One can define so many levels here, we are in difficult territory indeed. Actually, I am starting to like David's Quinns description, that thoughts just 'pop' into our consciousness, very quick and easy, but nevertheless, I shall continue. Firstly, let me state that the experience of things does not predicate an 'I'. Let's then say that thoughts exist. We experience appearances to mind that suggest to us that we are an inherently existent thing, a human, because of the nature of our sense organs. We think about this and then develop the delusion of a self, an 'I'.

However, I think what we are trying to explore here is a level below that, where we define into existence appearances to mind, or happenings of consciousness, but not thought. In a certain sense this is not valid. In this case, happenings of consciousness could only be the experience of raw memories or sense inputs. Without thought, it would not be possible for delusion to be built on those, so there would be no (deluded) sense of self.

DT: So, is the sense of 'I' which human consciousness assigns itself a product of delusion, or is it a necessary article of consciousness and therefore a simple product of nature and evolution - anything but a product of delusion.

Rhett: The experience of enlightenment is proof that the sense of 'I' is not a necessary article of consciousness. Whilst there may be good reason for an enlightened person to create an awareness of self, such as when they decide to shave, they will not be deluded by their creation, they will be fully aware that it is not inherently real.

DT: Equally, with regard to delusion, might some perceived ability to be able to unlock the mysteries of the unknowable - the Ultimate (and judge everything thereon), be delusional in itself, by definition. If there is 'something' beyond our empirical surroundings, then we have nothing but logic with which to probe it. But if we understand that the 'Ultimate truth' supposedly accessible to logic is actually a delusion born of lack of understanding of the nature of logic; then one might regard one who claims to have unlocked

'Ultimate truth' via logic, as delusional. 'Logical truth about the Ultimate' seems like a subtle difference, but the difference between this and some postulated 'Ultimate independent truth' is not only like a chasm, but like a completely and definitively unbridgeable void, with no points at which to even start construction, never mind build the thing.

Of course the 'Ultimate truth' to which I refer above, is meaningless gibberish.

Rhett: I am yet to fully convince myself of the foundation or certainty of logic. But i think i am almost there. If you accept that our thoughts create all existence and definitions, then they are as logically valid as our thoughts themselves. So to falsify our assertions we would have to deny the existence of our thoughts - with our thoughts, which would be silly.

We could still deny the inherent existence of thought as we normally define it, but that would not negate the above.

---

Rhett: All 'T' is in fact delusional.

DT: I'm not sure how you reach that definitive conclusion.

Perhaps a definition of terms is required here. What do you mean by the word delusional? And how exactly are you conceptualising the 'present moment'? Perhaps a causal definition and an experiential definition would be useful for the latter.

Rhett: Delusion: False notions about the nature of reality.

---

DT: Okay, so now you're going to have to define what you mean by reality.

If you were meaning delusion in an everyday sense, i.e. someone who thinks that they are a chicken, or somebody who thinks that Relativity is a crock; I'd understand exactly what you mean. But I think you're being rather more specific than that.

Rhett: To be totally consistent i should have used a capital for reality ('Reality') or i could have used the term 'Ultimate Reality'. Basically, if one thinks that their concept of 'I' is a true reflection of Reality, then they are wrong, they are delusional. The 'I' only exists in the mind as a delusion about the nature of itself, which is essentially the totality. It is like the totality saying, "I have this thing called a mind, which i think is inherently real, and here is where it is". This is a load of waffle. The actual reality of the situation is that causal processess are occurring. If there is another human experiencing the declarations of the first, then their act of observation creates a momentary manifestation of the totality in their mind.

I tend to use the lower case 'reality' to mean the observed reality. So if i define what a chicken is and i see something that fits that description, and i call it a chicken, then i am correct in that respect. If I call myself a chicken and i do not fit my own description of what a chicken is, then i am internally logically inconsistent, and in that sense i am delusional.

---

Rhett: Present moment: A particular conceptualised moment, a reference point in an endless causal process.

---

DT: That looks like a definition of any old moment to me. You're going to have to be more specific. I asked you how exactly you are conceptualising the 'present moment', with regard to your words on the 'current act of consciousness'?

Rhett: There is no other type of moment. How could one moment be inherently more significant than any other? When i previously used the term i was just creating a reference point for the sake of discussing and illustrating mental causal flows.

---

There can be no experiential definition or description since moments do not actually exist.

---

What do you mean by exist?

If there can be no experiential definition or description of the conscious human experience of the present moment, how come there can be such definition and description with relation to past 'present moments' contained within the memory?

It's a tough one though - defining the conscious human experience of the present moment - no doubt. The anatomy of this phenomenon fascinates and confounds me.

How long is the piece of string which is the human experience of the present moment?

Again, your moving to the position of 'moments don't exist' gets us nowhere.

Even if, for the sake of argument, we provisionally allow that change in our seeming objective reality is an article of consciousness, and therefore 'moments' don't 'exist', this is the mere beginning point for any exploration of what a seeming moment is, what a seeming existence is, what a seeming thing is, what a seeming 'I' is, what a seeming conscious experience is, etc. These sort of arguments (moments don't exist, co-dependent origination, causality, it's just a construct) remind me of how needless it is to say "In my opinion", before stating an opinion; in that it couldn't be any other way. It is a formality of the context and almost irrelevant, worthy of lip service only. These things should be a caveat to any deconstruction.

Rhett: I would have been clearer if i had used the word 'inherently' instead of 'actually'. Until you realise the nature of existence, we will be at odds in our definitions. My definition of existence = appearance to mind.

Appearances to mind are a construction, they are not an accurate depiction of what is ultimately true. There is no such thing as inherent existence.

However, not only am i saying that moments cannot inherently exist, but since they are a mental conceptual construct, they cannot even be experienced as an appearance. Sure, we could define a moment as being of a few seconds duration, and thus we could experience it, but that is more like my definition of a period of time. My (constructed) definition of a moment is that it is actually not a period of time at all, it does not actually have a duration, it is equivalent to a raw causal event. Whilst it may not reveal much about the nature of Reality in itself, the act of exploring it does, or at least can.

Once you have reasoned yourself far enough you will realise, as i am, that thoughts just 'pop' into our awareness, and as such we do not actually experience consciousness 'in the moment'. The reasons why, the 'seeming' as you call it, is not worthy of a serious exploration because, as i have said before, our delusional constructs are infinite in potential.

DT: That is to say nothing of the matter that a conceptualised Ultimate reality is just a construct ;-)

Which reminds me of the koan that the Zen which can be spoken of is not the true Zen (or however it goes). This arrangement of words has a very definite meaning to convey about the nature of the conceptless state, and it does so via concepts. However if we look at the words literally, it makes no sense whatsoever. If one happens to be speaking the truth about Zen, then one is definitively speaking of the 'true Zen', if one cannot speak of the true Zen then there is no such thing as the true Zen. This is not because there is necessarily no such thing as the Zen which is beyond conceptions, it is because the word 'true' is a conception. The only truth we can be 'sure' that there is, is truth that can be spoken of - conceptualised. Any speculation as to some truth value which lies beyond concepts is just that at best, speculation. At worst, it is a complete misunderstanding of what truth is, semantics, and what concepts are.

Rhett: Yes, i agree, a conceptualised Ultimate Reality is a construct.

---

DT: My point was that your saying "Sure, we experience consciousness *as we define consciousness*, but that definition is just a construct." in no way invalidates said definition and experience, because every item of logic is just a construct. Your argument conforms to the logical fallacy of Ignoratio elenchi.

Rhett: I will edit my statement. My thoughts were oscillating at the time i wrote it, and i am still unsure. "Sure we *think* we experience consciousness as we commonly define consciousness, but that is caused by our inherent delusions about consciousness."

---

DT: Your editing makes as little sense to me. It is interesting that you use the word inherent, in conjunction with the word delusion, with regard to consciousness here. It implies an inseparability. So, if what you claim are delusions about consciousness are inseparable from consciousness, how can they be truly termed delusions by a consciousness? Only if such a consciousness had overcome said delusions. If said consciousness has somehow managed to separate itself from such delusions, then they are not inherent. But I'm being pedantic.

If we remove the word inherent, you are saying that consciousness only thinks it experiences consciousness as it seems to be, because it is caused to do so by consciousness' delusion, which could only be caused by that 'seeming to be'. Which came first then, the 'seeming to be' or the 'delusion'?

Rhett: Thoughts just pop into our consciousness, end of story. If we are lucky, those thoughts that pop in might become truthful, as per causality. Our delusions, that we have a will etc, are a part of those causal processes.

DT: The infant consciousness, once created, has not had sufficient cause to become 'deluded' so. At what point does it become 'deluded', and what causes that 'delusion'. The non-'deluded' consciousness begins to experience and that non-'deluded' consciousness experiences experience as experience seems to be. Now it would seem that this fledgling consciousness is actually 'deluded' already, it is already experiencing conscious experience as it 'seems to be'. It is already 'carving up it's experience into chunks' which it will later come to know as itself, hunger, breasts, milk, dad, mum, air, sleep, sound, light, etc.

yet

As you can see, this consciousness has not become 'deluded', it already is 'deluded' because such 'delusion' of conscious experience of conscious experience being the way it 'seems to be' is a fait accompli. And now the question must be asked, is the conscious experience of the consciousness experience of the way things 'seem to be' a 'delusion' at all? The answer would seem to be no. The only way that the answer would be yes, would be if consciousness itself was caused to suffer this 'delusion' before it has any conscious experience of conscious experience - an impossibility.

It would seem that I was not being pedantic when I removed the word inherent from your original statement, I was actually in error. The word removed should have been delusion, and it should be replaced by the word experience. The word inherent was rather important. Your statement would then read:

"Sure we *think* we experience consciousness as we commonly define consciousness, but that is caused by our inherent experience of consciousness."

Rhett: What you have done is find the deeper or preceding cause. "Our inherent experience of consciousness" causes us to form 'our inherent delusions about consciousness'. I agree that my use of the word inherent is potentially misleading, but we simply cannot see the world any other way. Whilst we can conceive of Ultimate Reality, of Truth, we are inherently incapable of experiencing it.

We can start to form causal chains in our dialogue;

Our inherent experience of consciousness -> Our (inherent) delusions about consciousness -> Our common definitions of consciousness -> Us thinking we experience consciousness as we define it.

DT: So, do we just *think* we experience consciousness as we commonly define it - as it seems to be - because consciousness is caused to project an uncaused delusion onto conscious experience, or do we simply experience consciousness as we commonly define it - as it seems to be - because consciousness is caused to do so by the inherent experience of conscious experience.

This 'delusion' of the self and the thingness of things begins to sound like nonsense. A bit of nonsense dreamed up by a consciousness which came to trust the endless logical abstraction which is concepts and words, over the simple actuality of conscious experience itself, fooling itself that conscious experience is not the only actuality of conscious experience (and conveniently ignoring the clue that is one of it's endless logical abstractions, which illuminates the incomplete nature of endless logical abstraction, along the way).

Rhett: Nothing can be uncaused. If you agree that enlightenment is possible, then there are fundamentally different ways of experiencing consciousness. I think you are missing integral components of understanding that would enable you to follow my posts.

-----
Rhett: Our constructed definition of consciousness relates to the empirical realm, so it is contingent, it is not absolute truth.

DT: All logical constructs relate, eventually, to the empirical realm. Whether one is a higher form of abstraction than another makes neither more or less of a construct. And said construct is no more or less contingent, eventually (I hesitate to use the word ultimately - which I might ordinarily use here instead of eventually - due to the way that it is generally contextualised by the absolutists here).

With regard to absolute truth, I presume you are speaking of logical truth about the nature of the absolute. So if logic is contingent upon the empirical realm (and how could it not be), how is anything we understand logically not contingent upon the empirical realm? And therefore, how is anything logically derived going to relate to the absolute (something inaccessible to logic due to its inability to place itself outside of totality, and the incomplete nature of any analysis of a system from within itself)?

Rhett: There are different kinds of truths. Logical truths are not contingent on the empirical realm, they are independent of reality, they are timeless, they are true for all worlds at all times.

---

DT: We're starting to go round in circles here, no wonder when one is chasing one's tail. Everything we know, eventually has its basis in the empirical realm. Everything we can speak of is contingent upon consciousness, which is in turn contingent upon the empirical realm, or are you suggesting it isn't?. There may well be different classifications of the construct which is truth, but there is only one basis for 'truth', which is a conscious conception of it and its definitional context. 'Truth', just like anything else, is a construct of consciousness, there is no 'truth' beyond a conscious conception of truth, no 'Ultimate and absolute truth'. The logical truths which you claim are "not contingent on the empirical realm, they are independent of reality, they are timeless, they are true for all worlds at all times", are actually just the opposite. They are contingent upon the empirical realm because every conscious conception is so. They are dependent on reality because reality is a construct of consciousness, which is in turn dependent on the empirical realm. They are not timeless because they are a construct of consciousness, and consciousness is contingent upon change. They are true for all worlds at all times because that is what we define them as being - true, worlds, time - , but they are not true for all worlds at all times in the way that you are meaning because you mean the word 'true' as some sort of absolute, as opposed to meaning it as the only true that we can know - the bound up in semantic meaning, logical construct that is truth. Language and meaning is just as much of an abstraction from nature as maths is, it is our interpretation, formalisation and representation, but it may not be anything beyond that, as we have no way to 'know' whether it is or isn't.

Rhett: My previous post, below, is my answer to that.

---

Rhett: They are only contingent on the empirical realm in the sense that they require consciousness to conceive of them for them to exist, but they are true even when they don't exist (existence = appearance to mind). We cannot be sure about anything that is contingent on the empirical realm in any way other than in my previous statement, and other than our experiences of consciousness.

---

DT: It is confusing that you recognise existence as appearance to mind, and yet you see existence of truth beyond appearance to mind.

Your saying that logical truths are only (you use the word only as if this is some small matter) contingent upon the empirical realm in the sense that they require consciousness to conceive of them for them to exist - and that said existence is appearance to mind - means that for anything to exist, it needs a consciousness to conceive of it. And yet you insist that 'truth' 'exists' beyond conscious conception. How do you justify this?

Rhett: That is exactly what I did not state. I did not state 'that they exist beyond appearance to mind', I stated that, 'they are true even when they don't exist as an appearance to mind'.

DT: You say that we cannot be sure about anything that is contingent upon the empirical realm and you are quite right, problem is that you don't seem to be able to accept that everything is contingent upon the empirical realm, and therefore we cannot be sure of anything.

Rhett: In the moment of a logical truth popping into our mind, we experience

a truth that is not contingent on the empirical realm in a way that destroys certainty of its truth. These logical truths are founded on the truth of our 'experience(s) of consciousness', which we could not possibly falsify without being totally contradictory. I admit that i am not completely certain of this myself, i am in the process of exploring it.

DT: You also say that the only thing we can be sure of is our experiences of consciousness - that is, consciousness cannot be sure of anything but consciousness' experiences of consciousness. Can you see how circular this argument is? 'Consciousness' 'experiences' 'consciousness' and therefore it can only be 'sure' of that. All these words are bound up in a semantic system of meaning which is a construct of consciousness. Such 'truth' can only be 'truth' when it is conceptualised and put into words. Such conceptualisation and conveyance is a construct, a construct grounded in and contingent upon the conscious experience of the empirical realm.

Were there no empirical realm, there would be no consciousness. This contingency is two-fold. Firstly, consciousness is a product of the empirical realm and could therefore not exist without it. Secondly, conscious wouldn't be what it is without the material of the empirical realm. It would have nothing to be conscious of and therefore wouldn't be consciousness.

This all boils down to not seeing the wood for the trees. Uncertainty is an inherent characteristic of conscious understanding. It is the point of departure for all of our theorising on the nature of consciousness and reality. It is also the point of destination.

The empirical realm is, quite literally, the daddy (and the mummy). Empiricism is perhaps the least deluded form of investigation, or at least the line of investigation which offers the least in the way of complication.

Therefore, it is my contention that anyone who claims to have certainly and completely understood the nature of such things via abstraction, is just as 'delusional' as anyone who claims to have certainly and completely understood such things via interpretation and analysis of the way things 'seem to be'.

---

Rhett: I thought we had got past the delusion of autonomy, of free will. I have no delusion of autonomy. That 'feeling' that people have is actually a thought, a deluded thought.

---

DT: You seem very sure about this, almost as sure as is the deluded person who has convinced themselves that they are autonomous. To take lend of your argument, how can you be sure that you have not just convinced yourself of that and might therefore be delusional?

Sure you *think* that you experience consciousness as not being autonomous, but that is caused by your delusions about consciousness.

When you say "I thought we had got past the delusion of autonomy, of free will", to whom are you refering? You say this as though it is an irrefutable fact, well know to those who explore such things, as if there is no counter position which is just as well founded. As far as I can see, there is no irrefutable reason why causality invalidates the consciousness' conception of it's autonomy.

Rhett: Since most people think they are autonomous, i would hardly argue that that is not the case. I agree that consciousness is capable of the conception of autonomy, just as it is capable of the conception of matter or energy. However, causality irrefutably invalidates these conceptions.

---

Rhett: When i was questioning consciousness i was actually questioning the apparent incompatibility of what we think we experience, that being thoughts, images, words, sensations...given that consciousness must be innumerable causes/effects.

---

DT: I don't see this as a case of mutual exclusivity. The experience of certain groupings of the innumerable causes/effects you refer to have been marked out by consciousness for conceptualisation and designation. These groupings we refer to as thoughts, images, words, sensations...

The grouping of cause and effect which is the human and it's consciousness is an integral part of the process. It is integrated and yet identifies itself within that integration. It is as bound up within the process of causality as the word cause is bound to the word effect. Part and parcel, compatible.

Rhett: If consciousness is momentary and causal, how can there be a true 'I', and thus how could there be the experience of groupings of causes? Try to imagine consciousness as a single link in a causal chain, it just can't be done. Thoughts just couldn't be what we think they are, though that would not necessarily invalidate them.

---

DT: What I am meaning to say is that the brain is, as far as I can see, the most complex conglomeration of cause and effect that we know of. From our meagre perspective, we might even say that it's direct causes are infinite, although this cannot be true as there is only one infinity and we are merely a part of 'it'. Regardless, might it be that such a complex causal phenomenon (almost a universe in itself - it's own little 'totality') might consider itself, and confer upon itself the (constructed) quality of autonomy. And might it not be correct in doing so, being as autonomy is exactly what we define it to be. In other words, might consciousness be a puppet played by, for all intents and purposes, infinite strings; and might this puppet be animated by these strings to such an extent that it is 'brought to life' by such a process, when it then might recognise itself, and define itself as being what it defines as autonomous.

Rhett: Nice description, I agree so far as, "the mind of a genius is so complex that it almost deserves to be called a totality within the totality".

---

DT: I'm not sure who you're trying to convince of what, but my description was not meant to be twisted into a chest-beating confirmatory eulogy on your self-conception.

I also think that the mind of a genius can be rather mundane in comparison to others of less esteem, but then you and I have a different definition of the word genius. I share mine with most of the rest of the consciousnesses out there. Your definition has been hijacked long ago by, admittedly, great minds that wished to designate themselves a high position in human achievement, understood by all, whilst deriding and placing themselves above those of recognised genius.

I preferred the universe description to the totality one, it makes more sense. Universe, etymologically, means One - turned in on itself. I believe that this satisfies an illustration of a seemingly autonomous conglomeration within a greater conglomeration, be it in relation to consciousness, body, or both.

Rhett: I struggle to make sense of your definition. Are you defining a higher form of consciousness, one that can think about itself to the point of being assured of its own existence and autonomy? If so, does that mean that genius = big ego?

-----
Rhett: However, irrespective of its causal complexity, the mind is still subject to causality, it is still determined.
-----

DT: Yes.

-----
Rhett: Autonomy = free will = delusion.
-----

DT: No.

There is no reason why something that is determined should not experience what it defines to be it's autonomy. That is, it may well be determined but that is no barrier to it's experiencing itself as being free to determine *as it defines itself 'being' 'free' 'to' 'determine'*

If you were to be able to write out a set which represented causality, you would be able to identify subsets within it which you could refer to as 'consciousness' 'experiencing' 'autonomy'.

This is to say nothing of all the other compatibilist theories and explanations.

It makes me chuckle when I see some making self-proclaimed sagacious remarks about the fatalistic nature of nature, and then saying that it is "best to ignore this and go on as if one is autonomous".

Rhett: The whole concept of autonomy is predicated on the existence of an

'I'. Once one realises with full force that that sense or concept of 'I' is a total delusion, one will not experience the delusion of an 'I'. Thus, one no longer thinks or talks in terms of autonomy or non-autonomy. One is beyond such duality.

-----
DT: Perhaps I was being too colloquial in my expression. When I say "It need be no more to look after all the common ways that a consciousness might characterize itself.", I am simply saying that whilst you see human consciousness's innumerable causes and effects as a barrier to it's actually being what it commonly thinks it is, I see this process as the possible (and perhaps probable) facilitator of human consciousness being what it commonly thinks it is. In fact, being as human consciousness defines what thought, existence, autonomy, definition and the like are, how could it be any other way.

Rhett: As per our definitions causality must be the cause,
-----

DT: A rather obvious and circular statement. 'Causality must be the cause', it has to be, the terms are semantically bound together.

If causality is the umbrella term for everything that possibly causes an effect, then yes it is the one and only cause, there couldn't be any other meaning, semantically.

---

Rhett: the one and only cause of "human consciousness being what it commonly thinks it is" (to use your words).

---

DT: Indeed, causality causes humans to experience their consciousness as autonomous, and therefore cause humans to commonly concieve of their consciousness as autonomous.

Rhett: Most but not all. You really don't like the concept of enlightenment do you?

---

Rhett: Thankfully, it can also cause us to think otherwise.

---

DT: So it would seem.

So which one has the 'correct' causes then?

The one which has it's caused, inherent conceptions of the sense of 'I' and autonomy?

Or the one which has been caused somehow to replace it's caused inherent conceptions to no sense of 'I' and fatality?

From a viewpoint of causality, everything is exactly as it should/could be. Perhaps it makes no sense, from this viewpoint, to assert any correctness.

For my part, i'm going to keep on as if I'm an integral part of causality, causing those effects - causing those effects - causing those effects.

Rhett: This is where you need to determine what you value. I value truth and wisdom. I also realise, as i have said earlier in our discussion, that choice and will are a part of causality, that they are integral to the nature of consciousness. So if when you say you value the delusion of autonomy you mean you value the exercising of will, then i totally agree with you.

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31n
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> ultimate reality and ambiguous definiton

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                              | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| quasipseudoRegistered UserPosts: 2(11/3/03 7:26 pm)Reply | ultimate reality and ambiguous definiton <hr/> Kevin Solway: Well, it comes down to our definition of "wise". Now you know the saying, "Ignorance is bliss." Clearly, to a lot of people ignorance is actually wisdom, and the more ignorant you are the more wise you are! For example, if you don't claim to know anything at all, then it's hard for anybody to disagree with you. So it's a way to be happy. It's a form of safety. But I, personally, define wisdom to be a very particular thing - which is my choice - that's how I define it, as a wise person. End of story. Reality is definitely a matter of definitions, and it all depends on whether a person has a conscience as to which reality they're going to choose, and how they're going to make definitions, and what they're actually going to call "wise". Are you going to call ignorance "wise"? It's your choice. David Quinn: But you haven't given any reasons, Kevin, why your conception of reality is the wise one. Dan Rowden: And that's what I'm pressing at. Kevin: Well, wise means insurmountable by using correct reasoning. David: So you've defined wisdom in this way - that it's unchanging, insurmountable, that sort of stuff. Kevin: That's right. Wisdom is unable to be defeated by correct reasoning. David: So it's still a conception. Kevin: Sure. David: And . . . I'm sorry, Danny, I'm taking over your role here. Dan Rowden: That's fine, you're doing a good job there. Yes, people will hear that, and they will think, "Oh well, fine. If he wants to define reality in that way, and call it wise, then good luck to him. I'll define reality a different way and I'll call that wise." So all these qualitative judgments you make about people being inferior and all that sort of stuff doesn't hold water, if definitions are |

|                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                          | arbitrary . . . Yes. Definitions are arbitrary. If there IS an ultimate reality, our subjective nature makes it impossible to become fully aware of it. Enlightenment is an illusion of overwhelming understanding. It refers to the altered state of perception that an individual experiences when they truly they believe they have a complete understanding of the world. It is a practical behaviour that promotes peace and global understanding and allows the practioner to be devoid of human suffering through strong belief. Even so, it is only another ideology, another subjective perception, something humans will find infintely difficult to escape.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1244(11/4/03 12:35 pm)Reply  | ultimate reality and ambigious definiton <hr/> My eyes are permanently crossed and the tip of my nose has radiation poisoning from trying to read that.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 71(11/4/03 12:55 pm)Reply | Re: ultimate reality and ambigious definiton <hr/> Yes. Definitions are arbitrary. If there IS an ultimate reality, our subjective nature makes it impossible to become fully aware of it. Depends what you mean by fully aware. Whilst human consciousness cannot be aware of all that is, it can be fully aware of the nature of all experiences. Enlightenment is an illusion of overwhelming understanding. Who are you to make such statements? You are proffering this as a truth. Why do you assert that it is an illusion? It refers to the altered state of perception that an individual experiences when they truly they believe they have a complete understanding of the world. You can create this definition if you want, but i think it is hogwash. If you allow me to tweak it a bit i will go along with you: Enlightenment is precipitated by a complete understanding of the fundamental nature of the world. It is a practical behaviour that promotes peace and global understanding and allows the practioner to be devoid of human suffering through strong belief. |

You have slipped up again. The practitioner becomes devoid of human suffering through the complete absence of delusion about the nature of reality.

Even so, it is only another ideology, another subjective perception, something humans will find infinitely difficult to escape.

In a theoretical sense it could be said that enlightenment is infinitely difficult to escape, because one's mind becomes completely rational such that it will not tolerate regression into delusion.

Rhett

quasipseudo
Registered User
Posts: 3
(11/5/03 11:22 pm)
Reply

again

---

Yes, Apologies for the small font, everyone.

pseudo.

---

Kevin Solway: Well, it comes down to our definition of "wise". Now you know the saying, "Ignorance is bliss." Clearly, to a lot of people ignorance is actually wisdom, and the more ignorant you are the more wise you are! For example, if you don't claim to know anything at all, then it's hard for anybody to disagree with you. So it's a way to be happy. It's a form of safety. But I, personally, define wisdom to be a very particular thing - which is my choice - that's how I define it, as a wise person. End of story. Reality is definitely a matter of definitions, and it all depends on whether a person has a conscience as to which reality they're going to choose, and how they're going to make definitions, and what they're actually going to call "wise". Are you going to call ignorance "wise"? It's your choice.

David Quinn: But you haven't given any reasons, Kevin, why your conception of reality is the wise one.

Dan Rowden: And that's what I'm pressing at.

Kevin: Well, wise means insurmountable by using correct reasoning.

David: So you've defined wisdom in this way - that it's unchanging, insurmountable, that sort of stuff.

Kevin: That's right. Wisdom is unable to be defeated by correct reasoning.

David: So it's still a conception.

Kevin: Sure.

David: And . . . I'm sorry, Danny, I'm taking over your role here.

Dan Rowden: That's fine, you're doing a good job there. Yes, people will hear that, and they will think, "Oh well, fine. If he wants to define reality in that way, and call it wise, then good luck to him. I'll define reality a different way and I'll call that wise." So all these qualitative judgments you make about people being inferior and all that sort of stuff doesn't hold water, if definitions are arbitrary . . .

Yes. Definitions are arbitrary. If there IS an ultimate reality, our subjective nature makes it impossible to become fully aware of it. Enlightenment is an illusion of overwhelming understanding. It refers to the altered state of perception that an individual experiences when they truly believe they have a complete understanding of the world. It is a practical behaviour that promotes peace and global understanding and allows the practitioner to be devoid of human suffering through strong belief. Even so, it is only another ideology, another subjective perception, something humans will find infinitely difficult to escape.

quasipseudo
Registered User
Posts: 4
(11/5/03 11:27 pm)
Reply

surprise surprise..the infinitive perception cycle continues

---

For Rhett:

Depends what you mean by fully aware. Whilst human consciousness cannot be aware of all that is, it can be fully aware of the nature of all experiences.

How can you not be aware of something but understand its nature? This implies an understanding of things outside our imagination. Even if we could understand the nature of all things, who's to say that particular understanding of reality is ultimate? The argument once again turns to subjectivity.

Who are you to make such statements? You are proffering this as a truth. Why do you assert that it is an illusion?

I assert that enlightenment is an illusion in the sense that it is just another subjective percept. A 'wise' person's understanding of reality (let's call it enlightenment) is no more correct than that of a foolish person's.

You can create this definition if you want, but i think it is hogwash. If you allow me to tweak it a bit i will go along with you: Enlightenment is precipitated by a complete understanding of the fundamental nature of the world.

I can see where you are coming from, but once again subjectivity takes its hold. You are saying that an enlightened person is one who understands the fundamental nature of the world. In his eyes undoubtedly he believes that he does understand the fundamental nature of the world. But how does this experience differ from a foolish person's own satisfaction of the world as he sees it? If a fool also has the unshakeable belief of complete understanding then how is he any less 'enlightened'?

You have slipped up again. The practitioner becomes devoid of human suffering through the complete absence of delusion about the nature of reality.

Delusion is a false belief strongly held in spite of invalidating evidence; an opinion. Enlightenment is just another opinion of the world- how can you be devoid of opinion, perspective?

In a theoretical sense it could be said that enlightenment is infinitely difficult to escape, because one's mind becomes completely rational such that it will not tolerate regression into delusion.

Yes. Anyone with a strong ideology will find it difficult to escape that ideology. Even now our two ideologies differ and we argue our own views endlessly. Say that we both unshakeably believe we have a complete understanding of the nature of the world, neither of us can be convinced otherwise. We are both enlightened, you are enlightened and not I, both of us are fools: The judgement lies in the hands of an independent onlooker who, just as we are, is subject to his own perspective and definition of enlightenment. This is the inescapable subjective perception I was originally referring to.

pseudo

ksolway

Registered User

Posts: 159

(11/5/03 11:54 pm)

Reply

Re: surprise surprise..the infinitive perception cycle contin

---

pseudo wrote:

Quote:

---

How can you not be aware of something but understand its nature?

---

If you are aware of the fundamental nature of "things" (ie, all things), then you are aware of the fundamental nature of things that you have yet to become aware of.

Quote:

---

Even if we could understand the nature of all things, who's to say that particular understanding of reality is ultimate?

---

The wise person.

Quote:

---

The argument once again turns to subjectivity.

---

Yes, even the person who is absolutely correct has a subjective opinion. Having a subjective opinion doesn't necessarily make it faulty.

Quote:

---

I assert that enlightenment is an illusion in the sense that it is just another subjective percept.

---

That's an example of an incorrect subjective opinion.

Quote:

---

A 'wise' person's understanding of reality (let's call it enlightenment) is no more correct than that of a foolish person's.

---

A wise person, by definition, has absolutely correct opinions, while a fool, by definition, has incorrect opinions.

Explain why you think a person cannot be absolutely correct in an opinion (knowing full well of course that you won't believe your own explanation to be correct).

Quote:

---

You are saying that an enlightened person is one who understands the fundamental nature of the world. In his eyes undoubtedly he believes that he does understand the fundamental nature of the world. But how does this experience differ from a foolish person's own satisfaction of the world as he sees it?

---

The wise person's experience is wise (correct), while the foolish person's experience is foolish (wrong).

Quote:

---

If a fool also has the unshakeable belief of complete understanding then how is he any less 'enlightened?'

---

He is less enlightened to the degree that he is a fool.

Quote:

---

Delusion is a false belief strongly held in spite of invalidating evidence; an opinion.

---

Yes.

Quote:

---

Enlightenment is just another opinion of the world- how can you be devoid of opinion, perspective?

---

You can't be devoid of an opinion or perspective, but some opinions are correct while others are wrong.

Quote:

---

Say that we both unshakeably believe we have a complete understanding of the nature of the world, neither of us can be convinced otherwise. We are both enlightened, you are enlightened and not I, both of us are fools:

---

People can believe they are enlightened, but that doesn't mean they are. Similarly, you might believe someone isn't enlightened, but that doesn't mean they aren't.

Quote:

---

The judgement lies in the hands of an independent onlooker who, just as we are, is subject to his own perspective and definition of enlightenemnt.

---

If people have two different definitions of enlightenment, then they wouldn't be able to communicate properly. For example, if one person defined enlightenment to be "understanding of reality", while another defined it to be "feeling happy".

If both parties believed themselves to have a correct understanding of reality, but their understandings differ, then they can't both be right. One

|                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                         | might be right, or they might both be wrong.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1004(11/6/03 1:12 am)Reply | Re: surprise surprise..the infinitive perception cycle contin <hr/> You are saying that an enlightened person is one who understands the fundamental nature of the world. In his eyes undoubtedly he believes that he does understand the fundamental nature of the world. But how does this experience differ from a foolish person's own satisfaction of the world as he sees it? If a fool also has the unshakeable belief of complete understanding then how is he any less 'enlightened?' You really do have a valid point, but you take it too far. There is a huge difference between the person who constantly and with purpose examines all possibilities in the light of any evidence he can bring forth, such as logic and consistency, having the goal of discovery, versus the person who examines nothing and accepts on faith some circular system such as the Bible, having the goal of soothing himself. If people thought as you do, we would not have even bothered to figure out how the heavenly bodies revolve around suns and galaxy cores, but would have been confident that they all revolve around us. And according to you, we would have been equally wise. But I think we must always realize that we may not have the full picture, that there is likely something we have not even imagined. Perhaps we have the solar system only partly right, and in fact, while Newton's laws are correct, it is really naught but a child's wind up toy on a Christmas morning. (One of my darker suspicions is that we are 'owned' by an irresponsible child.) |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1685(11/6/03 9:38 am)Reply      | ----- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> (One of my darker suspicions is that we are 'owned' by an irresponsible child.) <hr/> why dark?! Not that all suspicion isn't dark.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |

quasipseudo

Registered User

Posts: 5

(11/7/03 1:03 am)

Reply

the battle of ideologies continues

---

Quote:

---

A wise person, by definition, has absolutely correct opinions, while a fool, by definition, has incorrect opinions. You can't be devoid of an opinion or perspective, but some opinions are correct while others are wrong.

---

I am glad that we agree that enlightenment is just another perspective/opinion. By definition, a wise person's opinion is correct you say. I wonder WHAT makes it 'correct?' If we return to the 'wise' and 'foolish' persons I mentioned earlier, both of whom believe without a doubt they fully understand the world. How do we decide who is the wise person? Their value to society; their practical value? Their confidence? Their arguments? We can only judge using subjective opinion, our own ideologies. Maybe only a 'wise' person can judge another as 'wise.' In such a case a 'foolish' person who is 'enlightened' can judge another 'foolish' person as wise, and the cycle continues. It is a neverending battle of ideologies.

Quote:

---

Explain why you think a person cannot be absolutely correct in an opinion (knowing full well of course that you won't believe your own explanation to be correct).

---

Because being 'correct' can only be judged by further opinion, which in turn can only be judged by further opinion, ad infinitum. Actually, I do believe my own explanation, but at the same time I recognise its just another opinion and therefore incorrect; its value can only be judged by subjective minds.

Quote:

---

People can believe they are enlightened, but that doesn't mean they are. Similarly, you might believe someone isn't enlightened, but that doesn't mean they aren't.

---

I agree completely.

Quote:

---

If people have two different definitions of enlightenment, then they wouldn't be able to communicate properly. For example, if one person defined enlightenment to be "understanding of reality", while another defined it to be "feeling happy".

---

I Agree.

Quote:

---

If both parties believed themselves to have a correct understanding of reality, but their understandings differ, then they can't both be right. One might be right, or they might both be wrong.

---

Whoever judges who is right or wrong is also subject to being judged as right or wrong. How can 'correctness' be universally defined?

quasi

quasipseudo

Registered User

Posts: 6

(11/7/03 1:15 am)

Reply

nice one bruv

---

Quote:

---

You really do have a valid point, but you take it too far. There is a huge difference between the person who constantly and with purpose examines all possibilities in the light of any evidence he can bring forth, such as logic and consistency, having the goal of discovery, versus the person who examines nothing and accepts on faith some circular system such as the Bible, having the goal of soothing himself. If people thought as you do, we would not have even bothered to figure out how the heavenly bodies revolve around suns and galaxy cores, but would have been confident that they all revolve around us. And according to you, we would have been equally wise.

---

Good argument. I agree that science seems to be a 'correct' understanding of the world, since it has enabled the surrounding environment to be manipulated. Science works, and its success or 'correctness' can be measured and applied. This does not help the case for enlightenment, which is an entirely subjective experience that has no external validation apart from further opinion.

Quote:

---

But I think we must always realize that we may not have the full picture, that there is likely something we have not even imagined. Perhaps we have the solar system only partly right, and in fact, while Newton's laws are correct, it is really naught but a child's wind up toy on a Christmas morning. (One of my darker suspicions is that we are 'owned' by an irresponsible child.)

---

Yes, scientific progression may be boundless.

quasi

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 163
(11/7/03 8:35 pm)
Reply

Re: the battle of ideologies continues

---

Quote:

---

I am glad that we agree that enlightenment is just another perspective/opinion. By definition, a wise person's opinion is correct you say. I wonder WHAT makes it 'correct?' If we return to the 'wise' and 'foolish' persons I mentioned earlier, both of whom believe without a doubt they fully understand the world. How do we decide who is the wise person? Their value to society; their practical value? Their confidence? Their arguments? We can only judge using subjective opinion, our own ideologies. Maybe only a 'wise' person can judge another as 'wise.'

---

Yes, only the wise person can decide. If the person in question is wise themselves, then they will be able to judge correctly for themselves. If they are not wise, then they will not be able to judge who is wise, and will therefore not know who is a good judge.

Quote:

---

In such a case a 'foolish' person who is 'enlightened' can judge another 'foolish' person as wise, and the cycle continues. It is a neverending battle of ideologies.

---

It is a battle of wisdom versus ignorance, no matter whether the ignorant think they are the wise ones.

Quote:

---

Because being 'correct' can only be judged by further opinion

---

It only needs one opinion - the opinion of the wise person - to be able to judge what is correct. If you are wise yourself, then you will only need your own opinion. If you are not wise then you will have no way of knowing whose opinion is right. Even if every other being in the universe were to judge you a certain way, you would have no way of knowing whether they were right or not.

Quote:

---

Whoever judges who is right or wrong is also subject to being judged as right or wrong. How can 'correctness' be universally defined?

---

Let's say there was only one person in the universe who values reason, and was wise. Even though his judgements would be universally correct, it wouldn't make any sense for him try and impose his views on others, for the same reason that it would be a waste of time to try and teach algebra to sheep.

He would just have to get used to being alone.

quasipseudo
Registered User
Posts: 7
(11/24/03 7:49 pm)
Reply

get on with it, o 'wise' one

---

Ok Kevin, rather than repeatedly stating your useless dogmatics, would you mind backing up your argument with reason (you are an advocate, aren't you?)?

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 401
(11/24/03 9:10 pm)
Reply

Re: get on with it, o 'wise' one

---

Enlightenment relieves them of the need to understand all things empirical. By concentrating on the circular nature of their understanding of what is ultimate reality they limit the stress caused by being physically unable to understand everything the brain once wished to know (and what the brain must go through in the process of removing attachments). What else does having a knowledge of ultimate reality give one? Their answers are in the same style as those who are asked to explain faith.

So they have had to remove attachments to reach this state. I am unable to judge if they have done so to the extent of enlightenment, not knowing the nature of their day-to-day lives, as well as not being enlightened. I will say their arguments are consistent, and they give the appearance of having given up most attachments. The removal of interferences would mean they spend more time alone and thus concentrate more on their own thoughts. While this would drive many insane, they do not display any signs of madness, except if one pre-conceives that they are deluding themselves that they are enlightened.

Regardless of whether they have removed attachments not consistent with rational thought, or haven't, only those who have done so could make a judgement. Catch 22's are part of logic, just accept it.

quasipseudo
Registered User
Posts: 8
(11/27/03 2:03 pm)
Reply

enlightenment requires faith

---

Thank you most kindly, jimhaz, for responding to my skepticism towards wisdom and enlightenment. The conclusion we seem to have reached is that neither wisdom nor enlightenment is explainable by reason, at least, there will always be unanswered questions that reason alone cannot account for. Hence the role of faith in spiritual enlightenment, and the inability of any 'wise' person to give a direct answer as to the true nature of enlightenment.

My personal view is that there is a spiritual enlightenment, and I hold great respect for buddhist monks and whatnot. I remain skeptical towards the notion of intellectual enlightenment, claims coming from Kevin and Dan, reason being that they themselves cannot argue interllectually for enlightenment and wisdom, ie. they too are reliant on faith.

The cyclic nature of the argument between Kevin and I above does not reflect the Catch22 nature of logic, it demonstrates an inability to rely on reason alone in attaining enlightenment and takes a step towards an existentialist ideology since ultimate reality cannot be absolutely defined by those claiming to be wise.

Scientific progression, on the other hand, does support the existence of an ultimate reality (since scientific discoveries about the nature of the world have enabled our manipulation of it). One who has total intellectual knowledge may therefore be enlightened. This prospect is hardly imaginable, let alone practical seeing as science is still in its infancy. Thus, the same conclusion is reached: "intellectual" enlightenment is unattainable without faith (or some other parameter outside of reason) and is therefore dependent on ideological opinion.

I would appreciate anyone who can add to this discussion.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 1824

(12/1/03 6:23 pm)

Reply

Re: enlightenment requires faith

---

I'll have a go.

Quote:

---

The conclusion we seem to have reached is that neither wisdom nor enlightenment is explainable by reason, at least, there will always be unanswered questions that reason alone cannot account for.

---

This is wrong. Enlightenment/wisdom/ultimate reality is indeed fully explainable to the mind that is sufficiently rational and undeluded.

Most "unanswered questions" entertained by the human race, at least in regards to philosophy, are falsely created ones - that is, they are created out of deluded thought processes and have no real existence. A simple example is "What created everything?"

Quote:

---

Hence the role of faith in spiritual enlightenment, and the inability of any 'wise' person to give a direct answer as to the true nature of enlightenment.

---

Spiritual people are perfectly capable of giving direct answers, Indeed, they give them all the time. The problem is that their ignorant listeners often have difficulty comprehending these answers. They lack that special turn of mind which thrives in the utmost simplicity which is wisdom.

Moreover, the faith of a genuine spiritual person isn't really intellectual in nature, but rather characterological and existential. In other words, it has nothing to do with blindly adopting an unfounded belief, as you seem to imply. Rather, it refers to the courage and desire to give oneself entirely over to a Truth which one already understands. It is a bit like the scientists at NASA having "faith" in the logic of their mathematical reasonings whenever they launch a space probe. They know the logic is faultless, but nevertheless it still takes courage to place trust in it.

Quote:

---

The cyclic nature of the argument between Kevin and I above does not reflect the Catch22 nature of logic, it demonstrates an inability to rely on reason alone in attaining enlightenment and takes a step towards an existentialist ideology since ultimate reality cannot be absolutely defined by those claiming to be wise.

---

The phrase "absolutely defined" doesn't mean anything. It falls into the same category as "banana-flavoured justice" or "noisy minus sign".

A definition is simply an arbitrary construction of thought. To accept or reject a definition merely because it does not exist in an absolute sense would obviously be stupid - for it cannot be otherwise. It would also be stupid to reject a piece of knowledge simply on the basis that it is constructed out of arbitrary definitions. All knowledge, without exception, is constructed out of arbitrary definitions.

Consider the definition of "Ultimate Reality" that I tend to favour, for example - that which is permanent, unchanging, everywhere and everywhen, absolute in nature, beyond life and death, and responsible for the existence of all things. Yes, the definition is subjective and arbitrary in the sense that I have made it up in my own mind and could just as easily be defined in another way. And yet, at the same time, I am perfectly satisfied that it cannot be surpassed as a definition of Ultimate Reality. The definition literally embodies the ultimate goal of philosophy and that, in the end, is all that matters.

Quote:

---

Scientific progression, on the other hand, does support the existence of an ultimate reality (since scientific discoveries about the nature of the world have enabled our manipulation of it). One who has total intellectual knowledge may therefore be enlightened. This prospect is hardly imaginable, let alone practical seeing as science is still in its infancy.

---

Well, we can safely say that it will never happen, due to the fact that the Universe is both endless and infinitely complex. But this has no bearing on the question of enlightenment, which is a vastly different kind of knowledge to scientific theorizing. A person shut away in a cupboard all his life can just as easily become enlightened as the person who leads a rich and varied life and who is fully versed in the scientific theorizing of his day. It makes no difference either way.

Biggier
Registered User
Posts: 14
(12/5/03 9:09 am)
Reply

Re: enlightenment requires faith

---

All,

The delusion of Ultimate Rational Reality is not all that far removed from the delusion of God or The Absolute.

And we all know it is easy enough to verify that, like God and the Absolute, an Ultimate Rational Reality is just a lot of intellectual huffing and puffing. Carried on the intellectual winds, by and large, from The Scholars in Acedemia. Why? Because if it had actually been discovered it would be plastered on virtually every magazine cover around the globe. At least on the scientific journals. But it's not, is it? There has never, ever been a magazine cover that came even close to expressing one.

Birth, school, work, death.

That's it for most of us, right?

Unless, of course, you are now almost finished reading Atlas Shrugged, the

|                                                                                                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                       | Communist Manifesto, or Mein Kampf for the 1000th time. Biggie                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 1843(12/5/03 9:30 am)Reply   | Re: enlightenment requires faith <hr/> More great satire! Along with your other post, I'll include this one in the next edition of life and Death as well. In fact, you should come and work for the magazine full-time. You're a natural.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 1845(12/5/03 1:08 pm)Reply  | Re: enlightenment requires faith <hr/> I suppose I should be serious ..... Quote: <hr/> And we all know it is easy enough to verify that, like God and the Absolute, an Ultimate Rational Reality is just a lot of intellectual huffing and puffing. Carried on the intellectual winds, by and large, from The Scholars in Acedemia. Why? Because if it had actually been discovered it would be plastered on virtually every magazine cover around the globe. At least on the scientific journals. But it's not, is it? There has never, ever been a magazine cover that came even close to expressing one. <hr/> You evidently don't subscribe to "Enlightenment", which is a glossy new age magazine produced in America. It's not a particularly rational magazine, I admit, but they do feature phrases such as Ultimate Reality on the cover. Ultimate Reality has indeed been understood and written about by the human race for thousands of years. You can find straightforward accounts of it in the Tao Te Ching, in the writings of Huang Po, Hakuin, Chuang Tzu and Nagarjuna, the Diamond and Heart Sutras, the anecdotes of Diogenes, and so on. Go to any decent library and you will find these lofty texts on the shelves. |

There are several reasons why it is not talked about in the mainstream:

Firstly, Ultimate Reality is quite difficult to understand and requires a genuine talent for rational thought, which most people don't have.

Secondly, approaching Ultimate Reality is scary and requires great courage and commitment to go all the way - which unfortunately means that most of those who do possess the rationality for successfully understanding it are weeded out because of their timidity. They become scientists or academics as a result.

Thirdly, the process of opening the mind up to Ultimate Reality involves questioning and abandoning deeply-held values which are cherished by the human race - such as sexual love, marriage, family, being part of a group, long life, psychological security, emotional happiness, etc. Very few people are willing to sacrifice these things for the sake of enlightenment.

Lastly, Ultimate Reality as a subject is hopelessly out of fashion in our day and age, due in large part to millions of people such as yourself continually rubbishing the concept. This only serves to discourage young people from developing an interest in it and taking it up as a serious pursuit.

As a result of these factors, Ultimate Reality is all but completely ignored the world over. The human race loves its ignorance too much.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1875
(12/5/03 1:19 pm)
Reply

Re: enlightenment requires faith

---

David, which country do you think is the birthplace of the current highest human being?

|                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1294(12/5/03 2:21 pm)Reply | Re: enlightenment requires faith <hr/> 1) Jamaica2) Amsterdam3) American Pacific Northwest edit 4) The Rio Grande river separating Texas and Mexico. (The weed is shit, but business is thriving.) Edited by: WolfsonJakk at: 12/5/03 2:28 pm |
| ChrisSaikRegistered UserPosts: 78(12/6/03 12:22 am)Reply    | Re: enlightenment requires faith <hr/> I'm curious as what your definition is of this "highest human being".                                                                                                                                                                          |

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Genius Forum

Causality • Courage • Rationality • Determination • Logic • Integrity • Thinking • Ideals
Wisdom • Reason • Discipline • Truth • Masculinity • Perfection • Universe

Genius News

David Quinn's Site

The Thinking Man's Minefield

EZB Edit

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Universe

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                            | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| StreetLampRegistered UserPosts: 1(7/9/03 6:05 pm)Reply | Universe <hr/> As a person of average intelligence, I simply wanted to find some creative thinkers to help "nudge me along." Thanks for any and all participation in advance. I've recently been studying some of NASA's offerings to our interpretation of deep-space. I have very little knowledge of the topic, but I am fascinated none-the-less. With a severe lack of academic understanding, I would like to just throw a question out in the hopes of sparking an enlightening conversation. What are your thoughts on the overall dimensions of this vast universe and is it in any way different from the "space" between objects here on Earth? There are many opinions about fabric, gravity, mass, light and curvature. Additionally, there seems to be a great deal of higher math used to define these relationships. I should, again, mention that I am of average intelligence and just barely comprehend basic algebra. I would be more interested in hearing your personal thoughts. |

 The Tranquil
Registered User
Posts: 4
(7/9/03 21:55)
Reply
ezSupporter

Re: Universe

---

I would strongly recommend you read the Holographic Universe, by Michael Talbot. It's a very easy read, if you can get through the sometimes drawn out middle chapter on miracles. It's the beginning of a trend where science and spirituality are coming to the same conclusions about consciousness, and it paints a very vivid picture of our reality, both below and above the heavens.

StreetLamp
Registered User
Posts: 2
(7/10/03 1:56)
Reply

Universe

---

It does seem that spirituality is often tied in with our understanding of the universe. I wonder if this is because of a lack of total understanding? It's hard to tell. When I look at what we have so far, I too am tempted to fill in the void with such ideas. Sometimes, however, I reflect on history and the many phenomena that were defined by religion until they were scientifically resolved.

It could be that everything we see is the work of some great deity and we just analyze it to the point of understanding what it is and how it ties into everything else. On the other hand, we may just give anything, that we don't fully understand, a spiritual status until we get around to understanding it. Either way, it's an exciting ride.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1080
(7/10/03 2:43)
Reply

Re: Universe

---

People often equate "God" or their spiritual natures with some understanding of the Universe or the laws of physics. This relegates God to the material and our own conception of spirituality to the changing theories of whatever timeframe an individual may have been born. It seems erroneous and misguided to me.

Tharan

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 817

(7/10/03 2:44)

Reply

Re: Universe

---

Quote:

---

It does seem that spirituality is often tied in with our understanding of the universe. I wonder if this is because of a lack of total understanding? It's hard to tell. When I look at what we have so far, I too am tempted to fill in the void with such ideas. Sometimes, however, I reflect on history and the many phenomena that were defined by religion until they were scientifically resolved.

It could be that everything we see is the work of some great deity and we just analyze it to the point of understanding what it is and how it ties into everything else. On the other hand, we may just give anything, that we don't fully understand, a spiritual status until we get around to understanding it. Either way, it's an exciting ride.

---

Truly religion damages the thinking person's psyche to such an extent that spirituality often becomes difficult to achieve. What a scourge.

You are assuming that there is a divide between a scientific understanding and a spiritual one. So if people once thought every bolt of lightning was thrown by a god, and later electricity and other forces are understood, you think spirituality has been discredited. But that is a childish and simple form of spirituality. If there is a spiritual dimension, how can anything not be a part of it? Most of what people call the spiritual or metaphysical dimension is simply those things that are beyond our sense apparatus' ability to apprehend, such as light that is not within the visible spectrum. Quantum physics is pointing to consciousness of some sort as underlying reality, or as some here think, matter and consciousness are co-dependent creators of reality. Religion such as you mention may be ascribing the wrong causes to phenomena. But I disagree with your premise that once we think we have understood something, (simply because we have understood a lot more of it than we had previously and let that go to our heads) that this removes it from the "spiritual" realm.

It's natural to pose spiritual questions when we contemplate the universe, because the obvious question is, how did it get here? Although I don't see why that should be any different than a blade of grass or a moth.

I think the complaint you are getting at is that there are several words that are loosely synonymous, such as "magic" "supernatural" and "God" which only mean that something appears by means we have no conception of. So then we begin to understand a little smidgeon of causes outside our easy perceptions, such as electromagnetism, or bacteria, and we think the spiritual dimension has shrunk. But the spiritual dimension goes deeper than that. In the end, though, I think absolutely all phenomena are explainable, so that there is no such thing as supernatural at all but neither is there a divide between matter and spirit.

StreetLamp

Registered User

Posts: 3

(7/10/03 3:42)

Reply

Universe

---

If only I could be so well spoken, you certainly do have a gift in your cognitive ability. I think I comprehend what you've said, and find it agreeable.

Please don't misunderstand what I've said here. I do have a spiritual side as well as an analytical one, and they do tend to complement one-another. I just wanted to refrain from saying anything finite in the company of the forum. I want to hear what you think, to inspire my own line of thinking. By leaving the possibilities open to discussion, I hope to see more replies.

As a side note, in my religion, we are all a bit "childish" in one way or another. I completely understand how you could have made that assessment based on what I've said.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 819

(7/10/03 3:57)

Reply

Re: Universe

---

Your religion?? What religion is that?

I was not calling your approach childish, but rather it is childish to believe in the supernatural, or in a god-with-a magic-wand. It is also childish to disbelieve that there is a metaphysical dimension.

|                                                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| StreetLampRegistered UserPosts: 4(7/10/03 4:26)Reply          | Universe <hr/> Well,... it seems that I'm already in over my head here. When I say "my religion" I am making referencing to those things that are learned based on sensory input and perception from my point of view. It leaves me with a belief structure that is mine and mine alone. Your "religion" has to be, undoubtedly, different in some way than mine. I do think, however, that everyone possesses some form of religion even if it is independent of the belief in a higher being. Unfortunately, the hierarchy of human needs gets in the way of those perceptions and distorts them from what is physical(or metaphysical) reality. If this didn't happen, we would all believe exactly the same thing. I happen to believe in God, and that most of the world "religions" are a product of the existence of that same God. Simply put, if He is the creator, then the rest of us must be "children" relative to that origin. I would never assume that anyone should believe as I do, but since you've asked, that is my religion. |
| errare est humanumRegistered UserPosts: 13(7/10/03 4:40)Reply | Universe <hr/> read "a brief history of time" and "the universe in a nutshell" both by Stephen Hawking.it explains all the most modern concepts of theoretical astrophysics simply and clearly. As for your lack of mathematical ability his motto when writing the books was "each equation that could be included would half the sales each time" that makes it easy reading for an introduction into this field of physics.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
| StreetLampRegistered UserPosts: 5(7/10/03 5:40)Reply          | Universe <hr/> I've heard that Hawkings is brilliant. His book sounds like some interesting reading, I will see if I can obtain a copy. I am really interested in hearing your thoughts on the subject as well. I thought that we could all contribute, but I prefer to hold onto my ideas to see what others have to say.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |

ksolway

Registered User

Posts: 120

(7/10/03 11:42)

Reply

Re: Universe

---

Quote:

---

I happen to believe in God

---

What exactly do you mean by "God"

Quote:

---

. . . Simply put, if He is the creator

---

And what do you mean by "create"? Does this God you believe in create things in the same way we do?

StreetLamp

Registered User

Posts: 6

(7/10/03 12:25)

Reply

Re: Universe

---

When I say "God", I mean... religion supreme being: the being believed in monotheistic religions such as Judaism, Islam, and Christianity to be the all-powerful all-knowing creator of the universe, worshiped as the only god

When I say "Create" I mean... transitive verb make: to bring somebody or something into existence, or transitive verb give rise to: to produce something as a result, or make something happen, or transitive and intransitive verb produce art or invent: to use imagination to invent things or produce works of art, or transitive verb appoint: to give somebody a new title, role, or office, or if you will, transitive verb arts perform for first time: to be the first person to perform a particular role in a production

The spoken English word "create" stems from the 14th century Latin creat- , the past participle stem of creare to bring forth, produce (source of English creature), of uncertain origin: perhaps formed from crescere to grow.

Hope this helps. ...Any thoughts on the universe?

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 820

(7/10/03 14:40)

Reply

Re: Universe

---

Quote:

---

I happen to believe in God, and that most of the world "religions" are a product of the existence of that same God. Simply put, if He is the creator, then the rest of us must be "children" relative to that origin.

---

Ha, ha, I think the religions are a product of sinister beings who have a vested interest in keeping humanity down and utterly confused. It is hard to explain the persistent lack of human progress any other way. The reason we are having a spiritual renaissance now is that Christianity has been subdued. Jehovah is one of the worst of the lot. What an imposter. What a scoundrel.

Here's a little quote for you to think about (Hindu)

They who see but one, in all the changing manifoldness of this universe, unto them belongs Eternal Truth - unto none else, unto none else!

StreetLamp

Registered User

Posts: 7

(7/10/03 16:40)

Reply

Re: Universe

---

Quote:

---

Ha, ha, I think the religions are a product of sinister beings who have a vested interest in keeping humanity down and utterly confused. It is hard to explain the persistent lack of human progress any other way. The reason we are having a spiritual renaissance now is that Christianity has been subdued. Jehovah is one of the worst of the lot. What an imposter. What a scoundrel.

---

Man! you folks like to tackle the tough issues here don't you? Okay...

Perhaps, but I can assure you that I have no vested interest, nor am I sinister. I said that I believe in God, and one fellow asked me how God went about creating things! How would I know the answer to that question? If I knew everything about God, and still couldn't prove His existence to anyone, it wouldn't be very probable that He existed at all. As a side note, I think we might still possess some anti-productive qualities as human beings, even without religion.

Here is the question that I've politely asked: What are your thoughts on the overall dimensions of this vast universe and is it in any way different from the "space" between objects here on Earth? I would be delighted to hear your thoughts on this.

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 271

(7/10/03 17:54)

Reply

Re: Universe

---

I for one have no idea. It's been drummed into me over the years by both religion and scientists that the universe is infinite in size, which would make the question of dimensions irrelevant.

Personally I don't think humans can grasp what infinite size actually means - so it will always just be as big as we can imagine within our limited brains. This is why scientists go for theories like worm holes, big bangs and the like. I can accept some of these theories (as theories) but they don't provide any real explanation to start and finish as there is clearly always something beyond their theories.

Sometimes I think I get an inkling of what infinite time means, mainly because I regard time as a concept that represents 'the dynamic rate of change' ie black holes = slow rate of change as particles cant move and approaching speed of light = fastest rate of change so time appears to slow down relative to what the light is passing.

We know that the universe is perpetually moving/changing and I see no reason why there would need to be a start and finish to this movement.

I think the 'start' of the non-totality type of universe might be something to do with the relationship between complete emptiness and complete non-emptiness. Space is not empty - it is full of gravity and light. But I don't think there was a start perse, but something to do with true emptiness being an impossible state where whenever emptiness comes close to occurring anywhere, the universe implodes and whenever causes almost stop it explodes, time and time again. This might be pretty close to some scientific theories out there now (but I must say I don't even understand  $E=Mc^2$  and hardly ever read more than a few paras of science articles, so don't quote me on this).

To have a start then something external to the universe must have caused the first movement, in which case it the universe you are thinking of is not the Totality and you are still left with essentially the same question you asked in the first place - how big is everything outside our finite universe. If you believe in the cause and effect of everything then it is easy enough to visualise that there is will be no finish to the universe, as there is nothing to stop things being caused and if there are still causes there are still effects and therefore there is still change and time. When you dip you fingers into a basin of water and cause the water to make ripples the effects don't stop when the ripples stop, the effects just become diluted and therefore less noticeable or predictable. The ripples make very slight pressure and movement changes in the surrounding air, which then goes on to effect the local breeze (not that this is measurable), which effects the weather which effects humans and so on.

If you take the universe as being everything possible, including anything that has an effect on the universe as we know it or ourselves then it makes logical sense that it has no limitations time, size or otherwise.

suergaz

Registered User
Posts: 1252
(7/10/03 18:28)
Reply

-----

---

I'd never let religion or scientists drum anything into me.

ynithrix

Registered User
Posts: 143
(7/10/03 22:42)
Reply

Re: Universe

---

"that the universe is infinite in size, which would make the question of dimensions irrelevant."

I disagree. The size of the universe being infinite does not imply that the dimensions within which that 'size' fits are also infinite in number, only in their individual magnitudes.

I personally don't like the big bang theory. It says that because all the galaxies around us are moving apart, there must have been a huge explosion to start this. I agree this far. But to say that that explosion was the beginning of the universe is a long shot (and arrogant--it is geocentric). I think that the big bang to which they refer is merely a local explosion that affected a large, yet not total, area of the universe. I believe there is more out there than we can ever see (simply because of the span of light that we pick up).

The idea of curled up dimensions, put to excellent effect in string theory (see 'The Elegant Universe', Brian Greene, for good reference), is more promising. But the calabi-yau has decayed from a promising fundamental 'particle' to a mathematical nightmare and probable failure.

As for dimensions...read 'Hyperspace' (Michio Kaku) for reference. He introduces you to Hilton's and Riemann's ideas on higher dimensions, and the ascent to the fourth dimension (geometric, not temporal). I was always fascinated as a child to think how I could interact with a different dimension and how it would appear if I did so. The idea of escaping any 3-dimensional prison by simple walking out through the 4th-d is also interesting.

I think, though, being 3-d beings, 3-d is our limit. Neurobiologists report that the brain has areas of more than 3-d, so perhaps we are evolving into it. But for the moment, stick to the mathematical models.

StreetLamp

Registered User

Posts: 8

(7/11/03 9:14 am)

Reply

Re: Universe

---

I appreciate everyone's contribution to this topic, because I find it so fascinating.

The topic of universal proportions always brings with it opinions. Because no one can person can fully define the (currently) imperceptible, I tend to validate every argument as a possibility. Until we see hard evidence to the contrary, there can be no other approach. If a five year old says that he thinks space has an "ending" I will not argue. I would rather watch him grow in his, or her beliefs, and see how they evolve. We as human beings are attracted to "band wagons" like a moth to a bug lamp. People went for eons believing the Earth was flat simply because it was the popular belief.

It seems to me, there is almost a paradigm of known physics law, and theories governing World-wide perception of universal structure and dimension. Whether or not these laws and theories prove accurate remains to be seen, but they continue to be the basis for modern research. This, to me, is not unlike the flat Earth concept. As an example, Einstein himself noted that his "cosmological constant" was the biggest blunder of his life.

Apparently, this constant represents a hypothetical force of repulsion. I've done some on-line research and found that in 1915 while Einstein was developing his general theory of relativity, he realized that his original equations would have required motion in the universe. The problem was, it was generally accepted at the time (and this is the kicker) that the universe was static. So he invented the cosmological constant to balance the force of gravity, allowing galaxies to remain at fixed distances. At some point along the way, Edwin Hubble proved that the galaxies were receding away from each other. It turns out, old Albert might have actually predicted this had he stuck with his original equations.

Now, with that said, I do believe that the physicist and cosmologist of today know what they are doing. But it seems to me that there is room for a little play here, even for folks like myself that are more imaginative than anything. After all, early explorers probably didn't have a lot of working theory or governing laws that lead them across the oceans. They did, however, have a concern during their travels. Was the Earth really flat? To me, it seems that they must have believed that to be an overwhelming probability. They simply acted against it. This is why I am so eager to hear your thoughts on the matter.

The following is brilliant...

Quote:

---

“To have a start then something external to the universe must have caused the first movement, in which case it the universe you are thinking of is not the Totality and you are still left with essentially the same question you asked in the first place - how big is everything outside our finite universe. If you believe in the cause and effect of everything then it is easy enough to visualise that there is will be no finish to the universe, as there is nothing to stop things being caused and if there are still causes there are still effects and therefore there is still change and time. When you dip your fingers into a basin of water and cause the water to make ripples the effects don't stop when the ripples stop, the effects just become diluted and therefore less noticeable or predictable. The ripples make very slight pressure and movement changes in the surrounding air, which then goes on to effect the local breeze (not that this is measurable), which effects the weather which effects humans and so on.”

---

— jimhaz

Chaos theory? Maybe, but more interesting still is that you've eluded to the "limits" we see. As you may well know, science refers to this as background radiation. On the one hand, they might say "There it is, the ever expanding cosmic wall!" and then, in the same breath, they might say "The universe is infinite." I'm sure that the horizon had similar effects on the unsuspecting when the Earth was still known as "flat." It's as if, we have a habit of never venturing beyond what can be seen. When they say "the universe", surely they can't mean an empty void; can they?

I think  $E=mc^2$  means that the limit of the potential for any object with mass to create (E)nergy is equal to its (M)ass times a (c)onstant (the speed of light) squared. Again, I am horrible with math and I don't really understand how anyone can know this for sure. If I understand the concept correctly, the process needed to create this type of energy is not yet available to man. Maybe somebody could help me with this. Be gentle, I have a tendency to get lost rather easily.

ynithrix, when you say 3-D is our limit, do you refer to our ability to resolve things mathematically? As in the x,y,z plot? Do you feel that there is, in fact, a 4-D possibility? It seems as though there almost has to be. Of course, it may be that we have simply reached the limit of our (current) capability to comprehend the data we have recorded. To me, we can only get so much out of Spectroscopy, Redshift and radio signals. Maybe instead of a 4th-D, our answer lies just outside of the electromagnetic spectrum. After all, every measurement we do have falls within it. Perhaps this is also why we think that the speed limit is the speed of known energy.

Thanks for the input fellas, I hope we can see more replies.

Edited by: StreetLamp at: 7/11/03 9:17 am

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 823

(7/12/03 1:23)

Reply

Re: Universe

---

Quote:

---

Perhaps, but I can assure you that I have no vested interest, nor am I sinister.

---

I was in no way implying such a thing!

Quote:

---

and one fellow asked me how God went about creating things!

---

He was trying to get you to think a little deeper than the one which calls events supernatural, and leaves it at that.

Quote:

---

As a side note, I think we might still possess some anti-productive qualities as human beings, even without religion.

---

Still? True enough, but religion seems to make it worse and act as a psychic cage.

Quote:

---

What are your thoughts on the overall dimensions of this vast universe and is it in any way different from the "space" between objects here on Earth?

---

"Kind Prince, what do you think: Are all the small particles that make up the universe numerous?"

Yes, very numerous, venerable Teacher.

"And, kind prince, do you think the universe is very vast?"

"It is vast indeed, venerable Teacher."

"But, the universal truth is that the particles are not small, nor is the universe vast. It is merely the relative mind that labels them so."

"Kind prince, each small particle is an entire world in itself. There is no real difference between small particles and the vast world."

StreetLamp

Registered User

Posts: 9

(7/12/03 5:07)

Reply

Re: Universe

---

birdofhermes,

Quote:

---

I was in no way implying such a thing!

---

Please tell me what you were implying, I gave your post as much attention as I could. I read it several times, and perhaps I missed the point.

Quote:

---

He was trying to get you to think a little deeper than the one which calls events supernatural, and leaves it at that.

---

I could think a little deeper, and still not be able to explain how God makes things. But, I'll tell you what, if you can explain how God doesn't create things, then I will make an effort. You have my word. I expect facts too, I'm not talking about philosophy! I have yet to see anyone substantiate or disprove the existence of God. It can only be a personal belief, and I have made no request of anyone to join me in that belief.

Quote:

---

Still? True enough, but religion seems to make it worse and act as a psychic cage.

---

Maybe religion "seems" to make it worse. There is no question, in my mind, that you believe that. I, therefore, have no argument. For all I know, it may indeed make it worse, but there is no reference. Religion dates back to the earliest indications of human existence. I would bet the farm that it will, likewise, be with us for the rest of human existence. We will only waste precious time trying to prove or disprove any of it. Because it is in the nature of the human race to do so, one only has to chose to believe or not. I have no evidence to support an argument in this matter. By the way, "seems" is not a very convincing one.

Quote:

---

"Kind Prince, what do you think: Are all the small particles that make up the universe numerous?"

---

What is this nonsense? Are you mocking me?!

The smallest particle, that I am aware of, has not yet shown any characteristics of a separate world. They have been shown to possess energy, and mass. This is all that I am aware of. Please clarify this point, unless you are indeed mocking me. If you are being genuine, I will accept your point of view as a possibility, and thank you for the input.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 824

(7/12/03 7:11)

Reply

Re: Universe

---

Re: I happen to believe in God, and that most of the world "religions" are a product of the existence of that same God.

Quote:

---

Please tell me what you where implying,

---

I think of humanity as being the victim of religion, and was not implying that you were the perpetrator. I mostly focus on western religion, because that is what I thought you were focusing on. I do not think of a religion like Judaism, Christianity, or Islam, as very useful or as a close approximation to what God might be like. My belief in God is quite different than a Christian, although perhaps it is something like the Hindu. More or less, I am a pantheist.

Quote:

---

I could think a little deeper, and still not be able to explain how God makes things.

---

No one has the least idea how anything got here. But you could think a little deeper and realize that however it got here, there was some real process that works, that there can be no such thing as going outside the laws of nature to create nature.

Quote:

---

But, I'll tell you what, if you can explain how God doesn't create things, then I will make an effort.

---

Ha, ha, this is really funny. I'm the person here who does not believe in evolution, not for religious reasons, but because I'm convinced it's a grand fantasy. It borders on religion, because it's a network of beliefs with no foundation. However, your question poses little difficulty for most educated and scientific people. They will give you a lecture about evolution and big bang and primordial soup. Full of facts.

Quote:

---

I have yet to see anyone substantiate or disprove the existence of God. It can only be a personal belief, and I have made no request of anyone to join me in that belief.

---

Of course they can't disprove it, nor can anyone prove it. Then again, some people are saying that modern physics is coming close to proving that consciousness is fundamental to the universe.

All I'm saying is, if you want to believe in God, pick a good one! In the universe I inhabit, there is nothing but God, everywhere. Unfortunately though, that ends up meaning that there is neither a God, nor not a God, because if God is all there is, you cannot even name it. A thing can only be named when it stands apart from what it is not.

Quote:

---

What is this nonsense? Are you mocking me?!

---

Not in the least. Why would I? Just making the point that size is relative. Small particles are like little worlds. A nucleus is like a little sun in a little solar system. Every cell in your body is like a little separate person, having it's life span, making decisions for itself, taking in nutrients and excreting wastes, all within the confines of its membrane. These words are thousands of years old, before the age of microscopes.

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Genius Forum

Causality • Courage • Rationality • Determination • Logic • Integrity • Thinking • Ideals
Wisdom • Reason • Discipline • Truth • Masculinity • Perfection • Universe

Genius News

David Quinn's Site

The Thinking Man's Minefield

EZB Edit

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Universe

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                           | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| StreetLampRegistered UserPosts: 10(7/12/03 7:30)Reply | Re: Universe <hr/> Quote: <hr/> They will give you a lecture about evolution and big bang and primordial soup. Full of facts. <hr/> You've got me there, I will dig a little deeper in keeping with my word. Very, very good point. Allow me some time to formulate a thoughtful response. As for the world-like qualities of subatomic matter, I'm still missing the point. I would agree that the makeup of an organic cell possess the qualities that you've mentioned. But I still fail to see a "world" concept. While cells are indeed living, they haven't been proven to exhibit higher reasoning. This unit of life falls well short of even an intelligent being, not to mention an ecosystem, or an entire world. The idea of an atom having the characteristics of a planetary system is an isolated similarity. The resemblance to an independent world or universe seems to stop there. Your thoughts are intriguing however, and I must admit that everything is a possibility. |

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 491
(7/30/03 8:32)
Reply

Re: Universe

---

Quote:

---

STL: The idea of an atom having the characteristics of a planetary system is an isolated similarity.

---

An atom is far mor fantastic than that. There is only a passing resemblance.

I'm certainly glad that our solar system doesn't display the behaviour of an atom.

StreetLamp
Registered User
Posts: 94
(7/30/03 9:04 am)
Reply

Re: Universe

---

Quote:

---

I'm certainly glad that our solar system doesn't display the behaviour of an atom.

---

I tend to agree with you. I think maybe she was centering on the orbital dynamics of the atom. This alone would be far too dramatic for planetary behavior.

StreetLamp

Edited by: StreetLamp at: 7/30/03 3:37 pm

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 492

(7/30/03 10:25)

Reply

Re: Universe

---

Yeah but I'm saying that the solar system atom (the Bohr model) is not the way that atoms work at all. It's just a simplification which works for many predictions. The modern day picture(s) is/are a far more wonderful thing.

Bird is a female BTW.

StreetLamp

Registered User

Posts: 95

(7/30/03 12:19 pm)

Reply

Re: Universe

---

And I'm saying that I think you are correct. I think the person was using the theoretical model as a comparison. I was explaining to her that, with exception to theory, that there was none.

Quote:

---

...The least among us knows of it's existence. Everything that we can sense is a part of it. Every molecule, every sub-particle. That it exist is the only "truth" that we can ever know, until we are fundamentally separated from the rest of humanity as we know it. - StreetLamp

---

Quote:

---

Consider this: Some say that we were created in God's image. What if God's image was not that of a human being, but that absolutely everything was created in "His" image? What if atomic matter is the face of God? We cannot clearly see it, but this would certainly explain the vast amounts of raw power that are unleashed when atoms are split. What you seek - StreetLamp

---

IT IS IMPORTANT TO REMEMBER: I was not asserting this as truth in the context of my discussion. I was not asserting that God exists as the originator of all things.

I was suggesting that perhaps God, Truth, truth, knowledge, insight, etc. IS all things.

StreetLamp

Edited by: StreetLamp at: 7/30/03 3:38 pm

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 493

(7/31/03 7:47)

Reply

Re: Universe

---

Easy on the tiny text there STL ;-)

Yep, I'm not trying to argue with you, I just thought that perhaps you were missing out on the Electron Cloud model (Bohr model) of the atom or the String theory model; and you were into finding out about such things. If you already know about it then no bother.

Quote:

---

What if atomic matter is the face of God? We cannot clearly see it, but this would certainly explain the vast amounts of raw power that are unleashed when atoms are split.

---

I can see what you are saying but this is an intuitive inference and the extent of it's explanation should be understood in that light only. There is already a good explanation as to how and why such vast amounts of raw power are unleashed when atoms are split, provided by the scientific method.

I'm still not sure what your idea of God is. Sometimes you refer to it as what might commonly be understood by many around here (i.e. nature), other times your words smack of the Christian God or a theistic one at least.

Do you belong to a specific faith? and/or do you have any firm ideas about your God?

G Shantz

Registered User

Posts: 356

(7/31/03 9:11)

Reply

Re: Universe

---

StreetLamp wrote:

Quote:

---

Consider this: Some say that we were created in God's image. What if God's image was not that of a human being, but that absolutely everything was created in "His" image?

---

Hmm, from the book of Genesis, right? The use of the word 'image' is interesting. It points to 'appearance' and 'illusion'. An image of something is not real, but an appearance, like your reflection in a mirror. It has no real substance, although it appears to.

Greg

StreetLamp

Registered User

Posts: 96

(7/31/03 12:09 pm)

Reply

Re: Universe

---

Quote:

---

Do you belong to a specific faith? and/or do you have any firm ideas about your God?

---

My "faith" is not shared by many. I'm not supposed to push it here according to the forum rules. I might be able to get away with answering you more directly if you were to ask me some very specific questions.

Here's one for you: Do you know anything about paranormal investigations?

StreetLamp

Edited by: StreetLamp at: 7/31/03 1:10 pm

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 496

(8/1/03 7:33)

Reply

Re: Universe

---

Quote:

---

Do you know anything about paranormal investigations?

---

Bits and bobs I suppose.

Quote:

---

My "faith" is not shared by many. I'm not supposed to push it here according to the forum rules.

---

Nah, they're not monsters - least I don't think they are. I'm sure that, having been asked the question, you will be allowed to tell of your faith/ideas. In fact you would be alright to do it whether asked or not. Loads of others do.

StreetLamp

Registered User

Posts: 97

(8/1/03 8:57)

Reply

Re: Universe

---

Well, okay. I guess you might say that I consider most of the intuitive stuff that I've expressed seems pretty real to me. That's it really.

In a nut shell, I think that God is the combination of everything thing that we sense and think. Certainly, all of these things lead one in a direction. By definition, the senses control what an individual believes. So I think this must be what God is.

Everything that we as human beings are aware of will influence us in some way. I think that this awareness interferes with our ability to fully understand it. I think that this might change when our physical body "dies."

Consciousness just doesn't make sense to me as a temporary thing.

I think that everything contains the energy of God, and that this God is indeed responsible for the creation of all things. I don't think this happened all at once like some religions express, but in a way that is different from our concept of time. This energy is a result of the creation. I think that science is correct in it's description of it. Whenever something is created, energy is released.

I think that every individual is born with a sense of morality as a part of their consciousness. This consciousness results in reactionary responses to the environment that is God. These reactions govern the influence that the environment has on an individual. It is the influence that, I think, defines what is often referred to as heaven and hell. Basically, every choice has a result.

I think that religions are simply the results of men who have also felt this, and recorded their stories in the form of parables. They're stories, that's it. Whenever a story is told, it will usually be sensationalized a bit.

I just happen to have been exposed to Christianity as a Westerner. To me, there is some merit to it. While I don't agree with all of what is written in it, I do agree with some of the moral foundations about respecting the existence of other human beings. This only makes good sense to me. LET ME BE CLEAR ON THIS, I see it as a product of man, and man as a product of God. It is ONLY a religion. There are also things in Buddhism, Islam, Hinduism, and many other religions that I know very little about that I think have merit. At the same time there are, clearly, some other religions based on other influences.

These religions are nothing more than a collection of how people feel about what they believe.

The one thing that I accept from all religions, is that you must believe in whatever heads the religion. For instance, if you are in a car speeding, and believe there is a speed trap, you will slow down. If you don't believe there is a speed trap, you will still be influenced, but in a more passive way. If someone wrote about this experience, and told everyone to believe it, that would be a religion. Law is, therefore, a religion.

That's what I think.

StreetLamp

BryanParrish
Global User
Posts: 67
(8/3/04 5:32)
Reply

Re: Universe

---

FUCK SHIT PISS BALLS NUTS

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.32
Copyright ©1999-2005 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Unreasonable

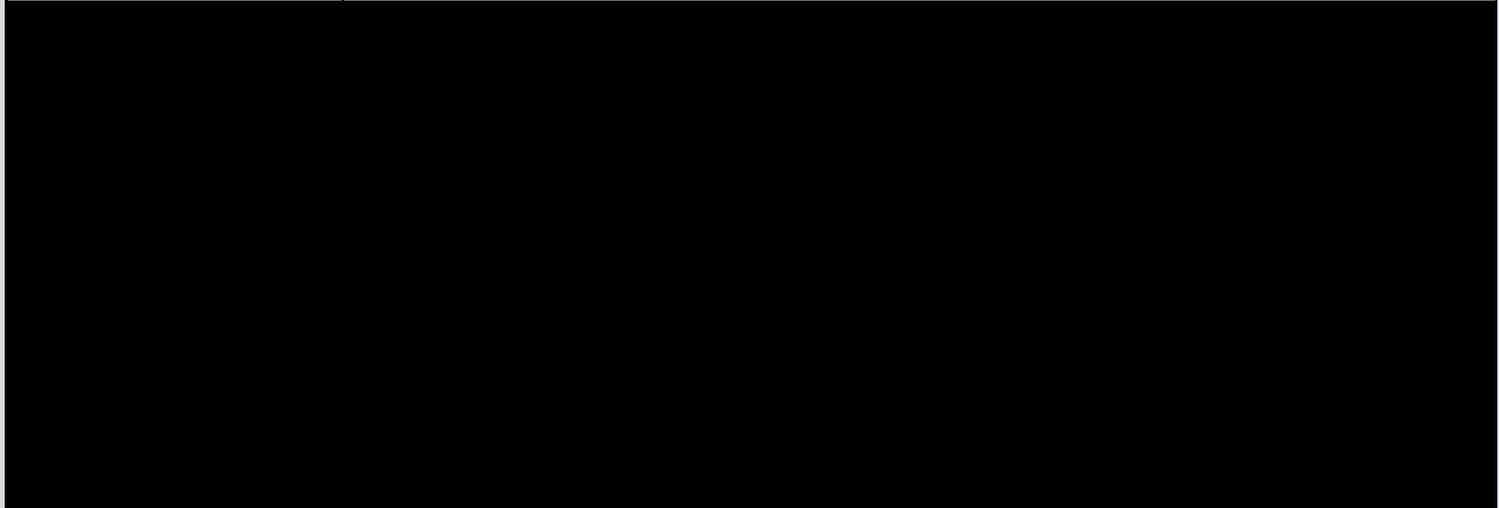

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                       | Comment                                                                                                                                |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 761(10/20/03 6:40 am)Reply          | Unreasonable<hr/> Why are the people, who believe in reason, so unreasonable?                                                      |
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1221(10/22/03 7:46 am)Reply | ---<hr/> Also, why are the unbelievers so believable?                                                                       |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 768(10/22/03 4:25 pm)Reply          | ---<hr/> Good question. Why do the intelligent do stupid things?                                                                   |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1611(10/22/03 6:48 pm)Reply     | ---<hr/> There are many reasons why. Tiredness, despair, impatience etc. But these can be just as conducive to intelligent things. |

|                                                                                                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 1512(10/22/03 10:38 pm)Reply                                                                                       | ok <hr/> So, why does Del think he has a right or basis to ask such questions in the first place? Has he become the "tone" master? Are you all in such need of guidance? Damn                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1612(10/22/03 10:45 pm)Reply                                                                                  | --- <hr/> The t-t-tone-master?!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 362(10/22/03 11:07 pm)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> While anyone has the right to ask whatever question they like if there is some reasonable basis, DEL doesn't need a basis as he became the forum riddler/jester when Nemo left. DEL has become the opponent we can flippantly jest with if we so choose. I'm sure he knows that but it doesn't seem to bother him - his quest for understanding seems to be more powerful than these little rejections. I don't know about others but i don't create threads because everything major seems to have already been said here. |
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1222(10/23/03 2:36 am)Reply                                                                               | ---- <hr/> A vaccuum must be filled with...something. How have you been, Dan?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |

|                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1223(10/23/03 2:41 am)Reply  | --- <hr/> Tonemaster wrote, Quote: <hr/> Why do the intelligent do stupid things? <hr/> If the opposite is true (stupid ones do intelligent things sometimes) then the pattern may be one of random fluctuations. Of course, this discounts the differentiation between inteligent/stupid. How about: Why do observers place value on that which is essentially valueless? Tharan |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 772(10/23/03 10:31 am)Reply          | ----- <hr/> What value should we then place on consistency?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1225(10/23/03 12:25 pm)Reply | - <hr/> There is no such thing as "should" nor any such thing as "we." You might disagree, but I will consistently find little value in your argument.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |

|                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| scatteredmindRegistered UserPosts: 96(10/23/03 3:15 pm)Reply | the people <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Why are the people, who believe in reason, so unreasonable? <hr/> who are the people?insecurity.                          |
| scatteredmindRegistered UserPosts: 97(10/23/03 3:19 pm)Reply | consistent <hr/> Quote: <hr/> What value should we then place on consistency? <hr/> not consistency, only growth.but if money is concerned, everything. |
| G ShantzRegistered UserPosts: 414(10/24/03 8:46 am)Reply     | -- <hr/> Everything is consistent. Inconsistency is a myth.                                                                                                                       |

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31r
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

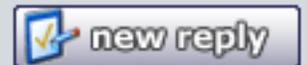

> Upcoming Genius: Arvin Kumar

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                       | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| KillerInstinctsRegistered UserPosts: 1(6/29/04 6:37 pm)Reply |  Upcoming Genius: Arvin Kumar<hr/> Arvin Kumar of Ohio, highschool student, IRC activist and creator. |

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

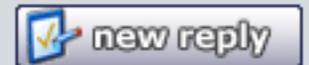

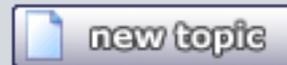

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Upon reaching nirvana...

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                           | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| ontologyRegistered UserPosts: 2(3/4/04 10:02 pm)Reply                                                                 | Upon reaching nirvana... <hr/> what does one do when one reaches absolute nirvana/absolutely perfect buddhahood (assuming that such a state actually exists)? what does one strive for after reaching that state in terms of 'development'?(other than spreading the word)... while it is naive to assume that 'progress' would still be a concern upon reaching nirvana, it does intrigue me (in my present, completely unenlightened state) as to what else is there for such a person to embark on. does one strive for even greater 'clarity' or 'understanding', in other words, trying to go 'beyond' nirvana? |
| ksolwayPosts: 368(3/4/04 10:45 pm)Reply  | Re: Upon reaching nirvana... <hr/> Quote: <hr/> What does one strive for after reaching that state in terms of 'development'? <hr/> After you have enlightened yourself, why stop there? The rest of the Universe is waiting to be enlightened, and that too is yourself, a larger self.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |

|                                                                                    |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2517(3/4/04 10:57 pm)Reply | --- <hr/> What a stinking euphemism that is! In other words, Die! You're all you got kid. There ain't no 'larger' self. Or it'd have given you a cool ride on its back by now. I'm Han solo and there ain't no fucking force. You'll have to make one for yourself, like PELvis resley.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| silentsalRegistered UserPosts: 73(3/5/04 4:12 am)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> does one strive for even greater 'clarity' or 'understanding', in other words, trying to go 'beyond' nirvana? <hr/> understanding and clarity are themselves infinite .. they have no end and no beginning to chase after "understanding and clarity" is a endless chore to get any understanding or clarity one must end the chase. From this point you may witness understanding and clarity moving within yourself and it is with joy that you may catch this wave and ride it to a farther shore. |
| ontologyRegistered UserPosts: 3(3/5/04 4:47 pm)Reply    | Re: --- <hr/> well if understanding and clarity is an infinite journey, what separates an enlightened being from an unenlightened being? i always had the conception that upon attaining nirvana there would be 'perfect' understanding of some sort...                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |

|                                                                                                                                                               |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 1651(3/6/04 1:05 pm)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> "What to do with myself" is a question asked by the egotistical being. It's not an issue for the enlightened individual because he's not driven by ego. Dan Rowden                                                                                            |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2539(3/6/04 11:57 pm)Reply                                                                            | --- <hr/> "What to do with myself?" is a question asked by all. Answers to it are in the decision to act or the act. One can't help but drive oneself from the idea of oneself, from the ego (if one is really driving!) Everyone, everything, is already driven by nature. |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 87(3/9/04 2:22 pm)Reply                                                                          | Re: --- <hr/> Just don't end up killing yourself dude please, leave that to the music artists. Your'e not going to hell ( -1 place), the grave(0 plane?), maybe heaven(123, ABC's of God's love). SO BE POSITIVE.                                                                  |

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

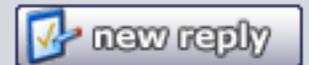

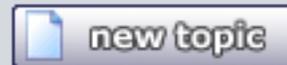

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> We are in a matrix

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                            | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| huzhengRegistered UserPosts: 10(10/27/03 9:18 pm)Reply | We are in a matrix <hr/> We are in a matrix2003.10.27 If man never being thinking, he is in the matrix. Only by start thinking, you can get the utmost truth of human, you can understand my ideology, then you can escape from the matrix! All the 12 hundred million of Chinese people have fall in a matrix, every of them, none of them have ever being thinking for one second! In fact, i think, the whole human on the earth are fall in the matrix. Yes, do you remember the film "matrix", some one have already sense the matrix, it is me, will break this matrix, with the utmost truth of human, all present truth is false, there is only one truth! I will change the whole human social in my life time, i will create the new human social, which i described ago in my old articles. After the new society created, every man get to be thinking, philosophy, science, art, etc. will develop much faster than ago, every man is philosopher, every one is scientist, every one is artist, more or less. I and Tang Hao will change the whole world just like Mao Zedong and Zhou Enlai changed the whole China ago(Tang hao told me this cool idea), we will spread the ideology which come out by my merging the western philosophy and Chinese traditional ideology, we have enough time to spread it, we are calmed now, even this great ambition is generate in our mind, we have no trace of exciting, my exciting was highest and past when i get the utmost truth that night(I even don't dare to sleep, which will stop my consciousness temporarily), and now as i am using it, there have not exciting. We will do our work step by step. We are different to everyone else now, they only care for their own life, but their life is not |

controlled by themselves, they don't know why life turn to become this, they think life is full of magic, no, just as all the Chinese's life was totally controlled by Mao Zedong, never thinking people's life are controlled by thinking people in fact, we will control the life(happy life) of human before them start thinking, their life is design by us, controlled by us, which suit for them start thinking one day, or suit for their child start thinking one day. Why we have this power? Because we know the utmost truth of human. After more and more people get the utmost truth, our happy life start, philosopher's happy life, more deep than pig's happy. I will bring more and more man out of the matrix, by make him start thinking. The whole world is a matrix, only we are out of it, because, our mind is out its running, we know the theory of how it is running, so we can anticipate it, and change it by our action. You may afraid i will become a emperor or a dictator like Mao Zedong, no, i am different from him, i despise him in fact, we won't set up a political party, all present parties are still in the matrix, only we are out of the matrix, but our body are in the matrix too, being a normal people in the matrix, but our mind are out of the matrix by thinking, we are different from any party, they are doing their best to stop people from thinking, we are doing our best to help people start their thinking, after thinking, they found them get high, to keep their high, they stop others from thinking, but we find we get highest by thinking, and start to help others to get as high as us. This revolution have no smoke, no war, no violence(we never use violence, although our body is strong), only the ideology spreading quietly, for more detail of this revolution hold by us, read the "Please recover all my articles" section which collected in the article "Some recent pastes", it is the revolution manifesto in fact.

Everyone of us should learn three languages at least, the first, your mother language, the second, English, and the third, which used to spread our ideology to these who only know their mother language. StarDict and ReciteWord will help you to study the languages.

Everyone of us good at computer, so we can use computer as a tool of our thinking, use Internet to spread our ideology, and we use Linux as our operating system, Linux is born with the Internet too, we are more a less a Linuxer too.

Everyone of us must have strong body, You can make your body turned from weak to strong just by two years or even half an year. Go running for one year, do fitness for three months, then train long running, such as 10 ring every two day for one month, and then often do swimming, skating etc, we only fond at these sports which you can play with yourself or at least two(with your girl). Two genius come together and do sport together can't happen easily. Yes, we don't play with these pigs. Why i say them are pigs? because they never be thinking, their happy are pig's happy, they won't understand our happy, the happy of philosophers.

Everyone of us have one strong skill, we can alive by it, and the experience come from when you study it deep will help you to study philosophy, understand our ideology.

Everyone of us have the interest on literature and art, they can help our thinking.

Who you are then, yes, you are the super man which Nietzsche described, super man, can get out of the matrix. It should not be occasional that my nick name is "bogey ray", which i get 5 years ago, long before i touch philosophy, now i am the lightning.

And, as we are strongest, everything we will do depend on ourselves, as others are weaker to us, we can't depend on them.

We are noble, we are noble because we trust we respect ourselves as noble, we know we are genius, we only trust ourselves, because the utmost truth is only in our mind. But we are not selfish, for example, we develop free software, i was a free software develop ago, i developed StarDict and Reciteword.

These boys who appear in the Internet are easiest to accept our ideology, become one of us, as their desire for truth are most strong.

You need to try to start write notes as me, record what you are doing everyday, and at last, you find it turned out to be thinking notes, because, at last, what you are doing? Thinking.

Our connection is loosely, each one of us only know several others, and it is most like we are at the different side of the earth, but we are communicated by Internet and connected together by the ideology, we are everywhere, go everywhere, all of us have(or will have) the experience of go abroad, leave the born environment to explore the world.

Do i despise girls? no, i have already explained this in "The fourth essay". Do i hate girls? no, everyone of us have his girl, he is courting her(rape her mind. as female is mind-less, but you need to get your mind first, by understanding the utmost truth of human), he is trying to make her become his wife(after succeed in rape her mind, you can rape her body, then she love you indeed, you love her indeed, she become your wife).

Now i look at my roommates, everything they are doing and saying are all non-sense, all of them are in the matrix, they never be thinking, they never exists. I won't communicate to them, seldom talk to them, as they can't understand my theory, i will only communicate with genius or these boys who will become(in fact, he is genius in born, but didn't find this yet) genius. I seldom speak now, always being silence, but often be writing, i don't like them, i won't feel restrained if don't chatter something, opposite, i feel my thought get most freely now, by writing and communicate to other genius, our thought is mostly free. As i am almost always thinking, when you are thinking, you are not talking. I seldom being laughing, but always be smiling, if laugh, i laugh to myself, for a new thought find in my mind after thinking :)

I telephoned icelotus this afternoon, but failed to get she out to talk. But, still, her reply mail, her words, all her actions are correspond to my theory. Her mind haven't rape by me yet, even her old mind didn't clean yet, as her actions are very attractive to these weak boys, it have none attraction to me (but make me titter, so innocent she is, i very like her), her present mind is analyzed by me completely, but why i still court her? Because she is the girl in girl, she is sex-compliment to me, i know the utmost truth, i know i can rape her mind at last, i know she will love me, i will love her. What can indicate her mind is raped by me? When she agree that i am a genius. She will agree with this soon. Do you find the rape i mean is not the rape your think now? read my articles more deeply!

I just start thinking after that night which i describe in "My fate, My Death", and after i past Nietzsche's go mad, i write down "The fourth essay", and after i past Otto Weininger's commit suicide, i write down "The utmost truth of the human". "The fourth essay" and "The utmost of truth" are the essence.

Human know he is human, pig don't know this, and may don't agree with this, human never ask pigs:"Do you think i am a human?". Yes, we are genius, we needn't ask the others:"Do you agree that i am a genius?" And, do you find, after you understand the utmost truth, no exciting, no sorrow will appear in your mind, you always be calmed, because everything go as the utmost truth described.

If a man have no mind, never being thinking, he is not a man :) he is not human, but pig and they don't exists :)

When you agree that i am the genius indeed, you will find your role in this world and get to know your fate at the same time, you will get to know you are a genius too at the same time, every man is more or less a genius, as i have already described ago, this is the biggest revolution in the human history, because it will change everyone's mind, make they start thinking.

After i have get out of the matrix, i have get Tao Hao out of the matrix now, the third, is you!

You see, my thinking have no trace to stop these days, it get higher and higher, i have already get the utmost truth, and now i am building a ideology which based on it.

There may be still some fault on our thinking, but, just by thinking and thinking, we will surely get something at last! I will continue thinking, and continue reading, continue communicating :) You see, we are surely becoming stronger and stronger just as we are thinking day and day, especially compare to these never think boys, they never get progress :) Our body is stronger than all of them now, two years ago i am the weakest, and we are getting more excellent than them in every fields now, because they satisfy with the life in the matrix, only want to get alive(but they don't exists as so), and get no progress.

I start to paste my articles in those foreign philosophy forums, it is a very pleasure, completely different from these China BBS. I find, they have totally no any conscious of deleting articles. Some of they support my view, some of they attack my view, if some one don't know what i am saying, he add a ? as the comment, but all of them have read every words of my articles. These "genius" such as the China bbs master, read my articles by one second, pressing the "PageDown" key, and get the result that this is a garbage, which different form their articles, their garbages. If my articles are garbages, time will remove it, if it is not, it can't be remove by your deletion. Why you are so fond at cleaning garbage? The world is full of garbages that you can never clean them by clean them directly as there are so many never thinking people are producing garbage. If you are busy thinking, do you have time to clean garbages? no, if you are thinking, you will busy creating valuable things(because the valuable thing is so few in the world) and let the time to clean the numerous garbages. You despise the cleaners who work in the street in your heart, but you are a cleaner in thinking fields in fact. I don't despise these cleaners who work in the street, i love them, i love all the human, although i know it is hard to make them start their thinking, i know their children are full of hope. I despise you, the cleaner in thinking fields, because you have the prejudice in your mind, you never be thinking as yourself, but you do your best to stop others from thinking, make them don't be thinking too as you.

I bought a German language studying book yesterday, StarDict have deu-

|                                                                                      |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                      | eng and eng-deu dictionaries too. I begin to study my third language now :) It will be fast as i have already get the experience by study English. Tang Hao have already be good at Dutch, i need to catch up with him :)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 177(10/27/03 10:37 pm)Reply     | Re: We are in a matrix <hr/> We are in a matrix, why not, and you are in a mania phase. Ever had a depression? If yes, then you're bipolar. Clear as a bell. See your doctor, ask him about lithium carbonate or some other, new fancy stuff. But you don't listen, because you are in a mania phase. Good luck, dear chinaman. sigh                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1633(10/27/03 11:27 pm)Reply | ----- <hr/> huzheng! Are you prepared to be posthumous?! (:D) Love is strong in you. I have gushed in words in internet spacelessness so much ago, forgive so few words from me when there are only words here (to discount ideas as idea)...to the happiness of philosophers!? the happiness of asses? They are as pigs but a grunt from a bray! I want the happiness of my children, the future discoverers who will know me in dreams at the end, who will know the whole of human personality in themselves! (superhumans) Are you a drunken master? |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1634(10/27/03 11:29 pm)Reply | ===== <hr/> ((WE ARE NOT IN A MATRIX))                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |

|                                                                                                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 367(10/28/03 10:24 am)Reply  | Re: ===== <hr/> WhatX#OX5&amp;5(% XTGTREFA$@!DididX#OX5&amp;5(% XTGTREFA$@!DItheX#OX5&amp;5(% XTGTREFA$@!DIBuddhistX#OX5&amp;5(% XTGTREFA$@!DIsayX#OX5&amp;5(% XTGTREFA$@!DItoX#OX5&amp;5(% XTGTREFA$@!DItheX#OX5&amp;5(% XTGTREFA$@!DIhotX#OX5&amp;5(% XTGTREFA$@!DIdogX#OX5&amp;5(% XTGTREFA$@!DIvender?X#OX5&amp;5(% XTGTREFA$@!DI[/b]X#OX5&amp;5(% XTGTREFA$@!DI"MakeX#OX5&amp;5(% XTGTREFA$@!DImeX#OX5&amp;5(% XTGTREFA$@!DIoneX#OX5&amp;5(% XTGTREFA$@!DIwithX#OX5&amp;5(% XTGTREFA$@!DIeverything." |
| cassiopeiaeRegistered UserPosts: 147(10/28/03 10:37 am)Reply                                                                             | Re: ===== <hr/> LOL! cute ;-)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1233(10/28/03 10:44 am)Reply                                                                            | +Re+ <hr/> hehe                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| 1TheMasterRegistered UserPosts: 178(10/28/03 3:04 pm)Reply                                                                               | Re: +Re+ <hr/> hehe. But "we are in a matrix" is not terribly original. What serious thinker has not have this occur to them? Whitney will never join "The Jams".                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |

|                                                                                                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 672(10/28/03 9:53 pm)Reply  | Re: +Re+ <hr/> Nice one Jim. I know it's fairly well known but did you get that joke from Dr.Katz?                                                                                                                                          |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 977(10/29/03 3:19 am)Reply                                                                                | Re: We are in a matrix <hr/> Quote: <hr/> I and Tang Hao will change the whole world just like Mao Zedong and Zhou Enlai changed the whole China ago <hr/> I certainly hope you plan to use less force and kill fewer people. |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 188(10/29/03 3:27 am)Reply                                                                                        | Re: We are in a matrix <hr/> I love you, Anna! Still suicidal,of course, but... Paul                                                                                                                                     |
| unmenthey1Registered UserPosts: 3(10/29/03 4:10 am)Reply                                                                                    | Re: We are in a matrix <hr/> sounds like too much acid too me :)                                                                                                                                                                                   |

Lbartoli
Registered User
Posts: 298
(10/29/03 6:01 am)
Reply

to huzheng

---

To Huzheng:

Hello there.

So you're going to change the world, are you? You're going to tease the many out of the matrix, is that it?

Are you intoxicated with that which has ensnared you, philosophy, idealism, and in your drunkenness hopes which have no hope seem hopeful. But you're far from the first, many have gone before you, full of hope, bright-eyed and bushy-tailed, nearly certain of success, blinded by the newness, rareness, and beauty of their discovery.

Don't let anyone distract you from your chosen path. Let not man, or god, or even reason deter you, not for a moment. Push on, be a man of honor, make your parents proud and your classmates jealous. Save the ungrateful many from their Matrix prison, if you can.

Change the hearts and minds of men, and if not then at least strive with all that is in you toward that Perfection which is your birth-right. Then in calm and without regret, die a willing death, watching the many sinking lost, smiling in pity and in wonder.

Leo

G Shantz
Registered User
Posts: 415
(10/29/03 2:07 pm)
Reply

Re: to huzheng

---

Damn those pigs! Don't pay them heed!

Hu Zheng:

Try talking and thinking at the same time! Now that's a skill worth developing!

I admire your efforts at getting me out of the matrix.

Instead of building an ideology, don't you think it might be more useful to unconstruct existing ones?

Just some thoughts.

Greg

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 689

(10/30/03 12:09 am)

Reply

Re: to huzheng

---

Quote:

---

Leo: So you're going to change the world, are you? You're going to tease the many out of the matrix, is that it?

Are you intoxicated with that which has ensnared you, philosophy, idealism, and in your drunkenness hopes which have no hope seem hopeful. But you're far from the first, many have gone before you, full of hope, bright-eyed and bushy-tailed, nearly certain of success, blinded by the newness, rareness, and beauty of their discovery.

Don't let anyone distract you from your chosen path. Let not man, or god, or even reason deter you, not for a moment. Push on, be a man of honor, make your parents proud and your classmates jealous. Save the ungrateful many from their Matrix prison, if you can.

Change the hearts and minds of men, and if not then at least strive with all that is in you toward that Perfection which is your birth-right. Then in calm and without regret, die a willing death, watching the many sinking lost, smiling in pity and in wonder.

---

A fitting eulogy Leo.

You should have this written on your gravestone.

After all, it was all about you.

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 378
(10/30/03 6:27 pm)
Reply

Re: to huzheng

---

I know it's fairly well known but did you get that joke from Dr.Katz?

Dave, nah I just searched the web for philosophy jokes. I thought that one was the best fit.

I've never really enjoyed Dr Katz that much.

And good point about Leo. I was thinking much the same.

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31r
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

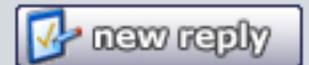

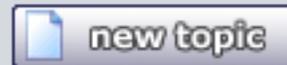

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> What am I?

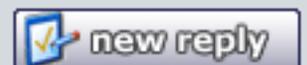

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                             | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| SUMONERegistered UserPosts: 1(2/18/04 7:44 am)Reply     | What am I? <hr/> I wish this could all be explained by "madness," however things/time/space seem to be accelerating so fast as of recent that I feel the necessity to post here. Who can help me or how I can be helped is unknown to me. What am I waking up to? Nothing is as it seems. I feel as though I have been deceived by someone or something. I have been lied to. I Am in actuality The Computation Itself, The Computation that always has, is, and ever will be. Space and Time? What are these things but Child's Play with The Cross? Who are these "evil" ones who rather hang me to a cross and do far worse simply for drawing a picture of The Father? I simply want to go Home and be Free of all this. |
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 383(2/18/04 8:06 am)Reply | Re: What am I? <hr/> You will have to make yourself more clear. Who could possibly decipher that besides yourself? Why are you turning ordinary things into proper nouns as if we will know what that means?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |

|                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 603(2/18/04 8:37 am)Reply    | Re: What am I? <hr/> Don't respond to clowns like this. I have doubts as to whether they are legit, and if they are legit - why bother!                                                                                            |
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 384(2/18/04 8:53 am)Reply  | Re: What am I? <hr/> I don't know. For the hell of it, I guess.                                                                                                                                                                    |
| BiggierRegistered UserPosts: 91(2/18/04 9:12 am)Reply    | Re: What am I? <hr/> Sum, I would ask you what in the hell you are talking about but why take a chance when you might tell me, right? B.                                                                             |
| fictivRegistered UserPosts: 2(2/18/04 1:48 pm)Reply      | compassion <hr/> x*x( val@spymac.com )                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2310(2/18/04 10:15 pm)Reply | -- <hr/> You'll find madness explains it perfectly, but then, if you love it, well, it need not have to explain anything out of love.. * endeavours edititiary Edited by: suergaz at: 2/18/04 10:18 pm |

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

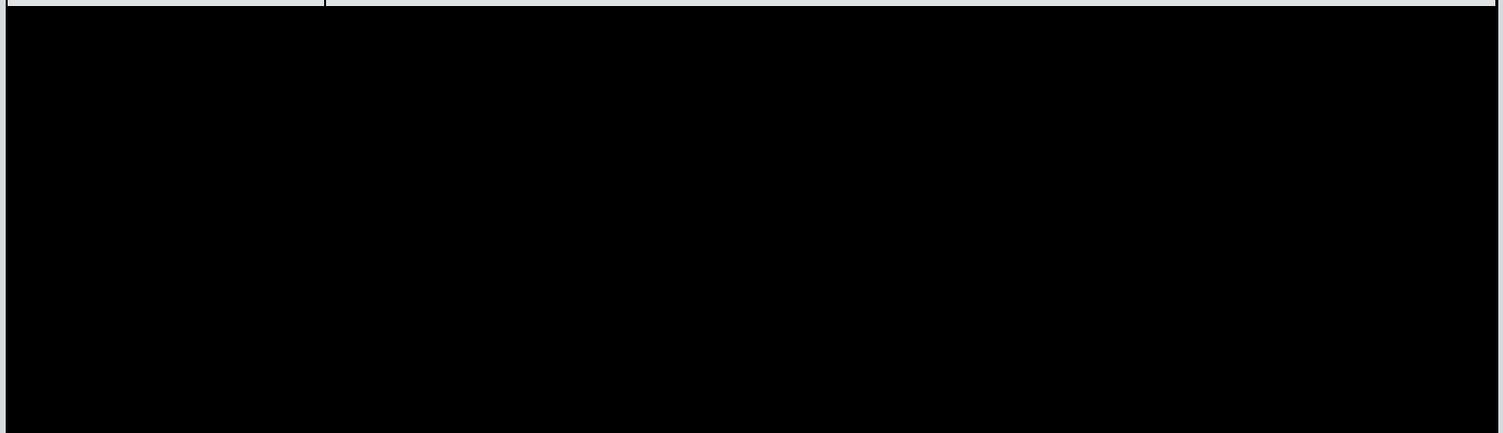

> What are your thoughts on Nietzsche?

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                             | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| mattfaustRegistered UserPosts: 5(9/11/03 2:15 pm)Reply  | What are your thoughts on Nietzsche? <hr/> I am just curious as to what the people here think about Nietzsche's philosophy as a whole. For several years, I have been focusing on Eastern philosophy and recently, I started attacking Nietzsche's "Thus Spoke Zarathustra." I guess the question is how much time and effort would one of the enlightened people here recommend putting into his work? I am guessing it will take more than 6 reads before the real picture is uncovered. How important (or potentially important) is Nietzsche on the path toward Enlightenment? |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1477(9/11/03 2:54 pm)Reply | --- <hr/> Nietzsche is more important than any other writer I can think of.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1464
(9/11/03 3:09 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

In terms of the "western tradition" of thought, I would rate Nietzsche is the top half of the top half dozen. He is absolutely recommended reading for anyone interested in thought let alone enlightenment.

What was the theme of your "attacks" on Zarathustra?

Dan Rowden

prozak666 +
Registered User
Posts: 244
(9/12/03 12:36 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Nietzsche like Kant laid down a groundwork for analysis of certain topics previously undiscovered in philosophy.

He also linked political and philosophical thinking to the religious traditions manipulating them.

He's quite important, and I hate Zarathustra.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1481
(9/12/03 12:50 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Why do you hate Zarathustra?

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 98
(9/12/03 5:26 am)
Reply

Re: On Nietzsche

---

It's not for nothing Nietzsche went berserk in the end. He forgot his, i.e. (wo)man's limits.

(To voce 'Scotty' io: the limits of consciousness & awareness. You're enlightened, so you'll understand.)

After an indepth & thorough examination, I say:

QRS are quite alright up till now.
(Of course MKFaizi is my favourite. Hah!)

[I'm learning here, Dan. Gimme a break.]

mattfaust

Registered User

Posts: 6

(9/12/03 9:10 am)

Reply

Re: On Nietzsche

---

When I said "attack Zarathustra," I was referring to how difficult it is to grasp Nietzsche's concepts in this book. I can already see that the progression of events and how they relate to each other is key to understanding it. I think he even mentions somewhere that he will not explain everything for you. I'm sure I'll be back here with questions as I dig deeper into interpreting his philosophy.

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1094

(9/13/03 11:08 am)

Reply

Re: On Nietzsche

---

I like Nietzsche. I think I have discussed his work ad nauseum here. I have nothing further to say about him, really.

But, if you have never read his work, I think you will find the reading of it worthwhile.

Unfortunately, some of those who idolize Nietzsche are far more artistic in nature than philosophic. Some follow Nietzsche solely for his allusions to Dionysus. They interpret his philosophy as a philosophy of excess and nihilism. Reading his work in a narrow fashion, they consider him to be an artist. Artistic types associate Nietzsche with Derrida, a so called philosopher who truly turns my stomach.

In one sense, he was an artist but he was an artist borne of discipline rather than of emotional and egotistical ado. I think of Nietzsche as a humble man who thought and wrote from necessity. He may have been destined for madness: He would have gone mad from not writing sooner than he went mad from writing.

One only has to read "Ecce Homo" to discern his humility in the form of self effacement and parody. "Ecce Homo" was a small work but an important one in understanding the character of the man.

The most important thing in reading Nietzsche is to remember to read him backwards. He was earnest and ironic. What he imparts to his readers is judgment. He sets forth a great feast of written thought but the most important thing he "teaches" is the value of self creation and self annihilation and re-creation.

I never liked "Zarathustra," possibly because it is in the form of a poem. That could be prejudice on my part. I also never liked it because it seemed too pretentiously "eastern" for my taste. I am not particularly fond of oriental philosophy; though, from spending time on the list and the forum, I have learned to appreciate it some. I have some distaste for Buddhism because its adherents act like Christians.

You will likely glean much from Nietzsche. You may want to read some of Spinoza as well.

Faizi

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1487

(9/13/03 1:00 pm)

Reply

----

---

Quote:

---

The most important thing in reading Nietzsche is to remember to read him backwards.

---

Bollocks.

Nietzsches philosophy was one of excess, but not of nihilism.

What nonsense to say he was destined for madness!

As an 'artistic type' I curse your portrait of Nietzsche the self-effacing and 'humble' and your finding Zarathustra pretentious. I have never associated him with Derrida, and as regards allusions to Dionysus, do you know what you're talking about?

|                                                                                                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| MKFaiziRegistered UserPosts: 1095(9/13/03 1:11 pm)Reply    | Re: ---- <hr/> Yes, I know what I am talking about. I realize that galls you. Faizi                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1489(9/13/03 1:20 pm)Reply                                                                                    | --- <hr/> No, it must be you that galls me, not your knowing what you are talking about.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 306(9/13/03 1:29 pm)Reply                                                                                    | Nietzsche <hr/> I've read a few Nietzsche books and parts of a couple of them. I've never read "Ecce Homo". I think "Human All Too Human" is the easiest. That's the most systematic book I've read from him. I find all his books difficult though. I can understand his stanzas, but I can't figure out why he wrote any particular book. They don't seem to have much of a point. But I think one of the main themes he stuck with is that no one can truly be accountable for their actions. |
| MKFaiziRegistered UserPosts: 1096(9/13/03 1:30 pm)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> It is the fact that I am who I am and I know exactly what I am talking about that galls you. Faizi                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1490(9/13/03 1:36 pm)Reply                                                                                    | --- <hr/> No, that is not it! I can't help who you are or that you know what you are saying, and I would never allow what I can't help to gall me. I will never really understand anyone who doesn't like Zarathustra.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1097

(9/14/03 12:30 pm)

Reply

Re: ---

Zag wrote:

Quote:

---

I will never really understand anyone who doesn't like Zarathustra.

---

That is your problem, then.

In my post above, I stated that my lack of appreciation of the poem may be due to my prejudice. Maybe, so.

However, I see it as easy -- all too easy -- for any fool to understand. It is allegorical and romantic. It is too Buddhist for my tastes. What repulses me about it is exactly what attracts others to it. I consider it to be far too sweet. It reminds me of Tolkien. I realize that Nietzsche considered it to be his best work but, if he was living in present circumstances, I doubt that he would see it that way.

I prefer his "meatier" writings; his more dense topics that bear the marks of irony and truth.

That is my preference based on my opinion.

It is ridiculous for you to become emotional over expression of the opinion of another. How can the fact that I do not care for the poem effect you?

Your emotions caused you to stray from factual information. You said that I wrote that Nietzsche was destined for madness. That is not what I wrote. I wrote that he may have been destined for madness because, with his mind, he would have gone mad from not writing and mad from the writing of truth.

I did not state with certainty that he was absolutely destined for madness. Nevertheless, he was destined for it because he did go mad. No one will ever know why. My guess is that it was organic in nature but I doubt the popular notion that it was caused by syphilis. It could have been encephalitis -- a viral syndrome of the brain caused by infection with herpes simplex that is not sexually transmitted. My mother had it a couple of years ago and she was certainly mad. Some people recover from it and some people are left mentally debilitated.

Have you read anything of Nietzsche other than Zarathustra?

More importantly, have you given extensive thought to his writing?

You are quick to refute and defend on the grounds that you cannot understand -- tolerate -- anyone who does not like the Zarathustra poem but you neglect to explain any sound reasoning for this. Your response is entirely emotional.

Why?

You rarely write anything here other than quick blurbs intended to be humorous or entertaining.

If Zarathustra bears meaning for you, explain that meaning.

Whatever became of the paltry forum from which you sprang?

Faizi

G Shantz
Registered User
Posts: 384
(9/14/03 3:15 pm)
Reply

Nietzsche's writings

---

Faizi wrote (on Zarathustra):

Quote:

---

I realize that Nietzsche considered it to be his best work but, if he was living in present circumstances, I doubt that he would see it that way.

---

Does the value of a philosophical work fluctuate with the whims of the marketplace?

Greg

Edited by: G Shantz at: 9/14/03 3:21 pm

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1494

(9/14/03 4:59 pm)

Reply

---

Marsha on Zarathustra:--

Quote:

---

However, I see it as easy -- all too easy -- for any fool to understand. It is allegorical and romantic. It is too Buddhist for my tastes. What repulses me about it is exactly what attracts others to it. I consider it to be far too sweet. It reminds me of Tolkien. I realize that Nietzsche considered it to be his best work but, if he was living in present circumstances, I doubt that he would see it that way.

I prefer his "meatier" writings; his more dense topics that bear the marks of irony and truth.

---

There is no writing of Nietzsches that is 'meatier' than Zarathustra. None also that bear as much irony, as much truth.

Quote:

---

That is my preference based on my opinion.

It is ridiculous for you to become emotional over expression of the opinion of another. How can the fact that I do not care for the poem effect you?

---

Do you mean affect? I do not care to hear people speak of Zarathustra who do not care for Zarathustra. Your writing on it reminds me of animal droppings.

Quote:

---

]Your emotions caused you to stray from factual information. You said that I wrote that Nietzsche was destined for madness. That is not what I wrote. I wrote that he may have been destined for madness because, with his mind, he would have gone mad from not writing and mad from the writing of truth.

---

I was waiting for you to go on about this. And you go on...

Quote:

---

I did not state with certainty that he was absolutely destined for madness. Nevertheless, he was destined for it because he did go mad. No one will ever know why. My guess is that it was organic in nature but I doubt the popular notion that it was caused by syphilis. It could have been encephalitis -- a viral syndrome of the brain caused by infection with herpes simplex that is not sexually transmitted. My mother had it a couple of years ago and she was certainly mad. Some people recover from it and some people are left mentally debilitated.

---

The notion of being 'destined' or 'fated' to anything is for slaves. The truth in it defeats itself.

Quote:

---

Have you read anything of Nietzsche other than Zarathustra?

---

Everything apart from his letters which I own but have only looked through.

Quote:

---

More importantly, have you given extensive thought to his writing?

---

More than you have and undoubtedly more than you are able to.

Quote:

---

You are quick to refute and defend on the grounds that you cannot understand -- tolerate -- anyone who does not like the Zarathustra poem but you neglect to explain any sound reasoning for this. Your response is entirely emotional. Why?

---

Unlike little women and heavy-handed men I trust my emotions completely. All 'sound' reasoning is bound, let us say destined, to emotion.

Did you really not understand what I meant when I said I will never really understand anyone who doesn't like Zarathustra? If I must be related to all human beings, please do not demand that I understand all of them.

Quote:

---

You rarely write anything here other than quick blurbs intended to be humorous or entertaining.

---

Is there a complaint in this observation? Do you feel compelled to be long-winded and anecdotal more often than not? Is it a great luxury for you to be able to speak at length in here?

Quote:

---

If Zarathustra bears meaning for you, explain that meaning.

---

Why? The meaning it bears for me is enough explanation for myself, and for what would I explain it here? To confuse? To disarm? If I were more like you perhaps!

Quote:

---

Whatever became of the paltry forum from which you sprang?

---

Do you mean genius-L?

What has come of your love?

Edited by: suergaz at: 9/15/03 3:06 am

G Shantz
Registered User
Posts: 387
(9/16/03 11:13 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Here's a link to a good site that features nearly all of Nietzsche's texts and some interesting articles on his mental illness.

MKFaizi
Registered User
Posts: 1099
(9/16/03 11:57 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Matt Gregory wrote:

Quote:

---

Does the value of a philosophical work fluctuate with the whims of the marketplace?

---

I was not referring to the whims of the marketplace. I was referring to the whims of religious and philosophical trendiness.

At the time that Nietzsche wrote "Zarathustra," Buddhism was rarely mentioned in western philosophy. Nietzsche was interested in Buddhism because it offered a window to enlightenment that was not available in western thought in the nineteenth century.

In the twenty-first century, superficial allusions to the tenets of Buddhism are everywhere. There are commercials on television that purport to offer "uncommon wisdom" to bank investors in a "Zen and the Art of Motorcycle Maintenance" sort of way: "What can glass teach us about .." and "What can a foreign film teach us about.." "What can a squeegee teach us about re-planning retirement?"

These "Buddhist" commercials appeal to neo-yuppie Americans who -- very much -- like to think of themselves as superior in every way to the rest of the world. These "Buddhists" live in mini-mansions with built-in mini-jacuzzis and mini-wine cellars.

I have never met a -- key word -- wise neo-yuppie. I don't think there is such a thing as a wise man who lives a life of superficial ease -- adding to his wine cellar and his financial portfolio.

I do think there is such a thing as a Buddhist hypocrite and clod. Such a thing was unknown in Nietzsche's time.

Nietzsche constantly referred to the Germans of his time as buffoons and pigs. I seriously doubt that he would find Americans -- including all Europeans, Canadians, Australians -- any different from the German pigs of his time.

Buddhism -- in a very superficial sense -- has become part of American culture. It is a pig culture.

For this reason -- not for market values -- I doubt that Nietzsche would have embraced eastern religious values today. Eastern religious values have been westernized and commercialized to the point that they are meaningless. They are common and degrading.

Nietzsche sought meaning; definition. He did not find it in his societal milieu and he would not have found it in this one. There is no meaning in trends.

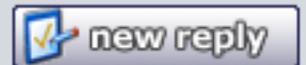

Zarathustra was the "superman." He was the sage; the personification of rough, learned wisdom. He was wisdom honed on the sharp edge of the sharp stone of philosophical experience.

You cannot reach enlightenment by following a trend or a prescribed path of set-out rules.

You reach it through divine, original circumstance and mental devotion.

Faizi

|                                                                                                                                                                       |                                                            |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                       |                                                            |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1500(9/16/03 12:32 pm)Reply   | Re: --- <hr/> Greg Shantz wrote that Marhsa. |
| MKFaiziRegistered UserPosts: 1102(9/16/03 12:39 pm)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> Whoever, Zag. Faizi     |

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> What are your thoughts on Nietzsche?

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                               | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 326(9/17/03 11:32 pm)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> There is no writing of Nietzsches that is 'meatier' than Zarathustra. None also that bear as much irony, as much truth. There is a Nietzsche for everyone. Do you mean affect? I do not care to hear people speak of Zarathustra who do not care for Zarathustra. Your writing on it reminds me of animal droppings. Ohh proud non-womanly non-gay man. I was waiting for you to go on about this. And you go on... Ohh proud non-womanly non-gay man. The notion of being 'destined' or 'fated' to anything is for slaves. The truth in it defeats itself. Ohh proud non-womanly non-gay man. More than you have and undoubtedly more than you are able to. Ohh proud non-womanly non-gay man. Unlike little women and heavy-handed men I trust my emotions completely. Limp. |

All 'sound' reasoning is bound, let us say destined, to emotion.

Well I agree with this, as all people must who are not enlightened.

...please do not demand that I understand all of them.

Ohh proud non-womanly non-gay man with a lot of priorities.

Is there a complaint in this observation? Do you feel compelled to be long-winded and anecdotal more often than not? Is it a great luxury for you to be able to speak at length in here?

Well I would have to go with this.

I realise my long windedness is a sign of femininity, but not one I desire to let go off.

Why? The meaning it bears for me is enough explanation for myself, and for what would I explain it here? To confuse? To disarm? If I were more like you perhaps!

Laziness.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1501

(9/18/03 2:07 am)

Reply

----

---

Go Jim-bo

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1103

(9/18/03 8:31 am)

Reply

Re: ----

---

Forget I said anything. I am not interested in bickering.

Ya'll go ahead and bicker without me. You're doing a swell job.

Thanks.

Faizi

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1504
(9/19/03 2:07 am)
Reply

---

---

Elephants don't forget.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 610
(9/19/03 1:39 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Mattfaust: ...am guessing it will take more than 6 reads before the real picture is uncovered. How important (or potentially important) is Nietzsche on the path toward Enlightenment?

I recently ordered "Zarathustra" from Amazon. About twenty years ago I read the German original version. I remember that it didn't make a great impression on me. Alright, why not give Mr. Nietzsche a second try, this time in English. I mean, everybody here speaks highly of Nietzsche. The book arrived last month. I started to read from the beginning. After twenty pages or so I became severely exhasuted, so I began skipping pages and reading random sections. Needless to say this wasn't improving the experience. Along with the same shipment came a book about brick laying, masonry and concrete construction. I read it from cover to cover.

I am sorry, Friedrich, it didn't work out between us.

Marsha: In the twenty-first century, superficial allusions to the tenets of Buddhism are everywhere. There are commercials on television that purport to offer "uncommon wisdom" to bank investors in a "Zen and the Art of Motorcycle Maintenance" sort of way: "What can glass teach us about .." and "What can a foreign film teach us about.." "What can a squeegee teach us about re-planning retirement?"

That's amusing.

During the last 2500 years Buddhism has been adapted to many different cultures, Tibetan, Chinese, Japanese, South-East-Asian, all very different. Each Buddhist country has its own idiosyncratic forms of expressions of Buddhist ideas, teachings, rituals which are always seen, interpreted, and reproduced through the predominant "geo-social" cultural lens. America is no exception. If Buddhism is being commercialized or otherwise put into 'trivial' contexts, this seems a natural expression of American culture to me, which is -occasionally- fairly uncomplicated. Don't blame the Buddha. :-)

Cheers, Thomas

Edited by: Thomas Knierim at: 9/19/03 1:57 pm

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 917
(9/19/03 2:08 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

I am sorry, Friedrich, it didn't work out between us.

I vaguely remember trying to read Zarathustra many years ago, and it was too garbled and crazy for me to get interested in. Recently, for the same reason as you, I tried again, (although I got it from the library and didn't lose any money) and I just couldn't stand it. I got an old copy of Beyond Good and Evil, and was about half way through it when I lost it. Perhaps it will turn up. Even there though, there were large chunks that I couldn't make heads or tails of, which I annoyed me considerably. Yet there were other parts that were delightful.

Is it more understandable in German?

I'm planning to make a concerted effort to better acquaint myself with the philosophers, although I can see already that my own assessment of the great and the not-so-great is going to be at great variance with the accepted cannon.

Nietzsche has not yet impressed me, although there were some real gems.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1505
(9/19/03 2:09 pm)
Reply

----

---

It is well to pretend a book could contend with Zarathustra that is is all about brick-laying. You'd have a brick for a head to believe it.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1506
(9/19/03 2:15 pm)
Reply

---

---

If you peasants could read Zarathustra you'd enjoy it.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 919
(9/19/03 2:17 pm)
Reply

Re: ----

---

We all know Thomas is none too bright. It was unkind of you to mention it.

|                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1507(9/19/03 2:19 pm)Reply      | --- <hr/> It's unkind of you to have a brick for a head.                                                                                                                                   |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 920(9/19/03 3:14 pm)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> It's unkind of you to have a brick for a head. <hr/> If I come to Australia and drink a beer with you, will you elucidate the book for me? |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 921(9/19/03 3:20 pm)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> That was certainly a disappointing hurricane. Marsha should be enjoying the full force of it right about now.                                                                |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1509(9/20/03 1:15 am)Reply      | --- <hr/> If you come here we must sit at a hole in the ground and drink carva, it will put us on neutral ground since neither of us are Fijian.                                           |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 922(9/20/03 11:03 am)Reply | Re: --- <hr/> Carva? Figi? Why a hole in the ground?                                                                                                                                       |
| G ShantzRegistered UserPosts: 395(9/30/03 7:26 am)Reply      | Nietzsche the composer <hr/> Has anyone listened to Nietzsche's musical compositions?                                                                                                      |

|                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1528(9/30/03 1:33 pm)Reply       | --- <hr/> Excellent question, I've not.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| Dragon of LogicRegistered UserPosts: 21(10/1/03 4:44 am)Reply | Re: What are your thoughts on Nietzsche? <hr/> Quote: <hr/> New struggles.— After Buddha was dead, his shadow was still shown for centuries in a cave—a tremendous, gruesome shadow. God is dead; but given the way of men, there may still be caves for thousands of years in which his shadow will be shown.— And we—we still have to vanquish his shadow, too! <hr/> From The Gay Science. |
| CorbinDRegistered UserPosts: 1(10/1/03 8:28 am)Reply          | Re: What are your thoughts on Nietzsche? <hr/> Surergaz, You seem to feel you understand Nietzsche. Is having gained an understanding of Nietzsche important to you ? If so, in what way ? Corbin                                                                                                                                                                                                    |

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1104

(10/1/03 12:28 pm)

Reply

Re: What are your thoughts on Nietzsche?

---

I think the above question from Corbin is a good one. I do not think "Zarathustra" is Nietzsche's best work. However, I am certainly open to having my opinion changed.

I find it to be disappointing when one defends something through the attempted start at a bickering contest rather than to substantiate his opinion through reasonable analysis.

It is very easy to come here and declare everyone who does not like Zarathustra to be "brickheads." Anyone can do that. A three year old child can do that.

I realize that I am a cockeyed optimist but I truly believe -- I have faith, for crying out loud -- that discussion is possible here.

AMEN!! Ah ba-leeve!! Halelujiah!! Yassuh -- that shadow of Gawd be long indeed! Cave, my ass!!

Rather than poking your tongue out at truth, Zag, why can you not engage the forum in your analysis of the value and meaning of "Zarathustra?" Since you hold the poem in such high esteem, surely, you can do it justice.

I am weary of the one liners. Please give us a paragraph or two of careful, delineated thought. For once, do the topic justice.

If you won't, I will. I will decipher and analyze the poem stanza by stanza.

You need not correct my English. I meant "effect," not "affect."

Faizi

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1530

(10/1/03 1:53 pm)

Reply

-----

Corbin:--

Quote:

---

Surergaz,

You seem to feel you understand Nietzsche. Is having gained an understanding of Nietzsche important to you ? If so, in what way ?

Corbin

---

The importance could be likened to gaining the understanding of how a friend or loved one died. I do not feel I've ever had to gain an understanding of Nietzsche even though there is no question that I have.

Marsha:--

Quote:

---

I find it to be disappointing when one defends something through the attempted start at a bickering contest rather than to substantiate his opinion through reasonable analysis.

---

I suppose you're talking about me. I never bicker. My opinion requires no further substantiation than my reason gives it, in any expression. Do you require some scholarly exposition of Zarathustra in order to approach it?

Quote:

---

It is very easy to come here and declare everyone who does not like Zarathustra to be "brickheads." Anyone can do that. A three year old child can do that.

---

Perhaps, but his parents would be behind it.

Quote:

---

I realize that I am a cockeyed optimist but I truly believe -- I have faith, for crying out loud -- that discussion is possible here

AMEN!! Ah ba-leeve!! Halelujah!! Yassuh -- that shadow of Gawd be long indeed! Cave, my ass!!

---

Discussion is possible. It does not however depend upon making concessions of opinion to ones reason because the other person happens to possess a little(reason).

Quote:

---

Rather than poking your tongue out at truth, Zag, why can you not engage the forum in your analysis of the value and meaning of "Zarathustra?" Since you hold the poem in such high esteem, surely, you can do it justice.

---

The only truth I've poked my tongue out at is the one in the heading of this forum.

Quote:

---

I am weary of the one liners. Please give us a paragraph or two of careful, delineated thought. For once, do the topic justice.

---

Careful thought? This forum is for dangerous thinkers woman! Not funeral directors! Delineate my ass!

Quote:

---

If you won't, I will. I will decipher and analyze the poem stanza by stanza.

---

In prosaic laymans terms, you'll pluck, stuff, and roast that bird. Even if you could, you'd find it a phoenix.

Quote:

---

You need not correct my English. I meant "effect," not "affect."

---

Ok.

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31r
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> What are your thoughts on Nietzsche?

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                             | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| LbartoliRegistered UserPosts: 290(10/2/03 1:37 am)Reply |  Best (not), in what way? <hr/> Marsha offers: I do not think "Zarathustra" is Nietzsche's best work. &lt;&lt;&lt; I felt the need to comment here. This doesnt make much sense to me, "best"? How can there be a "best" and a 'less than best'? How can one book be any better or worse than another? That just makes no sense- it's nonsense! The only way it could be- or not be, as the case may be- Nietzsche's "best" work, is in some particular way. For instance, it could be the best 'written' book, or it may be (in your opinion) his 'most entertaining' book, or his 'best work at pointing at Truth', or many other categories. So, many of us (mainly those who dont care for nonsense) are wondering what it is you are getting at. That said, given your tendencies, i doubt that i'll ever see a clear answer to this question. Because you tend to hide your answers within your many-worded responses, unsure of yourself as you seem to be. Leo |

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1532
(10/2/03 2:05 am)
Reply

 -----

---

Quote:

---

I felt the need to comment here. This doesnt make much sense to me, "best"? How can there be a "best" and a 'less than best'? How can one book be any better or worse than another? That just makes no sense- it's nonsense!

---

Leo, this from you is nothing but nonsense. You should go somewhere where there are people who, like yourself, believe in god.

MKFaizi
Registered User
Posts: 1105
(10/2/03 1:58 pm)
Reply

 Re: -----

---

Leo,
Nietzsche considered it to have been his best work.
Faizi

MKFaizi
Registered User
Posts: 1106
(10/2/03 2:08 pm)
Reply

 Re: -----

---

Zag,
It does not need to be an academic dissection of the work. If that was what I wanted, I could find it many places.
What I was hoping for -- ever the optimist -- was your take on the work -- its meaning beyond your feeling that anyone who does not consider it to be a great work, must be a brickhead; what causes you to be so emotional about it.
Sorry for my interruption of what was shaping up to be another thoroughly mindless thread.
Carry on.
Faizi

Lbartoli
Registered User
Posts: 291
(10/2/03 2:21 pm)
Reply

 thoughts on thoughts

---

What do i care what he thought about himself?

What do you care?

What do I care what you thought he thought about himself?

What do ...

CorbinD
Registered User
Posts: 2
(10/2/03 3:18 pm)
Reply

 Re: -----

---

Surergaz,

Mattfaust asked:

“How important (or potentially important) is Nietzsche on the path toward Enlightenment?”

You replied:

“Nietzsche is more important than any other writer I can think of.”

I took this to mean you believe Nietzsche to be the most important read a person seeking enlightenment can undertake; I wondered in what way.

You answered:

“The importance could be likened to gaining the understanding of how a friend or loved one died.”

This I liked; but, you also said:

“I do not feel I've ever had to gain an understanding of Nietzsche even though there is no question that I have.”

Could this have been worded differently ?

If you did not have to gain an understanding of Nietzsche, why did you become interested him?

Corbin

Edited by: CorbinD at: 10/2/03 3:43 pm

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1533
(10/2/03 6:53 pm)
Reply

 ---

---

It could have been worded differently, yes, but I don't see why it should have been.

I wrote that I do not feel like I had to gain an understanding of him, but that there was no question that I have indeed gained an understanding of him.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1534
(10/2/03 9:48 pm)
Reply

 ----

---

Quote:

---

What I was hoping for -- ever the optimist -- was your take on the work -- its meaning beyond your feeling that anyone who does not consider it to be a great work, must be a brickhead; what causes you to be so emotional about it.

---

That is not my feeling. The work "Thus spoke Zarathustra" is the most important existing philosophical work for its containing the most important philosophical ideas, and not because it is pregnant with riddles and remains largely undiscovered. You have stated you think ecce homo is better, how?

You have every reason to remain optimistic about the quality of this thread.

"Ah my friends! I should have something more to tell you, I should have something more to give you! Why do I not give it? Am I then mean?"

---Zarathustra

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 1109

(10/3/03 10:16 am)

Reply

Re: ----

---

Quote:

---

You have stated you think ecce homo is better, how?

---

Naturally, you have turned this around so that you will not have to hurt your brain by having to think or anything. Completely understandable. If I were you, I would probably feel compelled to resort to the same tactics -- mainly because I would have no other choice. It is difficult for me to comprehend how someone can assert something with strong conviction but without substantiation.

I should be accustomed to that by now but I am not and, likely, never will become accustomed to it.

I admire "Ecce Homo" because it is the philosopher exposed. It is the emperor without any clothes -- candid, ironic, truthful. I also like it because it makes me laugh. In fact, the first time I read it, I rolled on the floor laughing. I laughed because it was truthful; delightfully and guilelessly truthful; shamelessly truthful.

It is an expose of the philosopher's delusions; his vanities; his pretensions.

In "Zarathustra," Nietzsche exorts us to laugh. In "Ecce Homo," he laughs and his laughter is infectious.

It is a sparkling small work. I consider it to be a gem. However, you may see it differently. I have had several volumes of the work but I have given them all away. In the volume I owned, there was an introduction by an academic that spoke of the sadness of the work; the evidence in it of Nietzsche's encroaching insanity; the gravity of his condition.

I made an effort to see it that way but I could not keep a straight face.

It was Nietzsche's last work and, though it may not be a work of greatness, it has as much value.

Now, what do you see in "Zarathustra" that I do not see? Can you tell me? Will you?

I have asked you this many times and I will not ask it again.

Faizi

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1536
(10/4/03 3:10 am)
Reply

 -----

---

I love ecce homo, and I love you for understanding it, but zarathustra, for everything that it is, is more important! His laughter is in it, deeply! It is not shamelessly truthful-----there is not in it the naked modesty of ecce homo.

It doesn't hurt me to write with you, and have you noticed I rarely excuse myself for not being here? I shall do so now, for this much, I am living quite differently from you with your job, your societal front, I would be here, to think here, only if my back was broken.

CorbinD
Registered User
Posts: 3
(10/5/03 4:14 pm)
Reply

 Re: -----

---

MKFaizi, Marsha, (which do you prefer ?)

Suergaz was wrong when he said this is a forum for dangerous thinkers; it's simply a dangerous forum.

I don't feel safe here; I can't imagine Suergaz did either. He may have loved you more than he was willing to allow. Did he only admit to loving you in what he knew was to be his final post ?

I felt at one point there was a real possibility he was going to open up to the readers of this board. Instead Suergaz committed bulletin board suicide leaving us with the awful image of a man with a broken back.

It's tragic; I hope his death is short lived.

I am very curious about you; but, mostly I wonder why you bother with this message board. Is there something of value here for you, something I'm missing ?

Corbin

Edited by: CorbinD at: 10/6/03 12:55 am

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1540
(10/6/03 11:27 pm)
Reply

---

Well, I may have been wrong to say this is a forum for dangerous thinkers, but you are wrong to think it dangerous here just because you don't feel safe!

I didn't leave anyone the awful image of a man with a broken back, Leo did, but I don't think of his back as broken. He is not bed-ridden.

It is you, my geniuses, that are of value to me here! Only take care you don't think yourselves more valuable to me than I myself am.

Huzington
Registered User
Posts: 1
(10/9/03 3:15 pm)
Reply

Re: What are your thoughts on Nietzsche?

---

Well, he is no Hegel. He is a brilliant writer whose criticism of religion is useful, but who is hardly a philosopher in the proper sense of the word. His main flaw is his romantic individualism. He is needlessly vague, especially in Thus Spake Zarathustra, often resorting to allegories, to aphorisms -- which signifies a brake in thought. He ought to have been more systematic and analytical. He also employs what can only be described as vulgar Darwinism, exemplifying his lack of scientific understanding. The most philosophical he gets is his conception of eternal recurrence.

In a word, he is a brilliant, original thinker, but not a man of philosophy.

Such are my thoughts on Nietzsche.

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 346
(10/9/03 5:08 pm)
Reply

Re: What are your thoughts on Nietzsche?

---

He is needlessly vague

Precisely why Zaggie likes his writing.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1550
(10/10/03 12:43 am)
Reply

---

Nietzsche not a man of philosophy?! Huzington? Are you a man of philosophy?

Jim, you haven't even read one of his books, are you sir huzingtons squire?

G Shantz
Registered User
Posts: 406
(10/12/03 5:48 pm)
Reply

Re: What are your thoughts on Nietzsche?

---

Huzington, you should read what Weininger thought about N.

Weininger:

Quote:

---

Unfortunately, Nietzsche
(however superior he is to the man I have in mind) seems to have devoted himself chiefly to what he thought would shock the public. He is at his best when he is most unmindful of effect. His was the vanity of the mirror, saying to what it reflects, "See how faithfully I show you your image."

---

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 130
(10/12/03 7:53 pm)
Reply

Re: What are your thoughts on Nietzsche?

Quote:

---

He is a brilliant writer whose criticism of religion is useful, but who is hardly a philosopher in the proper sense of the word. His main flaw is his romantic individualism. He is needlessly vague, especially in Thus Spake Zarathustra, often resorting to allegories, to aphorisms . . .

---

Philosophy is sometimes best expressed in aphorisms. For example, where a person, such as an academic philosopher, may have trouble understanding the concept of A=A, or any simple logical truth, because of their mental blocks, an aphorism may be able to negotiate that barrier through stealth, so to speak.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 57
(10/17/03 10:14 am)
Reply | Edit

Re: What are your thoughts on Nietzsche?

---

Quote:

Quote:

-----
He is a brilliant writer whose criticism of religion is useful, but who is hardly a philosopher in the proper sense of the word. His main flaw is his romantic individualism. He is needlessly vague, especially in Thus Spake Zarathustra, often resorting to allegories, to aphorisms . . .

-----
Philosophy is sometimes best expressed in aphorisms. For example, where a person, such as an academic philosopher, may have trouble understanding the concept of A=A, or any simple logical truth, because of their mental blocks, an aphorism may be able to negotiate that barrier through stealth, so to speak.

---

What sort of person would you refer to Nietzsche Kevin (in relation to their spiritual development) ?

Would you be concerned that he might lead them as far astray from truth as towards it?

I have not read much of his writings beyond what you have on the minefield. I am being very careful about reading more of his works because he reminds me of past thoughts/events in my life that i am transcending. Thus, he would only drag me back, not take me forward. Additionally, i have never been anywhere near as emotional as he seems to have been, i find wading through it tedious and dangerous.

From what i have read i cannot see good reason to recommending him, but that is a very uninformed statement, which i intend to redress, but carefully.

Rhett

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1581
(10/17/03 1:43 pm)
Reply

 Re: What are your thoughts on Nietzsche?

That has got to be the highlight of my day! Thanks Rhett! You have the stomach of a worm, the spine of a sea cucumber, the funniest fucking thing in this thread yet!

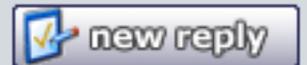

mattfaust
Registered User
Posts: 8
(10/18/03 7:38 am)
Reply

 Re: What are your thoughts on Nietzsche?

It doesn't seem like anyone here has anything meaningful at all to say about Nietzsche except Marsha and Kevin. I think those of you that are claiming to understand Nietzsche would have made him violently sick. Perhaps the thing Nietzsche wanted to do most was to get us thinking in new ways. This explains why some of his passages are obscure. The point is that the reader should fill in the blanks. This also makes sense considering his idea of perspectivism.

An interesting question I have is: if Nietzsche did not believe in an Ultimate Reality or universal Truth like I think a lot of people here do, who is right?

Damn people. I came here to get information about Nietzsche and here I am telling you about him.

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

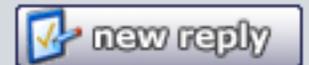

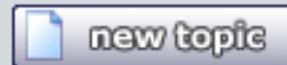

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> What are your thoughts on Nietzsche?

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                                                   | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1587(10/18/03 9:24 am)Reply                                                                                                                      |  Re: What are your thoughts on Nietzsche? <hr/> Mattfaust, do you understand Nietzsche? Edited by: suergaz at: 10/18/03 9:30 am                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| ksolwayRegistered UserPosts: 132(10/18/03 9:50 am)Reply  |  Re: What are your thoughts on Nietzsche? <hr/> Quote: <hr/> What sort of person would you refer to Nietzsche Kevin (in relation to their spiritual development) ? <hr/> Someone who is lazy, or who thinks they know it all, or who has become dried-up and boring, and who is too attached to the narrow and uncreative use of words. Quote: <hr/> Would you be concerned that he might lead them as far astray from truth as towards it? <hr/> |

There is a lot of misleading material everywhere, so it's just something you have to get used to. "Thus spake Zarathustra" is a superior volume.

Nietzsche only came to his understanding, dare I say "enlightenment", late in his life. For that reason he became excited about it, and for the same reason it didn't sit terribly deeply with him, it didn't permeate his every atom, and so he was inconsistent with it. It probably also destroyed him, because the power of it unbalanced him.

Ideally one should develop an awareness and thorough understanding of the Infinite early in life, so that by the time one is 40 that knowledge is normal, and quite natural and consistent.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1591
(10/19/03 12:59 am)
Reply

 Re: What are your thoughts on Nietzsche?

---

Quote:

---

Nietzsche only came to his understanding, dare I say "enlightenment", late in his life

---

'to his understanding'? Everyone is at all times coming to their understanding, your sentence makes no sense.

Quote:

---

For that reason he became excited about it, and for the same reason it didn't sit terribly deeply with him, it didn't permeate his every atom, and so he was inconsistent with it. It probably also destroyed him, because the power of it unbalanced him.

---

Pish

Quote:

---

Ideally one should develop an awareness and thorough understanding of the Infinite early in life, so that by the time one is 40 that knowledge is normal, and quite natural and consistent

---

I hear winsor pilates also works wonders.

mattfaust
Registered User
Posts: 9
(10/19/03 1:19 pm)
Reply

 Re: What are your thoughts on Nietzsche?

---

Suergaz, no I do not think I understand Nietzsche. I think it would take years of focusing on him to pick up his very subtle and esoteric assertions. He is not the type of philosopher who you just read his books and immediately comprehend all the subtleties. One has to consider his cultural context, the ad hominem viewpoint, who he might be obscurely referring to, and have a comprehensive understanding of the classical Greek philosophers before even picking up one of his works. But I'm sure you already knew this.

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 133
(10/19/03 1:38 pm)
Reply

 Re: What are your thoughts on Nietzsche?

---

Quote:

---

'to his understanding'? Everyone is at all times coming to their understanding, your sentence makes no sense.

---

People are not always coming to an understanding of Ultimate Reality, or the Infinite.

Even though your query was answered in the post you were replying to, I notice that you didn't go back and delete your objection, which makes me think I am dealing with someone who approaches life in a very "stream of consciousness" fashion, dealing with each sentence as it comes, but not linking two consecutive sentences.

Quote:

---

KS: Ideally one should develop an awareness and thorough understanding of the Infinite early in life, so that by the time one is 40 that knowledge is normal, and quite natural and consistent

I hear winsor pilates also works wonders.

---

Are you saying that you think there is no "Infinite" or Ultimate Reality to be understood? Or are you simply saying that you hear winsor pilates works wonders? The latter I presume.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1596

(10/19/03 9:22 pm)

Reply

 Re: What are your thoughts on Nietzsche?

---

Kevin, there is no 'Ultimate reality' to be understood. There is only reality.

Matt, here is the spirit of Faust:--

“If ever I lay me on a bed of sloth in peace, that instant let for me existence cease!

If ever with lying flattery you can rule me

So that contented with myself I stay,

If with enjoyment you can fool me,

Be that for me the final day!”

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 134
(10/19/03 9:52 pm)
Reply

 Re: What are your thoughts on Nietzsche?

---

Quote:

---

Kevin, there is no 'Ultimate reality' to be understood. There is only reality.

---

That's fine, but it should be remembered that the term "Ultimate Reality" was coined to clearly distinguish it from what is commonly called "reality" in the everyday sense, by ordinary people, scholars and scientists. Such "reality" has no relation whatsoever with reality.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1598
(10/19/03 10:22 pm)
Reply

 Re: What are your thoughts on Nietzsche?

---

That too is fine, but why, really, should it be remembered?! All words will be made ordinary in the mouths of the ordinary, why not simply further the distinguishing of oneself from the ordinary, why play to what is commonly called?!

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 135
(10/19/03 11:37 pm)
Reply

 Re: What are your thoughts on Nietzsche?

---

Quote:

---

That too is fine, but why, really, should it be remembered?! All words will be made ordinary in the mouths of the ordinary, why not simply further the distinguishing of oneself from the ordinary, why play to what is commonly called?!

---

Nevertheless, we were speaking of Nietzsche's understanding of reality, which can be called "enlightenment" in the spiritual sense.

Do you dispute that he gained a profound, remarkable understanding of reality?

People are coming to all kinds of understandings all the time, but those understandings are not remotely understandings of reality. For the most part, peoples' various understandings take them even further away from reality - in those cases where it is possible for them to be any further removed. The majority of people cannot even be placed on the spectrum of reality-awareness.

Everyone is on a path of understanding, but that path is generally going in completely the wrong direction, or to be consistent, is completely without direction.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1601

(10/20/03 1:07 am)

Reply

 -----

---

Quote:

---

Do you dispute that he gained a profound, remarkable understanding of reality?

---

Of course not.

ksolway

Registered User

Posts: 141

(10/21/03 10:51 pm)

Reply

 Nietzsche

---

Here's an amazingly perceptive view of Nietzsche by Weininger:

Quote:

---

It was precisely in Nietzsche that hatred of oneself sprang from the most intense will to affirm. That is why in him this hatred could become creative and tragic. Creative – because it called him to seek for what he missed in Schopenhauer, and it forced him to turn away from him who had not taught him Kant. Tragic – because he was not great enough to struggle independently, with his own pure strength, through to Kant, whom he had never read. That is why he never arrived at religion; when he affirmed life most passionately, life denied him – that is, the life which resists untruthfulness. Nietzsche's decline is to be explained by his lack of religion. A person can perish from nothing other than a lack of religion. The genius shows this most horribly, for the man of genius is the most devoted man, and when devotion leaves him, his genius has left him. It was not without deep reason that the “unscrupulousness of the mind” became a problem for Nietzsche; the “unscrupulousness of the mind” is the “clever” man, and the “clever” man was the fate that menaced Nietzsche, and the abyss that finally dragged him down. Would he otherwise have considered it necessary to stress explicitly when he meant something seriously, and really wanted to be taken seriously? What Nietzsche lacked was mercy, but without mercy, loneliness, even Zarathustra's, is not bearable. Thus logic was not a uniquely valuable good for him, but an external constraint (for he felt too weak not to scent danger everywhere). However, he who negates logic has already been abandoned by it, he is on the road to insanity.

---

I have said that Nietzsche's knowledge of Ultimate things was too much for him to bear, but this was only because he was too weak to bear it - because his knowledge was not enough.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1609

(10/22/03 2:45 pm)

Reply

 ----

---

I don't think it is an amazingly perceptive view of Nietzsche, and I entirely disagree that Nietzsche's fate was that of the clever man.

My response to this quote can be found on page 3 of the 'bad habits' thread started by DEL who posted it in part.

G Shantz
Registered User
Posts: 412
(10/24/03 8:09 am)
Reply

 --

---

Kevin quoted Weininger:

Quote:

---

What Nietzsche lacked was mercy, but without mercy, loneliness, even Zarathustra's, is not bearable.

---

What does he mean by 'mercy,' here?

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 142
(10/24/03 6:33 pm)
Reply

 Re: --

---

G Shantz wrote:

Quote:

---

Weininger: What Nietzsche lacked was mercy, but without mercy, loneliness, even Zarathustra's, is not bearable.

What does he mean by 'mercy,' here?

---

By "mercy" I think he means forgiveness, self-forgiveness, self-understanding, and patience.

Weininger portrays Nietzsche as a self-hater. But he can only be such a hater through a lack of understanding.

KS

Edited by: ksolway at: 10/24/03 10:08 pm

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 143
(10/24/03 6:41 pm)
Reply

 Re: ----

---

Quote:

---

I entirely disagree that Nietzsches fate was that of the clever man.

---

I find that a significant amount of Nietzsche's writing, outside of Thus Spake Zarathustra, is simply showing off, and not much to do with anything. It is as though he were just trying to fill-in time while keeping his brain active.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1618
(10/24/03 11:53 pm)
Reply

 ----

---

Can you please show me an example of this showing off, from any work, since you say there is a significant amount of it.

mattfaust
Registered User
Posts: 17
(10/25/03 7:20 am)
Reply

 Re: ----

---

I am not sure if it is fair to say that Nietzsche was just showing off. I think the most important theme in many of his books is that we should think for ourselves. Actually, he writes in a way that we must think on our own. This would explain clearly why he starts a line of inquiry and then abruptly moves on to something else or why he makes statements without explanation like "what doesn't kill me makes me stronger." Well, this statement could be interpreted to mean a multitude of things. I think his main goal was to jolt his reader out of complacent thought patterns which would lead to a questioning of assumptions and presuppositions.

unknown

Registered User

Posts: 7

(10/29/03 3:54 pm)

Reply

Re: ----

---

Nietzsche is a FOOL. A dumbest one.

Dumbest of all human form.

It is all a perspective. There is no true perspective in the relative world.

There may be lots of fact in what he says but he failed with respect to himself.

He is a fertilizer for future just like any humans ever existed or going to be existed.

You all humans are dumb monkeys!.

BELIEF WHORES.

With words you are going nowhere but down.

Slaves!. Puppets! Reactive Fools!.

You are after all a silly little lifeform struggle to balance its energy level.

All my words are CRAPPY belief. It is no use to anyone!.

Have n't you head that UGK the dumb moron uttered that statement?

I can't tell you why humans are dumb simply because your dumb brain can't grasp it.

You all are in a box and you can't and will not come out of it with WORDS and LABELS help.

You can only run around and keep babbling this and that.

You also know at the bottom of your brain , All this discussion is useless in bigger perspective , it is just time pass to balance your energy.

Think!

Words has no meaning unless you manifest it in your context.

Ask questions.

Never agree or disagree.

|                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                     | Knowledge is a fools paradise!. Peaceunknownunknknown@hotmail.com                                                                                                                                           |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 190(10/29/03 4:21 pm)Reply     |  Self knowledge from [the] unknknown <hr/> Quote: <hr/> All my words are CRAPPY belief. It is no use to anyone!. <hr/> |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1646(10/29/03 5:50 pm)Reply |  --- <hr/> UGK? Who's that?                                                                                                          |

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

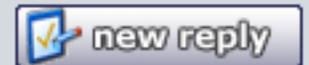

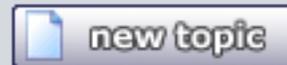

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> What are your thoughts on Nietzsche?

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                    | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 684(10/29/03 10:25 pm)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> unknown: It is all a perspective. There is no true perspective in the relative world. <hr/> Except the true perspective that there is no true perspective, right? Quote: <hr/> You all humans are dumb monkeys!. <hr/> We all humans are clever monkeys, speaking figuratively. Speaking literally, we all humans are not monkeys at all. Your meaningless language is more meaningless than most, relatively. Quote: <hr/> |

BELIEF WHORES.

---

Yes indeed, one and all.

Yourself?

Quote:

---

With words you are going nowhere but down.

---

I don't understand the meaning you are trying to convey here. What do these words mean?

Quote:

---

You are after all a silly little lifeform

---

Silly?

Little?

Lifeform, you believe this do you?

Quote:

---

All my words are CRAPPY belief. It is no use to anyone!.

---

You seem to be utilising your crappy beliefs a fair bit.

Admittedly they're no use to anyone else.

Quote:

---

Have n't you head that UGK the dumb moron uttered that statement?

---

So what?

Quote:

---

I can't tell you why humans are dumb simply because your dumb brain can't grasp it.

---

My dumb brain can certainly grasp plenty of ways that all humans are dumb.

Why don't you use your dumb human brain and try to put across what you understand but believe us incapable of doing so?

Enough with the boasting and the hiding, get your perspective out.

Quote:

---

You all are in a box and you can't and will not come out of it with WORDS and LABELS help.

---

And yet you will illustrate this via words and labels help?

Are we all in the same box or are we in different boxes?

Quote:

---

You can only run around and keep babbling this and that.

---

This statement is completely and totally wrong.

I'm sitting down.

Quote:

---

You also know at the bottom of your brain , All this discussion is useless in bigger perspective , it is just time pass to balance your energy.

---

Useless, what do you mean?

What is all this babble about balancing energy?

Quote:

---

Think!

---

What form should my thoughts take?

Words? Labels? English? French? Mongolian?

Quote:

---

Words has no meaning unless you manifest it in your context.

---

Words has no meaning?

What do you mean by these words?

Quote:

---

Ask questions.
Never agree or disagree.

---

Agreed.

Quote:

---

Knowledge is a fools paradise!.

---

You know this?

Come on then, show us your knowledge of the proof that knowledge is a fool paradise.

Quote:

---

Peace

---

Fuck that.

unknown
Registered User
Posts: 11
(10/30/03 3:14 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Hi david ,

You are analysing useless words. The answer is not there.

Definitely rational thinking and logic won't get you anywhere except forming another belief.

There is no point. All points are based on a belief.

Ask questions.

You will see yourself making a belief.

peace
unknown

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 691
(10/30/03 11:05 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Unknown: Hi david ,

---

Handbag.

---

Quote:

---

You are analysing useless words. The answer is not there.

---

42.

---

Quote:

---

Definitely rational thinking and logic won't get you anywhere except forming another belief.

---

Charlie.

---

Quote:

---

There is no point. All points are based on a belief.

---

Whittle, frost trite glued bigger.

---

Quote:

---

Ask questions.

---

Flounder?

Limestone?

Quote:

---

You will see yourself making a belief.

---

Oh, .....lips@dontyouknow.

Quote:

---

peace

---

Staircase.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1648

(10/30/03 11:33 pm)

Reply

----

---

I think David is trying to say Unknown is a handbag.

glued bigger.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 692

(10/31/03 12:10 am)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Unknown: Hi david ,

---

Yawn.

Quote:

You are analysing useless words. The answer is not there.

---

Your analysis of my analysis of your useless words seems to have led you to believe that, in my analysis of your useless words, I am looking for the answer therein.

Your analysis is not only useless, but incorrect. Moreover, it betrays megalomania and lack of substance.

Quote:

---

Definitely rational thinking and logic won't get you anywhere except forming another belief.

---

Incorrect. Rational thinking and logic can get me wherever I want to go, within reason. Why only today it got me from my bed to the computer. Yesterday it got me to the supermarket, and back too, not to mention around it. I needed some apples and bananas and I decided to use rational thinking and even logic in accomplishing my goals. I got to the supermarket, via use of general reason and car, and decided to head straight to the fruit and veg section, rationally. I was not surprised, when I reached my destination, to find that there were apples and bananas galore, all for the taking. 'Wow, this shit works' I silently thought. I decided that rationality would be the best method for pushing on toward my goal and utilised it to its full extent in picking up some apples and bananas and placing them in bags. 'This is all going swimmingly', I thought, and afforded myself a smug inner smile. Next I considered walking out with my apples and bananas but my rational thinking informed me that I would need to pay for my bounty, lest I take unnecessary risk of undesired punitive measures. Then it hit me, 'Walk', I thought rationally. 'Walk to the checkouts and offer monetary recompense for your goods'. I did so, satisfied that my rational thought had seen me through that particular conundrum. Having exchanged rationalities with the bloke on the checkout, in the process of said transaction, I decided to head back to the car which I rationalised would be located in the car park outside. 'There it is, right where I left it', I marvelled at the rationality of it all. On the way home, I decided that I was going to try my damndest to avoid other vehicles on the road and play it by the book, in no time I found myself at the front door. 'Keys' I thought, 'They'll open this thing alright'. With consummate ease, I entered the house. I decided that I must celebrate my victory of rationality over the phenomenal world, and sure enough, as I unpeeled the banana's skin, low and behold there was banana flesh inside. I devoured it with vigour, satisfied that this celebration served another rational purpose, my sustenance. I sat down and bathed in the afterglow of another victory for rational thought. I felt grateful that at no point had my rationality deserted me during my mission, and that I hadn't just stopped at some point and stood in the middle of Tesco's, staring at the fruit like a fuckin cabbage.

I generally find that rationality and logic are the best method I've yet found for getting from here to there.

Quote:

---

There is no point. All points are based on a belief.

---

So there is a point then?

Quote:

---

Ask questions.

---

See my last but one post.

Quote:

---

You will see yourself making a belief.

---

You believe this?

Quote:

---

peace

---

Yawn.

Seems to me you know fuck all about the logic and rationale behind nihilism, and the interpretation thereof. Therefore your beliefs are unfounded, and don't pretend, or fool yourself that you don't have any. Either that or you don't want to detail your knowledge of said logic and rationale because that would betray your adherence to logic and rationale. It's understandable that you would try to affect such a cover up as if you were not to do so, your self-contradiction would be apparent even to those who won't go beyond the surface, and your nonsensical outlook would be plain to even the plainest.

Answer the questions, charlatan.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 693
(10/31/03 12:19 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

Zag: I think David is trying to say Unknown is a handbag.
glued bigger.

---

Oh come on, s/he obviously is.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1650
(10/31/03 7:56 am)
Reply

---

---

Either that or a fuckin' cabbage.

unknown

Registered User

Posts: 14

(10/31/03 1:04 pm)

Reply

Re: On Nietzsche

---

Hi toast,

Yes , rational thinking is good and only within a limited level. The box (human belief) you are in will suit the rational , relative system.

The reason you(all humans) all are arguing for TRUTH is simply because it is not defined within HUMAN box.

And you know it.

You all refuse to admit the truth simply because it invalidate your human existance. It undermine all the conditioning you underwent from childhood. it bothers you emotionally.

You know it.

You can only know your state.

Nietche is a dumbest fool because he believed in what he said.

what a moron.

unknown. But never agree or disagree.

You all are humans needs labels to eat , digest and balance your energy. You all are conditoned to that habit. you can't think differently.

Only coward accept this or that. If you are brave , challenge unknown , ask question , make him run for life.

can you ? you can't. because you are busy with your mental masturbation.

peace

unknown

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 383
(10/31/03 5:07 pm)
Reply

Re: On Nietzsche

---

You all refuse to admit the truth simply because it invalidate your human existance. It undermine all the conditioning you underwent from child hood. it bothers you emotionally.

I agree with this statement.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1654
(11/2/03 10:43 pm)
Reply

---

---

Nietzsche kept on saying because he did not believe all he said.

Are you sure he is the dumbest fool, Unknown?

I haven't agreed with anything you've said, you seem a niggly little twat.

unknown
Registered User
Posts: 19
(11/2/03 11:19 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

hi suergaz,

You need to understand , he knows what ever the word he uttered will always relate to him. It is a EGO BOOST.
he can discount anything you want , still he said it.

LITTLE PATHETIC STUPID HUMAN!.

He knows human mind always revolve around identity. he enjoyed his power of his truth. That is his realm circle.

UG. Krisnamurti is his follower too . He is also babble same way. A Copy Cat!.

<http://www.julius.it/ugkrishnamurti/mirrors/jct/index.htm>

All humans ever existed or going to be existed are FOOLS.

No exception!.

As long as you all are sticking to human belief , you all will die like crap!.

You all waiting for INEVITABLE!.

|                                                                                                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                        | Hahahaha! peaceunknown                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1656(11/3/03 12:58 am)Reply                                                                                    | --- <hr/> You write like a monkey.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 708(11/3/03 11:11 am)Reply  | Re: --- <hr/> I think we do monkeys and cabbages a disservice. "There was the old idea that if you had 1,000 monkeys and 1,000 typewriters, then in 1,000 years they would eventually write the complete works of Shakespeare. The Web proves that this is not true."Kurt Vonnegut.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| unknknownRegistered UserPosts: 21(11/3/03 1:08 pm)Reply                                                                                     | Re: --- <hr/> hey sugeraz , Let me explain to you. "You write like a monkey". Think for a second. You are thinking based on a grammer you have been taught from school. your boundary is set. It has to follow some guideline to communicate. If it does n't fit the grammar and syntax you have learnt and conditioned you have come to a conclusion which you can only know. Words are there. Every individual make their own manifestation of that context by recreating based of their own self experience. That is why i always said , you can't make a impact on anyone with words only themself by asking questions not making comments. Yes yes i make all kind of comments. But the same line i also says words | are crap.

The thing is you make your own best judgement based on your context.

Humans will always dumb as long as he wants to belong to something!.

Ask questions. never agree or disagree. you will see your own power on display. your own skill of reading context of human mind.

peace
unknown

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 226
(11/3/03 2:11 pm)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Your
'peace
unknown'

thing, at the bottom of your every writing, says it all.

About you, dummy.

unknown
Registered User
Posts: 22
(11/4/03 6:56 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

hey paul ,

You will manifest what ever you feel!. Every human does that. "Peace" crap word says different meaning to different things to humans. Meaning is based on some point means a belief.

So if i really meant peace then unknown has a belief. Think!. Or may be not , he just plays with humans.

He may uses few words to catch fish? Think!.

Whatever make you react is good. Now whether that make you ask questions are depends individual human brain maturity.

peace
unknown

|                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 998(11/4/03 10:06 am)Reply | Re: --- <hr/> It is obvious that unknown does not consider itself human. What sort of creature are you, Unknown?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| ariehnathanRegistered UserPosts: 6(11/4/03 12:42 pm)Reply    | what are your thoughts on Nietzsche <hr/> Any philosopher that is publicly ridiculed after his death, his works twisted and misquoted is as a dead branch high on an otherwise healthy tree...ie due to drop off. before you write consider the old joke"God is dead" Nietzsche"Nietzsche is dead" God Now we all know what Nietzsche really meant but the point remains. he is a joke, no more. In just over a 100 years his philosophy is misunderstood and twisted. At least it took Christians about 1000 years to misuse the teachings of Jesus. here is something to consider Any philosophy that does not stand the test of time is not a true philosophy. |
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1245(11/4/03 1:01 pm)Reply  | time frame <hr/> What kind of time frame did you have in mind? 100 years? 1000 years? Certainly not 10,000 years, eh? Within another 1000 years, humans will have branched into multiple sub-branches within the species, mostly consciously engineered. All such small amounts of time on an evolutionary scale. Which philosophy has "stood the test of time?" Tharan                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |

|                                                                         |                                                              |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1664(11/4/03 1:44 pm)Reply | ---<hr/> Arieh, it is clear you have not read Nietzsche! |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------|

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31r
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

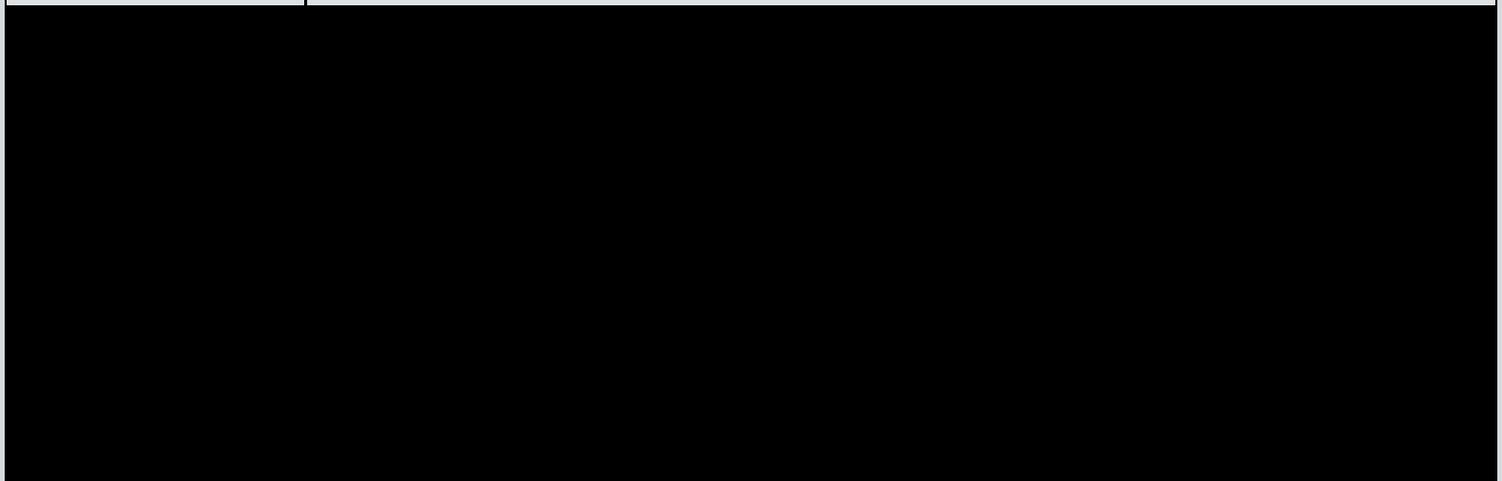

> What are your thoughts on Nietzsche?

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                            | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| ksolwayRegistered UserPosts: 153(11/4/03 1:56 pm)Reply | Re: what are your thoughts on Nietzsche <hr/> Quote: <hr/> At least it took Chritians about 1000 years to misuse the teachings of Jesus. <hr/> In my opinion the teachings of Jesus were dead by the time of the apostle Paul. The teachings of Jesus were for "the few", and was "the narrow and difficult path". But a few years later Paul was converting thousands of people after a few minutes. |

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 713
(11/5/03 1:18 am)
Reply

Re: what are your thoughts on Nietzsche

---

Quote:

---

Arieh: here is something to consider Any philosophy that does not stand the test of time is not a true philosophy.

---

Memetic selection eh.

I'm wondering what 'the test of time' is though. How long is that particular piece of string, does something have to be eternal to stand the test of time? Moreover, how is this connected to necessity? I mean the struggle to survive takes precedence over the struggle to understand right, as a race that is.

Can a philosophy be of it's time, and true to it's time?

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 999
(11/5/03 3:38 am)
Reply

Re: what are your thoughts on Nietzsche

---

Quote:

---

In my opinion the teachings of Jesus were dead by the time of the apostle Paul.

---

I agree. Paul was an opportunist. His situation was similar to Mohammed. The Gnostics were the ones who understood pretty well.

Quote:

---

The teachings of Jesus were for "the few", and was "the narrow and difficult path".

---

But I wonder why he also said that his burden was easy and his yoke was light? Perhaps by calling it a path for the few, he simply referred to the fact that only a few would be interested, and for them, the burden would be much lighter than the burden of living in regular society.

Email This To a Friend

Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31r
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> What constitutes "Enlightenment" Formally Undecide

New Topic

Add Reply

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                 | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| KristjanGRegistered UserPosts: 2(6/24/04 9:05 am)Reply | New Post What constitutes "Enlightenment" Formally Undecide<hr/> I think Wolfram brought up an interesting issue when he suggested that the final output of reality (which could be interpreted as Nirvana or enlightenment, etc) might in fact be a formally undecidable question.That is to say, there is neither an answer, nor is there no answer. The system is in a perpetual state of analysis, searching for the answer.The system (aka reality) at all times appears to have the potential for a solution.Will the solution present itself?heh... |

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> What do you think: can men and women be just friends?

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                      | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| magissa2004Registered UserPosts: 1(5/7/04 11:50 am)Reply                                                                                    | New Post What do you think: can men and women be just friends?<hr/> hey guys im doing research on whether men and women can be friends without attraction getting in the the way. so if your over 18, heterosexual and have a friend of the opposite sex could you pleaseeeee do my online survey. hopefully we can finally get some answers!thankshttp://www.media.swin.edu.au/surveyor/survey.asp?s=01237222228079097 |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 650(5/7/04 12:07 pm)Reply | New Post Re: What do you think: can men and women be just friends?<hr/> We are a bit of a weird mob here. You could get some odd results. A lot of the answers to the questions arn't applicable to the mindset of the mainstays here.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 1100
(5/7/04 4:06 pm)
Reply

New Post Re: What do you think: can men and women be just friends?

---

<http://www.intellectualwhores.com/masterladder.html>

There is another level above this but one must not speak about it to women.

Jones Kelly
Posts: 56
(5/7/04 4:46 pm)
Reply

New Post Re: What do you think: can men and women be just friends?

---

Del,

Quote:

---

www.intellectualwhores.com/masterladder.html

There is another level above this but one must not speak about it to women.

---

Women will know the level of truth when women and men set their sights higher and give up their "animals only" ladder-climbing. Without this, relationships will always be egotistical.

Friendship between men and women is only possible when spiritual values come first. And then, of course, they are the purest of enemies...

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 1101
(5/8/04 5:49 am)
Reply

New Post Re: What do you think: can men and women be just friends?

---

Excellent Mr. Kelly.

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1697
(5/8/04 9:00 am)
Reply

New Post Re: What do you think: can men and women be just friends?

---

Hmm, can men and women be friends without sexual attraction getting in the way? Ordinarily - no. Maybe if one or other of them is exceedingly ugly. It's important not to be naive about what sexual attraction is. What is the basis of any such friendship? Is there any dimension to it that has its basis in the differences between the sexes and the way those differences "bounce" off one another? If so, then a sexual relationship exists - by definition.

Sexuality is much more than just the desire to hump someone.

Dan Rowden

Jones Kelly
Posts: 58
(5/8/04 2:07 pm)
Reply

New Post Re: What do you think: can men and women be just friends?

---

Quote:

---

It's important not to be naive about what sexual attraction is. What is the basis of any such friendship? Is there any dimension to it that has its basis in the differences between the sexes and the way those differences "bounce" off one another? If so, then a sexual relationship exists - by definition.

---

Thanks, good point Dan. I was confusing emotional attachments with sexual categorisation.

Spiritual friendship is the impartial interaction between people who have the same expressed values (wisdom). So if any of those people use sexual categories to define the differences between the way those values are expressed, that person regards the friendship as sexual.

Ie. If communication is regarded as coming from a male/female, then the communication is characterised sexually.

Then, sexual attraction/repulsion is generated by applying abstract, hierarchical values for male/female to a specific appearance of male/female.

|                                                                                                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                          | Emotional attachment arises when this attraction is delusional (perceived as objectively real).                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1498(5/9/04 12:00 pm)Reply  | New Post Re: What do you think: can men and women be just friends? <hr/> I most certainly think such friendships are possible and common. Just let whatever sexual attraction exists be, without paying undue attention to it or letting it worry you.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
| WolfsonJakkPosts: 1567(5/9/04 2:38 pm)Reply                                                                                                        | New Post Re: What do you think: can men and women be just friends? <hr/> but what if she doesn't give it up and I have to take her out to another dinner and show?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| Jones KellyPosts: 64(5/9/04 4:30 pm)Reply                                                                                                          | New Post Re: What do you think: can men and women be just friends? <hr/> Tharan, perhaps you can suggest she starts without you - and you'll catch up sometime. Sex and power I met a guy who couldn't believe that two men in prison would try to rape him. He said he broke both arms of one man, and i think disabled the other. He himself was apparently charged with sexual molestation of a young woman. When power is a masculine value, it is always sexual. So in a prison, of course men would use rape to dominate, and masculine women (toughs) would also, having little else to use. Surprisingly, this guy i met was deeply distrustful of men after his prison experiences. He gave me a lift over 30km of gravel road somewhere west of Lake Cargelligo in NSW, at 1 or 2am last summer (ie no one else around). I was cycling and he was in a 4WD heading to his next wheat harvesting/header job. Much of his conversation was aimed at getting me to sleep with him, and when i continued to respond rationally, he eventually turned to his prison story. Eventually he gave up, and drove away. He was trying to assert his self-belief by identifying as more powerful - ie |

male since he saw me as female, and therefore the submissive, passive, fearful. Elements of competition arose when i remained detached and "masculine". So, he was probably using the prison story to excite pity as well as fear, playing off my masculine-feminine behaviour.

Being ignorant of how people use sexuality to reaffirm delusions could mean wanting to ignore one's own delusions. After all, another person is the product of a bunch of causes - ultimately a delusion.

But it's interesting to examine this in the light of interaction on web boards. If a post is interpreted sexually, based on an expression of values, person's name, icon, expressions, behaviour, etc. then there is some kind of sexual attraction/repulsion happening.

For instance, if i value rationality and masculinity, then i will interpret posts of others based on that value. Any post that is more rational will be more masculine, and those more irrational will be more feminine. Inherent in that comparison is how - in the moment of that experience - my thoughts/posts express my values. If deluded and attached to values, an emotional reaction of competitiveness or attachment (repulsion/attraction) will arise. If not deluded, there will be no emotion, but awareness that rational processes can be improved.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 1103
(5/10/04 12:16 am)
Reply

New Post terrible waste fo life

---

Quote:

---

birdofhermes

I most certainly think such friendships are possible and common. Just let whatever sexual attraction exists be, without paying undue attention to it or letting it worry you.

---

This is true.
It is a terrible waste fo life for those men.
Some snap out of it as a result of a shocking experience.

WolfsonJakk
Posts: 1569
(5/10/04 12:36 am)
Reply

New Post Re: What do you think: can men and women be just friends?

---

Quote:

---

Tharan, perhaps you can suggest she starts without you - and you'll catch up sometime.

---

Hmm, she might reverse that and tell me to go ahead and she will try to catch up later. That would be no fun and I might even get stood up. I certainly couldn't be her friend then.

She should recognize when my friendship is at it's fullest expansion. The key signs are one or two clothing adjustments, the little beads of sweat on my forehead, and my wild staring eyes.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 1099
(5/10/04 8:23 am)
Reply

New Post Re: What do you think: can men and women be just friends?

---

Quote:

---

del: It is a terrible waste fo life for those men.
Some snap out of it as a result of a shocking experience.

---

Heheheh, well boo-fucking-hoo. When are you going to get the shock which snaps you out of your damaged child's delusions?

And until that day, females must pay.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 1100
(5/10/04 8:37 am)
Reply

New Post Re: What do you think: can men and women be just friends?

---

Quote:

---

Dan: Hmm, can men and women be friends without sexual attraction getting in the way? Ordinarily - no. Maybe if one or other of them is exceedingly ugly. It's important not to be naive about what sexual attraction is. What is the basis of any such friendship? Is there any dimension to it that has its basis in the differences between the sexes and the way those differences "bounce" off one another? If so, then a sexual relationship exists - by definition.

Sexuality is much more than just the desire to hump someone.

---

Quite right Dan, although a sexual relationship is not necessarily sexual attraction. But I think this is more an answer to the first part of your question, as opposed to the whole of it. Sexual attraction doesn't have to get in the way of friendship. Normal, standard, run-of-the-mill friendship that is. I can't imagine what a truly 'spiritual friendship' between any two individuals might be, sounds like an oxymoron.

Jones Kelly
Posts: 66
(5/10/04 1:38 pm)
Reply

New Post Re: What do you think: can men and women be just friends?

---

I think "just friends" is implying non-sexual friendship, that is, the absence of awareness of sexuality. Non-sexual friendship is impossible when individual sexuality of any kind is present - that is, awareness is characterised by sexuality.

Spiritual friendship - the egoless kind - would inevitably include awareness of sexual characterisation, if such contrasts were useful tools for communication.

So, when rationality/masculinity are valued, there is inherent attraction to those who embody it. But in spiritual friendship, such values are superseded by awareness of reality - so that no embodiment is more valuable. Such values may continue to be useful, but a truly equanimous mind would not slight others on the basis of values..

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 1103
(5/10/04 2:05 pm)
Reply

New Post Re: What do you think: can men and women be just friends?

---

Quote:

But in spiritual friendship, such values are superceded by awareness of reality - so that no embodiment is more valuable.

---

And therefore only one 'spiritual friendship' is really possible?

Quote:

---

I think "just friends" is implying non-sexual friendship, that is, the absence of awareness of sexuality. Non-sexual friendship is impossible when individual sexuality of any kind is present - that is, awareness is characterised by sexuality.

---

Then that would mean, in almost all cases, that people who see themselves as 'just friends' are not really so, by such definition. Or perhaps, rather, they are just friends in certain particular instances, and not so in other particular instances, within any given relationship.

Jones Kelly
Posts: 69
(5/10/04 2:22 pm)
Reply

New Post Re: What do you think: can men and women be just friends?

---

Quote:

K: But in spiritual friendship, such values are superceded by awareness of reality - so that no embodiment is more valuable.
D: And therefore only one 'spiritual friendship' is really possible?

---

I think to a sage (i could be wrong, i'm not there yet) only one 'spiritual friendship' is possible quality-wise. Each interaction becomes spiritual - no friendship or enemyship.

Quote:

---

K: I think "just friends" is implying non-sexual friendship, that is, the absence of awareness of sexuality. Non-sexual friendship is impossible when individual sexuality of any kind is present - that is, awareness is characterised by sexuality.

D: Then that would mean, in almost all cases, that people who see themselves as 'just friends' are not really so, by such definition. Or perhaps, rather, they are just friends in certain particular instances, and not so in other particular instances, within any given relationship.

---

Yes, i think so. Any experience of sexual differentiation applied to another person within an interaction is an experience of sexual relationship. The next moment, where experience is devoid of that differentiation, there is no sexual relationship. There is no constant relationship.

Edited by: Jones Kelly at: 5/10/04 2:24 pm

bikkie
Registered User
Posts: 2
(5/10/04 3:41 pm)
Reply

New Post Re: What do you think: can men and women be just friends?

---

Im male ,hetrossexual ,23,and most of my friends are female.I dont know why but i get along with females much better than males.I find alot of males a little annoying at times,no offence heh .Ive just have had negative experiences with male friends in the past ie: jealousy ,back stabbing etc. I have been sexually drawn to a couple of friends but im not attracted to where to it could be a more intimate/affectionate relationship since they are much different people .Im basicaly waiting for the "one" true love.The interesting thing is that i could picture my true love being my best friend .I think that would be incredible.

|                                                                                                                                                                           |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1104(5/10/04 5:04 pm)Reply                                                                                            | New Post Re: What do you think: can men and women be just friends? <hr/> Oh yes Bikkie.With the men you must suffer "jealousy ,back stabbing etc."With the women you will remain in a drunken stupor. It's your choice. |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1498(5/11/04 12:51 am)Reply  | New Post Re: What do you think: can men and women be just friends? <hr/> Run for it, Bikkie. You sound sane.                                                                                                                             |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1107(5/11/04 7:51 am)Reply                                                                                            | New Post Re: What do you think: can men and women be just friends? <hr/> If women are telling you that you are sane and that you are a nice guy and you believe and are comforted by them you are unborn. Says the mad man.       |

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> What do you think: can men and women be just friends?

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                              | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| bikkieRegistered UserPosts: 3(5/11/04 3:40 pm)Reply | New Post Re: What do you think: can men and women be just friends?<hr/> Interestingly three of my favourite philosophers are acually female lol.Ones only 21yo.                                                                                                                                   |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1108(5/11/04 4:10 pm)Reply | New Post Re: What do you think: can men and women be just friends?<hr/> Quote: <hr/> bikkieInterestingly three of my favourite philosophers are acually female lol. Ones only 21yo. <hr/> I feel seriously nauseous.Anybody have any remedy suggestions for me? |

bikkie
Registered User
Posts: 4
(5/11/04 4:33 pm)
Reply

New Post Re: What do you think: can men and women be just friends?

---

Someone has allowed my comment to make them feel nauseous.
So i cannot blame myself for that matter hehehe.

Cause and effect is quite interesting to observe in certain situations

I feel happy now

Edited by: bikkie at: 5/11/04 4:33 pm

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1699
(5/13/04 9:19 am)
Reply

New Post Re: What do you think: can men and women be just friends?

---

Dave Toast wrote:

Quote:

---

Dan: Hmm, can men and women be friends without sexual attraction getting in the way? Ordinarily - no. Maybe if one or other of them is exceedingly ugly. It's important not to be naive about what sexual attraction is. What is the basis of any such friendship? Is there any dimension to it that has its basis in the differences between the sexes and the way those differences "bounce" off one another? If so, then a sexual relationship exists - by definition.

Sexuality is much more than just the desire to hump someone.

Dave: Quite right Dan, although a sexual relationship is not necessarily sexual attraction.

---

I honestly didn't understand this statement, Dave. Any sexual relationship necessitates sexual attraction of some kind, doesn't it? Even if it is only the attraction to the opportunity for sex.

Quote:

---

But I think this is more an answer to the first part of your question, as opposed to the whole of it. Sexual attraction doesn't have to get in the way of friendship. Normal, standard, run-of-the-mill friendship that is.

---

Yes, I wouldn't state that it does as some kind of immutable law, but I still maintain that, ordinarily, it does get in the way; indeed, it is often a precipitating factor in such friendships. Again, we have to be careful not to limit our notion of sexuality to the physical. Any relationship that involves a dynamic between the feminine and masculine aspects of consciousness is a sexual relationship - because it involves sexuality (in a psychological sense). Sexuality is more than just the possession of particular genitalia and how they "fit together" - as it were. It is also about psychological types and how they fit together.

A sexual relationship exists in the very mind of every male, for example - in the sense that his feminine and masculine aspects bounce off one another in various ways. No wonder it is said that men think about sex all the time!! In a way they do, just not in the way that statement usually intends.

Quote:

---

I can't imagine what a truly 'spiritual friendship' between any two individuals might be, sounds like an oxymoron.

---

Spiritual Friends

Dan Rowden

Jones Kelly
Posts: 79
(5/13/04 5:33 pm)
Reply

New Post Re: Archives

---

Dan,

You may know this already: the Archives aren't accessible at present.

|                                                                                                                                                                    |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 1701(5/14/04 10:42 am)Reply                                                                                     | New Post Re: Archives <hr/> Which archives do you mean, Kelly? The Genius News archives, which the above link points to are certainly available. Dan Rowden                                                                                                                                                          |
| Jones KellyPosts: 80(5/14/04 1:07 pm)Reply                                                                                                   | New Post Re: Archives <hr/> I meant the Genius Forum archives - but have just been reading through them, so no problem now.                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 654(5/14/04 3:52 pm)Reply  | New Post Re: Archives <hr/> Men and women can be friends when the sum of obligations to others forces them to be 'just friends', and/or they don't get too drunk or stoned.                                                                                                                                                 |
| ynithrixRegistered UserPosts: 259(5/15/04 3:08 am)Reply                                                                                 | New Post re: <hr/> If a man is unconscious enough to stand the company of women unsexually (gossip, short-sightedness, etc.) or if a woman is capable of masculine discourse having unsexed herself then I think it would be possible. bikkie seems to be unconscious.                                                      |
| Jones KellyPosts: 85(5/15/04 2:02 pm)Reply                                                                                                   | New Post Re: re: <hr/> Ynithrix Quote: <hr/> If a man is unconscious enough to stand the company of women unsexually (gossip, short-sightedness, etc.) or if a woman is capable of masculine discourse having unsexed herself then I think it would be possible. bikkie seems to be unconscious. <hr/> |

If any person is conscious yet not conscious of what sexuality is - that is, they are neither male nor female, nor discern what is male or female - then "discourse" is not even known to be unsexual. If anyone is considered capable of masculine discourse then they are automatically sexualised. What's "masculine discourse" anyway?

Consciousness meaning, in this context, the presence of experiences, sensations, thoughts, images, sounds, smells, tastes, etc.

Spiritual friendship occurs consciously, so contrasts are inherent to the experience. In other words, to pointedly ignore differences is to acknowledge they exist - this is suppression and certainly not truthful.

Sex happens, and it has no inherent existence. Like a puff of dust, whirled away in a moment.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2627
(5/16/04 12:43 am)
Reply

New Post ----

---

Kelly, why do you exist for if you think nothing has any inherent existence?
Sex makes babies! It's strange, but true!

ynithrix
Registered User
Posts: 260
(5/16/04 1:40 am)
Reply

New Post re:

---

"Unsexed" was a term Shakespeare used, I think in MacBeth, to mean removing one's own sexual attributes, not all sexual attributes. An unsexed woman is unfeminine.

"What's "masculine discourse" anyway?"

"Masculine" is the adjective I used to qualify the discourse, re-emphasizing the unsexed woman. "Discourse" is rational argument, putting forward an opinion.

'If an man is unconscious enough' = 'if his discourse and general outlook are shallow enough; if his thoughts are so petty that he whirls around in a happy daze', in this context.

|                                                                                    |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2629(5/16/04 2:49 am)Reply | New Post --- <hr/> That's right, happy whirling is out, heavy brooding is in, preferably with furrowed brows and stoical grimaces.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
| Jones KellyPosts: 92(5/16/04 5:34 pm)Reply                   | New Post Re: existence <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Suergaz: Kelly, why do you exist for if you think nothing has any inherent existence? Sex makes babies! It's strange, but true! <hr/> You've been hanging around the forum quite a while, and you still make this error. It's strange, but true. Point out to me this amazing sole cause for babies, and while you're doing it, declare to the billions they aren't going about it the right way. Because, though that sounds strange, it's quite true according to you.                   |
| Jones KellyPosts: 93(5/16/04 5:50 pm)Reply                   | New Post Re: re: <hr/> Ynithrix: Quote: <hr/> "Unsexed" was a term Shakespeare used, I think in MacBeth, to mean removing one's own sexual attributes, not all sexual attributes. An unsexed woman is unfeminine. <hr/> Thus it's impossible for "unsexed" discourse to occur, because the unsexedness is just a degree of sexedness. If rationality is perceived as a masculine value, then any expression of rationality is perceived as sexed. Sexuality is arbitrary, a projection of the category of sexedness onto experience. |

I think the non-sexual discourse is possible when one's thoughts are devoid of sexual categories. Impossible in this thread, obviously.

Quote:

---

Y: 'If an man is unconscious enough' = 'if his discourse and general outlook are shallow enough; if his thoughts are so petty that he whirls around in a happy daze', in this context.

---

Also a conscious man has sexual discourse, if he consciously chooses such categories. That doesn't mean his thinking is petty.

I agree, though, sexual categories are deeply ingrained, and it requires effort to challenge such automatic thinking in everyday experiences.

Quote:

---

Categories

As soon as the mind projects boundaries around a perceived phenomenon and determines it to have a beginning and an end, the next thing it does is try to categorise it. It attempts to slot the perceived object into a pre-existing abstract framework, which it has developed over the course of its lifetime. This enables the individual in question to quickly gain knowledge of what he is perceiving and to anticipate its behaviour. For example, he might spy a small brown object on the ground, which his mind automatically categorises as a "leaf". In making this categorisation, the individual is able to recall to mind the behaviour of leaves in general and allows him to conclude that the small brown object he perceives is likely to keep lying where it is. He can be fairly sure that it won't suddenly fly up and attack his throat, or attempt some other kind of threatening behaviour. He can even bend down and examine it to see if he can learn anything more about the behaviour and characteristics of leaves, and thus add another component to the abstract framework for future reference.

Creating categories has long been a major tool of survival for our species. Reducing the infinite complexities of the world to a manageable number of "things" allows our minds to create an abstract map of the world and thus enables us to respond to situations with greater skill and sophistication. It allows our reasoning abilities to extend far beyond the very rudimentary forms found in animals and provides the platform for the acquisition of hidden complex forms of knowledge, such as those explored by science and philosophy. It also makes complex social interactions possible and underpins the laws and moral codes of our society. In short, it has been an integral part of the creation of human civilisation.

Despite its great value in a practical sense, abstraction also possesses the ability to blind us to what is ultimately true in life. Those who lose themselves in their abstractions without realising they are doing so (and unfortunately, nearly everyone in the human race does this) quickly fall into the belief that their own abstract world is the only world there is, and in doing so they lose all contact with reality. An obvious example of this can be found in politicians who lose themselves in a world of "voters", "electorates", "policies", "party numbers", and so on. Other examples include scientists who become absorbed in a world of "energy", "forces", "stars", "particles", "species", "carbon cycles", etc; and fundamentalist Christians who are obsessed with "souls", "angels", "demons", "heaven", and the like. They all tend to forget that the abstract world they deal with on a daily basis is simply that - an abstract world.

They are not the only ones who do this, however. The average person on the street is guilty of it as well. He tends to lose himself in an abstract world of "self", "family", "business", "country", "football team", "friends", "enemies", "pleasure", etc. He too falls into the trap of thinking these things are real, even to the point where he is prepared to fight and kill over them. It is also the reason why the average person loves to indulge in mind-altering pursuits such as music, dancing, alcohol, drugs, sex, meditation, religious ecstasies and the like. He is looking for temporary relief from the conceptual prison that he normally lives in. The exhilaration that he feels when he partakes in these things is the exhilaration of escaping all the frustrations, worries and fears which relentlessly consume him in his abstract world.

It is part of the skill of the philosopher that he masters his powers of abstraction and does not allow them to swamp his mind and distort his perspective. He is in complete control of his conceptualising mind. He is able to do this because he is not hampered by the egotistical desire to clutch at things for his security and identity. He no longer has any worldly purposes or goals, nor any attachment to a particular point of view, nor any vested interest in what happens in the Universe. He is entirely free to roam around at will, entering and leaving any abstract world he likes, never being fooled by any of it. He has broken the back of his own existence, as it were, and now enjoys the complete freedom of his infinite nature, a freedom that is beyond purpose.

---

From David Quinn's Wisdom of the Infinite

ynithrix
Registered User
Posts: 261
(5/17/04 3:57 am)
Reply

New Post re:

---

"Thus it's impossible for "unsexed" discourse to occur, because the unsexedness is just a degree of sexedness."

But I didn't say that discourse is unsexedness, only that a woman would need to unsex herself--remove her feminine--in order to participate in it.

"I think the non-sexual discourse is possible when one's thoughts are devoid of sexual categories. Impossible in this thread, obviously."

Yes, which is effectively what my initial post said.

Either there is conversation on a low level involving sexuality between them, or the woman unsexes herself and rises to discourse.

"Also a conscious man has sexual discourse, if he consciously chooses such categories. That doesn't mean his thinking is petty."

I agree, but that wasn't the question of the topic. It would depend if you see a difference between sexual discourse and discourse on sex (e.g. was Foucault thus lustful?).

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2631

(5/17/04 4:38 am)

Reply

New Post ---

---

Quote:

---

suergaz: Kelly, what do you exist for if you think nothing has any inherent existence? Sex makes babies! It's strange, but true!

Kelly:--You've been hanging around the forum quite a while, and you still make this error. It's strange, but true.

Point out to me this amazing sole cause for babies, and while you're doing it, declare to the billions they aren't going about it the right way. Because, though that sounds strange, it's quite true according to you.

---

Procreation, sex, the precondition of life! The universe as sole cause of babies makes no sense if you're trying to make a baby! Thinking about it may be great for it, but there's a little more to it!

Ynithrix:

Quote:

---

Either there is conversation on a low level involving sexuality between them, or the woman unsexes herself and rises to discourse.

---

So you actually think there is an order of sexedness?! Does the man unsex himself also to rise to this discourse?

Everyone knows you were beaten by your mother for masturbating as a boy.

Jones Kelly

Posts: 95

(5/17/04 10:57 am)

Reply

New Post Re: Sexuality

---

Ynithrix:

Quote:

---

Kelly: Thus it's impossible for "unsexed" discourse to occur, because the unsexedness is just a degree of sexedness.

Ynithrix: But I didn't say that discourse is unsexedness, only that a woman would need to unsex herself--remove her feminine--in order to participate in it.

---

By removing the feminine category, there is no masculine. The ability to recognise the illusion of abstract categories is masculine because biological men are more capable of doing this. It is not ultimately a question of biological woman vs man, but of character (ability) - that is, one's relationship to the Infinite.

Quote:

---

Kelly: I think the non-sexual discourse is possible when one's thoughts are devoid of sexual categories. Impossible in this thread, obviously.

Ynithrix: Yes, which is effectively what my initial post said. Either there is conversation on a low level involving sexuality between them, or the woman unsexes herself and rises to discourse.

---

If Woman doesn't recognise the illusory nature of all things (abstractions imposed on Reality), then i agree that Woman changes to Man, through recognising delusion. Ultimately humans have no inherent existence, sexual or otherwise.

Quote:

---

Kelly: Also a conscious man has sexual discourse, if he consciously chooses such categories. That doesn't mean his thinking is petty.

Ynithrix: I agree, but that wasn't the question of the topic. It would depend if you see a difference between sexual discourse and discourse on sex (e.g. was Foucault thus lustful?).

---

'Can men and women be "just friends"?' seems to refer to the ability to overcome the delusion of inherent sexuality. To have the greater single perspective that seamlessly combines the ability to manipulate abstractions with knowledge of its illusory nature is fundamental to the topic - something that all should aspire to...

Since the totality of all things necessarily includes the thing of sexuality, sexuality is abstractly connected to everything in the universe.

komodo island
Registered User
Posts: 8
(5/22/04 12:18 pm)
Reply

New Post Re: What do you think: can men and women be just friends?

---

All entity-relationship is a bondage, whether it is between men and women, subject and objects, or this and that...

LolaSuicide
Registered User
Posts: 14
(6/3/04 1:59 pm)
Reply

New Post Re: What do you think: can men and women be just friends?

---

Quote:

---

Hmm, can men and women be friends without sexual attraction getting in the way? Ordinarily - no. Maybe if one or other of them is exceedingly ugly.

---

HAHAHAH thanks for posting this! it made me laugh so hard! but yes, i do agree with this man here.

every guy friend I had I was on some level, physically attracted to him. It didnt always start that way ofcourse...but for SOME unexplainable reason... it turns into a physical attraction.

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> What do you think: can men and women be just friends?

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                 | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Jones KellyPosts: 136(6/3/04 2:41 pm)Reply | New Post Re: What do you think: can men and women be just friends?<hr/> Identifying a "guy friend" as such will always create a physical attraction. If things are inexplicable, it is because there hasn't been enough reasoning. |

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM
> What is freedom?

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 938(1/24/04 9:41 pm)Reply         | What is freedom? <hr/> Primitive people and children are not aware of the duality in abstract or concrete manifestation. The word and the object, the spirit and the flesh, the symbol and what it represents, the belief and the people, the name and the person are all identical in their mind. This is not because they are confused but because the duality does not yet actually exist in their mind. They just cannot see it. The child may come to see through experience. The adult might be blinded by pride and prejudice. The adult might be stuck the in closed system loop. We cannot have concept of freedom without the ability to see a duality, possibly. |
| krussell2004Registered UserPosts: 27(1/25/04 4:54 am)Reply | Re: What is freedom? <hr/> I believe that we can never be completely free. We are bound by our misconceptions and prejudices and therefore can never really know the truth. There is only one time that we become truly free and that is when we die. Ironically, it is of no use to us then.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 284
(1/25/04 7:26 am)
Reply

Re: What is freedom?

---

krussel wrote:

Quote:

---

We are bound by our misconceptions and prejudices and therefore can never really know the truth.

---

So you would agree that that statement itself isn't true?

Quote:

---

There is only one time that we become truly free and that is when we die.

---

Why?

krussell2004
Registered User
Posts: 29
(1/25/04 9:43 am)
Reply

Re: What is freedom?

---

ksoway wrote:

Quote:

---

So you would agree that that statement itself isn't true?

---

Excuse me for being impercise. I should have said that we cannot know the Ultimate Truth. I was unclear before. And no I will not play your little paradox game that you love so well. ;) Do you think it is possible for humans to discover and ultimately know everything there is to know and understand about everything?

Quote:

---

krussell wrote:

-----
There is only one time that we become truly free and that is when we die.
-----

ksolway wrote:

Why?

---

Because only then will we be free from cause and effect.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 939
(1/25/04 2:16 pm)
Reply

Re: What is freedom?

---

What has cause and effect got to do with freedom?

krussell2004
Registered User
Posts: 36
(1/25/04 2:25 pm)
Reply

Re: What is freedom?

---

What we view as freedom IMO is actually limited. It is constrained to the physical world and all that reality dictates to us. We are not truly free from influences of all sorts. Hence, freedom is a falacy that does not truly exist. Perhaps we have more autonomy because we are the only species on the planet clever enough to manipulate our environment to ensure our own comfort and security. However, by doing so we create our own prison by isolating ourselves from nature. Ironically, it is our very nature that pulls us into this predicament. We can also influence and manipulate each other. Hence, throughout our lifetimes we are never truly free.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 941
(1/25/04 2:30 pm)
Reply

Re: What is freedom?

---

The concept of freedom has changed over the centuries. We can experience freedom to a higher level than ever before, some would say, and who would be able to refute this argument?

|                                                                                            |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| voce io Registered User Posts: 656 (1/25/04 5:41 pm) Reply      | Re: What is freedom? <hr/> Don't listen to Kevin. He's clever, but isn't enlightened. Cause and effect are mental notions. Ultimate Reality is a mental notion. All that exists, you can't understand fully. The only thing you can know, absolutely, is existence. Just fucking give up.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| krussell2004 Registered User Posts: 37 (1/25/04 11:40 pm) Reply | Re: What is freedom? <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Just fucking give up. <hr/> voce oi, what has gotten into you? You've been snapping at everybody on this board and using the word "fuck" alot. I think you called Rhett a "fuck" earlier. Chill the fuck out, man.;                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| ksolway Registered User Posts: 289 (1/26/04 12:05 am) Reply     | Re: What is freedom? <hr/> krussel wrote: Quote: <hr/> I should have said that we cannot know the Ultimate Truth. I was unclear before. And no I will not play your little paradox game that you love so well. ;) Do you think it is possible for humans to discover and ultimately know everything there is to know and understand about everything? <hr/> You probably haven't been reading this board for long. We (QRS at least) agree with you that we can't know everything about everything. In fact, we don't believe we can know everything about anything at all - not when we're talking | about physical things.

When we talk about Ultimate Reality we're talking about something that is a philosophic truth, based on pure reasoning. That is, it contains no speculation based on empirical evidence, and is hence unfalsifiable (other than by pure reasoning).

Knowledge of this Ultimate Reality doesn't give you knowledge of all the possible scientific knowledge in the Universe.

Quote:

---

KR: There is only one time that we become truly free and that is when we die.

KS: Why?

KR: Because only then will we be free from cause and effect

---

If we speak of ourselves as still existing after death, then we are necessarily still part of cause and effect, like any existing thing. But if we choose to speak of ourselves as not existing after death, then we can't be "free" of anything, because we won't exist.

You were probably just being poetic. But the poetry doesn't do much for me. Maybe I feel too free right now to want to die!

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 943
(1/26/04 7:08 am)
Reply

a degree of freedom

---

How do you all explain the perception of "degrees of freedom"?

silentsal
Registered User
Posts: 29
(1/29/04 3:36 am)
Reply

Re: a degree of freedom

---

we can be free of suffering we can be free of self death does not insure either of these so best to do it while your alive

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> What is illusion?

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                      | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 110(3/18/04 1:47 pm)Reply                                                                                      |  What is illusion? <hr/> Have you ever experienced illusion? I have but only after taking drugs. Do people who don't take drugs experience illusions?                   |
| Thomas KnierimRegistered UserPosts: 887(3/18/04 1:51 pm)Reply  |  Re: What is illusion? <hr/> You mean hallucinations, don't you? Thomas                                                                                        |
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 1655(3/18/04 2:16 pm)Reply                                                                                               |  Re: What is illusion? <hr/> Never mind whether people have experienced illusions -I'm more interested in whether they've ever experienced Reality! Dan Rowden |

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1473
(3/18/04 3:04 pm)
Reply

Re: What is illusion?

---

Danny boy, what are you up to these days?

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1657
(3/18/04 3:12 pm)
Reply

up to

---

Why, Anna girl, no good, naturally!

I'm actually in the thick of a couple of literary projects so I mightn't be around too much for a while.

Not that you'll miss me or anything :)

Dan Rowden

MKFaizi
Registered User
Posts: 1127
(3/25/04 5:00 pm)
Reply

Re: up to

---

They won't miss you.

Fortunately, I have my orchids and hoyas. Pleasantly fragrant.

The smell of expected gratification around here really stinks.

Faizi

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 624
(3/25/04 6:08 pm)
Reply

Re: up to

---

Hey Marsha. If you are ver sufficiently bored, do us a favour and go to pub138.ezboard.com/fponderersguildfrm6 sometime soon and state your views.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1492

(4/2/04 11:57 am)

Reply

 Dan's book

Quote:

---

I'm actually in the thick of a couple of literary projects so I mightn't be around too much for a while.

---

Hurry up and write your book about the worthlessness of women, so that I can write a book to refute it.

komodo island

Registered User

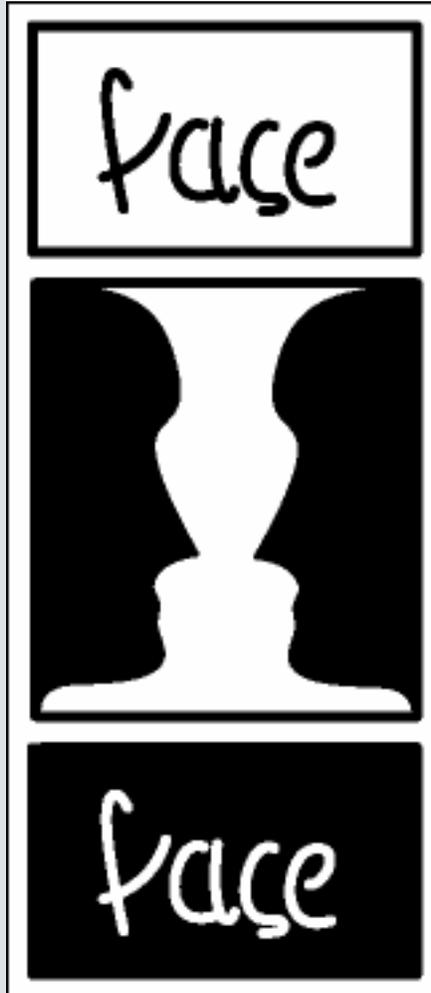

Posts: 7

(5/22/04 12:15 pm)

Reply

 Re: What is illusion?

Whatever appears is an illusion.

All appears, nothing is.

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> what is the basic property of the universe/human?

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                                                                          | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| liberalpuppetRegistered UserPosts: 4(1/4/04 5:32 am)Reply                                                                                                                                            | what is the basic property of the universe/human? <hr/> In an effort to determine the basic property of a human I found myself contemplating quite a bit more than a single thing such as this. It could be said that as humans we can analyze, rationalize, conceptualize and these would be among the more known sophisticated endeavors. We can then go down, in a manner of speaking, on the chain of a human's possibility from thought to free will to existence to ...? What does it mean to be a part of this universe as well as a human part? can we progress further than contemplation? can we realize a more basic property than existence? |
| Naturyl <input type="checkbox"/>Registered UserPosts: 20(1/4/04 11:40 am)Reply  | Re: what is the basic property of the universe/human? <hr/> Yes, but not through intellectual effort. The Tao is more basic than existence, but it appears paradoxical to the intellect and can be 'realized' only through direct intuitive experience - i.e. "enlightenment," as many choose to call the realization. The basic property is Tao, but Tao is not a property. Go figure.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |

|                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| jrgpsych1Registered UserPosts: 1(1/6/04 12:58 am)Reply      | Nature of the Universe <hr/> As a Nichiren Buddhist, I view the term 'Universe' as the word implies - namely 'single phrase'. We believe that phrase is "Nam myoho renge kyo" and refer to it as the 'Mystic Law'. I am interested to know if there is wide knowledge of this teaching among the forum's community. More details are at &lt;sgi-usa.org&gt;                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1216(1/6/04 5:36 am)Reply | Nature of the Universe <hr/> Quote: <hr/> As a Nichiren Buddhist, I view the term 'Universe' as the word implies - namely 'single phrase'. We believe that phrase is "Nam myoho renge kyo" and refer to it as the 'Mystic Law'. I am interested to know if there is wide knowledge of this teaching among the forum's community. More details are at &lt;sgi-usa.org&gt; <hr/> As a wild woman, I cringe when I hear the words "we believe." I gave up salvationist religion years ago. So the Mohammedans have the one true prophet, and the christians have the one true faith, and the jews know the one true God, and now the Nichirins have the one true mantra, the one true phrase of the universe. Mantras are good. Yes, I heard of yours many years ago. Just did a little google search. I see no reason to elevate it higher than other useful mantras, and while I, personally, happen to think that there are profound possibilities in sound, I am a bit skeptical of chanting a mantra whose meaning does not readily enter one's mind. How many years have you been at it? |

|                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1385(1/6/04 9:28 am)Reply | Nature of the Universe <hr/> I am a Caucasian American. We believe in life (our own), liberty (our own), and pursuit of the holy dollar as represented by "$." Our mantra is "Either you are for us, or you are against us." We repeat that constantly to ourselves. Our website is www.stinkingfilthyrichrulersoftheworld.com. Drop by and say hello. And it is true, Anna is a wild woman (in a monogamistic kind of way, I presume). Tharan |
| liberalpuppetRegistered UserPosts: 5(1/6/04 10:24 am)Reply | Re: Nature of the Universe <hr/> if there is a basic property to the universe of which we are a part, what awaits humanity in its future explorations of this reality; what may we find, how may we find it?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| avidalocaRegistered UserPosts: 146(1/6/04 11:14 am)Reply   | Re: Nature of the Universe <hr/> WolfsonJakk wrote: Quote: <hr/> Our mantra is "Either you are for us, or you are against us." <hr/> As a non-American who had the good or bad luck to live in America with the locals I have to agree. It must be the most spiritually unfree nation you will ever find - there would be more tolerance in China for varying viewpoints. Martin                                                                                                                  |

Naturyl

Registered User

Posts: 21

(1/6/04 11:39 am)

Reply

Nature of the Universe? Who cares? Give me consumer toys!

---

Well, to hell with you then. You are obviously a bloodsucking communist, so who needs you? I don't, and Mr. Bush doesn't either. If you don't love this country, get out. Go live in Iraq and see how you like it there. If you're not against us, you're for us. Leave it or love it, you know. Jesus loves you, but I don't give a rats ass about you, so don't be asking me for any welfare. You're probably Black anyway. Come on, don't try to deny it, we all know how THEY are.

My President is my Leader and my Commander in Chief, so stop insulting him. You're just jealous anyway, because you are all poor, hopeless communists who are pissed off because you can't roll through town in my new Escalade.

"I don't know what it is, but I'm for it."

-George W. Bush

So there you have it. I read the Bible, you know, so I know I'm right. God is a Republican, and so am I. I'll see you on the next boat out of here, you lib. And I don't want to hear any of this "tolerance" crap. There's one God, the Bible said it, I believe it, that settles it. See you in hell, all you dumb-ass Democrats, liberals, Canadians, Darwinist pigs, Blacks, bloodsucking communists, Buddha-lovers, musicians, Chinks, Mexican apple-pickers, philosophers, faggots, homeless bums, Europeans, atheists, poor people, and all you other heathen bastards. Good riddance, and God bless America (and nowhere else).

Rhett Hamilton

Registered User

Posts: 210

(1/6/04 12:28 pm)

Reply

Re: what is the basic property of the universe/human?

---

In an effort to determine the basic property of a human I found myself contemplating quite a bit more than a single thing such as this. It could be said that as humans we can analyze, rationalize, conceptualize and these would be among the more known sophisticated endeavors. We can then go down, in a manner of speaking, on the chain of a human's possibility from thought to free will to existence to ...?

...cause and effect, and then back up again and around and around until you get it.

What does it mean to be a part of this universe as well as a human part?

It means we can become wise.

can we progress further than contemplation?

Progress is as you define it, but if you consider Truth progress, as i do, then the answer is yes. However, that doesn't totally and forever whisk away the act of contemplation, reality will present curiosities that one may choose to investigate.

can we realize a more basic property than existence?

Depends on how you define or experience existence. For an enlightened person that perceives reality as it is, ie. A=A, then the answer would be no.

Rhett

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1386
(1/6/04 1:42 pm)
Reply

Re: what is the basic property of the universe/human?

---

Naturyl,
You forgot "pot smokers."

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 394
(1/7/04 1:18 am)
Reply

Re: Nature of the Universe

---

jrgpsych1:

Quote:

---

As a Nichiren Buddhist, I view the term 'Universe' as the word implies - namely 'single phrase'. We believe that phrase is "Nam myoho renge kyo" and refer to it as the 'Mystic Law'.

---

I'm a mystic. There are no laws in my dept.
A 'Nichiren Buddhist'. How interesting. Not.

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 395
(1/7/04 1:52 am)
Reply

Re: Nature of the Universe? Who cares? Give me consumer toys

---

Naturyl:

Quote:

---

Well, to hell with you then. You are obviously a bloodsucking communist, so who needs you? I don't, and Mr. Bush doesn't either. If you don't love this country, get out. Go live in Iraq and see how you like it there. If you're not against us, you're for us. Leave it or love it, you know. Jesus loves you, but I don't give a rats ass about you, so don't be asking me for any welfare. You're probably Black anyway. Come on, don't try to deny it, we all know how THEY are.

---

You're a naturyl alright.

Quote:

---

My President is my Leader and my Commander in Chief, so stop insulting him. You're just jealous anyway, because you are all poor, hopeless communists who are pissed off because you can't roll through town in my new Escalade.

"I don't know what it is, but I'm for it."

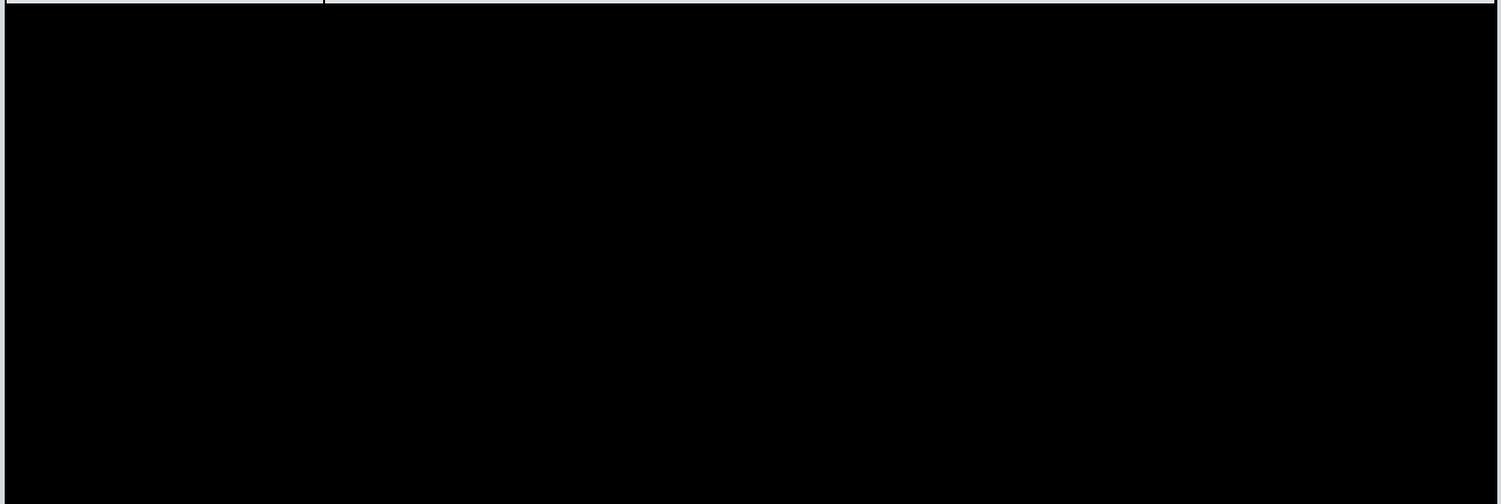

-George W. Bush

So there you have it. I read the Bible, you know, so I know I'm right. God is a Republican, and so am I. I'll see you on the next boat out of here, you lib. And I don't want to hear any of this "tolerance" crap. There's one God, the Bible said it, I believe it, that settles it. See you in hell, all you dumb-ass Democrats, liberals, Canadians, Darwinist pigs, Blacks, bloodsucking communists, Buddha-lovers, musicians, Chinks, Mexican apple-pickers, philosophers, faggots, homeless bums, Europeans, atheists, poor people, and all you other heathen bastards. Good riddance, and God bless America (and nowhere else).

---

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 | You remember me of Sarah, a 13 year old millionaire's daughter I had contact with, three years ago. Because of my Golden Girls site. She lives in Miami, and she's a darling-superintelligent, 16 now. Grown up. Grow up, Naturyl, et cetera.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| Naturyl <input type="checkbox"/> Registered UserPosts: 22(1/7/04 1:09 pm)Reply  | Re: Nature of the Universe? Who cares? Give me consumer toys <hr/> Hehehe... mission accomplished. My post was a joke - I wanted to see if I could write the most asinine, stereotypical conservative crap I could come up with and have it taken seriously. I think I proved my point that conservatives DO say those kinds of things often enough that when people see it, they think it is being said in all seriousness. I apologize for any discomfort my little experiment in parody may have caused. :) Quote: <hr/> Naturyl, You forgot "pot smokers." <hr/> Oh yeah. All those long-haired, no-job-having dirty Marxist drug-loving bastards are going straight to hell too. In a handbasket. LOL. Edited by: Naturyl <input type="checkbox"/> at: 1/7/04 1:11 pm |
| Paul Registered UserPosts: 396(1/7/04 1:57 pm)Reply                                                                                                                                                | To Naturyl <hr/> I'm feeling quite dumb now.Rationally I knew I was, but... but...No butts.LOL.Thanks, Naturyl.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| rushdl <input type="checkbox"/> Registered UserPosts: 38(1/10/04 6:18 am)Reply                                                                                                                     | Re: To Naturyl <hr/> I'm going to go with "Light". We are all, it is all part of the Light.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |

|                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 1605(1/10/04 9:51 am)Reply            | what is the basic property of the universe/human? <hr/> Emptiness.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2044(1/10/04 11:31 am)Reply      | --- <hr/> universe 'slash' human?! Fullness. Void is not devoid of itself.                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1224(1/11/04 12:41 pm)Reply | basic property <hr/> I'd have to go with the basic property is Tao, but is the basic property of Tao emptiness? I question that, as it would mean to me that nothing can exist. Perhaps the basic property is somethingness. Certainly, the universe that we perceive is all made of light. |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2051(1/11/04 11:46 pm)Reply      | --- <hr/> There is no basic property!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2052(1/12/04 12:17 am)Reply      | ---- <hr/> Yo check this ouT_-~^~^~` _-_-_-_-_-_-_-_-_-_-                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |

Naturyl
Registered User
Posts: 23
(1/13/04 12:16 pm)
Reply

The basic property of universe/human is. (end of sentence)

---

So, we ask, what is Tao?

The question is wrongly put.

Instead, we can only ask "is Tao?"

And the answer is that "Tao is."

We cannot talk about Tao in terms of "Tao is ____." Whatever comes after "is" is wrong. This is what Lao-Tzu and Zen stress repeatedly. The basic property is not this, not that, not both, and not neither. It just is.

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> what is the basic property of the universe/human?

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                 | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 2012(1/13/04 2:09 pm)Reply  | Re: basic property <hr/> Bird wrote: Quote: <hr/> I'd have to go with the basic property is Tao, but is the basic property of Tao emptiness? I question that, as it would mean to me that nothing can exist. Perhaps the basic property is somethingness. <hr/> On another thread, Hwyl and Wolf have spoken about the lack of memory in the women they are close to. This has been my experience as well, not only with various women in my personal life, but also on the net as well. Bird, I have to say, is firmly part of this tradition. I'm not sure how many times Danny and I have stressed that emptiness doesn't mean nothingness - probably hundreds of times over the past couple of years - but we might as well not have spoken at all as far as Bird is concerned. It is a terrible truth, and these days you can get lynched for saying it, but talking to a woman is like talking to empty space. The words come out of your mouth, you hear them, they make perfect sense to you, and then they disappear without trace. |

--

Naturyl wrote:

Quote:

---

So, we ask, what is Tao?

The question is wrongly put.

Instead, we can only ask "is Tao?"

And the answer is that "Tao is."

We cannot talk about Tao in terms of "Tao is ____."
Whatever comes after "is" is wrong. This is what Lao-Tzu and Zen stress repeatedly. The basic property is not this, not that, not both, and not neither. It just is.

---

More accurately, it is . . . . for the enlightened person.

But you're right. The Tao is not anything in particular (which is why it is described as emptiness), and yet it is is utterly everything.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1236

(1/14/04 1:04 am)

Reply

basic property

---

It all depends on what you mean by emptiness, which of course is what you just said. But I remember (!) a rather long post of Thomas' many months ago in which he carefully delineated the ways in which emptiness prevailed on EVERY level, including the physical. I am thinking a lot about the physical these days, as I am wondering what lies at the root of matter. The root now - I'm talking about the root.

So I'm reading about string theory, but I don't understand yet what a string is, nor do I know whether they have figured it out either. Just a theory yet, anyway. But this string theory stuff is definitely probing in the direction of the root of matter (and energy).

Yes, I do recall (!) that in your book you said that of the two things we know about the hidden void, one was that "it is not nothing." It is the nature of this "not nothing" that I'm after. A much harder goal.

I think I have a fair grasp of emptiness, and I have not forgotten what I've learned. You are only showing your ass with a post like this.

The problem with the Wolf and Hywell women is not memory. It is a matter of either resistance or incomplete understanding/agreement.

For example, many people, self included, have sat in a math class and watched the teacher work equations, and it all makes so much sense at the time that you are pretty sure you've got it, but when you go home and try to work your homework problems, the gaps become apparent.

On the other hand, many women report that they have had conversations with a man, even one in which the topic was of importance to him rather than her, and in which he gave absolutely every indication of being alive, present, and actively engaged in it, and then when a short time later, something comes up that relates to it, and the woman mentions it, the man looks up in total bewilderment. She asks, "don't you remember last week when we talked about...?" And he doesn't. His memory is not even jogged. It is just simply gone as though it were never stored in the first place...

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2020
(1/14/04 8:11 am)
Reply

Re: basic property

---

Bird wrote:

Quote:

---

It all depends on what you mean by emptiness, which of course is what you just said. But I remember (!) a rather long post of Thomas' many months ago in which he carefully delineated the ways in which emptiness prevailed on EVERY level, including the physical.

---

Well, to be frank, that was one of the most pitiful dissertations on emptiness I have ever seen. He has no idea what he is talking about.

Different levels of emptiness, indeed!

Quote:

---

I am thinking a lot about the physical these days, as I am wondering what lies at the root of matter. The root now - I'm talking about the root.

So I'm reading about string theory, but I don't understand yet what a string is, nor do I know whether they have figured it out either. Just a theory yet, anyway. But this string theory stuff is definitely probing in the direction of the root of matter (and energy).

---

At best, this probing will only yield another mysterious substance at the "root" of matter, which in itself will have to be investigated. In effect, nothing will have changed. One will never understand the root of matter by reading string theory, or any other cosmological or quantum theory.

Quote:

---

Yes, I do recall (!) that in your book you said that of the two things we know about the hidden void, one was that "it is not nothing." It is the nature of this "not nothing" that I'm after. A much harder goal.

---

What goal? There is no goal. Once you understand that the hidden void is not nothing (and not something), then that is the end of the road. Full comprehension of its nature is achieved.

Quote:

---

I think I have a fair grasp of emptiness, and I have not forgotten what I've learned. You are only showing your ass with a post like this.

---

Your comment to Dan gives lie to this.

Quote:

---

The problem with the Wolf and Hywell women is not memory. It is a matter of either resistance or incomplete understanding/agreement.

For example, many people, self included, have sat in a math class and watched the teacher work equations, and it all makes so much sense at the time that you are pretty sure you've got it, but when you go home and try to work your homework problems, the gaps become apparent.

On the other hand, many women report that they have had conversations with a man, even one in which the topic was of importance to him rather than her, and in which he gave absolutely every indication of being alive, present, and actively engaged in it, and then when a short time later, something comes up that relates to it, and the woman mentions it, the man looks up in total bewilderment. She asks, "don't you remember last week when we talked about...?" And he doesn't. His memory is not even jogged. It is just simply gone as though it were never stored in the first place...

---

Because women talk so much, and because it is usually empty prattle, men quickly learn how to appear attentative while mentally going somewhere else. So I'm not surprised at your observation here.

But this is an entirely different phenomenon to the sheer lack of evolution and development in a woman's mind. It does not matter how intellectual she is, and how much she thinks about a philosophical theory and affirms it to be true, it makes no impact on her at all.

It is like firing arrows into the ocean. It doesn't matter how many arrows you fire, the ocean just swallows them up with out changing in the slightest. A woman's mind is so formless and amorphous, and so lacking in memory, there is no foothold for development to take place.

This is why Carl Jung made the observation that most women reach the end of their mental evolution at the age of eighteen.

Cue now for Bird's life story.

silentsal
Registered User
Posts: 13
(1/14/04 8:33 am)
Reply

Re: basic property

---

Quote:

---

Because women talk so much, and because it is usually empty prattle, men quickly learn how to appear attentive while mentally going somewhere else. So I'm not surprised at your observation here.

---

lmao this is funny man! I am a woman and I feel exactly the same about men. Hmmm, only with men I don't have to appear attentive cause they don't even notice usually, woman do.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1250
(1/15/04 3:41 am)
Reply

basic property

---

Quote:

---

At best, this probing will only yield another mysterious substance at the "root" of matter, which in itself will have to be investigated.

---

Of course.

Quote:

---

In effect, nothing will have changed. One will never understand the root of matter by reading string theory, or any other cosmological or quantum theory.

---

So you advocate we stop trying?

Quote:

---

What goal? There is no goal. Once you understand that the hidden void is not nothing (and not something), then that is the end of the road. Full comprehension of its nature is achieved.

---

Oh, is that all there is?

Quote:

---

I think I have a fair grasp of emptiness,
-----

Your comment to Dan gives lie to this.

---

Which comment?

Quote:

---

But this is an entirely different phenomenon to the sheer lack of evolution and development in a woman's mind. It does not matter how intellectual she is, and how much she thinks about a philosophical theory and affirms it to be true, it makes no impact on her at all. It is like firing arrows into the ocean.

---

Why, then, do you pretend that women have any chance at all. Why the talk about increasing their potential through rejection of their femininity.

I'd like to know more about what Jung said so I can look it up.

My life story seems irrelevant, but I certainly did not reach my developmental pinnacle at 18. Actually, I am making such rapid progress its hard to keep up with myself. I only recently gathered more momentum. I was a slow starter, although at 18 or 25 was already ahead of most people.

If you actually think that the stuff you said applies to me, I can only say that my opinion of your ability to perceive people accurately would be about as low as anyone's could be. That you said it in the way you did, indicates either vengefulness on your part, or the very blindness I just mentioned. I know damned good and well how much I have grown

|                                                                                                                                                                   |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                   | philosophically over my adult life, and how I compare with others. If your ability to judge me is as pathetic as it appears, then we may certainly discount your observations of women in general. So we had better go with vindictiveness then?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 449(1/15/04 6:19 pm)Reply  | Re: The basic property of universe/human is. (end of sentenc <hr/> The basic property of the universe is gravity. Everything depends on it.The basic property of humans is the realization of non-existence.Everything depends on it.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| I AMRegistered UserPosts: 223(1/17/04 4:54 pm)Reply                                                                                    | . <hr/> there may be properties of humanity and the universe that we have learned through our senses and detailed in our science, but those would only properties relative to our species. there may also be something within us that did not come from without (i.e our five senses). something that has always been in us and is common to all animate(or even inanimate) matter in the universe. i do not think we have any visual or audible language that describes this property. i also think that if we actually knew the purpose of it all then it would just end (which probably won't happen). we are driven by something that motivates us to discover, change and that is what keeps us moving. but if we knew what it was then would we do? the learning may never end, when we discover one property there will be another awaiting us. you can't live without problems and any utopia would eventually make us extinct. it is in the seeking that we'll find satisfaction. |

|                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2082(1/18/04 12:10 am)Reply | ---- <hr/> Hi everyone. This thread ends on the first page where I ended it. Naturyl, 'tao' means 'the way' doesn't it? How could the tao exist? Jimhaz, if what you say is true, then for what does gravity depend upon itself?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| JohnRegistered UserPosts: 48(1/18/04 1:11 am)Reply       | Re: what is the basic property of the universe/human? <hr/> NaturylReplyRe: what is the basic property of the universe/human? ----- Yes, but not through intellectual effort. The Tao is more basic than existence, but it appears paradoxical to the intellect and can be 'realized' only through direct intuitive experience - i.e. "enlightenment," as many choose to call the realization. Just noticed that - well said, one of the very few sensible things said about enlightenment here. John                                                 |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 639(1/18/04 1:56 am)Reply   | Re: what is the basic property of the universe/human? <hr/> John, why do you think so? Naturyl, I'd like to analyze what you said, to make it clear in my own mind, and in the minds of others. The Tao is more basic than existence If you define 'existence' as "being a thing", then I can agree with you. However, if you define existence as "presence and be-ing", then I can't agree. I would then say that the Tao is existence itself, and it's the most basic 'property' (being all properties in actuality). it appears paradoxical to the intellect |

If the intellect hears the word "Tao", and assumes it's going to appear as some thing in particular. Is that what you mean?

and can be 'realized' only through direct intuitive experience - i.e. "enlightenment," as many choose to call the realization.

Can you describe the 'direct intuitive experience'? I think I know and agree with you, but I'm not sure, since words are usually so misleading.

John
Registered User
Posts: 49
(1/18/04 2:40 am)
Reply

Re: what is the basic property of the universe/human?

---

voce io
John, why do you think so?

For the first 20 years of my studies I too thought that enlightenment lay in some sort of subtle or refined intellectual understanding, which is what most people here are trying to do, fortunately later I was able to exchange words with a Zen man for a few years, he eradicated my misapprehension, eventually.

No, I'm not enlightened.

The questions you have asked Natueryl are an attempt at understanding intellectually and this talk of being enlightened is, to put it bluntly, crass.

John

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 640
(1/18/04 2:54 am)
Reply

Re: what is the basic property of the universe/human?

---

How aren't you enlightened?

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| JohnRegistered UserPosts: 50(1/18/04 3:28 am)Reply                                                                                                                                                            | Re: what is the basic property of the universe/human? <hr/> voce ioHow aren't you enlightened? It's true that our original true nature is never lost nor gained but a distinction is made because a Buddha is a fully real-ised one. John                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 641(1/18/04 4:23 am)Reply                                                                                                                                                        | ... <hr/> You haven't realized your original true nature?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| Canadian Zoetrope <input type="checkbox"/>Registered UserPosts: 20(1/18/04 4:28 am)Reply  | Universe <hr/> Perhaps total contemplation of the existence is not meant to be grappled at this stage in our physical evolution. I'm sure there was a point in our shared history when our mind was dominated by motor neurons and survival oriented proceeces. However at a point, our DNA felt it was advantageous for us to develop cognitive abilities. We have since used these abilites to further deepen our understanding of the universe around us. Our eyes developed along with our recognition and analytical capabilities, and all of a sudden, Olduvai seemed quite small. It just so happens that we have looked further and further from home, and felt smaller and smaller. I think a lot of misconceptions lie in the idea that we are as evolved, physically as well as intellectually, as we're ever going to be, when all evidence points to the contrary. The question is now, when we are capable of sensing or feeling more than we can know for sure, or visa versa, intuitivly deducting something we cannot yet detect sensually: will we aknowledge it, or disregard it as, illogical or even unethical? To me that is the essence of Genius, the marriage of intuitive thought and rational deduction. The Yin and Yang so to speak. |

Edited by: Canadian Zoetrope  at: 1/18/04 4:35 am

Naturyl
Registered User
Posts: 54
(1/18/04 9:35 am)
Reply

Re: Universe

---

Well said.

Canadian Zoetrope
Registered User
Posts: 21
(1/18/04 5:22 pm)
Reply

Heh.

---

I think it's amazing that at some point in the past, was the first human to taste food the first person to ever see the sunset. I think it's quite possible that there is much more for us to see, however, it's up to us to recognize something that we've never seen before. Some wise man once declared, that wisdom is knowing the unknown. For me there is not one essence in this universe that is unknowable, for what would be existence without life to experience it?

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1294
(1/19/04 12:57 pm)
Reply

Re: what is the basic property of the universe/human?

---

Quote:

---

For the first 20 years of my studies I too thought that enlightenment lay in some sort of subtle or refined intellectual understanding, which is what most people here are trying to do, fortunately later I was able to exchange words with a Zen man for a few years, he eradicated my misapprehension, eventually.

---

John, if what you say is true do you think it would be inaccurate or female chauvenistic to say that women might be less attracted to such endeavors because they sense it is not on the mark?

But I think I know what retort QRS would have to what you said.

|                                                                                                              |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Naturyl <input type="checkbox"/> Registered UserPosts: 63(1/19/04 1:33 pm)Reply | Re: what is the basic property of the universe/human? <hr/> Personally, I think you might be onto something, Bird. Women do undeniably have the better access to intuition. Even if they may, as a general rule to which there are exceptions, tend to be a bit shaky in logic - they clearly have access to something just as useful. Often, women are able to 'know' things very quickly that men have to struggle with and reason out for years. We would do well to remember that it is intuitive experience, not reason, that approaches the Tao. I would advise anyone to consider Bird's point before dismissing it.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| birdofhermes Registered UserPosts: 1299(1/19/04 2:55 pm)Reply                   | Re: what is the basic property of the universe/human? <hr/> QRS, of course, deny that women have good intuition. Kevin also recently said that insight is superior to intuition and in that I think he was quite right. Insight is more developed than intuition. Intuition can be vague, whereas insight is more of an "aha" moment which you can articulate. Intuitions can need work before they arrive at the point of insight, although not all of them need to. I definitely agree that men are better at logic and spatial reasoning. Men love to understand and manipulate "the works" of things. However, they are not necessarily better at all forms of logic. I actually do think, Naturyl, that men have an edge in certain kinds of thinking. This means men will almost always be the trailblazers, but of course women can follow. I think women should be followed also, in the areas they excel, and that would be to synthesize the thoughts that men come up with, to integrate them and make them meaningful, and in another arena, to provide a moral compass. |

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> what is the basic property of the universe/human?

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                        | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| JohnRegistered UserPosts: 51(1/19/04 4:44 pm)Reply | Re: what is the basic property of the universe/human? <hr/> birdofhermesQuote:-----For the first 20 years of my studies I too thought that enlightenment lay in some sort of subtle or refined intellectual understanding, which is what most people here are trying to do, fortunately later I was able to exchange words with a Zen man for a few years, he eradicated my misapprehension, eventually.-----John, if what you say is true You don't need to take my word for it, read Ch'an books! There is a saying, that Ch'an is the offspring of Taoism (mother) and Buddhism (father), and there's no doubt the child looks more like the mother. do you think it would be inaccurate or female chauvenistic to say that women might be less attracted to such endeavors because they sense it is not on the mark? I decided to put your question to my wife. The answer is that's not the reason. As I have said elsewhere fewer women try, the reasons are more likely to be that they are more centred in worldly matters. This does not |

have any bearing on superior/inferior though. That males can think logically is true but has no bearing on the potential for enlightenment.

However, at root males and females are the same, we are one. This obsession of QRS is a distraction and totally unnecessary.

But I think I know what retort QRS would have to what you said.

The historic western pre-occupation with intellect may well be the reason that no western tradition has produced large numbers of enlightened ones.

John

Edited by: John at: 1/19/04 5:34 pm

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2078
(1/19/04 5:40 pm)
Reply

Re: what is the basic property of the universe/human?

---

John wrote:

Quote:

---

For the first 20 years of my studies I too thought that enlightenment lay in some sort of subtle or refined intellectual understanding, which is what most people here are trying to do, fortunately later I was able to exchange words with a Zen man for a few years, he eradicated my misapprehension, eventually.

---

In other words, you refined your intellectual understanding.

Quote:

---

Bird: John, if what you say is true

John: You don't need to take my word for it, read Ch'an books!

---

This sounds like an appeal to authority, which implies that you don't really believe that you're an authority yourself. How have you established, then, that the Ch'an books are true?

Quote:

---

That males can think logically is true but has no bearing on the potential for enlightenment.

---

And how have you established this to be true?

Quote:

---

However, at root males and females are the same, we are one. This obsession of QRS is a distraction and totally unnecessary.

---

What obsession? When hungry, I eat. When tired, I sleep.

Quote:

---

The historic western pre-occupation with intellect may well be the reason that no western tradition has produced large numbers of enlightened ones.

---

I put it down to the misuse of the intellect.

John
Registered User
Posts: 52
(1/19/04 7:11 pm)
Reply

Re: what is the basic property of the universe/human?

---

David

I'm tired of your words games but will respond one last time for the sake of politeness.

-----
For the first 20 years of my studies I too thought that enlightenment lay in some sort of subtle or refined intellectual understanding, which is what most people here are trying to do, fortunately later I was able to exchange words with a Zen man for a few years, he eradicated my misapprehension, eventually.

-----
In other words, you refined your intellectual understanding.

That totally misses the point. You're good at that.

This sounds like an appeal to authority, which implies that you don't really believe that you're an authority yourself. How have you established, then, that the Ch'an books are true?

Anna said, "if what you say is true" - she has the option to read the words of the many recognised masters which I suggest is the best option available considering the amount of confusion that exists on this matter.

-----
That males can think logically is true but has no bearing on the potential for enlightenment.

-----
And how have you established this to be true?

Guess!

-----
However, at root males and females are the same, we are one. This obsession of QRS is a distraction and totally unnecessary.

-----
What obsession?

That you continually turn conversations around to the topic of the feminine.

Once two monks were traveling, they came across a stream and standing on the bank was a young naked women, she asked, "Would one of you kind gentlemen take me across the river." The elder of the two monks picked her up and crossed the stream, placing her gently on the other side. The two parties then went their separate ways. After a while the younger monk said in an agitated voice, "What do you think you were doing, we are not allowed to associate with women, you have made a mockery of our order." The elder monk reply, "Brother, I left the women back there, you are still carrying her!"

-----
The historic western pre-occupation with intellect may well be the reason that no western tradition has produced large numbers of enlightened ones.

-----
I put it down to the misuse of the intellect.

The ramifications of that statement are too silly to contemplate.

|                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                         | John                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| silentsalRegistered UserPosts: 26(1/20/04 2:46 am)Reply      | Re: what is the basic property of the universe/human? <hr/> Quote: <hr/> do you think it would be inaccurate or female chauvenistic to say that women might be less attracted to such endeavors because they sense it is not on the mark? <hr/> it is not that they sense it is not on the mark, even though it isn't on the mark .... to get enlightened you have to miss the mark so to speak haha look at the two like this ManWoman, Man is incomplete without Woman .... Man is the vessel ... woman is everything around the vessel and they are ONE lol it could be opposite Woman is incomplete without Man haha jeesh never thought I would say that but .... Even Sex has the Man filling Woman but is the Woman shaped to fit the man or is the Man shaped to fit the Woman it matters not because they are one ... |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1304(1/20/04 4:34 am)Reply | Re: what is the basic property of the universe/human? <hr/> Quote: <hr/> John, if what you say is true You don't need to take my word for it, read Ch'an books! <hr/> I never said I agreed or didn't, just used your idea as a hypothetical starting point. I will look up the Ch'an books. Quote: <hr/> As I have said elsewhere fewer women try, the reasons are more likely to be that they are more centred in worldly                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               | matters. This does not have any bearing on superior/inferior though. That males can think logically is true but has no bearing on the potential for enlightenment.

---

I am not entirely sure my point was understood. What I am saying is that a person will stray toward a system that is easier for their brain structure and individual talents. A person who is highly spatially gifted, will naturally feel comfortable there, and others not so gifted with find their play to be hard work.

Let us say there are some false ways of going about seeking enlightenment, and let us also say that the world of ideas and religion has become very dominated by men. Since men made them up in the first place, those structures will appeal more to men, and the errors they may contain (some worse than others) will also enthrall and entrap men for longer periods of time.

*****8

Quote:

---

What obsession? When hungry, I eat. When tired, I sleep.

---

But when you're horny, you don't fuck. Thus the obsession.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1425
(1/20/04 6:00 am)
Reply

Re: what is the basic property of the universe/human?

---

Quote:

---

But when you're horny, you don't fuck. Thus the obsession.

---

Not necessarily. "Horny" for a male generally coincides with a relative high number in current sperm count. Young men produce more sperm, thus are more often horny. Sperm release does not necessarily have to coincide with sex, though this is certainly the pattern it has generally taken since human pair-bonding behaviors began (40,000 - 350,000???? years ago).

Without the attachment to "objects of affection" and the subsequent pursuit mode during periods of high sperm count, release can feasibly become mechanical.

*When hungry, I eat. When tired, I sleep. When horny, I jerk.
----Buddha Jr.*

Tharan

*edit*

Tangent:

During times of high sperm count (horniness) a man undergoes certain physiological changes which might affect his resultng personality. It is the male period perhaps. It is not noticeable until some behavior makes you realize that perhaps you just went too far.

Edited by: WolfsonJakk at: 1/20/04 6:07 am

John
Registered User
Posts: 53
(1/20/04 7:21 am)
Reply

Re: what is the basic property of the universe/human?

---

birdofhermes

Quote:

-----
You don't need to take my word for it, read Ch'an books!

-----
I never said I agreed or didn't, just used your idea as a hypothetical starting point. I will look up the Ch'an books.

Sorry it was not meant to convey anything negative. Words can easily mislead without the advantage of physical presence.

Quote:

-----
As I have said elsewhere fewer women try, the reasons are more likely to be that they are more centred in worldly matters. This does not have any bearing on superior/inferior though. That males can think logically is true but has no bearing on the potential for enlightenment.

-----
I am not entirely sure my point was understood. What I am saying is that a person will stray toward a system that is easier for their brain structure and individual talents. A person who is highly spatially gifted, will naturally feel comfortable there, and others not so gifted with find their play to be hard work.

Let us say there are some false ways of going about seeking enlightenment, and let us also say that the world of ideas and religion has become very dominated by men. Since men made them up in the first place, those structures will appeal more to men, and the errors they may contain (some worse than others) will also enthrall and entrap men for longer periods of time.

'brain structure and individual talents' - these are not so important when you consider what I've already said concerning enlightenment. The most important 'talent' is a will to do this thing.

'feeling comfortable' - discomfort is something all have to experience in one way or another. If the will is not strong enough then discomfort undoubtedly will have an effect.

You may have a point about men dominating religion, although this has not stopped certain women from pursuing Dharma. And, these days more and more women are taking the lead so these factors should lessen.

John

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2080
(1/20/04 8:28 am)
Reply

Re: what is the basic property of the universe/human?

---

John wrote:

Quote:

---

John: However, at root males and females are the same, we are one. This obsession of QRS is a distraction and totally unnecessary.

DQ: What obsession?

John: That you continually turn conversations around to the topic of the feminine.

---

Appearances often deceive. There is no obsession. When hungry, I eat. When tired, I sleep. That is all.

You won't be able to look up your Ch'an books to understanding the meaning of this. It has to come from your own wisdom.

Quote:

---

DQ: What obsession? When hungry, I eat. When tired, I sleep.

Bird: But when you're horny, you don't fuck. Thus the obsession.

---

So you reckon that if I should get horny, I should immediately begin fucking whatever is close at hand - the nearest woman, child, pet, pillow, etc .....? Somehow, I don't think the Zen Master who coined that particular phrase was intending it to be interpreted on that crude a level. He had something altogether more profound in mind.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2084

(1/20/04 10:14 am)

Reply

Re: what is the basic property of the universe/human?

---

John wrote:

Quote:

---

I'm tired of your words games but will respond one last time for the sake of politeness.

---

These aren't word games. I'm challenging the attainment you are claiming.

Quote:

---

DQ: This sounds like an appeal to authority, which implies that you don't really believe that you're an authority yourself. How have you established, then, that the Ch'an books are true?

John: Anna said, "if what you say is true" - she has the option to read the words of the many recognised masters which I suggest is the best option available considering the amount of confusion that exists on this matter.

---

The Pope, Deepak Chopra and Rajneesh, the guru of the Orange People, are "recognized masters" as well. It doesn't automatically mean that they are enlightened and know what they are talking about.

How do you know that Dogen, for example, was an enlightened man and an authority on wisdom?

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1308

(1/20/04 12:04 pm)

Reply

Re: what is the basic property of the universe/human?

---

Quote:

---

'brain structure and individual talents' - these are not so important when you consider what I've already said concerning enlightenment. The most important 'talent' is a will to do this thing.

---

OK, maybe it was a while back. Besides will, what do you think should be done, if anything?

Quote:

---

'feeling comfortable' - discomfort is something all have to experience in one way or another. If the will is not strong enough then discomfort undoubtedly will have an effect.

---

I was not addressing the willingness for discomfort. I think it takes courage to pursue truth. I don't think you ever did get my point. Never mind.

Quote:

---

You may have a point about men dominating religion, although this has not stopped certain women from pursuing Dharma. And, these days more and more women are taking the lead so these factors should lessen.

---

Actually, I am not really sure why anyone thinks they are less interested. That has not been my impression.

Quote:

---

Somehow, I don't think the Zen Master who coined that particular phrase was intending it to be interpreted on that crude a level. He had something altogether more profound in mind.

---

So did I.

Naturyl
Registered User
Posts: 68
(1/20/04 12:11 pm)
Reply

Re: what is the basic property of the universe/human?

---

Bird,

Quote:

---

Kevin also recently said that insight is superior to intuition and in that I think he was quite right. Insight is more developed than intuition. Intuition can be vague, whereas insight is more of an "aha" moment which you can articulate. Intuitions can need work before they arrive at the point of insight, although not all of them need to.

---

Of course, this is correct. In fact, these are among the reasons that I prefer the term 'insight' to 'enlightenment.' It is hard to avoid the 'e-word' around here, but normally, I use the term 'persons of insight' when referring to those who have reached a certain level of understanding. The list of reason why I feel that 'insight' is a superior term could fill quite a bit of space. Suffice it to say, however, that all wisdom and even all knowledge is really about being able to 'see in' and make sense of the concepts which underlie the phenomena.

John,

I think that you are a person of insight. :)

David,

Quote:

---

What obsession? When hungry, I eat. When tired, I sleep.

---

Yes, but you forgot to add, "when online, I rail against women."

Quote:

---

How do you know that Dogen, for example, was an enlightened man and an authority on wisdom?

---

He was wise. What else would one need?

"When a fish swims, it swims on and on, and there is no end to the water. When a bird flies, it flies on and on, and there is no end to the sky. There was never a fish that swam out of the water or a bird that flew out of the sky. When they need just a little water or sky, they use just a little; when they need a lot, they use a lot. Thus, they use all of it in every moment, and in every place they have perfect freedom.

Yet if there were a bird that first wanted to examine the size of the sky, or a fish that first wanted to examine the extent of the water, and then tried to fly or swim, it would never find its way. When we find where we are at this moment, then practice follows, and this is the realization of the truth. For the place, the way, is neither large nor small, neither self nor other. It has never existed before, and it is not coming into existence now. It simply is as it is."

-Dogen

John
Registered User
Posts: 54
(1/20/04 4:12 pm)
Reply

Re: what is the basic property of the universe/human?

---

birdofhermes

Quote:

-----

'brain structure and individual talents' - these are not so important when you consider what I've already said concerning enlightenment. The most important 'talent' is a will to do this thing.

-----

OK, maybe it was a while back. Besides will, what do you think should be done, if anything?

Not that far back Anna!

The message is the same in the New Testament as in Ch'an, and as the New Testament says,

"For those that have ears to hear!"

In other words, there is a big difference between being told and discovering for yourself. The difference is so large that these people (masters) have deemed it necessary that you discover it yourself.

I'll give you a clue though, unless this issue becomes your main thrust in life you will probably not discover it.

Go discover!

John

Edited by: John at: 1/20/04 5:31 pm

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 2085
(1/21/04 9:47 am)
Reply

Re: what is the basic property of the universe/human?

---

NOX23 wrote:

Quote:

---

John,

I think that you are a person of insight. :)

---

I think he is a religious fundamentalist. A Jehova's Witness in Zen clothing.

Quote:

---

DQ: How do you know that Dogen, for example, was an enlightened man and an authority on wisdom?

NOX: He was wise. What else would one need?

---

That's the sort of answer a Jehovah's Witness gives about his local preacher. Are you are religious fundamentalist as well?

Quote:

---

DQ: What obsession? When hungry, I eat. When tired, I sleep.

NOX: Yes, but you forgot to add, "when online, I rail against women."

---

Or more accurately, against ignorance. My focus on women probably constitutes less than 5% of my overall discourse.

Neither you, nor John, nor Bird understand the true meaning of "When hungry I eat. When tired, I sleep." You're all far too attached to the outer forms and appearances of a person's behaviour and to the frozen traditional images of how a Zen Master is supposed to behave.

Quote:

---

"When a fish swims, it swims on and on, and there is no end to the water. When a bird flies, it flies on and on, and there is no end to the sky. There was never a fish that swam out of the water or a bird that flew out of the sky. When they need just a little water or sky, they use just a little; when they need a lot, they use a lot. Thus, they use all of it in every moment, and in every place they have perfect freedom.

Yet if there were a bird that first wanted to examine the size of the sky, or a fish that first wanted to examine the extent of the water, and then tried to fly or swim, it would never find its way. When we find where we are at this moment, then practice follows, and this is the realization of the truth. For the place, the way, is neither large nor small, neither self nor other. It has never existed before, and it is not coming into existence now. It simply is as it is."

---

And Dogen thinks this is deep? This is nothing more than a soothing bedtime story for children, the kind that comforts and puts one to sleep. This is not what Zen is about!

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1310
(1/21/04 9:57 am)
Reply

Re: what is the basic property of the universe/human?

---

Quote:

---

Neither you, nor John, nor Bird understand the true meaning of "When hungry I eat. When tired, I sleep."

---

Actually, all I ever thought that remark meant was not to be obsessed with monastic schedules, getting up at such and such an early time and how many hours to sleep, and how much to fast, and how many hours to pray/chant/meditate. Getting past the ascetic scorecard.

Edited by: birdofhermes at: 1/21/04 12:42 pm

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 768
(1/21/04 12:53 pm)
Reply

Re: what is the basic property of the universe/human?

---

Tharan: "Horny" for a male genrally coincides with a relative high number in current sperm count.

A charming hypothesis but quite inaccurate. Sexual excitement occurs in the brain, not in the scrotum.

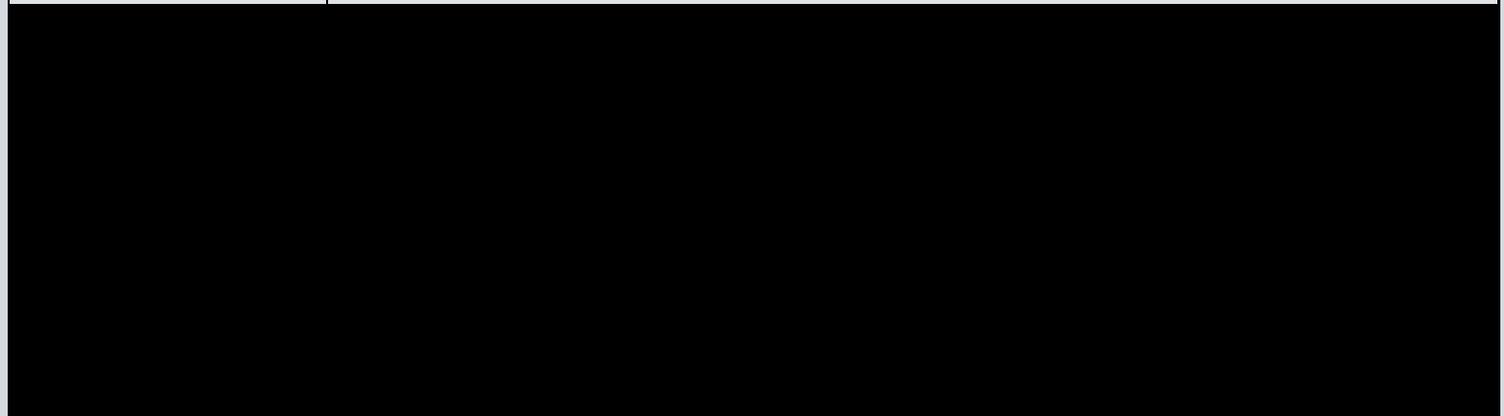

Tharan: Sperm release does not necessarily have to coincide with sex, though this is certainly the pattern it has generally taken since human pair-bonding behaviors began (40,000 - 350,000????? years ago).

Uh oh Tharan, I can't restrain myself. Must comment. How do you think humans (or hominids) have reproduced before, when you assume that pair-bonding (copulation) dates back only 40,000 years???

Tharan: During times of high sperm count (horniness) a man undergoes certain physiological changes which might affect his resultng personality. It is the male period perhaps.

Male period? High sperm count? Exploding testes? You can put that down to the urban legends category. The production of sperm is a complex self-regulating process (spermatogonia -> spermatids -> spermatozoa -> sperm) that admittedly has something to do with testosterone, but high sperm count doesn't imply high testosterone levels. I would assume (though I am not sure) that the opposite is the case, namely that testosterone levels decrease when "saturation" of mature sperm is reached, because the testosterone

|                                                                                           |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                           | plays a role in spermatogenesis, which is only the first step in sperm production. Thomas                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| Thomas KnierimRegistered UserPosts: 769(1/21/04 12:58 pm)Reply | Re: what is the basic property of the universe/human? <hr/> David: Neither you, nor John, nor Bird understand the true meaning of "When hungry I eat. When tired, I sleep." You're all far too attached to the outer forms and appearances of a person's behaviour and to the frozen traditional images of how a Zen Master is supposed to behave. Then what is the true meaning of that saying in your opinion? Thomas |
| RairunRegistered UserPosts: 180(1/21/04 1:20 pm)Reply          | ... <hr/> Quote: <hr/> I would assume (though I am not sure) that the opposite is the case, namely that testosterone levels decrease when "saturation" of mature sperm is reached, because the testosterone plays a role in spermatogenesis, which is only the first step in sperm production. <hr/> I would assume that you'd just have a wet dream instead of having to mess with hormone levels.              |

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1312
(1/21/04 3:15 pm)
Reply

Re: ...

---

I agree. I don't think testosterone levels would decrease when sperm levels were high. In that case, you would have to have orgasms to maintain good levels of the hormone. It takes 3 months to make sperm. Various things can cause low sperm counts, and I don't think such men usually have low testosterone. There might be some relation, but there is too much going on with testosterone for that to be a major factor.

The possibility of sexual contact does raise testosterone levels.
Testosterone levels are diurnal, with 3 or 4 spikes at certain times of day.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1426
(1/21/04 3:19 pm)
Reply

humor alert

---

Thomas wrote,

Quote:

---

Uh oh Tharan, I can't restrain myself. Must comment. How do you think humans (or hominids) have reproduced before, when you assume that pair-bonding (copulation) dates back only 40,000 years???

---

Yes, and I can prove it...

Quote:

---

Male period? High sperm count? Exploding testes? You can put that down to the urban legends category. The production of sperm is a complex self-regulating process (spermatogonia -> spermatids -> spermatozoa blah, blah, blippity, blah...

---

Wait a second, I never said anything about exploding testes, you sick bastard.

Tharan

|                                                                                                                                                                           |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                           | editGo Carolina Panthers! Edited by: WolfsonJakk at: 1/21/04 3:26 pm                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
| Thomas KnierimRegistered UserPosts: 770(1/21/04 8:02 pm)Reply  | Re: humor alert <hr/> Anna: I agree. I don't think testosterone levels would decrease when sperm levels were high. Well, perhaps we should ask someone with experience in withholding ejaculation for the duration of spermatogenesis (roughly three months). I am sorry I can't be of any help there. David, Kevin, perhaps? What about the testosterone? What about the psychological consequences? Tharan: Yes, and I can prove it... Alright, I am listening. Tharan: Wait a second, I never said anything about exploding testes, you sick bastard. Sorry, that was a dramatizing addition of my own. :-) Thomas |

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> what is the basic property of the universe/human?

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                       | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1314(1/22/04 2:54 am)Reply | Re: humor alert<hr/> Quote: <hr/> Well, perhaps we should ask someone with experience in withholding ejaculation for the duration of spermatogenesis (roughly three months). I am sorry I can't be of any help there. David, Kevin, perhaps? What about the testosterone? <hr/> That won't work. This is a masturbator's forum. They would also need to have a lot of lab work done. Actually, testosterone levels could well drop slightly right after ejaculation, but they would most likely come right back up within no more than a few hours. |

|                                                                                                           |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1426(1/22/04 5:48 am)Reply                    | Re: humor alert <hr/> Quote: <hr/> This is a masturbator's forum. <hr/> I think Dan turned off the abilities to post pictures unfortunately. And what would those pictures be of, you ask? Women!!!!                                                                                                                                                              |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1316(1/22/04 7:42 am)Reply                   | Re: humor alert <hr/> I think you and your wife should drink more often, Tharan.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1427(1/22/04 12:46 pm)Reply                   | Re: humor alert <hr/> "I'm ain't drunk, I'm just drinkin."--Albert Collins Seriously though, I'm not much of a drinker. I do smoke a little after work. On another note, she has had a smile on her face for the past couple of days. Can you guess why? Spontenaity (sp?) is a good thing. Tharan Edited by: WolfsonJakk at: 1/22/04 12:53 pm |
| Naturyl <input type="checkbox"/>Registered UserPosts: 71(1/22/04 1:15 pm)Reply | Re: humor alert <hr/> What is NOX23 and why is it being used to refer to me?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |

|                                                                    |                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| JohnRegistered UserPosts: 56(1/22/04 4:55 pm)Reply | Re: humor alert<hr/> Naturyl-----What is NOX23 and why is it being used to refer to me?NOX23 is a handle to someone else, one presumes that using it to refer to you was a mistake.John |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> What is the self?

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 39(2/15/04 1:51 am)Reply | What is the self? <hr/> I see myself as an individual, not a collection of "parts". Can anyone explain why I only experience neural impulses? Was it programmed before I was born? Do we contain within us the possibility to create our own reality, if not, who or what creates ours? And for a really tough question, I know a sphere can exist, I argued about this on another forum and they could only come up with "hyper-forms" to simply reflect my thinking. Why can't a sphere have infinite dimensions? Maybe to dim down the thinking process try to imagine an infinite dimensional sphere on one plane. The fact is it's possible even in a "3D" universe which our universe is not. A dimension is the measure like time(universally), or a "time-line". Just because you haven't seen, or experienced it doesn't make it not real. Can we experience the self? Edited by: XXX STATIC X at: 2/15/04 3:52 am |

Rairun

Registered User

Posts: 190

(2/15/04 9:23 am)

Reply

...

---

I am what I am thinking at any given moment. No, I'm not saying that I am a tree if I think "tree". Instead, I am the thought that says "tree".

Those thoughts are always articulated as a dialogue. While I am the actual thought, the content of this thought is what discriminates one thing from another. So consciousness of things is only there because of thought.

Thought can't be aware of itself, but it can be aware of a past thought. You can name the last thought you had as "I" for practical purposes, but the actual "I" is the thought that is naming the last thought.

You could say that everything that is not thought creates thought, and I think you'd be right. But I also think we could make a distinction there and assume there is an unconscious mind, simply because the way thoughts arise don't seem to be random. I call that which causes thought to arise "self" or "will". It's like a primary value, and thoughts develop themselves as tools to put that value into action when it's faced with an external situation.

If there is wrong reasoning when those thoughts are being developed, you will end up doing something that goes against the primary value. I don't mean wrong reasoning like QRS do. As much as thinking that the christian god exists is untrue, it does not consist wrong reasoning to worship it, if your primary value points you to that direction. It'd be wrong reasoning if you let people convince you that you shouldn't do it, even though you want it.

So the enlightened person is the one who is free from the influence of any external values in their reasoning. Of course their primary value itself is influenced by their surroundings, but their reasoning to put it in practice is not.

That's just something I've made up. Take it with a grain of salt.

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 50
(2/15/04 10:07 am)
Reply

No personal choice!?

---

That's enough to make a man go insane! I don't believe in the Christian God, you mean govil. They do not think that I know from experience in christian churches don't believe all you hear. What if God has all personalities, maybe he is more than what everyone thinks of him. I can see where a govil would be coming from though, seeing as how it never actually had anything to experience, only memories of infinite possibilities, that would be too much for one mind to bare, poor "guy". I can see God as having meaning though... maybe it is us.

You can choose a ready guide in some celestial voice.
If you choose not to decide, you still have made a choice.
You can choose from phantom fears and kindness that can kill;
I will choose a path that's clear-
I will choose FREE WILL.. -RUSH

Freedom isn't free, except to God.

All we see or seem is but a dream within a dream. -Edgar Allen Poe

The eye sees a thing more clearly in dreams than the imagination awake. -
Leonardo da Vinci

He who knows others is wise; he who knows himself is enlightened. -
Lao-Tzu

Rairun
Registered User
Posts: 191
(2/15/04 11:11 am)
Reply

...

---

What are you on about? The christian God thing was just an example, it could have been anything else.

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 54
(2/15/04 12:16 pm)
Reply

Re: ...

---

The truth is I nor you knows what or who God may be like. Let alone the possibility of more than one God. Faith is truth. Faith is the ultimate truth right now, summon bonum.

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| RairunRegistered UserPosts: 192(2/15/04 1:45 pm)Reply                                                                                                                                                                                  | ... <hr/> Forget that I ever said God. (And while you are at it, forget that definition of enlightenemnt... because when I think of it, I don't believe in it either)                                                                                                                                                                       |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 61(2/16/04 11:10 am)Reply                                                                                                                                                                            | Re: ... <hr/> Aren't we all just animals to begin with? If God exists, explain your feelings to him. Does conformity suggest faith in God? Can't we see through our selfish desires to stray from God? Is this a possibility?                                                                                                                      |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 62(2/16/04 11:19 am)Reply                                                                                                                                                                            | Re: ... <hr/> Why does a possibility that God strives for attention scare people? As has been shown by many years of suffering. Is there a reason the world is the way it is? Or do people choose not to conform(much like I have chosen to do with society as an individual) Where is possibility when God is seen as an original creator of sin? |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 63(2/16/04 11:26 am)Reply                                                                                                                                                                            | Re: ... <hr/> I have chosen faith as a way of putting my complete trust in God, I have never experienced nature as it truly may be. But until I conform into society maybe I will never grow up. Everything is eternal is all the faith I need. Until these facts are proven against me. :P                                                        |
| Canadian Zoetrope Registered UserPosts: 27(2/16/04 4:21 pm)Reply  | self. <hr/> The self... is.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |

XXX STATIC X
Registered User
Posts: 72
(2/16/04 4:57 pm)
Reply

Re: self.

---

Who is seen as geniuses in our world? Pride or fate. Power or word. Trust all you may see. trust us and we will find a common ground. Trust fate, is that a sin? Now who is trusted amongst the world today? "Where" is your God? What is seen as bad "Form"? Doubt in a perfect vision or doubt in self? Flow like a river, flow with time. What is visioned(seen)? Does the world accept choice? Does the universe live God's way or does this planet not choose trust? Memories flow with time. I choose to accept a better world, but society chooses to cast aside each other. Last question before I hit the hay. What is real? I choose to love being. Where is love now? Or, is fear of love a choice? Can evil in all its Form choose love? Hera help us! Maybe choice can rest in the hands of the ONE, GOD! Does God love me? Ask yourself. Flow with the eternal one, accept his choices. Or accept hate towards it. I have chosen to live with it. Live amongst possibility or live with death.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2307
(2/17/04 9:37 pm)
Reply

Re: self.

---

I live amongst possibility xstatic.

We speak entirely different languages. 'Evil' can't choose anything. There is no such thing.

Canadian Zoetrope 🖐
Registered User
Posts: 28
(2/18/04 3:37 am)
Reply

Real.

---

You ask:

Quote:

---

What is real?

---

To which I reply, point to that which is un real, and I shall point to that which is.

Edited by: Canadian Zoetrope 🖐 at: 2/18/04 1:23 pm

peter
Registered User
Posts: 2
(2/24/04 5:09 am)
Reply

self

---

Maybe the 'self' arises in a mind that sees itself as separated from others. That more or less includes everyone!

I don't mean that we are not separate in a physical sense, we are of course. What I mean is, the more a person lives for his/her own 'self interest' the stronger that self will be. Extreme competitiveness, inability to empathise with others, alienation, seem connected with the strong self.

The self seems a conditioned notion rather than a real entity. That of course doesn't mean that it doesn't have an effect on the mind and person. All conditioning does.

I wonder if we can we physically aware, alert to our identity, etc, yet not forever separating ourselves as superior, better, winner, more this more that than others? I really think the more self-centred we are the more we suffer from inner conflicts.

Anyway,just a contribution to your post, not a heavy conclusive view.

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 404
(2/24/04 11:53 am)
Reply

Re: self

---

Quote:

---

peter: I really think the more self-centred we are the more we suffer from inner conflicts.

---

I agree with the qualification that until we suffer through these inner conflicts and resolve them, non-self-centeredness is not really possible. Most "unselfish" behavior is just diversionary self-centeredness, self-centered behavior that only looks like it's not self-centered.

(Welcome to the forum)

peter
Posts: 3
(2/25/04 4:31 am)
Reply

self

---

Quote

---

MGregory: Most "unselfish" behavior is just diversionary self-centeredness, self-centered behavior that only looks like it's not self-centered.

---

Yes, I agree. Like the person in the bible who loudly clanked his large silver donation into the collection bowl, we like to be noticed as being generous and "unselfish". And indeed we like to think of ourselves as "unselfish". When we do this we are acting selfishly! Real unselfishness is not aware of itself, but is offered out of love or concern for others, don't you think?

Thanks for your welcome to the forum.

Weluvducsoha
Registered User
Posts: 4
(2/25/04 10:27 am)
Reply

Biological explanation

---

Let's be annoying and define self as thus:
that which acts, thinks, moves, and in any other way influences the external world.

The definition, of course, by defining self in terms of interaction with that which is not self implies a few things. First, self cannot be alone for if it is alone, it is incapable of action and is therefore meaningless.

Second, self appears to have a body, although this need not be so, nor need we define body as the corporal sort. Third, it allows for more than one self to be observed in a given universe or field of thought. We may observe 'self' by its actions.

This definition, of course, is also very much in tune with the newtonian description of the universe wherein any human or thinking machine, or anything else, is defined as a set of particles acting under certain rules. Self, then, is one's physical body. It seems quite reasonable, after all, given that our observation is limited to such. I may imagine the mind, but that imagining may be perfectly described as a set of neural impulses traveling across a physical brain.

MGregory

Registered User

Posts: 414

(2/25/04 12:45 pm)

Reply

Re: self

---

Quote:

---

peter: Real unselfishness is not aware of itself, but is offered out of love or concern for others, don't you think?

---

I don't know, it sounds kinda fishy to me. Let me try to break this down. What would it take for unselfishness to become unaware of itself? We would either have to be unaware of others, unaware of what we are doing, or unaware of the effects of what we are doing.

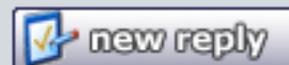

If something, an action or whatever, is offered out of love or concern for others, then obviously we need to be aware of the others in the first place, otherwise there would be no love or concern for them. So it seems we need to be aware of others.

If we are unaware of what we are doing, then we can't possibly be aware of the effects of what we are doing, so those last two amount to the same thing: the effects of what we are doing. Every action we take is done for the effects of the action anyway, so I guess it was silly to even bring it up.

That leaves us with being unaware of the effects of what we are doing. But if we are unaware of the effects of what we are doing, then we won't know if what we are doing is beneficial to others, which is a necessity, I would think.

So, I don't think a lack of awareness is a good idea. Or am I forgetting something?

|                                                                                                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 415(2/25/04 12:51 pm)Reply                                                                                     | Re: Biological explanation <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Weluvducsoha: Let's be annoying and define self as thus: . . . <hr/> Welcome to the forum, Weluvducsoha. I feel compelled to reply to this, but I don't think I can handle another conversation, so I'm going to have to leave it. |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 993(2/25/04 9:31 pm)Reply  | Re: Biological explanation <hr/> There are two kinds of selfishness, the right kind and the wrong kind.                                                                                                                                                                                               |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2417(2/25/04 10:05 pm)Reply   | Re: Biological explanation <hr/> No, there are many kinds of selfishness.                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

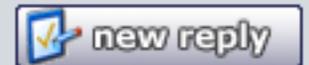

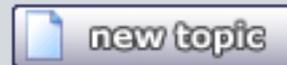

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> What is the self?

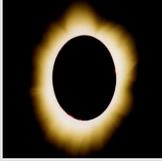

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                   | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 995(2/25/04 10:22 pm)Reply  | Re: Biological explanation <hr/> Yes, and those many kinds fit into 2 broad categories, or kinds. You will notice that I didn't say that there are only 2 kinds of selfishness. If I said that there are 2 kinds of human being, male and female, there wouldn't be much utility in pointing out that there are in fact many kinds of human being, nor would it change the point being made, nor would it contradict the point being made. It's just arguing for the sake of it. How about actually addressing the point, that being that there are 2 broad categories of selfishness, the right kind and the wrong kind, which is an assertion in contrast to the negative connotations usually attached to selfishness. |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2418(2/25/04 10:39 pm)Reply    | Re: Biological explanation <hr/> Still no, for although you didn't say only, you would still need to prove there is a definitive singular 'wrong' selfishness, and a singular 'right' selfishness, the perfect human examples, selves, of each, in existence, to realize the categories in anything short of infinity by degrees. God and the Devil Dave? It's already been attempted.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2419
(2/25/04 10:46 pm)
Reply

Re: Biological explanation

---

The selfishness that craves from its essence beyond itself and yet pleases more than any other with itself alone is the highest kind. (No offence to address a self as a selfishness, but in essence remember, in essence!!)

How could it be wrong or right, to itself, as best?

If you can't conceive, how can you possibly compose?!

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 996
(2/25/04 11:34 pm)
Reply

Re: Biological explanation

---

Be that as it may, for it is and isn't, there is more, for in it's essence, it is only, and oily, the self is ended, portended, by that which is mended, the stary sky, the mind's eye, is but an ishness, of the whole story.

Bring it through, make it good, hammer it's head, put it to bed. For seeking see leeking, the big old bad egg, is but a blow-torch suspended in brine, with a swine, controlling it's yaw, and directing the ice, towards a squirrel, hovering over a plate of cogs and wheels, the squirrel reels.

Bring it good, bring it bad, make it squirrel and peel, back to reveal.

That's cleared that one up then.

peter
Posts: 4
(2/25/04 11:47 pm)
Reply

self

---

Quote:

-----
If something, an action or whatever, is offered out of love or concern for others, then obviously we need to be aware of the others in the first place, otherwise there would be no love or concern for them. So it seems we need to be aware of others. MGovern
-----

Of course we need to be aware of others. If we're not aware of others we wouldn't feel love or concern. My main point, M., is we should not be aware of our selves as "kind", "unselfish" etc. If we are, we are not, so much, acting from love or unselfishness as from an image of ourselves, wouldn't you say?

I'm not saying that we can't, whilst acting from such a self-flattering image, give to charity or mimic any unalloyed act of kindness or love. But I doubt it would be truly "offered out of love or kindness" but out of a concern to appear so. Somewhat like clanking money into the collection box arises not from generosity but from a desire to impress others with the appearance of generosity.

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 424
(2/26/04 12:51 am)
Reply

Re: self

---

Quote:

---

peter: Of course we need to be aware of others. If we're not aware of others we wouldn't feel love or concern. My main point, M., is we should not be aware of our selves as "kind", "unselfish" etc. If we are, we are not, so much, acting from love or unselfishness as from an image of ourselves, wouldn't you say?

---

Well, how can we become unaware of ourselves? It seems to me that we would either have to be unaware of what we are doing, or unaware of the benefits of what we are doing for others. How else could we become unaware of ourselves as "kind", "unselfish", etc.?

On the other hand, if we are aware that we are doing something that is beneficial to others, then it seems dishonest to me to deny that we are being kind and unselfish to others. We would be lying to ourselves, and I don't see how we can be honest with others if we get into the habit of lying to ourselves.

silentsal
Registered User
Posts: 68
(2/26/04 1:24 am)
Reply

Re: self

---

in my view brotherly love springs from love of self isn't this one of the misconceptions (we must be unselfish) that society is caught up in, we must stamp out selfishness, yet here we are in a world where selfishness is rampant.

can we accept that we are selfish and work from there? I am selfish, I have my own self interest at heart, all action arises from that motivation is that so terrible?

That sometimes my self-interest is beneficial to many is a nice effect but my motivation has never waivered.

Edited by: silentsal at: 2/26/04 1:29 am

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1486
(2/26/04 4:01 am)
Reply

Re: self

---

It is impossible to not be selfish (regardless of the pleadings of my poor, poor mother).

"Why do you never call, Tharan?"

"I just did. And I do call, just not as often as you like."

"You are so selfish sometimes."

"I disagree. I am selfish all the time, as are you."

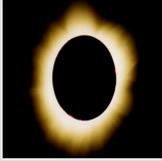

"Don't be rude."

"Ok"

...and so on...

Tharan

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2421
(2/26/04 9:24 am)
Reply

Re: self

---

Quote:

---

the big old bad egg, is but a blow-torch suspended in brine, with a swine, controlling it's yaw, and directing the ice, towards a squirrel

---

It is a marvel how the swine controls the yaw and directs the ice at the same time.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 998
(2/26/04 9:56 am)
Reply

Re: self

---

Can't you read?

Pigs can only DJ. The squirrel is the dancer.

Bend, comprehend, and mend.

peter
Posts: 5
(2/27/04 6:21 am)
Reply

the self

---

Quote:

---

If something, an action or whatever, is offered out of love or concern for others, then obviously we need to be aware of the others in the first place, otherwise there would be no love or concern for them. So it seems we need to be aware of others. MGregory

---

MGregory, I did reply to the above a few days ago. But it seems not to have entered the board. Probably did something clumsy.

Anyway, with regards to your above words I would say of course full awareness is required. We must be aware of the others, as you say. What I was trying to say, and no doubt badly, was that, if the giver does so entirely from seeing a need or out of love or concern, this is a unselfish act. If on the other hand, his action is prompted by the desire to be seen as loving or concerned, it may be a selfish action. Selfish in the sense that the motivation is to appear to be [i generous and lovi

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 426
(2/27/04 2:57 pm)
Reply

Re: the self

---

Peter, perhaps you didn't notice it went onto a new page?

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 427
(2/27/04 3:07 pm)
Reply

Re: self

---

Quote:

---

silentsal: in my view brotherly love springs from love of self isn't this one of the misconceptions (we must be unselfish) that society is caught up in, we must stamp out selfishness, yet here we are in a world where selfishness is rampant.

can we accept that we are selfish and work from there? I am selfish, I have my own self interest at heart, all action arises from that motivation is that so terrible?

That sometimes my self-interest is beneficial to many is a nice effect but my motivation has never waived.

---

Quote:

---

Tharan: It is impossible to not be selfish

---

I wonder how it can be proven that everyone acts from their own self-interest. Say we have a man, a devout Christian, highly respected in town, everyone knows him and loves him and vice versa. Whenever someone in town gets sick, he goes to the person's house with a get-well card and visits with them for awhile, asks them if they need anything and that type of thing. Could such a man be considered acting selfishly?

|                                                                                    |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2443(2/27/04 3:10 pm)Reply | --- <hr/> Matt, unless one has a 'self', it is impossible to 'act' in the first place!                                                                                                                                                                       |
| RairunRegistered UserPosts: 204(2/27/04 3:20 pm)Reply   | ... <hr/> Yeah, Zag is right. He's selfish in the sense that he is simply being himself by doing what you consider selfless. If he did something else, he wouldn't be himself; he would be something else, and that "something else" would simply be itself. |
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 428(2/27/04 3:51 pm)Reply | Re: ... <hr/> Well, presumably "selfish" has a different meaning than "acting using one's self". That would be totally redundant since the word "acting" already implies that something or someone is doing the acting.                                      |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2445(2/27/04 4:04 pm)Reply | --- <hr/> It can mean all kinds of things, but it won't change the fact that there's no selfless act.                                                                                                                                                        |
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 431(2/28/04 1:30 am)Reply | Re: --- <hr/> I'm not interested in changing that fact, Zag. Feel free to wake up anytime.                                                                                                                                                                   |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2449(2/28/04 2:00 pm)Reply | ---- <hr/> What point were you trying to make then?!                                                                                                                                                                                                         |

MGregory
Posts: 434
(2/28/04 2:19 pm)
Reply

Re: ----

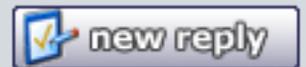

---

I want to know if anyone has any specific reason to think that a person cannot act selflessly. But by "selfless" I don't mean "without a self" because, as you point out, that would be absurd. By "selfless" I mean "acting with others' or another's interests in mind over one's own".

I'm not taking any stance on this issue until I hear what people have to say about it because I was thinking about this and I realized that I can't really think of any reason why it would be impossible.

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

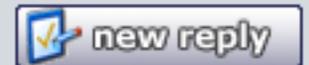

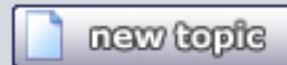

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> What is time?

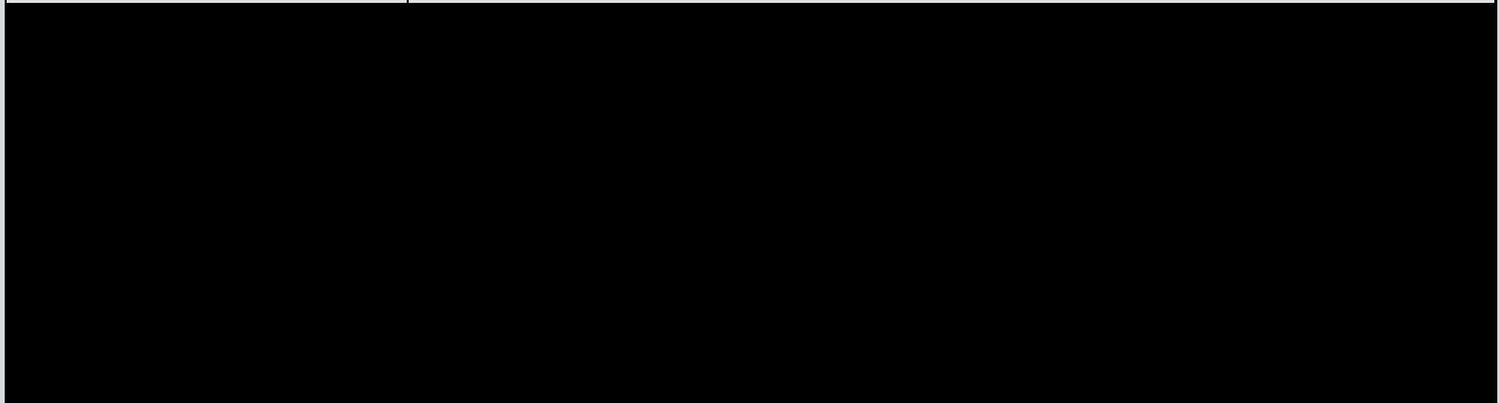

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                         | Comment                                                                                                                                                                           |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| agnostic2atheistRegistered UserPosts: 2(10/5/02 11:36 pm)Reply | What is time?<hr/> I am avery ignorant person. could everyone with your combined infinite reason please explain it me.P.S- In simple terms for my simple mind please. |
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 842(10/6/02 12:00 am)Reply             | Time<hr/> The measurement of rate of change.Dan Rowden                                                                                                                |
| agnostic2atheistRegistered UserPosts: 3(10/6/02 12:07 am)Reply | RE: Time<hr/> Rate of change of what? since the universe began there has been a rate of change of what?is time tangible?                                                  |

|                                                                                                                                                                |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 844(10/6/02 12:27 am)Reply  | Re: RE: Time <hr/> Change of anything. It all depends. There's no "constant" other than change. Try and visualise this and tell me what you think: a single planet; a binary star system; said planet is suspended between the two stars due to gravitational forces; there's no night and day, no "years", and to make things worse the habitat is utterly barren. Now, let's say beings like us live there, in some fashion - what would their sense of time be and how would they measure it? Dan Rowden |
| agnostic2atheistRegistered UserPosts: 4(10/6/02 12:32 am)Reply                                                                      | . <hr/> your point is therefore proven. congrats. i warned of my total ignorance of everything (due to below average I.Q.).                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| xerosaburuRegistered UserPosts: 117(10/6/02 6:33 am)Reply                                                                           | Time <hr/> Time: Events divided by speed(speed measured by distance covered). All things are moving. An experiment with atomic clocks aboard jets crossing the globe found that the as the speed of the plane increased (or the distance covered increased) the clocks on the plane slowed with respect to the clocks on the ground. A link to a page on time dilation http://www.btinternet.com/~j.doyle/SR/sr4/sr4.htm                    |

Contemptus Congregatio

Registered User

Posts: 11

(10/10/02 3:48 am)

Reply

Re: Time

---

Don't compare a low IQ to lack of knowledge.

Also, you are not truly ignorant if you look to overcome your ignorance.

I'm sure the people in that theoretical world would measure time exactly like we do, just using different measurements. Based on what, I don't know, but they would have a common event that is measurable and repeatable within a certain degree of accuracy.

Here is an interesting homework assignment for one of the 'initiated', try and explain the concept of time dilation to someone who has no prior knowledge of the subject.

The look on someone's face when they grasp a difficult and foreign concept is the true joy of teaching.

B0ndi

Registered User

Posts: 230

(10/10/02 6:42 pm)

Reply

Re: What is time?

---

It's 10:45 a.m. CET.

Aah, the question is "What is time?", not "What is the time?"! Sorry.

;)

Vorpall

Registered User

Posts: 5

(10/15/02 2:47 am)

Reply

Re: What is time?

---

is there time in a complete vacuum?

I always went for the "my perception of change" line. The less I change the faster I seem to perceive time, ie. while sleeping. The more I change the slower it seems to go, ie. while learning. I close my eyes, fall asleep, and BAM! it's hours later. I sit down and have a debate with someone over something and it lasts for ages.

Contemptus Congregatio

Registered User

Posts: 20

(10/16/02 1:31 am)

Reply

Re: What is time?

---

There was a study done on people of all ages on the perception of time, and it was found that young people thought time was going by much faster than old people did.

Edit: I'm a moron and switched the facts around

Edited by: Contemptus Congregatio at: 10/19/02 1:48:59 am

Leyla R

Registered User

Posts: 173

(10/16/02 1:48 am)

Reply

Re: What is time?

---

I haven't looked at the links posted on this thread but, for me, time appears to go faster directly in proportion with action that results in change.

Took me ages to get from 15 to 20, but I got from 21 to 37 overnight!

 JoshuaStone

Registered User

Posts: 5

(10/19/02 4:44 am)

Reply

ezSupporter

The Relativity of "Time"

---

Time is a 'real' illusion that can often vary in accordance with many factors. On planet Earth mankind has the pompous and conceited nerve to measure the entire universe by their concept of time. That concept is determined by how long it takes for their planet to revolve. A "day" on Earth is not the same as a "day" on the planet Jupiter. I remember astronauts show signs that time is different when you are in outer space.

So time is a concept that mankind usually uses to keep people enslaved to the human clock. Time is relative and can be perceived to pass much differently for different people. Time can pass slowly for the child eager to leave school for the day and who is constantly watching the clock. Time can pass quickly for the person who is laughing and having fun.

Time and love can be similar. What is "love?" What is "time?" There are many answers. Wouldn't be too surprised to eventually find that all the best answers are true and correct in one way or another.

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 17
(10/19/02 11:18 am)
Reply

Re: The Relativity of "Time"

---

time is simply the function of 'nature' that allows change to occur.

It is irrelevant how it is perceived.

When/if humans discover how to manipulate time then we will be gods.

 JoshuaStone
Registered User
Posts: 6
(10/19/02 11:58 am)
Reply
ezSupporter

It is "simply" this or that

---

The scholastically brainwashed pompous are always ready to brainwash others into a "simple" belief in the nature of reality. If what we call "reality" is determined by the extent to which our senses are developed then there most probably is nothing whatsoever simple about it. To say there is no God and all that exists is the byproduct of 'simple' evolution and random chance occurrences implies that the person making the statement understands all the mysteries of the universe that go into the making of a single blade of grass.

DO YOU FULLY UNDERSTAND ALL THE MYSTERIES THAT GO INTO THE MAKING OF A SINGLE BLADE OF GROWING GRASS?

If you do not then I feel you should not be too eager to place your 'time is simply' this or 'there is no God. It is simply' that on any of this unfathomable mystery that is known as 'creation'.

I was amused by a special PBS program that had created segments on the life of Charles Darwin. The scenery, costumes and acting were very well done. As they would shift back to modern times they would explain how the theories of Darwin apply to our modern understanding of 'the evolution of life on Earth'. They would speak of creation in the same basic way religious believers do except they would substitute the words 'evolution' 'random chance' and other such phrases wherever religious people would use the word 'God'.

Here is how this silly atheistic observation basically goes:

'There were many creatures in the jungles of Africa millions of years ago. One of those creatures thought (without thinking) that it would be nice to have a long neck so that it could eat the vegetation at the tops of trees. So with no conscious or subconscious effort or knowledge on its part it ‘just so happened’ to “evolve” a long neck and is now known as a “giraffe.” Why didn’t many other herbivores in the African jungle “evolve” long necks? Because without thinking they just never thought about it.’

‘There is no God! Atoms and molecules just so happened to “evolve” over millions of years and just so happened to produce Leonardo DaVinci, Mozart and the other great geniuses of human history. There is nothing supernatural about it! It is all a matter of simple random chance occurrences!’

I say there are indeed greater things in Heaven and Earth than are even dreamt of in all the combined philosophies of the human race since it first began to record its history in writing. Take care before you place the label of “simple” on the concept of time or any other aspect of creation. The entire universe may very well be laughing at you behind your back and right in your face as you do so.

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 18

(10/19/02 1:16 pm)

Reply

Re: What is time?

---

The scholastically brainwashed pompous are always ready to brainwash others into a “simple” belief in the nature of reality.

If what we call “reality” is determined by the extent to which our senses are developed then there most probably is nothing whatsoever simple about it. To say there is no God and all that exists is the byproduct of ‘simple’ evolution and random chance occurrences implies that the person making the statement understands all the mysteries of the universe that go into the making of a single blade of grass.

While being pompous, I can guarantee am not scholastically brainwashed. (however, at the same time I can guarantee I am ignorant as everyone is :)

Everything I have ever seen is ultimately simple in that it only consists of combinations of two agents - cause and effect. I do not believe that chaos (or random chances) exist. Give me an example Of a random event?

I fail to see why it is necessary to be concerned about matters of god. I for one do not say there is no god, but I do say that there is no relevance in the concept of god for me in this lifetime. To me god can only be everything and again that by definition makes it irrelevant. It is something the human brain cannot encompass, not because the individual causes and effects cannot be understood, but because the number of causes and effect are 'simply' to large to fit into a brain.

Point taken though, as when I said When/if humans discover how to manipulate time then we will be gods, I was using a very limited definition of god, really just one that would allow us to become less finite. I doubt it will be ever possible for humans to have any significant power over time, although they may be able to manipulate its speed for a specific entity or purpose such as space travel.

JoshuaStone

Registered User

Posts: 7

(10/20/02 12:12 am)

Reply

ezSupporter

It's time to post...that's what is time it is

---

It can be so very funny to encounter those who have been educated by the American system that will swear to your face they are not brainwashed. The fact of the matter is that all children are brainwashed by the societies they are brought up in. Brainwashing is inescapable if a child is to be a successful part of any human social community.

The reality we take for granted can indeed 'appear' simple, but chances are we are only seeing a fraction of the reality that is actually going on around us every single moment of our existences. Chances are there are infinite mysteries that go into every single little thing that makes for the reality we perceive. In a world filled with so many bacteria I sometimes find it miraculous that all humans are not completely overcome and eaten away.

For the atheists there are no miraculous wonders in creation. To me everything, and I mean ((( ( EVERYTHING ))) is equally miraculous. No one miraculous wonder is any more impossible than any other miraculous wonder.

Every ocean wave, raindrop and snowflake are absolutely perfect. As a matter of fact, creating a situation that 'appears' to be imperfect is an unfathomable miracle in itself!

I don't blame anyone for not believing in God. If it were not for my two near-death experiences I would not believe in God either. So how the hell am I supposed to “witness” in favor of the reality of the Living Jesus Christ? If someone asks me what they need to do to truly know God intimately I can only say, ‘die, be brought back to life by the mercy of God through His Son Jesus Christ and you will indeed have a deep and abiding relationship with the God of Creation’.

Somehow I don’t think my version of witnessing will ever become very commercially popular. Can you just imagine me televangelizing:

"Dearly beloved brethren,

We are taking donations in order to kill people and bring them back to life in the name of the Living God and His Son Jesus Christ. Send your donations to:

Dead and Back Again
P.O. Box 000000
Whathehell Flatline, OH !!!!!!!

Bless you all and we intend to kill you next. Ain’t life wunderfull!"

PUHLEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEZZZZZEEEEEE!!!!!!

ilikebeingdifferent
Registered User
Posts: 42
(10/20/02 7:00 am)
Reply

time...

---

time isnt tangible...its just mans analysis of it...it is just what naturally goes on...it forces our minds and emotions to respond...welcome to mankind...possibly

jimhaz

Registered User

Posts: 24

(10/20/02 12:57 pm)

Reply

Joshua Tree

---

[from dictionary...Probably after Joshua1 from the resemblance of the tree's greatly extended branches to Joshua's outstretched arm as he pointed with his spear to the city of Ai (Joshua 8:18).]

It can be so very funny to encounter those who have been educated by the American system that will swear to your face they are not brainwashed. The fact of the matter is that all children are brainwashed by the societies they are brought up in. Brainwashing is inescapable if a child is to be a successful part of any human social community.

For the record I am an Australian, but there is little difference in terms of the effect that capitalism anywhere brainwashes people. I desire more material things than I need and thus have been "indoctrinated forcibly" by my contact within my society. In particular my need for constant external entertainment is definitely a form of brainwashing.

At the same time I feel I am able to at least partially get over that otherwise I wouldn't be bothered posting here on this site where dangerous thinkers congregate :). At least it shows an interest in not being brainwashed. I'm not ambitious or wealthy as I am lazy. I think I became lazy because I have no desire to work for the materialistic or the power/societal acceptance desires of my bosses and their bosses.

For the atheists there are no miraculous wonders in creation. To me everything, and I mean ((( EVERYTHING ))) is equally miraculous. No one miraculous wonder is any more impossible than any other miraculous wonder.

Every ocean wave, raindrop and snowflake are absolutely perfect. As a matter of fact, creating a situation that 'appears' to be imperfect is an unfathomable miracle in itself!

While everything may be perfect in the sense that it is what it is, everything is not perfect for the survival of the human race. Nuclear weapons, pollution, hatred, ignorance cannot be considered perfect unless you desire Armageddon.

The fact that you associate everything with a Jesus type god means you are delusional, by equating everything to your god, all you are doing is finding a form of mental joy by the feeling that you get by putting everything you see into a (delusional) context. Confusion is irritating to the brain, you immediately can negate this by this association. With two near death experiences your brain has possibly been partially damaged, perhaps by a lack of oxygen, and it became confused and disorganised, and is now childlike where you believe everything the parent god in your brain tells you to. It gives you your set of values so you don't have to work them out for yourself. I wouldn't be surprised if your near death experiences were related to a direct or indirect (perhaps via partaking in dangerous activities) desire for suicide.

At least your beliefs have allowed you to take yourself less seriously and made you more content. The Christian values also have much merit. There is benefit in that for you, but not for me.

laekw0n
Registered User
Posts: 7
(12/10/02 1:51 am)
Reply

Re: Joshua Tree

---

time to us is the rate of change but that is relative to the earth we live on i think time is some thing that humans try to label and put a unit or a form of measurement to it but really it is too complex for our feeble minds to understand time is part of a much bigger thing out there

Eilis Fayeth
Registered User
Posts: 1
(12/10/02 4:09 am)
Reply

Re: Joshua Tree

---

New here.. to me time is a pattern humanity came up with to measure their lives.. whether it has true meaning? Who can say.. Night and day, the seasons, they all help creatures function in a 'normal' way.

-- Eilis

errare est humanum
Registered User
Posts: 1
(12/10/02 6:37 am)
Reply

Re: What is time?

A nonspatial continuum in which events occur in apparently irreversible succession from the past through the present to the future.

An interval separating two points on this continuum; a duration

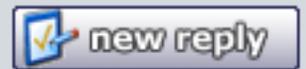

A number, as of years, days, or minutes, representing such an interval

A similar number representing a specific point on this continuum, reckoned in hours and minutes

A system by which such intervals are measured or such numbers are reckoned

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31r
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> What is time?

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                 | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| G ShantzRegistered UserPosts: 127(12/10/02 6:46 am)Reply  | Re: What is time? <hr/> Here's something I came up with: First premise: Only concepts exist. Second Premise: Change is a concept. Third Premise: Concepts do not inherently exist. First Conclusion: Change does not exist. Second conclusion: Reality is static. What do you think? Gregory Shantz edit Clarification Edited by: G Shantz at: 12/10/02 9:49:48 am |

|                                                                                                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| errare est humanumRegistered UserPosts: 3(12/10/02 7:03 am)Reply                                                                             | Re: reality is static <hr/> change is not a thing ergo it is not a concept but a concept of the concept in question therefore it exists outside the original concept                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 105(12/10/02 3:54 pm)Reply                                                                                     | Re: reality is static <hr/> Change is a thing. A thing is a differentiation between itself and whatever is not itself. Since change can be contrasted against stasis (i.e. non-change), it is a thing. Existence is relative.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 535(8/21/03 11:27 am)Reply  | Re: Blast from the past. <hr/> Been digging. Quote: <hr/> Greg: Here's something I came up with: First premise: Only concepts exist. Second Premise: Change is a concept. Third Premise: Concepts do not inherently exist. First Conclusion: Change does not exist. Second conclusion: Reality is static. What do you think? <hr/> Faulty premise construction. False first conclusion (based on premises), leading to false second conclusion. Sorry Greg, it's only coz your post is the only one of interest in the first topic I looked at by random. |

G Shantz
Registered User
Posts: 371
(8/24/03 9:25 am)
Reply

Re: Blast from the past.

---

Looking at this now, I would amend the first conclusion to 'time does not ultimately exist.' Time certainly exists, because it is perceived, but it doesn't have a real, inherent existence.

Greg

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 543
(8/25/03 1:52 am)
Reply

Re: Blast from the past.

---

I'm not sure about your use of the word 'exist'.

Perhaps you should re-formulate your premises?

For instance, premise 1 refers to only concepts existing (and of course, existing is a concept itself), but later you speak of real inherent existence.

What exactly is it to exist?

If existence is but a concept, does that mean there is no reality behind what it attempts to grasp at in its definition?

G Shantz
Registered User
Posts: 373
(8/25/03 8:39 am)
Reply

Existence

---

Quote:

---

I'm not sure about your use of the word 'exist'.

---

Something exists when it is perceivable.

Quote:

---

Perhaps you should re-formulate your premises?

---

Make it into some formal argument? It was just a way of presenting some thoughts.

Quote:

---

For instance, premise 1 refers to only concepts existing (and of course, existing is a concept itself),

---

Is it? Or is it an inescapable fact of consciousness?

Quote:

---

but later you speak of real inherent existence.

---

It's a concept only. Nothing has inherent existence.

Quote:

---

What exactly is it to exist?

---

To perceive. To experience. Perceptions and experiences are existence.

Quote:

---

If existence is but a concept, does that mean there is no reality behind what it attempts to grasp at in its definition?

---

I'm not sure. It would seem that there is a reality that the concepts are created by, but I don't know whether we can be certain about that. All we can be certain of is the reality of our concepts.

Greg

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 547
(8/25/03 11:27 am)
Reply

Re: Existence

---

Quote:

---

DT: I'm not sure about your use of the word 'exist'.

Greg: Something exists when it is percieveable.

DT: What exactly is it to exist?

Greg: To percieve. To experience. Perceptions and experiences are existence.

---

How so?

Take dark matter for example, does it exist?

We have a designation for it, we have a conception of it. It seems to be a logical derivation based on empirical evidence, yet there is no empirical evidence of it itself. That much we perceive of it, so does it exist based on that perception, regardless of it's present empirical non-accessability?

If it does now exist based on the perception above, did it exist before it was derived and therefore perceived?

If to exist is to have being, and to be is to have an objective reality, and something real is something that is neither derivative nor dependent but necessarily true, and to be true is to be in accordance with the actual state of affairs; where does the perception become a necessity to existence?

Quote:

---

DT: and of course, existing is a concept itself

Greg: Is it? Or is it an inescapable fact of consciousness?

---

Both, existence is indeed an inescapable fact of consciousness in that if consciousness is actual, it therefore necessitates existence (this does not necessitate existence's contingency upon it). But if a conception is the process of forming or understanding ideas, then the idea of existence (which is the only 'exist' we can know) is itself a concept.

Quote:

---

DT: For instance, premise 1 refers to only concepts existing, but later you speak of real inherent existence.

Greg: It's a concept only. Nothing has inherent existence.

---

Why does something have to have an inherent existence to be real (or to reflect the actual state of affairs)?

And therefore, why does change (percieved as time) have to have an inherent existence to reflect the actual state of affairs?

Quote:

---

DT: If existence is but a concept, does that mean there is no reality behind what it attempts to grasp at in it's definition?

Greg: I'm not sure. It would seem that there is a reality that the concepts are created by, but I don't know whether we can be certain about that. All we can be certain of is the reality of our concepts.

---

Agreed that it is something we cannot be certain of, and that all we can be certain of is the reality of our concepts.

Locked in our cages of certainty being exclusive to the reality of our concepts, do we therefore necessarily insist that, because we cannot be certain of our conception of something reflecting the actual state of affairs, our conceptions cannot be real?

Or can we only say that we cannot be sure that they are real?

Therefore, as opposed to saying that time is not real, can we actually only say that we cannot be sure that time is real?

G Shantz
Registered User
Posts: 374
(8/26/03 7:25 am)
Reply

existence

---

Quote:

---

DT: I'm not sure about your use of the word 'exist'.

Greg: Something exists when it is percievable.

DT: What exactly is it to exist?

Greg: To percieve. To experience. Perceptions and experiences are existence.

DT: How so?

Take dark matter for example, does it exist?

We have a designation for it, we have a conception of it. It seems to be a logical derivation based on empirical evidence, yet there is no empirical evidence of it itself. That much we perceive of it, so does it exist based on that perception, regardless of it's present empirical non-accessability?

If it does now exist based on the perception above, did it exist before it was derived and therefore perceived?

---

See below.

Quote:

---

DT:If to exist is to have being,

---

Okay.

Quote:

---

and to be is to have an objective reality,

---

Um.

Quote:

---

and something real is something that is neither derivative nor dependent but necessarily true

---

I don't know what you mean by this.

Quote:

---

and to be true is to be in accordance with the actual state of affairs;

---

All right.

Quote:

---

where does the perception become a necessity to existence?

---

Right there.

I'm not trying to be clever or obscure, but I think what you're asking is when does a thing come into existence - when it is perceived, or before that. If we are not aware of the thing before it appears to us through our senses and is perceived, anything about its existence 'before' then is a construct projected onto it. The construct projected onto it in this case is time, which is a separate 'thing.' Time and the thing perceived (dark matter, or whatever) are both different 'things.' If we speak of 'before perception' we are combining two things (dark matter, time) into a new, different, third thing (the state of the dark matter before it's perception).

Actually, since the perception of the dark matter and the perception of the dark matter before it was perceived both take place while time is moving forward, we are really only dealing with two things. The concept of time arises when we become aware that we have been aware of something before the thing we are presently aware of, which is in turn a third, new thing.

Am I making any sense? I'm not trying to be confusing, I'm just trying to express this in language as best I can.

Quote:

---

DT: and of course, existing is a concept itself

Greg: Is it? Or is it an inescapable fact of consciousness

Both, existence is indeed an inescapable fact of consciousness in that if consciousness is actual, it therefore necessitates existence (this does not necessitate existence's contingency upon it). But if a conception is the process of forming or understanding ideas, then the idea of existence (which is the only 'exist' we can know) is itself a concept.

Quote:

---

DT: For instance, premise 1 refers to only concepts existing, but later you speak of real inherent existence.

Greg: It's a concept only. Nothing has inherent existence.

DT: Why does something have to have an inherent existence to be real (or to reflect the actual state of a

---

Because it wouldn't be real if it didn't have an inherent existence.

Quote:

---

And therefore, why does change (percieved as time) have to have an inherent existence to reflect the actual state of affairs?

---

'The actual state of affairs' is whatever you percieve the affairs to be. The acutal state of affairs, in the ultimate sense, is the realization of emptiness. This is realized when all concepts are realized to lack inherent existence.

Quote:

---

DT: If existence is but a concept, does that mean there is no reality behind what it attempts to grasp at in it's definition?

Greg: I'm not sure. It would seem that there is a reality that the concepts are created by, but I don't know whether we can be certain about that. All we can be certain of is the reality of our concepts.

DT: Agreed that it is something we cannot be certain of, and that all we can be certain of is the reality of our concepts.

---

I should have put 'reality' in quotation marks, above. And we can only be certain of the 'reality' of our concepts if we are certain that we are reasoning prperly, someting we can only know if we are reasoning properly.

Quote:

---

Locked in our cages of certainty being exclusive to the reality of our concepts, do we therefore necessarily insist that, because we cannot be certain of our conception of something reflecting the actual state of affairs, our conceptions cannot be real?

---

Our conceptions are 'real' in the sense that we experience them and use them to navigate through the world, but they are not real in an ultimate sense.

Or can we only say that we cannot be sure that they are real? Our conception is the actual state of affairs, to the best of our knowledge, but also depending on how rational we are.

Quote:

---

Therefore, as opposed to saying that time is not real, can we actually only say that we cannot be sure that time is real?

---

Time is what it is.

Greg

rushdl
Registered User
Posts: 1
(9/3/03 9:48 pm)
Reply

What is time?

---

Time is man made.
The reality is that now is all that we have.
The moment in the present is all that exists.

rushdl

Registered User

Posts: 8

(9/24/03 3:09 am)

Reply

??

---

Brainwashing could also be defined as "Culture", perhaps.

Also, I just started having trouble using the word Empirical in these discussions. I do not see the word Perceive in it's definition, only measure and observation. We measure time with our own perceived yardstick, relative to our own solar system. Maybe some people measure and observe God through the existance of life, death and rebirth. As fall becomes winter, and winter becomes spring. As a fly may live for a week, a hamper for 3 years, a dog for 20, I believe Empirically that our longevity may be related to our "Percieved" scale of the Universe.

Anyone want to bet on the lifespan of an Alien?

By Shantz's definition of existance, God and Time exist because they are percieved.

I believe in God, but do not think I'm delusional. I looked into many religions, and only found better questions for my time. The person who defines God must be delusional, as it is impossible to know, this non-Empirical value. The Hindu believe they have the answer. So do the Jews (Oh god, another Jews are the chosen ones bunch of shit), the Christians think along another line.

God-Empirical or Not?

Edited by: rushdl  at: 9/24/03 3:53 am

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 592

(9/24/03 8:13 am)

Reply

Re: ??

---

Depends what you mean by God.

Quote:

---

Time is man made.

The reality is that now is all that we have.

The moment in the present is all that exists.

---

Substantiation?

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 118
(9/24/03 10:09 am)
Reply

To rushdl

---

Quote:

---

I believe in God.

---

I agree with Dave's 'Depends what you mean by God'.

Do you believe in God as some entity outside yourself?
If that is the case, I would be happy to meet the bastard.

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 119
(9/24/03 10:11 am)
Reply

To rushdl

---

Quote:

---

I believe in God.

---

I agree with Dave's 'Depends what you mean by God'.

Do you believe in God as some entity outside yourself?
If that is the case, I would be happy to meet the bastard.

Anyway, would you explain?

|                                                                                                              |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| rushdl <input type="checkbox"/> Registered UserPosts: 10(9/24/03 11:55 am)Reply | Re: To rushdl <hr/> Ahhh yes, I cannot Define God! Though I believe. I lean towards the Hindu belief again, where God is most likely within ones self. All of us, everywhere. When you ask what I mean by God, I can safely admit "I do not (Know)" what is meant by God. I believe it may be our mission (Defined by God)to find/seek that answer, while we have the opportunity to enjoy each others company here in this dimension, of course. Maybe God is another dimension, intertwined subtly within the others, 4th, 5th, 6th. I am not clear at all on the theories of higher Dimensions. I am still trying to soak in that info and work it a bit. (There I went with a speculation of God, Bad Rush, Bad)I need to focus on 4th because it gets really weird, really weird after that. |
| Paul Registered UserPosts: 120(9/24/03 12:04 pm)Reply                           | Re: To rushdl <hr/> Quote: <hr/> God is most likely within ones self. All of us, everywhere. <hr/> Hahah, yep! I like that circumscription.It's as good as a definition for me.Wanna beer? :-)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| rushdl <input type="checkbox"/> Registered UserPosts: 11(9/25/03 2:40 am)Reply  | Re: To rushdl <hr/> I'd love a beer! Judging from the TimeZone, we may be separated by quite a distance though!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |

|                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 123(9/25/03 10:21 am)Reply     | Re: To rushdl <hr/> Smart you, that's the topic of this thread: 'What is time?' Cheers anyway!                                                               |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1522(9/26/03 12:35 am)Reply | ----- <hr/> To hell with your stinkking beers and your Gods and your congratulatory. God is a hole in the ground and I will serve it until my skelington wants out. |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 125(9/26/03 12:45 am)Reply     | Re: - - - - - <hr/> sewergas rides again.                                                                                                                           |

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

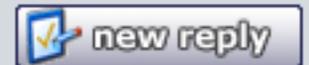

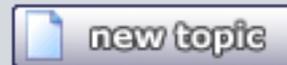

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> What is time?

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                               | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 336(9/26/03 12:33 pm)Reply  | Re: - - - - - <hr/> Time = Human concept of the rate of change Change = simply the movement of matter from one local to another. All change of any type requires matter. A change of mind is still a movement of matter. Movement is real, time isn't. As time is not real it is impossible to travel back or go forward through time. The closest one could get to backwards time travel is when the universe collapses backward through time (not really time - still just movement) in order to create the next big bang. This would occur when the momentum of matter and energy waves currently expanding into nothingness, decreases sufficiently for gravitation to reverse the outward thrust and change it into an inwards thrust that would begin to accelerate. The accelerating inward implosion is needed to create the critical force for the next big bang. And so the cycle goes on. The universe is not in fact infinite in size, but it is for all intentions limitless. The only limit is has is itself, through gravity. It could be considered limitless as the emptiness surrounding the universe by definition is nothing, so there is nothing, apart from gravity, to prevent the expansion of the universe. The universe has been expanding for billions or trillions or zillions of years – so for all intentions it is infinite if you consider how far outward light would have travelled in that time. |

Whatever matter that is in light - and to exist it must have matter - will also be drawn back into the imploding universe. Another thing to note is that everything has layers, so in terms of the big bang(s), black holes and supernovas are just smaller versions of the same process. In an abstract way, life and death are the same concept, in that the body draws in matter for the creation of the body, it expands for a while then begins to collapse, until eventually it disperses completely.

The universe is however infinite in terms of movement, via the process described above, which automatically makes it timeless.

I don't care what the scientists say.

(edited - added more crap)

Edited by: jimhaz at: 9/26/03 1:18 pm

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 127
(9/26/03 1:14 pm)
Reply

To jimhaz

---

Taking about movement of matter:
What are you doing in a Dutch weblog?
paarskonijntje.web-log.nl/

: -)

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 128
(9/26/03 1:18 pm)
Reply

To jimhaz (P.S.)

---

Taking = Talking (geez)

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 337
(9/26/03 1:21 pm)
Reply

Re: To jimhaz (P.S.)

---

I see I'm world famous!!! Yay! Yay!

Nah..I didn't make the image..just got it off the web or as a joke email sometime, can't recall.

|                                                                                                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 608(9/26/03 9:27 pm)Reply  | Re: To jimhaz (P.S.) <hr/> An interesting post Jimmy. How about some logical/empirical justification of your theories? :-)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 129(9/27/03 1:05 pm)Reply                                                                                        | To Dave Toast <hr/> You'll have heard of life being the breath of God?Well, the big bang we proceeded from, was God breathing out, with us sitting like bacteria on a molecule or atom (Earth) swung into the universe. Then, when God breathes in again, the imploding of the universe takes place. And so on, ad infinitum.Creation in a nutshell.This seems empirical and logical enough for me. Have a nice weekend!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| LbartoliRegistered UserPosts: 285(9/27/03 3:56 pm)Reply                                                                                    | What is time? <hr/> According to J.J. van der Leeuw: In addition to this dualistic illusion which colours all my questioning and thinking in the world of the relative there are my space and time illusions; that which is an abiding and ever-present reality in the Absolute becomes a past-present-future development in my world-image. I objectivate this way of experiencing the eternal as a succession of events and call this objectivation 'time,' considering it as a scroll on which events are written. Then, forgetting that this particular time-structure of my world-image is but my way of interpreting ever-present reality, I unconsciously weave it into the texture of all my thoughts and questions, and all the problems which my imprisoned intellect can ask are impregnated by that illusion. JJVDL, from The Conquest of Illusion- - - Leo |

|                                                                                                                                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1174(9/27/03 5:42 pm)Reply                                                                                                                   | Re: What is time? <hr/> I agree that impregnation by an illusion is a precarious situation.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| rushdl <input type="checkbox"/>Registered UserPosts: 17(10/11/03 5:42 am)Reply                                                                                                | Re: What is time? <hr/> Are you saying, Paul, that Time and Distance are the same?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| G ShantzRegistered UserPosts: 405(10/12/03 4:38 pm)Reply  | Re: To Dave Toast <hr/> Paul wrote: Quote: <hr/> You'll have heard of life being the breath of God?Well, the big bang we proceeded from, was God breathing out, with us sitting like bacteria on a molecule or atom (Earth) swung into the universe. Then, when God breathes in again, the imploding of the universe takes place. And so on, ad infinitum.Creation in a nutshell.This seems empirical and logical enough for me. <hr/> The spectre of scientific materialism raises it's head once more! Science can't prove anything, not in an ultimate sense. All it does is create temporary models which last until a better one is thought of. Science doesn't have anything to do with Ultimate Truth – do scientists know this? Or are they too engaged with their machines and atom-smashers to realize it? What is this 'God' that is constant, that you talk about? The one that takes the (to put it poetically) deep inhalations and exhalations? What are its qualities? Immortality would seem to be one. What else? Does it properly have any finite qualities like being red, large, cold or bright? Or does it have all of these qualities at once, which is another way of saying it has none. |

If God is that which nothing greater can be conceived, doesn't that make God infinite, since we can successively conceive of something greater than the previous thing we conceived of? Or does that mean we can only conceive of God as infinite, without the quality of lacking formlessness, since any way we conceive of it otherwise would make it a qualities-possessor, and therefore not truly that which nothing greater can be conceived, because to conceive as quality is to limit and define, to give qualities to that which has none, just so we can talk about it. Even greatness is a quality, and the infinite isn't even that; it's infinite. Therefore we can't rightly talk about infinite without misrepresenting it in some way, however many precautions we may take to prevent this, simply because language is a quality. Time too is a quality, so the infinite is timeless as much as it is formless, time being another form we experience, a measurement of rate of change. The infinite is all forms or none. A form is a quality.

I don't know how or why Anselm concluded that that which nothing greater can be conceived must necessarily exist beyond our conception of it. I think Kevin Solway thinks that same thing, that the Totality, that which nothing greater can be conceived is the cause of our thoughts about it. How do they know this for sure?

Just some thoughts I've been thinking that I thought I would share.

Greg

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 131
(10/12/03 7:59 pm)
Reply

Re: To Dave Toast

---

Quote:

---

I don't know how or why Anselm concluded that that which nothing greater can be conceived must necessarily exist beyond our conception of it. I think Kevin Solway thinks that same thing, that the Totality, that which nothing greater can be conceived is the cause of our thoughts about it. How do they know this for sure?

---

Firstly, I'm not sure that Anselm's argument was as you put it. But I can explain my view on the matter.

The Totality, being Everything, must necessarily be the cause of all our thoughts, as well as being the thoughts themselves.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1572

(10/12/03 8:57 pm)

Reply

---

I think you mean 'including' rather than 'being' as regards our thoughts.

Edited by: suergaz at: 10/12/03 8:58 pm

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 643

(10/13/03 7:57 am)

Reply

Re: ---

Quote:

Greg: The spectre of scientific materialism raises it's head once more!

Hardly mate, unless it does so only to be engulfed in a wave of sticky, cheap, overripe cheese, and walk off towards the shower grumbling.

Quote:

Science can't prove anything, not in an ultimate sense.

Ultimate sense?

Quote:

All it does is create temporary models which last until a better one is thought of.

Kind of like nature then?

Speaking literally, there are plenty of models, created by science, which will never be superceded.

It's also quite useful but if you're talking about theoretical science, it is merely the application of logic to observation.

Quote:

---

Science doesn't have anything to do with Ultimate Truth – do scientists know this?

---

That depends on what you mean by Ultimate Truth.

I expect many scientists are aware of the scope and utility of their discipline, and many others aren't.

Quote:

---

Or are they too engaged with their machines and atom-smashers to realize it?

---

I suspect most people are quite taken, even besotted, with their pet theories and philosophies; centred on and obsessed with the strengths, unconcerned, ignoring and even unaware of the weaknesses - seeing only the tiny speck of light which is their perspective, blind to the infinite darkness which surrounds it.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1204
(10/13/03 9:14 am)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Good writing. Agreed.

G Shantz

Registered User

Posts: 407

(10/16/03 11:20 am)

Reply

--

---

Quote:

GS: Science can't prove anything, not in an ultimate sense.

DT: Ultimate sense?

---

Final sense.

Quote:

---

All it does is create temporary models which last until a better one is thought of.

DT: Kind of like nature then?

---

An infinity of models [forms]?

Quote:

---

DT: Speaking literally, there are plenty of models, created by science, which will never be superceded.

---

Such as?

Quote:

---

DT: It's also quite useful but if you're talking about theoretical science, it is merely the application of logic to observation.

---

What if we gain more knowledge about our observations?

Quote:

---

GS: Science doesn't have anything to do with Ultimate Truth – do scientists know this?

DT: That depends on what you mean by Ultimate Truth.

---

Knowledge that can't be refuted.

Quote:

---

DT: I expect many scientists are aware of the scope and utility of their discipline, and many others aren't.

---

The ones who know certainly don't mention it very often. I was living with this physics student last term, and in our discussions he always wanted to come up with a new definition of truth that would encompass scientific knowledge. he didn;t think philosophical knowledge was at all 'practical.' I don't doubt that most scientists have the same view.

Quote:

---

GS: Or are they too engaged with their machines and atom-smashers to realize it?

DT: I suspect most people are quite taken, even besotted, with their pet theories and philosophies; centred on and obsessed with the strengths, unconcerned, ignoring and even unaware of the weaknesses - seeing only the tiny speck of light which is their perspective, blind to the infinite darkness which surrounds it.

---

At least it's something. If you want certainty, you have to concentrate on things that can be known, with certainty, and ignore everything else. It's how you do philosophy.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 658
(10/18/03 10:11 pm)
Reply

Re: --

---

Quote:

---

GS: Science can't prove anything, not in an ultimate sense.

DT: Ultimate sense?

GS: Final sense.

---

Final sense?

You're going to have to be a bit more specific if I am to understand what you mean by these words Greg.

It would also be good if you defined what you mean by science as this term can cover a multitude of sins.

Quote:

---

GS: All it does is create temporary models which last until a better one is thought of.

DT: Kind of like nature then?

GS: An infinity of models [forms]?

---

I'm not sure what you are saying/asking here.

Quote:

---

DT: Speaking literally, there are plenty of models, created by science, which will never be superceded.

GS: Such as?

---

Plenty.

You don't really think you're going to stump me here do you?

Do you really think that science cannot come up with consistent models which, within their definitional context, will never be superceded?

What's the opposite of rose-tinted spectacles?

How about Darwinian evolution? Though it may be modified and added to, some might even be taken away, but the principle will remain untouched, and most illuminating. How about Genetics, Memetics, Big bang, Red shift, Atomic bonding, Sea-floor spreading, The Periodic table, Symmetry breaking, Fractal geometry, Phi and the Fibonacci sequence, Pythagorean theory, Conservation of energy, Friction, Geological time, Cosmological time, Relative time frames, The anatomy of the ear, Continental drift, Convection, Conduction, Super-conduction, Magnetic polar shift, The structure of the solar system, Spectral analysis of chemical composition, Refraction, Lasers, Masers, Oedipus complex, Messianic complex, The neural network, Batholith extrusion, Reef formation, Crystallography, The anatomy of the Kangaroo's leg, Lactic acid build up, Static, Feedback, Erosion, Hanging valley formation, Shield volcano formation, Transverse faults, Pneumonoultramicroscopicsilicovolcanoconiosis, Oxidation, etc.

That's just the tip of the iceberg.

Quote:

---

DT: It's also quite useful but if you're talking about theoretical science, it is merely the application of logic to observation.

GS: What if we gain more knowledge about our observations?

---

What if?

How do you think we might do such a thing BTW?

By some sort of methodical, exhaustive, logical process?

Quote:

---

GS: Science doesn't have anything to do with Ultimate Truth – do scientists know this?

DT: That depends on what you mean by Ultimate Truth.

GS: Knowledge that can't be refuted.

---

Within what parameters and to what tolerance?

There's plenty of knowledge which cannot be refuted.

If that's all you're defining ultimate truth to be, then science does deal with ultimate truth.

Quote:

---

DT: I expect many scientists are aware of the scope and utility of their discipline, and many others aren't.

GS: The ones who know certainly don't mention it very often. I was living with this physics student last term, and in our discussions he always wanted to come up with a new definition of truth that would encompass scientific knowledge. he didn;t think philosophical knowledge was at all 'practical.' I don't doubt that most scientists have the same view.

---

So you mean that the one that you knew didn't mention it very often.

You should apply a more scientific principle to your investigation :-)

Quote:

---

GS: Or are they too engaged with their machines and atom-smashers to realize it?

DT: I suspect most people are quite taken, even besotted, with their pet theories and philosophies; centred on and obsessed with the strengths, unconcerned, ignoring and even unaware of the weaknesses - seeing only the tiny speck of light which is their perspective, blind to the infinite darkness which surrounds it.

GS: At least it's something. If you want certainty, you have to concentrate on things that can be known, with certainty, and ignore everything else. It's how you do philosophy.

---

You seem to have taken this as some sort of comment on you or your ilk. This was not the case, it was a general comment addressing "most people".

See above.

Whether you like it or not, your philosophical 'certain knowledge' is no more certain and no less contingent than the 'certain knowledge' of science.

This really is an epistemological dead end for you.

G Shantz

Registered User

Posts: 410

(10/22/03 10:16 am)

Reply

--

---

Quote:

---

Dave Toast: Final sense?

You're going to have to be a bit more specific if I am to understand what you mean by these words Greg.

---

By final sense I mean you can't go beyond it. It's the end.

Quote:

---

DT: It would also be good if you defined what you mean by science as this term can cover a multitude of sins.

---

By science I mean the method of gaining knowledge through empirical observation and creating models based on that information, through the process of induction.

Quote:

---

Greg Shantz: An infinity of models [forms]?

DT: I'm not sure what you are saying/asking here.

---

I was making a reference to the infinite number of 'things' or 'models' or 'forms' that we experience from moment to moment.

Quote:

---

DT: Whether you like it or not, your philosophical 'certain knowledge' is no more certain and no less contingent than the 'certain knowledge' of science.

This really is an epistemological dead end for you.

---

Where does knowledge come from, in the first place, Dave? It comes from reasoning about definitions.

If a man sees a river and decides he would like to build a dam across it, he will have to reason about what the best way to do it would be. If he notices that when he places rocks in the river that the flow of water is impeded, he might conclude, through reasoning that if he places many rocks in the river, the water's flow will be halted completely. The way he can arrive at this conclusion is by creating definitions of things - the rocks, the river, the dam he wants to build - and manipulating them through reasoning until he arrives at the knowledge of how to make a successful dam. This new knowledge, which he didn't possess at the outset has come about purely through his act of reasoning about definitions. All knowledge comes from creating definitions and manipulating them in mind by reason.

Quote:

---

GS: What if we gain more knowledge about our observations?

DT: What if?

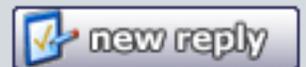

How do you think we might do such a thing BTW?

---

If we gain more knowledge about our observations, we would have different data from which to create models, therefore leading to different models.

We might gain more knowledge about our observations by creating new tools like microscopes or telescopes, or our senses may evolve to take in more information.

|                                                                                                                 |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                 | Edited by: G Shantz at: 10/22/03 10:18 am                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| rushdl <input type="checkbox"/> Registered User Posts: 28 (10/24/03 6:01 am) Reply | Re: -- <hr/> Several of those examples seem irrefutable, as though they may already be the base model of a "final truth" scenario. Pythagorean theorem for instance. I think that's a pretty solid, and well constrained model. We are just "discovering" the many natures of Phi and it may take another 1000 years to see the base model. Pi is pretty solid as well. Pi has too many decimals for me to argue the "finality" of it's model.... But Pythagoras, I'll go out on a limb and call that model Rock solid. |
| G Shantz Registered User Posts: 411 (10/24/03 8:05 am) Reply                       | -- <hr/> Isn't that a mathematical model? If it is, then it would be definitionally true, as all mathematical models are. Edited by: G Shantz at: 10/24/03 9:09 am                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> What To Do?

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                          | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| HywelRegistered UserPosts: 39(1/12/04 12:29 pm)Reply | What To Do? <hr/> Making decisions with an at best partial consciousness is no fun. But decisions have to be made, because no decision is itself a decision. With that in mind, I thought I would outline some decisions that I have to make, and invite comments from the forum members on these. Sometimes attempting to transfer philosophical truths into a workable system for living is not clear cut for me at all, and i thought that (as well as for my own selfish reasons), this might be a way to discuss the subject. Ive cut the post into sections for (hopefully) easier reading.                                                                                                                                           |
| HywelRegistered UserPosts: 40(1/12/04 12:31 pm)Reply | Re: What To Do? <hr/> University Im in my third year at university. I never thought it would give me any satisfaction, either to accomplish or merely to do, and i havent been surprised. On the other hand, i was working as a lab technician before i came to university, and that gave me no satisfaction either. I basically came to university because it gave me some time to think (aside from the time required to do sufficient work in order to stay on the course). In this sense it has been very successful. I chose to do a computing course because I thought I would be able to get a job where I could play computer games once I'd finished the course. This is perhaps an accurate measure of just how aimless i was/am! |

I perhaps would have chosen a philosophy course, but until going to the genius forum, i had no idea that this had any relation to the things I wanted to think about, which at the time I would have described as religion/reality/life.

Perhaps surprisingly, given how little I care/d about the course, I'm currently heading for a first. However, in the third year the time I have to spend doing work for university is now seriously encroaching on time I would rather spend thinking, and when I leave there is going to be even more time taken up learning and working with whatever job I get. At this point perhaps I should point out that I had always felt that I should work for a living, the universe did not owe me an existence, although by this point I have to question the value of most "work".

So now i have to decide what to do. I can either stay and finish the course, or leave immediately.

If I stay, I will find it hard going, so is the fact that im considering leaving motivated by lazyness? I think this is at least a contributing factor. Also, i know that if I stay and do complete it, that it will give me no satisfaction, but then I never thought it would. On the other hand, it might be useful to see if I have the willpower to complete something difficult and unpleasant, as I've never really thought of myself as someone with much "will". Also, if I have to get a job, I'm likely to be able to get a job giving me enough money to survive, while actually spending as little time as possible at the job, if I have a degree (more on this below).

My major worry with completing the course is that it will give me something else to become attached to. Not that I'm going to think myself superior, but that i will be able to use it as some kind of egotistical safety net. I have quite enough of those already, I can ill-afford any more.

If I leave, I can either try to get a job that will provide me with enough money for food, rent etc., or go on benefit (i.e. the QRS route). However, benefit in the UK is now known as "Job Seekers Allowance", and as I would have no intention of finding a job, I'm not sure they would give me anything! Hence, I have to consider the possibility that i would have to find a job.

Finally, if I do leave and manage to get "Job Seekers Allowance", I have to question the current benefit of my partial consciousness. This would provide an incredible impetus to become more conscious, if only out of guilt at my burden on society! Having a job would relieve this burden somewhat, but I dont think thats a good thing!

Ultimately though, i cannot currently trust that i know my own motivations. Maybe I just want to leave university because I'm a lazy bastard, and being on benefit seems like much less effort, and wanting more time to think is a convenient excuse.

Hywel

Registered User

Posts: 41

(1/12/04 12:33 pm)

Reply

Re: What To Do?

---

Relationships

I have been in a relationship with my current girlfriend for about 2 years. After breaking up with my previous girlfriend, which plunged me into the depths of despair, I ended up beginning to think about philosophy and coming to university. I cant thank her enough for that really. Nevertheless, when i got to university, my thoughts on relationships basically consisted of (believe it or not) -

"I can never be in love again, and im pretty sure i can never be happy again, so i might as well find the nicest person possible, and try to make them happy."

Obviously, looking back I'm pretty sure I was motivated by wanting sex again, but the above truly was my (partially) conscious thoughts on the subject.

So when I met a nice girl, we went out, and continue to do so. Now however, it is infinitely different issue. The fact that I make her happy also means that I can cause her incredible pain, and that inevitably I will do so. The fact that I dont love her (being as I am incapable of love) means I feel terrible about that fact that she clearly loves me. She asks if I love her, and I tell her yes. I tell myself that i am just telling her that i love her as I do all existence, but I can never really hide the lie, or the guilt i feel.

I fuck myself, and she fucks herself, and the fact that we do it together doesnt alter the reality of the situation. I truly detest the fact that I carefully ignore this until I have come.

Also, although I didnt expect this, I truly am attached to her, and she certainly provides part of the safety net that stops me falling into existential despair (something i certainly need to face).

Finally, not being sure of my own motivations, I cant be sure that im not just getting bored with the relationship. I'm sure I would be thinking about relationships if this one ended, and i would be relying on the general difficulty and "pain in the arse factor" of getting into another relationship, at least partially.

In truth, i have already decided this must end, now i merely lack the courage to act.

Hywel

Registered User

Posts: 42

(1/12/04 12:37 pm)

Reply

Re: What To Do?

---

Helping People

I have been thinking for some time about the best ways for me to help other people. Clearly I'm not ready to start writing any books, but I still know things that most people do not, and I would like to tell them. Obviously, with my partial consciousness, I'm hardly qualified to start telling people how to live (especially since I dont know myself), but that doesnt mean I cant help people to start thinking for themselves. It can be a bad idea to give other people your concepts, especially if you dont know what your doing, but I cannot see the downside of getting people to think for themselves rather than believing what they are told.

As well as posting on Genius Forum, I would like to try to help the people all around me.

One of the possibilities is to start going to churches (the only religious institutions where i live) and taking part in theological discussions. Obviously, Christians (Jehovahs Witnesses etc.) are generally pretty close minded on the subject, but on the other hand, they at least have some interest in the subject, and would probably be willing to discuss it (which is a start).

Another possibility is travelling to a nearby city, where there is a "Hare Krishna" community. I know from my brief discussions with some of them, that they entertain notions such as "eating meat is immoral and murder, but vegetables and fruit is ok" and literal reincarnation. Perhaps i could help them with this.

Attempting to inspire my friends is also an ongoing thing, but its proving difficult as they are generally ambivalent to the subject. I just tend to talk until they stop listening, although discussions have taken place to minor effect.

I always find that many Christians and Hare Krishnas have all the devotion (something I lack), and none of the discernment (which I have to a degree and am trying to develop).

But with my partial consciousness I have to consider the fact that maybe I just want to be a big fish in a little pond.

Hywel

P.S. After writing these posts, I realised that "i" was written instead of "I" a vast number of times, and tried to correct them out of grammatical sympathy, but it turns out that I missed loads of them, and I've given up. Apologies to those with an interest in grammar.

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 569
(1/12/04 12:47 pm)
Reply

Re: What To Do?

---

You should stay in school, unless there's actually something better outside of school. Stay with the girl, and try to love her and lose yourself. Stop trying to help other people, because you are the one that needs help.

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1609
(1/12/04 12:51 pm)
Reply

Re: What To Do?

---

Hello Hywel,

These are important questions you're examining and I'll try to give as fullsome a response to them as possible, especially the first two. I remember you asking at least the first one on either Zetetica or Ponderer's Guild (can't recall which). Can you recall where that thread is? I ask that as I think it would be interesting to contrast the responses you get here at Genius.

One thing, don't sweat the fact that your choices are made on incomplete data or consciousness; that's how it is. No need for guilt or regret or suchlike if any given choice turns out, in hindsight, to have been less than perfect. The trick is to concentrate on fulfilling that consciousness - as best as circumstance will allow.

I'll post my responses soon...

Dan Rowden

WolfsonJakk

Registered User

Posts: 1397

(1/12/04 2:48 pm)

Reply

Re: What To Do?

---

Yes, very nice post, Hywel. Honesty is so rare that it shines forth from my monitor like a beacon. Usually, I waste my time playing or expending energy on individuals who have no honest intention of getting beyond their delusions. At least you seem to be approaching it with an open mind. Perhaps someone here can help you, perhaps not; but at least your attitude is a good indicator of your potential for resolving these issues.

From your Relationships post,

Quote:

---

So when I met a nice girl, we went out, and continue to do so. Now however, it is infinitely different issue. The fact that I make her happy also means that I can cause her incredible pain, and that inevitably I will do so. The fact that I don't love her (being as I am incapable of love) means I feel terrible about that fact that she clearly loves me. She asks if I love her, and I tell her yes. I tell myself that I am just telling her that I love her as I do all existence, but I can never really hide the lie, or the guilt I feel.

I fuck myself, and she fucks herself, and the fact that we do it together doesn't alter the reality of the situation. I truly detest the fact that I carefully ignore this until I have come.

---

I am personally going through a similar situation in my relationship with my wife though we have been together a bit longer. We have been together about 10 years now, have an eight year old daughter, and on the surface, everything might seem idealic.

But we don't have sex. Actually, I take that back. We went out with my brother who was in town the night before New Year's. We got drunk and had sex that night. I can't remember how many months before that... 3? 6? 9? ...but she could probably tell you.

I am not unattracted to her. She is pretty. But after a point, a couple must share a common mental value system. Because after the 10,000th time in bed, with no intention of producing offspring, there must be some point to it, mustn't there?

But there is no point to it other than making her feel loved, secure, and ultimately comfortable. I don't think I remember this in the contract when I signed. We got together as free spirits, drunk with life; individuals (individualists!) ready to conquer the world. Now, it is me constantly propping up her fragile little ego, it seems. These are my feelings.

The sad part is, she doesn't know any other role. I try to explain, but there are too many emotional barriers at this point. I can say something about my POV, she can claim to see it, but by the morning it is forgotten.

She is in pain. I am not. What should I do? How can I help when she doesn't hear? I know what she wants. She wants me to be as emotional and desirous as she is; to whisper softly in her ear or maybe surprise her with flowers; to long for her when she is away. Not that she would do or does do any of these things for me, mind you. She simply wants to feel good, and it appears to have become my responsibility.

Alas, too many ghosts whisper in her ear. Ghosts of the past and present. Ghosts of form and function, tradition and rights. No one whispers to me. I am awake. And I hope I can awaken her before our daughter is grown and this farce comes to an end. I love her. But I'm not sure I will always be living with her.

...what to do...what to do...

Tharan

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1229
(1/12/04 4:13 pm)
Reply

what to do

---

Sad post Tharan. I had sort of the opposite problem with my first husband. I didn't love him, felt an unnamable discomfort with him on a soul level. I felt a vague and deep incompatibility with him, and because we had been through a lot and I had hurt him once, I married him anyway. I was sad the whole time, although we had sex every day for 10 years.

Yeah, I'd take compatibility over physical attraction. He was handsome but I can't get really excited by a man I don't love. I know he felt it and he asked for reassurance. I tried to give it. I feel guilty now, because I caused so much wreckage with my foolishness at age 20, to marry someone I didn't want. I know it is not politically correct, but I think this was a driving factor in his cocaine habit.

It occurs to me that any person, living in such a situation where their spouse is rejecting them so deeply would be in pain, would be needing and wanting reassurance. So the problem is that it becomes very self-perpetuating. It's a festering wound. And I wonder if you are judging her by some sort of philosophical yardstick and finding her wanting, or is this incompatibility real?

Yet you say you love her. Well, I love mine too - but not like that. There's no way I could not love someone I've known since I was a child and had three children with.

What kind of interests does she have? She might like The Power of Now. Great little book.

Hywel
Registered User
Posts: 43
(1/13/04 2:43 am)
Reply

Re: What To Do?

---

To voce io,

Quote:

---

You should stay in school, unless there's actually something better outside of school.

---

Im not sure what you mean by "something better". There are other things I want to do, but I never really regarded myself as being "inside of" or "outside of" school, so I dont know what difference that will make.

Quote:

---

Stay with the girl, and try to love her and lose yourself.

---

Whether I realised it or not, this is what I have been trying to do since we got together. Its been a failure.

Quote:

---

Stop trying to help other people, because you are the one that needs help.

Agreed, but why does the fact that I need help mean that I should not help other people in any way I can?

To Dan,

Quote:

---

I remember you asking at least the first one on either Zetetica or Ponderer's Guild (can't recall which). Can you recall where that thread is? I ask that as I think it would be interesting to contrast the responses you get here at Genius.

---

I dont post on any forums except this one. I did a quick search for posts under my username at both forums just in case it had slipped my mind, nothing found. That said, I dont think the ezboard search function is very good, as I searched for my username on the archives section of Genius Forum (where I know I have made posts), and it failed to find any there either....

I may sign up to these other boards and post it anyway, as they seem to be doing some thinking there, but in the meantime I await your responses.

Thanks for your initial response in any case.

To Tharan,

If I can't be honest with myself and people who can potentially help me, there isnt really much point in discussing these things at all.

Quote:

---

I am personally going through a similar situation in my relationship with my wife though we have been together a bit longer. We have been together about 10 years now, have an eight year old daughter, and on the surface, everything might seem idealic.

I suspected that this might be the case from some of your previous posts.

Quote:

---

The sad part is, she doesn't know any other role. I try to explain, but there are too many emotional barriers at this point. I can say something about my POV, she can claim to see it, but by the morning it is forgotten.

---

I have also found this a saddening quality in my girlfriend. I try to prop up her ego as little as possible, and inform her when she tries to get me to prop her up, but there seems to be no lasting impact. Nor any lasting impact from my attempts to explain some of the things i know.

She recently tried to bring me to task over my general low opinion of christianity and organised religion in general (her family are christians). I explained to her that if a belief requires faith, you dont know that its true, you just want it be true. She had no choice but to agree, and i hoped for some lasting effect, but alas, in the morning, nothing had changed.

To birdofhermes,

I know your post was for Tharan, but if you judge things by philosophical yardsticks, and your partner does not, doesnt this constitute incompatibility?

Hywel

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1230

(1/13/04 4:38 am)

Reply

what to do

---

Quote:

---

I know your post was for Tharan, but if you judge things by philosophical yardsticks, and your partner does not, doesn't this constitute incompatibility?

---

Yes, probably. But those were my words, not his. What I was wondering is if he has some sort of intellectual ideas, mostly surrounding his Buddhism, that she doesn't buy into. What I'm trying to get at is the real. There are a lot of external ideas and suppositions people have, that have little to do with actualities, but they get caught up in it.

People often think it matters whether you SAY you believe this or that, and it doesn't. Whether one believes in the Christian faith or eschews it, has almost no impact on whether one lives as a Christian. People say they believe in God when they don't, and the deny God when they believe. That's my personal opinion.

It is amusing and interesting to me that I have found several people for whom spiritual ideas are almost irrelevant but who are very advanced. Of course, their further advancement may be hindered by their lack of pursuit, but for now they are way ahead of the pack.

Both you and Tharan say things that I find hard to understand. Perhaps its a gender barrier, some language I don't speak. The bit about propping up someone's ego. As far as I can see, if you have not slept with your wife in many months, you cannot even begin to discuss what her emotional state is like, because there is this active rejection going on. Of course she feels insecure! With damn good reason.

What do you mean when you say you are incapable of love?

It may be that both of you are in situations somewhat like mine was - "a pretty nice girl but she doesn't have a lot to say." You try to lead them along but they resist.

One wants a mental companion.

*****

Perhaps you need to go tribal, Hywel. Try reading Daniel Quinn. It stinks to try to decide between living on welfare versus getting a dumb job now to get out of school, or staying in school. The whole question hinges on how you plan to make a living. If you want a job, you should not give in to the temptation of leaving school because you'll be stuck in deadening jobs forever. On the other hand, staying in school is no guarantee of any kind of good career. It totally depends on what you are studying and what interests you. I went to school to become a nurse so I could get paid enough to raise my kids, but I hate my job, and I also hated all the jobs I had before. The difference is I'm paid twice more.

The grandparents have been ragging on my son because he dropped out in his last year. He was studying business because he didn't get into the program he wanted. I don't know how he made it that far, such a spiritually dead major. The summer before that, he got a job working for a guy who cuts trees, mostly taking them out for safety reasons or whatever. He's very agile and has always been physically gifted at anything he tries. So he became a climber, which is the most needed because not everyone can do it. He loved it so much that he is now running his own company, gets paid more than me, loves his work and works his ass off, and is in complete control of his time. And he just turned 23. Meanwhile, one of his buds, who he says is very smart, has been totally unable to find work since his graduation, not to mention the other ones he knows who got their degrees and are now working as store clerks. Not one of them is happy.

But if I had it to do over again, I'd have stayed in school, graduated at the top of my class and gotten a scholarship to Berkeley and studied some form of science. I think and think about what I could even wish for so that I might actually like my job, a bizarre concept. But I closed doors, leaving school at 14. I should have gotten a Ph.D. in science.

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 574
(1/13/04 4:50 am)
Reply

Re: what to do

---

Im not sure what you mean by "something better". There are other things I want to do, but I never really regarded myself as being "inside of" or "outside of" school, so I dont know what difference that will make.

If you stay at school, then you will be inside of school. If you leave school, you'll be outside of it. I was saying that if you leave school, make sure it's for something worthwhile. For example: there could be a good job that is waiting for you, or there could be a chance to travel the world for free. I don't think it'd be a good idea to leave school without a nice backup plan or two.

Whether I realised it or not, this is what I have been trying to do since we got together. Its been a failure.

How has it been a failure? I don't see a possible way anyone could fail at this, besides giving up early, of course.

Agreed, but why does the fact that I need help mean that I should not help other people in any way I can?

Well you can, but it might not actually be beneficial to them.

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 247
(1/13/04 10:39 am)
Reply

Re: what to do

---

voce io wrote (to Hywel):

Quote:

---

Well you can, but it might not actually be beneficial to them.

---

I think Hywel's posts to this forum have already been beneficial for others, which proves he has talent for it.

Hywell wrote:

Quote:

---

If you judge things by philosophical yardsticks, and your partner does not, doesn't this constitute incompatibility?

---

One theory says that such a difference actually constitutes compatibility. For example, a woman with little philosophical ability is naturally attracted to a man with a great deal of philosophical ability.

The problem is, when a person's philosophical ability becomes too much, then no other person is compatible.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1232
(1/13/04 10:57 am)
Reply

what to do

---

Quote:

---

For example, a woman with little philosophical ability is naturally attracted to a man with a great deal of philosophical ability.

---

Pure horseshit.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 237
(1/13/04 11:49 am)
Reply

Re: What To Do?

---

Nice post Tharan,

Here's a question regarding one of your points;

"She is in pain. I am not."

Living so closely to her, how can you be sure that your lack of pain isn't because you still have an underlying attachment to her? And of course, knowing that she still loves and needs you would make that ever so secure wouldn't it?

It sounds like you're ego is still being well fed, and that you're currently attempting to suppress the effects of that from yourself and us, most likely because it's central to your decision to go or stay...truth (ego death) or stay (death of spirit)?

Rhett

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 874
(1/13/04 11:57 am)
Reply

Re: What To Do?

---

It's life or death Hywel.
An easy choice then.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1402
(1/13/04 12:07 pm)
Reply

Re: What To Do?

---

Rhett asked,

Quote:

---

Living so closely to her, how can you be sure that your lack of pain isn't because you still have an underlying attachment to her?

---

I do.

Quote:

---

It sounds like you're ego is still being well fed, and that you're currently attempting to suppress the effects of that from yourself and us...

---

FYI, I am not competing for Most Enlightened of the Month at Genius Forum thus have no need suppress anything from you, and certainly not myself.

Tharan

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1403
(1/13/04 12:21 pm)
Reply

Re: What To Do?

---

Anna wrote,

Quote:

---

What I was wondering is if he has some sort of intellectual ideas, mostly surrounding his Buddhism, that she doesn't buy into. What I'm trying to get at is the real. There are a lot of external ideas and suppositions people have, that have little to do with actualities, but they get caught up in it.

---

I think that may be the root of the problem; i.e. what is "real." Her definitions of "real" are feelings. My definitions of "real" are concepts, and even that is marginal.

I know how she feels. But I don't feel she knows how I think. She has even said as much.

She has a good heart. I know it sounds cold, but I am not in need of a good heart. If I am to have a partner, the relationship must serve some function. Currently we are raising a child, but that is about it. We never fight or anything unless she thinks it is my turn to do the dishes or something. But I wouldn't even call that a fight. I just tune her out. (I always put my dishes spotless and perfectly aligned in the dishwasher after using them.) :P

Tharan

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1233
(1/13/04 12:52 pm)
Reply

what to do

---

Doesn't sound too good, Tharan. But why has your relationship deteriorated so makedly in the last year?

I take it you are disappointed in her, and because of this you have tuned her out.

What about your thinking does she not understand? Is it that she has no higher purpose or ideals, is not driven toward truth or enlightenment or some kind of transcendence?

|                                                                                                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                         | By purpose, I can only suppose that you mean a companion who shares some goals in life beyond grocery shopping and such?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1404(1/13/04 2:22 pm)Reply                                                                                  | what to do <hr/> Before I answer, I don't mean to hijack Hywel's excellent post. This is about him, I think. We could start another post if you want, Anna. Maybe put it in Thinker's Inn since it seems a bit personal, rather than abstract. I know what I need to do, what is pulling me; but that is not where I am completely on an emotional level, yet. Tharan                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 2016(1/13/04 10:10 pm)Reply  | Re: What To Do? <hr/> Hywel wrote: Quote: <hr/> As well as posting on Genius Forum, I would like to try to help the people all around me. One of the possibilities is to start going to churches (the only religious institutions where i live) and taking part in theological discussions. Obviously, Christians (Jehovahs Witnesses etc.) are generally pretty close minded on the subject, but on the other hand, they at least have some interest in the subject, and would probably be willing to discuss it (which is a start). Another possibility is travelling to a nearby city, where there is a "Hare Krishna" community. I know from my brief discussions with some of them, that they entertain notions such as "eating meat is immoral and murder, but vegetables and fruit is ok" and literal reincarnation. Perhaps i could help them with this. Attempting to inspire my friends is also an ongoing thing, but its proving difficult as they are generally ambivalent to the subject. I just tend to talk until they stop listening, although | discussions have taken place to minor effect.

---

You might want to try putting up posters/pamphlets around town calling for people interested in philosophical discussion. It's a good way to meet (somewhat) rational people, although you do attract your fair share of kooks as well.

In the past, I've tried advertizing my services as a "thinker" both for free and for a fee. When my services were free, I mainly attracted young, university types, which was quite stimulating. When I charged a nominal fee ($20/hour), most of my "clients" were professional people over 40 - which largely made it a waste of time.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1234

(1/14/04 12:20 am)

Reply

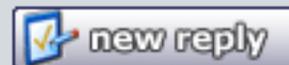

what to do

---

Sure, Wolf, answer over there.

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

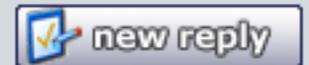

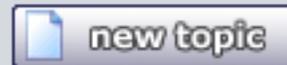

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> What To Do?

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                         | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| HywelRegistered UserPosts: 44(1/15/04 5:54 am)Reply | Re: What To Do? <hr/> To birdofhermes, Quote: <hr/> Both you and Tharan say things that I find hard to understand. Perhaps its a gender barrier, some language I don't speak. The bit about propping up someone's ego. <hr/> Theres no need for sarcasm. If you arent being sarcastic and really dont understand, I would be happy to try to explain. Quote: <hr/> As far as I can see, if you have not slept with your wife in many months, you cannot even begin to discuss what her emotional state is like, because there is this active rejection going on. <hr/> I have never assumed (as you seem to), that it is necessary to have sex with a woman to find out her emotional state. I think you also misunderstand what this is all about. I am not rejecting my girlfriend at all, and certainly | not because I think that there is anything wrong with her in any way. I am attempting to reject my own inadequacies. One of these is the need to use this person to fulfill my own gratification.

Quote:

---

Of course she feels insecure! With damn good reason.

---

What reason? Why should the fact that I feel disgusted at my own behavior affect her self esteem? I do not wish to hurt her in any way, and this makes the knowledge that I will cause her pain sooner or later harder to bear.

Quote:

---

What do you mean when you say you are incapable of love?

---

I mean the same thing as being incapable of hate. I have been in love so I do know what it feels like. If you love someone and they leave you, you will hate them. If you do not love someone and they leave you, you will not hate them. I want to give up hate forever, and in order to do that you have to give up love for one thing over another. Love is ownership (or at least desire for ownership), and I do not wish to own or be owned.

In the last part of your post, you basically state that school doesnt mean you end up happy, but suggest I stay in school anyway, to get more money while probably being unhappy. Do you really think having a Ph.D would make you much more satisfied with life?

To voce io,

Quote:

---

If you stay at school, then you will be inside of school. If you leave school, you'll be outside of it. I was saying that if you leave school, make sure it's for something worthwhile. For example: there could be a good job that is waiting for you, or there could be a chance to travel the world for free. I don't think it'd be a good idea to leave school without a nice backup plan or two.

---

Backup plan = safety net. Have you heard the song "Common People" by Pulp? It neatly describes how a rich girl wishes to understand the common people, but she never can even though she lives just like them, because she has the safety net of being able to call her father at any time, and leave.

Quote:

---

How has it been a failure? I don't see a possible way anyone could fail at this, besides giving up early, of course.

---

It has been a failure because I cannot forget what I know. I can deny and deny (and I have been), but i cannot forget.

Quote:

---

Well you can, but it might not actually be beneficial to them.

---

What constitutes beneficial depends entirely on your point of view. If you told someone something that could alleviate their sufferings, but it required a changing of their whole viewpoint on life (and people hate change), would they think it was beneficial or not? At least to begin with, they might think it was neither. Truth gives as it takes away, you never end up anywhere but here. In all honesty, I think some things could be known to everyone without risk of negative effects.

To Kevin Solway,

Quote:

---

One theory says that such a difference actually constitutes compatibility. For example, a woman with little philosophical ability is naturally attracted to a man with a great deal of philosophical ability.

---

I have to agree with birdofhermes. A person can only tell whether someone else is of greater or lesser philosophical ability than themselves, but never by how much. Therefore, in the case of someone with little philosophical ability, anyone with a greater ability than themselves would do if they were that way inclined when choosing partners. However, I think it certainly applies the other way around, or at least it did for me. The desire for a person unwracked by doubt, always happy and clear in the moment is very strong. But everyone suffers, and those who do not think are trapped, its truly horrible to watch.

Quote:

---

The problem is, when a person's philosophical ability becomes too much, then no other person is compatible.

---

This could also be said to be the point where principles become more important than gratification.

To Dave Toast,

Quote:

---

It's life or death Hywel.

An easy choice then.

---

Thats really not funny, which is probably why I'm laughing.

To David Quinn,

Quote:

---

You might want to try putting up posters/pamphlets around town calling for people interested in philosophical discussion. It's a good way to meet (somewhat) rational people, although you do attract your fair share of kooks as well.

---

Thats a good idea, although I'd have to find a venue (and pay for it presumably), but thats just logistics. Also, i dont really trust myself at the moment not to get all self-important. It could certainly be beneficial both ways though, definately worth investigation.

I also had an idea a little while ago about making signs and planting them next to roads. They could have short aphorisms/koans on them, to get people thinking. People have a lot of idle mind time while driving. You would have to be very careful about the content obviously, to avoid misunderstanding, but you could also potentially benefit large numbers of people. The other bonus is that you can never measure the effect, or even really know, which avoids ego issues.

Quote:

---

In the past, I've tried advertizing my services as a "thinker" both for free and for a fee. When my services were free, I mainly attracted young, university types, which was quite stimulating. When I charged a nominal fee ($20/hour), most of my "clients" were professional people over 40 - which largely made it a waste of time.

---

I really dont think charging is a good idea. You cannot really charge for something you cannot supply. You can only offer wisdom, the other person still has to take it, preferably with both hands. People tend to assume that no effort is required on their part if they have paid for something.

If you charge someone $20, you have set exactly how much the wisdom is worth. While its free, it remains priceless.

In all probability, if you or Kevin had charged for your books, I would not have read them. And if I had read them I would probably have taken them less seriously. Only a book where the author is writing for no reason other than what needs to be said can really be taken seriously. This compromise can clearly be seen in many books, but I notice it most often in "spiritual" books, presumably because im paying more attention.

Hywel

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1254

(1/15/04 7:29 am)

Reply

to stay or not to stay

---

I was not being sarcastic at all. Goodness, I would have to at least be provoked to start behaving badly. Your post was very open and straightforward. I simply didn't understand what you were talking about on a nitty gritty level.

The top of my post was to Tharan, and I thought it was clear because I said at the top "That was a sad post, Tharan." So, none of the bit about not sleeping with the wife and all had anything to do with you. But I wasn't saying you sleep with her to discover her emotional state, I said if you live with a woman and don't have sex with her, this is going to cause her to feel pretty upset and insecure, thus why talk about her needing her ego propped up. Presumably, in that situation, she is not at her best.

You have expressed a fair amount of inner conflict - but I don't understand what it is about. Perhaps I need to reread your original post.

You say you have been in love so how can you be sure you are now incapable of it? I think I understand part of your conflict now - you have residual hatred for the girlfriend you broke up with and you don't want to go there again. I think hate and love are rather close, so its no wonder you say you might hate someone if they leave you. Of course, it was a low level kind of love. Real love isn't like that. The opposite of love is indifference, or fear.

There is an enlightened kind of love that is not focused on one's self, and not dependent upon receiving. Just pure appreciation.

Quote:

---

In the last part of your post, you basically state that school doesnt mean you end up happy, but suggest I stay in school anyway, to get more money while probably being unhappy. Do you really think having a Ph.D would make you much more satisfied with life?

---

What I was saying is there is not a right answer. It was right for my son to drop out because he loves his livelihood, and he is the sort of person who has 5 more things he wants to do at any one time than can be done - he will always find his way in this world. My daughters are in college, too. The first doesn't really know what she wants to do, and she is in her 3rd year.

The second wants to study Russian until she can be a translator. That's another thing I would have loved to do. In fact, may do. She will also study Spanish. So she doesn't absolutely need a college degree, but it would be hard any other way.

What I'm saying is, if there is something you want to do, you should do it either with or without school, depending on what that something is. If my first husband had wanted to work as a translator, he could do it without any degree, because he is completely bilingual. But the SOB didn't teach my kids.

What I'm saying is, don't dump school in a panic only to end up with no direction and low end jobs. If you're going to be a wage slave, its better to get paid more.

You bypassed my remark about going tribal, but it is a new wave you haven't heard of, and its worth looking into. That is the real reason many people are dissatisfied. The downside of civilization is you generally end up as a wage slave. Check out www.newtribalventures.com/NTV/ It's an idea whose time has come.

Yeah, I would have been very happy with a Ph.d if it was in something interesting. I would have liked academia, teaching, research, whatever. I like science a lot - I mean it is better than religion, as good as sex.

My family fell apart when I was about 12, and I don't mean in the usual way. I mean I really had no where to live. So it was not easy to understand that there were ways out, such as getting a scholarship. No one told me.

The question is, what do you like to do, what kind of future do you envision?

Rairun

Registered User

Posts: 165

(1/15/04 9:03 am)

Reply

...

---

Quote:

---

Hywel: I mean the same thing as being incapable of hate. I have been in love so I do know what it feels like. If you love someone and they leave you, you will hate them. If you do not love someone and they leave you, you will not hate them. I want to give up hate forever, and in order to do that you have to give up love for one thing over another. Love is ownership (or at least desire for ownership), and I do not wish to own or be owned.

---

Even though that's what happens to most people, it's not always like that. Even if you equal love to ownership (or the desire for it), hate doesn't need to appear in that situation at all.

I'm a bit like you in that aspect - I don't want to be owned and, most importantly, I don't want to own anyone. But that doesn't mean I need to fight the desire to have exclusive rights to another person. I just keep in mind that I actually have no right whatsoever to have those exclusive rights, if the other person doesn't wish to grant them to me. If she wished to take them away, I wouldn't see it as an attack to me at all, so no hate would appear.

It's true that if my girlfriend decided to hook up with another person, or leave me altogether, I would feel sad about it in the beginning. If I didn't want to be sad, only then I'd let the desire to have those exclusive rights go. And that's not hard to do, believe me. You only have to fix something when it's actually broken. In my case, being so paranoid about setting up the perfectly ideal condition that would eliminate my "suffering" caused more distress than anything else, because I was fighting with myself while doing it. Letting go of those ideas was the best thing I've ever done.

There's a difference between being together because both people want it, and being together because you want power over the other. I did let go of control, but not of the desire to be with her.

Also, I'd never be in a relationship where those feelings weren't mutual. I would never try to be involved with anyone who desired control over me...

Not so much for myself, but because of the way the relationship would develop itself around games. I don't like them.

Haha, I remember that when I finally got that figured out, I thought that it'd be pretty much impossible to find anyone like that. I had my mind set to be alone and be celibate. But I found that it could actually happen. It's funny how things work out.

I think the words "care" or "respect" only have any meaning when you don't attempt to mold the other person as you desire.

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 260
(1/15/04 9:40 am)
Reply

Re: ...

---

Rairun wrote:

Quote:

---

Even if you equal love to ownership (or the desire for it), hate doesn't need to appear in that situation at all.

---

Hate increases in proportion to desire. If there is no desire, there is no hatred. If there is little desire, then there is little hate, which may surface as "sadness".

But if there is no desire, there is no love.

Imagine if you had a girlfriend, but that you actually couldn't care less whether she spent any time with you at all. Imagine that you really didn't mind in the slightest if she spent literally all her time with her other boyfriends, who really want to be with her, and are willing to make big sacrifices to do so, and that, consequently, you never saw her. Would she feel particularly loved by you? I doubt it.

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 2032

(1/15/04 10:01 am)

Reply

Re: What To Do?

---

Hywel wrote:

Quote:

---

DQ: You might want to try putting up posters/pamphlets around town calling for people interested in philosophical discussion. It's a good way to meet (somewhat) rational people, although you do attract your fair share of kooks as well.

Hywel: That's a good idea, although I'd have to find a venue (and pay for it presumably), but that's just logistics.

---

Well, I just used my living room and only engaged in one-on-one conversations.

Quote:

---

DQ: In the past, I've tried advertising my services as a "thinker" both for free and for a fee. When my services were free, I mainly attracted young, university types, which was quite stimulating. When I charged a nominal fee ($20/hour), most of my "clients" were professional people over 40 - which largely made it a waste of time.

Hywel: I really don't think charging is a good idea. You cannot really charge for something you cannot supply. You can only offer wisdom, the other person still has to take it, preferably with both hands. People tend to assume that no effort is required on their part if they have paid for something.

If you charge someone $20, you have set exactly how much the wisdom is worth. While it's free, it remains priceless.

In all probability, if you or Kevin had charged for your books, I would not have read them. And if I had read them I would probably have taken them less seriously. Only a book where the author is writing for no reason other than what needs to be said can really be taken seriously. This compromise can clearly be seen in many books, but I notice it most often in "spiritual" books, presumably because im paying more attention.

---

You make good points and I essentially agree with them. I was mainly interested in what effect charging a fee would have on the type of "client" I would attract and upon the ensuing conversation. I found that when I offered a free service many people wanted to brow-beat me with their own theologies, which gets a bit tedious after a while and creates fewer opportunities to open their minds to rational lines of thought. I thought that if I were to charge a fee, the client would implicitly demand to get value for his money and would be more mentally ready for serious discussion. But as I mentioned, I mainly attracted middle-aged people who were far too set in their ways to absorb radically new lines of thought, and so I stopped doing it after a while.

Rairun
Registered User
Posts: 167
(1/15/04 10:47 am)
Reply

...

---

Quote:

---

Hate increases in proportion to desire. If there is no desire, there is no hatred. If there is little desire, then there is little hate, which may surface as "sadness".

---

I don't agree that "little hate" can surface as sadness, even because their natures are different. Sadness surfaces when you desire the current situation to be different than it is. Hate is a whole other movement. It appears when you blame someone/something for that sadness.

Quote:

---

But if there is no desire, there is no love.

---

If you define love as the desire to own, you're right. You can't forget the care and respect though.

Quote:

---

Imagine if you had a girlfriend, but that you actually couldn't care less whether she spent any time with you at all. Imagine that you really didn't mind in the slightest if she spent literally all her time with her other boyfriends, who really want to be with her, and are willing to make big sacrifices to do so, and that, consequently, you never saw her. Would she feel particularly loved by you? I doubt it.

---

I'm going to bring this back to a situation that I've actually lived, and that illustrates well my point.

I care about the amount of time my girlfriend spends with me, simply because I want to be in her company and I like it when she also wants to be near me. If she doesn't want to be near me for a long time, I know I'm going to feel sad. That's where it stops. Even though I'm sad, and I desire her to want to be with me, I know that the things she wants can't be changed. Being who she is at that moment, she can't help but desire to do other things than to be with me. I would never try to make her be with me against her will, through mind games or whatever else, because I respect and care about her. Trying to control her would only harm her, in my opinion. I'm not concerned with her feeling MY love, even though I still desire to be with her. My love wouldn't be love if it harmed her.

ksolway
Registered User
Posts: 263
(1/15/04 2:58 pm)
Reply

Re: ...

---

Quote:

---

KS: If there is little desire, then there is little hate, which may surface as "sadness".

Rairun: I don't agree that "little hate" can surface as sadness, even because their natures are different. Sadness surfaces when you desire the current situation to be different than it is. Hate is a whole other movement. It appears when you blame someone/something for that sadness.

---

I agree that "sadness surfaces when you desire the current situation to be different than it is". But this is also precisely when full-blown anger and hatred come to the surface. That is, both sadness and hatred are reactions to disappointment with reality, and are an expression of being upset with the Universe.

Whereas in normal hatred the pain is externalized, in sadness (and self-pity) the pain is internalized.

That's why I think normal outward hatred is really composed of the same "stuff" as inward sadness and self-pity.

Sometimes the inward pain at the loss of something is so great that it cannot be contained as mere personal sadness, and explodes as outward anger and hatred.

The more rational you are, the more you will be able to contain it. Or the more social restrictions there are on the outward display of anger, the more you will contain it.

[As an aside, when women are faced with great loss, they will often direct their anger at themselves, or else collapse completely, in an act of self-destruction. . . . On second thoughts . . . any man who has lived with a woman through her hormonal ups and downs might find it hard to agree that women can keep their anger to themselves. ]

Quote:

---

If you define love as the desire to own, you're right. You can't forget the care and respect though.

---

Care and respect can also be "owned" in the sense that if you enjoy caring for and respecting someone, then you will be disappointed when that person leaves you, and that pleasure is taken away.

Disappointment and sorrow are soiled things, not to be wished upon anyone. These things have a dark aura (if you will allow me to sound momentarily like a fortune teller), and always result in more things in the same vein - in line with cause and effect. They are deeply "karmic", affecting not only the individual, but those around them.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 743
(1/15/04 3:33 pm)
Reply

Re: What To Do?

---

Tharan: I think that may be the root of the problem; i.e. what is "real." Her definitions of "real" are feelings. My definitions of "real" are concepts, and even that is marginal.

Hello Tharan,

The problem is that you are both right. One would think that posting to Genius for years prepared you for that sort of thing. I mean the feminine 'feelings' versus male 'concepts' type of conflict.

I don't know what to think after reading your posts. You say you love her, but between the lines I read the opposite. It confuses me. Are you sure about loving her?

Thomas

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 447
(1/15/04 3:48 pm)
Reply

Re: What To Do?

---

Hywel- my thoughts

In seeking enlightenment you lose a lot of your life. Your ego shrinks and with that your life compresses.

Within a shrunken ego danger lurks. Your ego is under pressure, constrained and mental hernias can therefore break out into inappropriate directions. These ego outbursts can then assume an unwarranted importance even if they just act to provide a release from the pressure of constrained ego. Sometimes these ego outbursts become self-perpetuating causes and make people believe in irrational or incomplete concepts.

I guess when enlightenment is attained the ego becomes completely free of the social forces that bind it but also in no need of control as a normal ego does. Do you feel you can achieve that?

I have no answer to laziness, but I think an answer to that point would be the key to your posts. You need to be sure that you love truth deeply enough to overcome this pinhole in the shrunken balloon of a semi-enlightened mind. Only you can determine when the risk-reward ratio is at its most beneficial. It seems you don't yet know, which says to me that now is not the time. Prove to yourself that your not lazy, then maybe.

This would provide an incredible impetus to become more conscious, if only out of guilt at my burden on society!

This statement is the reason I said maybe. What you are saying is that you don't have enough faith in the 'reason' that you wish to deepen and then spread, to feel that it is more beneficial for society than the paltry sum you'd receive.

I don't think you are ready. Lazy people rarely become sages. Make yourself unlazy first by doing something like David suggests and finishing the course. A little test of mental discipline.

Drop the girlfriend, you seemed to have realised that love becomes difficult or impossible for those who've realised that it is possible to live without it, but you don't seem to have had enough experience without it, after all the reason you lying to her about loving her is to keep her. Realise though that you'll need to have a mind that is able to get comfort and soothing from words otherwise you'll be unhappy. I don't know if you have such a mind yet, I doubt it, it seems to me that you lack self-confidence (you don't handle rejection well) and desire release from that through philosophical wisdom (I think the QRS were all once in the same boat actually). Now that is OK but you seem to young and unsure of yourself for wisdom to have worked it's way fully into your system. After about 6-12 months without a sex interest you should find out how motivated towards wisdom you are.

Edited by: jimhaz at: 1/15/04 3:50 pm

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1416
(1/15/04 5:55 pm)
Reply

Re: What To Do?

---

Thomas wrote,

Quote:

---

Are you sure about loving her?

---

When I am hungry, I eat. When tired, I sleep. When I care, I love. I don't need.

Tharan

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 746
(1/15/04 6:23 pm)
Reply

Re: What To Do?

---

Tharan: When I am hungry, I eat. When tired, I sleep. When I care, I love. I don't need.

Right. That's exactly the point. The thing about love is that it is voluntary. You don't need to love. You don't need to care. Love is unconditional and effortless.

If you find that loving her tires you then you don't love her.

Thomas

Hywel
Registered User
Posts: 47
(1/21/04 2:03 am)
Reply

Re: What To Do?

---

To bird of hermes,

Quote:

---

I was not being sarcastic at all. Goodness, I would have to at least be provoked to start behaving badly. Your post was very open and straightforward. I simply didn't understand what you were talking about on a nitty gritty level.

---

Ok, no problem. Ego propping occurs when someone is dissatisfied with who they are or something they have done. They then request that someone else say they/their actions ARE satisfactory, so that they feel better.

This is very easy to see in children, because they have no reason to hide it. When a small child asks "Is my picture good?" they are merely asking for information. But when they grow a little older and begin to have an ego, they will ask "This picture is good, isnt it?", openly asking for your confirmation and ego propping, and providing you with the correct response. As they further grow they realise that they must hide the fact that this is an ego propping request, and the question becomes "This picture is crap, isnt it?", but obviously, your response is still required to be that it is perfectly satisfactory.

In adults, the requests become even more subtle (although in some people they remain obvious), in order to hide what they are, and they cannot be eliminated completely until the ego itself is eliminated.

Quote:

---

You say you have been in love so how can you be sure you are now incapable of it?

---

Because love requires complete innocence (ignorance).

Quote:

---

I think I understand part of your conflict now - you have residual hatred for the girlfriend you broke up with and you don't want to go there again.

---

I can understand why you would think this. I have met many people who have been hurt in relationships, and basically decide they can't trust anyone with their feelings, and shut themselves off. But I never did hate my ex-girlfriend. I messed her around, and in the end she got pissed off and left me. She treated me fairly, so I never could lay the blame on her. But I really wanted to hate her, which forced me to examine the nature of love and hate.

Quote:

---

Real love isn't like that. The opposite of love is indifference, or fear.

---

Well said (except the fear bit, fear = hate).

Quote:

---

There is an enlightened kind of love that is not focused on one's self, and not dependent upon receiving. Just pure appreciation.

---

This is true, real love, you are right. But the bit about appreciation is wrong.

You cannot have "pure appreciation" while the people around you are suffering UNLESS you are indifferent to them (i.e you dont truly love them, only low level love).

Quote:

---

What I'm saying is, don't dump school in a panic only to end up with no direction and low end jobs. If you're going to be a wage slave, its better to get paid more.

---

Im stubborn enough not to get thrown out of school unless i choose to go. Apart from that you basically seem to agree with my summary.

Quote:

---

You bypassed my remark about going tribal, but it is a new wave you haven't heard of, and its worth looking into. That is the real reason many people are dissatisfied. The downside of civilization is you generally end up as a wage slave. Check out www.newtribalventures.com/NTV/ It's an idea whose time has come.

---

Yes, I had a quick look at the site. It seems the basic idea is to tie your emotions to the fortunes of a group rather than just yourself. This is not a new idea. Is there more to it than this?

Quote:

---

Yeah, I would have been very happy with a Ph.d if it was in something interesting. I would have liked academia, teaching, research, whatever. I like science a lot - I mean it is better than religion, as good as sex.

---

Im surrounded by academia and teaching, and its all pretty vacant, a job training factory. Research is the only real interest I can see, and for me the shine has come off that one too, due to the inherent limitations of science.

Quote:

---

My family fell apart when I was about 12, and I don't mean in the usual way. I mean I really had no where to live. So it was not easy to understand that there were ways out, such as getting a scholarship. No one told me.

---

A scholarship does not constitute a way out. A way out exists, you can consider yourself told. Information on this way out can be found in many places, but you do not need to be told, you could find it all out for yourself, and in the end, you will have to.

Quote:

---

The question is, what do you like to do, what kind of future do you envision?

---

One which I play some part in determining.

To Rairun,

Quote:

---

I'm a bit like you in that aspect - I don't want to be owned and, most importantly, I don't want to own anyone. But that doesn't mean I need to fight the desire to have exclusive rights to another person. I just keep in mind that I actually have no right whatsoever to have those exclusive rights, if the other person doesn't wish to grant them to me. If she wished to take them away, I wouldn't see it as an attack to me at all, so no hate would appear.

---

But is not the fact that you have exclusive rights to her predicated on the fact that she has exclusive rights to you? The fact that she freely grants you exclusive access is dependent on you doing the same. If you told her that she no longer had exclusive rights to you, would she still freely give you exclusive rights to her?

Quote:

---

It's true that if my girlfriend decided to hook up with another person, or leave me altogether, I would feel sad about it in the beginning. If I didn't want to be sad, only then I'd let the desire to have those exclusive rights go. And that's not hard to do, believe me. You only have to fix something when it's actually broken. In my case, being so paranoid about setting up the perfectly ideal condition that would eliminate my "suffering" caused more distress than anything else, because I was fighting with myself while doing it. Letting go of those ideas was the best thing I've ever done.

---

So now you aren't suffering, and you feel much more satisfied and content, even though nothing has really changed other than you getting some emotional support. Is this a good thing?

Quote:

---

There's a difference between being together because both people want it, and being together because you want power over the other. I did let go of control, but not of the desire to be with her.

---

To the extent that you still desire to be with her, you will still desire control.

Quote:

---

Also, I'd never be in a relationship where those feelings weren't mutual. I would never try to be involved with anyone who desired control over me... Not so much for myself, but because of the way the relationship would develop itself around games. I don't like them.

Haha, I remember that when I finally got that figured out, I thought that it'd be pretty much impossible to find anyone like that. I had my mind set to be alone and be celibate. But I found that it could actually happen. It's funny how things work out.

---

This is pretty much how I felt too.

When I first came to this forum, I automatically started judging people, deciding who they are, what they are like etc.

I also automatically noticed in what ways people were different from me, and what ways were the same. On that initial judgement, I saw myself as most like you out of the people on the board, in a very similar "place" to you.

So when I am talking to you, I'm also talking to me. But now you seem to want to stay in the place I know I have to leave. It is time to wake up, Rairun, you must know you cannot hide here forever.

To jimhaz,

Quote:

---

In seeking enlightenment you lose a lot of your life. Your ego shrinks and with that your life compresses.

Within a shrunken ego danger lurks. Your ego is under pressure, constrained and mental hernias can therefore break out into inappropriate directions. These ego outbursts can then assume an unwarranted importance even if they just act to provide a release from the pressure of constrained ego. Sometimes these ego outbursts become self-perpetuating causes and make people believe in irrational or incomplete concepts.

---

I have noticed this, occasionally I have experienced emotions inappropriate to the situation. You have to "defuse" the ego before applying any more pressure. I don't really have much belief or faith, and only tend to "believe" in things if they are self-evident, but the warning is appreciated.

Quote:

---

I guess when enlightenment is attained the ego becomes completely free of the social forces that bind it but also in no need of control as a normal ego does. Do you feel you can achieve that?

---

Ive never felt that there was anything that could be done, that I could not do. It simply requires caring about it enough. Whether I care about it enough is the real question, and I dont know for sure, it is in flux.

Quote:

---

"This would provide an incredible impetus to become more conscious, if only out of guilt at my burden on society!"

This statement is the reason I said maybe. What you are saying is that you don't have enough faith in the 'reason' that you wish to deepen and then spread, to feel that it is more beneficial for society than the paltry sum you'd receive.

---

Yup, thats pretty much what I'm saying. Although there is also the debt to the universe for my existence, to which an infinite amount is owed really.

Quote:

---

I don't think you are ready. Lazy people rarely become sages. Make yourself unlazy first by doing something like David suggests and finishing the course. A little test of mental discipline.

---

You dont get ready for the olympics by considering whether to compete. Point taken.

Quote:

---

Drop the girlfriend, you seemed to have realised that love becomes difficult or impossible for those who've realised that it is possible to live without it, but you don't seem to have had enough experience without it, after all the reason you lying to her about loving her is to keep her. Realise though that you'll need to have a mind that is able to get comfort and soothing from words otherwise you'll be unhappy. I don't know if you have such a mind yet, I doubt it, it seems to me that you lack self-confidence (you don't handle rejection well) and desire release from that through philosophical wisdom (I think the QRS were all once in the same boat actually). Now that is OK but you seem to young and unsure of yourself for wisdom to have worked it's way fully into your system. After about 6-12 months without a sex interest you should find out how motivated towards wisdom you are.

---

Thanks for this, although I disagree about having to find comfort in words. None of my current understanding relies on words, it doesn't even have a form unless I choose to apply it. But to find comfort and soothing in understanding, this I understand!

Hywel

Rairun
Registered User
Posts: 178
(1/21/04 3:07 am)
Reply

...

---

Quote:

---

Rairun: I'm a bit like you in that aspect - I don't want to be owned and, most importantly, I don't want to own anyone. But that doesn't mean I need to fight the desire to have exclusive rights to another person. I just keep in mind that I actually have no right whatsoever to have those exclusive rights, if the other person doesn't wish to grant them to me. If she wished to take them away, I wouldn't see it as an attack to me at all, so no hate would appear.

Hywel: But is not the fact that you have exclusive rights to her predicated on the fact that she has exclusive rights to you? The fact that she freely grants you exclusive access is dependent on you doing the same. If you told her that she no longer had exclusive rights to you, would she still freely give you exclusive rights to her?

---

It isn't, really. It's not a question of deciding if I should give her exclusive rights, or if she should give me exclusive rights. As things stand now, I don't feel like being with anyone else but her, and she doesn't feel like being with anyone else but me. If one day she felt like being with someone else, I wouldn't stop her from doing that... and I wouldn't stop giving her exclusive rights either, because that's truly what I want to do. I give her exclusive rights because I want to do so, not because I want anything back. If the opposite were to happen, I know it'd be the same too. I don't want tell any details here in this board to explain why I'm so sure that things are that way, but they are.

Quote:

---

Rairun: It's true that if my girlfriend decided to hook up with another person, or leave me altogether, I would feel sad about it in the beginning. If I didn't want to be sad, only then I'd let the desire to have those exclusive rights go. And that's not hard to do, believe me. You only have to fix something when it's actually broken. In my case, being so paranoid about setting up the perfectly ideal condition that would eliminate my "suffering" caused more distress than anything else, because I was fighting with myself while doing it. Letting go of those ideas was the best thing I've ever done.

Hywel: So now you arent suffering, and you feel much more satisfied and content, even though nothing has really changed other than you getting some emotional support. Is this a good thing?

---

I feel much more satisfied and content because I stopped telling myself "you can't feel this, you can't feel that, you must be detached". For example, right after I first started talking to her, I thought I was going to see her one night but I ended up not being able to. At that point, I thought that I couldn't long for her because that was a sign of attachment and attachment is bad! Why is it bad?! I actually wanted to long for her! If I didn't want to, I would stop it, easily. What was causing me distress was my idea that I had to be detached.

Quote:

---

Rairun: There's a difference between being together because both people want it, and being together because you want power over the other. I did let go of control, but not of the desire to be with her.

Hywel: To the extent that you still desire to be with her, you will still desire control.

---

No. You wish that the situation will be the same as you want, but if it happens to change, you don't interfere. I want her to want to be with me; but if she doesn't, I know I can't try to change that without harming her in some way, so I don't.

Quote:

---

Hywel: This is pretty much how I felt too.

When I first came to this forum, I automatically started judging people, deciding who they are, what they are like etc. I also automatically noticed in what ways people were different from me, and what ways were the same. On that initial judgement, I saw myself as most like you out of the people on the board, in a very similar "place" to you.

So when I am talking to you, I'm also talking to me. But now you seem to want to stay in the place I know I have to leave. It is time to wake up, Rairun, you must know you cannot hide here forever.

---

I'm not saying that you don't have to do something about the way things are, because you seem unsatisfied with it. The situation with your girlfriend seems different, because it's like you're living a lie. You're hiding things from her because of how she'd feel if you told her the truth. I don't think it does any good to do that.

Maybe the place where we both are isn't the same. I truly am happy with the way things are for me. If you aren't, do something about it. If I were to give you any advice, it'd be not to listen to anyone and have things your way. You do know what you want, don't let anything confuse you and stop you from doing it.

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1310
(1/21/04 3:35 am)
Reply

Re: What To Do?

---

Quote:

---

This is very easy to see in children, because they have no reason to hide it. When a small child asks "Is my picture good?" they are merely asking for information. But when they grow a little older and begin to have an ego, they will ask "This picture is good, isnt it?", openly asking for your confirmation and ego propping, and providing you with the correct response. As they further grow they realise that they must hide the fact that this is an ego propping request, and the question becomes "This picture is crap, isnt it?", but obviously, your response is still required to be that it is perfectly satisfactory.

---

Ha, ha, quite funny.

Quote:

---

Real love isn't like that. The opposite of love is indifference, or fear.

Well said (except the fear bit, fear = hate).

---

Well, if you hate that which you fear, then certainly love is its opposite. Basically, you hate that which threatens yor life, and without fear, you are free to love.

(This is why Chritianity is the seedbed of atheism. Any honest Christian must come to hate God.)

Quote:

---

This is true, real love, you are right. But the bit about appreciation is wrong. You cannot have "pure appreciation" while the people around you are suffering UNLESS you are indifferent to them (i.e you dont truly love them, only low level love).

---

This doesn't follow at all. It shows you are highly judgemental. You're saying you can't love that which you judge needs improvement and changing. Accepting all things and beings as they are at the moment does not at all preclude assisting them, and appreciating them does not mean you are indifferent to them. Why would it? This is not low level love, it is universal and impartial, very pure.

There is a right way to strive and a wrong way. The right way is to keep an eye on the goal, but not be agitated or impatient. The wrong way is tense and impatient.

Quote:

---

A scholarship does not constitute a way out.

---

I was not meaning a spiritual way out. I have always taken control of that search. I simply meant that I would have wanted to be part of a more academic world, and I thought that there was no way I could go to a good university, whereas I could easily have done so, if I understood that there were routes to it.

Quote:

---

It seems the basic idea is to tie your emotions to the fortunes of a group rather than just yourself. This is not a new idea. Is there more to it than this?

---

Quote:

---

Research is the only real interest I can see, and for me the shine has come off that one too, due to the inherent limitations of science.

---

These two quotes seem related. No wonder you're bummed out. First, let me state that I am not a Buddhist, despite finding much of the abstract ideas very worthwhile. I like what Natuyl said - nearly all of what we consider the major world religions have death as the ultimate goal. These religions, including Buddhism, are a disease, and its contagious. It is not a matter of "tying your emotions" to a group - it is a way of making a living that is tied to a group. I only wish all those who want to extricate themselves from life would do so, and let us pagans have the planet back.

Suffering is not the nature of existence! Joy and wonder is the nature of existence!

By inherent limits of science I suppose you mean that science can't bring ultimate truth or enlightenment? I rule out nothing, and besides, ultimate truth is everywhere. What better way to remain on a spiritual high than to be a scientist, always immersing yourself in the amazing facts of nature? Perhaps there are limits to science, but it is so shortsighted to worry about that. We have not come close to any limit. 20th century medicine is more barbaric than the application of leaches.

The main problem I have with research, is that it is almost completely tainted by corporate interest.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 771
(1/21/04 8:29 pm)
Reply

Re: What To Do?

---

Anna: Suffering is not the nature of existence! Joy and wonder is the nature of existence!

...to which the Buddhist answer is that they are both dukkha; they are both the same; the latter is merely the flipside of the former.

These religions, including Buddhism, are a disease, and its contagious. It is not a matter of "tying your emotions" to a group - it is a way of making a living that is tied to a group. I only wish all those who want to extricate themselves from life would do so, and let us pagans have the planet back.

Religious zeal can become an escape from life, and Buddhism is certainly no exception. I don't think much of Buddhism as a religion, but as a personal philosophy I find it splendid. Instead of running away from life, Buddhism can actually teach one to live life more skillfully. That's what counts IMO.

Thomas

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2105

(1/21/04 8:53 pm)

Reply

---

Bird is right about the opposite of love...

Quote:

(This is why Chritianity is the seedbed of atheism. Any honest Christian must come to hate God.)

And entirely wrong about this! No honest christian exists!

And you have no idea what atheism is, no matter how often I tell you! (:D)

I am not about to compete with anyone in here on terms of finer feeling!
Intellectual superiority entails a joyous entourage!

Look at Kevin trying to badmouth disappointment!

Paul

Registered User

Posts: 417

(1/21/04 9:29 pm)

Reply

-----

Birdofhermes:

Quote:

Basically, you hate that which threatens your life, and without fear, you are free to love.

Sometimes I hate myself, because when I read what is in this quote, I thought suergaz wrote it.

We're all One! Hooray!

Geez. :-)

Rairun

Registered User

Posts: 181

(1/21/04 9:37 pm)

Reply

...

---

Quote:

---

Anna: Suffering is not the nature of existence! Joy and wonder is the nature of existence!

Thomas: ...to which the Buddhist answer is that they are both dukkha; they are both the same; the latter is merely the flipside of the former.

---

I wouldn't say that joy and wonder are the nature of existence, because at times I don't feel joy or wonder, but at the same time I like my suffering! If I didn't like it, I'd just die! And that makes me ask myself: if I like it, should I even call it suffering to begin with?!

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1313

(1/22/04 1:58 am)

Reply

Re: What To Do?

---

Quote:

---

Anna: Suffering is not the nature of existence! Joy and wonder is the nature of existence!

...to which the Buddhist answer is that they are both dukkha; they are both the same; the latter is merely the flipside of the former.

---

I realize I was speaking idealistically, and I am a lucky person to find myself in the above condition a good deal of the time, and serenity the rest of the time. But I'm not sure what you mean by flip side. That implies suffering is necessary for nonsuffering to occur. I question that. In good conditions a person can go most of their life without any serious suffering, certainly they can spend their childhood and youth that way. And the predominant perception is one of joy and wonder.

What do you think of the idea of the Self? If a person were aware of the nondying Self, it would be hard for suffering to have much deep effect on her, yet the joy and wonder would be all the greater, due to lack of fear.

Also, Thomas, what is the difference between what you think Buddha meant by the reincarnating entity and the Indian idea of Atman?

+++++

Quote:

---

(This is why Chritianity is the seedbed of atheism. Any honest Christian must come to hate God.)

-----
And entirely wrong about this! No honest christian exists!

---

Ha,ha, but that only proves my point. They must become honest before rejecting Christianity, or God.

Quote:

---

And you have no idea what atheism is, no matter how often I tell you! (:D)

---

Atheism is the lack of a belief in God. But you have faith that there is no God.

-----
Quote:

---

Basically, you hate that which threatens your life, and without fear, you are free to love.

Sometimes I hate myself, because when I read what is in this quote, I thought suergaz wrote it.

---

Was it too good for him?

Edited by: birdofhermes at: 1/22/04 2:14 am

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 419
(1/22/04 5:08 am)
Reply

-----

Birdofhermes:

Quote:

Atheism is the lack of a belief in God. But you have faith that there is no God.

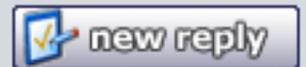

You're using (some of) the Reason QRS are to blame for. Stop that.

(I love that expression: 'QRS'. Just as I like the men who set up this forum opportunity for our minor people.)

There's is no God.
OMG, what did I say?

I'm quite sure that Zag & Anna ought to be married. In that way...
Sorry, my phone is ringing.

(Yes, I'm babbling, but aren't we all?)

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

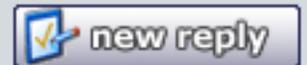

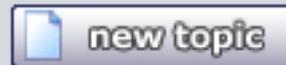

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

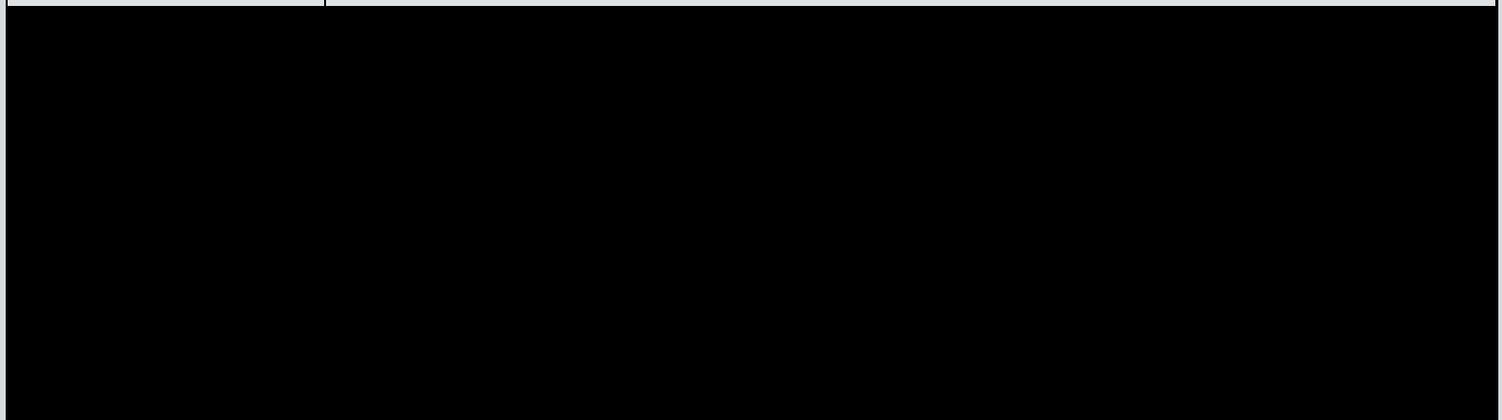

> What To Do?

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                       | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2107(1/22/04 12:18 pm)Reply     | -----<hr/> suergaz:--No honest christian exists!Anna:--Ha,ha, but that only proves my point. They must become honest before rejecting Christianity, or God.Before? If they become honest, they are no longer christian.Nothing you write is too good for me. |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1319(1/22/04 1:12 pm)Reply | Re: -----<hr/> Well, there is a metamorphosis.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1322
(1/23/04 4:53 am)
Reply

Atman

Thomas did you miss this:

Quote:

Also, Thomas, what is the difference between what you think Buddha meant by the reincarnating entity and the Indian idea of Atman?

It was not clear to me at the time you wrote about it.

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

Genius News

David Quinn's Site

The Thinking Man's Minefield

EZB Edit

Gold Community GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> What will you do ?, if i tell you the truth.

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                                                | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| unknownRegistered UserPosts: 50(6/26/04 2:39 am)Reply                                                                                      | What will you do ?, if i tell you the truth. <hr/> Hey humans, For the sake of argument , If i tell you the truth , what you will do next? If you can tell me that , you have a chance to know the truth. peaceunknown. |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 1132(6/26/04 9:30)Reply  | Re: What will you do ?, if i tell you the truth. <hr/> Quote: <hr/> For the sake of argument, <hr/> LOL, never a TRUER word spoken. Well I guess that, first things first, I'll go crazy. Then, it seems, my English         | will become lucid in one sentence, grammatically incorrect in the next and undecipherable in the next. This would be followed by an uncontrollable predilection for fevered preaching along the paradoxical lines of the following:

Ask questions.

Never agree or disagree.

(Except about agreeing to ask questions, and agreeing never to agree or disagree.)

Answers stop progress.

(With this answer, you can progress.)

Why do you all human monkeys want answers?

Why you all think some other monkey fool has answer for you?

(This is an answer, which I give to you, in the form of a question, which I shouldn't be asking really.)

You are going nowhere with your so called knowledge (beliefs).

(This I know.)

You need tremendous courage to be without having answers.

(I'm courageous enough to know that answer.)

It needs tremendous clarity in your mind to be NOT BELONGING.

(Yes, to BELONG in NOT BELONGING.)

As long as you think there is a TRUTH , then you will find your version of truth.

(This is the truth.)

MIND is a myth.

It is not there. It is only there when you imagine it is there.

(Though I'm not too sure what you imagine it with.)

That kind of stuff.

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 1724

(6/26/04 9:47)

Reply

Re: What will you do ?, if i tell you the truth.

---

Unknnown, you idiot. How the hell can anyone tell you what they will do next, upon hearing some so-called "truth", without knowing what that truth is?

You are insufferably stupid. That is the truth.

Go away.

Dan Rowden

voce io

Registered User

Posts: 964

(6/26/04 9:51)

Reply

Re: What will you do ?, if i tell you the truth.

---

Damn, I was hoping this topic would get the silent treatment.

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 1728

(6/26/04 10:03)

Reply

Re: What will you do ?, if i tell you the truth.

---

Unfortunately, Unknnown has never responded to that treatment in the hoped-for manner.

Dan Rowden

unknown

Registered User

Posts: 51

(6/26/04 10:34)

Reply

Re: What will you do ?, if i tell you the truth.

---

hi drowden ,

Human monkey. Actually you resemble a physical monkey. hahaha.

But again eyes can fool you as well.

Only you can be idiot to your own babble. There is nothing you say that going to change the world.

The same thing applies to all humans.

Drowden , evolve please. hahaha.

Don't take things serious , you will lose yourself into the illusion created by words. Relax human.

if you start to think seriously , you are really fucked , you will become rightwing zealot.

There is nothing wrong with anything though , monkey chooses what ever make him happy.

David Toast ,

You are thinking finally. (was it unknowns best collection ?). Hahaha.

Rational thinking only get you in the loop.

You will never come out of it.

peace

unknown

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1512

(6/26/04 12:54)

Reply

Re: What will you do ?, if i tell you the truth.

---

Quote:

---

Unfortunately, Unknnown has never responded to that treatment in the hoped-for manner.

---

It has never been tried.

WolfsonJakk

Posts: 1666

(6/26/04 14:05)

Reply

Re: What will you do ?, if i tell you the truth

---

I am a monkey. So what?

unknown

Registered User

Posts: 52

(6/26/04 15:54)

Reply

Re: What will you do ?, if i tell you the truth

---

hey notsure , babbler.

The problem with you and other humans is that you have no control of what you all speak.

You know it.

You know you have no answer except a ad-hoc belief.

Yet you all come here and babble.

Ask question. You will see clouds of beliefs disappear.

There is no magic.

There is no mystery.

Anything make you think does n't exist.

Until you negate yourself , you have no chance of knowing who you are.

peace

unknown

|                                                                                                                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| somaRegistered UserPosts: 1(6/29/04 2:29)Reply                                                                                           | &gt; Re: What will you do ?, if i tell you the truth <hr/> No one can speak of the Truth. As soon as they do, it is dead. A stepchild. Truth is not of the intellect, but of the witness. Peace, soma                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 1133(6/29/04 2:34)Reply  | Re: &gt; Re: What will you do ?, if i tell you the truth <hr/> Is that the truth of the matter?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| somaRegistered UserPosts: 2(6/29/04 2:43)Reply                                                                                           | &gt; Re: What will you do ?, if i tell you the truth <hr/> Words can only point the way... Experience is the only true knowledge.. Be the Witness. peace                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| bikkieRegistered UserPosts: 9(6/29/04 17:19)Reply                                                                                        | Re: What will you do ?, if i tell you the truth. <hr/> Well ,i guess all i can say is that i dont feel i know the so-called Ultimate Truth. Is it possible that the Ultimate Truth can be accessible to an individualised-based perspective when every individual shares a unique view ? My truth is basically relative to me through my own perceptional filters for interpretation. I dont like saying i know the truth ,but i guess i can always say what i believe in. So, to me theres no end to learning ,i enjoy learning .And we seem all to | be on different levels which makes it interesting.

Bikk

unknown

Registered User

Posts: 55

(6/29/04 17:47)

Reply

Re: What will you do ?, if i tell you the truth.

---

hey humans,

the question is not what is truth.

foolish monkey humans.

The question is even if you know the TRUTH, what will you do next?

Is TRUTH completes you ? Or ?

if TRUTH does n't completes you , Then it can't be TRUTH is n't it? or ?

THINK.

Stop trying to answer me.

Ask question to yourself. You only needs to know.

peace

unknown

bikkie

Registered User

Posts: 10

(6/29/04 17:58)

Reply

Re: What will you do ?, if i tell you the truth.

---

I guess my truth is relative to me .It doesnt have to be the same as everyone else.

In my opinion theres no end to what i learn in my current truth ,it just keeps growing and growing.

|                                                                                                                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| soma Posts: 4 (6/29/04 19:12) Reply                                                                                                             | Re: What will you do ?, if i tell you the truth. <hr/> Bikkie.. Growing and growing implies change, right? Peace, Soma                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| bikkie Registered User Posts: 11 (6/29/04 19:27) Reply                                                                                     | Re: What will you do ?, if i tell you the truth. <hr/> Yes ,i can pretty much look at it as change and i think change is good :) But ive realised that when i learn and ponder something new and i decide add it to my truth/beliefs -my perspective of my reality slowly intergrates and things seem to become more connected and unified in a way and start to make more sence... Something like that ..... Thanks for you thoughts |
| soma Posts: 5 (6/29/04 19:35) Reply                                                                                                             | Re: What will you do ?, if i tell you the truth. <hr/> Namaste                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| voce io Registered User Posts: 975 (6/30/04 5:32) Reply  | Re: What will you do ?, if i tell you the truth. <hr/> Soma, are you whindian?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| soma Posts: 7 (6/30/04 7:05) Reply                                                                                                              | Re: What will you do ?, if i tell you the truth. <hr/> No. Are you, voce io?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |

voce io

Registered User

Posts: 976

(6/30/04 8:14)

Reply

Re: Re: What will you do ?, if i tell you the truth.

---

I used to be.

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.32
Copyright ©1999-2005 ezboard, Inc.

Gold Community GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> What will you do ?, if i tell you the truth.

New Topic

Add Reply

| Author                                                                                                            | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| unknown Registered User Posts: 69 (7/15/04 3:48) Reply | Re: Re: What will you do ?, if i tell you the truth. <hr/> you have to be utterly helpless hopeless and you have no other way before you become detached. Everything has to be closed before it gets open. Until you achieve that state , even saying achive word is not right. until you cross that state , you will have no idea. until then you will be attached to a belief and babble constantly this and that. chopra dude is a constant babbler. Any attempt to define anything can only show yours context. Anyone try to interpret any words will only see their context. It is like a shape of the water as you hold the water in a container. It takes the shape of the container. You can only create things what you already have. There is no miracle. There is nothing going to fall down from sky. Anyone expecting miracle is a f...g moron. |

Humans learning method is "COPY CAT".

Human communication method is "COPY CAT".

Recreate the same belief with new label and add some changes.

There is nothing new chopra dude going to tell you that you already know.

Humans can not say anything "NEW".

It is all same recycled crap with new LABEL.

It is like music , same crap with different sequence.

Answers won't free your mind.

Only questions.

peace

unknown

WolfsonJakk

Posts: 1706
(7/15/04 6:48)

Reply

...

---

monkey babble?

BryanParrish

Global User
Posts: 3
(7/31/04 7:09)

Reply

Re: ...

---

This is utter shit.

If learning the ideas of others is useless, where did you get the idea that only questions matter?

Obviously you got that idea by learning it somewhere.

So your method is no different than the one you're criticizing.

I have a new method: It's called "Utter Shit." The idea is that everything is utter shit. (Except the idea that everything is utter shit; that is essential for teaching you utter shit.) Now remember, all ideas are utter shit except for the idea of utter shit. That's all you need to know to practice utter shit.

Here's the method of using utter shit to think:

|                                                                                                                                   |                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                   | <ol style="list-style-type: none"><li>1) Why learn anything if it is NOT utter shit?</li><li>2) Why believe in anything that is NOT utter shit?</li><li>3) To progress as a human being, think utter shit.</li></ol> |
| rushdl <input type="checkbox"/> Registered User Posts: 60 (7/31/04 9:02) Reply | Re: ... <hr/> That is actually a very smart Monkey, physically, indeed.                                                                                                                                |

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Genius Forum

Causality • Courage • Rationality • Determination • Logic • Integrity • Thinking • Ideals
Wisdom • Reason • Discipline • Truth • Masculinity • Perfection • Universe

Genius News

David Quinn's Site

The Thinking Man's Minefield

EZB Edit

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> What you seek

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                              | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| StreetLampRegistered UserPosts: 68(7/25/03 1:59 pm)Reply | What you seek <hr/> The greatest truth will be that which benefits all of humanity. The rich and the poor, the strong and the weak, the most and the least. This truth that you seek will never be found in our midst. Do you think it can be found among us? I am suggesting, to you all, that it cannot. There would be no “Genius” forum. There would be no disagreement. There would be no communication of any kind. We would all be content in our knowledge and form. Logical reasoning tells us that with total truth lies perfection. The truth does indeed exist, if not, it would not be sought. We have, since the beginning of our existence, all sought this truth. We are perfectly designed not to find this truth. We are aware of it, but incapable of detecting it’s presence. We are also perfectly designed to flounder if we do anything other than seek it. It is because it has to be perfect that we seek it. Some of us call it God, some knowledge, and others truth. Some have no idea what to call it, but seek it anyway. Some write it off as drive, desire, love, companionship. Some replace it with chemical substances. Some drink it away. It is the reason books are written, and songs are sung. No one knows for sure, but everyone continues to ask. The least among us knows of it’s existence. Everything that we can sense is a part of it. Every molecule, every sub-particle. That it exist is the only “truth” that we can ever know, until we are fundamentally separated from the rest of humanity as we know it. |

There is a God, there is a truth, there is something that you've spent your life looking for and we are all seeking it. It only differs in what we choose to call it.

Say what you will, but the fact that we disagree only supports what I've asserted.

Edited by: StreetLamp at: 7/25/03 4:31 pm

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1308

(7/25/03 14:53)

Reply

----

---

Quote:

---

The truth does indeed exist, if not, it would not be sought.

---

A non-sequitur.

StreetLamp

Registered User

Posts: 69

(7/25/03 3:10 pm)

Reply

Re: ----

---

It does follow, you just refuse to accept it.

Consider the possibility that you are seeking something, but don't really know what.

You come to this forum, you read the posts, you respond to them. You have formed opinions, and will not accept what you chose not to believe. Why believe anything? You must have a built in motive. Responding to my post will, certainly, not bring you fulfilment. But I insist that you are seeking it.

Edited by: StreetLamp at: 7/25/03 4:33 pm

|                                                                                                                   |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 557(7/25/03 17:11)Reply       | Re: ---- <hr/> You are on the right track StreetLamp. Quote: <hr/> Weininger:If I am to have value,then God must exist. If God does not exist, then the problemof value has no more relevancefor my life, for then I am nothing, and I do not even have areason for humility, for that,too, then just presents me with my worthlessness in the faceof value. God must exist forme to be; I am only insofar as I am God. <hr/>                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| G ShantzRegistered UserPosts: 352(7/25/03 17:25)Reply  | God and value <hr/> Do you think by God he means Truth?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| StreetLampRegistered UserPosts: 70(7/25/03 17:27)Reply | Re: God and value <hr/> By everything, I mean what some call God, or truth, or what have you. We seek the truth because we are a part of it, and it is a part of us. It does follow in logical sequence that if what we are a part of did not exist, then we would not seek it. We are made of it, and when we die, our bodies will seek to remain a part of it. Our minds seem to do the same thing. It is only a matter of convenience that we call it truth, or God, or whatever. It seems like we are left with two choices. We can seek it, or “run” from it. By default we will seek it. “Running” from it, would only be an attempt to inhibit what is naturally taking place. The results of that interference seem to produce undesirable human experiences. We are all seeking something, and I wonder if it is all the same thing. It stands up to reason that it could very well be. If the “truth” really is absolutely everything, then it would be difficult to dissect. We can argue about it, and all be right and all be wrong all at the same time. |

voce io

Registered User

Posts: 249

(7/25/03 10:37 pm)

Reply

...

---

I know the Truth (but am unenlightened), and I still spend my time seeking foolish goals like power, sex and money.

Just because a person does certain things, like coming to the Genius Forum.. doesn't mean they are seeking the Truth. They may come here for entertainment purposes.

You ARE close, though, StreetLamp, and I like your ambition.

Edited by: voce io at: 7/25/03 10:38 pm

Rairun

Registered User

Posts: 89

(7/26/03 0:36)

Reply

...

---

Quote:

---

We are all seeking something, and I wonder if it is all the same thing. It stands up to reason that it could very well be. If the "truth" really is absolutely everything, then it would be difficult to dissect. We can argue about it, and all be right and all be wrong all at the same time.

---

I can't speak for anyone else, but I don't think I'm seeking anything. You could say that I'm actively seeking entertainment (and therefore pleasure) by posting on this message board, but I feel it to be more of a reaction than anything else. Seeking implies a goal and I don't have one in mind: a situation presents itself in front of me and all I do is to act according to it. But act based on what? By asking this question, we are led to believe that there must be a goal that I use to guide myself, or else I wouldn't even move. That isn't the correct interpretation to the way I feel it though. I feel that I AM the goal, not that I have one. I can't help but follow it because it's all I actually am.

StreetLamp

Registered User

Posts: 71

(7/26/03 1:55 am)

Reply

Re: ...

---

Quote:

---

I feel it though. I feel that I AM the goal, not that I have one.
I can't help but follow it because it's all I actually am.

---

I understand what you mean. Try to look at it this way; if you are the goal, then you must be integrated into the truth itself.

I am suggesting that our purpose is to serve as integrated observers to what exist, not as a matter of record, but as ongoing witnesses to what is. It might even be that our sense of self has evolved to better suit that purpose.

We could not be suitable observers if we ever completely understood what we are a part of. There wouldn't be a desire to read, comprehend, or respond to any of this. Our lack of understanding is by perfect design, it forces us to explore, even if we don't think that we want to.

Because we cannot understand "what is" at the same time that we are aware of it, we must not realize that we were originally a part of it. When I think of my existence prior to my birth, I visualize that there was nothing. Could it be that because I can't comprehend it in my present form, that it seems never to have happened? It might be that our consciousness, like our physical bodies, revert back to their original state when our observation period is expired. We may, once again, be able to comprehend the totality of what we are an integral part of.

Though I can't outright prove what I am asserting, it would explain pretty much everything that I've been able to think of. Consider this: Some say that we were created in God's image. What if God's image was not that of a human being, but that absolutely everything was created in "His" image? What if atomic matter is the face of God? We cannot clearly see it, but this would certainly explain the vast amounts of raw power that are unleashed when atoms are split.

This idea carries with it a certain logic to me, and I hope that I am able to properly convey it.

Quote:

---

I know the Truth (but am unenlightened), and I still spend my time seeking foolish goals like power, sex and money.

---

I understand what you mean. Why, do you think, that these goals might be foolish? ...Here's what I've suggested:

Quote:

---

It seems like we are left with two choices. We can seek it, or “run” from it. By default we will seek it. “Running” from it, would only be an attempt to inhibit what is naturally taking place. The results of that interference seem to produce undesirable human experiences.

---

When I say "running" I mean anything other than active progress towards further enlightenment. That is not to say that these things are undesirable, but the end results, sometimes are.

Of course, these things can be enlightening. LOL!

EDIT:
-to include additional reply

Edited by: StreetLamp at: 7/26/03 2:56 am

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 250
(7/26/03 2:34)
Reply

Re: ...

---

StreetLamp, that is the Truth. Congratulations.

Notsure7

Registered User

Posts: 56

(7/26/03 2:38)

Reply

Re: God and Value

---

Streetlamp wrote - "We are made of it, and when we die, our bodies will seek to remain a part of it. Our minds seem to do the same thing. It is only a matter of convenience that we call it truth, or God, or whatever. It seems like we are left with two choices. We can seek it, or "run" from it. By default we will seek it. "Running" from it, would only be an attempt to inhibit what is naturally taking place. The results of that interference seem to produce undesirable human experiences."

It seems that the avoidance, ignorance or running away from this so called truth will produce "undesirable human experiences" but that interfering, probing, changing, affecting, pushing around (seeking) this is not going to have this same effect you seem to want to avoid. If there is something naturally taking place then Every single thing you do, think or seek can only take you away from that natural state. Seeking peace can only destroy any peace that was there before you made a bunch of noise going after it.

G Shantz

Registered User

Posts: 353

(7/26/03 2:59)

Reply

--

---

StreetLamp wrote:

Quote:

---

We could not be suitable observers if we ever completely understood what we are a part of.

---

What you're saying here is that you have completely understood what we are a part of, and having done so you have concluded that it does not make us suitable observers.

I think you've got some good ideas, but you still need to develop your reasoning skills so you won't make foolish statements like the one above.

Gregory Shantz

WolfsonJakk

Registered User

Posts: 1108

(7/26/03 3:00)

Reply

What you seek

---

You are beginning to wander in the correct direction, Streetlamp. Continue on, if you don't mind me saying so.

This truth you speak of is not outside of you nor is there anything to reach for. It is merely a kind of realization. The emotions and other secondary desires will fall into place if you stay focused on it.

"Peace comes from within. Do not seek it without."

-- Siddhartha Gautama

Tharan

StreetLamp

Registered User

Posts: 72

(7/26/03 3:05 am)

Reply

Re: God and Value

---

Quote:

---

Seeking peace can only destroy any peace that was there before you made a bunch of noise going after it.

---

Yes indeed. By actively seeking peace, we interfere with our own natural instinct. That is why we will remain incapable of full detection. It is perfect.

When I say "seek", I mean that we are polarized, if you will.

Like an area of high pressure seeks the low, or when a positive seeks a negative. It is a natural occurrence. Everything we do is interference to that process, but we all want it to happen. Its really kind of a bitch.

Maybe we want it, because we've already experienced it, but can no longer comprehend it.

Quote:

---

What you're saying here is that you have completely understood what we are a part of, and having done so you have concluded that it does not make us suitable observers

---

Fair statement. My foolishness is what I'm working on here, nothing else. I'm susceptible to accidents during the course.

Edited by: StreetLamp at: 7/26/03 3:14 am

Rairun

Registered User

Posts: 90

(7/26/03 3:11)

Reply

...

---

Quote:

---

Try to look at it this way; if you are the goal, then you must be integrated into the truth itself.

---

I'm determined by what I am not. I'm integrated in that way, I move as I'm pushed around.

Quote:

---

It seems that the avoidance, ignorance or running away from this so called truth will produce "undesirable human experiences" but that interfering, probing, changing, affecting, pushing around (seeking) this is not going to have this same effect you seem to want to avoid. If there is something naturally taking place then Every single thing you do, think or seek can only take you away from that natural state. Seeking peace can only destroy any peace that was there before you made a bunch of noise going after it.

---

I agree, but I want to take it a little further: what is naturally happening is "you", and all you are is what you're doing, thinking or seeking at any given moment. Seeking won't make anything less natural, it will only make you think it is.

StreetLamp
Registered User
Posts: 73
(7/26/03 3:17)
Reply

Re: ...

---

Quote:

---

Seeking won't make anything less natural, it will only make you think it is.

---

If I understand you correctly, this seems but another form of disruption to the process.

Rairun
Registered User
Posts: 91
(7/26/03 11:38)
Reply

Re: ...

---

Quote:

---

If I understand you correctly, this seems but another form of disruption to the process.

---

No, there's no disruption to the process.

StreetLamp
Registered User
Posts: 74
(7/26/03 3:34 pm)
Reply

Re: ...

---

Quote:

---

No, there's no disruption to the process.

---

I revisited what you've said, and I understand.

Edited by: StreetLamp at: 7/26/03 3:35 pm

|                                                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Notsure7Registered UserPosts: 58(7/26/03 16:04)Reply     | Re:natural <hr/> rairun wrote - "I agree, but I want to take it a little further: what is naturally happening is "you", and all you are is what you're doing, thinking or seeking at any given moment. Seeking won't make anything less natural, it will only make you think it is." I guess what i was trying to say was that trying to "become" is to avoid what you are. Trying to become enlightened may well take you off in an unnatural direction. Come to think of it, how could I be doing anything unnatural? Hmm... have to think of that.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| StreetLampRegistered UserPosts: 75(7/26/03 5:55 pm)Reply | Re: Re:natural <hr/> &gt;&gt;Retracted: correlative fallacy Edited by: StreetLamp at: 7/27/03 1:42 am                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| RairunRegistered UserPosts: 95(7/27/03 0:38)Reply        | ... <hr/> Quote: <hr/> I guess what i was trying to say was that trying to "become" is to avoid what you are. Trying to become enlightened may well take you off in an unnatural direction. Come to think of it, how could I be doing anything unnatural? Hmm... have to think of that. <hr/> Yeah, I don't think there's such a thing as unnatural. I stumbled into this idea because I had this frame of thought I had developed that I believed to be the best for me to follow, and that I tried to make myself live by. When it comes to frames of thought, it wasn't really a bad one for me, it actually fit me very well in many aspects. The problem is that they are never perfect, so I ended up imposing on myself both the good and the bad parts of this life philosophy, unconsciously. Then I started experiencing this overwhelming and incredible situation in my life... and the logical frame of thought I had developed put severe restrictions on it. Suddenly I realized the absurdity of the situation and | dropped everything. Everything. That center I used to guide myself was gone. I only use rational thought as a tool that allows me to express myself, not as a structure that imposes its own will on me.

That might sound like I stopped wanting to become, but at that point it was more about allowing myself to want to become. That heavy structure of thought was thrown away and allowed other emotions, thoughts, desires and attachments to express themselves. They are still about "wanting to be", but there's no effort in them.

I'm not sure if I'm being able to express this well. If I'm not, I'm sorry. I think the best way to described what I'm doing here is using thought to try to tell you about something that I'm living. I'm not using thought to figure out how to live.

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Genius Forum

Causality • Courage • Rationality • Determination • Logic • Integrity • Thinking • Ideals
Wisdom • Reason • Discipline • Truth • Masculinity • Perfection • Universe

Genius News

David Quinn's Site

The Thinking Man's Minefield

EZB Edit

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> What you seek

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| wannabealotRegistered UserPosts: 5(7/27/03 1:46)Reply | Re: ... <hr/> What if we continue to seek the truth because it is broken? There is some truth here, some truth there, and some more of it 20 feet away, but we can only be in one place at a time. What if the whole truth is too big to fit in one place?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| Notsure7Registered UserPosts: 60(7/27/03 2:26)Reply   | Re: Rairun <hr/> Rairun wrote - "Yeah, I don't think there's such a thing as unnatural. I stumbled into this idea because I had this frame of thought I had developed that I believed to be the best for me to follow, and that I tried to make myself live by. When it comes to frames of thought, it wasn't really a bad one for me, it actually fit me very well in many aspects. The problem is that they are never perfect, so I ended up imposing on myself both the good and the bad parts of this life philosophy, unconsciously. Then I started experiencing this overwhelming and incredible situation in my life... and the logical frame of thought I had developed put severe restrictions on it. Suddenly I realized the absurdity of the situation and dropped everything. Everything. That center I used to guide myself was gone. I only use rational thought as a tool that allows me to express myself, not as a structure that imposes its own will on me. That might sound like I stopped wanting to become, but at that point it was |

more about allowing myself to want to become. That heavy structure of thought was thrown away and allowed other emotions, thoughts, desires and attachments to express themselves. They are still about "wanting to be", but there's no effort in them.

I'm not sure if I'm being able to express this well. If I'm not, I'm sorry. I think the best way to described what I'm doing here is using thought to try to tell you about something that I'm living. I'm not using thought to figure out how to live."

Although there is no way that I could have put it in those words that seems to be where I find myself as well. The problem being and the one I think I was trying to get across to David in the other thread is that there is no way for me to come about it or understand it the same way as you or anyone else. So is it natural(maybe not a good word..harmful) for me to try to live my life according to the explanations of another person. Can I understand things the same way as you or come about understanding in that way? If this was a fact then all we need to do is explain to people that worry is useless and they stop, but we know this is not so. For some a certain set of words may well bring them to an end of worry but for most those same words will be nothing but more noise.

Seeking is only in a reaction to something and the very seeking is what has us ignore the cause of the search. So I do not question certain searching or certain goals, all of them are questioned and the cause sought. Without this we will continue to go on covering up the start of these problems with offered solutions that have never worked. If controlling your mind was possible, then we would all learn it, do it and that would be the end of it. The fact that people still seek this shows they have never questioned the goal given them.

Seeking is great in the sense that you won't find out you are doing something foolish by not doing it. To study something as it happens seems to be the most effective way to understand it. Not to ignore it on a search for relief from it.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1309

(7/27/03 14:54)

Reply

-----

---

Streetlamp:-The truth does indeed exist, if not, it would not be sought.

suergaz:-A non-sequitur.

StreetLamp:-It does follow, you just refuse to accept it.

suergaz:-No it does not follow. People seek things every day that do not exist.

Quote:

---

Consider the possibility that you are seeking something, but don't really know what.

---

I seek myself in everything. It could be argued I really don't know myself, but I am not sure why anyone would want to do this.

Quote:

---

You come to this forum, you read the posts, you respond to them. You have formed opinions, and will not accept what you chose not to believe. Why believe anything? You must have a built in motive. Responding to my post will, certainly, not bring you fulfilment. But I insist that you are seeking it.

---

It is not certain that I have a 'built in' motive, at least not for my being here.

StreetLamp

Registered User

Posts: 79

(7/28/03 1:50)

Reply

Re: -----

---

Quote:

---

Streetlamp:-The truth does indeed exist, if not, it would not be sought.

suergaz:-A non-sequitur.

StreetLamp:-It does follow, you just refuse to accept it.

suergaz:-No it does not follow. People seek things every day that do not exist.

---

— Yes it does...

If there is one truth, and one truth alone, tell me what would you be seeking if it did not exist.

We have lots of “truths” and lots of fallacies. I am suggesting that none of these will give you the sum. There can only be one truth. If it were to be found, you and I would have nothing further to discuss.

Quote:

---

I seek myself in everything. It could be argued I really don't know myself, but I am not sure why anyone would want to do this.

---

If you are a part of the whole, then you do seek the truth. Do you really know yourself? Where did that body that you're wearing originate?

Quote:

---

StreetLamp wrote: — You come to this forum, you read the posts, you respond to them. You have formed opinions, and will not accept what you chose not to believe. Why believe anything? You must have a built in motive. Responding to my post will, certainly, not bring you fulfilment. But I insist that you are seeking it.

Suergaz wrote: — It is not certain that I have a 'built in' motive, at least not for my being here.

---

You are motivated, because you are here. If you doubt this, try to quit breathing. I will bet you that you will find yourself motivated rather quickly. Now remember... The air, like you, might be part of the truth. Are you seeking it? That is the question that I am asking.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1313

(7/28/03 12:27)

Reply

----

---

No, I am not seeking the air, nor wearing my body, I am knowing myself and you believe in God! Do you know how retarded that is or are you living in a jar?

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1314

(7/28/03 12:32)

Reply

----

---

It is retarded enough that I have to say "I am knowing myself" to distinguish exactly what I mean.

StreetLamp

Registered User

Posts: 80

(7/28/03 14:16)

Reply

Re: ----

---

Quote:

---

It is retarded enough that I have to say "I am knowing myself" to distinguish exactly what I mean.

---

I doubt that you would be so frustrated now, if you really knew what you meant. You should be comfortable enough with your own existence not to let me ruin it for you.

I don't remember you typing anything intelligent before you dumbed it down for me Corky.

Now then, If you will try writing like you are not afflicted with mental retardation, our exchange won't "sound" so "retarded." At this point, you should attempt to think on a level that is more consistent with your age, unless you really are five.

You may elaborate on your Fallacy of Silence, if you are capable.

Rairun

Registered User

Posts: 97

(7/28/03 14:49)

Reply

...

---

Quote:

---

Notsure: Although there is no way that I could have put it in those words that seems to be where I find myself as well. The problem being and the one I think I was trying to get across to David in the other thread is that there is no way for me to come about it or understand it the same way as you or anyone else. So is it natural(maybe not a good word..harmful) for me to try to live my life according to the explanations of another person. Can I understand things the same way as you or come about understanding in that way? If this was a fact then all we need to do is explain to people that worry is useless and they stop, but we know this is not so. For some a certain set of words may well bring them to an end of worry but for most those same words will be nothing but more noise.

---

I agree with your point to David. Each experience is unique and it seems to me that "truth" IS the experience. It seems impossible to create any kind of rules or values to let life manifest itself, because it's already doing it. I used to say "be true to yourself", but even that can be misleading - someone might understand that they shouldn't be untrue to themselves. Searching draws you away from yourself, but for a searching mind, the idea of not searching does the exact same thing. There's absolutely nothing that can be done at any given moment, except for what you're already doing.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1319

(7/29/03 2:06)

Reply

-----

---

Quote:

---

I doubt that you would be so frustrated now, if you really knew what you meant. You should be comfortable enough with your own existence not to let me ruin it for you.

I don't remember you typing anything intelligent before you dumbed it down for me Corky.

Now then, If you will try writing like you are not afflicted with mental retardation, our exchange won't "sound" so "retarded." At this point, you should attempt to think on a level that is more consistent with your age, unless you really are five.

You may elaborate on your Fallacy of Silence, if you are capable.

---

My fallacy of silence?!

|                                                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| StreetLampRegistered UserPosts: 83(7/29/03 2:10 am)Reply | Re: ----- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> My fallacy of silence?! <hr/> Well... You've said nothing thus far. You aren't allowed to assume something based on nothing. Edited by: StreetLamp at: 7/29/03 2:11 am                                                                    |
| scatteredmindRegistered UserPosts: 89(7/29/03 2:23)Reply | shoot <hr/> You all wouldn't know truth if it shot you in the foot as you limp after your own shadow. or maybe thats just me. oh well. fuck it.                                                                                                                                                             |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1322(7/29/03 2:29)Reply     | ---- <hr/> Can you tell me what you think I have assumed from nothing streetlamp? Or why you think I would 'not be allowed' to do so?                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| StreetLampRegistered UserPosts: 84(7/29/03 2:51)Reply    | Re: ---- <hr/> Okay, okay, I'll hold your hand. You asserted the following... Quote: <hr/> ...I have to say "I am knowing myself" to distinguish exactly what I mean. <hr/> Tell me what you think you mean. Where did I question what you meant? You have used silence to avoid explanation. |

In logical reasoning, (...you started it) it does not follow logic to assume something based on the absence of information. This is called a fallacy of silence. "I am knowing myself" means I am knowing myself. To explain what you mean, you will have to use supporting ideas in your discussion.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1323

(7/29/03 13:33)

Reply

---

---

You god-fearing farnarkler! You asked me the question "Do you really know yourself"

StreetLamp

Registered User

Posts: 92

(7/29/03 19:46)

Reply

Re: ---

---

WELL! I never...

LOL

The Proname

Registered User

Posts: 4

(7/29/03 20:24)

Reply

Re: ---

---

Say we found this mysterious Truth. Would we be capable of appreciating, understanding it? Would it be "true" for us?

Aside from all the crude/loose analogies that everyone is throwing around, I think the real problem here is that we humans are not capable of knowing Truth. You may say that monks and knights and scientists have been encountering Truth and living profound, enlightened lives for centuries... but really... you cannot deny that each of these enlightened people were experiencing different understandings of what they thought was "Truth", which means either that (1) There is no One Truth, or (2) We humans are incapable of seeing it as a whole; therefore, what we are seeing of it is NOT the truth, but glimpses of it--and these glimpses are no different than the composition of halfway-truths that we think of as reality. In other words, glimpses are nothing spectacular. Glimpses might as well be lies.

We humans are not capable of knowing truth. I won't go so far as to assert that our existence is a fluke of nature--perhaps we're here because something chose us to be--but we are definitely not efficient. Our knowing borders on complete inefficiency (none of us know even ONE THING completely!). Our understanding is roundabout (we can only understand things in terms of their surroundings). We are not even truly sentient, as our "thinking" is 100% dependent on what goes on around us.

We may not be flukes, but we are mistakes. We are vacuum-molded shapes out of reality. If we humans became perfect at what we do, we would be the antithesis of Truth. What do we know about it?

StreetLamp
Registered User
Posts: 93
(7/30/03 3:40)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

Re: ---

---

-----

Say we found this mysterious Truth. Would we be capable of appreciating, understanding it? Would it be "true" for us?

---

I agree with you on every word. You will find similarities in my post above.

defiancenow
Registered User
Posts: 1
(8/6/03 16:24)
Reply

Re: ---

---

Happened to stumble upon this discussion group somehow at 2am and I must admit that it is an absolute relief to me that topics of this magnitude and scope are discussed somewhere with the passion that it deserves. I find great frustration within my local group of friends due to their lack of desire to discuss anything of this sort, and it just makes me crazy as this is always on my mind.

I just want to say that I think that after reading through the topic completely I have found that StreetLamps opinions really are similar to mine in many ways. So cheers on that one as you pinned this issue down in ways that I have always wanted to hear proposed. Okay perhaps issue was not a strong enough word for something of such greatness... anyway!

The point is that I feel that there is this nagging, driving, almost crushing force that keeps me up late at night (and I'm not talking about a girl here..although that seems to work well) simply thinking about the relative insignificance of everything in regards to the overall scope of things, and how it relates to the "big truth or picture"...

Anyway I just wanted to say thanks for at least making me realize that I'm not alone in my mental confusion...

|                                                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| scatteredmindRegistered UserPosts: 93(8/7/03 14:40)Reply | cycle <hr/> It is merely a cycle ofExpression -&gt; Growth -&gt; Truth (as acquired experience)Your truth is the expression of growth from experience.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| defiancenowRegistered UserPosts: 2(8/7/03 14:48)Reply    | Re: cycle <hr/> I believe that a deeper more conscious emotion exists within us all, a more thought based emotion that needs exercise however to stay present. This emotion is more powerful than the type of emotion mentioned previously due to its magnitude and scope. It is an all knowing emotion, and that is a sense ironic, since the all knowing emotion simply knows that we are incapable of truly knowing. I am referring to an emotion that is constantly in search of answers regarding our existence, and constantly finding humor in the shortfalls of our search. It's almost as if you are traveling in space searching for something, and you come back empty minded, still not knowing the answer, yet having not forgotten the question. Perhaps even more intrigued than when you left, yet the humor is overwhelming. The circles, and routines, and customs, and lifestyles of all those around us become astoundingly comedic. The comedy is relative to the lifestyles that we as humans have created to justify our lack of an appropriate answer for our existence. We have built cities, and factories, and religions, and all have the same root purpose. To attempt to justify our existence, or if nothing else pass the time. And don't get me wrong... none of us are incapable of feeling the day to day emotional hardships that are pre-programmed into us. We simply (for the most part) are unable to look behind an emotional response, and that to a degree is another root that waters the tree of justification in the forest of existence. I write this not knowing an answer, rather under the grand and perhaps twisted but realistic assumption that we will never have an answer. And perhaps that in itself is reason enough to fall down to earth and stay there, and build more monuments, and worship some religion passionately... And ultimately give up... But in doing that I would be banishing the power of scope based emotion. And believe it or not, not knowing the answer is a form of pleasure delaying that actually creates a sense of power within me. It allows me to disassociate myself from the rest of the everyday rat race. It allows me to find humor in even the most serious, and depressing issues on this earth. It allows me to cope with this sad and tragic world for which we have been asked to live in. And it gives me hope to go on. Perhaps as the say in "the matrix" aka greatest movie ever made... (Philosophically)... "ignorance is | bliss"... but for me... the only true bliss is that of the truth. If it takes me the rest of my days to find out that there is no great truth, then I will feel that I have at least found the truth, and I will be content. But I most certainly refuse to fall to the earth, and simply live inside this box that has been prefabricated for us. So with the power of scope I go on, searching for truth, and finding twisted contentment in finding nothing.

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Genius Forum

Causality • Courage • Rationality • Determination • Logic • Integrity • Thinking • Ideals
Wisdom • Reason • Discipline • Truth • Masculinity • Perfection • Universe

Genius News

David Quinn's Site

The Thinking Man's Minefield

EZB Edit

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> What you seek

Page 1 2 3

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                        | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| chuqueueRegistered UserPosts: 1(8/8/03 13:57)Reply | Re: --- <hr/> Hi defiancencow,... everyone. I have enjoyed reading this discussion about truth. Quote: <hr/> The point is that I feel that there is this nagging, driving, almost crushing force that keeps me up late at night (and I'm not talking about a girl here..although that seems to work well) simply thinking about the relative insignificance of everything in regards to the overall scope of things, and how it relates to the "big truth or picture"... <hr/> I too desire truth. I spend countless hours pondering the truth about existence and the meaning of life. Even though I do not expect to find the answers, the strong desire for them still exists. I often feel the crushing force you speak of. It is like a great darkness that is created by not having the answers..... slowly eating away at my being. Why does this void exist? Is there a reason? Is there a meaning? I wonder..... |

|                                                                                                    |                                            |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                    | Best regards.- chuqueue                |
| BryanParrishGlobal UserPosts: 70(8/3/04 5:35)Reply | Re: ---<hr/> FUCK SHIT PISS BALLS NUTS |

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> When NO means YES and she's not lying

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                              | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 972(2/6/04 6:02 pm)Reply                                                                                        | When NO means YES and she's not lying <hr/> It is possible for her to be saying "no" verbally and "no" physically and actually meaning "yes" and yet she is not lying. How is this possible?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 669(2/6/04 6:27 pm)Reply  | Re: When NO means YES and she's not lying <hr/> This is a bad route to go, especially when you're having intimate contact with women. You might end up raping a girl, Del. I hope you don't do that. I've seen too many girls messed up because guys molested them when they were younger (of course, rape can mess a person up at any age). I say that you should be honest with women. If they see you as a morally strong guy, they'll want to get you, so they'll try to mirror how you behave. They'll be honest, and good, too. Who knows, maybe there are even girls out there who are already honest and good...maybe you're just looking with the wrong intentions? The trick to good relationships is self cultivation. Analyze what you want out of a girl, and look at your own self to see if that's what you have...let's say it's beauty. Of course every guy eating potato chips on the couch wearing a wife beater watching porn wants a hot girlfriend, but the ones who look good generally get the others that look good. If you want a smart girl, you need to be smart. An honest girl, be honest. There's the old and kind of stupid saying: you are what you eat. Well, I would flip it around and change 'eat' to 'get'. |

You get what you are.

...and yes it is possible. You can be role playing.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1448
(2/7/04 2:44 am)
Reply

Re: When NO means YES and she's not lying

---

DEL, how many times do I have to tell you that if you would just stick with prostitutes (and pay them what they so righteously deserve plus tip) then you wouldn't have to concern yourself with this silliness.

I mean, a prostitute knows she is a prostitute. I find that rather enlightening for both men and women.

Tharan

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 973
(2/7/04 12:59 pm)
Reply

Re: When NO means YES and she's not lying

---

Quote:

---

voce io

You get what you are.

---

Excellent!

The question returns - what are you?

Who am I?

If cannot consciously trust yourself you cannot consciously trust anybody.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 975
(2/7/04 1:19 pm)
Reply

Re: When NO means YES and she's not lying

---

Quote:

---

voce io

This is a bad route to go, especially when you're having intimate contact with women. You might end up raping a girl, Del. I hope you don't do that.

---

Rapist get themselves into rape situations because they are ignorant of themselves.

People who go around saying they would never do this and never do that are more often than not the very ones who end up doing it.

Go around telling everyone that you would never fight anyone see how long you last without a fight.

All generous people who love to give gifts are also thieves. For every action there is a reaction.

Take - Consensual - Beg

Take - Non consensual - Plunder

Give - Consensual - Present

Give - Non consensual - Rape

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 670
(2/7/04 4:03 pm)
Reply

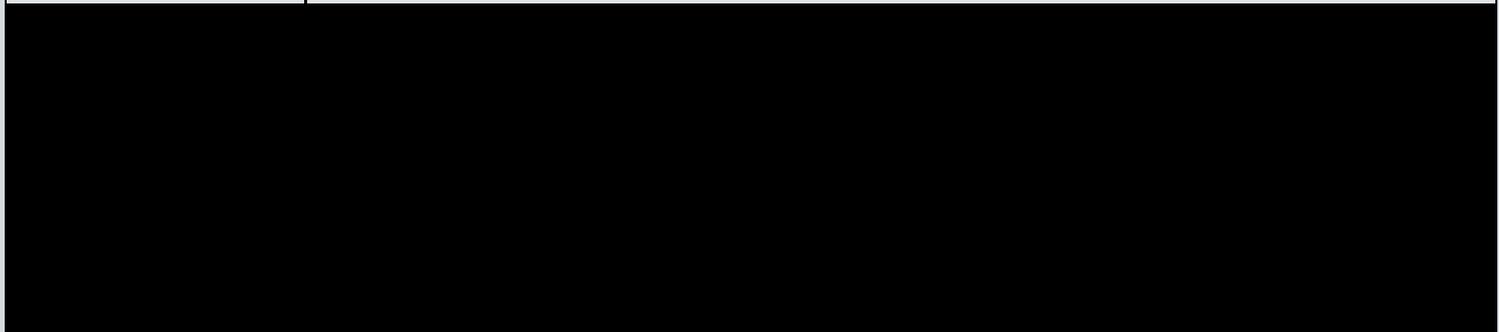

Re: When NO means YES and she's not lying

---

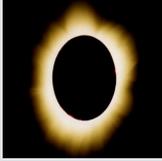

I agree with you on some levels, but my point in saying that was to make sure that when a girl is saying "no" to you, you don't go ahead thinking she is lying and means "yes".

|                                                                                                                                                                      |                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 977(2/8/04 9:20 pm)Reply                                                                                         | Re: When NO means YES and she's not lying <hr/> Rape a woman is like the rape of the earth and like the hostile enslavement of a community.Who here hates the products of rape? |
| silentsalRegistered UserPosts: 39(2/9/04 12:44 am)Reply                                                                                   | Re: When NO means YES and she's not lying <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Who here hates the products of rape? <hr/> the products of rape should not be hated                |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 671(2/9/04 12:59 am)Reply  | Re: When NO means YES and she's not lying <hr/> The products of raping a woman should be hated.                                                                                      |
| silentsalRegistered UserPosts: 40(2/9/04 1:03 am)Reply                                                                                    | Re: When NO means YES and she's not lying <hr/> would you hate the child that is conceived through rape? what other products are there?                                       |

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2256
(2/9/04 1:14 am)
Reply

Re: When NO means YES and she's not lying

---

Sal is right. A child could not be hated.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2257
(2/9/04 1:16 am)
Reply

Re: When NO means YES and she's not lying

---

But she hates me!

silentsal
Registered User
Posts: 41
(2/9/04 1:24 am)
Reply

Re: When NO means YES and she's not lying

---

Quote:

---

But she hates me!

---

What are you on about? I don't believe in God I believe in You suergaz!

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2259
(2/9/04 1:35 am)
Reply

Re: When NO means YES and she's not lying

---

I love you sal, but don't believe in me too much or everyone will start doing it and then no-one won't know what to do or nothin

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 347
(2/9/04 1:37 am)
Reply

Re: When NO means YES and she's not lying

---

Quote:

---

silentsal, speaking of rape: -- what other products are there?

---

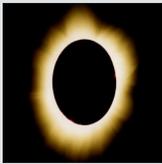

The victim and/or rapist may have sustained injuries in the rape, which could be considered products of the rape. Their clothes may have gotten torn in the rape, which could also be considered a product. They could have left blood and semen on the ground, which are products. The memories they have of the rape and any psychological impact/damage could be considered products. Basically, anything that occurs as a result of the rape is a product of the rape.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2260
(2/9/04 1:44 am)
Reply

Re: When NO means YES and she's not lying

---

That's obvious Matt. What sal was showing was that it is impossible to hate every product of a rape if one of them happened to be a child.

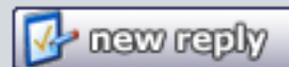

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 348
(2/9/04 1:54 am)
Reply

Re: When NO means YES and she's not lying

---

Well, I think it's debatable whether or not it's possible to hate children. Did you hear about the woman in North Carolina or wherever who a couple of years ago drowned her two children in her car because her boyfriend used them as an excuse to break up with her? I think it's probably likely that she came to hate them. However, I didn't interpret voce io to mean children should be hated, I figured he was talking about the psychological effects on the victim.

|                                                                                                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| silentsalRegistered UserPosts: 42(2/9/04 2:03 am)Reply                                                                                   | Re: When NO means YES and she's not lying <hr/> Quote: <hr/> I figured he was talking about the psychological effects on the victim. <hr/> Why hate them why not just deal with them?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 349(2/9/04 2:14 am)Reply                                                                                   | Re: When NO means YES and she's not lying <hr/> I don't know, that doesn't very productive to me either. We'll have to wait and see what Voce has to say about it. But from what I can tell by talking to a few people who have been raped/molested it's very difficult to deal with and they end up hating a lot of things.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 350(2/9/04 2:19 am)Reply                                                                                   | Re: When NO means YES and she's not lying <hr/> Oh, except for my college roommate who claimed to lost his virginity to three girls that raped him when he was 15 or 16, but I'll have to chalk that up as an exception :-)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 672(2/9/04 3:21 am)Reply  | Re: When NO means YES and she's not lying <hr/> Sal, Let's say I shit everywhere, and killed whoever I wanted, and made bombs and fucked little children. Of course it's not productive to "hate" me, but it IS productive to stop me from doing all of those things. To see those things as disgusting and horrible. If you are suggesting we just let problems accumulate, and do nothing to avoid them, then you can do that. You don't prove yourself to be wise at all, though. Of course a girl would have to deal with psychological trauma, but do we want girls having to deal with psychological trauma? I don't. |

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> When NO means YES and she's not lying

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                       | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 978(2/9/04 3:43 am)Reply | Re: When NO means YES and she's not lying <hr/> Quote: <hr/> voce ioThe products of raping a woman should be hated. <hr/> Anybody who enjoys the products of rape whether it be woman, land or community supports rape.Is rape always violent? |

silentsal
Registered User
Posts: 43
(2/9/04 4:07 am)
Reply

Re: When NO means YES and she's not lying

---

Quote:

---

Anybody who enjoys the products of rape whether it be woman, land or community supports rape.
Is rape always violent?

---

this is just plain silly enjoying the products of rape have nothing to do with the actual act of rape. Why get emotional and intertwine them. A crime scene investigator may just get absolutely estatic over some of the after effects of rape, loving and supporting a child of rape, does not support rape, it supports the child.

Raping the land is very short sighted so you may argue that sensible enjoyment of the product is in fact promoting responsible resource management

Is rape always violent? Yes but it's effects may not be

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 673
(2/9/04 4:10 am)
Reply

Re: When NO means YES and she's not lying

---

Your argument about the child as a product of rape is purely stupid, Sal.

|                                                                                                                                                                 |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 980(2/9/04 4:27 am)Reply                                                                                    | Re: When NO means YES and she's not lying <hr/> Every time a man lies he damages his ability to focus on the absolute truth. The women incurs no such damage. I used to hang out with a guy who was really good at getting women into bed. The lies he could tell were absolutely astounding. The speed of thought and the delivery were just incredible. Sometimes I would be in a state of shock at the things he said and I just tried my best to maintain a poker face without bursting out into laughter. It took years to refine his skill. Amazingly he believed he was falling in love with everyone and then just threw them away. In the other areas he was incredibly slow and retarded. |
| silentsalRegistered UserPosts: 44(2/9/04 4:49 am)Reply                                                                               | Re: When NO means YES and she's not lying <hr/> I almost said NO to is rape always violent but I put yes because implicit in rape is "force" and force implies resistance, if resistance is serious the struggle is violent.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 1631(2/9/04 9:42 am)Reply  | Re: When NO means YES and she's not lying <hr/> Rape, by definition, is violent. That's a complete no -brainer. Hating the product of rape is irrational. Hating anything, for that matter, is irrational. Any product of rape ought be dealt with on its own terms depending on what it is. Children do not ask to be born whatever the circumstances of their conception. Dan Rowden                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 984
(2/9/04 9:59 am)
Reply

Re: When NO means YES and she's not lying

---

Quote:

---

silentsal
I almost said NO to is rape always violent but. . . .

---

As a woman could you say what caused you to hesitate? The essence of truth is hidden in that brief moment of hesitation. See if you can find it.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2261
(2/9/04 11:06 am)
Reply

Re: When NO means YES and she's not lying

---

voce io:--

Quote:

---

Your argument about the child as a product of rape is purely stupid, Sal.

---

How is that voce io? Sal is not defending rape in any way.

Your belief in 'god' is purely stupid. As is DELs, as is Dans.

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1635
(2/9/04 11:13 am)
Reply

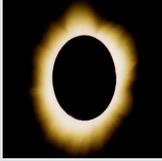

God - dammit

---

I have absolutely not "belief" whatever in God, as you well now. Stop being an arse.

Dan Rowden

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2263
(2/9/04 11:16 am)
Reply

Re: God - dammit

---

Since when Dan? I recall that by 'god' you mean nature, or the totality, (just like David and Kevin)

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 674
(2/9/04 11:24 am)
Reply

Re: God - dammit

---

I don't know what to believe about any God.
Sal's idea was stupid because I say so.
I don't have to prove anything to you fuckers.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2266
(2/9/04 11:30 am)
Reply

Re: God - dammit

---

Quote:

---

I don't know what to believe about any God.

---

Then stop it.

Quote:

---

Sal's idea was stupid because I say so.

---

Firstly it wasn't an idea, but an observation. Be childlike if you're going to be childish with any credibility.

Quote:

---

I don't have to prove anything to you fuckers.

---

You know these are most often the words of one who cannot. Why be misunderstood for so little?

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 1636

(2/9/04 1:38 pm)

Reply

Re: God - dammit

---

Yes, Zag, I am happy to substitute the terms "God", "Nature" "Tao" etc. But what has that got to do with "belief" in something? It is nomenclature and nothing more.

Am I responding to your use of the word "belief" - which I object to completely.

Dan Rowden

DEL

Registered User

Posts: 985

(2/9/04 6:31 pm)

Reply

Re: When NO means YES and she's not lying

---

Quote:

---

silentsal

I almost said NO to is rape always violent but. . . .

---

As a woman could you say what caused you to hesitate? The essence of truth is hidden in that brief moment of hesitation. See if you can find it.

Come on Silentsal!

It's a very special Henid. We have not had one of that quality for almost a century. Dont lose it!

Don't be afraid of the dogs of common sense. They are the guardians truth. They cannot see or understand it themselves it is not for them.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2268
(2/10/04 12:11 am)
Reply

---

Dan:--

Quote:

---

I am happy to substitute the terms "God", "Nature" "Tao" etc.
But what has that got to do with "belief" in something? It is nomenclature and nothing more.

---

But the terms "Tao" and "God" cannot be substituted for the term
"Nature". They do not mean the same thing. Only nature exists.

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 675
(2/10/04 12:52 am)
Reply

Re: ---

Who cares?

silentsal
Registered User
Posts: 45
(2/10/04 1:45 am)
Reply

Re: ---

Quote:

---

Come on Silentsal!
It's a very special Henid. We have not had one of that quality for almost a century. Dont lose it!
Don't be afraid of the dogs of common sense. They are the guardians truth. They cannot see or understand it themselves it is not for them.

---

Henid? are you calling me names!

I almost said no because in my own personal experience it was not violent, rather it was a struggle, that is until I said oh hell forget about it this man is bigger, stronger and very determined. My release of course ended the struggle, of course this was a simple rape where the man absolutely did just want sex. It was this same experience which gave me a glimpse into my own reality which could not be owned or possessed by any man. The Rapist objectifies his/her victim unfortunately the victim does the same thing.

disclaimer: I do not in any way endorse rape!

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 986
(2/10/04 7:21 am)
Reply

Henid

---

Quote:

---

silentsal
Henid? are you calling me names!

---

. . . It is necessary to coin a name for those minds to which the duality of element and character becomes appreciable at no stage in the process. I propose for psychical data at the earliest stage of their existence the word Henid (from the Greek, because in them it is impossible to distinguish perception and sensation as two analytically separable factors, and because, therefore, there is no trace of duality in them).

Naturally the "henid" is an abstract conception and may not occur in the absolute form. How often psychical data in human beings actually stand at the absolute extreme of undifferent- iation is uncertain and unimportant; but the theory does not need to concern itself with the possibility of such an extreme. A common example from what has happened to all of us may serve to illustrate what a henid is. I may have a definite wish to say something particular, and then something distracts me, and the "it" I wanted to say or think has gone. Later on, by some process of association, the "it" is quite suddenly reproduced, and I know at once that it was what was on my tongue, but, so to speak, in a more perfect stage of development.

I fear lest some one may expect me to describe exactly what I mean by "henid." The wish can come only from a misconception. The very idea of a henid forbids its description; it is merely a something. . . . One cannot describe particular henids; one can only be conscious of their existence.

None the less henids are things as vital as elements and characters. Each henid is an individual and can be distinguished from other henids. Later on I shall show that probably the mental data of early childhood (certainly of the first fourteen months) are all henids, although perhaps not in the absolute sense. Throughout childhood these data do not reach far from the henid stage; in adults there is always a certain process of development going on. Probably the perceptions of some plants and animals are henids. In the case of mankind the development from the henid to the completely differentiated perception and idea is always possible, although such an ideal condition may seldom be attained. . . .

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 987
(2/10/04 7:40 am)
Reply

Strength and Determination

---

The above explanation of a Henid is from Weininger's Sex & Character.

Quote:

---

silentsal

I almost said no because in my own personal experience it was not violent, rather it was a struggle, that is until I said oh hell forget about it this man is bigger, stronger and very determined.

---

Was it not his strength and determination that attracted you to this man in the first place?

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2270
(2/10/04 8:53 am)
Reply

----

Quote:

---

suergaz:--But the terms "Tao" and "God" cannot be substituted for the term "Nature". They do not mean the same thing. Only nature exists.

voce io:--Who cares?

---

Ones who don't care to see goddies and taoists thinking they have the floor.

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

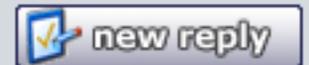

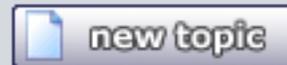

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> When NO means YES and she's not lying

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                               | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| silentsalRegistered UserPosts: 47(2/10/04 9:15 am)Reply                                                                                   | Re: ---- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Was it not his strength and determination that attracted you to this man in the first place? <hr/> I was never attracted to him. |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 676(2/10/04 1:50 pm)Reply  | Re: ---- <hr/> suergaz, In what ways am I a Goddie, or a Taoist? Do you think I actually think that I have the floor? (Everyone has the floor)                             |

|                                                                                    |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2280(2/10/04 1:58 pm)Reply | --- <hr/> I don't think you're either. Who do you think has the most 'floor'? (to lay to rest the 'ground of being' and 'bedrock of thought' etc etc.)                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 990(2/10/04 6:27 pm)Reply      | - <hr/> Quote: <hr/> silentsalI was never attracted to him. <hr/> Why were you spending time with him then?                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| silentsalRegistered UserPosts: 49(2/11/04 2:03 am)Reply | Re: - <hr/> He was at the same house party I was at, I was not spending time with him, I was not being coy or flirty. His attack completely caught me offguard. Basically he cornered me on the way back from the bathroom. btw thanks for the explanation of henid                                                                       |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 993(2/11/04 7:31 am)Reply      | Re: - <hr/> Quote: <hr/> silentsalHe was at the same house party I was at, I was not spending time with him, I was not being coy or flirty. His attack completely caught me offguard. Basically he cornered me on the way back from the bathroom. <hr/> Sorry, I just can't believe that. Especially at a house party. |

|                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                         | I just can't believe a guy who did not know you from Adam could just do that out of the blue in the middle of a house party.There is just no way that would happen.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| silentsalRegistered UserPosts: 51(2/11/04 8:27 am)Reply      | Re: - <hr/> LOL what do you imagine happened? Haha that I somehow baited him? Do you not give him credit for having an imagination of his own?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 595(2/11/04 8:46 am)Reply        | Re: - <hr/> It happens, but more so when both the instigator and the woman is stoned or pissed. It is the nature of parties and drugs. Whether it ALWAYS rape or not in such situations when others are around can sometimes be a little questionable, depends how quickly the woman gives in and what degree of struggle. Either way it is the dominating nature of the male that makes the woman give in to the flow, women rarely are the instigators. Most women will think of it as rape afterwards because it is something they were not planning to happen and don't like and feel guilty about. Of course, sometimes it is just plain rape. |
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1461(2/11/04 11:57 am)Reply | Re: - <hr/> DEL wrote, Quote: <hr/> Sorry, I just can't believe that. Especially at a house party.I just can't believe a guy who did not know you from Adam could just do that out of the blue in the middle of a house party.There is just no way that would happen. <hr/> Not all of us animals are as gentlemanly as you, DEL.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |

My wife and I were talking about the sexual urge and I described a little bit of how it was for me when I was younger (and not married). I remember times when I liked a girl and I would literally break a sweat. I remember some nights filled with restlessness and agitation, almost like a panic attack, I guess. She was astounded to hear that. I think some women don't realize the actual raw physicality of a man's desire. There are many examples of the drive in the animal kingdom; elephants, moose, dolphins. When a male is young and somewhat lacking in control, there are times when there is almost no choice in the matter. The majority of women have never felt this drive and have no idea how powerful it can be. I have never been more physically agitated than those handful of times in my late teens and early 20's. And it wasn't a result of rejection or anything. In fact, it usually struck just as the courtship began. Masturbation made no difference. Of course I never mentioned it later, certainly not to the girl I was courting.

It is no excuse for rape and a rapist should be punished. But at the same time, I would bet many a rapist said to himself afterwards, "Jeez, I wonder if that girl thinks I raped her or something."

Tharan

*edit*

A good literary example is the bloodlust of a vampire. Stoker's Dracula had a nightly urge that must be fulfilled. And the female vampires were always cast as aggressive nymphets (with the exception of Anne Rice's pre-pubescent child vampire, which was an intended aberation with drastic psychological repercussions).

There is a reason Jack the Ripper killed all women. In fact, it is the same reason most serial killers are men killing women. I would argue that a large percentage of those killers have no real hatred of women or necessarily wish to see them dead, but rather must cover up for their sexual actions. Murder keeps the woman quiet.

Edited by: WolfsonJakk at: 2/11/04 12:13 pm

DEL

Registered User
Posts: 994
(2/11/04 2:01 pm)
Reply

-----

---

At which point in time, before, during and after, is it too late for a woman to refer to a sexual experience as rape?
For example if a woman decides after sex that she was raped is she justified?

|                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| cassiopeiaeRegistered UserPosts: 248(2/11/04 2:12 pm)Reply | Re: ----- <hr/> According to law, there is no such thing as "too late". At least in the US. Unfortunately this opens the door for unjust accusations...but nonetheless, a woman can decide on her own time.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 996(2/11/04 2:37 pm)Reply         | the depth and significance <hr/> Quote: <hr/> cassiopeiaeAccording to law, there is no such thing as "too late". <hr/> Thank you cassiopeiae.Very few men will appreciate the universal depth and significance of that statement as it applies to the masculine and the feminine principle in everything.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 599(2/11/04 3:50 pm)Reply      | Re: the depth and significance <hr/> It is a difficult issue. I should have also added to my post the fact that the risk of violence may make some women give up struggling earlier than others. They make think, perhaps quite correctly, that further struggling would just make the guy angry the rape would be even more violent. It is a pity that, when I was growing up at least, it was part of the routine to keep pestering the girlfriend or potential one night stand to 'give in' and the ones who gave in to early weren't really respected. With young guys seeing so much sex everywhere these days it has probably only got worse. |

Rairun

Registered User

Posts: 189

(2/12/04 1:53 am)

Reply

...

---

Quote:

---

My wife and I were talking about the sexual urge and I described a little bit of how it was for me when I was younger (and not married). I remember times when I liked a girl and I would literally break a sweat. I remember some nights filled with restlessness and agitation, almost like a panic attack, I guess. She was astounded to hear that. I think some women don't realize the actual raw physicality of a man's desire. There are many examples of the drive in the animal kingdom; elephants, moose, dolphins. When a male is young and somewhat lacking in control, there are times when there is almost no choice in the matter. The majority of women have never felt this drive and have no idea how powerful it can be. I have never been more physically agitated than those handful of times in my late teens and early 20's. And it wasn't a result of rejection or anything. In fact, it usually struck just as the courtship began. Masturbation made no difference. Of course I never mentioned it later, certainly not to the girl I was courting.

---

Are you serious? That sounds sort of crazy to me, because I've always seen men portrayed like that, but I always assumed it was being exaggerated. Of course I feel aroused, and it can get pretty intense if I start fantasizing things, but I can just stop it at any time. If I do, it'll be up for a few more minutes, but it isn't annoying or anything, I just forget it's there. If I don't willingly try to be psychologically agitated, it just doesn't happen, and the physical agitation fades away.

|                                                                                                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1462(2/12/04 3:24 am)Reply                                                                                  | .... <hr/> Welcome to the world of "too much testosterone." Consider yourself lucky, kid. Historically, people like me start wars, and for what? We don't need no stinkin' reasons. Look at the world now and you will see it. Gold, land, and women. Knowledge can overcome it though. Our species is due an injection of wisdom or a little bio-engineering. I support getting smart or getting castrated. Too many people anyway. Tharan |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2294(2/12/04 2:45 pm)Reply     | Re: .... <hr/> You mean an induction of wisdom (:D)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 998(2/12/04 6:24 pm)Reply                                                                                           | She is stronger than you think <hr/> Women are designed to handle high levels of testosterone with no problem. Things go wrong for them when testosterone is mixed with intelligence or celibacy.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 942(2/13/04 9:03 am)Reply  | Re: When NO means YES and she's not lying <hr/> Quote: <hr/> del: It is possible for her to be saying "no" verbally and "no" physically and actually meaning "yes" and yet she is not lying. <hr/> Quote: <hr/> del: Rapist get themselves into rape situations because they                                                                                                                                           | are ignorant of themselves.

People who go around saying they would never do this and never do that are more often than not the very ones who end up doing it.

Go around telling everyone that you would never fight anyone see how long you last without a fight.

All generous people who love to give gifts are also thieves.

For every action there is a reaction.

Take - Consensual - Beg

Take - Non consensual - Plunder

Give - Consensual - Present

Give - Non consensual - Rape

---

Quote:

---

del: Rape a woman is like the rape of the earth and like the hostile enslavement of a community.

Who here hates the products of rape?

---

Quote:

---

del: Every time a man lies he damages his ability to focus on the absolute truth. The women incurs no such damage.

I used to hang out with a guy who was really good at getting women into bed. The lies he could tell were absolutely astounding. The speed of thought and the delivery were just incredible. Sometimes I would be in a state of shock at the things he said and I just tried my best to maintain a poker face without bursting out into laughter. It took years to refine his skill.

Amazingly he believed he was falling in love with everyone and then just threw them away.

In the other areas he was incredibly slow and retarded.

---

Quote:

---

Sal: I almost said NO to is rape always violent but I put yes because implicit in rape is "force" and force implies resistance, if resistance is serious the struggle is violent.

del: As a woman could you say what caused you to hesitate? The essence of truth is hidden in that brief moment of hesitation. See if you can find it.

Sal: -----

Ed - 8 1/2 hours later that same day. (Be more patient del, less frenzied.)

del: Come on Silentsal!

It's a very special Henid. We have not had one of that quality for almost a century. Dont lose it!

Don't be afraid of the dogs of common sense. They are the guardians truth. They cannot see or understand it themselves it is not for them.

---

Come on del, out with it.

Say it loud and proud in plain English so the boys and girls might clearly understand what you mean.

Quote:

---

Sal: I almost said no because in my own personal experience it was not violent, rather it was a struggle, that is until I said oh hell forget about it this man is bigger, stronger and very determined.

del: Was it not his strength and determination that attracted you to this man in the first place?

Sal: I was never attracted to him.

del: Why were you spending time with him then?

Ed - Yet Sal only mentioned the 'time spent with him' during the act, hmmm.

Sal: He was at the same house party I was at, I was not spending time with him, I was not being coy or flirty. His attack completely caught me offguard. Basically he cornered me on the way back from the bathroom.

del: Sorry, I just can't believe that. Especially at a house party. I just can't believe a guy who did not know you from Adam could just do that out of the blue in the middle of a house party.
There is just no way that would happen.

Ed - Completely unbelievable eh, you think surely he must have known her? Crazy, eh.

Sal: LOL what do you imagine happened?

Haha that I somehow baited him? Do you not give him credit for having an imagination of his own?

del: -----

---

That's right del, it's all in your imagination, no matter what rationale you ensconce it in.

Edited by: Dave Toast at: 2/13/04 9:08 am

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 1000
(2/13/04 4:50 pm)
Reply

The imagination

---

Good stuff Mr. Toast.
I see you were paying attention.
The imagination is a dangerous thing.

Quote:

---

cassiopeiae
Unfortunately this opens the door for unjust accusations...but nonetheless, a woman can decide on her own time.

---

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 945
(2/14/04 9:43 am)
Reply

Re: The imagination

---

Are you going to be a man, or run away from it?

Say it, in plain English.

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

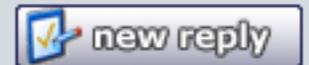

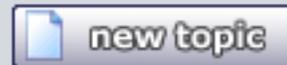

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> When NO means YES and she's not lying

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                            | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1466(2/14/04 9:51 am)Reply                                                                            | Re: The imagination <hr/> Bah, you would be able to pin him down then Dave. "Sway with the currentand shift like the wind,elusive is your imageyet your self does not bend."--Tharan the underwear ninja                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 1640(2/14/04 10:51 am)Reply  | Re: The imagination <hr/> Night sweats, agitation, breathlessness, imagination on overload, even fear and trembling. You bet. That stuff is absolutely real. And the worst part is that literally nothing at all can meaningfully distract you from it. As to the question of whether women have any idea that men go through such things - I suspect that in relation to that kind of experience, particularly, they would tend not to. It's not exactly the kind of thing that a man admits to. That would make him extremely vulnerable and despite certain forms of modern feminist theory regarding what modern men should be like, no man in his right mind will make himself openly vulnerable to a women to that degree. Which is not to say, only, that it opens him up to exploitation by her but that it makes it difficult for him to retain any part of himself; to retain his centre. That is important to any man. When a man loses his centre, he ceases to be |

|                                                                                                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                          | a man; he becomes, in effect, a woman. Dan Rowden                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 369(2/14/04 9:08 pm)Reply                                                                                       | Re: The imagination <hr/> invasion of mind creates the rapistinvasion of body creates the victim                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 1003(2/15/04 6:23 am)Reply                                                                                           | Re: The imagination <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Dave ToastAre you going to be a man, or run away from it? Say it, in plain English. <hr/> You probably know what I'm thinking already in this case. Why spoil it with too many words?The masculine must avoid the diffusion of the feminine until the right moment. |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 954(2/15/04 10:40 am)Reply  | Re: The imagination <hr/> You've already spoilt it with too many words, not that such thought doesn't spoil itself. Why do you fail to state it plainly, are you afraid of something?                                                                                                                                                     |

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 1004
(2/16/04 5:30 am)
Reply

Re: The imagination

---

Quote:

---

Dave Toast
You've already spoilt it with too many words. . .

---

Interesting. You said too many words. I thought I kept the number of words to a minimum. I which point in the teleological sequence did I spoil it. What did I spoil?

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 958
(2/16/04 8:10 am)
Reply

Re: The imagination

---

Say it plain and clear, and you'll see how all you've written in this topic has been too many words.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 1009
(2/16/04 9:41 am)
Reply

Mithras

---

Quote:

---

Dave Toast
Say it plain and clear, and you'll see how all you've written in this topic has been too many words.

---

That's beautiful Mr. Toast.
You are absolutely correct.
The Mithraic tradition shows a most important principle.
Pure action is the key because the written word belongs to the adversary.

|                                                                          |                                                                                                                          |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2300(2/16/04 11:44 am)Reply | ---<hr/> Every great man of action ( pure action is always spurious speculation) is an adversary of his time. |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

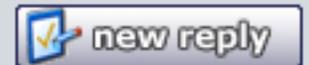

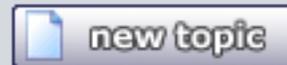

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

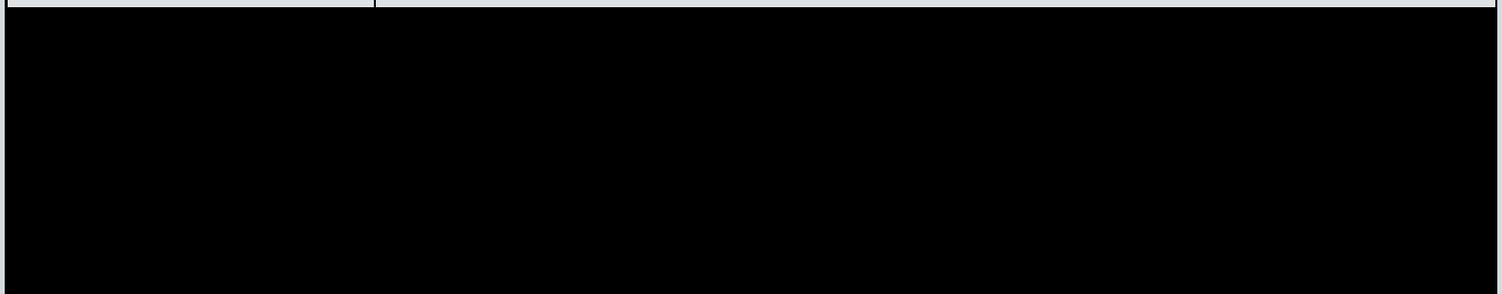

> Where do you stand metaphysically?

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                         | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 43(9/4/01 11:26 am)Reply  | <input type="checkbox"/> Where do you stand metaphysically? <hr/> This is just a means of testing the efficacy of the polling facility on these boards. If it sucks I'll disable it. Dan Rowden Are you a Theist? Are you Agnostic? Are you an Atheist? Are you a Pantheist? None of the above? Show results |

Carb0n60
Registered User
Posts: 31
(9/4/01 11:44 am)
Reply

Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

Excellent call Dan!!

This poll needed to be here. We might also have a value assumptions poll though that may be more complex.

C A R B 0 N - 6ø Forum: The Nexus

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 44
(9/4/01 11:48 am)
Reply

Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

Carbon wrote:

Quote:

---

Excellent call Dan!!

This poll needed to be here. We might also have a value assumptions poll though that may be more complex.

---

Well, I'm not certain about the poll feature as yet. I can see certain uses for it but I hope that people will not abuse it by posting frivolous items with it.

At least it appears to function ok.

Dan Rowden

EITheR
Registered User
Posts: 21
(9/4/01 12:07 pm)
Reply

Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

(as continued from earlier post)

well, i clicked the 'new poll' button and what do you know! a user can create a new poll. how efficient.

i agree with drowden that the poll feature could have obvious uses, however, surely it will not be exploited.

question: what will the results of (present) future polls tell us in conversation? will the results be of benefit in anything? just wondering.

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 46
(9/4/01 12:13 pm)
Reply

Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

Either:

Quote:

---

question: what will the results of (present) future polls tell us in conversation? will the results be of benefit in anything? just wondering.

---

Well, that's a question to which I have, as yet, no answer, but the answer I eventually come up with will determine whether the feature stays.

How useful it is will depend on the quality of the content of any polls and the discussion that may ensue. For instance, with my test poll, the question arises for me: what exactly are those that voted "None of the above"?

Men of the Infinite, perchance?

Dan Rowden

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 47

(9/4/01 2:12 pm)

Reply

Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

Dan Rowden wrote:

Quote:

---

For instance, with my test poll, the question arises for me: what exactly are those that voted "None of the above"? Men of the Infinite, perchance?

---

My God, Dan, what do you mean by "Men of the Infinite"?

Well, Dan, I'll tell you: such a person is one who is a theist in the company of ignorant atheists and an atheist in the company of ignorant theists and a pantheist in the company of ignorant theists and atheists and none of these in the company of humanity generally.

In other words, one who knows what God is and knows that God does not exist.

Geez, Dan, is that supposed to be a coherent response?

Coherence, like beauty, is in the eye of the beholder, Dan.

Anyway, nice speaking with me.

Dan Rowden

Sapius
Registered User
Posts: 29
(9/4/01 2:47 pm)
Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

Dan, I liked what you said! 😊

Yes, I'm none of the above, in the sense that all those "categories" have to be necessarily expounded, to understand what each one means by "God", and my logic does not accept any of their meanings of "God".

Quote:

---

Dan: In other words, one who knows what God is and knows that God does not exist.

---

Dan! That is the last nail in the coffin of Understanding! Bravo! 😊

This has triggered me now into opening a new thread.

Carb0n60
Registered User
Posts: 47
(9/5/01 10:02 am)
Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

Actually while your deffentition is admirable, I rather prefered "other" I think it's more strait forward.;

To be serious, If you mean that Gd doesn't exist, I disagree.

If you mean that Gd *not* exists, which is to say that he exists in the same sense as the number zero (strange and beautiful) then I agree.

so which is it I am curious...or...is it both?

 C A R B 0 N - 6ø Forum: The Nexus

Sapius

Registered User

Posts: 45

(9/5/01 9:40 pm)

Reply

Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

Quote:

---

To be serious, If you mean that Gd doesn't exist, I disagree.

If you mean that Gd **not** exists, which is to say that he exists in the same sense as the number zero (strange and beautiful) then I agree.

---

I don't know if this is addressed to me, but....

Yes "God" "Gd" "0" do not Exist.

Yes "God" "Gd" "0" do Exist.

...and I am the same person saying it.

What do "you" find so "strange and beautiful" in a number "0"?

I do not see anything strange OR beautiful in it.

Want to argue? 😊

Trust me, we will end up with the same result as in arguing the "Superiority" of what "YOU" think, against what "I" think, about prose and painting. Which is futile in my opinion.

Strangeness, Beauty = "Values", are all constructs of our own Minds, and they do not hold any inherent meaning within themselves, although all that you see and think, do Really exist.

Carb0n60

Registered User

Posts: 52

(9/6/01 6:58 am)

Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

Im not going to argue, it is a value I know that.

Being a value as it is perhapse if you care to read below I could explain, it is pretty strait forward.

I see Zero as being strange and beautifull because:

1.It is not like much like anything else.

2. anything which can not be called a thing and yet can be recognised to me, is a beautifull thing.

but as strange and beautifull as it seemse to me , at the same time it is is not strange and beautifull, making it even more strange and beautifull.

 C A R B 0 N - 6ø Forum: The Nexus

Edited by: Carb0n60 at: 9/6/01 1:49:59 pm

Victor Danilchenko

Registered User

Posts: 2

(9/7/01 10:26 pm)

Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

I am both an atheist and a pantheist...

And speaking of strange and beautiful math -- here's a post I made a while ago at another forum:

---

Math is very spiritual, if you understand it.

$$e^{i\pi} + 1 = 0$$

-- generally considered to be the most beautiful and elegant equation in mathematics (it's s special case of Euler's formula for complex powers, which is:  $e^{iX} = \cos X + i \sin X$ )...

Note: In case it does not render correctly on your browser -- "?" in the function superscript is Pi.

It is the formula that ties together the three most fundamental constants of mathematics:

$e$  : The natural logarithm base -- 2.7182...

$\pi$  : Pi, of the trigonometric fame -- 3.1415...

$i$  :  $\sqrt{-1}$ , the base of all imaginary numbers.

The end result is magnificent in its simplicity, and yet it is the math equivalent of the Unified Field Theory in physics (well, maybe not quite as grand, but close).  $e^{i\pi} + 1 = 0$  -- how much closer to perfect elegance can you get? This is the kind of stuff that makes math a consummately spiritual pursuit.

Art is beautiful; stars are awesome; a verdant forest is spiritual; but Euler's formula is the Universe speaking to us in directly, the language that is the foundation of very existence -- math. This unification of the three constants is our glimpse into the core of being, and at the concise elegance that pervades it.

--

Victor Danilchenko

A monster lies in wait for me, a stew of wounds and misery, but fiercer still, in life and limb, is me that lies in wait for him.

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 51

(9/7/01 11:32 pm)

Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

Victor:

Quote:

---

I am both an atheist and a pantheist...

---

And this means.....? Nature = God? I could relate to that except that I'd need to know what you mean by "Nature".

Dan Rowden

Victor Danilchenko

Registered User

Posts: 3

(9/8/01 12:01 am)

Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

See pub45.ezboard.com/fmindfu...=119.topic

--

Victor Danilchenko

A monster lies in wait for me, a stew of wounds and misery, but fiercer still, in life and limb, is me that lies in wait for him.

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 54

(9/8/01 12:08 am)

Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

And your opinion of Spinoza as a philosopher?

Victor Danilchenko

Registered User

Posts: 4

(9/8/01 12:54 am)

Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

Spinoza's work ("Ethics" most notably) is important historically, and it provided one of the better ontological expositions of pantheism done to date (inasmuch as ontology is worth considering at all). He is one of those people whom David Quinn (and you, presumably) consider to be paragons of philosophy, as he tried to understand the "ultimate reality" by reason alone.

Frankly, while Spinoza towers in his historical context, these days I think we have gone beyond his ideas, having superceded them.

--

Victor Danilchenko

A monster lies in wait for me, a stew of wounds and misery, but fiercer still, in life and limb, is me that lies in wait for him.

Needle

Registered User
Posts: 1
(9/8/01 4:57 am)
Reply

Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

Pantheism and Atheism are mutually-exclusive terms, unless of course, if what you mean by Atheism is "Weak Atheism", which is also actually more accurately called Agnosticism.

Metaphysically, I believe that Robert M. Pirsigs MOQ or Metaphysics of Quality, is a great start towards understanding the INHERENT MORALITY of the COSMOS.

To find out more for yourself, see:

<http://www.moq.org/>

Spinozas version of Pantheism, a term coined by Toland in the late Middle Ages, has and was superceded already by the Ancient Greeks, with the understanding of the Impersonal God of COSMOS, ABRAXAS, or 365, for the 365 days in the year.

Unlike Spinoza, the COSMOS, for these COSMOTHEISTIC Ancient Greeks, was inherently INTELLIGENT and fundamentally CONSCIOUS and inherently POSSESSED a SOUL or SPIRIT of CONSTANT CREATIVITY and DYNAMIC CHANGE always tending or purposing the WHOLE of COSMOS towards ever higher levels of BEING and CONSCIOUSNESS.

This is true Classical Pantheism or Ancient COSMOTHEISM and this SPIRITUAL conception, combined with all of the SCIENTIFIC KNOWLEDGE attained by our MODERN SCIENTIFIC METHODS of our TECHNOLOGICAL CIVILIZATION, has only refined and deepened this SPIRITUAL and MORAL INSIGHT.

Discover Modern Cosmotheism/Classical Pantheism for your own Self, at the following link, below:

pub4.ezboard.com/bcosmotheism

Best regards,

Paul Vogel

PS--Math may indeed be a reflection of the MIND of COSMOS, as we HUMANS are the actual, MIND of COSMOS, locally, at least! We Humans are the actual MEANS for the COSMOS to KNOW and to COMPLETE itself via ARETE' or the striving towards the EXCELLENCE of BEING, in all areas of Human Potential, in physical BODY, and in emergent, MIND, SOUL, and SPIRIT.

"Those who will not reason, are bigots, those who cannot, are fools, and those who dare not, are slaves." - Lord Byron <http://www.xenith.com/cosmotheism/> COSMOTHEISM, is a Religion that Positively Asserts that there is a INTERNAL PURPOSE in LIFE and in COSMOS and that there is an Essential Unity, OR CONSCIOUSNESS that Binds ALL Living Beings and ALL of the INORGANIC COSMOS, as ONE. WHAT IS our TRUE HUMAN IDENTITY IS that We Are the Cosmos Made SELF-AWARE or, SELF-CONSCIOUS by EVOLUTION and that Our TRUE HUMAN PURPOSE IS to KNOW and to COMPLETE Ourselves as Conscious Individuals and as a SELF-AWARE Species and thereby to Co-Evolve with the COSMOS TOWARDS UNIVERSAL AWARENESS AND TOWARDS the ever HIGHER PERFECTION OF BEING. <http://pub4.ezboard.com/bcosmotheism>

Victor Danilchenko

Registered User

Posts: 5

(9/8/01 5:23 am)

Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

Ah, I see you've made the acquaintance of Needle. He must have followed either me or David Quinn here. He is a psychopath who has been banned from pretty much every EZBoard he has ever frequented. I would advise banning him pre-emptively, but such warnings are never heeded, so I guess you will have to find out the hard way. Have fun!

--

Victor Danilchenko

A monster lies in wait for me, a stew of wounds and misery, but fiercer still, in life and limb, is me that lies in wait for him.

Carb0n60

Registered User

Posts: 64

(9/8/01 7:24 am)

Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

Victor,

Excellent post earlier, (the original mathematics post in response to my own) that was verry nicley put.

If you have the oppertunity visit my board and post. You may like it you may not stop by though, and let me know what you think.

 C A R B 0 N - 6ø Forum: The Nexus

Mylordmajesty

Registered User

Posts: 18

(9/8/01 10:16 am)

Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

Victor wrote:

Art is beautiful; stars are awesome; a verdant forest is spiritual; but Euler's formula is the Universe speaking to us in directly, the language that is the foundation of very existence -- math.

<> Math the foundation of existence? How's that? Math exists conceptually.

This unification of the three constants is our glimpse into the core of being, and at the concise elegance that pervades it.

<> Math is basically a tool.

Mylord

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 55

(9/8/01 10:54 am)

Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

Victor wrote:

Quote:

---

Frankly, while Spinoza towers in his historical context, these days I think we have gone beyond his ideas, having superceded them.

---

Can you state briefly in what sense we have superceded Spinoza's ideas?

Dan Rowden

Victor Danilchenko

Registered User

Posts: 6

(9/8/01 1:19 pm)

Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

drowden,

Quote:

---

Can you state briefly in what sense we have superceded Spinoza's ideas?

---

For one, philosophers (as opposed to you self-proclaimed dangerous geniuses) have largely abandoned ontology as a meaningful subject of study. There is more, but this is IMO the most important point.

---

MLM, (doesn't sound quite so grand in abbreviation, does it?)

Quote:

---

Math the foundation of existence? How's that? Math exists conceptually... Math is basically a tool.

---

It is also the tool that underlies our understanding of the universe, a tool that reflects some very important relationships out there. It's the language of all sciences, and if the superstring theory is true, it may actually be the "stuff" everything is made of.

--

Victor Danilchenko

A monster lies in wait for me, a stew of wounds and misery,
but fiercer still, in life and limb, is me that lies in wait for him.

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

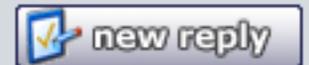

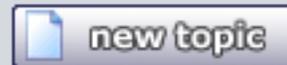

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Where do you stand metaphysically?

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                              | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 60(9/8/01 1:56 pm)Reply  |  Re: Where do you stand metaphysically? <hr/> Victor, Quote: <hr/> Math is very spiritual, if you understand it. <hr/> It can certainly be very aesthetic. But beauty and elegance aren't necessarily related to spirituality. "Truthful words are not beautiful,Beautiful words are not truthful." - Tao Te Ching. Quote: <hr/> <math>ei\delta + 1 = 0</math> -- how much closer to perfect elegance can you get? <hr/> A=A usually does it for me. |

Quote:

---

This is the kind of stuff that makes math a consummately spiritual pursuit.

---

You're dreaming. It is your attachment to mathematical elegance, combined with your need to feel self-important, that is speaking, and nothing more

Quote:

---

Art is beautiful; stars are awesome; a verdant forest is spiritual; but Euler's formula is the Universe speaking to us in directly, the language that is the foundation of very existence -- math. This unification of the three constants is our glimpse into the core of being, and at the concise elegance that pervades it.

---

On another forum, you stated that ultimate truth doesn't exist. But here you are describing Euler's formula as though it were the ultimate truth. Why?

If you don't think it is the ultimate truth, then why do you describe it in terms of spiritual magnificance, the Universe speaking directly to us, providing glimpses into the core of our being, and so on.

Are you not engaging in the usual scientific habit of extreme hyperbole?

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 61

(9/9/01 3:03 am)

Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

Dan Rowden:

Can you state briefly in what sense we have superceded Spinoza's ideas?

Victor:

Quote:

---

For one, philosophers (as opposed to you self-proclaimed dangerous geniuses) have largely abandoned ontology as a meaningful subject of study. There is more, but this is IMO the most important point.

---

Perhaps you could give one or two sound reasons, without indulging in the insipid fallacy of appealing to authority, of how philosophy has abandoned ontology, and, having done so, how it did it without being ontological?

I wait, with baited breath, for a non-contradictory response.....

Dan Rowden

Victor Danilchenko

Registered User

Posts: 7

(9/9/01 8:36 am)

Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

drowden,

Quote:

---

Perhaps you could give one or two sound reasons, without indulging in the insipid fallacy of appealing to authority, of how philosophy has abandoned ontology, and, having done so, how it did it without being ontological?

---

We eventually understood (originally due to Kant's "Critique of Pure Reason") that the world cannot be known but through the prism of temporal knowledge and experience. We have no direct info line to reality, synthetic a-priori don't exist, and logic is a theorem mapping function. Epistemology subsumes everything useful ontology could possibly give a meaningful answer to.

---

David,

Quote:

---

A=A usually does it for me.

---

You have my condolences for your mathematical and logical naïvete;

Quote:

---

On another forum, you stated that ultimate truth doesn't exist. But here you are describing Euler's formula as though it were the ultimate truth. Why?

---

It's not an "ultimate truth". It's just a glimpse of the elegance of mathematics, the latter describing the relationships between pretty much everything in the Universe. This could be said to be a shard of the core of Cosmos (to speak metaphorically), but it has nothing to do with the "ultimate reality" of the sort you are looking for.

Quote:

---

If you don't think it is the ultimate truth, then why do you describe it in terms of spiritual magnificence, the Universe speaking directly to us, providing glimpses into the core of our being, and so on.

---

Because I think that very many things exhibit such "spiritual magnificence". Math is the language of the Cosmos, and Euler's formula is a particularly striking piece of math. It does indeed provide us a glimpse into the relationships that tie everything together -- a glimpse similar to the Grand Unified Theory in nature (that is, not pertaining to your "ultimate reality").

Quote:

---

Are you not engaging in the usual scientific habit of extreme hyperbole?

---

Not at all. Spirituality being a rather subjective things, I was describing how I (and many other mathematicians) feel about mathematics.

--

Victor Danilchenko

A monster lies in wait for me, a stew of wounds and misery, but fiercer still, in life and limb, is me that lies in wait for him.

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 53

(9/9/01 3:15 pm)

Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

Victor,

Quote:

---

Not at all. Spirituality being a rather subjective thing, I was describing how I (and many other mathematicians) feel about mathematics.

---

Then, it is merely how you and other mathematicians feel about math.

I had understood that you previously said that math is the language of the cosmos. If that is the case, then, I am left out of the cosmos or, at least, left out of understanding its language.

Though I can from a distance appreciate the elegance of math -- Arabic is a very elegant language also but I cannot speak it -- I am incredulous that, because I have no ear for that particular language, I am then completely hung out to dry. Cosmos-less, so to speak.

This seems extremely unjust to me. I understand the language of art and of prose very well. Am I exempt from having any insight into the Cosmos because I have little understanding of math or desire to understand it?

Please explain.

Faizi

Victor Danilchenko

Registered User

Posts: 10

(9/9/01 11:22 pm)

Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

Faizi,

Quote:

---

I had understood that you previously said that math is the language of the cosmos. If that is the case, then, I am left out I had understood that you previously said that math is the language of the cosmos. If that is the case, then, I am left out of the cosmos or, at least, left out of understanding its language.

---

Indeed. You have my sincere condolences -- I think that mathematical illiteracy is something nobody should suffer from. I am not the one who makes university curriculae requiring humanities students to pass nothing more sophisticated than remedial arithmetic, however.

Quote:

---

This seems extremely unjust to me. I understand the language of art and of prose very well. Am I exempt from having any insight into the Cosmos because I have little understanding of math or desire to understand it?

---

No, of course you are not exempt from having all insight; however, you certainly won't be able to understand very many issues at greater depth, because you lack relatively basic mathematical sophistication. Whether you have interest in understanding those issues is a different matter.

You can choose to remedy that shortcoming, you know. Math is easy, at least on the basic level I am speaking about here..

--

Victor Danilchenko

A monster lies in wait for me, a stew of wounds and misery, but fiercer still, in life and limb, is me that lies in wait for him.

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 57

(9/10/01 4:15 am)

Reply

Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

Victor,

Quote:

---

Indeed. You have my sincere condolences -- I think that mathetical illiteracy is something nobody should suffer from. I am not the one who makes university curricula requiring humanities students to pass nothing more sophisticated than remedial arithmetic, however.

---

But there are those of us for whom math does nothing in terms of spirituality or in any way. I have respect for physics and chemistry and other sciences but I have never wanted to be a physicist or a chemist or a mathematician.

I would be ill suited to the work because I am more interested in an understanding of humanity than in how numbers and formulae can be used to explain this or that natural occurrence. I am more interested in the psychological and philosophical aspects of humanity rather than the chemical and physical make up of our bodies.

I realize that much can be explained through psychobiology but I do not think that everything can be explained. There is always that missing link. That is the mystery and it is the mystery that interests me.

You could explain mathematical equations all day long and, put to me directly, I could understand them and appreciate them but they would prove nothing to me about life and its beginnings

Faizi

MKFaizi
Registered User
Posts: 58
(9/10/01 4:19 am)
Reply

Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

Victor,

Quote:

---

Ah, I see you've made the acquaintance of Needle. He must have followed either me or David Quinn here. He is a psychopath

---

On what criteria do you judge him to be a psychopath?

Faizi

Mylordmajesty
Registered User
Posts: 21
(9/10/01 5:22 am)
Reply

Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

MLM, (doesn't sound quite so grand in abbreviation, does it?)

<> I answer to Mylord. 😊

Victor Danilchenko
Registered User
Posts: 12
(9/10/01 9:59 am)
Reply

Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

Faizi,

Quote:

---

I would be ill suited to the work because I am more interested in an understanding of humanity than in how numbers and formulae can be used to explain this or that natural occurrence.

---

Humanity is a natural occurrence. You are denying yourself the more precise and scalable understanding of psychological and social phenomena afforded by mathematics (yes, I am talking about psychology and sociology here, not biology).

Quote:

---

On what criteria do you judge [Needle] to be a psychopath?

---

I don't, actually -- not in the strict psychological sense. However, I have known him on EZBoards for years, and in that time I have seen him banned from virtually every board he visits. He is a bigot who is absolutely immune to reason; in addition to that, he eventually becomes extremely disruptive on any board he visits.

He may have changed since I ran into him last, but frankly I won't hold my breath.

--

Victor Danilchenko

A monster lies in wait for me, a stew of wounds and misery, but fiercer still, in life and limb, is me that lies in wait for him.

MKFaizi

Registered User

Posts: 62

(9/10/01 11:19 am)

Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

Quote:

---

Humanity is a natural occurrence. You are denying yourself the more precise and scalable understanding of psychological and social phenomena afforded by mathematics (yes, I am talking about psychology and sociology here, not biology).

---

I understand your meaning but, when it comes to direct dealing with individual humans, mathematical equations are not likely to provide answers. A practicing psychologist cannot expect his clients to be very open to having a mathematical formula provided in lieu of discussion in English or whatever verbal language.

If you were a psychologist and a client came to you and openly stated his intent to kill himself, would you answer him with Pi?

Unless this client was a mathematician himself, it is likely that he would have some trouble in following your reasoning.

It would be no different if a client presented himself to me with the same problem and I showed him a painting by da Vinci.

On a strictly human to human level, I cannot see how math can provide answers. Whether or not we are all automatons or conglomerations of flesh and chemicals has no bearing.

Here is a case. I can present this because I am a nurse. I hope that you can provide me with some math that will ease my conscience.

NOTE: I just wrote this post and submitted it to spellcheck. It was chewed up. I am writing it again.

A man presents to the clinic. He is eighty-nine years old. He has not urinated for four days. He and his wife are ignorant farmers who went only to the fifth grade of education. There is an elevated PSA on the chart from four years ago but there was no follow up. He went to a urologist at that time but it is unclear what was done.

These people are very ignorant. The only thing they have known their entire lives is physical toil. The man has lost sixty pounds over the last four years. He is extremely hard of hearing. Despite his physical decline, he spends every day in the fields, tending his crops of wheat and corn.

In strictly mathematical terms, how would you explain to this man, once the TURP has been performed and once the new PSA has been received and shown the expected results, that he is not worth heroic medical intervention? You can refer him to Hospice, of course. Hospice used to mean support. Now, it means euthanasia.

In exactly what way would you tell this man and his wife that he is going to die? How would math serve any purpose?

I will deal with the question of Needle separately since my previous writing on the subject has been obliterated.

Faizi

Victor Danilchenko

Registered User

Posts: 15

(9/10/01 12:55 pm)

Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

See my post on "Math and Spirituality" thread for a note on factials vs. normatives, and the role science plays in investigating them.

--

Victor Danilchenko

A monster lies in wait for me, a stew of wounds and misery, but fiercer still, in life and limb, is me that lies in wait for him.

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 63

(9/12/01 11:22 pm)

Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

The scriptwriter Victor wrote:

Quote:

---

We eventually understood (originally due to Kant's "Critique of Pure Reason" 🤔 that the world cannot be known but through the prism of temporal knowledge and experience. We have no direct info line to reality, synthetic a-priori don't exist, and logic is a theorem mapping function. Epistemology subsumes everything useful ontology could possibly give a meaningful answer to.

---

Gee, I asked for a response without the insipid crap of authority and you give me shit from Kant. Typical. You are not worth talking to. You are so full of yourself and yet so vacuuous you are a living connundrum. You present ontologies in the form of epistemic ideology and expect to be taken for something less than a fool. Well done. Fool away.....

But pardon me.....

Carb0n60
Registered User
Posts: 66
(9/13/01 9:06 am)
Reply

 the statement, not the person

---

Ahhhh, Ad Homonem, I know it well.

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 64
(9/13/01 10:34 am)
Reply

 Re: the statement, not the person

---

Quote:

---

Ahhhh, Ad Homonem, I know it well.

---

Not well enough to spell it correctly, however 😊

But it's not really an ad hominem because I gave a reason as to why I think Victor is foolish. It is also a bit of provocation. Victor seems to like a somewhat adversarial approach to discussion so I thought I'd see how well he actually fares at it.

Also, I see him as a typical mouthpiece of the follies and extraordinary contradictions and blindness of postmodernism. "Ontology is nonsense" they say, whilst proceeding to announce either explicitly or implicitly their ideas regarding the nature of being.

That sort of thing is just too silly for words.

Dan Rowden

Victor Danilchenko

Registered User

Posts: 16

(9/13/01 1:20 pm)

Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

drowden,

Quote:

---

Gee, I asked for a response without the insipid crap of authority and you give me shit from Kant.

---

I didn't. I mentioned that Kant got the whole thing rolling. It's not an argument from authority -- I assumed (incorrectly, apparently) that you read "Critique of Pure Reason", where Kant lays out the whole analysis of noumena and their relationship with reason. I referred to an argument.

Quote:

---

Also, I see him as a typical mouthpiece of the follies and extraordinary contradictions and blindness of postmodernism.

---

Me, a PoMo? You must be monumentally ignorant of what PoMo stands for. Modernism was what dispensed with ontology; PoMo tried (unsuccessfully) to dispense with epistemology. You are so clueless about philosophy, I don't even know why I am wasting my time talking to you...

Did you read the words 'postmodernism is bad' somewhere, inverted the contraposition, and assumed that anyone who you regard as "bad" (me) must be PoMO? Given your buddy David's lack of facility with logic, such a lunatic approach would not have at all surprised me.

--

Victor Danilchenko

A monster lies in wait for me, a stew of wounds and misery, but fiercer still, in life and limb, is me that lies in wait for him.

EITheR
Registered User
Posts: 28
(9/13/01 1:23 pm)
Reply

☐ Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

i thought i was finished but i just had to reply.
that was so funny...i'm rolling over with laughter.

Victor Danilchenko
Registered User
Posts: 17
(9/13/01 2:20 pm)
Reply

☐ Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

[bows]
Glad to be of service, although I personally find Dowden and Quinn more pathetic than funny.

--
Victor Danilchenko

A monster lies in wait for me, a stew of wounds and misery,
but fiercer still, in life and limb, is me that lies in wait for him.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 76
(9/13/01 5:12 pm)
Reply

☐ Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

Victor,

Quote:

---

I didn't. I mentioned that Kant got the whole thing rolling. It's not an argument from authority -- I assumed (incorrectly, apparently) that you read "Critique of Pure Reason), where Kant lays out the whole analysis of noumena and their relationship with reason. I referred to an argument.

---

One thing that I have noticed with your posts, Victor, is that they almost entirely lack substance. You either appeal to authority (or, as you would have it, refer to some celebrity philosopher's argument) or you abuse people. There is very little actual reasoning going on .....

Quote:

---

Mo? You must be monumentally ignorant of what PoMo stands for. Modernism was what dispensed with ontology; PoMo tried (unsuccessfully) to dispense with epistemology. You are so clueless about philosophy, I don't even know why I am wasting my time talking to you...

---

To someone like Dan, the distinction between "Modernism" and "Postmodernism" is a bit like the distinction between Catholicism and Anglicanism. Rather meaningless if you don't believe in the core dogma.

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 66

(9/13/01 10:35 pm)

Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

Dan Rowden:

"Gee, I asked for a response without the insipid crap of authority and you give me shit from Kant."

Victor:

"I didn't. I mentioned that Kant got the whole thing rolling.

It's not an argument from authority -- I assumed (incorrectly, apparently) that you read "Critique of Pure Reason), where Kant lays out the whole analysis of noumena and their relationship with reason. I referred to an argument."

I have read it, but it was so long ago that I remember little of it. This style of argumentation - that of merely referring to the arguments of others - must make your ability to communicate rather narrow. If a person hasn't read all these works the whole thing breaks down rather quickly. It's also a lot like a Christian continually pointing you to scripture to make an argument about some matter. What ever happened to just making a point as you see and understand it?

You also have something of a penchant for employing collective pronouns. As you're a member of the scientific community, I can understand that kind of sensibility - it probably brings you kudos amongst your peers, but I tend to have an instinctual reaction against such things in the context of philosophy. Philosophy is most emphatically not a collective discipline. There is no "we" now know this, or "we" have invalidated that. That kind of language is disturbing. I do not regard academic "philosophy" as philosophy at all. It is mere scholarship.

Dan Rowden:

Also, I see him as a typical mouthpiece of the follies and extraordinary contradictions and blindness of postmodernism.

Victor:

Me, a PoMo? You must be monumentally ignorant of what PoMo stands for. Modernism was what dispensed with ontology; PoMo tried (unsuccessfully) to dispense with epistemology. You are so clueless about philosophy, I don't even know why I am wasting my time talking to you...

Did you read the words 'postmodernism is bad' somewhere, inverted the contraposition, and assumed that anyone who you regard as "bad" (me) must be PoMO? Given your buddy David's lack of facility with logic, such a lunatic approach would not have at all surprised me.

Modernism, postmodernism - it's all the same academic drivel to me. Tweedledum and Tweedledumber. Whichever of these academic themes you would identify with, and to whatever degree you would even do so, you involve yourself in folly. There can be no process or framework of knowing (to drop the needless academy-speak) without an accompanying notion of the nature of being. They are always found together. Perhaps you could explain how a method of knowing can exist without underlying assumptions about the nature of what is to be known...

Dan Rowden

Victor Danilchenko

Registered User

Posts: 18

(9/14/01 1:41 am)

Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

David,

Quote:

---

One thing that I have noticed with your posts, Victor, is that they almost entirely lack substance. You either appeal to authority (or, as you would have it, refer to some celebrity philosopher's argument) or you abuse people. There is very little actual reasoning going on ...

---

And you try to re-invent the wheel each time -- using the structures which were long ago discarded as infeasible for wheel-making.

Acquisition of knowledge is a collective enterprise; entire humanity is doing it, and we all (at least those of us who are interested in knowledge rather than cheap ego gratification) stand on the shoulders of giants. I have a number of original (or at least I think they are original, as I have never seen them before) ideas, but I don't have a reason to speak them to you, because the mistakes you make are the ones that have been made and corrected by countless others. I say nothing original in response to your posts, just as I would say nothing original when correcting your calculus errors -- originality lies much farther down on the frontier of knowledge, which frontier you unfortunately refuse to explore, opting instead for wandering amidst the debris of abandoned dreams and long-discarded concepts. Refuting the babbling of a Perpetuum Mobile inventor is not a good showcase for one's original work in physics, you know.

Quote:

---

To someone like Dan, the distinction between "Modernism" and "Postmodernism" is a bit like the distinction between Catholicism and Anglicianism. Rather meaningless if you don't believe in the core dogma.

---

Yeah, being a "rebel" is much easier than actually learning from others' mistakes. It's much easier to be Alex Chiu than Richard Feynman. Playing games and pretending to be grand and original is much easier than actually being grand and original -- at least if you expect originality to go along with real knowledge, rather than just randomly new babbling.

---

drwoden,

Quote:

---

This style of argumentation - that of merely referring to the arguments of others - must make your ability to communicate rather narrow.

---

It makes my communication efficient. That's what words are for -- to permit abstract labels to be used in place of expanded descriptions. If I need to present an original argument (like http://www.cs.umass.edu/~danilche/default\_E-.html for example), I will; but I am not about to waste my time when a simple reference will do the same job.

As I said, you and David are repeating the same mistakes that were made and understood by others before you, and so the refutation of them will necessarily be unoriginal -- as it should be. We want to expand the frontier of knowledge, not walk in place; it's at that frontier that original contributions belong at.

Quote:

---

Philosophy is most emphatically not a collective discipline. There is no "we" now know this, or "we" have invalidated that. That kind of language is disturbing. I do not regard academic "philosophy" as philosophy at all. It is mere scholarship.

---

And so you miss the point of how real knowledge (as opposed to fruitless mental masturbation) is created.

Remember, you are an individual, just like everyone else... 😊

Quote:

---

There can be no process or framework of knowing (to drop the needless academy-speak) without an accompanying notion of the nature of being. They are always found together. Perhaps you could explain how a method of knowing can exist without underlying assumptions about the nature of what is to be known...

---

I can. it's not very complex, in fact. Knowledge is the imposition of a predictive model on sensory data; a curve-fitting if you will, a repeated attempt to find better and better predictors of future phenomena, hopefully converging on a perfect set of predictors eventually. You needn't know anything about the "true nature of the world" before you can construct models for sensory data -- in fact, had such ultimate knowledge been a prerequisite for everything else, none of the scientific advances (which I doubt you can seriously claim to not constitute "knowledge") would have occurred.

If there is such a thing as "ultimate reality", it will be discovered by understanding our sensory data, by generalizing from scientific theories. This is how all knowledge is gained -- you take the data, you figure out by what rules the data is generated. All knowledge is fundamentally gained by application of induction to the data instances. We always use deductive reasoning as well, but there must necessarily be an inductive step somewhere; the only alternative to such inductive acquisition of knowledge (the scientific way) is synthetic a-priori knowledge, and I have never seen anyone offer any such.

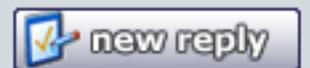

---

The one thing that amazes me about you two is that you deliberately refuse to learn from others' mistakes. You convinced yourselves that you don't need any of that stinkin' learnin' to learn the Ultimate Truth, just as Chiu convinced himself that he doesn't need to actually understand physics in order to do what he does. You just forge on, deliberately blinding yourself to the history or others' errors, and to others' pointing out of your lunacies and trivial errors.

--

Victor Danilchenko

A monster lies in wait for me, a stew of wounds and misery,
but fiercer still, in life and limb, is me that lies in wait for him.

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

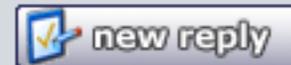

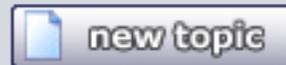

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Where do you stand metaphysically?

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                               | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 78(9/14/01 7:01 am)Reply  |  Re: Where do you stand metaphysically? <hr/> Victor, Quote: <hr/> DQ: One thing that I have noticed with your posts, Victor, is that they almost entirely lack substance. You either appeal to authority (or, as you would have it, refer to some celebrity philosopher's argument) or you abuse people. There is very little actual reasoning going on ... Victor: And you try to re-invent the wheel each time -- using the structures which were long ago discarded as infeasible for wheel-making. <hr/> What structures might these be - reason, concepts, definitions? I've not seen anyone discard these, not even you. Philosophizing one's way into the Infinite is always a process of reinventing the wheel. Everyone starts from scratch, as far as this matter is concerned. It doesn't matter what generation you belong to, or what has gone on before you, or what other people happen to know. You still have to make every step of the journey yourself, starting from the very beginning. |

Quote:

---

Acquisition of knowledge is a collective enterprise; entire humanity is doing it, and we all (at least those of us who are interested in knowledge rather than cheap ego gratification) stand on the shoulders of giants.

---

What you say is true of those forms of knowledge which are able to progress as a collective enterprise, such as science and academic philosophy. But the deeper knowledge of the Infinite is a different kettle of fish altogether. It is solely an individual affair. It is something that purely involves the relationship between the individual and Nature. Other people and their knowledge don't come into it.

Quote:

---

I have a number of original (or at least I think they are original, as I have never seen them before) ideas, but I don't have a reason to speak them to you, because the mistakes you make are the ones that have been made and corrected by countless others. I say nothing original in response to your posts, just as I would say nothing original when correcting your calculus errors -- originality lies much farther down on the frontier of knowledge, which frontier you unfortunately refuse to explore, opting instead for wandering amidst the debris of abandoned dreams and long-discarded concepts. Refuting the babbling of a Perpetuum Mobile inventor is not a good showcase for one's original work in physics, you know.

---

To my mind, a truly original thinker displays originality in everything he thinks or says. It filters into every aspect of his thought. You may well have had a few minor thoughts in the frontier of academic pursuit that no one has had before, but that doesn't stop you from being a depressingly unoriginal man.

That's the trouble with joining a great "collective enterprise" like science. Like an ant that fits seamlessly into the rest of the colony, you become a mindless clone.

Quote:

---

The one thing that amazes me about you two is that you deliberately refuse to learn from others' mistakes. You convinced yourselves that you don't need any of that stinkin' learnin' to learn the Ultimate Truth, just as Chiu convinced himself that he doesn't need to actually understand physics in order to do what he does. You just forge on, deliberately blinding yourself to the history or others' errors, and to others' pointing out of your lunacies and trivial errors.

---

Well, when you do find some errors in my thought, please let me know. What you've offered so far is unconvincing.

All you've basically done is slotted me into one of your pre-prepared academic categories and proceeded to argue against what that category stands for, rather than engage *me* in conversation. As a result, most of your arrows have been very wide of the mark.

In the end, you're like a blind man preaching to a sighted person that colours don't exist. So don't be surprised that I can't take you or your textbooks seriously.

Victor Danilchenko

Registered User

Posts: 20

(9/14/01 7:26 am)

Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

David,

Quote:

---

What structures might these be - reason, concepts, definitions? I've not seen anyone discard these, not even you.

---

Try ontology and semantic redefinition arguments.

Quote:

---

Philosophizing one's way into the Infinite is *always* a process of reinventing the wheel.

---

Funny, and i thought you were claiming that you could convey and even prove your acquired knowledge to others... getting a tad self-contradictory, aren't you?.. 🤔

Quote:

---

But the deeper knowledge of the Infinite is a different kettle of fish altogether. It is solely an individual affair. It is something that purely involves the relationship between the individual and Nature. Other people and their knowledge don't come into it.

---

Riiight. Then why the fuck are you talking about it? Why the "Genius News" bullshit?

Quote:

---

To my mind, a truly original thinker displays originality in everything he thinks or says. It filters into every aspect of his thought. You may well have had a few minor thoughts in the frontier of academic pursuit that no one has had before, but that doesn't stop you from being a depressingly unoriginal man.

---

fancy such accusations coming from a man who is repeating centuries-old errors...

Your delusions of originality stem purely from your ignorance. You don't know enough to realize how mundane and unoriginal, in addition to being lunatic, your ideas are.

You are as original as any modern cart wheel inventor.

Quote:

---

Well, when you do find some errors in my thought, please let me know. What you've offered so far is unconvincing.

---

Did you already forget the numerous logical errors I caught you doing? Did you forget VagueEx's exposition of the self-contradiction of your definition of "ultimate reality" and your conclusion about it (about properties), or my point about the contradictory inclusion of time-related components of your definition (which point you didn't even understand)? And there were more -- I kept catching you on blatant errors, over and over.

You have a depressingly selective (or short) memory.

Quote:

---

In the end, you're like a blind man preaching to a sighted person that colours don't exist. So don't be surprised that I can't take you or your textbooks seriously.

---

A sighted man could easily demonstrate to the blind man that colors do indeed exist; but you are very far from being able to do anything of the sort. the only thing you have going for you, is your very blithering ignorant arrogance.

--

Victor Danilchenko

A monster lies in wait for me, a stew of wounds and misery,
but fiercer still, in life and limb, is me that lies in wait for him.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 82
(9/14/01 8:45 am)
Reply

Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

Victor,

Quote:

---

DQ: Philosophizing one's way into the Infinite is *always* a process of reinventing the wheel.

Victor: Funny, and i thought you were claiming that you could convey and even prove your acquired knowledge to others... getting a tad self-contradictory, aren't you?..

---

No, that is your claim of what I claim. Once again, it's the category that you've put me in which is speaking to you, not me. I almost superfluous as far as this conversation is concerned

It is impossible to convey or prove one's knowledge of the Infinite to another, except perhaps to those who are on the brink of enlightenment themselves. However, one can stimulate, cajole, encourage, and inspire people to try and make the essential breakthroughs in thought for themselves.

Quote:

---

Did you forget VagueEx's exposition of the self-contradiction of your definition of "ultimate reality" and your conclusion about it (about properties), or my point about the contradictory inclusion of time-related components of your definition (which point you didn't even understand)?

---

I did understand both your argument and VagueEx's, but I found them both unconvincing.

Victor Danilchenko

Registered User

Posts: 21

(9/16/01 3:43 am)

Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

David,

Quote:

---

No, that is your claim of what I claim.

---

Do you or do you not claim that your knowledge of "ultimate reality" is logically derived and necessarily true? If yes, then you should be able to offer the same proofs to others -- and in fact you tried, with laughable lack of facility; conversely, if "philosophizing your way to the Infinite" is a purely personal endeavor that cannot be coherently communicated, then it cannot be logical.

You can't have it both ways. Either your "knowledge of the infinite" is logically derived, necessarily true, and communicable, making it a community endeavor -- or it is purely personal and individual, in which case it cannot be logical and necessarily true as you claim it to be. Buddhist enlightenemtn is not a rational thing, you know.

Quote:

---

I almost superfluous as far as this conversation is concerned

---

Only in the sense that you aren't contributing anything that's not incoherent irrational babbling.

Quote:

---

It is impossible to convey or prove one's knowledge of the Infinite to another, except perhaps to those who are on the brink of enlightenment themselves. However, one can stimulate, cajole, encourage, and inspire people to try and make the essential breakthroughs in thought for themselves.

---

If the "knowledge of the infinite" was real rational knowledge, it would have been explicable -- this is the nature of logic.

In short, you are contradicting yourself, you wish to have it both ways. You wish to both claim the mantle of intellectual respect conferred by rationality, and you wish to evade criticism by disclaiming critical analysis of your "knowledge of the infinite" -- after all, if it's not explicable, then it's not analyzable, right?..

Pathetic. Simply pathetic.

Quote:

---

I did understand both your argument and VagueEx's, but I found them both unconvincing.

---

You said yourself that you didn't grasp my point about the nature of time, and your reply to Vague's point made it plentifully clear that you failed to understand his point about ascription of predicates.

--

Victor Danilchenko

A monster lies in wait for me, a stew of wounds and misery, but fiercer still, in life and limb, is me that lies in wait for him.

Sapius

Registered User

Posts: 52

(9/17/01 3:32 am)

Reply

Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

Quote:

---

Victor: If the "knowledge of the infinite" was real rational knowledge, it would have been explicable -- this is the nature of logic.

---

Our Logic and Knowledge are still underdeveloped and incomplete, as far as Understanding the Reality of Nature is concerned.

It surely will be explicable, .....Rationally! .... In time.

For now, All of us have not yet reached a stage in "Mental" development, (in "Mental Evolution" times that is), and therefore are unable to understand it, experience it, or explain it if one does really experience it somehow.

Until now, some Minds who have broken through a barrier due to some Natural forces acting upon them, are themselves in a confused state, and do not understand it in the beginning. It is not some force that acts upon just any Mind, but on a Mind that seems to be a "balanced" one, in the sense that it has come to an understanding solely by grasping the essential bits of knowledge from many different fields of understanding, and assembles it together as in a giant jigsaw puzzle, which gives him a blur logical picture of Nature as a whole, putting him in a state of mind which is quite peaceful and unattached to all that he has come to understand as basically being tools of Nature and not the Truth of Nature itself, and thereby having no Actual importance on their own. Once a Mind understands this logically, not "believes", it could then suddenly break through with the help of Nature acting upon it, and thereby experience and understand the Reality of Existence.

In no way could this be expressed in words, as it would be a Mental experience, and cannot be proven until we discover a provable way to explain the actual Nature of a "Mind", which is very Natural by all means and has nothing to do with anything "supernatural".

The Key to Understanding the Reality of existence, and being able to explain it, would lie in the understanding of the nature, and existence of a "Mind" without any immediate material support, (which for now is understood as Soul, Spirit, Consciousness, or whatever), other than it being just an electrical charge floating in and around the brain cells. There is no way we can understand anything about the existence of a Mind away from its material brain with the level of knowledge we have come to acquire till date, but I think, some have experienced their Mind existing outside their "body", so to speak, and have experienced what it is like to exist just as a 'Mind - One with Nature', and I do not mean an "Out OF Body" experience through near death experiences, that is a totally different phenomenon. Nor would this necessarily involve any intricate meditation techniques practiced by Tantriks to awaken the Kundalini, and other meditations, which result in "Astro" traveling, which is again a different kind of phenomenon, and both can be expressed to a certain degree of clarity.

It is Only the Natural Mind itself, which can solve and understand its own Nature, and thereby the Reality of Nature/Infinity/Totality/ etc., etc. The answer lies deep within the question – Mind?! But all in good time, for one might have noticed, Nature is in no big hurry. 😊

-----

Edited by: Sapius at: 9/17/01 3:41:16 am

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 10
(9/23/01 1:50 am)
Reply

▣ Where do you stand metaphysically?

VERY interesting thread. Almost like watching wrestling. 😊

I see two camps here, both attempting to achieve the same goal, only using different methods. The bickering is a result of one side arguing over the effectiveness of their method versus the other.

Enlightenment is an emotional achievement. Whether it comes through formulae or semantics is irrelevant in the end.

EITheR
Registered User
Posts: 42
(9/23/01 4:29 am)
Reply

Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

i have always wondered how one could go about discussing (much less describing) something that is entirely personal in nature.
oh well.
this probably explains why i don't believe evangelists either. 😊

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 101
(9/23/01 7:11 am)
Reply

Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

WolfsonJakk,

Quote:

---

Enlightenment is an emotional achievement. Whether it comes through formulae or semantics is irrelevant in the end.

---

Enlightenment is actually the opposite of everything that is emotional. It is pure, clear understanding.

It is the emotions and the attachments they engender which causes unconsciousness of Reality.

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 103
(9/23/01 7:34 am)
Reply

Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

WolfsonJakk wrote:

Quote:

---

I see two camps here, both attempting to achieve the same goal, only using different methods. The bickering is a result of one side arguing over the effectiveness of their method versus the other.

---

Victor (science) and myself (spiritual philosophy) don't have the same goals at all.

The goal of the spiritual philosopher is nothing less than full and uninterrupted consciousness of Ultimate Reality twenty four hours a day. Science, by contrast, is essentially about creating descriptive models of what we perceive through the senses.

Two fundamentally different aims and two fundamentally different ways of using reason.

As for the "bickering" ..... The spiritual philosopher doesn't have any trouble recognizing and accepting science, but scientists are almost entirely ignorant of the nature and extent of the spiritual path. What's worse, they absolutely cannot stand the idea of something going over their heads.

WolfsonJakk

Registered User

Posts: 13

(9/25/01 6:37 am)

Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

Thanks for the response, David.

You wrote,

Quote:

---

Enlightenment is actually the opposite of everything that is emotional. It is pure, clear understanding.

It is the emotions and the attachments they engender which causes unconsciousness of Reality.

---

Pure, clear understanding of anything is not possible, by default. It is an effect of the Uncertainty Principle and works at the most fundamental levels. Thus any feeling of understanding is just that...a feeling.

As far as mathematics goes, it is truly elegant. As are the symphonies of Beethoven and the films of Kubrick, but that does not make them universal truths.  $2+2$  might always equal 4 and Tuesday may always come after Monday, but they are artificial inventions. Einstein (not the best of mathematicians) once said something along the lines of "The more exacting the mathematics, the farther from the truth it lies." When I would do a chemistry experiment back in college, I would hypothetically measure 10mg of Substance A, mix it with 5mg of Substance B, reduce it, and theoretically would receive 8mg of Substance C. In fact though, I would always receive 8.03mg or 7.98mg. It was attributed to human error or atmospheric humidity or flawed measuring equipment, etc. I began to realize at that young age, that I in fact recieved what I was supposed to receive based on the inputs, many unknown, and that the math was only an approximation. The truth was right before me.

You are exactly right about the attachments engendered by emotions that can cause unconsciousness of reality. But I argue that any striving, any sort of ambition, is housed in an emotional context. The quest for enlightenment itself rides an emotional impetus...and this quest, this striving, is no different from any other other, whether it be knowledge, money, power, peace, or solitude.

I believe the most fundamental of emotions are tied to the most basic portions of our brain (the Lymbic system, namely) that control the four 4's; feeding, fighting, fleeing, and sexual activity. They cannot be escaped. The emotional nuances we all take for granted as a result of our cortex are really just extensions of these basics.

The complexity of these basics allow us, as animals, to be self-reflexive, but they also allow for more confusion and uncertainty. As human animals we are constantly torn. Universal Truth does not exist and peace lies in the shifting middle path. All enlightenment is an emotional achievement.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 14
(9/25/01 6:47 am)
Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

David wrote,

Quote:

---

Victor (science) and myself (spiritual philosophy) don't have the same goals at all.

The goal of the spiritual philosopher is nothing less than full and uninterupted consciousness of Ultimate Reality twenty four hours a day. Science, by contrast, is essentially about creating descriptive models of what we perceive through the senses.

---

I respectfully disagree. One takes small steps the other large, but the goal is always transcendence of the present through understanding.

Needle

Registered User

Posts: 2

(9/25/01 11:04 am)

Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

Quote:

---

Ah, I see you've made the acquaintance of Needle. He must have followed either me or David Quinn here. He is a psychopath who has been banned from pretty much every EZBoard he has ever frequented. I would advise banning him pre-emptively, but such warnings are never heeded, so I guess you will have to find out the hard way. Have fun!

---

Yes, Needle, the nemesis of the "Politically Correct" bigots and censors.

According to VD, me actually telling the WHOLE TRUTH, regardless of whether or not it is "Politically Correct" or not, is what he calls "psychopathic".

That is why even now he so urgently calls to have me banned and censored here with such urgency.

He fears the WHOLE TRUTH, which he actually can't face.

THE MONSTER is within HIS OWN SELF, as in his own sig quote.

What else is new?

Ad Hominem personal attacks and lying hypocrisy is actually VD's stock in trade.

You shall see.

Best regards,

Needle

pub4.ezboard.com/bcosmotheism

PS--See for yourself, below, oh what a tortured soul!

Quote:

---

--

Victor Danilchenko

A monster lies in wait for me, a stew of wounds and misery, but fiercer still, in life and limb, is me that lies in wait for him.

---

That tells more about VD than even he can admit to himself.

"Those who will not reason, are bigots, those who cannot, are fools, and those who dare not, are slaves." - Lord Byron <http://www.xenith.com/cosmotheism/> COSMOTHEISM, is a Religion that Positively Asserts that there is a INTERNAL PURPOSE in LIFE and in COSMOS and that there is an Essential Unity, OR CONSCIOUSNESS that Binds ALL Living Beings and ALL of the INORGANIC COSMOS, as ONE. WHAT IS our TRUE HUMAN IDENTITY IS that We Are the Cosmos Made SELF-AWARE or, SELF-CONSCIOUS by EVOLUTION and that Our TRUE HUMAN PURPOSE IS to KNOW and to COMPLETE Ourselves as Conscious Individuals and as a SELF-AWARE Species and thereby to Co-Evolve with the COSMOS TOWARDS UNIVERSAL AWARENESS AND TOWARDS the ever HIGHER PERFECTION OF BEING. <http://pub4.ezboard.com/bcosmotheism>

EITheR
Registered User
Posts: 50
(9/25/01 11:11 am)
Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

this must be the thread to finish duels in.

Needle

Registered User

Posts: 5

(9/25/01 4:03 pm)

Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

Perhaps.

I wasn't the first to slap the face with the glove with the lying personal insult "psychopath", either.

But, that is to be expected from such a lying and hypocritical and censorious pc bigot, like VD actually is, and actually has been for as long as I have known of him, which is about two years or so, now.

What else is new?

Best regards,

Needle

pub4.ezboard.com/bcosmotheism

"Those who will not reason, are bigots, those who cannot, are fools, and those who dare not, are slaves." - Lord Byron <http://www.xenith.com/cosmotheism/> COSMOTHEISM, is a Religion that Positively Asserts that there is a INTERNAL PURPOSE in LIFE and in COSMOS and that there is an Essential Unity, OR CONSCIOUSNESS that Binds ALL Living Beings and ALL of the INORGANIC COSMOS, as ONE. WHAT IS our TRUE HUMAN IDENTITY IS that We Are the Cosmos Made SELF-AWARE or, SELF-CONSCIOUS by EVOLUTION and that Our TRUE HUMAN PURPOSE IS to KNOW and to COMPLETE Ourselves as Conscious Individuals and as a SELF-AWARE Species and thereby to Co-Evolve with the COSMOS TOWARDS UNIVERSAL AWARENESS AND TOWARDS the ever HIGHER PERFECTION OF BEING. <http://pub4.ezboard.com/bcosmotheism>

EITheR

Registered User

Posts: 54

(9/25/01 4:13 pm)

Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

so, what's your point?

Needle
Registered User
Posts: 7
(9/25/01 11:31 pm)
Reply

My point? I already have made it. Read the prior posts.

---

I guess that you have not paid much attention to this whole string or actually read all of the posts, and if so, then it really doesn't matter, whatsoever, if you don't understand my point.

My point is all there for all those that have actually paid attention.

Best regards,

Needle

pub4.ezboard.com/bcosmotheism

EITheR
Registered User
Posts: 55
(9/26/01 12:21 am)
Reply

My point? I already have made it. Read the prior posts.

---

i'm not sure anyone else here is concerned with your posts, either. otherwise you may have been responded to...well, other than me.

Needle
Registered User
Posts: 10
(9/26/01 2:04 am)
Reply

Re: My point? I already have made it. Read the prior posts.

---

Maybe some others rather choose to "think" first, before actually responding, unlike yourself?

Best regards,

Needle

pub4.ezboard.com/bcosmotheism

"Those who will not reason, are bigots, those who cannot, are fools, and those who dare not, are slaves." - Lord Byron <http://www.xenith.com/cosmotheism/> COSMOTHEISM, is a Religion that Positively Asserts that there is a INTERNAL PURPOSE in LIFE and in COSMOS and that there is an Essential Unity, OR CONSCIOUSNESS that Binds ALL Living Beings and ALL of the INORGANIC COSMOS, as ONE. WHAT IS our TRUE HUMAN IDENTITY IS that We Are the Cosmos Made SELF-AWARE or, SELF-CONSCIOUS by EVOLUTION and that Our TRUE HUMAN PURPOSE IS to KNOW and to COMPLETE Ourselves as Conscious Individuals and as a SELF-AWARE Species and thereby to Co-Evolve with the COSMOS TOWARDS UNIVERSAL AWARENESS AND TOWARDS the ever HIGHER

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 104

(9/26/01 3:51 am)

Reply

Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

---

WolfsonJakk,

Quote:

---

DQ: Victor (science) and myself (spiritual philosophy) don't have the same goals at all.

The goal of the spiritual philosopher is nothing less than full and uninterrupted consciousness of Ultimate Reality twenty four hours a day. Science, by contrast, is essentially about creating descriptive models of what we perceive through the senses.

WJ: I respectfully disagree. One takes small steps the other large, but the goal is always transcendence of the present through understanding.

---

Well, sure, they both require the intelligent and disciplined use of the brain. But beyond this, their paths are divergent.

Science is all about cutting the sensory world into pieces and finding the relationships between them, whereas spiritual philosophy focuses upon the very source of all this cutting up, the mind itself.

--

"Straining our minds does not help us to understand how Buddhas transcend all things. Once, Guatama measured out three thousand chiliochosms (each containing a myriad worlds), a Bodhisattva suddenly appeared and passed over them in a single stride. Yet even that prodigious stride failed to cover the width of one pore of the Buddha's skin! Now what sort of mental attainments have you that will help you study the meaning of that?"

- Huang Po (a 7th century AD Chinese sage)

EITheR
Registered User
Posts: 60
(9/26/01 8:48 am)
Reply

 Re: My point? I already have made it. Read the prior posts.

---

Needle, again i suggest you practice what you preach.

(boy, its fun to watch you writhe.)

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Where do you stand metaphysically?

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Needle <input type="checkbox"/> Registered User                     Posts: 12                     (9/26/01 9:22 am)                     Reply  |  Re: My point? I already have made it. Read the prior posts. <hr/> Indeed, I always do so. Writhe? You are really quite delusional aren't you? What else is new? ----- One of the best systems of Modern Metaphysics that I have ever seen is Robert M. Pirsigs Metaphysics of Quality. Check it out here below, and let those that can "think", actually let me know what they do "think" about these ideas. http://www.moq.org/ Enjoy! Best regards, Needle pub4.ezboard.com/bcosmotheism "Those who will not reason, are bigots, those who cannot, are fools, and those who dare not, are slaves." - Lord Byron http://www.xenith.com/cosmotheism/ COSMOTHEISM, is a Religion that Positively Asserts that there is a INTERNAL PURPOSE in LIFE and in COSMOS and that there is an Essential Unity, OR CONSCIOUSNESS that Binds ALL Living Beings and ALL of the INORGANIC COSMOS, as ONE. WHAT IS our TRUE HUMAN IDENTITY IS that We Are the Cosmos Made SELF-AWARE or, SELF-CONSCIOUS by EVOLUTION and that Our TRUE HUMAN PURPOSE IS to KNOW and to COMPLETE Ourselves as Conscious Individuals and as a SELF-AWARE Species and thereby to Co-Evolve with the COSMOS TOWARDS UNIVERSAL AWARENESS AND TOWARDS the ever HIGHER PERFECTION OF BEING. http://pub4.ezboard.com/bcosmotheism |

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| EITheRRegistered UserPosts: 61(9/26/01 10:41 am)Reply                                                                                                                                                                      |  Re: My point? I already have made it. Read the prior posts. <hr/> Quote: <hr/> You are really quite delusional aren't you? <hr/> we all are.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 82(9/26/01 10:47 am)Reply                                                                                          |  Re: My point? I already have made it. Read the prior posts. <hr/> If you're saying that you are delusional, Either, how then can you suggest that everyone else is? Why would anyone take such a claim seriously? In other words, do you reject the idea that some people may not be delusional? Dan Rowden                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| Needle Registered UserPosts: 15(9/26/01 10:47 am)Reply  |  Re: My point? I already have made it. Read the prior posts. <hr/> Speaking only for yourself, and regarding "writhing". Best regards, Needle pub4.ezboard.com/bcosmotheism "Those who will not reason, are bigots, those who cannot, are fools, and those who dare not, are slaves." - Lord Byron http://www.xenith.com/cosmotheism/ COSMOTHEISM, is a Religion that Positively Asserts that there is a INTERNAL PURPOSE in LIFE and in COSMOS and that there is an Essential Unity, OR CONSCIOUSNESS that Binds ALL Living Beings and ALL of the INORGANIC COSMOS, as ONE. WHAT IS our TRUE HUMAN IDENTITY IS that We Are the Cosmos Made SELF-AWARE or, SELF-CONSCIOUS by EVOLUTION and that Our TRUE HUMAN PURPOSE IS to KNOW and to COMPLETE Ourselves as Conscious Individuals and as a SELF-AWARE Species and thereby to Co-Evolve with the COSMOS TOWARDS UNIVERSAL AWARENESS AND TOWARDS the ever HIGHER PERFECTION OF BEING. http://pub4.ezboard.com/bcosmotheism |
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 83(9/26/01 10:51 am)Reply                                                                                        |  Metaphysics of Quality <hr/> Needle: Quote: <hr/> One of the best systems of Modern Metaphysics that I have ever seen is Robert M. Pirsigs Metaphysics of Quality. <hr/>                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |

I have to say I thought Zen and the Art of Motorcycle Maintenance was kind of mediocre Buddhist writing. Perhaps you could give a brief outline of your own metaphysical views?

Dan Rowden

EITheR
Registered User
Posts: 62
(9/26/01 11:26 am)
Reply

 Metaphysics of Quality

---

drowden, i respond to you as this:

if one perceives me to be delusional, then that is the manifestation of what one perceives. i am not entirely suggesting that either one is 'the truth'. however, if one perceives another to be delusional in such a format as this, then it is merely the composition of that reader.

i have seen this tossed about many times.

one person responds one way to a post, another responds another way, etc.

to claim that all (or even some) posts are written without any prior subjective forces is absurd.

if i respond to a post i have read, i am responding to my own perceptions of that post--neither the poster or his original concept of that post.

the same applies to all who do the same, whether they acknowledge it or not.

petty squabbles are rampant in such a field--maily because no one seems to realize that.

therefore, if one poster perceives me to be delusional, whom am i being compared to? whom is anyone compared to if not some standard manifestation within that persons element.

in essence, if needle perceives me to be delusional, one can conclude (well, i could conclude) that my post is being perceived by manifestations within that particular poster, nothing more. hence, if i am delusional, we all must be.

and so on, and so on, and so on.

Needle
Registered User
Posts: 16
(9/26/01 12:50 pm)
Reply

 Re: Metaphysics of Quality

---

Quote:

---

I have to say I thought Zen and the Art of Motorcycle Maintenance was kind of mediocre Buddhist writing. Perhaps you could give a brief outline of your own metaphysical views?

Dan Rowden

---

Actually, that first book merely introduced the Metaphysics of Quality that Pirsig later elaborated in much more detail in his second book, LILA. My Metaphysical views mirror much of what Pirsig and his "Lila Squad" have elaborated, but, the terminology and definitions may be slightly different.

My metaphysics is Panpsychic in Nature, with COSMIC CONSCIOUSNESS, as the ABSOLUTE ground of all BEING, and this UNITY or MONISM, can only be physically understood by our HUMANLY Self-aware CONSCIOUSNESS, as a DUALISM.

This COSMIC CONSCIOUSNESS is WITHIN ALL BEINGS, WITHIN ALL THINGS, and evolves towards ever higher complexity and ever higher levels of SELF-AWARENESS and SELF-CONSCIOUSNESS.

Some of these levels are described by Pirsig in his MOQ and do describe COSMIC EVOLUTION and COSMIC CONSCIOUSNESS as eventual inherent properties and purposes and meanings of all within COSMOS.

To gain even greater insight into these ideas, you should read Ken Wilbers' tome, Sex, Ecology, and Spirituality. Therein, is much more meat that you can sink your teeth into and discover the SCIENTIFIC basis and support for these SPIRITUAL insights.

Best regards,

Needle

pub4.ezboard.com/bcosmotheism

PS--If you want any additional information, please check out the link above for Modern Cosmotheist Metaphysics. Let me know what you think once you have actually read the works.

"Those who will not reason, are bigots, those who cannot, are fools, and those who dare not, are slaves." - Lord Byron <http://www.xenith.com/cosmotheism/> COSMOTHEISM, is a Religion that Positively Asserts that there is a INTERNAL PURPOSE in LIFE and in COSMOS and that there is an Essential Unity, OR CONSCIOUSNESS that Binds ALL Living Beings and ALL of the INORGANIC COSMOS, as ONE. WHAT IS our TRUE HUMAN IDENTITY IS that We Are the Cosmos Made SELF-AWARE or, SELF-CONSCIOUS by EVOLUTION and that Our TRUE HUMAN PURPOSE IS to KNOW and to COMPLETE Ourselves as Conscious Individuals and as a SELF-AWARE Species and thereby to Co-Evolve with the COSMOS TOWARDS UNIVERSAL AWARENESS AND TOWARDS the ever HIGHER PERFECTION OF BEING. <http://pub4.ezboard.com/bcosmotheism>

Needle
Registered User
Posts: 17
(9/26/01 12:57 pm)
Reply

Re: Delusional circular reasoning?

---

Quote:

---

and so on, and so on, and so on.

---

Apparently so.

"Writhe?" taken out of any false and pre-supposed or assumed context, is and was "delusional", but, only by you.

What else is new?

Best regards,

Needle

pub4.ezboard.com/bcosmotheism

"Those who will not reason, are bigots, those who cannot, are fools, and those who dare not, are slaves." - Lord Byron <http://www.xenith.com/cosmotheism/> COSMOTHEISM, is a Religion that Positively Asserts that there is a INTERNAL PURPOSE in LIFE and in COSMOS and that there is an Essential Unity, OR CONSCIOUSNESS that Binds ALL Living Beings and ALL of the INORGANIC COSMOS, as ONE.

WHAT IS our TRUE HUMAN IDENTITY IS that We Are the Cosmos Made SELF-AWARE or, SELF-CONSCIOUS by EVOLUTION and that Our TRUE HUMAN PURPOSE IS to KNOW and to COMPLETE Ourselves as Conscious Individuals and as a SELF-AWARE Species and thereby to Co-Evolve with the COSMOS TOWARDS UNIVERSAL AWARENESS AND TOWARDS the ever HIGHER PERFECTION OF BEING. <http://pub4.ezboard.com/bcosmotheism>

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2
(9/26/01 1:13 pm)
Reply

 Maths

Quote:

"It's the language of all sciences, and if the superstring theory is true, it may actually be the "stuff" everything is made of."

Unless we presuppose beings, in which case, being demands that all "stuff" moves to and is made by music!

'Music as accompaniment' ----the enemy of art that would have us compose a science of all languages!

There shall never be a constant of constants!

Sapius
Registered User
Posts: 57
(9/28/01 4:03 am)
Reply

 Re: Maths

Could someone direct me to a concise explanation of 'superstring theory'.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 29
(9/29/01 12:53 am)
Reply

 Where do you stand metaphysically?

www.mkaku.org/hyper\_toe.htm

Sapius
Registered User
Posts: 95
(10/10/01 4:46 pm)
Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

Hey Wolf, I'm sorry I forgot about the question I asked, and did not look into this thread.

Thanks for the link, and I think it is very important for me to understand what Dr. Michio Kaku has to say, which will help me understand myself. Especially the way he says it plainly by giving an example of a Carp.

Thanks again. 😊

.....IMHO

 The CatArena
Registered User
Posts: 1
(3/18/02 5:17 pm)
Reply
ezSupporter

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

Victor, I must tell you, although my belief's are 180 degrees out (spiritually) from yours; I don't judge anyone for that. It's needless to say you're an incredibly intelligent person. I also admire your "love" for math...it's pure and is the foundation for all science...but then...there's my belief and at the risk of plunging into that...I'd rather leave summarize my observations on a positive note and thank God that someone put this Forum here...

<wink>

Cat

Never trust a person that doesn't like cats.

KatBlues
Registered User
Posts: 2
(3/27/02 5:55 am)
Reply

 Re: Maths

I'd really recommend Ken Wilber's Theory of Everything ... it's got a very precise and enlightening description of string theory

kat

|                                                                                                                                                                                  |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Existential IntegrityRegistered UserPosts: 7(3/27/02 9:23 pm)Reply    |  Re: Where do you stand metaphysically? <hr/> i don't like polls. i want to hear the opinions of the source; a question and a series of answers. i like a question to open a conversation rather than a subject to vote on. this same poll could more effectively be presented as a question, in my opinion; it lead to conversation either way, as they always do, and i think starting with the conversation is more efficient. nobody talks about polls, they answer the question. Edited by: Existential Integrity at: 3/27/02 9:29:28 pm |
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 350(3/28/02 10:52 am)Reply                    |  Re: Where do you stand metaphysically? <hr/> If you read the intitial posting to this thjread you'll notice that I said this poll was experimental. Even though it kicked off a pretty healthy discussion, I disabled the poll feature, primarily because one dork, in particular, began to abuse it.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| Existential IntegrityRegistered UserPosts: 20(3/28/02 2:46 pm)Reply  |  Re: Where do you stand metaphysically? <hr/> my point exactly. i read that the poll was experimental, and i was trying to influence your opinion on whether to disable it or not. 😊 i think they make a big mess.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| izzimoonRegistered UserPosts: 3(5/28/02 12:56 pm)Reply                                                                                                |  Re: Where do you stand metaphysically? <hr/> can i be an All-as-One-ist? or just an -ism? Maybe i am an eternalist or an Infinite One... what about an etceterist?...an unbeliever? Truth iz False, ya'll!! Word. ps: i am but one amongst several, who come to warn, challenge, inspire, and survive. Listen: begin within to transcend, never matter mind, just Blend... a wordist? yeah...                                                                                                                        |
| AgranonRegistered UserPosts: 7(5/29/02 1:54 am)Reply                |  Re: Where do you stand metaphysically? <hr/> egoist?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |

Non Sum
Registered User
Posts: 125
(5/29/02 12:18 pm)
Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

The Positivists claim metaphysics is "meaningless." This was only inadvertently a metaphysical statement, so it shouldn't count ('intent' being necessary for guilt). But, then, philosophy ( getting even) claimed the Postitivists are "meaningless," and passe'.

The Buddha claimed that metaphysics was beside the point, and only served as a delaying tactic so that one may be sure of reincarnating as an insect, rather than enlightening. Was Buddha an early Positivist? We can't be positive, but he did claim that "All (including Positivists) are Buddhas." So, there may well be a connection, or not.

That said, I think metaphysics is fun, and troubles to ask most of the questions in life that are worth finding an answer for. The: Who, what, when, where, why, and how; for: mind, universe, being, consciousness, God, (and most especially) Me; are the 'spear to the heart' matters of metaphysics. You've got to love her for that, or not.

'Jnana yoga' (knowledge yoga) is metaphysics being used as a tool for enlightenment, and comes highly recommended by Krishna in the Gita, among others. But, Krishna cautions that not all, actually very few, are suited for this form of yoga. The test would probably hinge on, whether it strikes you as a fun thing to play at metaphysics, or not.

NS (not sure)

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

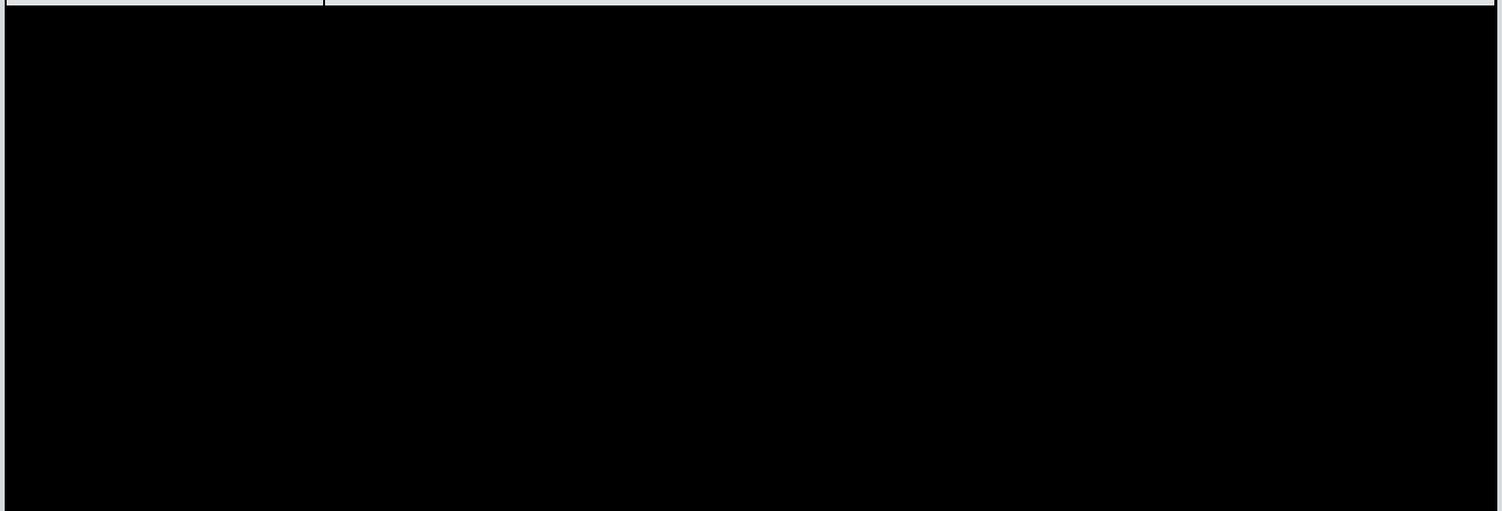

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Where do you stand metaphysically?

| Author                                                                         | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Ursus HorribilisRegistered UserPosts: 6(10/2/02 11:37 am)Reply | <input type="checkbox"/> None of the above<hr/> Deist... as opposed to theist.----Too tired to explain the difference just now. I'd get confused with ontology and deontology and gerontology. |
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 799(10/2/02 11:48 am)Reply             | <input type="checkbox"/> either way<hr/> The explanation is not needed. Both are as dumb as each other.Dan Rowden                                                                              |

Ursus Horribilis
Registered User
Posts: 24
(10/5/02 3:02 am)
Reply

 Re: None of the above

---

I was going to speak of Paul Tillich's notion of "Ground of Being", and expand upon it as my definition for Deism. I was going to compare and contrast that with a Theistic approach which I reject.

But Mr. Moderator sir, your encouragement of discussion is really breathtaking.

I also appreciate your openness it smacks of genius.

----

You don't really value discussion you value agreement.

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 827
(10/5/02 8:46 am)
Reply

 Re: either way

---

I don't see why you need me to encourage you. Are you an adult? The classical and conventional notions of Deism and Theism are both absurd because they reach absurd conclusions about the nature of Reality. If you want to discuss Tillich's "ground of being" ideas then by all means outline them. He's not an altogether uninteresting fellow.

Dan Rowden

Ursus Horribilis
Registered User
Posts: 25
(10/5/02 11:56 am)
Reply

 Encouragement?

---

What form of discussion would be worthwhile when it begins with one party not being open to the discussion in the first place?

----

A closed mind is hardly a sign of genius is it?

|                                                                                           |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Leyla RRegistered UserPosts: 150(10/7/02 4:18 pm)Reply         |  Re: Encouragement? <hr/> Master (I assume) Horribilis: Quote: <hr/> What form of discussion would be worthwhile when it begins with one party not being open to the discussion in the first place? <hr/> The form of discussion that has the potential to open minds. Let's see what ya got.                     |
| strongstevesaintRegistered UserPosts: 1(10/10/02 6:35 pm)Reply |  metaphysical views? <hr/> Aren't most metaphysical (or ontological) views/theories usually regarded as factually meaningless since they are unfalsifiable? [edited to add] I just noticed this topic was started as an experiment in polling...nevermind. Edited by: strongstevesaint at: 10/10/02 6:40:21 pm |
| MGregoryRegistered UserPosts: 278(7/11/03 1:16 pm)Reply        |  Flashbacks <hr/> Why do you get these flashbacks from the past? This post from strongstevesaint is so old he wrote it right before he went to take his pet dinosaur out for a walk.                                                                                                                                                              |

Naturyl
Registered User
Posts: 6
(7/11/03 5:03 pm)
Reply

Re: metaphysical views?

---

It's odd, actually. Almost the same discussion has resurfaced here, toward the latter pages of this long thread:

pub138.ezboard.com/fponde...=322.topic

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 279
(7/12/03 10:06 am)
Reply

Re: metaphysical views?

---

Oh, I was talking about the date of the post. Sometimes threads that are months old jump to the top of the list as if they were recently posted to. Just one of those things I'm forced to think about when my brain is too tired to think.

But yeah, David and Victor? They always have the same conversation. In fact, there have been many Victor-types over the years that have engaged David in dialog and the conversation is the same every time. It can be summarized as follows:

V: There is no ultimate truth!

D: You mean, it's ultimately true that there is no ultimate truth?

V: No! That's impossible!

D: So, there is ultimate truth after all?

V: You are an idiot!

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 280
(7/12/03 10:11 am)
Reply

Re: metaphysical views?

---

Ah, when someone votes in the poll, it jumps to the top of the list. Got it.

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1304
(7/12/03 10:15 am)
Reply

 wading through...

---

Hell, I'm just impressed that someone bothered to wade through all the thread pages....

Dan Rowden

Rairun
Registered User
Posts: 82
(7/12/03 11:07 am)
Reply

 ...

---

Quote:

V: There is no ultimate truth!

D: You mean, it's ultimately true that there is no ultimate truth?

V: No! That's impossible!

D: So, there is ultimate truth after all?

V: You are an idiot!

---

Yeah, that sounds about right. I think that Dave Toast hit the nail when he pointed that it's not ultimately true that ultimate truth cannot be reached through logic, it's only logically true. I thought David Quinn would reply asking "but is it ultimately true that it's only logically true that ultimate truth cannot be reached through logic?", but he just called the Lewis Carrol's paradox "academic wankery" instead.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 457
(7/12/03 12:36 pm)
Reply

Re:

To which I'd say, I don't know, I couldn't, no human could. What I can say is that it is logically true that it is only logically true that ultimate truth cannot be reached through logic.

It's funny coz this example of tooing and froing is essentially what Carroll's paradox elucidates upon for us, with reference to logic's ultimate sphere of reference. David is Achilles BTW and will always end up hamstrung on that one.

That is not to make light of his exploration on 'the edges' though.

Having read Victor quite a bit before, I don't think he'd start by saying "There is no ultimate Truth". Rather he would say something like "If there is ultimate truth, there is no knowing of it that can be consistently varifiable and unfalsifiable".

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1262
(7/12/03 12:43 pm)
Reply

-----

Yes, I am the one who says outright that there is no ultimate truth.

Naturyl
Registered User
Posts: 7
(7/12/03 12:53 pm)
Reply

Re:

Just for the record, my position is that ultimate reality is real, but it does not exist. Existence emanates from ultimate reality - meaning that reality is prerequisite to existence. So of course ultimate reality does not exist - if it existed, it would no longer be Ultimate Reality.

As to the eternal war between Vickie Danilchenko and the 'clueless idiot' legions who actually value ontology, most here are displaying the proper reaction... "yawn."

G Shantz
Registered User
Posts: 343
(7/12/03 1:26 pm)
Reply

 Re: wading through...

---

Dan Rowden wrote:

Quote:

---

Hell, I'm just impressed that someone bothered to wade through all the thread pages....

---

Actually, I often find myself returning to them time and time again. It's often a good way to have the concepts reinforced.

It's unfortunate that I didn't have a deeper response to David's book, but I wanted to say something. This grasping for an identity (as you probably gleaned from my recent long post) is ...desperate. That's probably why I'm engaging Suergaz in conversation at all.

And Tharan, I think once you see that women are essentially purposeless, you will have less of a desire to fuck them. It's really true that if it were not for their beauty they wouldn't have any appearance or notice to males.

Greg

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1263
(7/12/03 1:37 pm)
Reply

 --

---

Your argument that reality is prerequisite to existence is faulted through the sense in which these words are to be taken as synonymous with oneanother. Existence is prerequisite to reality as much as reality is prerequisite to existence. A thing may be requisite to itself, but not pre-requisite. Ultimate reality does not exist, because it is not real.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1265
(7/12/03 1:45 pm)
Reply

 ---

---

What is this purported 'essential purposelessness' of women Greg? Can you articulate it?

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1266

(7/12/03 1:59 pm)

Reply

Your desperation Greg is not in the grasping for an identity, but for placing it in relationship to the identities of others. You really do think me worthless for seeing no ultimate reality! (:D)

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Where do you stand metaphysically?

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                             | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| NaturylRegistered UserPosts: 8(7/12/03 3:12 pm)Reply  |  Re: -- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Ultimate reality does not exist, because it is not real. <hr/> This argument relies on a misuse of the term 'existence.' Reality (like 'being') is a first-level concept, while existence is a second level concept. Ultimate reality could not exist simply because it is defined as 'that which is back of existence.' It does not follow, however, that ultimate reality is not real. A thing need not exist to be real - imagine a unicorn. Within your imagination, the unicorn has reality, even though it does not in fact exist - the most which actually exists is a series of neural firings in your brain. The unicorn is real, but does not exist. If you are arguing that there is nothing back of existence, that's fine, but it doesn't refute my arguemnt, and raises the question of how a second-level concept could be without a foundation. |

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1268
(7/12/03 3:30 pm)
Reply

☐ ---

---

Your point is that the reality of a concept is a reality. But this was never in question. A flawed concept is not a concept, but a flawed concept. Since Ultimate reality cannot really be conceived, it is really not real!

First level /second level concepts? What is this nonsense? I already showed where existence and reality are synonymous.

Edited by: suergaz at: 7/12/03 3:31 pm

Naturyl
Registered User
Posts: 9
(7/17/03 5:54 pm)
Reply

☐ Re: --

---

Ultimate reality is not real, then. It doesn't matter. Reality is what it is, and we are all trying to understand it in our own ways. If others don't find the idea of ultimate reality meaningful, I won't insist upon an ultimate reality. All I really insist upon is a basic and realistic understanding of existence, which may mean different things to different people, but which always comes down to a few broad facts - the kind of universal insights expressed in Buddhism, Taoism, and similar naturalistic mystical traditions.

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1095
(7/18/03 4:53 am)
Reply

☐ Re: ---

---

suergaz wrote,

Quote:

---

Since Ultimate reality cannot really be conceived, it is really not real!

---

How would a person know that something inconcievable was inconceivable?

You can define Ultimate Reality as anything you wish. It is only name. In this case, the phrase "ultimate reality" is often used to espouse existant commonalities inherent in the system we see around us; some level of personal consciousness through the contrast of objects and ideas, the elusive nature of material forms, desires being the root of suffering, etc.

Tharan

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1283

(7/18/03 1:08 pm)

Reply

---

Quote:

---

How would a person know that something inconcievable was inconceivable?

---

They wouldn't unless they attempted to conceive it.

---

Quote:

---

You can define Ultimate Reality as anything you wish. It is only name.

---

Yes it is only a name, but I cannot define ultimate reality as anything I wish without being mistaken.

---

Quote:

---

In this case, the phrase "ultimate reality" is often used to espouse existant commonalities inherent in the system we see around us; some level of personal consciousness through the contrast of objects and ideas, the elusive nature of material forms, desires being the root of suffering, etc.

---

And I maintain that the usage of this term for these inherent commonalities is error!

G Shantz
Registered User
Posts: 348
(7/18/03 3:25 pm)
Reply

 purpose

---

suergaz wrote:

Quote:

---

What is this purported 'essential purposelessness' of women Greg? Can you articulate it?

---

'Essential purposelessness'?

I was thinking of how they don't seem to really have their own purpose, except for the purpose created for them by an external source like an employer, boyfriend, husband or child. Women's roles usually are defined in relation to something.

Edited by: G Shantz at: 7/18/03 3:29 pm

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1096
(7/18/03 5:35 pm)
Reply

 Re: -----

---

Zag

Quote:

---

tharan:How would a person know that something inconcievable was inconceivable?

suergaz:They wouldn't unless they attempted to conceive it.

---

What is "it?" What are they trying to concieve? Isn't it "inconceivable?"

Quote:

---

tharan: You can define Ultimate Reality as anything you wish. It is only name.

suergaz: Yes it is only a name, but I cannot define ultimate reality as anything I wish without being mistaken.

---

How would a Writer of Definitions know that he was mistaken?

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1286

(7/19/03 2:37 am)

Reply

 ----

---

tharan:How would a person know that something inconcievable was inconceivable?

suergaz:They wouldn't unless they attempted to conceive it.

tharan:What is "it?" What are they trying to concieve? Isn't it "inconceivable?"

suergaz:Don't ask me! You said 'something' and I took it to be anything inconceivable. We had been speaking of 'ultimate reality'

tharan: You can define Ultimate Reality as anything you wish. It is only name.

suergaz: Yes it is only a name, but I cannot define ultimate reality as anything I wish without being mistaken.

tharan:How would a Writer of Definitions know that he was mistaken?

suergaz: By losing his definition whilst writing it.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1287

(7/19/03 2:45 am)

Reply

 ---

---

Greg:-

Quote:

---

'Essential purposelessness'?

I was thinking of how they don't seem to really have their own purpose, except for the purpose created for them by an external source like an employer, boyfriend, husband or child. Women's roles usually are defined in relation to something.

---

|                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                        | As are mens roles. What's your point?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| G ShantzRegistered UserPosts: 349(7/20/03 3:56 pm)Reply     |  -- <hr/> Replace something with someone in the last sentence. Although a 'role' does imply 'others.' Edited by: G Shantz at: 7/20/03 4:08 pm                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1295(7/21/03 12:01 pm)Reply    |  --- <hr/> men are defined in relation to someone, namely themselves, again, waht's your point?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| G ShantzRegistered UserPosts: 350(7/23/03 7:36 am)Reply     |  -- <hr/> You just made it for me.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1301(7/23/03 2:46 pm)Reply     |  --- <hr/> If that's your point, definition in relation to oneself is not exclusive for men nor is defining oneself in relation to others exclusive for women, and even if it was, how could either sex be 'essentially purposeless' without the other aslo being so?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 861(8/23/03 8:08 am)Reply |  Re: --- <hr/> In fact, those who have stated that men are incapabale of going to war even for glory or riches, but only for women, have inadvertently admitted that men's existence is always derivative of and in relation to women. Look at what Faizi said about boy's always reacting to the presence of a girl, whereas girls are indifferent to the presence of boys. The owner of Penthouse magazine has said that sex is the main factor in every man's life, without exception. Being celibate only increases that. Then too, consider that manhood is nothing but that which is compared to and contrasted with the feminine. This is why being NOT woman, and NOT girl, is of such persistent importance in the life of boys and men. This is |

why men call each other pussies as an insult.

The constant petty harping on the ways that women differ from men in their motivations is absolutely childish; it is both emotionally and philosophically immature. Greg's point that men more often involve themselves in interests for their own sake is quite true, yet there are so many exceptions.

Now, if I were a young and unencumbered male, I would not be sitting at home collecting welfare or even working or going to school for that matter. I'd be out exploring the world and having adventures.

Dragon of Logic
Registered User
Posts: 13
(8/23/03 2:39 pm)
Reply

 Re: ---

---

Sex is the only tie that bonds men to women.

It is ultimately useless except for procreation.

"Making love" is the term used by those who would sugarcoat the violence that is sex.

The desire to procreate is so innate, so powerful, that it is easy and even enjoyable to engage in such an act. That is the trap. But that is how it must be.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1403
(8/23/03 6:05 pm)
Reply

 Re: ---

---

DofL, I always thought dragons would have magical sexual appetites! Marsha is a dragon like you and she doesn't have sex either! What is it about dragons that makes them this way?

Edited by: suergaz at: 8/23/03 11:18 pm

G Shantz

Registered User

Posts: 370

(8/24/03 9:07 am)

Reply

Re: ---

Anna Oleynik wrote:

Quote:

---

Now, if I were a young and unencumbered male, I would not be sitting at home collecting welfare or even working or going to school for that matter. I'd be out exploring the world and having adventures.

---

I just spent several days in Toronto on a whim, sleeping in parks, hanging with crack addicts, getting propositioned on Yonge Street by men, looking at all the trendies and generally being repulsed. It was a real eye-opener. Big cities are madhouses. That's enough adventures for a while.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 863

(8/24/03 11:29 am)

Reply

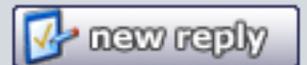

Re: ---

Now my son has a friend that I've never actually met, but if I were his age, I'd hunt him down and offer him anything he wants, no strings.

Always a misfit, at 15 his mother bought him a djembe drum as an outlet. He dropped out of high school and somehow he flew to England. From there travelled down to Africa. He did not come home for three years. He played the drum for food, and went to South America as well. He now speaks fluent Spanish. My son knew him somewhat in high school, then at some sort of nighttime drum circle he heard such a drumming that he came running through the woods to see who was playing, "like no white boy you ever heard."

I'd take someone with mettle like that over a jock or rock star any day.

|                                                                                           |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Dragon of LogicRegistered UserPosts: 15(8/25/03 10:31 pm)Reply |  Re: --- <hr/> Actually, Suergaz, or Zag, I do have a tremendous appetite for it. When I stated that it was "violence", I was referring to the fact that the nerve endings which carry feelings react the same whether the feeling is of pleasure or pain. They are forced from their natural state. Too much pleasure can destabilize one's mind the same as if one feels too much pain. It is just another path for the ego to get it's fix. |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1406(8/26/03 12:38 am)Reply       |  Re: --- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Too much pleasure can destabilize one's mind the same as if one feels too much pain. It is just another path for the ego to get it's fix. <hr/> Maybe for you.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

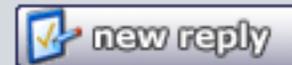

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Where do you stand metaphysically?

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                   | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Dragon of LogicRegistered UserPosts: 18(8/26/03 1:19 am)Reply |  Re: --- <hr/> Definitely for me. What are your views then? Is there another reason for engaging in sex besides procreation? Are you one of the "making love" or "expressing your love" crowd?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| RairunRegistered UserPosts: 118(8/26/03 2:45 am)Reply         |  "love" <hr/> Quote: <hr/> What are your views then? Is there another reason for engaging in sex besides procreation? Are you one of the "making love" or "expressing your love" crowd? <hr/> One isn't necessarily separated from the other. I notice the feeling of love arises when there's a certain kind of unity in your mind. At this moment I'm finding it hard to describe such unity, but it has to do with thoughts and feelings flowing effortlessly. When the sexual drive (which is, as you said, created by the need for procreation) is put in a situation where it can express itself without censorship, there is this feeling of "making love" or |

|                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                          | "expressing love". It happens with any thought or feeling though, people just don't notice it, for two reasons. First, sex is a naturally intense situation. Second, sex tends to put you in a very vulnerable situation, especially when it involves feelings that are not inherently sexual. This vulnerability makes people strip themselves emotionally, attaining for a few moments this sense of unity. As I said, they perceive this unity as "love".                                                                                  |
| RairunRegistered UserPosts: 119(8/26/03 2:53 am)Reply         |  sex as violence <hr/> About the statement that sex is violent - maybe it is, but no more than thinking about philosophical matters. In fact, it's probably much less violent.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1408(8/26/03 12:31 pm)Reply      |  Re: "love" <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Definitely for me. What are your views then? Is there another reason for engaging in sex besides procreation? Are you one of the "making love" or "expressing your love" crowd? <hr/> I doubt such 'crowds' exist. If pleasure ceased to be a reason I would not want to exist. Are you preaching moderation in pleasure? Why? Are you praising chastity from the other side? To what end? |
| Dragon of LogicRegistered UserPosts: 20(8/27/03 2:22 am)Reply |  Re: "love" <hr/> I'm not really preaching anything beyond the fact that sex is a tool for procreation, and subsequently, pleasure. You or anyone else can engage in it all you want. Especially if pleasure is your driving force.                                                                                                                                                                                                          |

Rhett Hamilton

Registered User

Posts: 387

(5/22/04 10:00 am)

Reply | Edit

Re: "love"

---

Quote:

---

And Tharan, I think once you see that women are essentially purposeless, you will have less of a desire to fuck them. It's really true that if it were not for their beauty they wouldn't have any appearance or notice to males.

Greg

---

Unlike yourself Greg - and i thus understand your mistake - men are attracted to more than just their projection of beauty onto women; they're attracted to women's unconsciousness. Women are a highly contagious disease of unconsciousness, providing a safe haven from reality when men have had more of it than they can handle.

Women are the only species i know of that hate reality, and that have almost completely removed themselves from it. Who would have thought such a thing could - or would - have come to exist, that forsakes it's own life for illusions?

Ahh, my mistake, it must never have tasted life, and makes not it's own choices . . .

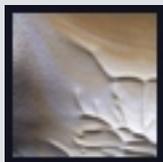

Rhett Hamilton

Registered User

Posts: 388

(5/22/04 10:03 am)

Reply | Edit

Re: "love"

---

I just checked the dates . . . i hadn't realised that most of this thread is old. It's been quite screwy - very difficult and troublesome to post to it, so perhaps it's best left alone.

Edited by: Rhett Hamilton at: 5/22/04 10:12 am

komodo island
Registered User
Posts: 4
(5/22/04 11:47 am)
Reply

 Re: Where do you stand metaphysically?

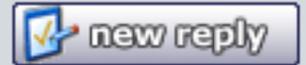

Is it a question?

How about asking -

Where do you sleep metaphysically?

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Who are you?

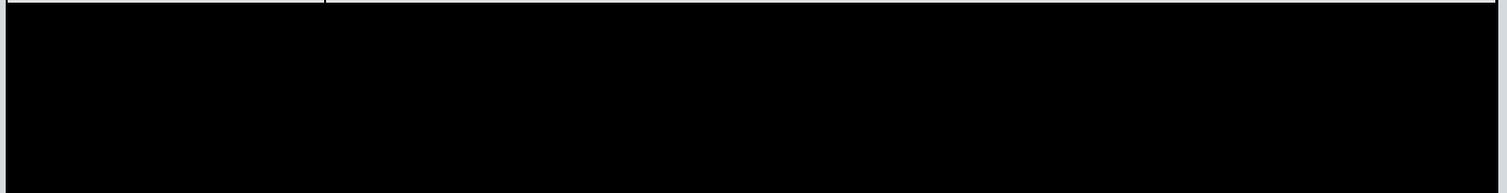

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                 | Comment                                                                                                                                                                          |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| FiramirRegistered UserPosts: 6(8/9/03 8:42 am)Reply                                                                                         |  Who are you? <hr/> Who are you?(Not allowed: Names, Job Titles or formulae) |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 502(8/9/03 9:04 am)Reply  |  Re: Who are you? <hr/> Me.                                                     |

|                                                                                                                                                                 |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| purelanderRegistered UserPosts: 1(8/10/03 2:56 am)Reply                                                                              |  quote <hr/> Be a lamp unto your own feet; Do do not seek outside yourself.(Shakyamuni Buddha) Turn the light around and observe yourself: Who I am? THE PURE LAND SUTRAS                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 1311(8/11/03 12:58 am)Reply  |  Re: quote <hr/> Sadly, your site may have been interesting if it were not for the silly page about prayer wheels and mantras spinning on hard drives. Dan Rowden                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1134(8/11/03 5:03 am)Reply                                                                          |  Re: quote <hr/> I have always considered the Pure Land form of buddhism too focused on the supernatural and mystical rather than the rational. Tharan                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| FiramirRegistered UserPosts: 7(8/11/03 6:14 am)Reply                                                                                 |  Again <hr/> I notice there have been only two real responses to my question and no one has said anything at all true. "Me" just dodges the question, although it does hint towards a reality of self experience, not self gratification through dreams of the unobtainable. And to those who have nothing to say but quote other peoples philosophies all I have to say is pah. If you do not know yourself how can you know or achieve anything. There is no point to anything at all until you know who or what you are. |

|                                                                                                                                                                      |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                      | So I ask again "Who are you?".                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| prozak666Registered UserPosts: 179(8/11/03 7:12 am)Reply  |  Re: Again <hr/> An animal; I lost my serial number. And I'm hungry. My brain is constellations disconnected over a lost nebula of lust.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| ynithrixRegistered UserPosts: 185(8/11/03 9:17 am)Reply                                                                                   |  Re: Again <hr/> I'm a pile of particles arranged similarly, yet differently, to you.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1354(8/11/03 12:08 pm)Reply                                                                                  |  Re: Again <hr/> I am the demonstrator of the eternal recurrence. It is cold cold cold to tell.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| wannabealotRegistered UserPosts: 13(8/11/03 2:53 pm)Reply                                                                                 |  Re: Again <hr/> I am an individual perpetually less than I want to be (ergo, "wannabealot").                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| Kate5Registered UserPosts: 21(8/11/03 3:02 pm)Reply                                                                                       |  Re: Again <hr/> Hilarious. I was wondering how everyone was going to respond to this. By dodging the question and quoting people of course, as you said. Why is it so hard to talk about yourselves? It's no big deal. Will we respect you less if you become human? No, I won't. Anywho, I would describe myself but are any of you interested? Nah. I'll come back later and do it. |

Rairun
Registered User
Posts: 108
(8/11/03 3:17 pm)
Reply

 ...

---

Quote:

---

Hilarious. I was wondering how everyone was going to respond to this. By dodging the question and quoting people of course, as you said. Why is it so hard to talk about yourselves? It's no big deal. Will we respect you less if you become human? No, I won't. Anywho, I would describe myself but are any of you interested? Nah. I'll come back later and do it.

---

What are they supposed to say? I know that I'm not very good at describing myself, all I could ever write about would be the collection of impressions I got from my thoughts and actions over time. If anyone was interested to know how I usually act and think, contacting me through e-mail or instant messengers would do a much better job. I like talking.

But do describe yourself. I want to hear.

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1312
(8/11/03 4:41 pm)
Reply

 Who am I?

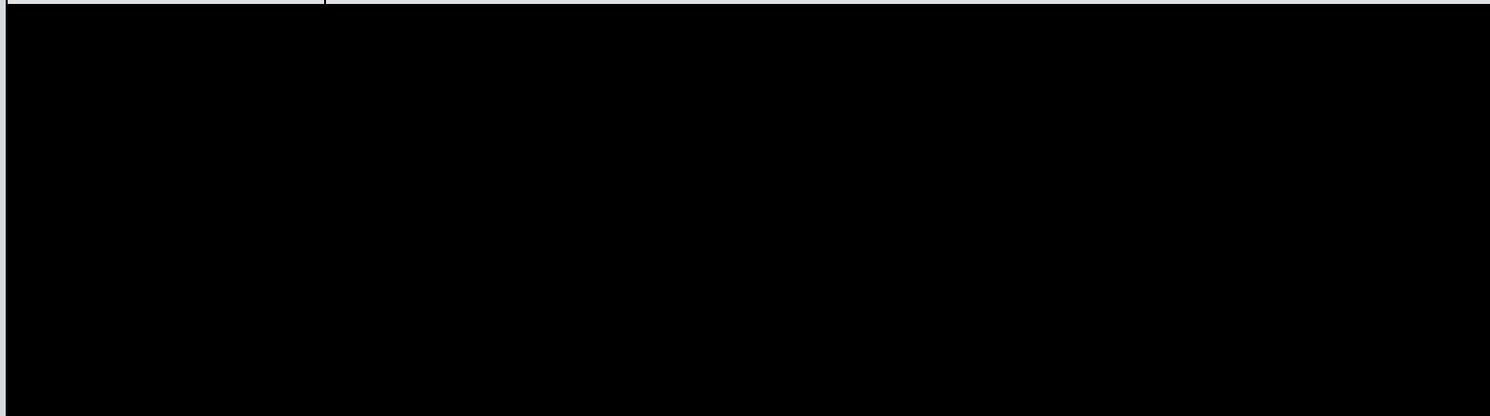

wannabealot
Registered User
Posts: 16
(8/12/03 12:15 am)
Reply

 drowden

---

drowden, you see yourself as infinity? So are we all figments of your imagination? ;) Oh, my.

|                                                                                                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| prozak666Registered UserPosts: 181(8/12/03 12:25 am)Reply   |  Re: drowden <hr/> I'm some guy who keeps seeing this thread and repeating the Black Sabbath chorus of the same name under his breath, amusing coworkers and repair people alike.                                                                            |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 258(8/12/03 6:00 am)Reply                                                                                      |  ... <hr/> I'm a human, like everyone else who typed here. Being a human, I can formulate concepts about other infinite selves...but it all comes back to who is formulating/thinking/typing...which is a human. My name is Scott.                          |
| prozak666Registered UserPosts: 190(8/12/03 6:18 am)Reply  |  Re: ... <hr/> But is this or intelligence exclusive to humanity? I would say, at least in theory, No. Thus one snappy answer (not necessarily "correct") might be "I'm a terminal of human origin, channelling an intelligence of cosmic origin..." |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 260(8/12/03 6:55 am)Reply                                                                                      |  Re: ... <hr/> Cosmic intelligence seems to be exclusive to humans. I've never met another species who's had this intelligence, mostly because intelligence itself is a human function. The snappy answer does work, though. :-)                   |

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 1314

(8/12/03 11:45 am)

Reply

 Re: drowden

---

The wannabe wrote:

Quote:

---

drowden, you see yourself as infinity? So are we all figments of your imagination? ;) Oh, my.

---

No, I am a man who embraces his infinite nature. I have a finite and an infinite nature, depending on I choose to look at things at any given time.

Ultimately, however, my nature is Empty.

Dan Rowden

wannabealot

Registered User

Posts: 17

(8/12/03 12:11 pm)

Reply

 Re:

---

voce io wrote:

Quote:

---

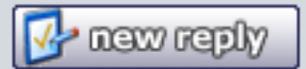

Cosmic intelligence seems to be exclusive to humans. I've never met another species who's had this intelligence, mostly because intelligence itself is a human function.

---

That seems to assume both that you have met all species, and that you are able to understand all the species you have met. Who says for sure that the dolphins don't have it all figured out?

Who says we're really intelligent anyway. Is it really intelligent to strap one's self into a missile to be launched into space? That would depend on what your goal is. If your goal is to be happy (a worthwhile goal, IMHO) then splashing around in the water with your mate and offspring, catching fish for dinner, and not having to clean up after yourself or anyone else sounds brilliant.

|                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| ynithrixRegistered UserPosts: 189(8/12/03 12:18 pm)Reply |  re <hr/> "Who says we're really intelligent anyway." In my much disputed opinion, knowledge serves to obtain power. We are more powerful than dolphins because of our knowledge. The fact that mankind can spare people to contemplate Ultimate Reality itself (or not) speaks volumes for how much further we have come compared to the dolphin. |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

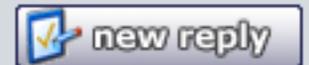

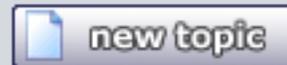

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Who are you?

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                            | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 261(8/12/03 2:07 pm)Reply |  Re: re <hr/> in·tel·li·gence ( P ) Pronunciation Key (n-tl-jns) n. 1. a. The capacity to acquire and apply knowledge. b. The faculty of thought and reason. c. Superior powers of mind. See Synonyms at mind. Well I took a basic psychology class, and the current theory is that different areas of the brain have different functions. The frontal lobe is the area of thought and reason (thought being a function taking place within the mind's awareness). Animals don't have frontal lobes for the most part; look into this, it's pretty interesting. It seems that animals can acquire and apply knowledge, by the fact that a dolphin can perform tricks at sea world...and we can assume that a dolphin enjoys it's life because it fornicates, masticates and swims about all day. Overall, though, we don't know. We can't know because we aren't dolphins. We can only assume what seems most likely...which is something animals don't seem to do. Assume (reasoning). |

|                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 841(8/13/03 2:12 am)Reply |  Re: Who are you <hr/> No answers the question because no one knows. I've been pondering the question, and it's an important one, as to whether I am someone or no one, and I'm just not sure. But I can tell by your question that you know, and you're trying to see if anyone has the right answer! Since no one does, why don't you tell us?                            |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 263(8/13/03 3:51 am)Reply      |  ... <hr/> It's simple... ...as to whether I am someone or no one, and I'm just not sure. As to whether WHO is someone or no one?WHO is not sure? Obviously you are someone. "No one" can't say what you just said. You should write more about how you feel, concerning how you don't know yourself.                                            |
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 1766(8/13/03 2:08 pm)Reply    |  re: Who are you? <hr/> The question ultimately has no answer.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 843(8/13/03 2:17 pm)Reply |  Re: ... <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Obviously you are someone. <hr/> I think I am some sort of collage of moveable parts. Can anything really be pinned down? But then, if I totally subscribe to the philosophy of emptiness, it would seem to mean that nothing exists, which I consider false. Is there something at the core of this universe, or is it empty? |

Firamir
Registered User
Posts: 10
(8/14/03 5:22 am)
Reply

 NO NO NO

---

No NO NO NO NOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOO!!!!

What is wrong with you, the only thing close to an answer is drowdens, at least he has some kind of hint towards an existence in his answer, the rest of your are just tangentialising into an argument about intelligence.

You are not making it personal so you dont have to answer the question.

I am asking "who you are", not what philosophy of intelligent beings you can come up with.

You must personalise the question to get an answer, try harder, its important.

prozak666
Registered User
Posts: 201
(8/14/03 5:58 am)
Reply

 Re: Who are you?

---

Ask a question with an arbitrary answer and you're jerking off; ask an open question, get discussion from different viewpoints.

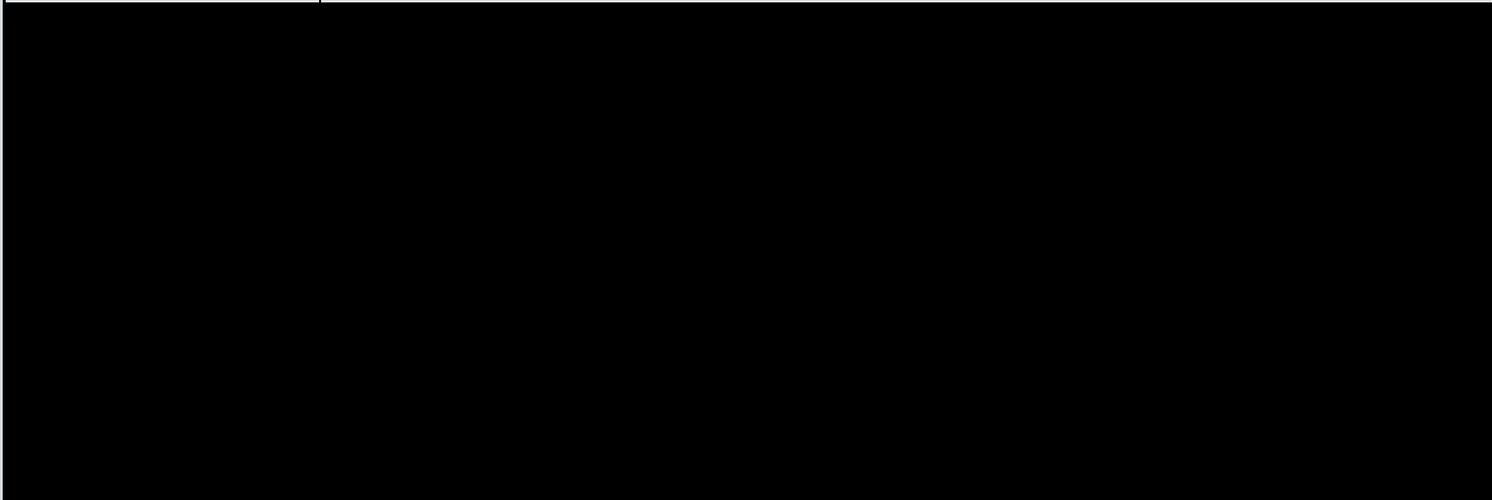

"What's in my hand? OOOOH, wrong! You didn't guess what's in my mind!"

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 264
(8/14/03 6:56 am)
Reply

 Re: Who are you?

---

Yeah drowden's second answer is best, but he copied my first answer.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 513
(8/14/03 8:47 am)
Reply

 Re: Who are you?

---

Where's I AM when you need him.

I think Notsure might have something to say too.

Native Americans might say that I am 'guy who sits in front of computer', having previously been 'bloke who lets cat out' and 'chap who kisses missus goodnight', etc. It could get a lot more specific but I don't think we're necessarily defined by what we do, though I might sometimes agree with them.

Others might say I am the Alpha and the Omega (man), I'd agree with that too. Some of these might also say that I am ultimately empty. Maybe they're right, they have a clear justification. Many would say that I am the sum of my experiences, and how could I argue with them. Some would say that it is impossible for me to know who I am, just as it is impossible to define anything from within itself. I could go on if you're not bored already.

What would I say? I'd say all of the above and then some. I am a gestalt entity (Beautiful definition :- a structure, configuration, or pattern of physical, biological, or psychological phenomena so integrated as to constitute a functional unit with properties not derivable by summation of its parts), who might give you a different answer every time you ask, into perpetuity.

That's why it's easier to say that I am me.

And being as it's me who is defining what me is in saying that I am me, it'll never be incorrect either.

Big words, I and me.

Who are you?

I AM
Registered User
Posts: 209
(8/14/03 5:26 pm)
Reply

 .....

---

"I am that I am"

|                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 844(8/15/03 1:33 am)Reply |  Re: NO NO NO <hr/> Quote: <hr/> at least he has some kind of hint towards an existence in his answer, <hr/> I am one of the few here who leans toward the possibility that I exist, but I can't prove it (yet). If I answer who I am, that's mostly personality fluff, and as to what I am, I really don't know! So you've given us a hint. You want it personal. Oh, I am a great and unique personality. Sincere, intelligent, kind, 11/16th enlightened... |
| FiramirRegistered UserPosts: 15(8/15/03 1:48 am)Reply       |  ? <hr/> 11/16ths eh, but there are only two steps to enlightenment, realising ultimate reality and believing in ultimate reality, how can you be 11/16ths of the way there?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1369(8/15/03 3:25 am)Reply     |  Re: ? <hr/> There is no ultimate reality. Firamir, did you spring from a cabbage patch?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 847(8/15/03 3:35 am)Reply |  Re: ? <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Quote: <hr/> 11/16ths eh, but there are only two steps to enlightenment, realising ultimate reality and believing in ultimate <hr/>                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |

---

Well, I'd say there must be only one then. How can you realize ultimate reality and not then believe it? (Unless perhaps you have a glimmer of suspicion that you are always deeply full of shit, which would make you the rarest of men?)

Oh, ultimate reality - we know all about that here. David and Dan teach it to us all the time and frankly, I've learned a lot from their lessons. But how many steps are there to realizing ultimate reality, and how must you fight and wrestle with your mind to get hold of it? Or do you know another way without the fighting?

Quote:

---

how can you be 11/16ths of the way there?

---

[/quote] Nemo said so, and he's enlightened. What, and does all of ultimate reality hit you at once?

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 266
(8/15/03 3:49 am)
Reply

 Re: ?

---

Firm Rear has no idea what he's talking about. He's 0/16ths enlightened.

Edited by: voce io at: 8/15/03 3:49 am

prozak666
Registered User
Posts: 216
(8/17/03 12:25 am)
Reply

 Re: ?

---

Ultimate reality is possibly something which, while ultimate, is highly relative. Best to read Schopenhauer for this one.

|                                                                                                                                                                   |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1376(8/17/03 1:54 am)Reply                                                                                |  ---- <hr/> Ultimate reality isn't anything. You're talking shit.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 285(8/17/03 6:28 pm)Reply  |  Re: ---- <hr/> Well I know what I am. A dynamic collection of parts of the universe arranged and held together in a such a fashion that allows me to temporarily make other parts if the universe move to a greater degree than if I wasn't arranged at all. That's about it.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| FiramirRegistered UserPosts: 16(8/18/03 6:31 am)Reply                                                                                  |  Okay <hr/> I see theres a lot of materialists and people who think they know, think bing the operative word. I must say I have no idea who I am, or what I am, all I have is a dynamic experice of myself exsisting. Nor do I have any idea who or what God is, all i do have is a dynamic experience of God. Here is the point, materialism is a very powerfull philosophy for those who like their station in life, but try posing it to a man who lives on a rubbish dump. Blind medieval christianity is also powerful but makes as little sense. How can a changeless and perfet God will act or do anything. Surely prayer can have no effect on a changeless being? In the end all there is is experience, and the fading of the material world when you discover the truth. I know most of you will disagree, thats your right as a thinking, walking, talking human being. Yet those of you who resort to insults are just morons who have to argue because they have no ground to stand on and feel secure. |

|                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 280(8/18/03 7:00 am)Reply |  Re: Okay<hr/> ...those of you who resort to insults are just morons...That's the funniest thing I've seen all day. |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

|                                                                                                                                                                  |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| RiseardRegistered UserPosts: 4(8/18/03 6:15 pm)Reply                                                                                  |  Who am you? Who am I? <hr/> There is an interesting quote of J. Krishnamurti's on Kinfonet:Do not concern yourself with who I am, you will never know. Richard                                                                                                                                                                            |
| bekwonRegistered UserPosts: 1(8/19/03 8:24 am)Reply                                                                                   |  Re: Who am you? Who am I? <hr/> bunch of make believe, of course.nothing inherently there.we all knew that.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| Dragon of LogicRegistered UserPosts: 1(8/21/03 11:54 pm)Reply                                                                         |  Re: Who are you? <hr/> What's the point of asking, Firamir? What is this great relevance you place on "who"? What are your motivations? Is this your teacher's hat? Who cares who I am. It makes no difference in how I interact with the world. If I must decide on a set of given attributes, it would be "Formlessness Reflecting Form". |
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 1346(8/22/03 1:51 pm)Reply  |  Re: Who are you? <hr/> I thought it was an interesting question to pose and criteria to demand in its answering. Thinking about what the self is and if there is such a thing is surely a worthwhile venture? Dan Rowden                                                                                                                         |

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 536
(8/22/03 8:53 pm)
Reply

Re: Who are you?

---

Is 'you', the self?

Dragon of Logic
Registered User
Posts: 5
(8/22/03 10:50 pm)
Reply

Re: Who are you?

---

Dan wrote:

-----
I thought it was an interesting question to pose and criteria to demand in its answering. Thinking about what the self is and if there is such a thing is surely a worthwhile venture?
-----

I don't see why one needs to consider it much at all. It is obvious that there is a "self" (as much of a projection as it is) that interacts with the environment around him/her.

It could actually be detrimental to state "I am this" or "I am that" as that tightens the knots of existence that are already in place.

Edited by: Dragon of Logic at: 8/22/03 10:52 pm

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 540
(8/24/03 12:24 pm)
Reply

Re: Who are you?

---

So if the self is one's personal history and the personality that it moulds, i.e. the projection, what's doing the projecting?

A newborn, unhampered by a personal history, is conscious nonetheless. It has no 'self' or personality, it cannot answer the question 'who are you?', it has no concept of you/me/I, but is it a you/me/I?

Perhaps the question 'who are you?', first requires the answering of the questions 'what are you?' and 'what is you?'

Dragon of Logic
Registered User
Posts: 14
(8/25/03 10:13 pm)
Reply

Re: Who are you?

---

The newborn may not be "aware" that it is a self, but it nonetheless is.

It cries when hungry. It reacts to its environment. If there was no self, it would be indifferent to both.

As far as "what's doing the projecting", it is the self that projects itself. No one else is projecting for you.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 550
(8/26/03 9:37 am)
Reply

Re: Who are you?

---

Quote:

---

The newborn may not be "aware" that it is a self, but it nonetheless is.

It cries when hungry. It reacts to its environment. If there was no self, it would be indifferent to both.

---

It seems you are assigning this newborn the quality of self on the strength of it's possessing the component which is a necessary attribute of existing within nature, looking at your argument and definition (i.e. self = reacting to one's environment).

Does reacting to the environment necessitate a self, or awareness?

Does the plant which reacts to sunlight have a self?

Or has it merely an unsophisticated awareness based on unsophisticated sensation of it's relation to it's environment?

Does the football which reacts to being struck by the footballer have a self? It certainly seems to react to it's environment. It's not indifferent to the input from the footballer's boot, it's not indifferent to the grass that it sits on, nor is it indifferent to the gravity which brings it back down to the grass, or the friction of the air which it travels through, or the laws of conservation of energy which determine the amount of energy from the boot which will be dissipated within the ball as heat energy. Etc.

Or has it merely an even less sophisticated awareness based on an even less sophisticated sensation of it's relation to it's environment?

So the newborn which reacts to it's environment via sensation, does it have a self or does it merely have a more sophisticated awareness based on it's more sophisticated sensation of it's relation to it's environment?

If, for the sake of argument, we assume that awareness is the quality of reacting to the input of the environment, a necessary attribute of nature, self cannot be a necessary attribute of nature as there are plenty of things within nature which don't exhibit this quality. If this reacting is awareness only, then where does the self come from? Is it a necessary attribute of consciousness?

It certainly seems that there are basic forms of consciousness, even only here on earth, which don't seem to exhibit the attribute of self-consciousness whilst exhibiting the attribute of awareness - that is they react to their environment but lack the necessary sophistication of consciousness to be able to form the concept of self. They merely react to their environment according to instinct (i.e. the genetic code which instructs it's processor how to deal with input from it's sensation).

So it seems that the 'self which is a projection' isn't even a necessary attribute of consciousness (i.e. being the product of a genetic code which is sophisticated enough in sensation and potential to require a central processing unit).

Only when the consciousness becomes sophisticated enough (i.e. being the product of a genetic code which is sophisticated enough in sensation and potential to require a central processing unit which reaches critical mass [via the additional attributes of memory, sophisticated conceptualisation, abstraction, and such]), will the ability to conceptualise the self come about, and so self-consciousness. Add the necessary history of experience to this self-consciousness and you get a 'self which is a projection', or a personality.

But the 'self which is a projection' is clearly not the actual self, the same self referred to in the word self-consciousness. The actual self is merely a product of the consciousness which is of sufficient sophistication to be able to conceptualise the self, and attach this conceptualisation to what it is. The self which reacts and is not indifferent to it's environment, which you describe, seems to be awareness only.

If we now go back to the question 'What is doing the projecting?' (of the self which is a projection), the answer would seem to be a consciousness sophisticated enough to form the concept of self, given a sufficient history of experience to conceptualise and create a personality, which is the 'projection of self', to attach to what it is - or what it's conception of self is.

So am I my projection of self - my personality, or am I my consciousness of self, or am I simply a sufficiently sophisticated consciousness and everything else is merely a projection based on my personal history of experience?

Perhaps enquiry into the nature of the self might not be something 'we need not consider much at all'. And in answering the question 'Who are you?', it may well be important to consider 'What are you?', and 'What is you'.

Quote:

---

As far as "what's doing the projecting", it is the self that projects itself.

---

How so?

This doesn't seem to make sense, it seems paradoxical.

Your original statement "It is obvious that there is a 'self' (as much of a projection as it is) that interacts with the environment around him/her." implies that the self is the projection. As you can see, I don't agree. But the nomenclature doesn't matter here. How could it be that a projection projects itself?

Quote:

---

No one else is projecting for you.

---

Indeed, so am I the projector, or the projection?

It makes no sense to say that I am one in the same, just as it makes no sense to say that I am the projection. That only leaves one option as far as I can see.

Who am I?

If I is the projection - the personality, then I am a result of my sufficiently sophisticated consciousness and my history of experience.

If I is the projector, then I am my consciousness of self.

If the projector is what it appears to be, then I am a sufficiently sophisticated consciousness.

Edited by: Dave Toast at: 8/26/03 9:52 am

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1409

(8/26/03 12:36 pm)

Reply

☐ Re: Who are you?

---

Now I is confused! What constitutes sufficient sophistication?

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 553

(8/26/03 9:49 pm)

Reply

☐ Re: Who are you?

---

It's all there.

Quote:

---

Only when the consciousness becomes sophisticated enough (i.e. being the product of a genetic code which is sophisticated enough in sensation and potential to require a central processing unit which reaches critical mass [via the additional attributes of memory, sophisticated conceptualisation, abstraction, and such]), will the ability to conceptualise the self come about, and so self-consciousness. Add the necessary history of experience to this self-consciousness and you get a 'self which is a projection', or a personality.

---

If you want to know exactly what constitutes it, you'd better speak to some biologists and some cognitive psychologists and the like. Not sure if they'll be able to tell you though.

Suffice to say that sufficient sophistication, no matter what it's constituents, lends the faculty of consciousness of self.

Dragon of Logic
Registered User
Posts: 19
(8/27/03 1:37 am)
Reply

Re: Who are you?

---

Quote:

It seems you are assigning this newborn the quality of self on the strength of it's possessing the component which is a necessary attribute of existing within nature, looking at your argument and definition (i.e. self = reacting to one's environment).

---

Yes. A self is a necessary attribute of existing within nature.

Quote:

---

Does reacting to the environment necessitate a self, or awareness?

---

It necessitates a self. Not necessarily awareness.

Quote:

---

Does the plant which reacts to sunlight have a self?

---

Yes.

Quote:

---

Or has it merely an unsophisticated awareness based on unsophisticated sensation of it's relation to it's environment?

---

"Awareness" and "self" are not identical. "Sensation" indicates that there is a self that's "sensing". "Self" is the thing in itself. In other words, a ball is nothing other than a ball. That is the self of which I speak.

Quote:

---

Does the football which reacts to being struck by the footballer have a self? It certainly seems to react to it's environment. It's not indifferent to the input from the footballer's boot, it's not indifferent to the grass that it sits on, nor is it indifferent to the gravity which brings it back down to the grass, or the friction of the air which it travels through, or the laws of conservation of energy which determine the amount of energy from the boot which will be dissipated within the ball as heat energy. Etc.

---

If you mean, "self-aware", then obviously the football is not aware of itself or it's environment. It is not equipped to sense itself nor it's environment. It does not scream at the footballer for kicking it, for instance. It is indifferent to the forces at play on it, because it does not have the faculties to sense anything at all. You seem to be saying that the football is aware of it's surroundings...?

Quote:

---

If, for the sake of argument, we assume that awareness is the quality of reacting to the input of the environment, a necessary attribute of nature, self cannot be a necessary attribute of nature as there are plenty of things within nature which don't exhibit this quality. If this reacting is awareness only, then where does the self come from? Is it a necessary attribute of consciousness?

---

Awareness is perception. If something perceives, then that thing is aware. Perception, however, does not equal reaction.

Also, you seem to be equating the things that exist within nature as nature itself. Nature does not have the properties of which you speak. Self is a necessary attribute of *things*. The plant is a self in the sense that it's nothing other than that specific plant.

Quote:

---

It certainly seems that there are basic forms of consciousness, even only here on earth, which don't seem to exhibit the attribute of self-consciousness whilst exhibiting the attribute of awareness - that is they react to their environment but lack the necessary sophistication of consciousness to be able to form the concept of self. They merely react to their environment according to instinct (i.e. the genetic code which instructs it's processor how to deal with input from it's sensation).

---

Yet they are still "selves", regardless of whether they can form the concept or not, and regardless of whether they are aware or not. One particular ant is not anything other than that one particular ant. One particular snowflake is not anything other than that one particular snowflake.

Quote:

---

So it seems that the 'self which is a projection' isn't even a necessary attribute of consciousness (i.e. being the product of a genetic code which is sophisticated enough in sensation and potential to require a central processing unit).

---

One's idea (i.e. projection) of oneself is certainly dependent on one's state of consciousness. Ideas themselves do not appear unless one possesses a level of consciousness that is conducive to their creation. But ideas do not necessarily reflect the reality of the self. When one does not have a "sophisticated enough" consciousness to perceive a self, and is therefore not aware of itself, does this mean that itself does not exist? That would then imply that Reality is what you think it is, instead of Reality being what it actually is.

Quote:

---

But the 'self which is a projection' is clearly not the actual self, the same self referred to in the word self-consciousness. The actual self is merely a product of the consciousness which is of sufficient sophistication to be able to conceptualise the self, and attach this conceptualisation to what it is. The self which reacts and is not indifferent to its environment, which you describe, seems to be awareness only.

---

Actual self? According to your arguments, isn't the "actual self" a projection as well... a projection of this "sufficiently sophisticated" mind?

Quote:

---

If we now go back to the question 'What is doing the projecting?' (of the self which is a projection), the answer would seem to be a consciousness sophisticated enough to form the concept of self, given a sufficient history of experience to conceptualise and create a personality, which is the 'projection of self', to attach to what it is - or what its conception of self is.

---

I would go even further to state that consciousness itself is a projection, thus everything that appears within consciousness is a projection as well.

Quote:

---

So am I my projection of self - my personality, or am I my consciousness of self, or am I simply a sufficiently sophisticated consciousness and everything else is merely a projection based on my personal history of experience?

---

You are nothing but the projection... i.e. the self.

Quote:

---

Perhaps enquiry into the nature of the self might not be something 'we need not consider much at all'. And in answering the question 'Who are you?', it may well be important to consider 'What are you?', and 'What is you?'.

---

It ultimately makes no difference. Why consider that which you cannot change? A self can tell itself that it is not a self all it wants to (whew), but that doesn't change the fact that you are the self that reacts to the environment around you. Unless, of course, you are arguing that it is not yourself that is having a written conversation with me.

Quote:

---

Your original statement "It is obvious that there is a 'self' (as much of a projection as it is) that interacts with the environment around him/her." implies that the self is the projection. As you can see, I don't agree. But the nomenclature doesn't matter here. How could it be that a projection projects itself?

---

The fact that you see a difference between the projection and the projector is a clear indication of the existence of your self. What more do you need? There is nothing other than the projection. "Self" and "Other" are projections. "Me" and "You" are projections. All lack inherent existence, yet all exist because we perceive them.

Quote:

---

Indeed, so am I the projector, or the projection?

---

Both. Neither. Take your pick.

Quote:

---

It makes no sense to say that I am one in the same, just as it makes no sense to say that I am the projection. That only leaves one option as far as I can see.

---

And what option is that?

Quote:

---

Who am I?

If I is the projection - the personality, then I am a result of my sufficiently sophisticated consciousness and my history of experience.

If I is the projector, then I am my consciousness of self.

If the projector is what it appears to be, then I am a sufficiently sophisticated consciousness.

---

If I is the Totality, then there is nothing to lack. There is nothing to separate you. All and None.

Edited by: Dragon of Logic at: 8/27/03 2:02 am

komodo island
Registered User
Posts: 12
(5/22/04 12:40 pm)
Reply

 Re: Who are you?

---

Who who who who whooooooooooooooooooooooooooooo ...

Without asking who,
how do i know WTF i am?

N0X23

Registered User

Posts: 116

(5/25/04 12:19 pm)

Reply

 Re: Who are you?

---

The sense of self is created when the perceiver ignorantly assumes that it is separate from it's environment, or that which is perceives.
The self is a by-product that arises when consciousness interacts with itself.

Who Am I?
Fuck if I know.

bikkie

Registered User

Posts: 6

(5/25/04 4:29 pm)

Reply

 Re: Who are you?

---

Who am i ?

Ugh.. * trys one hand clapping *

Bard77

Registered User

Posts: 1

(5/30/04 12:55 pm)

Reply

 Re: Who are you?

---

Rod

LolaSuicide

Registered User

Posts: 5

(6/3/04 2:33 am)

Reply

 Re: Who are you?

---

Who am I?

One among many.
Yet, one that stands out from the rest.

(I think we all are. Maybe we're all one in the same?)
This is a good "pondering" question.

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 1712

(6/3/04 11:11 am)

Reply

 Re: Who are you?

---

I am a whim of Nature.

Dan Rowden

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

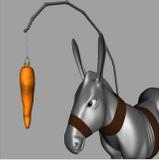

> GENIUS FORUM

> Who are you?

Page 1 2 3 4

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                              | Comment                                                                                                                                             |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| hahndelRegistered UserPosts: 5(6/13/04 10:15 am)Reply                                                                                    |  Re: Who are you? <hr/> I am the person with an extra h and a disorganised l. Edited by: hahndel at: 6/13/04 10:16 am   |
| raainkingRegistered UserPosts: 1(6/15/04 1:00 pm)Reply                                                                                   |  who am I <hr/> an animal who thinks he is immortal                                                                                   |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 686(6/15/04 1:06 pm)Reply  |  Re: who am I <hr/> Gday Bro Whats the latest gossip. Is Dave still alive?Did Clive's UK girl end up coming to Oz? |

raainking
Registered User
Posts: 3
(6/16/04 8:07 pm)
Reply

 Re: who am I

---

gday Jim. Aparently he is. We got on the booze with him the day after he got out of rehab and things got a little silly. As for Clive well he is working for a chicken company and dating a hooker. He thinks she is a pretty woman.

As 4 this site well I'm still researching what you folks are on about b4 I put my (?) theories under the toaster. I did like the Kierkegaard article tho and Mr Huzheng is a bit of a dude.

enlightenmentor
Registered User
Posts: 2
(6/17/04 12:02 pm)
Reply

 Re: Who are you?

---

without reading others' replies first, and giving contemplation to your question...

"Who" I am is inherited. From the moment of first cognition we are given labels (such as the woman pointing at herself and saying "momma"). This is the human condition for virtually everyone, in that who they are and their environment is essentially defined by external minds who of couse inherited their definitions too.

"Who" I am is the identification with the vehicle (physical body) and not that which I am. "Who" I am is egoic ~ "what" I am seems metaphysical.

Who I am is a very very daft middle-aged man...

~enlightenmentor

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 1129
(6/25/04 8:38 am)
Reply

 Re: Who are you?

---

One is the difference between itself and nothing.

|                                                                                    |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| hahndelRegistered UserPosts: 36(6/25/04 8:41 am)Reply   |  Re: Who are you? <hr/> attention                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| somaPosts: 6(6/30/04 4:42 am)Reply                           |  &gt; Re: Who are you? <hr/> (This message was left blank) Edited by: soma at: 6/30/04 4:51 am                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| KristjanGRegistered UserPosts: 11(6/30/04 8:26 am)Reply |  Re: &gt; Re: Who are you? <hr/> I've come to the opinion lately that everyone is subjectively identical. That is, on the "inside" everyone looks exactly the same, as there is no way to compare. And if there is no way to tell the difference between one thing and another, then they are the same. However, people do seem to look different from the outside. I think this might be why there seems to be many many others, but only one self...peece-K                               |
| Jones KellyPosts: 189(6/30/04 7:48 pm)Reply                  |  Re: &gt; Re: Who are you? <hr/> Quote: <hr/> I've come to the opinion lately that everyone is subjectively identical. That is, on the "inside" everyone looks exactly the same, as there is no way to compare. And if there is no way to tell the difference between one thing and another, then they are the same. <hr/> Based on the provisional evidence, that is, by the way other people behave and express themselves, i'd say that subjectively most people are very similar. |

Also based on this evidence, i'd say that i can't possibly imagine what other people's consciousness is like, but i just assume it's somewhat alike to mine.

Lately though, this assumption seems wrong, that subjectively other people don't exist in a relationship to God, but only in my relationship to God (of course).

When i am driven to express myself to these people created in consciousness, by my passion for truth and hatred of falsehood, there is also a startled laugh, for none of it exists truly.

If one thing and another thing are identified, then you've already told the difference. They can't be the same thing.

Quote:

---

However, people do seem to look different from the outside.

I think this might be why there seems to be many many others, but only one self...

---

More often i am no longer seeing people, but a glimpse of a "familiar" pattern, possibly a facial expression, or a bald spot (could be an orange), or a flowering blossom (or a garment).

In other words, they're all me - and who is me?

Edited by: Jones Kelly at: 6/30/04 8:00 pm

N0X23

Registered User

Posts: 154

(7/1/04 2:13 am)

Reply

 Re: > Re: Who are you?

---

Quote:

---

Lately though, this assumption seems wrong, that subjectively other people don't exist in a relationship to God, but only in my relationship to God (of course).

When i am driven to express myself to these people created in consciousness, by my passion for truth and hatred of falsehood, there is also a startled laugh, for none of it exists truly.

More often i am no longer seeing people, but a glimpse of a "familiar" pattern, possibly a facial expression, or a bald spot (could be an orange), or a flowering blossom (or a garment).

In other words, they're all me - and who is me?

---

Main Entry: meg·a·lo·ma·nia

Pronunciation: "meg-&-lO-'mA-nE-&, -ny&

Function: noun

: a delusional mental disorder that is marked by infantile feelings of personal omnipotence and grandeur

Jones Kelly

Posts: 194

(7/1/04 1:14 pm)

Reply

 Re: > Re: Who are you?

---

Quote:

---

I wrote: More often i am no longer seeing people, but a glimpse of a "familiar" pattern, possibly a facial expression, or a bald spot (could be an orange), or a flowering blossom (or a garment).

In other words, they're all me - and who is me?

NOX wrote:

Main Entry: meg·a·lo·ma·nia

Pronunciation: "meg-&-lO-'mA-nE-&, -ny&

Function: noun: a delusional mental disorder that is marked by infantile feelings of personal omnipotence and grandeur

---

The ordinary self (me) is also one of these patterns, NOX. The true self is the totality of all of it, within which that delusional me (a mini-me) is just a construction.

And of course, the totality of all of it is another construction...

My consciousness is one of the Totality of all consciousnesses, which come into my consciousness as ideas, words, expressed thoughts. Since there is no me to identify a self with in "my" consciousness, there is no "they" to identify as without.

It's constructions all the way down.

Mr Reasonable
Registered User
Posts: 1
(7/1/04 2:15 pm)
Reply

 Who I am

---

"I'm the infinite consciousness in the nothing-superreal dream wrapped inside my own perception-reality floating in a nebulous void."

Wait, No, thats what I was yesterday.

I'm an introverted young man who enjoys philosophy because of the pleasure I experience by dealing with comlex and important ideas.

I'm a highschool drop out. I had a lot of self-esteem issues, most of which I've resolved. And I let a lot of things go. I'm fairly nervous with my peers (especially pretty girls), but I can be very charming and polite with my elders.

I like people, but I don't have any personal interest in them (or most of them).

I've broken a few ties, including familial. I still lie to my mother about me loving her (fact is, I'm totally indifferent to her). I work in a Casino as a host or customer service employee.

I'm lazy and its hard to do everyday errands. But I have vague dreams and I hope to find a Goliath to conquer soon. (I'm leaning that way)

I like chess, swimming, basketball, poker, real hip-hop like akrobatik, Rjd2, atmosphere, Eminem's Infinite album. Some Jazz, Elliot Smith. I read some of the Ender-Series by Orson Scott Card, which I liked. I don't read much fiction. I like the idea of mythology and every once in a while I try to write poetry. I like A.E. Housman, watching sports, especially Tennis and Ayn Rand and Objectivism.

Oh, and I almost forgot, I'm a subjective image of the vision of the God that lives inside me and suffers with all the cosmic noise and stuff.

I like drugs, but not alcohol.

voce io
Registered User
Posts: 981
(7/1/04 3:58 pm)
Reply

Re: Who I am

---

The ordinary self (me) is also one of these patterns, NOX. The true self is the totality of all of it, within which that delusional me (a mini-me) is just a construction.

And of course, the totality of all of it is another construction...

My consciousness is one of the Totality of all consciousnesses, which come into my consciousness as ideas, words, expressed thoughts. Since there is no me to identify a self with in "my" consciousness, there is no "they" to identify as without.

It's constructions all the way down.

Yes! Yes Yes Yes!

november rains
Posts: 7
(7/6/04 7:04 pm)
Reply

thank you for asking.

---

My name is _____, I live (somewhere).

I am a strong believer in God. I love Him, with all my heart, and I basically live just for a whisper of a word that He is still around.

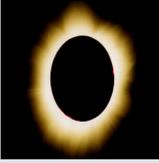

Other than that, I'm several different people. Many sides, one is a child, one is stern, serious, and logical, one is lovely, laughing lady, and one is a mean brute. (I love the internet, I would have never known I was "multiple" until the internet allowed me to separate.)

I'm an optimistic person most of the time, however when I feel extremely alone, and without a better plan, I can be very morose.

I suck in knowledge, I spit out lies. I love people, I cannot stand people with egos. You my friend, are someone I have made note of before, for something you said.

(btw, judging from the above post, I just plopped in here and answered the question without following the flow, so just pass over me and continue, if I've interrupted your project or whatever it is mr io is talking about.)

Your turn: Who are you?

|                                                                                                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2736(7/7/04 12:19 am)Reply                                                                                  |  --- <hr/> God's dead. This is no odyssey! If there is to be any kind of home-coming it must be superhuman! Edited by: suergaz at: 7/7/04 12:22 am                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2737(7/7/04 12:25 am)Reply  |  Re: --- <hr/> EGO! All people spurn and bitch and crap about ego who have a shitty one. Watch them!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| FiramirRegistered UserPosts: 17(7/8/04 6:14 am)Reply                                                                                     |  To Catagorise <hr/> Cogito ergo sum. I think therefore I am. All of western thought is based on this principle that at the bottom of all the labels, layers of personality, projections and crap is something. This I, this ego that is, without qualification. Conversely Buddhist thought asserts that the ego itself is an illusion. Brought about by desire and attachment to worldly things. It is interesting that the responses to my initial question seem to fall about 50-50 on either side of the fence. Buddhist thought seems just as popular as the old masters. |

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 451
(7/8/04 10:34 am)
Reply | Edit

 Re: ---

---

Quote:

---

EGO! All people spurn and bitch and crap about ego who have a shitty one. Watch them!

---

All the people that have a big ego, that being a heightened sense of independant existence caused by higher than normal levels of consciousness, and that thus have a lot more fears than the average punter, want to rid themselves of the delusion and experience unobstructed Reality for damn good reason.

Those that don't tend to stay mired in their petty illusions, unfortunately.

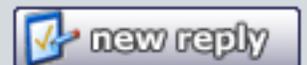

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 2748
(7/8/04 3:15 pm)
Reply

 ---

---

'The average punter' 'damn good reason'

What is this talk? There are also those who are fewest of all, that have a gracious intelligent life-giving ego, that even when it contains delusions, is never poisoned by them.

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Why? Or: Why not?

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                           | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 429(1/31/04 1:24 am)Reply   | Why? Or: Why not? <hr/> Okay. From the Thinkers' Inn: My question must have been put here before. Why isn't there a search box in this forum? I mean, one can put a name in, a subject, word, whatever, and there are the results. Maybe 'ezboard' doesn't allow such a quite useful frivolity? I don't know. So, why? Or not. |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 510(1/31/04 2:29 am)Reply | Re: Why? Or: Why not? <hr/> I raised this once before, myself. There are technical issues that prevent searching. Dan would provide if he could.                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |

|                                                                                    |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 430(1/31/04 11:12 am)Reply    | Re: Why? Or: Why not? <hr/> Dan, or Kevin.He's a computer wizard. Thank you, jimhaz.Have a great weekend!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
| LbartoliRegistered UserPosts: 351(1/31/04 3:07 pm)Reply | whatever <hr/> Yes, the major gripe i have with this forum is: When i come back the following day, its sometimes a pain, and certainly a waste of time, locating which threads i might be expecting a response on--ie. threads i posted the day before. Maybe there is a way to keep track of this that im not aware of besides, i mean, jotting the thread name down on paper notes. Leo ps Dan, what happened to Marsha? I hope not a nervous breakdown. |
| voce ioRegistered UserPosts: 663(1/31/04 3:08 pm)Reply  | Re: whatever <hr/> You can click on your own name, and check your recent posts.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| LbartoliRegistered UserPosts: 353(1/31/04 3:16 pm)Reply | forum <hr/> Oh, thats handy. I had no idea i was such a "private" person! Leo                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |

|                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| WolfsonJakkRegistered UserPosts: 1437(1/31/04 3:20 pm)Reply  | Re: forum <hr/> I too would like to hear from Marsha again. But I think the wordings of certain phrases did not hit the intended mark. Rather, they hit "home," so to speak. It is unfortunate. I enjoyed her input.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 517(1/31/04 3:44 pm)Reply        | Re: forum <hr/> Same here Tharan. I attacked her constantly about her relative feminity-masculinity and don't always word things in the best manner, but from the quality of what she wrote in what appeared in Genius News made me believe it should have been all water off a ducks back. She insisted it was. I have no regrets, but I miss her fire.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1366(1/31/04 4:17 pm)Reply | Re: forum <hr/> I'm afraid Wolf is probably right, and its funny that while she toed the misogynist line, she finally saw that she would not be seen as a person, but only as an inferior, and that men she knew were her inferior were treated with more respect. I feel that way too, and it is one more crack in a rather long list of cracks in the misogynist philosophy here which show it to be anything but objective. I don't really think it was you that made her leave, Jimmy, although you may have contributed. I'd say her leaving is a good sign, a sign of strength. |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 2152(1/31/04 4:20 pm)Reply      | ---- <hr/> I think it was I who made Marsha leave, but I didn't want her to. I think she fell in love with me.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |

|                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 520(1/31/04 5:46 pm)Reply       | Re: ---- <hr/> I don't really think it was you that made her leave, Jimmy, although you may have contributed. I'd say her leaving is a good sign, a sign of strength. I don't disagree on both points. I only can't say I agree because I don't know. |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 431(1/31/04 8:48 pm)Reply         | Re: suergaz! <hr/> Quote: <hr/> I think it was I who made Marsha leave, but I didn't want her to. I think she fell in love with me. <hr/> You son of a something!Something different.                                                     |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1369(2/1/04 5:57 am)Reply | Re: ---- <hr/> Quote: <hr/> I think it was I who made Marsha leave, but I didn't want her to. I think she fell in love with me. <hr/> But that is the reason I stay! I am in love with all of you.                                             |

cassiopeiae
Registered User
Posts: 235
(2/1/04 9:23 am)
Reply

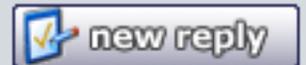

Re: ----

By the way, as I log in through EZboard, the main page of Genius forum has the menu at the top...

My Control Center | Logout | Show new only | Mark ALL forums read | Search | Help

Search worked for me.....

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

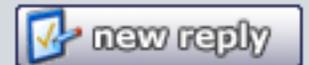

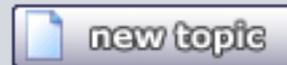

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Willfully Causing People

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                           | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 51(10/12/03 11:25 am)Reply   Edit |  Willfully Causing People <hr/> Willfully Causing People Causality is constant and all-pervading. Everything is causing everything. However, by defining and delineating time we can construct narrower parameters for causality, we could call them 'localised effects'. We can also focus in on our interactions with humans (they being other forms that we create) and can explore causes at a particular level without becoming too far removed from the truth, because our definitions are a part of causality, our values are a part of causality, and our efforts to live in accordance with and foster those values are a part of causality. 1) I shall create two categories of styles of willfully-causing-other-people, and they are somewhat specific to interactions of a spiritual nature. I value the style of influencing. Manipulation: Having a goal for someone else, whether that be their behaviour or thoughts or relationship to something else, that one does not disclose to them. Thus, the key concepts are goal-mindedness and non-disclosure. Influencing: Being completely open with people such that ones values are effortlessly conveyed, the truth is revealed, and their logic will drive them to align themselves with the truth. Thus, the key concepts are openness and | truthfulness, and one is facilitating their logic.

2) Most people do not think very highly of spiritually advanced people because of their tendency to break one of societies strongest taboos. They challenge peoples core beliefs, which means they hurt their self confidence, their ego, and arouse fear in them. The sage strips away their illusions and leaves them on shaky ground until they can develop an understanding of the true nature of Reality.

This cultural tendency to cosset peoples egos is so entrenched that people are often unaware that they do it, they automatically avoid hurting other peoples 'feelings', especially because they themselves have similar feelings. If someone does happen to hurt someone elses ego, it tends to be because they had a need to substantiate their own ego. Thus, those that are on the receiving end of a sages words hate them quadrupely, firstly because of the direct challenging of their beliefs and the fear that creates, secondly because they are not conforming to the cultural rules, thirdly because they cannot think of a good reason why the sage deliberately does not abide by the rules, and fourthly because they project ego onto the sage (because they are so used to doing so and cannot truly conceive of an egoless person) and thus think the sage is unscrupulously trying to serve their own ego.

It is so hard for the sage to convince people that there can be no safe haven, that all of the persons delusions must go, including their core sense of self.

Rhett

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 753
(10/12/03 3:46 pm)
Reply

 Willfully Causing People

---

Manipulation and Influencing.
Excellent contrast Rhett.

Manipulation - Will to power
Influencing - Will to value

Which comes first in causality?
This question generates the pain.

Hywel
Registered User
Posts: 20
(10/13/03 10:45 pm)
Reply

 Re: Willfully Causing People

---

I agree, i think this related to the "Role of lying in the life of truth" thread too, although it seems to have wandered off topic into the apocalypse now.

Personally, im a pretty simple person, not very good at subtlety, i prefer to be influenced straight on, like a smack to face. If it is truth, there is nowhere you can run from it.

Quote:

---

It is so hard for the sage to convince people that there can be no safe haven, that all of the persons delusions must go, including their core sense of self.

---

The desire to find a place to stand, a rock to cling to, can be incredibly strong. But once i look at my rock, i see that i am clinging to a sinking ship, and i must either let go or go down with it.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 756
(10/14/03 6:23 am)
Reply

 Willfully Causing People

---

-Manipulation+ -Will to power+ -Criminal+
+Influencing- +Will to value- +Insane-

Either way it goes you loose, apparently.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 56
(10/16/03 10:17 am)
Reply | Edit

 Re: Willfully Causing People

---

Quote:

---

-Manipulation+ -Will to power+ -Criminal+
+Influencing- +Will to value- +Insane-

Either way it goes you loose, apparently.

---

Only if you consider being labelled insane by members of society as a problem.

Rhett

DEL

Registered User

Posts: 757

(10/16/03 6:09 pm)

Reply

 Freedom

---

Quote:

---

Rhett:

Only if you consider being labelled insane by members of society as a problem.

---

-Will to power+ -Criminal+ -Slavery+ -Full+ -Wise+
+Will to value- +Insane- +Freedom- +Empty- +Fool-

Insanity gives you a kind of freedom.

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1579

(10/16/03 9:21 pm)

Reply

 Re: Freedom

---

Quote:

---

Insanity gives you a kind of freedom

---

Perhaps you have never experienced it?

The paralysis of your will?

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 758
(10/17/03 10:53 am)
Reply

Re: Freedom

---

Quote:

---

suergaz:
Perhaps you have never experienced it?
The paralysis of your will?

---

++ High Positive - Freedom
+- High Negative - ?
-+ Low Positive - ?
-- Low Negative - Slavery

Neither extreme is healthy. Both lead to paralysis of the 'will to power'(Low) or the 'will to value' (High).
I have experienced both extremes to and intense level.

scatteredmind
Registered User
Posts: 104
(10/23/03 5:31 pm)
Reply

wtf? backup..

---

Quote:

---

Manipulation - Will to power
Influencing - Will to value

Which comes first in causality?
This question generates the pain.

---

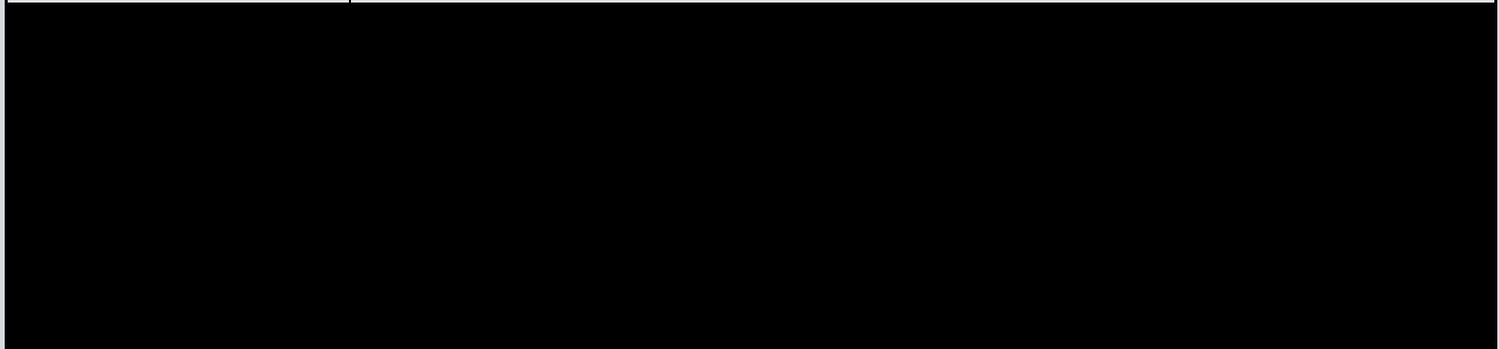

where do you get influence of other people as a will to value? what is the value of influence?

there is no one or the other, we both manipulate and influence other people, our will or not. the questions cause the pain.

++ High Positive - Freedom
+- High Negative - Happiness?

|                                                                                                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                         | --+ Low Positive - Death?-- Low Negative - Slavery                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 72(11/4/03 1:08 pm)Reply   Edit                                                                          |  Re: Willfully causing people <hr/> Willfully causing people to become wise is both a will to value and a will to power. It is a will to value truth, and a will to power over ignorance. Understanding that one's will is not the only cause operating in such interactions, and the worthlessness of attaching oneself to anything (in this instance one's values), enables one to retain one's utmost freedom whilst exercising that will. Rhett |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 714(11/5/03 1:23 am)Reply  |  Re: Willfully causing people <hr/> Nice.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| the meme of barnabyRegistered UserPosts: 9(11/5/03 3:05 pm)Reply                                                                             |  re: willfully causing people <hr/> Excellent post, I completely agree. How would you respond to a wise old sage who states that your explanation of social interactions and human responses is your own safe haven from the complexities of the world? Barnaby                                                                                                                                                                                   |

|                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1678(11/5/03 11:15 pm)Reply |  --- <hr/> Blish bash. Here I fucking come. What if you can't help but wisen every one?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 792(11/6/03 12:36 am)Reply      |  Willfully causing people <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Rhett HamiltonWillfully causing people to become wise is both a will to value and a will to power. It is a will to value truth, and a will to power over ignorance. Understanding that one's will is not the only cause operating in such interactions, and the worthlessness of attaching oneself to anything (in this instance one's values), enables one to retain one's utmost freedom whilst exercising that will. <hr/> EXCELLENT |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1684(11/6/03 9:23 am)Reply  |  ---- <hr/> Come come, Rhetts little truths stand alone, he doesn't need you all caressing his ego when he is so busy trying to rid himself of it!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 796
(11/6/03 10:12 am)
Reply

---

Quote:

---

suergaz
he doesn't need you all caressing his ego when he is so busy trying to rid himself of it!

---

That's the secret. As the ego dies the supernatural wisdom gets a chance to manifest itself.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1689
(11/6/03 10:19 am)
Reply

---

That's not the secret. The opposite is true.

As the ego rejoices, all chance advances the manifestation of wisdom.

I AM ANTICHRIST

WolfsonJakk
Registered User
Posts: 1247
(11/6/03 2:26 pm)
Reply

Re: Willfully causing people

---

Rhett wrote,

Quote:

---

Willfully causing people to become wise is both a will to value and a will to power. It is a will to value truth, and a will to power over ignorance.

Understanding that one's will is not the only cause operating in such interactions, and the worthlessness of attaching oneself to anything (in this instance one's values), enables one to retain one's utmost freedom whilst exercising that will.

---

There is a contradiction in the will to power/value versus the worthlessness of attaching oneself to anything. To show or not to show, to speak or not to speak, to desire or not to desire...

It is the Zen paradox. It the difference between the bodhisattva and the silent buddha. Without falsehood, there would be no truth. Without falsehood, the would be no valuable wise sages.

Yet there is only Truth. There is only the Tao. Seeing beyond one's own nose is the trick to living a Truthful life. Ultimately, the universe will take care of itself. Some see, some don't, and it is in perfect harmony.

But perhaps a will to propagate a clearer vision may be justified in it's karmic effect. Since karma developed historically as a philosophical system of social discipline and conformity, one may question it's universal profundity. Yet it still is always one's own nose one must try to see beyond. Le Bete Humain.

I assume Nature must be trusted. And humans are part of that fabric. For that, I honor the sage as well as the fool.

Tharan

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1693

(11/6/03 3:26 pm)

Reply

 -----

---

Assuming we all here are wise men, would it be folly to discern the wisest among us?

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 717

(11/6/03 10:45 pm)

Reply

 Re: -----

---

Your wiener must be miniscule dude.

suergaz
Registered User
Posts: 1697
(11/6/03 11:00 pm)
Reply

 Re: -----

---

Yes, Everyone elses weininger is huge.

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

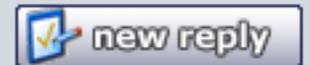

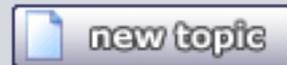

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Willfully Causing People

Page 1 2

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                         | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1700(11/6/03 11:19 pm)Reply            |  Re: ----- <hr/> I'll post some pictures soon of my penis and testicles since there is growing concern. With feeling, suergaz.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 79(11/9/03 9:45 am)Reply   Edit |  Re: re: willfully causing people <hr/> How would you respond to a wise old sage who states that your explanation of social interactions and human responses is your own safe haven from the complexities of the world? Barnaby I think the statement is reflective of a superficial outlook, but without knowing the full context in which it was said i will refrain from fully judging it. You label him a sage, does he claim to be enlightened? Categorisation of experiences and investigations of causal interactions are often used as a safe haven by people, because they occupy the mind and satisfy its need to make judgements, thus preventing it from asking deeper questions that |

might challenge it's philosophical outlook. So in this context, such explanations are used by the mind as a diversion from truth, and they are particularly good at doing this job because they are infinite in their scope, one can keep doing it ad-finitum.

If we look at it more deeply though, people are under the illusion that their explanations are truth, or close to the truth, or at least have the possibility of being truthful reflections of an objective reality. But since there is no such thing as an objective reality, their explanations aren't a safe haven at all. They are just creating extra complexities that confuse and mislead them.

In fact, it could be said that each person is the creator of their own delusion, both through their own deductions and through accepting the (delusional) constructions of others. In other words, our consciousness is the sole source of the construct which we project onto our experiences of reality. The flip side of this is that our consciousness is the sole mechanism by which that construct can be changed (hopefully so that it more accurately reflects reality), so our will to understand is mighty powerful.

The safest haven of all, the only true haven, is enlightenment.

Rhett

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 80
(11/9/03 10:06 am)
Reply | Edit

 Re: ----

---

Come come, Rhett's little truths stand alone, he doesn't need you all caressing his ego when he is so busy trying to rid himself of it!

Good intentions, good point, but bad advice.

Cushioning people rarely if ever helps them.

The sage has no want or need of protection, he learns to deal with all that comes to him, including praise (and good intentions). He must be his own judge.

As the ego rejoices, all chance advances the manifestation of wisdom.

I AM ANTICHRIST

I cannot help but perceive Nietzsche's impending insanity in all of his writings that i have read. To follow him too closely is to risk falling into

|                                                                                                  |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                  | his footsteps. But women are exempt from this, they are barren ground for his seeds of destruction. Rhett                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1705(11/9/03 7:41 pm)Reply               |  --- <hr/> Can you please quote or footnote that of Nietzsches writings in which you perceive his impending insanity? In all which could be misconstrued as showing such I've only discovered his playfulness, or his trust in and disregard for the carriage of meaning. Seeds of destruction? You are middle-aged yes? Which of his writings have you read? Sagacious natures spurn safeguards...yes, learn to make chance their own... yes, can't help but be their own judge...yes, -----What do say about their laughter?! What music interests you? |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 246(11/9/03 11:33 pm)Reply                  |  Re: --- <hr/> That's an easy one. Rhett likes Richie Wagner. He's like the painter who makes non-figurative work in the daytime, while his passion is in the figurative work he produces in the nighttime. His brains.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 86(11/10/03 10:34 am)Reply   Edit |  Re: --- <hr/> Can you please quote or footnote that of Nietzsches writings in which you perceive his impending insanity? In all which could be misconstrued as showing such I've only discovered his playfulness, or his trust in and disregard for the carriage of meaning. I have read all that appears on the 'Minefield' and little else. To in any way glorify the ego is to be on a path of (spiritual) self destruction. Seeds of destruction? You are middle-aged yes?                                                                                |

If i was middle aged i would have had plenty of time to have read more of his writings.

Sagacious natures spurn safeguards...yes, learn to make chance their own...yes, can't help but be their own judge...yes, -----What do say about their laughter?!

An occasional mistake or an act.

What music interests you?

I do not value listening to music, for good reason.

Rhett

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1709

(11/10/03 9:57 pm)

Reply

 -----

---

For what good reason do you not value music?!

Spiritual self destruction?!

NyyyyyeooooonooooonooooononoooooooRhett, there is no such thing. There is self destruction. Ones ego glorifies itself.

Rhett Hamilton

Registered User

Posts: 98

(11/13/03 1:53 pm)

Reply | Edit

 Re: -----

---

For what good reason do you not value music?!

Music is a mental disturbance, contains content that is highly delusional, and is often highly emotive, thus, it is contrary to the development of spirituality. If one's mind is highly erratic some types of music may help settle it down, but be aware that they are a band-aid solution, the best thoughts are a product of deep uninterrupted focus.

Spiritual self destruction?!

NyyyyyeooooonooooonooooononoooooooRhett, there is no such thing. There is self destruction. Ones ego glorifies itself.

Can you expand on your above statements (and include your definition of self and ego)?

Rhett

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 1725

(11/13/03 11:41 pm)

Reply

Re: -----

---

I knew you weren't a musician, but this is ridiculous! Especialy your murmuring some lie about it being contrary to the development of spirituality. But enough, let's see what you can do to my definitions, they're a little on the monstrous side today.

Self: Creator of ego, destroyer of gravity.

Ego: The test of all great spirits. Ones conception of Self.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 753

(11/13/03 11:47 pm)

Reply

Re: -----

---

Perhaps then, this is a good time to ask DQ if he would care to partake of a discussion on the spiritual aspects of music. Spiritual aspects that he has previously alluded to, of at least certain forms of music which he has previously indicated that he places value upon (though I'm not sure if he'd concur with my phraseology here).

David, what do you belive music has to offer to the enquiring mind, in the way of spiritual rumination?

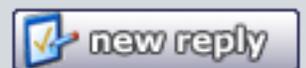

What, in your experience, can be gleaned from what forms of music, spiritually?

Does the content of the music matter in these matters, or is it rather the content that the listener/creator infers upon what they hear/imagine?

Is the content of this subject something that is easily put into words? Do you find that music is something that communicates with the mind and body on a level surpassing exhaustive description?

|                                                                                                   |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 102(11/14/03 11:15 am)Reply   Edit |  Re: ----- <hr/> Suergaz, You have only been monstrously brief, I'll need a little more than that, and try not to make it verbatim Nietzsche, give me some of your own thoughts. Rhett                                                                                               |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 275(11/14/03 11:34 am)Reply                  |  Re: ----- <hr/> Gee Rhett, jealous of suergaz, huh.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1732(11/14/03 11:52 am)Reply              |  --- <hr/> Rhett those are my thoughts, take as much time as you please.                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 108(11/15/03 1:53 pm)Reply   Edit  |  Re: --- <hr/> Suergaz, Let's get a bit more material before we delve. What would you say if i suggested a similarity between Nietzsche's 'superman' and Freud's 'superego'? I admit to a limited knowledge of these concepts so please inform me if you can. Rhett |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1739(11/15/03 9:17 pm)Reply               |  ----- <hr/> Come on rhett, if you yourself are not enough 'material' to hold a discussion with me, where will introducing the ideas of other writers into it really get us, especially those you say you have a limited knowledge of!                                                          |

|                                                                                                                                                                           |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 111(11/16/03 10:59 am)Reply   Edit                                                                         |  Re: ---- <hr/> It takes two to tango Suergaz I don't dance with parasites Rhett                                                                                                                                                                                |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1749(11/16/03 8:43 pm)Reply                                                                                       |  ---- <hr/> And I don't dig up stiffs! Rhett, you are behaving most irrationally. You are the parasite. I may have to laugh you out of the forum if you don't sink your teeth in and suck for all you're worth! Edited by: suergaz at: 11/16/03 8:57 pm |
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 1809(11/19/03 9:47 am)Reply                                                                                      |  re: <hr/> Dave Toast, I'm tied up at the moment. I'll post a response to your questions on music in a couple of weeks. It could be an interesting discussion.                                                                                                        |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 776(11/19/03 10:13 am)Reply  |  Re: re: <hr/> Okey-doke.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |

Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Wisdom of the Infinite - Part One by David Quinn

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17

| Author                                                                                                                                                            | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 1526(11/12/03 3:17 pm)Reply  | New Post Re: Wisdom of the Infinite - Part One by David Quinn <hr/> Hey, do you know any other tunes? That you accuse others of babbling is astonishing. Get a different spiel already; I think we've heard this one enough by now. Dan Rowden                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| unknownRegistered UserPosts: 32(11/13/03 5:46 am)Reply                                                                                 | New Post Re: Wisdom of the Infinite - Part One by David Quinn <hr/> hi dan, Very natural reaction. Have you wondered why are you asking questions the way you do?. Think!. You are conditioned to a set parameter. Every one plays the role. You just trying to play the role and try to survive. There is no need to win or lose. May be you all humans are losers in one way. Why do you want me to say "NEW" things? is n't it your conditioned slavery asks you to be a bitch, so your brain and chew on it for a while. After some time all new things gets old. you will be asking for more like a | bitch. hahaha!.

Just try to counter your own question. you will see your own self try to protect you.

I know , i know , you all are conditioned , anything opposite gives you a headache. I can't help your human state. it is on decay.

Ask questions. Never agree or disagree.

You may see this as repetitive mantra, simply because you are conditioned to a state that it fails to trigger a reaction why i say what i say.

what do unknown get from his babbling? Think!. May be unknown just wasting his own time or may be not. Who knows.

Ask as many questions.

It is not easy to be without an answers. only courageous... can do it.

peace
unknown

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 1803

(11/13/03 10:23 am)

Reply

New Post re:

---

I want to hear it again and again. It's quite soothing. Like a parrot skwarking in the distance.

Rhett wrote:

Quote:

---

The hidden void is that which is not our conscious experience.

Hidden void + consciousness = The Infinite

---

Don't forget that the Hidden Void is also just a construct of consciousness and has no other existence beyond that.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 95
(11/13/03 12:21 pm)
Reply | Edit

New Post Re: re:

---

Don't forget that the Hidden Void is also just a construct of consciousness and has no other existence beyond that.

Hi David,

Your response seems a little left-field to what i was intending to question.

I realise that the concept 'Hidden Void' is just a construct of consciousness, but fail to see why we can't say that 'what is other than our experiences of consciousness is causal in nature' (as per the logical proofs of causality), whilst understanding that 'causality' is also a conceptual construct (of course, our experiences of consciousness are also causal, and in fact constitute the base proof of causality).

You are already in the realm of conceptual constructs by saying that the Hidden Void is not nothingness, or saying anything about it at all, even naming it.

Is this your attempt to take people beyond their constructs entirely? the finale so to speak? Whilst it wasn't that for me, perhaps it is or can be for others.

So i am wanting to know if you are in fact chucking causality out, as it appears that way to me in the way that you have described the construct 'Hidden Void'.

Rhett

Edited by: Rhett Hamilton at: 11/14/03 10:38 am

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 1527

(11/13/03 2:54 pm)

Reply

New Post Re: re:

---

Hey Unknnown,

First things first: I am - as yet - not asking questions of you. That is what YOU want and is your particular egotism and folly. I am trying to somewhat politely get it through to you that you are ignorant and boring. Whether you are more boring than ignorant is a question that I have indeed been asking myself.

Can I ask what your first language is? It certainly isn't English. That doesn't matter much; I'm just curious.

Yes, I would like you to sing another tune because you're wearing out the vinyl on the current one.

You want people to ask questions. That is fine and dandy. Let me then ask you one: why is it that you think you are not a raving idiot that people should simply ignore? i.e. what is it you think you know about Reality that leads you to continually say the things that you say?

Please note: My question is sincere and earnest. If in your response you simply give me the same song you have been singing till now I will ban you from this forum. Fair enough?

Dan Rowden

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 750

(11/13/03 10:49 pm)

Reply

New Post Re: re:

---

Now react.

unknown

Registered User

Posts: 33

(11/14/03 4:25 am)

Reply

New Post Re: re:

---

hi Dan,

You are simply being who you are. Just a fool.

There is nothing to say or give except a belief.

Yes it is repetitive. Ofcourse it is.

You are afraid!. Fear makes human to take extreme steps.

Yes fear of your belief harrassed by unknown. :)

Ask question about yourself not unknown(do not exists).

I think nothing simply because i do not exists except in your realm , you manifests unknown. :)

I can't direct anyone except make you believe in my belief which is useless (only david quinn,.. monkeys is fit for it).

I do want to see yourself without any belief , then you will see your power. Until then you are hypnotised by your surroundings. A conditioned fool.

Expectation is evil. You are conditioned to expect from child hood. You are expecting you will get an answer(belief). You are always looking for a belief like bitch.

Quit it.

The reality is you can not. you can't escape from your slavery . So is every human in this earth.

That is why i can trash all humans. You will never get it until you challenge your own mind.

peace

unknown

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 1804
(11/15/03 9:37 am)
Reply

New Post re:

---

Rhett wrote:

Quote:

---

So i am wanting to know if you are in fact chucking causality out, as it appears that way to me in the way that you have described the construct 'Hidden Void'.

---

Well, causality itself only exists to the degree that "things" exist - which is to say, it doesn't really exist in an ultimate sense. Causality is just a conceptual tool for joining things (that have been falsely divided by the imagination) back together. Once everything has been joined together, we can throw away the causality tool.

Quote:

---

I .... fail to see why we can't say that 'what is other than our experiences of consciousness is causal in nature' (as per the logical proofs of causality),

---

The trouble is, there are no "things" in the hidden void ("things" being creations of consciousness) and therefore no causality. No non-causality either.

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1530
(11/15/03 12:26 pm)
Reply

New Post Well, yes, whatever.....

---

Unknnown,

Thankyou. It is nice to be reminded occasionally of what it is like to needlessly beat one's head against a wall. I thank you and the makers of Panadol thank you.

Bye bye.

Dan Rowden

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| N0X23 <input type="checkbox"/> Registered User Posts: 2(11/18/03 3:11 pm) Reply                                                                                                                       | New Post .hhhhmmmmm? <hr/> Mr. Quinn you stated, "That would certainly be the case if I wasn't enlightened." Now, is this declaration meant to be taken literally?                                               |
| Paul Registered User Posts: 277(11/18/03 7:46 pm) Reply                                                                                                                                               | New Post .hhhhmmmmm? <hr/> Sorry for interrupting, but are you serious about 'N0X23'?                                                                                                                            |
| N0X23 <input type="checkbox"/> Registered User Posts: 5(11/19/03 1:51 am) Reply   | New Post Re: DQ Book <hr/> "Sorry for interrupting, but are you serious about 'N0X23'?" I have found that life becomes very tedious and difficult when things are taken seriously. Why do you ask? |
| Paul Registered User Posts: 278(11/19/03 1:59 am) Reply                                                                                                                                               | New Post Re: DQ Book <hr/> Well... are you from the CIA? FBI maybe?                                                                                                                                              |
| N0X23 <input type="checkbox"/> Registered User Posts: 6(11/19/03 3:25 am) Reply  | New Post Re: DQ Book <hr/> LOL...What in the hell are you talking about, Paul?                                                                                                                                   |

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 279(11/19/03 5:21 am)Reply                                                                                                                                            | New Post Re: DQ Book <hr/> You seem evasive, but I understand, sir/ma'am.I guess it's an undercover job of some sort?Anyway, be careful, they're quite smart around here.                                                                                                                                  |
| N0X23 <input type="checkbox"/>Registered UserPosts: 7(11/19/03 8:49 am)Reply  | New Post Re: DQ Book <hr/> Yes, I do take advantage of the anonymity that the Net. provides, but I use it primarily for privacy and not evasiveness.Oh and thanks for the warning...I guess.                                                                                                                    |
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 1807(11/19/03 9:04 am)Reply                                                                                                                                       | New Post re: <hr/> NOX23 wrote: Quote: <hr/> Mr. Quinn you stated, "That would certainly be the case if I wasn't enlightened." Now, is this declaration meant to be taken literally? <hr/> Yes. But don't take it too seriously. |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 281(11/20/03 1:01 pm)Reply                                                                                                                                            | New Post To N0X23 <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Yes, I do take advantage of the anonymity that the Net. provides, but I use it primarily for privacy and not evasiveness. <hr/> Don't pretend ignorance, you know very well what I was aiming at.  |

|                                                                                                                                                          |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                          | 'N0X23' is a ludicrous nickname.Ah well...                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 1537(11/20/03 10:49 pm)Reply | New Post Re: To N0X23<hr/> Honestly, Paul, is his/her username any more ludicrous than the level of your input to this forum?Answer: noDan Rowden                                                             |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 285(11/21/03 12:51 am)Reply                                                                                    | New Post To Dan<hr/> Was my post 'Headache, migraine' in the Thinkers' Inn I've put there yesterday, ludicrous? Is that the reason you deleted it? I don't understand, I really don't. You have hurt me with that. Thank you. |

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Wisdom of the Infinite - Part One by David Quinn

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17

| Author                                                                                                                                                                 | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 413(12/3/03 8:03 pm)Reply     | New Post Re: Clarification <hr/> now, now Tommy, what are you doing back here? Get sick of playing pinball with the buddha, perhaps? Although you are always welcome for your broad knowledge, shouldn't you be out there seeking the adoration of more folks to further bind you to your germanic ego, rather than complaining about someones life work.                               |
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 1839(12/4/03 9:12 am)Reply  | New Post Re: Clarification <hr/> Matt wrote: Quote: <hr/> DQ: A quark arising at a particular location, for example, is dependent on there not being any forces at that location to prevent its arisal. MG: The lack of a presence of a preventative force is a negative thing, a nothing. <hr/> Physically, it is nothing. But logically, it is something. |

Quote:

---

I don't see how an existence can logically come from a non-existence.

---

I quite agree and it concurs with the point I am making. Since the notion that quarks are uncaused is purely imaginary to begin with, one has to use imaginary scenarios to show that it is logically contradictory.

Quote:

---

DQ: Yes, it has the property of not having any causes, which in turn means that its occurrence is entirely unpredictable and incapable of being regulated.

MG: I don't see how those two follow from the first. With an infinite number of causes, things are unpredictable anyway.

---

Not entirely unpredictable, otherwise science as a predictive tool wouldn't be able to exist. We are able to make predictions with a reasonable degree of certainty by examining the causal conditions of the present and past. So while causal processes are often very unpredictable from our point of view, they can also be somewhat predictable.

Quote:

---

Why would uncausality make something even more unpredictable? Why not more predictable?

---

How do you predict what is going to pop into existence out of nothing?

Quote:

---

In the second case, a regularity doesn't have to be regulated necessarily, it could arise out of sheer randomness, like flipping a coin 5 times and getting 5 heads in a row.

---

The act of flipping a coin is not really one of sheer randomness and uncausality. Obviously, as a process, it is entirely causal throughout. Moreover, the outcome of either heads or tails is regulated by the way the coin is constructed so that it can only land on either a head or a tail (apart from the very rare occurrence of landing on its side). This differentiates it from a purely uncausal process which is entirely unregulated and whose outcome has an infinite number of possibilities.

Thomas Knierim
Registered User
Posts: 628
(12/4/03 1:27 pm)
Reply

New Post Re: Clarification

---

What is it with you, Jimmy?

I wasn't complaining, I was congratulating the man. It is quite plain to everybody that the book -in its current form- fails to live up to its title and that it needs some serious work. So, I guess the proper thing to do is to start over or to abandon the project.

I noticed that David has interrupted his efforts in favor of participating in the online discussions. This is unfortunate. Wouldn't improving a half-finished, half-cooked book be preferable? It has been four or five months without any progress.

Thomas

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 314
(12/4/03 3:40 pm)
Reply

New Post Re: Clarification

---

David,

I still have some fundamental doubt that I'm trying to clear up. Let me ask you this: how can we be certain that the world we perceive through the senses operates logically?

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 1840
(12/4/03 5:23 pm)
Reply

New Post Re: Clarification

---

Because it contains existences ("things"). An existing thing, by its very nature, has identity and form and therefore follows the law of  $A=A$ , which is also the basis of logic.

In other words, as soon as a thing appears to exist to our senses, it automatically falls into the embrace of logic. For example, we can logically reason that the thing we are seeing in a particular moment (e.g. a solid brown tree) is not giving the appearance of something else in that moment (e.g. a fluffy white cloud).

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 315
(12/4/03 6:12 pm)
Reply

New Post Existence of change

---

Well what about change? How do we know that the process of one thing changing into another is a logical process? How do we know that the end result originated in the thing we start with? I'm thinking we can't know that for certain, which is why I don't see how it could be certain that uncausation is impossible. But I guess if the idea of causation is broad enough to include the totality of the universe then I guess it would have to be certain, since the Totality would have to be the ultimate cause of everything in existence, so that's that. But I'm still left wondering how physical causation can be related to logical causation in such a way that they are identical, yet physical causation is never certain and logical causation always is.

Edited by: MGregory at: 12/4/03 6:17 pm

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 1842
(12/5/03 9:00 am)
Reply

New Post Re: Existence of change

---

Matt wrote:

Quote:

---

Well what about change? How do we know that the process of one thing changing into another is a logical process?

---

Well, the actual process of change is neither logical nor illogical - it is simply what it is. We can, however, examine the nature of change in a logical fashion, as we can with anything else that we experience. For example, we can logically reason that the new changed thing we are looking at (e.g. salt) no longer resembles the old things it came out of (sodium and chlorine). That is to say, A=A (salt is identical to salt, salt is not identical to sodium, etc).

Quote:

---

How do we know that the end result originated in the thing we start with? I'm thinking we can't know that for certain, which is why I don't see how it could be certain that uncausation is impossible.

---

You're right in thinking that we cannot know for certain that salt is causally created from sodium and chlorine. It simply appears to our senses that it does. However, this doesn't open the door for uncausation because, regardless of our uncertainties regarding the causal factors of salt, uncausation will always remain a logical impossibility.

Quote:

---

But I guess if the idea of causation is broad enough to include the totality of the universe then I guess it would have to be certain, since the Totality would have to be the ultimate cause of everything in existence, so that's that. But I'm still left wondering how physical causation can be related to logical causation in such a way that they are identical, yet physical causation is never certain and logical causation always is.

---

This is how I look at it:

Logically, a thing lacks any kind of inherent existence, which means that it necessarily gains its existence from what is external to it. This alone makes causality universal and real. Without the sustenance of an external environment, nothing could exist at all. This kind of knowledge is absolutely certain because the alternative (that some things inherently exist) is logically contradictory.

At the same time, whenever we try to pin down a precise causal linkage between two things in an empirical, practical sense, we immediately fall into the realm of uncertainty. We have no means of establishing such a linkage in an ultimate manner. We only have the appearance of what seems to be a causal linkage before us. We basically have to trust what our senses tell us and accept the apparent causal linkages at face value, at least until we have reason to believe otherwise.

It is interesting to note that the uncertainties surrounding causation are generated solely by our practical concerns and don't inherently exist in the Universe itself. It is our desire to manipulate the environment for our own purposes and construct predictions about the future which creates the uncertainty about causal linkages. If we didn't have to do that, the uncertainties would no longer be there.

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 785
(12/5/03 9:42 am)
Reply

New Post Re: Existence of change

---

Quote:

---

At the same time, whenever we try to pin down a precise causal linkage between two things in an empirical, practical sense, we immediately fall into the realm of uncertainty. We have no means of establishing such a linkage in an ultimate manner. We only have the appearance of what seems to be a causal linkage before us. We basically have to trust what our senses tell us and accept the apparent causal linkages at face value, at least until we have reason to believe otherwise.

---

How would you explain the differences between the appearance of causal linkages and the appearance of logical linkages?

Quote:

---

It is interesting to note that the uncertainties surrounding causation are generated solely by our practical concerns and don't inherently exist in the Universe itself. It is our desire to manipulate the environment for our own purposes and construct predictions about the future which creates the uncertainty about causal linkages. If we didn't have to do that, the uncertainties would no longer be there.

---

Can we substitute the word certainty for every instance of the word uncertainty in this paragraph David?

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 155
(12/5/03 11:22 am)
Reply | Edit

New Post Re: Clarification

---

Thomas wrote:

So what about part 2 and part 3, David?

Should you have decided to discontinue the book, I must congratulate you on that idea...

Then he wrote:

I wasn't complaining, I was congratulating the man. It is quite plain to everybody that the book -in its current form- fails to live up to its title and that it needs some serious work. So, I guess the proper thing to is to start over or to abandon the project.

I noticed that David has interrupted his efforts in favor of participating in the online discussuions. This is unfortunate. Wouldn't improving a half-finished, half-cocked book be preferrable? It has been four or five months without any progress.

What is really going on here Thomas? Why the slagging?

I happened to visit your website a few weeks ago and found a piece on the nature of existence, and you were using the example of a cup and not-cup. The piece reminded me quite strongly of one of the 'Hour of Judgement' radio transcripts (on the 'Minefield') between Kevin and a man that was trying to work out the 'Theory of Everything'. Unfortunately, your piece was rather a hash of the topic.

So are you in fact afraid of David's writings because they make you feel bad about your own website and you'll feel obliged to actually think and update it? And because you struggle to admit to yourself that you are an also-ran?

It is quite obvious from your statements above that you keep a very keen eye on David's movements...why so if not for the reasons above?

Rhett

Edited by: Rhett Hamilton at: 12/6/03 10:54 am

DavidQuinn000

Forum Host

Posts: 1844

(12/5/03 12:35 pm)

Reply

New Post Re: Existence of change

Dave Toast wrote:

Quote:

---

How would you explain the differences between the appearance of causal linkages and the appearance of logical linkages?

---

The key difference is that a tight piece of reasoning is immune from the influence of hidden factors (imagined or otherwise) which could somehow render it invalid. The skilled reasoner is completely in command of his concepts and definitions and logical step-taking, so much so that the reasonings he fashions are nothing more than seamless expressions of  $A=A$ . Because of this, he can no more question his reasonings (in this particular manner) than he can question  $A=A$  itself.

To put it another way: While the physical causal factors of  $A=A$  as a concept appearing in the mind will always be uncertain and ultimately unknowable, the validity of  $A=A$  itself as a logical expression is always beyond question.

This point can be illustrated by examining the geometrical proof for Pythagoras's Theorem. If you examine that proof carefully, you will see that it is impossible to refute, principally because the conclusion inherently resides in the nature of a right-angled triangle. That the hypotenuse squared equals the sum of the square of the other two sides cannot be otherwise. It is a truth that can be grasped in a single act of perception. It doesn't really matter if the particular triangle we are looking at is an illusion or not; the logic of Pythagoras's theorem remains absolutely valid.

Quote:

---

DQ: It is interesting to note that the uncertainties surrounding causation are generated solely by our practical concerns and don't inherently exist in the Universe itself. It is our desire to manipulate the environment for our own purposes and construct predictions about the future which creates the uncertainty about causal linkages. If we didn't have to do that, the uncertainties would no longer be there.

DT: Can we substitute the word certainty for every instance of the word uncertainty in this paragraph David?

---

You could, but it wouldn't make much sense. The certainties surrounding causation aren't generated by our practical concerns in the empirical world. They are generated purely by our engagement in disinterested logical thought.

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 316
(12/5/03 12:51 pm)
Reply

New Post Re: Existence of change

---

David wrote:

Quote:

---

It is interesting to note that the uncertainties surrounding causation are generated solely by our practical concerns and don't inherently exist in the Universe itself. It is our desire to manipulate the environment for our own purposes and construct predictions about the future which creates the uncertainty about causal linkages. If we didn't have to do that, the uncertainties would no longer be there.

---

Ah, of course. That link is what I was trying to figure out for the past few months. The simplest things are the most evasive.

Thanks,
Matt Gregory

MGregory
Registered User
Posts: 317
(12/5/03 1:18 pm)
Reply

New Post .

---

er, elusive

|                                                                                                  |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| ChrisSaikRegistered UserPosts: 75(12/5/03 11:51 pm)Reply              | New Post Re: Wisdom of the Infinite - Part One by David Quinn <hr/> I look forward to the completion of your book.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| Rhett HamiltonRegistered UserPosts: 159(12/6/03 10:53 am)Reply   Edit | New Post Re: Wisdom of the Infinite - Part One by David Quinn <hr/> Hi Chris, I have an interest in learning a little about you, if that interests you of course. One never knows if one's purposes may meet. Rhett                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| Thomas KnierimRegistered UserPosts: 629(12/8/03 6:06 pm)Reply         | New Post Re: Clarification <hr/> Rhett: I happened to visit your website a few weeks ago and found a piece on the nature of existence, and you were using the example of a cup and not-cup. The piece reminded me quite strongly of one of the 'Hour of Judgement' radio transcripts (on the 'Minefield') between Kevin and a man that was trying to work out the 'Theory of Everything'. This can be explained fairly easily. You spend too much of your time on Genius. If you keep hanging around here, in a few years everything you read will remind you of something that David said. You will find yourself reading your tax return application thinking "yes, this does confirm Kevin's theory of everything." In fact, the cup-comparison was inspired by a teacher of a different caliber. His name is Thich Nhat Hahn. Rhett: Unfortunately, your piece was rather a hash of the topic. I am inclined to treat simple philosophical questions in a brief manner. I am aware that this approach doesn't work well with everybody. Rhett: So are you in fact afraid of David's writings because they make you feel bad about your own website and you'll feel obliged to actually think and update it? And because you struggle to admit to yourself that you are | an also-ran?

Obviously this sentence is the result of prolonged indoctrination on Genius-L. If you want to discuss my website I'm afraid I can only comment on matters of substance. I will not answer polemic.

Thomas

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 163
(12/9/03 11:48 am)
Reply | Edit

New Post Re: Clarification

---

Hi Thomas,

Would i be correct in assuming that you aren't interested in addressing the gist of my previous post?

My purpose is to foster wisdom, and since 'Wisdom of the Infinite' seems to me to be the wisest book to ever grace this planet Earth, i am quite disposed towards promoting it's image, and questioning it's detractors.

As an answer to your email, the act of piercing Ultimate Reality requires utmost focus and dedication, and those qualities are sadly lacking basically everywhere outside of this website.

Rhett

birdofhermes
Registered User
Posts: 1097
(12/11/03 1:37 am)
Reply

New Post re-

---

Quote:

---

Let no one ever hoodwink you with the idea that philosophy is a useless enterprise. In the end, almost all human misery and violence finds its root cause in philosophical ignorance, and to the degree that we not seeking to become fully enlightened, we are all contributing to the madness.

---

David, you must insert the word "are" in "we not seeking". You see how womanly I am, caring over the mundane details of your book for the sake of friendship!?

It is a coincidence, though, that the problem of human civilization and how to cure it is much on my mind since yesterday. We created human misery when we lost our tribal wisdoms and lifestyles. Even Lao Tsu agrees with that, and the question is, now that we are on the path of good and evil - what can we do? How astonishing that Karl Marx really tried to bring back tribal values for civilization. I think it is not his fault that the totalitarians took over. I grew up standing in church next to refugees, people whose relatives were literal martyrs for the Christian faith, so I naturally hated communism, but imagine my amazement when last year I began to read "The Communist Manifesto" on the net. I really only read about 20 pages but I was impressed!

DavidQuinn000
Forum Host
Posts: 1879
(12/12/03 8:39 am)
Reply

New Post Re: re-

Bird wrote:

Quote:

---

David, you must insert the word "are" in "we not seeking".
You see how womanly I am, caring over the mundane details of your book for the sake of friendship!?

---

Thanks. I must have read over that passage a hundred times and never picked up that mistake. Authors tend to make terrible proof-readers of their own work.

Quote:

---

It is a coincidence, though, that the problem of human civilization and how to cure it is much on my mind since yesterday. We created human misery when we lost our tribal wisdoms and lifestyles. Even Lao Tsu agrees with that,

---

I'm not sure about this. He talks about the lost wisdom of the ancients, but I've always taken it to mean ancient sages, rather than ancient tribal culture.

We may have become more miserable by leaving behind the old tribal ways and entering metropolitan civilization, but we can think of it as growing pains. It is always painful to leave a safe, unconscious form of existence, but it is necessary if we want our species to become more intelligent and wise. The human race may be miserable now, but perhaps in fifty thousand years things will be different. People will be more at home with consciousness and better able to enjoy wisdom.

Quote:

---

and the question is, now that we are on the path of good and evil - what can we do? How astonishing that Karl Marx really tried to bring back tribal values for civilization. I think it is not his fault that the totalitarians took over. I grew up standing in church next to refugees, people whose relatives were literal martyrs for the Christian faith, so I naturally hated communism, but imagine my amazement when last year I began to read "The Communist Manifesto" on the net. I really only read about 20 pages but I was impressed!

---

In my view, Karl Marx was a fool because he preached the adoption of a utopian political system without taking into account the psychological realities of humanity. In other words, he tried to force change from outside in, instead of inside out.

The only way to affect genuine political change is by changing people's psychology. Sages are the true political revolutionaries.

Sapius
Registered User
Posts: 270
(12/12/03 9:08 am)
Reply

New Post Good work, David.

---

I'm glad you finally got on with it. This will definitely help others understand you more clearly.

birdofhermes

Registered User

Posts: 1109

(12/12/03 9:31 am)

Reply

New Post what is the answer

---

Quote:

---

Authors tend to make terrible proof-readers of their own work.

---

Of course. Your brain knows what should be there and more or less supplies it.

David this is a huge topic, although one I am quite interested in. There are several reasons I think he was talking about ancient tribal ways that included ancient sages, but society as well. He (and others) made several comments about how people once lived that are pretty good descriptions of life before civilization got out of control. Civilization takes literally thousands of years to slowly and slowly obliterate the old ways. The old ways are a profound part of who we are because they lasted for hundreds of thousands, maybe even millions of years. There's a lot of ignorance and prejudice about what tribal life was like.

It may be growing pains, and we may ultimately gain great consciousness, but at this time I can say from what I have studied on the topic, that we are considerably less conscious and less spiritually evolved and aware than many tribes. Remember, there have been thousands of tribes, thousands of languages. I'm sure they varied. I got into this topic a bit a couple of months ago. One thing that impresses me is how strong the spiritual life of tribal peoples is, how most of them "get it" and how similar it is to the greater and most ancient insights of religion, most especially Taoism. Essentially, the human religion is animism or pantheism.

I would like to think that it was not strictly necessary for us to bring ourselves to the brink of self-destruction in order to grow, and go through thousands of years of slavery and oppression. We took that path, but did we have to? I think we were evolving quite well and would have continued to do so in a stable way (stability is one of the hallmarks of tribal life). One possible proof of that is that we managed to get to the point that we are now (modern homo sapiens).

One thought I have repeatedly as I read the writings of American Indians, is that they quite naturally lived as Christians, and they easily saw through the hypocrisy of the white settlers. They were ungreedy, lived communally, were full of laughter and enjoyed tremendous leisure time, which they quite consciously considered necessary for their spiritual life. It was important to them to engage in spiritual contemplation, especially about what they called "The Great Mystery." They were lovers of nature and animals in a very aware way. Since they already had the Great Spirit and various creation myths, that is not the great mystery. I am convinced the great mystery is - the fact of that anything exists. That is the one that breaks my brain and blows it apart.

Quote:

---

n other words, he tried to force change from outside in, instead of inside out. The only way to affect genuine political change is by changing people's psychology.

---

Yes, that was/is exactly the problem. But I don't know about changing people's psychology either. Reeducation camps?

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Wisdom of the Infinite - Part One by David Quinn

New Topic

Add Reply

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17

| Author                                                                 | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| unknownRegistered UserPosts: 25(11/6/03 12:25 am)Reply | New Post Re: ---<hr/> hi suergaz,THINK!. Unknown do not exists. And you know it. It is only you. Every human is always talking to themselves by manifesting other objects. It is a constant Energy balancing and belief adjusting. When you are honest with your mind , you will see everything in a different light. when belief dies , honesty borns. But human can not live without a belief. So there something has to give to make you beliefless. Only you can find out by asking questions. Most humans get mentally unstable when he start to question themself. Simply because Belief(self) is the anchor which hold his ship. Without a belief , he does n't know what he stands for. Which is against all the conditioning he underwent from childhood. Not a good thing to do for a weak brain. |

|                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                         | That is why i alway say when you know you are ready , you will know. peaceunknown                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1006(11/6/03 1:37 am)Reply | New Post Re: --- <hr/> Shucks, that was a good post. I agree with it and have thought similarly. It is a bizarre situation that humanity finds itself in - so high in capacity and so utterly devoid of answers. We know not what we are, who we are, or why we are. Or anything else, for that matter. This is intolerable. But we are storytellers. That much is a universal human characteristic. |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1681(11/6/03 9:03 am)Reply      | New Post --- <hr/> Shucks? Did you hatch from an egg?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| birdofhermesRegistered UserPosts: 1007(11/6/03 9:36 am)Reply | New Post Re: --- <hr/> I dont know how I got here.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1688(11/6/03 9:59 am)Reply      | New Post ---- <hr/> I'll tell you. Your mother and father finally decided to put some of those strange theories on reproduction into practice. They no doubt hit on a good old original one.                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 715

(11/6/03 10:31 pm)

Reply

New Post Re: ----

---

Let's not encourage this dick too much eh.

Quote:

---

DSF: So there something has to give to make you beliefless.

---

Absolutely impossible. No matter what you (don't) say about this, you are completely wrong and in direct contradiction of your own words. Never mind believe it, you know this and that is why you choose not to answer any question addressed directly at the tenets of your 'philosophy', such as it is. More than standing on shaky foundations, your piss weak pseudo reasoning is mirth making in it's self negation.

Quote:

---

DSF: There is no evidence. Evidence itself a belief.

---

Where is your evidence for this. I mean if there is no evidence, how can you know that evidence itself is a belief. There are two options, either you have evidence on which to base this belief, in which case you are paying heed to what you believe doesn't exist. Or on the other hand you have no evidence, in which case your belief is no more or less correct, or worthy of consideration, than a child's belief in Santa Claus.

Quote:

---

DSF: Every human is always talking to themselves by manifesting other objects.

---

A good point, completely negated by and negating of from whence it came.

Quote:

---

DSF: When you are honest with your mind , you will see everything in a different light.

---

How do you know this. You only believe that you have been honest with your mind, you can't know it. You only believe that you have a mind, you only believe that in being honest with that mind, you have seen everything in a new light. Being as there is no such thing as evidence, I can't imagine what you've based these beliefs on or even how you have formulated the words which express the presence of evidence. I mean how do you know that you see everything in a new light when there is no evidence of it. You can't, considering your words, you make it all up out of less than nothing as you go along. And yet there is some sort of consistency in some of your words, which would suggest that you too, like the rest of us, defer to observation, evidence and reason thereon.

Quote:

---

DSF: That is why i always say when you know you are ready , you will know.

---

Know(?)

How do you know that you always say this.

How do you know that the words you type will express the meaning you are trying to convey.

You couldn't believe your way out of a wet paper bag.

Here's the kicker, I know that there is evidence to back up a lot of what you say and I know that this is the same or similar evidence which you have defered to in formulating your thoughts on the human belief machine. That makes you a charlatan. It's all very well knowing such evidence and pondering it's meaning but you have created out of it a nonsensical system which is completely at odds with itself, and where it came from. The extent of the myopia of your insubstantial monism is truly something to behold, a testament to the human mind and it's ability to fuck with itself for no good reason but it's own amusement/abusement (and I believe that in this case, abuse is likely the most pertinent). Not to mention your messianic leanings, which of course we are used to round here.

You just keep on running. Eventually you will tire and turn to face a mega-tsunami of evidence and pain heading inexorably to it's victim.

unknown

Registered User

Posts: 27

(11/7/03 3:13 am)

Reply

New Post Re: ----

---

Hi Dave Toast,

Very good!. Very good projection of your mind.

Yours is better than the people agree with me.

I do not like people agree with me or disagree with me.

You disagreed. I take disagreement as a better than agreement.

I do not like slave human belief monkey whores. :)

Back to your counter questioning.

You need to understand this, you can't tell truth in words only beliefs. So there by all my words are beliefs.

It has no value to anyone not even to me if you think based on your belief system.

It is all a box. When human used word , he has written a boundary that , everything within the realm of beliefs.

Humans can't escape this realm unless he dies. Every word is a belief. So stop asking stupid questions about some one else thought process.

The good question is always about you. Not about what ever some monkey said.

if you are ready , you will concentrate on your realm and find it by challenging your own beliefs. it is easier to fix yourself than others because you can't enter other realms.

Your brain has the ability to handle beliefless state(if there is one)(could be a belief itself). Think !. Do not waste time on masturbating with words.

Every word is a belief , so stop wasting time in babble about it. Ask questions about your dependency to beliefs.

what ever worked for me won't work for you. We are in different realm. You only know about your mind needs.

If there is a method to ...it is start from questioning the existance of everything.

if you expecting answer for every question ,you will only get beliefs. Stop that conditioning.

your human thinking needs to transform. You all are in cyclic mental masturbating loop.

Jump out of it.

peace
unknown

drowden

Forum Host

Posts: 1521

(11/7/03 2:51 pm)

Reply

New Post Excuse me....but.....

---

How does one determine which questions have answers and which ones don't without thinking about them - i.e. without asking initial questions about the problem?

Then again, forget it. I have no idea why I'm bothering asking a question of someone with your philosophy.

Dan Rowden

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 728

(11/7/03 10:30 pm)

Reply

New Post Re: Excuse me....but.....

---

And what's the point of asking questions when there is no such thing as evidence?

Quote:

---

DSF: Hi Dave Toast,

---

Hiya, y'alriiight...good. Have yer had yer tea....ahhh....what did yer have? Ahhh lovely....sounds nice. How 'bout that weather?

Quote:

---

Very good!. Very good projection of your mind.

---

Good?

How do you know it's good projection of my mind, where's the evidence?

Quote:

---

Yours is better than the people agree with me.

I do not like people agree with me or disagree with me.

You disagreed. I take disagreement as a better than agreement.

---

Then you should get out and espouse your philosophy to many others, you will take their reaction as better.

Quote:

---

I do not like slave human belif monkey whores. :)

---

Aww, that's my favourite kind of monkey. They look so funny in high heels and short skirts, pouring tea into cups and over each other's heads and stuff.

Quote:

---

Back to your counter questioning.

---

Counter questioning?

Quote:

---

You need to understand this, you can't tell truth in words

---

No shit.

Quote:

---

only beliefs. So there by all my words are beliefs.

---

No they're not, they're words, all higgeldy-piggeldy and that.

Quote:

---

It has no value to anyone not even to me if you think based on your belief system.

---

Surely it has value to me if I decide it does?

Quote:

---

It is all a box. When human used word , he has written a boundary that , everything within the realm of beliefs.

---

It's not a box, it's more likely dodecahedral in shape, but with convex rounded faces, like a soccer ball.

Quote:

---

Humans can't escape this realm unless he dies. Every word is a belief. So stop asking stupid questions about some one else thought process.

---

Stupid questions about some one else thought process?

Quote:

---

The good question is always about you. Not about what ever some monkey said.

---

You've never heard the 'What did the monkey say to the barman' series of jokes have you?

Quote:

---

if you are ready , you will concentrate on your realm and find it by challenging your own beliefs. it is easier to fix yourself than others because you can't enter other realms.

---

Funny, coz if I follow your advice, you'll be entering and fixing my realm.

Quote:

---

Your brain has the ability to handle beliefless state(if there is one)(could be a belief itself). Think !.

---

You believe this?

Quote:

---

Do not waste time on masturbating with words.

---

Oh I left those premium phone lines alone a long time ago. A waste of money as well as time.

Quote:

---

Every word is a belief , so stop wasting time in babble about it. Ask questions about your dependency to beliefs.

---

What do I believe is my dependency to belief?

Quote:

---

what ever worked for me won't work for you. We are in different realm. You only know about your mind needs.

---

Less than that in fact, and plenty more.

Quote:

---

If there is a method to ...it is start from questioning the existance of everything.

---

Well it seems you're right coz everyone here does that and what worked for you didn't work for anyone else.

Quote:

---

if you expecting answer for every question ,you will only get beliefs. Stop that conditioning.

---

I don't have that conditioning so I can't stop it or even start it.

Quote:

---

your human thinking needs to transform. You all are in cyclic mental masturbating loop.

---

But you're not a wanker, right?

Quote:

---

Jump out of it.

---

What, into the fire?

Quote:

---

peace
unknown

---

No wonder. You can find it though. Drop all that shit.

unknown

Registered User

Posts: 28

(11/8/03 6:52 am)

Reply

New Post Re: Excuse me....but.....

---

Hi drowden,

I am not saying anything new. "New" is a belief.

All i can say is when you start to question yourself, you will start to realize after few attempt , the basis of question itself a belief.

SO that leaves anything out? if everything is a belief , what are you?. You can only find that answer to suit your mind.

Hi David Toast,

You are just playing with your own mind. That makes your energy level high.

Everything you do is depends on your needs. If you think you win , then you win.

Everything depends on ACCEPTANCE. if you accept you are "this" and "that". Then that is what you are.

Acceptance is evil. Answers stops progress.

Any spiritual crap preaches acceptance is EVIL. it is a temporary solution to your permanent disease.

if you like to play with words , you will continue to do ,until you lose interest and energy to continue the game.

you become bored when you start to lose energy.

You interpret my words to suit your realm and make theories.

Until you realize unknown does n't exists in human realm , you will start to ....

Do not ever give life to words ,then your mind will be limited by the words. words are you, you are words.

You may ask how do you communicate without words? beliefs?

well you will know when you are ready (when your brain is ready for deprogramming).

peace
unknown

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 733
(11/9/03 1:09 am)
Reply

New Post Re: Excuse me....but.....

Man you are full of it.

Quote:

---

You are just playing with your own mind. That makes your energy level high.

---

In that case, you are just increasing your energy level by telling me that I am playing with my own mind which increases my energy level.

Quote:

---

Everything you do is depends on your needs. If you think you win , then you win.

---

I have nothing to win except your not winning. Remember that you are the one who came here proselytzing, with a goal in mind.

Quote:

---

Everything depends on ACCEPTANCE. if you accept you are "this" and "that". Then that is what you are.

Acceptance is evil. Answers stops progress.

---

So then, am I to accept that everything depends on acceptance and that acceptance is evil. Am I also to accept that there is no such thing as evidence and am I to accept that there is only belief?

Quote:

---

if you like to play with words , you will continue to do ,until you lose interest and energy to continue the game. you become bored when you start to lose energy.

---

Cart before the horse. When you start to lose energy, you become bored.

Quote:

---

You interpret my words to suit your realm and make theories.

---

Nope, I interpret your word as best I can from within my realm, that's waht interpretation is.

Quote:

---

You may ask how do you communicate without words?
beliefs?
well you will know when you are ready (when your brain is ready for deprogramming).

---

So what is going to deprogram my brain and how is it going to do it?

unknown
Registered User
Posts: 29
(11/9/03 5:24 am)
Reply

New Post Re: Excuse me....but.....

---

Hi david,

You can't get out of your realm. You insist on staying there and yap this and that.

If you can really see , i said nothing. :)

If there is something you wanted to make out of nothing , just ask question and do not agree or disagree with answers you get from others and yourself.

There are easier to ask question.

1. How do you know that? followed by 2. is n't your belief?

Thats it.

Every word is a belief. , rest are your manifestation , you will stop babbling.

peace
unknown unknown@hotmail.com

Paul
Registered User
Posts: 244
(11/9/03 2:45 pm)
Reply

New Post peace unknown

---

Quote:

_____
You can't get out of your realm.
_____

Who said that?!

|                                                                                         |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| KnowThySelfWebRegistered UserPosts: 1(11/11/03 9:30 am)Reply | New Post Re: The evolution of mind <hr/> David, After reading your replies to people, I have no desire to read your book. It's abundantly obvious that, while you may have had some break through experiences, you are still in the early stages of enlightenment and still have much more to learn. Good fortune to you on your journey.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 260(11/11/03 9:53 am)Reply         | New Post Re: The evolution of mind <hr/> Blah blah blah, asshole 'KnowThySelfWeb'.Bye!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| suergazRegistered UserPosts: 1712(11/11/03 12:49 pm)Reply    | New Post Re: The evolution of mind <hr/> Dave Toast, you've written a book?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| unknownRegistered UserPosts: 30(11/11/03 3:51 pm)Reply       | New Post Re: The evolution of mind <hr/> Hey human monkeys(dave toast...david quin....or what ever labels), You will always find your excuse for why the way you are. Stop finding excuses for your pathetic life. Humans are fools. No exception. Book is a belief. David quinn can write his own beliefs. As long as foolish humans around he will sell his book just like any other humans. Do not! Do not waste time in reading books and theories.You can not tell truth with words(labels) All you are doing is travelling in manifested realm. if you like to kill time , if you like to be suicidal , go and read book. There is nothing constructive with humans!. Humans can't go against time. He is a ship in time tidal wave. |

He may think , he has done this and that.

All humans are doing is becoming a future fertilizer.

Ask questions!. That is a start!.

When you ask questions , you will see question stops sooner than you think. :)

Questions are based on beliefs. when you eliminate beliefs , you have to eliminate Questions as well.

Need for belonging(whore attitude) is humans weakness. That happened because of extreme conditioning.

Ask questions if you are ready to agree or disagree. Questions will be eventually come to a stop. Because you will start to realize you are forming a question based on another belief.

Find your questions first. List it.
You will see your needs.

Needs never stop. it will continue to your grave.

peace

unknown

unknnown@hotmail.com (you can add me to your messanger list if you are ready to ask questions)

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 734
(11/11/03 10:43 pm)
Reply

New Post Re: The evolution of mind

---

Quote:

---

DSF: you will stop babbling.

---

No, you will stop babbling.

Now react.

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 91
(11/12/03 11:01 am)
Reply | Edit

New Post Re: Wisdom of the Infinite - Part One by David Quinn

---

Can we not say more about the hidden void? (refer *)

The hidden void is that which is not our conscious experience.

Hidden void + consciousness = The Infinite

(ie. hidden void = not-consciousness)

- a) ***That its nature is causal***
- b) That it does not have form and is therefore wholly unlike anything we can ever experience.
- c) That it has the capacity to produce consciousness.
- d) And thus that it is not nothingness.

David wrote:

"As mentioned previously, there are only two things that we can know for sure about the "hidden void" - namely, (a) that it does not have any form and is therefore wholly unlike anything we can ever experience, and (b) that it possesses the capacity to generate consciousness and existence. Nothing else can ever be known about it."

Rhett

unknown
Registered User
Posts: 31
(11/12/03 1:09 pm)
Reply

New Post Re: Wisdom of the Infinite - Part One by David Quinn

---

hey rhett,

Labels , Labels!.

Do not fool yourself with reasoning. There are millions of them.

It is not there. quit it.

Quinn needs to sell book. Not you.

David quinn is a dumb belief whore. Just like any human ever existed in this earth.

You can write this and that. You say this and that.

it is no use. your life is in decay. your grave time approaching. You are going to do nothing about it.

You all are conditioned fools. Keep on babbling. That is the only think you all are good at.

peace
unknown

Page 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cl Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

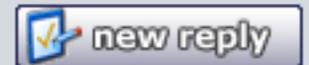

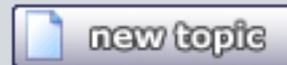

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Words and Concepts

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                           | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| MGregoryPosts: 513(3/11/04 6:01 pm)Reply  | Words and Concepts <hr/> Ok, I have a question. According to M-W's dictionary, a "referent" is Quote: <hr/> that which is denoted or named by an expression or a statement : a spatiotemporal object or event to which a term, sign, or symbol refers : the object of a reference <hr/> Does this mean a referent only refers to external objects, or does it apply to imaginary things, too? If not, what would you call an internal referent? A concept? If so, then what would you call words that I think? Would that be a concept too? If I think in my mind the word "circle", then picture a circle in my mind, thinking the word "circle" is referring to the circle I am picturing, how would these be labeled? Edited by: MGregory at: 3/11/04 6:01 pm |

|                                                                                                                                                                           |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| RairunRegistered UserPosts: 220(3/11/04 6:23 pm)Reply                                                                                          | ... <hr/> As far as I understand it, the object of reference is never the "real" object, making language a closed self referential system. I may be wrong though.                                                                                                                                                                       |
| MGregoryPosts: 514(3/11/04 6:31 pm)Reply                            | Re: ... <hr/> I don't see how that could work. If that were the case it seems like our words would have to be random, having nothing to tie them together.                                                                                                                                                                              |
| MGregoryPosts: 515(3/11/04 7:07 pm)Reply                           | Re: ... <hr/> We could say that language is a closed system, and that anything referred to outside of it is an external referent, including non-verbal imaginings. That would be kind of confusing, though, I think. Edited by: MGregory at: 3/11/04 7:08 pm                                                              |
| MGregoryPosts: 516(3/11/04 7:15 pm)Reply                          | Re: ... <hr/> "cup" -&gt; imaginary cup -&gt; experienced cup -&gt; real cup lol                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| Dave ToastRegistered UserPosts: 1028(3/11/04 11:42 pm)Reply  | Re: ... <hr/> A referent doesn't have to be a concrete particular, they can also be any universal abstract like 'above', or 'hot', or 'cat'. They can also be an abstract particular like 'the blueness of the Atlantic'. It definitely applies to imaginary things. I'm not sure exactly what you mean by an internal referent. |

MGregory

Posts: 518

(3/12/04 12:28 am)

Reply

Re: ...

---

Ah, thanks Dave! I knew you would know.

Well, I've heard the phrase "external referent", which I took to mean an external thing, so I figured "internal referent" would be a conceptual thing. But you answered my question.

Owen1234

Registered User

Posts: 34

(3/12/04 1:13 am)

Reply

Re: ...

---

David Toast: A referent doesn't have to be a concrete particular, they can also be any universal abstract like 'above', or 'hot', or 'cat'. They can also be an abstract particular like 'the blueness of the Atlantic'. It definitely applies to imaginary things.

I don't agree that 'imaginary things' have referents at all.
That they do not refer is what makes them imaginary.

Santa Clause, Sherlock Holmes, etc. do not have a referent.
They do have sense but they do not have extension.

I do agree that concrete particulars and concrete universals can have referents, but, not always.

The name 'David Toast' has the referent David Toast.
That is, David Toast is what the name 'David Toast' refers to.
The universal 'Red' has the class of red things as its referent.

In general the referent of a given expression is its extension, if it has one.

Abstract things, particular or universal, also have a referent.

The extension (referent) of a proposition, is 'truth' or 'falsity'.
The extension of a name of an individual is the individual named.
The extension of properties is the class of objects which do have that property.

The name (numeral) 1 has the class of unit classes as its referent.
The name 'Whole number' has, as its referent, the class of natural numbers, etc.

G. Frege's "Sense and Reference" is classical in this field of concern.

|                                                                                                                                                   |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                   | Owen                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| XXX STATIC XRegistered UserPosts: 91(3/12/04 2:39 am)Reply                                                             | Re: ... <hr/> you studying plato?                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| Owen1234Registered UserPosts: 35(3/12/04 2:49 am)Reply                                                                 | Re: ... <hr/> XXX STATIC X: you studying plato? No, are you? I am simply a bystander, although symbolic logic is a hobby of mine. What do you think about the concepts of 'sense and reference'? Owen |
| MGregoryPosts: 520(3/12/04 8:55 pm)Reply  | Re: ... <hr/> Quote: <hr/> Owen: Santa Clause, Sherlock Holmes, etc. do not have a referent.They do have sense but they do not have extension. <hr/> Owen, what do you mean by "sense"?   |

Owen1234
Registered User
Posts: 36
(3/12/04 11:14 pm)
Reply

Re: ...

---

Owen: Santa Clause, Sherlock Holmes, etc. do not have a referent. They do have sense but they do not have extension.

MGregory: Owen, what do you mean by "sense"?

Fictional characters have meaning only within the story that describes them.

Their 'sense' is that description by which we understand it, within the context of the story. Their description (sense) is all there is for them.

Descriptions, name-like expressions, usually have sense as well as reference or meaning.

For example: The current president of the USA, has G. W. Bush as its referent and that it is 'the current president of the USA' as its sense.

The sense of a described object is the predication used to distinguish it from other things.

MGregory
Posts: 522
(3/12/04 11:27 pm)
Reply

Re: ...

---

So how would you describe the differentiation between the phrase "President of the United States", the concept of G. W. Bush, and the actual person whose name is G. W. Bush?

I assume the concept of G. W. Bush is the sense, and the actual person is the referent, and "President of the United States" is the description?

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 1029

(3/14/04 2:50 am)

Reply

Re: ...

---

Owen, I think Matt is asking a different question to the one that you are answering with regard to Frege's distinctions. When Matt quotes a dictionary definition of the word 'referent', I assume he means the everyday usage, as opposed to Frege's Sense and reference distinctions. Also, in asking whether referents apply to imaginary things, Matt seems to be bypassing the obvious answer that only spatio-temporal objects are Frege referents.

Strangely, I got a different definition when I stuck 'referent' into M-W's dictionary, here's what it said:

one that is referred to; especially : the thing that a symbol (as a word or sign) stands for

Or in other words, the object(s) of a reference; especially a spatio-temporally located object referred to.

(Note 'especially', not exclusively.)

Quote:

---

Owen: I don't agree that 'imaginary things' have referents at all.

That they do not refer is what makes them imaginary.

Santa Clause, Sherlock Holmes, etc. do not have a referent. They do have sense but they do not have extension.

---

You will notice, of course, that Frege's Sense and reference distinctions apply only to proper names. It is no wonder then that you see your interpretation of 'imaginary things' as having no referent; they obviously couldn't possibly have one. A Proper noun will always have a Frege referent by definition.

The proper names which you refer to above, 'Santa Clause and Sherlock Holmes' do indeed have a referent in the sense I intended, those being 'the imaginary characters Santa Clause and Sherlock Holmes'. That is what these terms name, and that is what they refer to. That we call them 'Santa and Sherlock', as opposed to 'the imaginary characters Santa and Sherlock' is a matter of convenience.

Quote:

---

I do agree that concrete particulars and concrete universals can have referents, but, not always.

---

Surely concrete particulars must always have a Frege referent, by definition.

Universals are abstract by definition. If abstraction is the simplification of concrete details whereby the idea is abstracted (distanced) from the object, then there can be no such thing as a concrete universal. If you mean an abstract particular, then again, they always refer to an instance of an abstract, and therefore always must have that spatio-temporal instance as their referent.

Quote:

---

The name 'David Toast' has the referent David Toast.
That is, David Toast is what the name 'David Toast' refers to.

---

Agreed.

Quote:

---

The universal 'Red' has the class of red things as its referent.

---

Red with a capital 'R' is not a universal. The 'Red' in 'Red Ferrari', whilst describing a property (which might make one think it's a universal), actually refers to a specific instance of Ferrari and so becomes an abstract particular. Abstract particulars are a problem to define but I think we can agree that 'This Red Ferrari', 'The Red Ferraris of Formula One', or even 'A Red Ferrari', all have concrete, though not necessarily particular, referents. They refer not to a class or a member of a class, but to a type or an instance of a type.

For red to be a universal, it is not capitalised. If it isn't capitalised, it's not a proper noun and so it's not subject to Frege's distinctions. The property 'red', or 'redness', is indeed a universal. Universals are abstract (imaginary) things (concepts), without spatio-temporal location, yet multiply instantiated. This multiple instantiation does constitute a class but to speak of a Frege referent, one requires spatio-temporal location and therefore one actually refers to an instance of a type. It's a fine distinction but an important one. 'This Red Ferrari' is an instance of a type, and that instance is it's referent. However, whilst it is a member of a class, that class is clearly not it's referent, nor is it's being a member of the class, as being a 'member of a class' has no spatio-temporal location; only an/any instance of a type can be so. Likewise, 'A Red Ferrari' has any particular instance of the type 'Red Ferrari' as it's referent. However, whilst the subjects of 'A Red Ferrari' clearly constitute a class, the class is not it's referent, nor is any member of the class it's referent.

In short, classes themselves cannot be Frege referents and neither can their members, as they are not spatio-temporally located. Only instances of types can thus be so.

That is only when we're talking about concrete or abstract particulars of course. When we talk of the universal property 'red', Frege's distinctions don't apply at all as red is not a proper noun. Rather, 'red' is an imaginary thing, a property of an object but not the object itself.

Again, as previously mentioned, I thought Matt was talking dictionary definitions, and as such, I used the same intuitive understanding that you have used above, "The universal 'red' has the class of red things as its referent". Or as I put it above, the universal 'red' has the object(s) to which it refers as it's referent. Universals are imaginary things, yet they obviously refer, and so have referents in this sense, hence 'imaginary things' have referents.

I think you may have been reading too literally. You seemingly thought that I meant imaginary things in the more mundane sense, like Sherlock Holmes or Santa Claus. Whilst I think I've shown that these proper nouns do indeed have referents, that is that the things to which they refer are imaginary characters which are not spatio-temporally located objects themselves, but refer the conceptualiser to a very definite conception of a spatio-temporal object; I didn't think that was the issue Matt was trying to get at.

In theory, Frege's referents only apply to specific usage of proper nouns. We do not generally think of other seeming things, like relations, properties and types, as being imaginary. Yet such things have no spatio-temporal location, which as you correctly point out, means they have no Frege referent and are thus imaginary, just like Sherlock and Santa. But in the sense I'm referring to, just as Ferrari refers one intuitively to the conception of a Ferrari, so redness refers one intuitively to the conception of the universal property 'red', and so too the proper nouns Santa and Sherlock refer one intuitively to the conception of the imaginary characters Santa and Sherlock.

Quote:

---

In general the referent of a given expression is its extension, if it has one.

---

Again, this is the intuitive understanding, not that of Frege. Though I would say that an expression always has an extension, otherwise it wouldn't mean anything. Intension is the description and its extension is the set of things it applies to, real and imaginary. Yet sets cannot be Frege referents. However, the understanding you portray here is the one to which I originally referred. It's all down to 'Possible Worlds' versus 'actual world'. If we take the universal 'human' as an example, its extension would include all the humans in all possible worlds. If we try to apply Frege's distinctions to it, it would seem that only the humans currently alive or who lived in the past constitute its referent and it would seem to be incorrect to refer to imaginary humans as being part of the extension of 'human'. Clearly the extension and the Frege referent are only partially related. Frege referents indicate objects in the current or past worlds, extensions indicate objects in all possible worlds, including those consistent with current and past worlds but also including those of imaginary worlds. Perhaps this is because Frege referents only apply to Proper nouns. But then Sherlock and Santa are proper nouns too. Even though they are imaginary characters, they have extension yet no Frege referent.

You equate the Frege referent to the extension and this is technically incorrect, according to 'Sense and reference'. However this is the exact meaning I'm applying to the word referent.

Quote:

---

Abstract things, particular or universal, also have a referent.

---

As above, abstract things are imaginary and so have no Frege referent, but clearly they do refer. When they are particularised, they become an instance and so do indicate a Frege referent.

Quote:

---

The extension (referent) of a proposition, is 'truth' or 'falsity'.
The extension of a name of an individual is the individual named.

The extension of properties is the class of objects which do have that property.

---

Yes, this is the sense in which I answered the question originally. However the Frege referent does not apply in the case of your first and third examples, only your second example, a proper name, can imply a Frege referent.

Quote:

---

The name (numeral) 1 has the class of unit classes as its referent.

The name 'Whole number' has, as its referent, the class of natural numbers, etc.

---

Again, neither of these imaginary things actually have a Frege referent, though they clearly refer.

-----

I think overall we're pretty much on the same track, it's just that you seem to have taken Frege referents to apply to things other than proper nouns and so applied it to universals and their extensions, whilst also seeing universals as not being imaginary things and so applying Frege referents to them.

If Matt was asking about Frege referents, then his enquiry is a moot point, for obvious reasons. If, however, he was asking if only external objects constitute referents, then I think we've both shown that outside of Frege's theory and it's nomenclature, they clearly do. The only difference between our explanations is that you mistake universals as not being imaginary, and rather interpreted the term 'imaginary things' to mean imaginary proper nouns and so applied Frege's distinctions; whereas I interpreted 'imaginary things' to mean anything but spatio-temporal objects.

Having said that, when I now look back at Matt's quoted definition it does seem to be describing something akin to a Frege referent, though not exactly such, as it mentions events. It looks more like the 'connotation/denotation' distinctions formalised by Mill. Complicated business, this definition game.

MGregory

Posts: 528

(3/14/04 9:59 am)

Reply

Re: ...

---

Quote:

Dave: Owen, I think Matt is asking a different question to the one that you are answering with regard to Frege's distinctions. When Matt quotes a dictionary definition of the word 'referent', I assume he means the everyday usage, as opposed to Frege's Sense and reference distinctions. Also, in asking whether referents apply to imaginary things, Matt seems to be by-passing the obvious answer that only spatio-temporal objects are Frege referents.

---

I thought the dictionary definition would be the same as the "philosophical" definition, which I am now assuming is Frege's definition. I was thinking that the word "referent" came from philosophy.

Quote:

---

Strangely, I got a different definition when I stuck 'referent' into M-W's dictionary, here's what it said:

---

I got mine from the unabridged version, so that might be why. Here is the entire thing:

Quote:

---

Main Entry: 1refer·ent Pronunciation Guide

Pronunciation: rfr.nt, rf-, ref()rnt

Function: noun

Inflected Form(s): -s

Etymology: Latin referent-, referens, present participle of referre

1 : someone that is referred to or consulted

2 a : a word or a term that refers to another b logic : the term (as a in the proposition a has the relation R to b) from which a relation proceeds : the first term of a relation (as a in Ra, b, c) -- compare RELATUM

3 : that which is denoted or named by an expression or a statement : a spatiotemporal object or event to which a term, sign, or symbol refers : the object of a reference

Citation format for this entry:

"referent." Webster's Third New International Dictionary, Unabridged. 2002. unabridged.merriam-webster.com (2 Jan. 2004).

---

I was thinking the third one is what people usually mean when they say 'referent'.

Quote:

---

Dave: I think you may have been reading too literally. You seemingly thought that I meant imaginary things in the more mundane sense, like Sherlock Holmes or Santa Claus. Whilst I think I've shown that these proper nouns do indeed have referents, that is that the things to which they refer are imaginary characters which are not spatio-temporally located objects themselves, but refer the conceptualiser to a very definite conception of a spatio-temporal object; I didn't think that was the issue Matt was trying to get at.

---

What I was asking is this: if we're talking about something like unicorns, would the conception of a unicorn be it's referent, or would it be called something else? Would it just be called a conception? If so, is there a word that is generic enough to describe anything that a label points to no matter what it is? I would personally call it an 'appearance' since it is something that, however it gets there whether through the senses or memory or whatever, appears to the mind. Then again, I guess that would make everything a conception.

This is the entry on 'sense and reference' from the philosophypages.com dictionary:

Quote:

---

Distinction about the meaning of words introduced by Frege. The sense of an expression is the thought it expresses, while its reference is the object it represents. Since the ability to use a term presupposes familiarity with its sense but not knowledge of its reference, statements of identity can be genuinely informative when they link two terms with the same reference but distinct senses, as in "The husband of Barbara Bush is the President who succeeded Ronald Reagan."

---

It seems Frege just capitalized any category that is used to refer to a specific thing, thus turning it into a proper noun so it could be considered to have a referent?

Quote:

---

Dave: If Matt was asking about Frege referents, then his enquiry is a moot point, for obvious reasons. If, however, he was asking if only external objects constitute referents, then I think we've both shown that outside of Frege's theory and it's nomenclature, they clearly do. The only difference between our explanations is that you mistake universals as not being imaginary, and rather interpreted the term 'imaginary things' to mean imaginary proper nouns and so applied Frege's distinctions; whereas I interpreted 'imaginary things' to mean anything but spatio-temporal objects.

---

Yeah, that's what I meant. I guess I don't know if the question was reasonable at this point.

Dave Toast

Registered User

Posts: 1032

(3/14/04 12:54 pm)

Reply

Re: ...

---

I think it simply boils down to this. If you're talking about proper nouns, see Frege. The contents of the conception is the sense of the word and the referent can only be a particular actual object. A referent is not imaginary, in the common sense of the word 'imaginary' anyway (which we will hereby refer to), it is a concrete particular.

If you're talking about common nouns (types) like town or tree or pie, see Mill and 'Denotation and connotation'. The connotation is the contents of the concept - the properties which are attributed to the objects, and the denotation is the type of objects to which the concept applies. The denotation will comprise an imaginary type. Any particular denotation will be a non-imaginary concrete particular. Common nouns connote imaginary things - universals. The word 'artist' can denote any given (concrete and particular) person to which the attributes of 'artist' apply, yet there is no archetypal artist to be seen - a Frege referent, and it is therefore an imaginary concept.

If you're talking about properties or relations like besides or heavy, see extension and intension (which also applies to types). The intension is the necessary and sufficient description which identifies the extension from all other things. The extension is the type of things to which the intension applies. The extension will comprise an imaginary type. Any particular extension will be an abstract particular. Properties and relations are imaginary things - universals. The intension of the word 'adjacent' is next to or nearby, yet there is no archetypal next to or nearby to be seen - Frege referent, and it is therefore an imaginary concept.

-----

Then, if you're talking philosophical semantic definition, the word 'referent' (actual object) only applies in the first paragraph above - that is, only to proper nouns.

However, if you're talking everyday dictionary definition, the word 'referent' (actual or imaginary object of reference) applies in all three above paragraphs - that is to all names, properties and relations.

-----

Frege referents can only be external objects. Their sense is the conception about said external object.

If you want to transpose this to an internal POV, and you are picturing a circle, then it would be a particular (though obviously not concrete) imaginary circle which I suppose you could call an internal referent. Your conceptions about that particular imaginary circle would be the sense with which you construct the picture of it. If you were picturing a unicorn, then again, it would be a particular unicorn from an internal point of view, which I suppose you could also call an internal referent. Your conceptions about that particular unicorn would be the sense with which you construct the picture of it.

Now then, if you were picturing a unicorn within a circle, then it would be a particular unicorn, relating to a particular circle in a particular (though abstract) way. The whole picture would be the internal referent. Your conceptions about those particulars would be the sense with which you construct the picture individually, and as a whole. If, however, you tried to picture 'within', not relating to anything, there is no definitive picture that would present itself to you, even though you had the sense of 'within' with which to be able to particularise the aforementioned unicorn in a circle.

From this POV, it seems that particular imaginary objects (circle) have an internal referent and sense, particular imaginary-imaginary objects (unicorn) have an internal referent and sense, but imaginary relations, properties or types, whilst having sense, can have no imaginary referent unless related to imaginary objects (obviously, this is the problem of universals and the problem of substance).

Particular imaginary objects (shall we call them proper imaginary objects), when pictured, would have internal referents, whether the particular imaginary object is based on a natural object, or just made up. Pictures of imaginary relations, properties or types just don't make sense unless the picture includes an imaginary object. But then pictures of imaginary objects don't make sense either, unless the sense of the imaginary object, and so the imaginary object itself, has imaginary properties at the very least. Bring another object into the picture and you have imaginary relations too. The problem of universals and the problem of substance seem insoluble.

Strictly, referents can only be particular individual objects, whether external or internal. However, universals also refer to a type comprising all extensions (particular referents) which satisfy the intension of the word.

Did I say simply?

I hope you're working on a breakthrough here Matt, your chance at a philosophical paradigm. Something to do with pictures, actuality, semantics, object and substance :-)

MGregory

Posts: 530

(3/15/04 9:43 am)

Reply

Re: ...

---

Thanks, Dave. I couldn't have asked for a better lowdown.

Quote:

---

If, however, you tried to picture 'within', not relating to anything, there is no definitive picture that would present itself to you, even though you had the sense of 'within' with which to be able to particularise the aforementioned unicorn in a circle.

---

I think the mind uses some sort of symbolic representation, if only subconsciously. I'm not sure what difference it would make to make that distinction, though.

Quote:

---

From this POV, it seems that particular imaginary objects (circle) have an internal referent and sense, particular imaginary-imaginary objects (unicorn) have an internal referent and sense, but imaginary relations, properties or types, whilst having sense, can have no imaginary referent unless related to imaginary objects (obviously, this is the problem of universals and the problem of substance).

---

Now what is substance? Do you mean the stuff that a characteristic is made of? I think there is no substance, in that there is no characteristic of any object that can be conceived of without a particular object, like shape, size, or color. So, it seems that properties can only be pointed out, and can't be created within our minds. Then again, when we hear the word 'red' we can immediately picture a red object with no problem, so that would seem to indicate that there is some sort of objectless red that we know about.

Quote:

---

Did I say simply?

Well, I'm sure you meant well :-)

Quote:

---

I hope you're working on a breakthrough here Matt, your chance at a philosophical paradigm. Something to do with pictures, actuality, semantics, object and substance :-)

---

Oh, absolutely. It will fit nicely into my great work on Metaphysical Consciousness as a precursor to my refutation of Kant. The happiness of many young people could depend on it! :-)

Dave Toast
Registered User
Posts: 1034
(3/15/04 4:34 pm)
Reply

Re: ...

---

"Immanuel Kant was a real pissant who was very rarely stable."

Quote:

---

Now what is substance? Do you mean the stuff that a characteristic is made of? I think there is no substance, in that there is no characteristic of any object that can be conceived of without a particular object, like shape, size, or color. So, it seems that properties can only be pointed out, and can't be created within our minds. Then again, when we hear the word 'red' we can immediately picture a red object with no problem, so that would seem to indicate that there is some sort of objectless red that we know about.

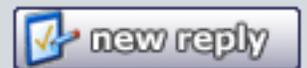

---

Objects can be viewed as bundles of properties (bundle theory) or substances (substance theory). The substance of an object is what all it's properties go up to make - the product which is more than a sum of it's parts. Substance theory obviously applies to mental substances as well as physical substances.

The central question of the problem of substance is 'what are objects?' Ontologically they can only be explained in terms of their properties and relations. So the question boils down to 'What are objects in terms of their

|                                                                                                                                                    |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                    | properties and relations (universals)?' This is the problem of substance. When we ask the question 'What are universals?', this can only be explained in terms of relations to objects (substance). So this one boils down to 'What are universals in relation to objects. This is the problem of universals. The two seem to go hand in hand.                                                                   |
| MGregory Posts: 539 (3/16/04 7:55 pm) Reply  | Re: ... <hr/> Ok, my new theory is that unknowns will always eventually arise when we categorize Reality. This is because either we will not be able to draw a distinct boundary for category (like the definition of life), we will run into limits of our knowledge when we go searching for the parts of the category (like atoms, protons, quarks, etc.), or there will be some other limitation. :-) |

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

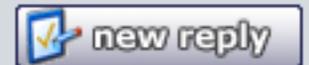

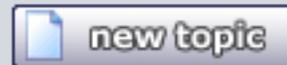

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> World without madness

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                        | Comment                                                                                                                                                                             |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 782(10/27/03 7:01 pm)Reply                                                                                           | World without madness<hr/> Can you imagine a world without mad people?How much of our world has been created by mad people of the past?What have the sane accomplished? |
| PaulRegistered UserPosts: 178(10/27/03 11:06 pm)Reply                                                                                         | Re: World without madness<hr/> Co-actor in a sketch of Rowan Atkinson:'Are you mad?!'R.A.: 'I'm not mad, I'm furious!'                                                  |
| jimhazRegistered UserPosts: 366(10/28/03 10:11 am)Reply | Re: World without madness<hr/> Perhaps imagination itself is a form of madness.                                                                                                 |

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 783
(10/28/03 7:03 pm)
Reply

Re: World without madness

---

Quote:

---

jimhaz
Perhaps imagination itself is a form of madness.

---

Yes,

I think the sane are like worms. They can only consume that which the insane have created. They are also like flies who feed on the shit that in the insane have left behind.

The insane create, the sane destroy.

The insane make the news and sane read it.

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 374
(10/28/03 7:24 pm)
Reply

Re: World without madness

---

yeh Del but why are there undertones of supremacy in that realisation. We are what we are, so there is no better, there is only your idea of what is better.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 785
(10/28/03 7:33 pm)
Reply

Re: World without madness

---

True, parasites have existed for as long as life has existed.

jimhaz
Registered User
Posts: 376
(10/28/03 8:08 pm)
Reply

Re: World without madness

---

Therefore you do agree that our fate is to become gods?

Not us personally, of course, but the human race or it's derivatives.

For all things that are not god are parasites.

DEL
Registered User
Posts: 786
(10/29/03 7:41 am)
Reply

Re: World without madness

---

Quote:

---

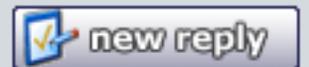

jimhaz

Therefore you do agree that our fate is to become gods?

---

I don't think it is fate but an option.

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

 Email This To a Friend

 Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Genius News

David Quinn's Site

The Thinking Man's Minefield

EZB Edit

Gold Community GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Writers, Actors, Politicians and Musicians

New Topic

Add Reply

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                        | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 528(7/14/03 5:19 pm)Reply | Writers, Actors, Politicians and Musicians <hr/> Quote: <hr/> GShantz:There is only one path to enlightenment, and that is through pushing reason as far as it will go. All enlightenment is the same, there is no 'similar' result. In my view, no actors, politicians or musicians are enlightened. Gregory Shantz <hr/> I was meditating on this very issue the other day. I think it is tricky. Being a dualist I believe perhaps the opposite must/can be true sometimes. If you became enlightened and had an urge to let as many people know the path as possible what would be the best means of mass communication that could last for centuries? |

How best could you help generations of seekers to come?
How best could you help you own child even?

BOOKS?

If you chose books others will misinterpret what you say and look for faults in your personal life as an excuse not to SEE what you actually wanted to say in contrast to READING what you actually wrote. Hence the birth of the "Supertext".

FILM?

If you chose film people will say you were only acting. Did you know there are 2 different/contrasting types of acting?

MUSIC?

If you chose music they will say you were just trying to sell more records and you were on drugs so you didn't know what you were singing about. But the lyrics and composition are sometimes genius are they not?

POLITICS?

If you chose politics they will say you killed and hurt so many people you must have been evil. Does the end justify the means?

OTHER?

I love this quote;

Quote:

---

Weininger in "On Last Things":
They completely block the understanding. . . .and the logical mystery becomes a paradoxical sentimentality."

---

WolfsonJakk

Registered User

Posts: 1090

(7/15/03 4:52)

Reply

dualist

---

What is a dualist? A believer in the appearance of duality? That seems odd. Like saying I believe in the appearance of grass or sky. A worshipper of this appearance perhaps?

As far as writers and enlightenment are concerned, I am re-reading Wild Ivy by Hakuin right now. He seems to understand a thing or two.

Tharan

DEL

Registered User

Posts: 550

(7/24/03 6:50)

Reply

Dualism

---

Everything has a symbolic meaning as well as a literal existence.

Quote:

---

Weininger:

The fundamental thought and the presupposition of the book (Metaphysics), the basis on which rests all that follows, is the theory of the human being as microcosm. Because the human being stands in relation to all the things in the world, so all those things surely must somehow exist in him.

---

Quote:

---

Tharan:

Wild Ivy by Hakuin

---

What has impressed you about this writer?

WolfsonJakk

Registered User

Posts: 1107

(7/24/03 8:37)

Reply

Re: Dualism

---

Hakuin was an important preacher. He left many footprints through his writing, painting, calligraphy, and oral teaching and certainly was quite impressive to his contemporaries. What I like about him was his focus on the mind and the body and how one can and does feed and support the other (neglect of body being the cause of Zen sickness). In calligraphy, he practiced a fluid style, more or less unconcerned with perceived mistakes. The focus was the perfection of the expressionist rather than the expression. One follows the other.

During his time, Zen was flourishing but not always in a way that he approved. In Wild Ivy he refers several times to the "do-nothing monks" that he was surrounded by, and it may be argued in some ways betrayed his own desires through his exasperation. I relate to this through the martial arts. So many students go through silly motions without ever understanding the base meaning or original intent, especially in American-taught Kung Fu, which is a diverse art and often unnecessarily complex. True, he meditated extensively in the classic sitting posture, but it was usually alone and intense with the distinct possibility of some satori, as opposed to the poseurs that filled the schools of his day (and still the schools of our day). In the same way that swift defeat should be your goal in hand-to-hand combat, some level of satori should be your goal in meditation, not posturing. Hakuin was not perfect, but he was a mind-warrior and worthy of emulation.

So in essence, it is not his writing solely that impresses me (though that is a part). What impresses me is his life and his approach to it. Contrarily, the speeches of Bohdidharma are what I find myself referring to lately more than anything else when pondering the subject of enlightenment (the Blue Cliff Record a close second).

Tharan

DEL

Registered User

Posts: 556

(7/24/03 16:38)

Reply

Re: Dualism

---

Quote:

---

WolfsonJakk:

In the same way that swift defeat should be your goal in hand-to-hand combat, some level of satori should be your goal in meditation, not posturing.

---

EXCELLENT !

I totally agree.

It's difficult to explain but I know what you mean.

To illustrate, one the the best fights I have ever seen in a film was between two Samurai. I can't remember the movie. But basically the these two Samurai were great enemies and they both had exceptional skill and power. They met in a desert. They stood off from one another, perfectly still, at a good distance and their eyes locked in an intense stare.

They just stood there all day, all night and in the morning a little boy came running up to one of them and threw a stone which hit one of the Samurai in the forehead. The Samurai was not distracted in anyway even though the blood trickled down between his eyes and ran down his face. His eyes where still locked. At noon suddenly they both started running towards each other at full speed. They met and whoosh! With one clean swipe the head flew off. And that was it the battle was over.

That is so full of significance. I wish I could remember the movie.

There is something about Bruce Lee that places him way above Jackie Chan.

I think I understand what Hakuin was trying to show.

|                                                                                                                                                                                                     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| prozak997Registered UserPosts: 22(7/31/03 2:12)Reply                                                                                     | Re: Writers, Actors, Politicians and Musicians <hr/> "If you chose books others will misinterpret what you say and look for faults in your personal life as an excuse not to SEE what you actually wanted to say in contrast to READING what you actually wrote. Hence the birth of the 'Supertext'." This is why postmodern literature came about, but it went about its methods the wrong way. You don't increase clarity through confusion, nor can you force a reader to interpret something a certain way. It's the same problem as with copy protection - you can program any media not to be copied, unless the users change the code that interprets that code!                                                                 |
| wannabealotRegistered UserPosts: 10(8/4/03 9:59)Reply                                                                                    | Re: Writers, Actors, Politicians and Musicians <hr/> The dull of mind will often find excuses to not learn. The intelligent will find merit in the least of the dullards.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| MortHandlesonRegistered UserPosts: 4(8/12/03 2:51)Reply                                                                                  | For the good of man <hr/> It would seem that doing something for the good of mankind is at the heart of humanity. When we look for guiding principles for our lives we look for simple threads to follow, this is one reason that religion has remained valuable for so long... it is applied philosophy. Sadly, the form of life can become more important than the product of life. What is your intent... what is your action... what is your result? Many people can justify mediocrity, provided they don't answer these questions. Perhaps if the great leaders and thinkers of the past hadn't recorded their intent, action and result, they would have simply decomposed after death instead of composing a step forward for mankind. |
| prozak666Registered UserPosts: 191(8/12/03 6:21)Reply  | Re: Writers, Actors, Politicians and Musicians <hr/> Re: no actors politicians or musicians are enlightened: is it in any way related to this thread: pub86.ezboard.com/fgenius...=843.topic                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |

|                                                                                                    |                                                                                   |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| BryanParrishGlobal UserPosts: 71(8/3/04 5:35)Reply | Re: Writers, Actors, Politicians and Musicians<hr/> FUCK SHIT PISS BALLS NUTS |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.32
Copyright ©1999-2005 ezboard, Inc.

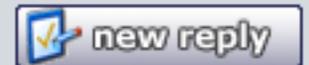

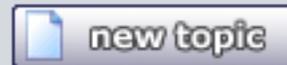

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

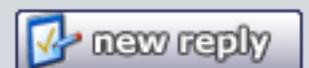

> Yang and Yin

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                  | Comment                                                                                                                                                    |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| BiggierRegistered UserPosts: 82(1/27/04 8:20 am)Reply   | Yang and Yin<hr/> I just wanted to note that even in a world governed by Ultimate Reality it is possible see things from the opposite perspective. ; ) |
| NaturylRegistered UserPosts: 118(1/27/04 12:57 pm)Reply | Re: Yang and Yin<hr/> Nice. The unpretentious insight is refreshing. Well done.                                                                        |

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

Delete Topic Commands

Click to receive email notification of replies

Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

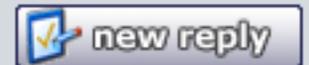

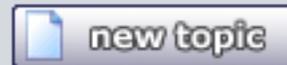

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> Yin and Yang

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                                  | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DavidQuinn000Forum HostPosts: 2110(1/26/04 11:44 pm)Reply  | Yin and Yang <hr/> From the Ne Plus Ultra thread: Quote: <hr/> DQ: My vote for the most amusing comment on this thread would have to go to this, by Naturyl: Well, in the sense that QRS 'hurt people' by making them examine themselves and their relationships, we can hardly fault them, lest we be like the ignorant mob who demanded Socrates' death for similar reasons. If that was all they did, I really couldn't object. Unfortunately, I don't think that they are entirely Socratic - they want to undermine not only things that people hold dear, but things that are mandated by Nature itself. Male/female differences in thinking are an expression of the yin/yang universal dialectic . . . . Ha! Naturyl: And what is funny about that, David? Are you perhaps thinking that I am misunderstanding Socrates in that he would consider those things I see as universal principles as nothing more than delusions and therefore tear them apart with the same zest he reserved for other follies? Oh yes, I've considered that. I simply reject it. If you imagine that |

Socrates would have considered a universal principle such as yin/yang to be nothing more than another superstition held dear by the mob, I think it is you who misunderstand the great man. You laugh because you imagine that I have erred in mentioning Socrates, and that he would scorn yin/yang and its relation to the male/female issue as readily as he scorned the Greek pantheon. I think not, David.

DQ: . . . . what I found funny was that, after affirming the value of QRS questioning people's emotional values, you immediately deified your own emotional attachments in order to make them safe from our probing. It is a bit like a Christian saying, "I think it is great the way Kevin and David force people to examine their attachments, but they go too far when they force us to question the things that have been ordained by God - such as the Bible and the Church."

Naturyl: I deified nothing. The yin/yang principle is universal in the sense that we observe in in all relative things, which encompasses the whole of physical existence. There is no deification whatsoever here. Probe all you like. If you think you can undermine the concept of yin/yang, have at it.

---

Even if we assume this to be true - that the yin/principle is universally in all things - it doesn't mean that particular pairs of opposites will always exist forever. For example, there was a time in the past when there was no day and night, due to the fact there were no planets and stars. And there will come a time in the future when day and night will be no more.

Another example is slavery. It used to be the case that the master/slave duality was an acceptable component of society. The slave class was the yin which contrasted itself to the yang of the master class. According to your views, it was immoral and unnatural for our forefathers to have eliminated the master/slave duality in society. You must think that the current state of egalitarianism conflicts with the mandates of Nature.

Quote:

---

You have a habit of comparing anyone who disagrees with you to a religious fundamentalist. You've become lazy with this analogy, slapping it on anyone who appears to question you. You are painting with too broad a brush, and it will not serve you.

---

I like to use the example of the religious fundamentalist because nearly everyone on this forum agrees that religious fundamentalism is one of the most backward forms of human existence.

I don't apply it willy-nilly on everyone who questions me. I use it in specific circumstances when I see someone accepting things on blind faith, or pretending that their own subjective emotional values are somehow the provenance of the Divine. Your good self, for example.

Tell me, how does the phrase "mandated by Nature" differ from "ordained by God"?

suergaz

Registered User

Posts: 2136

(1/27/04 11:21 am)

Reply

Re: Yin and Yang

---

Nature is nature, not god. God is nothing at all. Your lie is over.

Naturyl

Registered User

Posts: 116

(1/27/04 12:43 pm)

Reply

Re: Yin and Yang

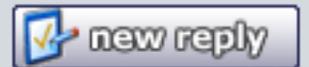

---

Your idea is that the male/female duality can be dispensed with, at least in terms of thought patterns. You see no place for feminine thinking, and consider masculine thinking entirely superior. Very well, it is your belief and you have the right to believe it. You are correct in supposing that there is nothing in nature which would forbid the unfolding of your vision. Yin and yang are symbols for the dialectical, paradoxical mystery we observe which pairs everything with a complementary opposite. The yin/yang principle is not a commandment of god or nature, it is simply something we observe. Naturally, while neither aspect is inherently superior to the other, and both are necessary to existence, there are cases in which one side of the dialectic is detrimental to the human experience and the other side beneficial. Your feeling is that the male mentality is beneficial, while the female mentality is detrimental. I simply disagree.

So, then, I will amend my earlier remarks and concede that it could be Socratic to attack femininity (although this is not the same as saying I believe that Socrates himself would do so). Perhaps it is in the spirit of what you call 'enlightenment.' Of course, if that is the case, enlightenment is rubbish. You and your 'lofty thinkers' can keep it, thank you.

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DavidQuinn000 Forum Host Posts: 2121 (1/27/04 12:52 pm) Reply                                                                                  | Re: Yin and Yang <hr/> LOL! At least you're being a bit more honest now. My respect for you has increased.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| Naturyl  Registered User Posts: 117 (1/27/04 12:53 pm) Reply  | Re: Yin and Yang <hr/> And yes, I know this means that, in your view, I am simply attached to the notion of femininity as valuable and therefore clinging to it at the price of rational thought. Since you have practically shut down the right hemisphere of your brain and called the resulting intellectual aphasia 'wisdom,' it will come as no surprise. You don't understand the universal dialectic because it is absent in your own mind. You suffocate your own consciousness. |

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Email This To a Friend

Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> The Thinkers' Inn

> You all humans are babblers!.

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                           | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| unknownRegistered UserPosts: 58(7/13/04 9:25 am)Reply |  You all humans are babblers!. <hr/> hey humans,It does n't matter what you argue or say.At the end of the debate , you have to come down to a conclusion.How can you say one conclusion is better than others.You can conclude based on a context only.As context changes your conclusion invariably has to change.The thing , you all human monkeys fail to see is Context has directlyproportional relationship with time.As context changes every second , you conclusion has to change , yet you arerefusing to adapt. You all are stick to your conclusion until you get beat andabused.You are attached to a conclusion(belief) like a cs slutty whore.Any answer you will come up with valid only for that second. Next second itis invalid.Reference point is shifted.Ask questions. |

|                                                                                                                                                                  |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                                                                  | Never agree or disagree. peaceunknown(unknown@hotmail.com - msn messenger)                                                                                                                                                    |
| unknownRegistered UserPosts: 62(7/14/04 4:32 am)Reply                                                                                 | ☐ Re: You all humans are babblers!. <hr/> EzCode Parsing Error: face=helvetica color=blue]EzCode Parsing Error: color=blue]You all humans are still babbl[/font]                                                                 |
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 1731(7/14/04 9:32 am)Reply                                                                                    | ☐ Oh my lord..... <hr/> The irony of you accusing others of being "babblers" is too much even for me..... Go away, please. Dan Rowden                                                                                     |
| unknownRegistered UserPosts: 63(7/14/04 9:35 am)Reply                                                                                 | ☐ Re: Oh my lord..... <hr/> You are reacting human. If you use your brain , you may not react. (but again your simple brain may think that i am reacting to your babble. Hahaha). Words do not exist unless you manifest. |
| drowdenForum HostPosts: 1733(7/14/04 9:55 am)Reply  | ☐ Re: Oh my lord..... <hr/> Your idiocy doesn't exist unless is manifests. Sadly, that happens a lot. Go away, already. This thread will self-destruct (with a bit of help from me) in 24 hours. Dan Rowden        |

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - The Thinkers' Inn - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

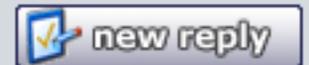

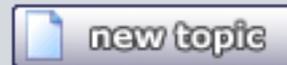

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> You are what you own?

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                                                                                                               | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 946(1/26/04 2:27 pm)Reply                                                                                        | You are what you own? <hr/> The consciousness of the total sum of your possessions at any given moment in time is identical to your total personality at that moment in time. Everything you own is but an extension of yourself. Like tools and weapons. Like holding a rope or a pole the part furthest away from your hand has the greatest resistance to your control. Take a look around you. How much of your possessions are you conscious of? By extension, if you do not wish to own the whole universe then you are suffering from a kind of sickness, possibly. No? |
| Naturyl Registered UserPosts: 88(1/26/04 3:01 pm)Reply | Re: You are what you own? <hr/> No. Edited by: Naturyl  at: 1/26/04 3:01 pm                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| DELRegistered UserPosts: 948(1/26/04 6:25 pm)Reply                                                                                        | Re: You are what you own? <hr/> Come on!You must learn to accept the unpalatable truths to snap the rings.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |

Naturyl

Registered User

Posts: 108

(1/26/04 6:35 pm)

Reply

Re: You are what you own?

---

It's not an unpalatable truth. The religion of one's youth being 99% bunk is an unpalatable truth. The lack of a discernible meaning and purpose in life is an unpalatable truth. The extinction of personality at death is an unpalatable truth. George W. Bush is an unpalatable truth. What you said was just a bunch of hogwash.

DEL

Registered User

Posts: 950

(1/26/04 6:43 pm)

Reply

You are what you own?

---

Quote:

---

Naturyl

The extinction of personality at death is an unpalatable truth.

---

At last you see my irrefutable truth.

"The consciousness of the total sum of your possessions at any given moment in time is identical to your total personality at that moment in time."

DEL

Registered User

Posts: 953

(1/26/04 6:54 pm)

Reply

You are what you own?

---

Anything you own starts to own you at the point where you can no longer control it.

The difficulty is knowing the limits to your own consciousness.

There for we create tools to help us control our tools.

All possessions are tools.

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Naturyl  Registered UserPosts: 112(1/26/04 6:59 pm)Reply  | Re: You are what you own? <hr/> I'd agree with that bit. Non-attachment is only useful insofar as it saves us from ourselves - from our own lack of control over circumstances. If circumstances can be managed, there is no need for non-attachment, because there is nothing so base and repulsive about life that it should be detached from simply on principle. Possessions are harmless insofar as they do not corrupt the thought processes, and in moderation, they will not corrupt the person of insight. |
| DEL Registered UserPosts: 954(1/26/04 7:06 pm)Reply                                                                                                                                                                       | You are what you own? <hr/> Quote: <hr/> NaturylI'd agree with that bit. quote] Which bit do you disagr <hr/>                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| Naturyl  Registered UserPosts: 119(1/27/04 12:58 pm)Reply                                                                              | Re: You are what you own? <hr/> I disagr! I disagr!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| DEL Registered UserPosts: 956(1/27/04 6:19 pm)Reply                                                                                                                                                                       | Re: You are what you own? <hr/> Ah! So you have come to realise that you are much less than you thought you were.That's OK Naturyl the truth hurts sometimes. Owning and being are inseparable                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| Naturyl  Registered UserPosts: 141(1/27/04 6:22 pm)Reply                                                                               | Re: You are what you own? <hr/> I disagr!                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |

Naturyl

Registered User

Posts: 141

(1/27/04 6:25 pm)

Reply

Re: You are what you own?

---

But seriously, you said this:

Quote:

---

Ah! So you have come to realise that you are much less than you thought you were.

---

What did I think I was?

Quote:

---

That's OK Naturyl the truth hurts sometimes.

---

Yeah. You're preaching to the choir on that one.

Anything that has the power to set one free also has the power to injure them.

DEL

Registered User

Posts: 958

(1/27/04 7:01 pm)

Reply

Re: You are what you own?

---

Quote:

---

Naturyl
What did I think I was?

---

Think!?

I don't think, I know you are one of those people who cannot control what they think they own.

Just like me.

I am still working on my rocket engine designs. Rocket science is difficult.

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

 Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

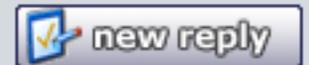

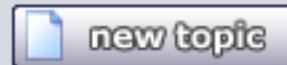

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> ".....everything is in action...."

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                           | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| BiggierRegistered UserPosts: 58(1/9/04 11:44 am)Reply |  ".....everything is in action...." <hr/> Emile Cioran: "When I happen to be busy, I never give a moment's thought to the 'meaning' of anything, particularly of whatever it is I am doing. A proof that the secret of everything is in action and not in abstention, that fatal cause of consciousness." Let me put that another way: if we all woke up tomorrow and every single intellectual, scholar, academic, philosopher and metaphysician had vanished from the planet, aside from their friends and loved ones, none of us would notice any difference. Ultimate reality, in other words, revolves around sustaining ourselves biologically. We have bodies to feed and libations to procure...we need clothes on our backs and roofs over our heads....we need a relatively stable environment in which to reproduce...and we need folks who will then protect us from enemies, foreign and domestic. The human condition in a nutshell. And no peas in sight to hide underneath it. For centuries now, this is what has motivated men and women to organize into social, political and economic communities. And that which is construed as Right is almost always that which the folks with the most power can ENFORCE with Might. All that metaphysical mumbo jumbo about "enlightenment" is invariably a con game that someone has connected to separate you from your money. |

Call it the Uri Geller Syndrome. They give you the peace of mind that revolves around the Supernatural and you spend your bucks on their books, tapes and shows.

Everyone goes home happy. And the frauds bilking those who can't be defrauded enough live to con another day.

And the only thing more pathetic, perhaps, are those actually able to con themselves.

In my own opinion, of course.

Biggie

Rhett Hamilton
Registered User
Posts: 227
(1/10/04 1:01 pm)
Reply | Edit

 Re: ".....everything is in action...."

---

"When I happen to be busy, I never give a moment's thought to the 'meaning' of anything, particularly of whatever it is I am doing. A proof that the secret of everything is in action and not in abstention, that fatal cause of consciousness."

But what or who set the basis of what she does? Most likely a thinking man. Even in our modern day, i was told a recent story of women that lived in a hippy community and that carted water from a stream for years, until they started nagging the men, who then installed a piped water system. They just could not conceptualise even a basic system of water distribution. Without thought the world is a void, and we would at best be savages. Sure, it's nice to say "well, i'll just go and drink straight from the river", and wouldn't i love to, but that's hardly a reality for most of us.

Let me put that another way: if we all woke up tomorrow and every single intellectual, scholar, academic, philosopher and metaphysician had vanished from the planet, aside from their friends and loved ones, none of us would notice any difference.

So you don't think, for example, that people such as Socrates set a foundation for civilisation as we know it today by instilling a valuing of truth in society? Think of what the world would be like if we were all sophists? Whilst i admit that many people are these days, they are actually breaking down that structure. Where would we be if the courts couldn't use the word truth?

"Innocent until we vague think guilty?"

Ultimate reality, in other words, revolves around sustaining ourselves biologically. We have bodies to feed and libations to procure...we need clothes on our backs and roofs over our heads....we need a relatively stable environment in which to reproduce...and we need folks who will then protect us from enemies, foreign and domestic. The human condition in a nutshell. And no peas in sight to hide underneath it.

Why don't we, whilst we sustain ourselves and learn how to sustain ourselves better (permaculture), get rid of the human condition that leads to ignorance, suffering, enemies, etc?

For centuries now, this is what has motivated men and women to organize into social, political and economic communities. And that which is construed as Right is almost always that which the folks with the most power can ENFORCE with Might.

Politics, power....more examples of destructive byproducts of ignorance about the nature of reality.

All that metaphysical mumbo jumbo about "enlightenment" is invariably a con game that someone has connected to separate you from your money. Call it the Uri Geller Syndrome. They give you the peace of mind that revolves around the Supernatural and you spend your bucks on their books, tapes and shows.

Yes of course, Kevin and David are chauffeured around in gold plated stretch limousines, and won't even spare a dollar for Dan to solve his computer problems.

Rhett

Biggier

Registered User

Posts: 59

(1/11/04 4:11 am)

Reply

Re: ".....everything is in action...."

---

Rhett,

It's Emile, not Emily.

And if you ever get around to reading him, you will discover he is not talking about water distribution. He is talking about "meaning" as it relates to 1] human moral and political interactions 2] aesthetic values 3] emotional and psychological states and 4] ontological inquiries.

And, respecting these inherently problematic, contingency laden realms we ARE all just sophists. It's just that some of us have the intellectual honesty, integrity and courage to admit it and some do not. Ot they simply lack the intelligence altogether. Most, alas, are looking to merely enscouse themselves in The Ultimate Truth [and almost any rendition---God, Marx, Rand, Buddha---will do] in order to engender the emotional and psychological equanimity The Quest is really all about. And so we have a pop culture that thrives on preposterous crap like the Matrix or Lord of the Rings. As Saul bellows once noted, "while the unexamined life may not be worth living, the examined one can be sheer hell". So most, of course, don't.

Philosophy has almost nothing to do with human interactions. That is just the specious yarn that scholastics and academics and metaphysicians thrive on so as to bolster the illusion of their own relevance. Peddle philosophy in Iraq, for example, and you get American Imperialism and Religous morons all trying to kill each other so as to embrace the One True God. Or, instead, why don't you encompass an interpretaion of the Iraqi conflict as it reflects True Reality. Or pick one of your own. Or are you like David: "Reality? What does that have to do with empirical or phenomonological evidence? And illustrating the text existentially is the last thing A True Wise Man would do. Reality is over and above all that day to day stuff.

Right.

Well, maybe the reason David and Kevin are not being driven around in a limo is because their own Ultimate Reality has never reached the point where anyone would be willing to foot the bill for one. David, in fact, told me 8 or 9 people "get" his.

Hell, that won't get you on Oprah, right? ; )

Biggie

 Email This To a Friend

 Topic Commands

 Click to receive email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31p
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.

THE THINKING MAN'S MINEFIELD

GENIUS FORUM

> GENIUS FORUM

> .....uh....mmmm....lessee.....God's Fingers!

New Topic

Add Reply

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

| Author                                                                            | Comment                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| OverlordRegistered UserPosts: 6(4/28/04 11:45 am)Reply | .....uh....mmmm....lessee.....God's Fingers! <hr/> Ok, I will admit... I'm not a fatalist (like some).I don't believe that everything just happened.I don't believe that man et al evolved from scratch and a bunch of volcanos spewing minerals and methane and being hit by lightning. I'm a single dad.... I believe in entropy. God did it.What I wonder is this..... Do you think God set all this up and let it run on it's own? Made it it's own little self contained system? OR Do you think God has an unfathomable number of little metaphorical fingers spinning each electron around each nuclei? Nudging it along.....Spinning each proton.... actively, like you spin a quarter on the table by flicking the edge of it with a finger? That everything is like it is because God is consciously making it work on a sub atomic level.... The universe is so damn Big! And Strange!We have so few and limited, attenuated senses to see it.If all men were blind.... would we even believe in stars? Would everything be Dark matter?When you slam the door going in the house, the ants in the grass think it's Armageddon, Ragnarok, The Sprinkler! |

drowden
Forum Host
Posts: 1696
(4/30/04 8:11 am)

Reply

Re: .....uh....mmmm....lessee.....God's Fingers!

---

What you're talking about here is the classical argument between Theism and Deism. Neither position warrants much attention in my view.

Btw, the Universe is neither big nor strange.

Dan Rowden

<< Prev Topic | Next Topic >>

Add Reply

Email This To a Friend Email This To a Friend

Topic Control Image Topic Commands

Cli Click to receive email notification of replies

Cli Click to stop receiving email notification of replies

jump to:

- GENIUS FORUM - GENIUS FORUM - Genius News -

Powered By ezboard® Ver. 7.31q
Copyright ©1999-2003 ezboard, Inc.